THE HISTORY

OF THE

BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA.

BY

EDWARD THORNTON, ESQ.

AUTHOR OF "THE GAZETTEER OF INDIA," ETC.

SECOND EDITION.

WITH

AN ENTIRELY NEW AND ENLARGED GLOSSARY.

LONDON:

WM. H. ALLEN & CO. 7, LEADENHALL STREET.

LONDON:

COX AND WYMAN, PRINTERS, GREAT QUEEN STREET,

LINCOLN'S-INN FIELDS.

GLOSSARY.

ABAD,—Cultivated, peopled, founded. Coupled | ATTA, OTTA.—Coarse flour. with a name it denotes the founder: as Ukber-abad, the city founded by Ukber, on the site of the Hindoo village of Agra. Shahjchanabad, city founded by Shah Johan on the site of the old city of Delhi; the old names, however, are retained by the people in spite of the Great Mogul. Allahabad, the city of God-the name given by the Mahommedans to the Hindoo holy place at the junction of the rivers Ganges and Jumna, known to the Hindoos as Prag or Pryng.

ABDAR.—a domestic whose duty it is to superintend the water for drinking, to cool and clear it; employed as butler by the English.

ABKAR.—Distiller of spirits.

ABKARY, ABKAREE - Excise, the revenue derived from spirits and hitoxicating drugs.

ADAMLUT, UDALUT .- A court of justice. Suddur Udalut-principal court. Dewance Udalut—court for civil suits. or Nizamut Udalut—criminal court.

AHIR, UHEER.—Shepherd, a caste from which the Bengal army accepts recruits.

AKALEE.—Sikh armed fanatic.

AMIL.—Dominion; a farmer of revenue; an officer of government.

AMILDAR,—Governor.

AMILDAREE.—Territory, government.

AMEEN, UMEEN.-Agent, a title given to the native judges by the English: as Sudder Ameen-chief judge; Sudder Ameen Alaprincipal chief judge.

AMEER, EMIR: — A nobleman amongst the Mahommedans,

Ankoos.—A weapon; a kind of axe, used to drive an elephant,

ARAK, ARRACK.—Spirit; juice; fermented liquor.

ARHUR, URHUR (corruptly, Rhhr).—A kind of pulse (Cytisus Cajan). It grows strong and bushy; when cut (in February) the sharp stakes left are very dangerous to horses' hoofs: they are oftenmis taken for cotton stalks.

ARZI, URZEE.—A letter addressed to a superior, a petition.

ASAMI, ASSAMEE.—A cultivator; a client; a constituent.

AURUNG.—Depôt; factory.
AVATAR.—Incarnation of the Deity.

AYAH.—Female servant; lady's-maid. AYEEN.—Laws; regulations; institutes.

AZAN.—The Mahommedan call to prayers.

B.

Baboo.—A title of rank, but now used indiscriminately like "Esquire" in England.

BADMUASH, BUDMAASH.—A disreputable person; one who has no ostensible means of gaining his livelihood.

Bagn.—A garden.

BAHADOOR,—A hero; a warrior; a title of rank amongst the Mahommedans; a new order established in the native army by the English.

Bahora, Buhora, Bohra.—A money-lender. BAIE, BHYE.-A lady; title given to Mahratta princesses.

Foujdarce BAIRAGEE, BYRAGHEE .- A Hindoo religious mendicant.

BAISHNUVEE.—A follower of the god Vishnoo. Bait.—A residence, abode. Bait-oolah—the house of God, Mecca. BAKHSH.—A gift; one who gives. Bukhshish, Buxis, Bakhsheesh—present, reward. BAKHSHEE. — Paymaster; treasurer to the army; commander-in-chief.

BANDY, BUNDEE.—A cart or carriage.

BANG, BHUNG.—The leaves of the hemp (Cannabis sativa), bruised and pounded in a mortar, and infused in water; an intoxicating drink. The leaves are smoked, and also chewed.

Banjara, Brinjaru.—Carriers of grain laden on bullocks, and especially employed in supplying troops; a tribe.

BANKA.—A dandy; a fop; an idle dissolute fellow. The Delhi banka is famous as the dissipated dandy of India.

BANYAN, BUNIYA.—A merchant; the caste of Hindoo traders. In Calcutta, the cashier and chief manager of a mercantile establishment.

BARAH.—Twelve. Barah Wufat—a religious festival of the Mahommedans; the 12th of the month in which Mahommed died.

BARAT, BURAT. - A Mahommedan festival.

State First, observed with fasting and Marientiers - the night of record, on which men's deeds for the coming year are ad I to be registered in heaven.

Distribut, Brantsdass.-A matchlock ran; Bert, lightning-undas, who throws;

बद राहा से प्राथित

Party Brazze-A village. Burra, Barry.-Difference in rate of ex-

e' war. B'arta-extra pay, additional all swange; an established addition to the afformation of the armies in India.

Fitner-A market; a daily market; the ateret at thora.

Drawe, Brown.-A measure of land, oneth of an English acre.

Prouse, Britanes. Forced labourers pressed to earry without pay.

fieren.-A princes; a lady of rank.

BELLTER (see VILATUTEE) .- A foreigner.

Berinner.—A trader; a shopkeeper. Petricket.—The Areca Catechu chewed by the ratices of India; cut in pieces, it from an ingredient of the beerki presented Bundobust.-Arrangement; bargain. to visitors and guests. See PAN.

Harry Limiter. Blace-bund-brotherhood; a community or association.

Barrer, Bargy.-A load divided and hung to both ends of a bamboo pole, carried ever the shoulder. Bhangy-burdar or Hargger, ler-the man who accompanies a traveller with the luggage slung over his CAYMACAN, see KAIMUKAM. elinai ler.

Parta-A wild tribe inhabiting the Malwa and Mewar forests. There is a Bheel local corps in the Indian army.

PRISTIF, BELSTIE, BIHISHTEE.-From bilisht, į vielios į a water-carrier į a Mahommedan who supplies water from a leather bag, round. The blessing of water is so great in a hot climate that the carrier is as one from 1, aven.

I'm on, Buau -A brother ; a cousin ; a title of respect affixed to a name, as Hurce-bhau.

FITTER, BREER.-A carriage for riding in, densen by bullocks; some are on four wheels, highly ornamented, and hung rented with bells.

Hart, Person.-A lady; title of rank; mistrice.

Fit are..... A mixed metal of copper and tin, regular of high ornament, and of which housa buttoms and mouthpieces are usually $141.0

Fire - I charitable allowance; fees to family get mer.

Printy -A pedlar; a hawker; called by the Restation beareala.

It was -A village banker; a tribe of bankers at l'enlers held in great respect in Goo-

I were -- A rish of the first caste of Hindentity it is to study and expound the at rollings. The Brahmins now are deriled and subdivided into numerous tester and families holding no social relato we, and they all engage in many of the lay occupations of the day; they are soldiers, watchmen, bailiffs, bankers' porters, cooks, domestic chaplains, &c. classes employ them as domestic servants; as the religion of the Hindoos is one of ritual, ceremonial, and meats, they find it safest to employ a Brahmin cook, to insure the purity of their food.

Bris. - The terrestial paradise of the Hindoos; the country around Muttra, between Agra and Delhi, sacred to Krishna, who was born there and performed his miracles.

BRIJBASEE.—An inhabitant of the Brij; auarmed Hindoo; watchmen, guards, doorkeepers-many from the Brij seeking to be so employed.

BRIJBHAKA.-The dialect of the Brij Hindee, in which most of the popular poems of the Hindoos are written.

Bun.—A wood, a forest; as Sunderbun or Soonderbun, the forest of Soondree trees: Brindabun, the forest of Vrinda.

Bungalow.—A thatched house, after the fashion of Bengal.

Brwustu.—A written opinion on Hindoo law by a Pundit, or a Brahmin learned in the law.

CHABOOK.—A whip.

Chaboorsowar.—A rough rider.

CHAND. - The moon.

CHANDNEE.—Moonbeams.

CHANDNEE CHAUK.- The bright street (a famous street in Delhi).

Chappa.—An impression; a stamp.

CHAPPA KAGHUZ.—Printed paper; a newspaper.

CHAPPA KHANA,—A printing-office.

CHARYAR.—Char, four—yar, friend. The four caliphs (successors to Mahommed), Aboobukr, Omar, Osman, and Ali.

CHARYAREE. - A Mahommedan of the Soonee sect—who maintain the rightful succession of the four Caliphs.

CHATTA.—An umbrella—the emblem of royalty. Chir.—A screen made of split bamboos and painted.

CHIT, CHITHEE.—A note; a lefter.

Снов.—A stick; a staff of office; a silver or gold stick.

CHOBDAR.—An attendant carrying a mace or stick of office.

Chousey, Choses.—A Brahmin learned in the four Vedas. See Seroy.

CHOUDREE, CHOWDRY .- The head-man of a trade; syndic; a title of respect addressed to carters, carriers, camelmen, &c.

Chouk, Choke.—A square; an open place in a street.

CHOUREE.—A station; a police-guard station; a chair; a seat.

Choukeedar .- A policeman; guard; watchman.

lodging-place; a station; an inn.

CHOUTH.—A fourth; a blackmail demanded from the princes of India by the Mahrattas

–a fourth of their revenue.

Chubena.—Parched gram, or chick-pea, used by the Hindoos marching or travelling, when they cannot have their food cooked by the rules of their caste. Chubootra.—A raised terrace in the front of a police-station, or round a tree; a platform where business is carried on, or a public meeting held, Chukla.—A large division of the country.

now almost confined to Oude.

CHUKLADAR.—The superintendent or governor

CHULAN .- Au invoice; voucher; passport; list of letters, or prisoners forwarded. CHUMAR.—A worker in leather, or currier;

saddler; a low caste of Hindoos, divided into many tribes, who work as cultivators ; manufacturers of indigo, &c.

CHUNAM, CHOONA.-Lime.

CHUNDAL.—Low caste; an outcast; term of abuse.

Chupates.—A cake of unleavened bread, made of coarse flour-Atta, the common food of all Hindoos, and the lower classes of Ma-hommedans in India; cakes of all kinds. Chupprass.—A badge; a metal plate engraved, and worn on a belt as a badge of CHUPPRASSEE.—The wearer of a chupprass; employed as messengers, couriers, policemen, watchmen, &c.

CHURKH.—A pulley; a wheel.

CHURUKPOOJA.—The ceremony of swinging on a wheel; the swinging festival of Hindoos suspended by books passed under the skin above each bladebone, now almost confined to Bengal.

Churrundar. — A supercargo — a servant goods, by an insurance office. Churrus.—The intoxicating exudation of the bemp-plant. CIRCAR, SIRKAR.—A superintendent; chief;

the government; chief clerk. In Calcutta all native clerks are called sirkars; a large division of the country under the Mahommedans. COLE.—A barbarous tribe, inhabiting the Rajmahal Hills and Jungle Muhals beyond Burdwan, akin to the Bheels and Gonds. COOLY, see KOOLI.

CORAH.—New, unbleached silk; piece goods DOAB.unbleached.

Coss, Kos.—A measure of distance, about two English miles.

Cutcha, see Kutcha. CUTWAL, see KOTWAL.

DAEE, DHYE.—A wet nurse; a female servant; a female commissioner employed by the courts to swear native women.

CHOULTRY (properly, CHAOTEE). - A public | DAKH, DAWK.-Post; relays of men or cattle along the road for carrying letters, goods, or travellers. DAKH-GHUR.-Post-office.

Dakh-chokee.—Post-station for relays.

DAKAIT, DACOIT.—Gang-robber; a burglar. DALEE, DOLLY.—A rude basket of flowers and fruits; a tray of presents, consisting of fruit, sweetments, spices, preserves.

DANA.—Grain; corn. DANA-KHOREE. - The commissariat; grainconsumers.

DAROGHA.—A superintendent; a chief officer in police and other departments of government, particularly the customs and commissariat.

DECCAN, DUKHUN.—The south; the south of India. Dervise, Durwesh.—A religious mendicant

(Mahommedan). DES, DESA.—The country; a place: emphatically applied to particular districts. In the Himalaya it means the plains.

Desce.—Belonging to a country; in Bengal, applied to indigo-seed grown there. Purdesce-a foreigner.

DEVA, DEV, DEO.—A god; a divinity; a man of high rank; a king. DEVALU, DIWALU.—A temple.

DEVEE, DEVI.—A goddess; a name of Doorga, the wife of Siva.

DEWAN, DIWAN, DIVAN. -- Royal court or council; a minister of state.

DEWANEE.—Relating to a dewan; civil administration. See ADAWLUT. The right ministration. See ADAWLUT. to receive the revenue of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, conferred on the East-India Company by the Great Mogul. am-a public hall of audience; Dewan-ikhas—private chamber of council. DHOBEE, DHOBY .- A washerman.

Dhurmsala.—A building for a pious purpose, a hospital, a monastery, a temple. placed on board a boat, in charge of the DHURNA. Sitting at the door of a house to compel payment of a debt; bankers and > money-lenders employed Brahmins for this purpose. The Brahmin sat fasting and resolved to die if the debt were not paid, and the debtor would incur the guilt of killing a Brahmin. As long as the Brahmin sat, the dwellers of the house could not cook or eat, fire could not be taken into the house, and for the time being they The practice is were excommunicated. forbidden by the laws of the East-India Company.

-From do, two, and ab water; a tract of land lying between two rivers. country between the Ganges and the Jumna rivers is emphatically the Doab. In the Punjab, or five rivers, there are the following tracts called Doab: -Between the Sutlej and the Beah, the Julunder Doab; between the Beah and Ravee, the Baree Doab; between the Ravee and Chenab, the Rechna Doab; between the Jhelum and Chenab, the Jetch Doab; between the Indus and the Jhelum, the Deab of Scinde Sagur.

۲i

EAR DOMAGE, DOME.—An exclamation of distress when claiming protection from the authorities; shouting for mercy.

By Doors.—A Brahmin read in two Vedas. See BAT

DOOLY.-A litter, a swing, a rude palanquin.

Doorga.—The name of a goddess, wife of Siva. BA: Doorgarooja.-The worship of Doorga, celebrated for ten days in Bengal in the month Res of October; the Doorgapooja holidays are strictly kept in Calcutta.

Pr. Do,cr. - A sudden expedition; sessions; circuit.

Dr. Durfadar.—An officer of rank in the army or BE police.

BE Defree.-An office, record-office.

BE DUFFUREE.-Record-keeper; bookbinder and paper-ruler; office servant.

DERBAR.—A court; a royal court; a levee. DURGAH.-A Mahommedan saint's tomb or shrine; a royal court. DURZEE .- A tailor.

B! DUSSERA.-A festival in honour of Doorga; additional holidays in Calcutta to the Doorgapooja; a military festival in the north-west of India; the fortunate time for opening a campaign.

Dustooner.—Fee ; perquisite ; commissionespecially demanded by servants from tradesmen on purchases made by their masters.

DUSTUR .- A passport, now applied to a process served on revenue defaulters.

E.

EED.—A holy observance amongst the Mahommedans; the two enjoined by the Koran are, 1st, The Ecd-ool-fitr, the termination of the fast of the month Ramzan, observed with prayers, rejoicings, and distribution of food to the poor; 2nd, The Eed-oozoha, observed in commemoration of Abraham's sacrifice of his son (Ishmael, not Isaac, according to the Mahommedans); it is observed with prayers and offerings; sheep, oxen, or camels are sacrificed; the kings of Dehli sacrificed a camel with their own hands on this festival,

Egrean.-A platform screened by a brick wall, where the festivals of the Eeds are collabrated; it is usually outside the Ilwan, Iwan.-A chief in religious matters, whether the head of all the Mahommedans as the caliple, or the priest of a mosque, er the leader in the prayers of the conere ation; the Sheenha recognize twelve ir-ant, descendants of Ali and his sucervery, of when the last, Imam Mehdee, is believed to be still alive.

Exercise. - A building in which the festival of the Molarrum is celebrated, and sometimes used as the mausoleum for the family of the founder, see MORURRUM.

F.

FAQUIR, FUKEER.—A Mahommedan religious mendicant.

FARASH.—A servant, whose business it is to spread carpets and mats, and sweep them-a Mahommedan domestic.

FARAZI.—The name of a sect of Mahommedans lately established in Lower Bengal, and now very turbulent. FARNUWEES, FARNAVEZE. - Phur, an office, and nuwces, writer-a public officer, the keeper of the registers; title given to the minister of state of the Mahrattas. The title is familiarly known as that of Nana Farnuwees, who was for many years the prime mover of the policy of the court of Poona, FATIHA.—The first chapter of the Koran; an opening; a commencement. Feringee, Veringhee.—A. Frank; a European; perhaps Varangi-Varangian of the Greeks.

Four.—An army; police jurisdiction. FOUJDAREE.—The office of magistrate, criminal judge. See ADAWLUT.

FURMAN, FIRMAN.—A mandate; a royal command; a patent; a passport. Fust.—A section; a chapter; a season; a crop or harvest. There are two harvests; the khureef, or autumnal rain crops, as indigo, cotton, rice, pulse of many kinds; the rubbee, or spring crops, wheat, barley, and gram, or chick-pea.

Fusice. A harvest year, or era, originated by Akber.

Futwa.-A judicial sentence; the written opinion on Mahommedan law given by the Mahommedan law-officer of a court.

G. .

GANJA.—The hemp-plant (Cannabis sativa), see BANG; also an intoxicating liquor made by infusing the flowers and leaves in water.

GAREE.—A cart, a wheeled carriage of any description.

GAREEWAN.—A carter, a coachman. The native servants do not approve of the word, and think it more respectable to be called coach, wan.

GAUD, GAD.—Sediment; precipitate; indigo when precipitated, before it is pressed or GAUT, GHAUT, GHAT. — A landing place; steps on the banks of a river; a pass through mountains; a place where washermen wash at a tank or river.

GENTOO (from the Portuguese Gentio) .- Gentile ; a Hindoo.

GHAZER - A champion; one who fights against infidels for the propagation of the faith.

GHAIP, GHYR .- Hidden, missing. Pecryhyb-1 Gulcowan .- The sovereign of Baroda; the "the hidden saint "-the name of a mosque near Hindoo Rao's house, at Delhi, used as a battery. The legend is of a Mahomme- GUL.—A noose; a snare. Gul dena—to hang dan saint who was translated to heaven at this place.

GHEE.—Clarified butter. The butter is boiled . in water and skimmed off. In this state it can be kept in a hot climate for a long time, and, when done carefully, remains very good. The Hindoos use it universally, and soak their chapatees or cakes in it, more or less, as they can afford it.

GHOLAM, GOLAM.—A youth, a servant, a slave; used as "humble servant" in English letters.

GHOORKA. — The people of Nepal, in the Himalaya mountains. They are descended from the Oodipoor rajpoots, and particularly honour the god Guruknath, hence Fort," the name Goorkha. They occupied the GURHER.—A small fort. Kemaon hills some generations before Gurnan.—A water-pot; an earthen ressel or their conquest of Nepal in 1768.

GHORA, GHODA.—A horse. Ghora-wala-n

groom. See Gona.

Guen.-A house; a hut; residence. See Gunn.

Godown, Godam (from the Malay gudany).-An outhouse; a warehouse; the commissariat depôts.

GOINDA.—A spy: an informer.

Gola .- A granary : salt depôt. Golundaz.—An artilleryman—from gola, a HATH, HAUT.—A market; a fair.

ball: undaz, who throws.

GOMASHIA.—An agent; a confidential factor. GOND. GOAND.—A barbarous tribe inhabiting the country west of Cuttack to the Vindhya hills, called Gondwance.

Goodyn.—The name of a numerous class in the North-West Provinces, engaged in agriculture, but notorious cattle-lifters, thieves, A black mail is paid and plunderers. at many of the stations in the North-West Provinces, to the chiefs of Goojur villages, to secure the house property, the police being quite inefficient.

Goorgo.—Spiritual teacher; domestic chaplain of the Hindoos.

GORA .- White man. Gora-logue or log-Europeans; generally applied to soldiers.

GORAIT.—A village watchman; a messenger; and who acts as guide to travellers.

GOSAIN, GOSHYN. - A religious mendicant, specially applied to influential families, descendants of gosains of great repute. Holl, Holle, Holle, A popular festival of There are various convents of these mendicants in Western India, of great sanctity.

Gowald—A cowherd; a tribe from which the Indian army receives recruits.

GEUNTHA.—The book of the Sikhs, a large collection of moral poems by their teacher

Nanuk, the founder of the sect, in 1419. GUBER. GUEERE - A fire-wershipper; an infidel; commonly applied to Parsecs.
Gudder, Gron-A cossion, or carpet on which a person sits; the stat of rank or royalty.

chief of one of the states of the Mahratta confederacy.

a criminal. Gul Shuhced - "the hanged saint," one Roshun Khan, at whose tomb the Mahommedans worship and burn lamps at Dehli; he was hanged, in 1835, for the murder of Mr. Fraser, commissioner of Dehli, at the instigation of Nuwab Shumsoo-Deen, and canonized for having killed the infidel-one of those acts and signs neglected by the English government.

Gunj .-- A mart; an emporium; a collection of articles, as a cruet-stand; a canteen. Compounded with a founder or the name of the original village, as Revelgunj, Gopcegunj.

Gurn.—A fort. Compounded thus, Futihgurh—"Fort Victory;" Aligurh—"Ali's pitcher.

H.

HACKERY.—A native cart drawn by bullocks. Haj, Itujj.—The pilgrimage to Mecca.

HAJER, HAGI.—One who has made the pil-grinnge to Mecca; a title of respect. HARIM.—A ruler; a governor; a superior; a judge; addressed to a superior as a title of respect. See HUKEEM.

HAT,HA, HATTA .- An inclosure; the ground inclosed round a bungalow; a court-yard; the presidencies of India - as Madras

HATHI, HATHEE.—An elephant. Hathce khana

-elephant house, or stable.

HAWILAT, HAVILAT.—A thing given in trust : prisoners remanded; witnesses detained in hawilat-in charge of an officer of the

HAVILDAR, HAWILDAR.—One holding a trust : a native non-commissioned officer in the Indian army.

HIJRA, HIJREE. - Departure from one's friends and country. The flight of Mahommed from Mecca to Medina was constituted the commencement of the Mahommedan era: it took place on the night of Thursday, the 15th of July, A.D. 622; hence the Mahemmedan era of Hijra commences from 16th July, 622, the Hindoos; saturnalia held about the end of February in the North-West Posvinces, during which rude folias and dust and coloured powder, and the coloured water on passes, and the like, are indulged in; the Rambia and like, are indulged in; the Babinstein castes get druk as it both mins. Raincast and all see as short mins, Rajpoots, and ar say ari short mins, Rajpoots, and ar say ari short lascivious songs and filtralian, therites close with bonfires on the last in the Dengal, a swinging form a ball or the game it. game time.

 B_{Y}

Yiii

HOONDEE, HUNDI.-A bill of exchange. HUK, HUG.—Truth; the true God; a true, just or legal right; privilege or fee established by usage. Huk-ool-Talookdarce—the JEMADAR.—An officer in the native army; a right of the Talookdar.

HUKEEN, HAKIM.—A sage; a physician. The JHEEL.—A shallow lake; a morass. B^{7} descendants of a famous sage retain it as a B. title in the family. See HAKIN.

HULAL.—Lawful; allowed; an animal killed in a lawful manner for food by a Mahommedan; opposed to Huram.

HULWAI, HULWAEE.—A confectioner.

HURAM.—Unlawful; forbidden; applied to Bı all things or acts which the law and the prophets forbid; unclean; wicked; vicious; disloyal. See NIMUKRAM.

HURKARU.—A messenger; courier.

HURUM, HARAM, HUREEM.—Sacred; forbidden; closed to promiscuous access (henco applied to the women's apartments in the в East); also the name of the enclosure Jungue, Jungue.-A forest; a thicket; the round the temple of Mecca; a sanctuary.

a word of abuse; bastard.

HUZARI, HUZAREE.—A commander of a thou-Districts are often distinguished according to their revenues, as the Beest Huzari-the 20,000.

HUZOOR.—The presence; the royal presence; the presence of a superior authority, as a judge; a man of rank; especially applied to the king of Dehli, as The Huzoor.

I.

ID.—See EED.

IJARU, IZARU.—Price; profit; an estate held on a farming lease; a farm of the revenue.

IJLAS.—A sitting, especially of a court of justice; sessions. Ijlas-i-Council—a meeting of the supreme council.

IKBAL, IQBAL.—Prosperity; good fortune; acceptance.

ILARA, ELAQA.—Property; estate; jurisdic-

Тили.—Seo Емли.

INGLIS.—English; invalid soldiers; pension to invalids,

ISLAM.—The faith, the Catholic faith of the Mahommedans. See Musulman.

JAGEER, JACHIRE.—A grant of land, rent free, conferred for services to the state, either for life or for ever; an estate in fee-simple and untaxed.

JAMPAN.—A kind of chair carried on men's shoulders, used in the Himalaya hills.

JAT, JAUT.—The name of a large tribe of Hindoos, principally inhabiting the country on the banks of the Jumna from Agra to Dehli. Their chief is the rajah of Bhurtpoor. Many of these have become Sikhs. JAT. - Victory; an exclamation like KHALSA. - The exchequer lands, the property

"hurrah," "huzza." Lik Sahib kee jay! was once a favourite shout of victory when Lord Lake led the armics in India.

chief of police; a superintendent.

Jogre, Jogi.-- One who practises religious abstraction; in general, a religious Hindoo mendicant. There are many convents of Jogees, many of whom are great rogues and thieves.

JUHANPUNAH.—Asylum of the world, a title addressed to sovereigns; it was especially taken by the kings of Oude created by the country as opposed to the town; wild;

English.

JUMMA, JAMA.—Amount; aggregate; total.

JUMMA MUSJID .- The principal mosque of a city; the cathedral of the Mahommedans. Gibbon erroneously translates it "royal mosque."

See KA,ABA.

HURUMZADA.—Base-born; son of the Hurum; JUNTR.—A dial; a mystical diagram; a machine of any kind.

JUNTR MUNTR. - Conjuring; performing mystical ceremonies; the native observatories and gnomons at Benares and Dehli are so named.

K.

Ka,aba, Kaba, Caaba.—A cube or square; any square building-whence, especially, the temple at Mecca to which the Mahommedans make their pilgrimage.

KAFIR.—An infidel; one who does not acknowledge Mahommed as the prophet; a term of abuse.

KAIDEE, KYDEE.—A prisoner; a convict.

KAIMUKAM, CAYMACAN. - A representative; a deputy; a viceroy.

KAIT, KAYUTH.—The writer or accountant caste—the most respectable of the mixed castes.

KALIJUG, KULJOG.—The last and worst of the four ages, the iron age, the present age, of which about 5,000 years have passed: it is to last 432,000 years.

KARINDA.—An agent; a manager; a superintendent.

Kasid, Cossid. — A courier; a messenger;

an express messenger.

KAZEE, CAZY, CADI. - A Mahommedan judge. Under the English, their judicial functions have ceased, and they only act at marriages, funerals, and domestic ceremonies of the Mahommedans. It is applied as a title to families, descendants of Kazees.

KERANI. — A manager; one who conducts affairs; the European clerks in Calcutta.

KHADIM. — A servant; an attendant on a shrine, or saint's tomb.

KHALIFA, CALIPH, KHULEEFU (from Khalf, a successor).—The successors of Mahommed; the defenders of the faith. In India the tailors are so nicknamed.

LYLUT-OOL-MIRAJ. - The night of Mahommed's ascent to heaven.

M.

Ma, ash, Muash.-Means of living; a pension. See BADMASH.

MAFEE, MUAFEE .- Forgiven; remitted; a grant of land free of rent or taxation to a temple, or provision for the repairs of a tomb; lands given to a priest, or for MIRZA.-A title given to the Syude, the service in general.

MAHA DEO.—The great God; usually applied to Siva.

MAHA-RAJA, MAHARAJ.—The great raja, a title of reigning Hindoo princes.

MAHAJUN .- A great man; but now, universally, a merchant, banker, trader, or money-

MAHOUT, MAHA, WUT.—An elephant-driver. MALGOOZAR .-- One who pays revenue.

Malik, Malio.—A master; owner; used as a title of respect. See MULIK. MALIKANA .- Right of the malik or proprietor; an allowance made to a landholder by government when the managevarious reasons.

boat; the master of a boat.

MASHA.—A weight used by jewellers; one twelfth of a tola. The small or jewellers' weights are thus-

4 d,han or grains

1 ruttee. of rice == 8 ruttee 1 masha. I tola. 12 masha == 1 chittak. 5 tola the tola, equal to 180 grains English troy weight; the standard of the bazar seer is 80 tolas; the Company's rupce weighs one

MAUGRABY, MOOGHRIBEE.—Western: an inhabitant of the west side; usually applied to the west of Africa.

MAUND, properly Mun .- A measure of weight in India, varying much in value. The Company's maund is equal to 80 lbs.; the Calcutta bazar maund = 82 lbs.; factory maund = 74 lbs. 10 oz. 10°_{3} drs., or one factory maund and a half is equal to one The table of weights is :-English cwt.

16 chittaks 1 seer. = 40 seers 1 maund.

MEER.-A chief; a leader. See Mussul-

MEHTUR, MIRTUR.-A prince; the lowest caste of sweepers and scavengers is thus named in derision.

Mela.—A fair; an occasional market; usually a Hindoo religious festival, held at a favourite place of pilgrimage, where traffic and amusements are carried on. Thus at Hurdwan the mela is famous for horses, and is the great pilgrimage of the Hindoos to the Ganges. A jubilee is held every twelfth year, and the numbers gathered together on these occasions are said to reach a million.

MERIAH .- A human victim, usually a child; young persons kidnapped by the Gonda of the hills west of Cuttack, kept amongst them in ignorance of their fate, and after a season sacrificed to their deity, the Mother of the Earth, to insure fruitful seasons.

descendants of the prophet; in Persia, profixed to a name, a secretary; when following it, a prince; but in India it is prefixed as a title of rank.

MITHAER, METOY. -- Sweetmeats. Lord Ellenborough, when governor-general of India, distributed 30,000 seers, == 60,000 lbs. of "their favourite metoys" to the repoys composing the army of observation and retribution assembled at Ferezpoor, at the close of the last Cabul campaign.

Mocurn.—A saddler.

Mognuber. -- A deed : usually a recognizance required by a magistrate; an engagement under penalty.

ment of his lands is taken from him for Mocuppun, Mokupun.-The head man of a village or tribe.

Manjee, Manjhee.—The steersman of a Morussul.—Separate; distinct. In Hindastan, a subordinate district; the country; the provinces. Suddur, the principal station; mofussul, the dependencies thereon.

Mogue, Moguet.-The title of one of the great Tartar tribes, the Mongol; or a member of one. A title especially applied to the kings of Delhi of the house of Timour, although they were more properly of Turkish descent.

The unit of the English system in India is Monun .- A seal; a scal-ring; a gold coin with the seal of the sovereign. The mohur of Akbar hore the following inscription-"The glory of the faith, Mahommed Akbar, the victorious emperor;" on the reverse, the kulimah or creed. The moreverse, the kulimah or creed. The mo-hur of Aurungzebe-"Shah Aurungzebe Alumgeer issued coin brilliant as the sun; on the reverse-"Minted at the seat of the caliphate, Akberabad, the year of the reign of fortunate associations." The mohur of Shah Alum, the last of the Mogula who struck coins, and continued by the East-India Company—"Defender of the Mahommedan faith, reflection of divine excellence, the Emperor Shah Alum, has struck this coin to be current throughout the seven climates." The value of the mobur in account is 16 rupees, or nearly £1. 12s. sterling. The East-pany have ceased to coin gold. The East-India Com-

MOHURRIM. - Sacred; unlawful; the first month of the Mahommedan year, in which it was held unlawful to make war. Amongst the Sheenhs this month is held in peculiar veneration, as being the month in which Husun and Hoosyn, sons of Ali, were killed by Yezeed. In India, after ten days' public mourning, the members of this sect proceed in procession, carrying a bier representing the funeral of the murdered saints; all the men are armed, and frequent affrays occur between them and the Soonies, the opposing sect. Hindoo festivals occur on the same day, and the processions meet, serious battles take place. The English government put down all these affrays by sending a guard of soldiers into the cities on the anniversary MYDAN, MAIDAN.—A plain; a field of battle. of the Mohurrim. See EMAMBARU.

Molly, Maler.—A gardener.

MOONSHEE, MUNSHI.—A writer; a secretary; applied by the English to teachers and interpreters of languages.

Moonsif.—A judge; title of the lowest rank of civil judge in India.

Moree, Mori.—A water-course, a drain. Moulvie, Moolvi.—A learned man and expounder of Mahommedan law.

MUDRASA, MUDRUSSA.—A college.

MUHUL, MAHAL.—A place; a house; an apartment; the women's apartments; a division; a province or district, as the NANA.—A maternal grandfather. Jungle Mahals—districts in the west of Bengal; muhulla—a division of a town, a quarter. See TAJ.

Mulik, Melek.—A king; a sovereign. MALIK.

Mulla.—A sailor; a boatman; a ferryman. MUNDEE.—A market; a shop or storchouse. Subsce mundce—the green market, where fruit and vegetables are sold.

Munsoob, Munsab.—Office; dignity.

MUNSOOBDAR. — A military title and rank conferred by the Moghul sovereigns, with | NIMUK-RAM (properly, NIMUK-HURAM) .-- False assignment of a jaghire.

Musal, Mushal.—A torch; a lamp.

MUSALCHEE.—A torch-bearer; attendant of a palkee traveller during the night; a domestic servant of the English, who cleans the plates and dishes, or carries a lamp at night—always a Mahommedan.

seasoning; drugs; bribes—oil to make the wheel go.

Musim.—A mosque; see Jama.

a Mahommedan prince.

MUSOOLA.—A kind of boat for crossing the surfat Madras; it is usually from thirty to NUDDEE, NUDDY.—A river; a stream. forty feet long by six and eight feet deep, flat-bottomed, and having the planks sewn together with withes of straw between each plank as cakum; it has ten cars and can Nukara.—A kettledrum, the use of which carry twenty passengers.

MUSSUK.—A leather bag for carrying water;

the bag carried by the bhistic.

MUSSULMAN, MOOSLIM.—A believer in the NUWAB (plural of NAIB, but used in the singufaith; a Mahommedan. See ISLAM. people never call themselves Mahommedans; the word is purely European. In India there are four great divisions of Nuzun, Nuzunana.—A present; an offering Mooslims:-1st. The Syuds, who pretend to be descended from Hoosyn, the son of Ali and grandson of Mahommed, and who take the title of "meer" and "mirza" prefixed.

2nd. Moghuls or Tartars, taking the title of "beg" after their name. 3rd. The Patans, Rohillas, and Affghans, who are entitled "khan." 4th. The Sheikhs, miscellaneous and converted Hindoos. They prefix this as a title, thus—Sheikh Gool Mahommed, Sheikh Peerbukhsh. All these are to be found in the native army of the English; their favourite branch being the cavalry.

NABOB, see NUWAB.

NAG, NAGA.—A snake, a serpent deity; Nagpoor, the city named after the serpent deity.

NAIB.—A deputy; a viceroy.

NAIK .- A leader, or chief in general. In the native army of India, a corporal.

NAKHODA, NACODA.—The commander of a ship. In India, the captain of an Arab ship.

The Mahrattas address their chiefs as Nana and Mamoo, a maternal uncle, Chucha, a paternal uncle—epithets of endearment.

See NAZIM.—An administrator; a governor; a viceroy; the title of the numab of Moor-shedabad.

NAZIR.-An inspector. In ordinary use, the officer of a criminal court, whose duty it is to execute the orders of the magistrate; a sheriff.

NEELAM.—An auction; a public sale.

to one's salt; faithless; disloyal; perfidious; the greatest crime a man can be guilty of. The king of Delhi so designated the kings of Oude, his hereditary prime ministers. because they threw off their allegiance and assumed the crown. Nimuk-hulal; loyal. faithful, grateful, see HURAM.

Musalu.—Spices, condiments; any mixture as NIZAM. — Administration; also an administrator; a viceroy. Hence the title of the nuwab of Hyderabad, the viceroy of the Deccan, Nizam-ool-Moolk.

MUSNUD .- A throne; a chair; the throne of NIZAMUT.- The office of nizam; the administration of police and criminal law. See ADAWLUT.

Nugur.—A town; a city. Compounded with proper names, as Srinugur; corrupted by Europeans into nagore, as Chandanagore.

was restricted to persons of high rank.

NULLAH.—A water-course, a gulley cut by the rains ; a rivulet ; a ravine. lar).—A viceroy, or governor of a province under the Mogul; a title of rank conferred on the nobles surrounding the throne.

from an inferior to a superior, or to a holy man; the present made on being presented to a king or chief; a fine or fee; a bribe.

rene (1).

OMEAH, UMLAH, plural of AMIL. - The collective native officers of a court of justice in India; the officers of any establishment, public or private.

Omnan, Umran (plural of Ameer).—The nobles of a Mahommedan court.

OTTA, ATTA .- Coarso wheaten flour; the principal food of the sepoys, made into thin unleavened cakes, called chapatees.

OTTO (properly UTTUR) .- Essence; juice; oil of roses; fragrance.

PADDY, PADI.—Rice in the husks, whether PINDARA.—A hody of marauders. growing or cut.

Padsnan.-A king.

PAGODA, - The European designation of a Hindoo temple; the old gold coin of Madrag having a temple for its device, but called by the natives, hoon or varaha. The star pageda is commonly valued at eight shillings.

vehicle carried on men's shoulders, in which the traveller can recline at full length.

PAN, PAUN. The aromatic leaf of the Piper betel. In use, a leaf is rolled up with a few small bits of the arcka-nut, grains of Paradise (cardemum), a little catechu, and unslaked lime, to bring out the colour of the catechu; sometimes a little dry tobacco is included to make the whole more pungent; this is called a beera or beerkee, and is POONAH, POONYA .- Virtue; moral merit. chewed, acting as a carminative and antacid tonic; it is presented to guests and visitors, and is then called pau-sooparce. It is universally used, particularly by native ladies. The catechu becomes bright scarlet in the course of mastication.

Pancu.-Five.

PANCHAYUT, PUNCHAIT .- A jury of five; a committee of five, held in towns and vil- POORUBER, POORUBEAH. - Natives of the lages to try all questions affecting caste, usages, and occupation. Municipal questions are thus settled amongst the natives Poors, Poor .- A son.

PANDER, PUNDIT,-A learned Brahmin; one who makes some branch of Sanscrit learning his special study and teaches it. See PARSER.-A worshipper of fire; the name of the race settled at Bombay and Western India, who still observe the ancient religion of the Magi; they are enterprising merchants and shipbuilders; their ancestore find before the Mahommedans from Persia in the eighth century. The word correctly means only "Persian."

PATAN.—An Alighan. See MUSSULMAN.

Patietee, -A reader; a public reader; a Brahmin who reads the epic poems and poorange la public. See Seror.

NUZURANEE, NISSARA.-A Christian, a Naza-PEER.-A holy man. Among Mahommedans, a saint; a apiritual guide.

Pron. - A messenger; a porter; a policeofficer.

Pergunnan .- A small district, or subdivision of a country; a hundred.

PERWANAH, PURWANUH.-An order; a written precept; a warrant; a license; a passport; a letter from a superior to an inferior, opposed to Arai.

Peshoush, Paishoush.-Tribute.

PETTAII, PETTAI.-The suburbs of a fortified town; that part of a fortified place lying beyond, below, or around a fortress or citadol.

PHANS.—A snare; a noose; a halter.

Phansigar.—A Thug; a baugman.

Phounsdar.—Seo Foujdar.

PINDAREE.—A member of an organized troop of maraudors, who, from time to time, entered upon plundering expeditions at a distance from their own villages. They were extinguished as a body by the marquis of Hastings; they were originally a body of irregular horse attached to the Mahommedan armies.

PALANQUIN, properly PALKER.—A litter; a POLIGAR, POLIGAR.—A potty chieftain. the south of India, they were more or less independent,-subject, however, to pay a tribute or service to the paramount power. when they could be coerced. They subsisted by plunder. On the subjugation of the country, they were mostly dispossessed; some were pensioned, and some allowed to hold villages, the latter have now subsided into penceable landholders.

Bengal, the ceremony with which the rent-

payors open the year's accounts.

Poor, Porr.-A town; a city. It is used in composition, as Cawapore - the city of Kama, the Hindoo Cupid, properly Kampoor. Kama is the husband of Ruttee the Hindoo Venus.

Poorus .- The east, eastern provinces, or those on the Ganges around Patna and Behar.

Brahmapootr-the son of Brahma, vulgarly, Burampootr ; Rajpoot, the son of a Ruja.

POTEL, POTATE. The head man of a village. He is head of the police, and nots to a limited extent as magistrate; the term is current in the countries subject to the Mahrattas.

Potee, Pother.-A book; the MSS the Brahmins read, POTTAIL.—A lease.

Pugnes.—A turban; the head-dress of the Indians. It is an act of great disrespect to appear in the presence of a superior without the turban; in distress, and in claiming assistance or redress, it is thrown to the ground.

Punar.-A mountain; a hill.

PUHAREE.—A mountaineer; hilly country. PUKKA, PUCKA.—Ripe; mature; cooked; correct; complete; solid; intelligent; sharp; knowing. burnt bricks and mortar; the contrast in all respects to Kucha.

PULTUN.—A regiment; battalion.

Pundit.—A learned Brahmin; see Pandey. Punj.--Five.

Punjab.—Five waters; the country subject to Lahore, watered by five rivers.

Punt.—Abbreviation of Pundit. It denotes a Brahmin who is not a Sanscrit scholar, but employs himself in accounts and writing.

Pura, Para.—Other; different; foreign. Purda.—A veil; a screen; a curtain.

Purda-nusheen.—Seated behind a screen; a lady, as one who observes the rules of seclusion.

Purdes.—A foreign country; a distant land. PURDESEE, PARADESI.—A foreigner; one from a distant country.

Puttun.—A town; a city; whence Patna in Behar, Puttun in Scinde.

PYSA, PICE.—A copper coin, under the native governments of very variable value. The peasant.

English government has fixed the weight of RYOTWAR, RYOTWAREE.—Relating to ryots; its pysa at 100 grains:

4 руза l anna. 16 annas 1 rupee.

The rupee weighs 180 grains, and is valued at two shillings.

R.

RAJ.—A kingdom, or principality; a reign. Company-ke raj—the Company's reign; Moghul-ke raj—the dynasty of the Moghuls.

JA.—A king; a prince. A title given to Hindoos of rank. Raj-coomar—the son of a raja. (See Koer.) Rajpoot.—Son of a raja. (See Pootr.) The general designation of the races in the north and west of India, who claim a descent from the sun and moon. The country they inhabit—Rajpootana.

RAMA, RAM.—A name given to three avatars. The second prince of Oude. Ram, ram!

Hindoos.

RAMZAN, RAMADAN.—The ninth month of the SEPOY, SIPAR, SIPAREE (from Sip, a bow).—A Mahommedans, during which the faithful fast from morning dawn till the appearance of the stars at night.

RANA.—The title of the Rajpoot princes of Oodipoor, in Central India.

RANEE.—Princess, wife of a raja.

RAO.—Chief; prince, probably from raja. Amongst the Mahrattas a title given to distinguished persons, civil or military.

RAO.-A mountain torrent, where it debouches on the plains (provincial).

ROWANNA.—A passport; a certificate from the collector of customs to cover cargoes of goods.

Roy, RAL-A prince; corruption of raja;

an order of civil rank conferred on Hindoos, as Ram Mohun Roy.

RUBBEE.—The spring harvest. (See Fusl.)

Pucka-ghur-a house built of Rupee, Roopee.—The standard silver coin of India. (See PYSA.) The government of the East-India Company struck their coin in the name of the last king of Dehli, Shah Alum, and with the same legend as the Mohur, until 1835, when the Mahommedan coinage was abolished the English government no longer declaring Shah Alum (deceased, 1806) to be the ''defender of the faith of Mahommed"and the Company's rupee was introduced, bearing on one face the head of the sovereign of Great Britain, and on the reverse the designation of the coin in English, Persian, and Sanscrit, with the words "East-India Company" in English.
RUSUD, RUSSUD.—Grain, forage, and supplies for an army, ordered to be ready at halting-places.

RUTTEE.—The seed of the Abrus precatorius. used by jewellers and goldsmiths as the basis of their weights. (See MASHA.)

RYOT, RAYUT.—A subject; a farmer; a the revenue settlement and assessment made directly with the cultivator of the soil.

s.

Sahoo.—A merchant; a banker; from whence Sahookar, corruptly Sowkar.

SAIB, SAHIB.—A master; a lord; the designation of the Europeans in India, like Mr., Sahib-log, Europeans.

Salis.—An umpire; an arbitrator.

Samiri.—(See Zamorin.)

SAWMY, SWAMI.—A master; an owner; a husband; a title given to the idols in the south of India; especially applied to the heads of religious orders.

SEEDEE, SIDI.—A name given to Africans in Bombay. Some of them were distinguished officers under the Mahommedans, and they were the chief naval officers of the Moguls on the coast of Guzerat.

the salutation of the common classes of Seer, Ser.—A measure of weight. 40 Seers are equal to one Maund.

The soldiers of the Bengal army were recruited from the Brahmin, Rajpoot, Aheer, and Gowala castes. The Brahmins are the most numerous, and are designated by the titles of their various families: thus-Pandey or Pundit, descended from men learned in the four Vedas or Sanscrit scriptures; Doobe, i.e. Do Vedas—learned in two Vedas; Tewaric, i.e. Tri-Ved—learned in three Vedas; Chobe, i.e. Char-Ved-learned in four Vedas; Pathuck-a reader of the Vedas in public; Sookul-a priest of lay Brahmins; Thakoor—title of a Rajpoot. Sipah Salar—commander of an army; the commander-in-chief.

ousted, and an allowance for life made them, and that as a favour.

Tal,—The mausoleum of the Begum Noor Topass, Topaz,—Descendants from the Portu-Jehan at Agra, vulgarly so called. lady's title was Moomtaz-ool-muhul - the exalted of the palace; the last syllable of the title has become taj, and the tomb is called Taj becbee ka rauza—the Taj lady's mausoleum. She was the favourite wife Tore. - A gun; a piece of ordnance. Topkhanu of the emperor Jehangeer, who struck coins in her name in the year A.D. 1624.

TANK .- A reservoir of water ; a pond.

Tarroo.—A pony; a horse employed in carrying burdens in panniers.

TAZEEA, TAZIA.-A model of the tomb of in procession by the Indian Sheeahs at the Mohurrim; it is made as cheap or as expensive as the means or picty of the owner will admit of. The common ones are thrown into a pond outside the town, at a place called Kurbala, at the close of Toree.—A hat; a cap; a skull-cap. the ceremonies; the more valuable are preserved.

TELINGA.—The country so named by the Mahommedans, the Carnatic; a native of Tilang, whence the first native soldiers, dressed and disciplined after the European fashion, were recruited; hence it came to Tunseel. — Collection, mean soldier. In Upper India all Eugovernment revenue.
ropeans are called telinga by the bulk of Tunseeldar,—A native collector of revenue, the people, disrespectfully.

THAKOOR, THAKUR,—An idol; a deity; a lord; a master; the head of a tribe; the title of Rajpoots, especially the chief or head man of a Rajpoot tribe. Strangers meeting whilst travelling and wishing to exchange civilities—to smoke together, to offer tobacco or pan-instead of asking "What caste are you?" ask, "Who is your Thakoor?"-who is your deity? It is a family name in Bengal indicating Brahminical origin. Dwarkanath Thakur, who died in London in 1846, was a highly respected member of this family

THANA, TANNA .- A station; a police-station. Under the native governments it was a military post; under the English government it is exclusively a police-establishment.

THANADAR.—The chief police officer of the district subordinate to a thana.

Thue, Tue.—A cheat; a knave; applied now to the highway plundering associations who invariably garotte their victims before robbing them. These assassins have laws, rank, and superstitions of the most extraordinary kinds which regulate all their expeditions; their correct appellation is Phansigar, which see.

TODDY, TAREE. -The juice of the palmyra and cocoanut-trees, drawn off by incisions in the bark, at the root of the leaves. harmless, but after fermentation it becomes a fiery and highly intoxicating spirit. trees are all liable to duty and are included in the excise laws of the East-India Comguese settlers in India, perhaps from topec, They were extensively employed as soldiers in the early history of the Company; they are now only heard of as waisters on board of country ships.

—artillery; park of artillery; arsenal.

Torr, Toru.-A grove of trees; properly of those which bear fruit, as mange, tamarinds, &c.; a southern word, used by the English only in the Bengal presidency.

Hoosun and Hoosyn at Kurbala, carried Tope.—Curious monuments of antiquity, first noticed in Affghanistan by Mr. Elphinstone; they are also found in the Punjab, in many parts of India, and in Ceylon. See Fergusson's "Hand-book of Architecture.

> wala-a European, the wearer of a hat. The people of India suppose that there are twelve tribes of Europeans, known by the different kinds of hats they wear, hence Baruh-topec means all Europe—the twelve especially of

particularly the land revenue.

TURSAL.—A mint.

TUKYA, TUKIYA.—A pillow; the grove in which a religious mendicant resides; the seat of a fakir. These places often form the rendezvous of thieves and Thugs; travellers stop at these places to chat and smoke, and often incautiously discover their secrets. Many a conspiracy and evil design has been traced to these groves, which have never been sufficiently watched by the English government.

TULWAR.—A sword.

Tumasha.—A spectacle; a show; a scene; a ball; a riot; a fight; any excitement.

TUNCAW, TUNKHA .- An order or draft for money; an assignment by the ruling authority in payment of wages; pay; allowances.

TUPPUL.—The post; the carriage and delivery of letters—used in the Madras presidency.

Tussur.—An inferior sort of silk, the produce of a worm found wild in many parts of India, the Bombyx paphia. Tusser cloth is imported from Bengal in small quantities, and is sometimes embroidered as robes for ladies,

υ.

UKBER,—See AKBER.

first drawn the juice is sweet, insipid, and | UR, OOR.—A village; a town; a country. This word has suffered from the bad pronunciation of the English, as poor in northern India, and has become ore, as Vellore for Velloor, Nellore for Nel-

loor. URDOO, OORDOO .- A camp; a royal encampment. Now applied to the lingua franca of India, the language of the royal camp of the Mahommedans, being formed on a Hindee and Sanscrit basis, with a copious introduction of Persian and Arabic words, the result of the conquest of Hindostan by a people whose language and literature Now, many were Persian and Arabic. Portuguese and English words have been admitted: in the courts such words as "plendings," "decree," and "stamp"-and in ordinary life "towel" and "kettle"-nre found in the Oordoo or camp language of India.

UTTUR .- See OTTO.

VAREEL, WUREEL, VARIL .- An agent; an ambassador; in India, an authorized pleader in the courts.

VEDA.—The general name of the chief scriptural authorities of the Hindoos; more correctly, the four canonical works, enti-tled the Rig Vcda, Yujoor Vcda, Sama Vcda, and Atharva Vcda.

VILAYUT, see Belattee. Vishnoo, Vishnu.—The second of the Hindoo triad; the preserving power-as Siva, Sheva, or Sib is the third, or the destroying and renovating power-and Brahma is the first, the creator.

LLLE, WUZEER.—The principal minister in a Mahommedan sovereignty. The Oude family were considered hereditary viziers to the Great Mogul, until they rebelled, by assuming the dignity of king.

W.

Wahabee.—Follower of a Mahammedan retices of the sect of Shiahs. In India the word has become a term of abuse, equivalent to "kafir" or infidel, WALA, WALU, WAL.—Used only in composition; it denotes a person who does any act, is possessed of any property, is charged with any duty, as gao-walu-a cowherd; Dehli-reglu-an inhabitant of Dehli : box-walu (in Anglo-Indian) - a pedlar, a box-fellow.

Yourr. See Journ.

Z.

ZAMORIN.—The ruler of Calicut; possibly a corruption of Zemindar, in the feminine Zemindareen.

ZAT, JAT.—Sort; tribe; race; caste. ZEMINDAR, ZUMEENDAR.—A landholder; an occupant of land. The tenures by which land is held in India are numerous and perplexing, but this term is applied to all who have the remblance of a proprietary right by usage, long possession, or otherwise, in the North-West Provinces. In Bengal, under the perpetual settlement of 1793, they were all declared "actual proprictors.

ZEMINDAREE.—The office and rights of a zemindar; the tract of land constituting the possession of a zemindar; an estate.

ZENANA .- The female apartments, used for the females of the family; the HARAM. which sec.

Zillah, Zila.—Side; part; division; district. The name of the divisions or collectorates in India. Bengal proper is divided into 29 zillahs and commissionerships :- Behar, 12 districts; Orissa, 7 districts; North-West Provinces, 37 districts; hill and other districts, 13; Punjab, 19 districts; Madras, 21 districts; Bombay, including Scindo and Sattara, 18 districts; besides the provinces of Assam, Arracan, Pegu, Oude, and others, to the number of 9, directly under the supreme government of India. whole yields a land revenue of £17,000,000 sterling, according to the estimates of 1856. The gross revenue of India amounts to £31,000,000 sterling.

former of Arabia, especially of the prac- ZOOLFUCAR, ZULFIKAR.—Thenameof thesword of Mahommed, and afterwards of Ali. The symbol of the sword on Mahommedan coins; hence the name of the current silver coin of Hyderabad.

ZUPT, ZABT.—Occupation; seizure. In lawattachment; distraint; sequestration; confiscation.

CHRONOLOGICAL INDEX.

A,D.

1001.—Sultan Mahmoud, of Ghizni, invades India.

1024.—Sultan Mahmoud, in his twelfth and last invasion of India, destroys the temple The sandalwood gates of of Somnaut. this temple were brought back from Affghanistan by General Pollock, and are now preserved in the fort of Agra.

1191.—Conquest of Upper India by Mohammed Ghoory, founder of the Gaurian

dynasty.

1193.—Capture of Delhi by Mohammed's lieutenant, Kootb-ood-Deen, the "Pole-

star of the Faithful."

1206. — Kootb-ood-Deen, on Mohammed's death, proclaims himself king of Delhi, and founds the dynasty of the Slavekings; he himself having originally been sold into captivity as a prisoner of war.

1294.—Feroze founds the dynasty of Khilgy, and sends the first Mahommedan expedition into the Deccan.

1320.—The Khilgyan dynasty supplanted by the Punjab.

1351.—Death of Mohammed Toghluk. This headstrong and tyrannical prince twice attempted to remove the capital of his kingdom from Delhi to Deogur, which he named Dowlatabad, or the Fortunate City.

1388.—Death of Feroze Toghluk, a prince celebrated for the number and magnitude of his public works.

1398.—Invasion of India by Timour the Tartar; capture of Delhi, and massacre of the inhabitants.

1497.—Vasco de Gama doubles the Cape of Good Hope, and reaches Calicut, where the Portuguese finally effect a settlement. 1510.—Capture of Goa by Albuquerque.

1526.—Timour's great-grandson, Baber, seats himself on the throne of Delhi, and terminates the Patan dynasties that had ruled for 300 years.

1556.—Akbar succeeds his father Hoomayoon, killed by a fall as he descended from the roof of his palace. Akbar reigned gloriously for fifty-one years. The state of Upper India at that time is set forth in a book compiled under the emperor's instructions, and entitled "Ayeen Akberry" (the Institutes of Akbar). this reign three Portuguese missions, of a religious character, were sent from Goa to Delhi by the emperor's request.

1591.—First "adventure" from England.

1599.—Association of London merchants to fit out three ships for the Indian trade.

1600.—Association merges into a chartered company, under the style and title of "Governor and Company of Merchants trading to the East Indies."

1607.—Akbar's son Selim ascends the throne, and assumes the name of Jehangir, or Conqueror of the World. His favourite queen was the famous Noor Mahal, or Noor Jehan.

1609.—Captain Hawkins arrives at Agra, on behalf of the English Company.

1612. Factories established at Surat.

1615.—Sir Thomas Roe arrives at Ajmere, as ambassador to the court of the Great

Mogul from James I.

that of Ghazi Khan Toghluk, governor of 1627.—Jehangir succeeded by his son Shah Jehan. Destroys the Portuguese factory on the Hooghly. Subdues the Deccan. Dissensions of his sons, and consequent civil wars.

> 1658.—Having defeated his two elder brothers, Aurungzebe imprisons his father and usurps the throne.

1666.—Death of Shah Jehan. 1680.—Death of Sevagee, the founder of the Mahratta power, of which Sattara subsequently became the principal seat.

1700.—Calcutta founded. The settlement called Fort William, in compliment to the reigning sovereign.

1702.—The rival companies coalesce into "The United Company of Merchants trading to the East Indies," and so continue till 1833.

1707.—Death of Aurungzebe at the age of 94, after a troubled reign of nearly fifty years. Bernier, the traveller, resided some years at his court.

1739.—Capture and pillage of Delhi by Nadir Shah; 8,000 persons supposed to have been massacred in a few hours. Eight been massacred in a few hours. years afterwards Nadir was assassinated in his tent at Meshed, in Khorassan.

restored to the English by the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1749.

1748.—Death of Nizam-ool-Moolk. Dupleix, governor of Pondicherry, espouses the cause of his grandson Mozuffar Jung, and places him on the throne. The English side with the Nizam's second son, Nazir 1761.—Fall of Pondicherry. Jung, to whom his rival surrenders.

1750.—Nazir Jung quarrels with the English, and in a battle with the French is murdered by some of his own followers. Mozuffar Jung restored to the musnud. 1762.—Manilla taken by General Draper, the Glorification of Dupleix. Mozuffar Jung antagonist of "Junius," but restored to being slain in battle with some rebellious nawabs, the French support Salabat Jung, a younger brother of Nazir Jung. English influence in Southern India on the wane.

1751.—Clive volunteers to attack Arcot with 300 sepoys and 200 Europeans. Succeeds, and holds it against an overwhelming force for fifty days. English prestige Clive destroys Dupleix, and revives. levels Futtehabad to the ground.

Sahib murdered at the supposed insti-gation of Mahomet Ali, nabob of the Carnatic. Covelong and Chingleput fall to Clive. 1754.—Departure of Dupleix for Europe. Gheriah, a stronghold of pirates on the western coast, taken by Clive and St. David. Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, soubahdar of Bengal, takes the English factory at Cossimbazar, and marches upon Calcutta. Fort William surrenders. The Black Hole: 146 persons confined in a room 18 ft. by 14-next morning only twentythree found alive. Clive and Admiral Watson hasten from Madras to the Hooghly.

1757.—Recapture of Calcutta. Reduction of the French settlement at Chandernagore on the Hooghly. Meer Jaffier, one of Soomi-oo-Dowlah's chief officers, conspires the 23rd June; Clive with 3,000 men and eight field pieces defeating the soubahdar's army of 50,000 men with forty guns. Meer Jaffier deserts to the English towards the close of the action, and by them is proclaimed soubahdar of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa. Assassination of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, Omichund basely cheated by Clive.

1758 .- Arrival in India of Count de Lally, governor of the French settlements. Fall of Fort St. David. Lally besieges

Madras. Siege raised by Admiral Pocock. 1759.—Brilliant successes of Colonel Forde in the Northern Circars, and fall of Masulipatam. Indecisive naval engagements be- 1772.—Warren Hastings governor of Bengal, tween Admiral Pocock and M. D'Aché. Harsh treatment of Rajah Shitabroy. Wandewash surrenders to Colonel Coote. Capture of Dutch squadron in the Hooghly.

1746 .- Madras taken by Labourdonnais, but 1760 .- Defeat of the French at Wandewash Arcot and other Bussy made prisoner. places surrender to Colonel Coote. Clive returns to England. Mr. Vansittart governor of Fort William. Meer Jaffier superseded by his son-in-law Meer > Departure of Lally for Europe; beheaded in 1766. French power in the Carnatic annihilated. Major Ĉarnac defeats Emperor's army near Patna, and takes M. Law prisoner.

Spain in the following year.

-Meer Cossim deposed, and Meer ffier restored. British take Moorshed-Jaffier restored. abad and Mongheer. Massacre of British prisoners at Patna by Sumroo. Patna taken by storm.

1764.-Mutinous spirit of the British army. Twenty-four sepoy grenadiers blown away from guns by Major Munro. Cossim, vizier of Oude, defeated at Buxar by Munro.

1752.—D'Auteuil surrenders to Clive. Chunda 1765.—Denth of Meer Jaffier; succeeded by second son, Noojum-ad-Dowlah. Clive returns to Calcutta. The Emperor confers upon the Company the Dewanny, or collection and management of the revenues, of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa. Clive enforces covenants against receiving presents; speculates in salt.

Admiral Watson. Clive governor of Fort 1766.—Abolition of double batta, except at Allahabad, when on active service. tinous spirit of the European officers; fomented by Sir Robert Fletcher, who is cashiered, but afterwards restored. Clive forms a military fund for invalid officers and soldiers, and their widows, by means of a sum of five lacs of rupees bequeathed to him by Meer Jaffier. This fund was warmly supported by the Company, but has been long since exhausted.

1767.—Clive finally quits India. Hyder Ali attacks Colonel Smith's force, but is defeated.

against him. Battle of Plassy fought on 1768.—Captain Nixon's detachment cut to pieces by Hyder Ali. Royal commissioners sent out to inquire into causes of the ill success of the war with Hyder Ali, &c.-lost at sea. Case of the nabob of Arcot-his agent, Mr. Macpherson, unduly influences the duke of Grafton, who sends out Sir John Lindsay with secret powers-succeeded by Sir Robert Harland, > 1769.—Hyder Ali appears before Madras and solicits peace, which is accorded.

WARREN HASTINGS.

Discontinues payment of tribute to the emperor of Delhi.

A.D.

1773.—New India Bill passed—presents and private trading prohibited to the servants of the Company-Supreme Court esta- 1784. - Mangalore capitulates to Tippoo. blished at Calcutta, at Kuttera. Seizure of Salsette. 1775.—Death of Shoojah-ad-Dowlah, nabobvizier of Oude-succeeded by his son, Various charges al-Azoff-al-Dowlah. leged against Warren Hastings. Nuncoand hanged.

1774.—Colonel Champion defeats the Rohillas

1776. - Dissatisfaction at home regarding Governor-General's proceedings. Colonel Maclean declares himself authorized to tender Hastings's resignation, which is accepted by the Court, and General Clavering appointed to succeed. Pigot, governor of Madras, unlawfully 1788.—Hastings's trial in Westminster Hall: arrested by his own Council-he dies.

1777. — Hastings repudiates his agent, and refuses to resign—judges of the Supreme Court decide in his favour.

1778.—Renewal of war between French and English — Pondicherry capitulates to General Munro. Sir Thomas Rumbold dras: indecisive hostilities.

1779.—Colonel Egerton's force, panic-stricken, take to flight-disgraceful convention with Rugonath Row.

1780.—Sir Elijah Impey, previously chief-justice of the Supreme Court, made judge of the Company's Sudder Dewanny Adaw-Duel between Francis and Hastings -Francis is wounded and leaves India. Captain Popham carries Labore and Gwalior by escalade. Hyder Ali invades the Carnatic. Bassein surrenders General Goddard. Scindia, defeated by Colonel Camac, sues for peace, which is granted on too favourable terms. Colonel Baillie's force annihilated by Hyder Ali. Sir Eyre Coote proceeds from Bengal to take command of Madras army. Arcot 1793.surrenders to Hyder Ali.

1781.—Total defeat of Hyder Ali, on the 1st July, by Sir Eyre Coote. Tippoo Sultan repulsed from Wandewash. Hyder again defeated on the 27th August and 27th September. Dutch settlements in the Indian peninsula and in Ceylon taken Cheyt Singh, rajah of by the English. Benares, arrested by Hastings, whose position becomes perilous. Cheyt Singh deprived of his zemindaree.

1782.—Colonel Braithwaite's corps cut to 1795.—Death of Mahomet Ali, nabob of pieces by Tippoo Sultan. Indecisive naval engagements between M. Suffrein and Sir Edward Hughes. Death of Hyder Ali. Hastings has an interview with 1797.—Death of Azoff-al-Dowlah; succeeded vizier of Oude at Chunarghur: concludes Spoliation of the Oude bea treaty.

gums. 1783.—Death of Sir Eyre Coote. Peace Tippoo Sultan. General Matthews trea-

A.D. cherously made prisoner with other officers, and murdered.

Peace concluded on the 11th May. Hastings visits Lucknow. Mr. Pitt's India Bill passed: Board of Control established.

1785.—Hastings returns to Europe, is succeeded by Mr. Macpherson, temporarily, who makes way for Lord Cornwallis.

mar, his chief accuser, convicted of forgery | 1786 .- Impeachment of Warren Hastings: preliminary proceedings. wallis appointed governor-general.

LORD CORNWALLIS.

Lord 1787.—Hastings formally impeached.

Burke and Sheridan deliver most eloquent speeches; trial lingers till 23rd April, 1795, when Hastings is acquitted.

1789.—Tippoo Sultan attacks Travancore, but is repulsed, narrowly escaping with his

1791.-Lord Cornwallis assumes the command: takesBangalore and advances upon Seringapatam, but is compelled by famine to fall back upon Bangalore, after defeating Tippoo in a general action under the walls of his capital. Capture of Hooliordroog, Oossore, and Nundedroog. Defence of Coimbatore by Lieutenant Chal-Fall of Savandroog, Ootradoorg, Hooly Onore, and Simoga.

to 1792.—Lord Cornwallis again sits down before Seringapatam on the 5th February; on the 26th Tippoo's two sons are given up as hostages, Coorg ceded, prisoners set free, and a large sum of money paid.

3.—Pondicherry and all other French set-tlements reduced. Perpetual settlement of Bengal.' Lord Cornwallis returns to England, and is succeeded by Sir John Shore, afterwards Lord Teignmouth, who essays the non-interference policy, and allows the nizam to throw himself into the arms of the French.

SIR JOHN SHORE.

Arcot. Reduction of the Dutch settlements in Ceylon, Malacca, Banda, Amboyna, and Cochin.

by his reputed son Vizier Ali, then at Calcutta: whose spurious birth being re-cognized, he is set aside for Saadut Ali, brother of the deceased Azoff.

between French and English. War with 1798 .- Sir John Shore returns to England; succeeded by Lord Mornington.

LORD MORNINGTON: MARQUIS WELLESLEY.

A.D. 1798.—Zemaun Shah threatens India from Cabul. Tippoo intrigues with the French at the Mauritius. Tree of liberty planted in his capital, and himself addressed as "Citizen Tippoo." War determined on. Nizam's French contingent disarmed and broken up. Mr. Cherry murdered at Benares by Vizier Ali's orders; the latter escapes to Bhotarel, and thence to Jynebeing spared.

1799.—British army takes the field under Tippoo repulsed by General Harris. General Stuart and Colonel Montresor at Sedasseer. General Harris lays siege to Seringapatam; 118 CapTippoo. His territories divided between the English and the Nizam. Restoration of ancient royal family of Mysore. Command of Seringapatam confided to Colonel Arthur Wellesley. Dhoondia creates disturbances in Bednore; flees into Mahmethances in Bednore; flees into Mahdored by Scindia's Pindarries. Sir Arthur dered by Scindia's Pindarries. Furone. Hostile Seringapatam; its capture, and death of Restoration of the adopted son of the rajah of Tanjore. Troublesome correspondence with Sandut Ali, vizier of Oude.

1800.--British government assumes entire civil and military administration of Surat. Dhoondia Waugh finally defeated and Lord Mornington created Marquis Wellesley.

1801.—General Baird's expedition to Egypt. Company assumes administration of the Carnatic, but confers title of nabob on Tehomet Ali's son, Azim-ul-Dowlah. Mr. y Wellesley, afterwards Lord Cow-cy, deputed to Lucknow. Treaty with the vizier, who agrees to cede territory in Rohilcund for maintenance of contingent. Court of Directors refuse to sanction the College of Fort William, proposed by the marquis.

1802. — Governor-General visits Lucknow. Settlement by Mr. Henry Wellesley with nabob of Furruckabad. Holkar defeats the combined armies of the peishwa and Scindia. Peishwa concludes defensive alliance with British government at Bassein.

1803.—General Wellesley restores the peishwa at Poona, Mahratta confederacy. General Wellesley captures Ahmednug-ger. Broach falls to Colonel Wooding ton, and on the same day, August the capes with his life.
29th, General Lake destroys Perron's 1809.—Operations in Travancore under Colonel French contingent at Alyghur. Coel taken. Alyghur carried by assault. Scindia's army, under Bouquin, defeated by Lake six miles from Delhi, September 11th. Lake restores Shah Allum to the throne. Wellesley defeats the Mahrattas at Assyc, September 23rd. Agra capitulates to Lake, October 17th. Colonel Harcourt occupies Cuttack. Battle of Harcourt occupies Cuttack. Battle of Laswarce won by Lake, November 1st. Assecratur falls to Colonel Stevenson. Wellesley defeats Scindin's army at Argaum, November 21st. Gawilghur taken by Wellesley and Stevenson. Rajah of Bernr makes peace, December 17th. Scindia ninkes peace, December 30th. War in Coylon disgraceful to the British arms.

ghur, but is given up on condition of life 1804.—Commodore Dance with a fleet of Company's ships repulses a French squadron. Treaty of alliance with Scindin, 27th of Colonel Don captures Tonk February. Rampoora from Holkar, Colonel Mon-Holkar re-ocson's disastrous retreat. cupies Muttra, and threatens Delhi, but Wellesley returns to Europe. preparations against Scindia; suddenly discontinued-Marquis Wellesley being superseded on the 30th July by the arrival of Marquis Cornwallis, who adopts an ultra-pacific policy. Death of Marquis Cornwallis at Ghazeepore, near Benares, 30th October. Government provisionally assumed by Sir George Barlow, first member of council, who carries out the noninterference policy. Colonel Malcolm concludes treaty with Scindia, 25th November. Peace concluded with Holkar.

1806.—General Lord Lake quits India. Mutiny at Vellore, and massacre of Europeans—suppressed by Colonel Gillespie. Lord William Bentinck, governor of Madras, recalled by the Court of Directors. Sir John Cradock removed from command of the Madras army. Ministers appoint Lord Lauderdale as Governor-General; opposed by Court of Directors, and Lord Minto finally sent out.

LORD MINTO.

1807.—Lord Minto arrives at Calcutta, 31st of July.

1808.—Disturbances at Travancore—Colonel Macaulay, British resident, narrowly escapes with his life.

St. Leger; dewan. commits suicide, his brother taken and executed. Mr. Metcalfe concludes treaty with Runjeet Singh. Mutinous proceedings of European officers of Madras army; fomented by General McDowall and Colonel St. Leger—the latter suspended; the former removed from command of the army, and lost on his passage home. Occupation of island of Rodriguez. Brilliant attack on Bourbon.

A.D.

1810.-Island of Bourbon surrenders to the of the Mauritius. Suppression of piracy in the Persian Gulf. Capture of Amboyna, Banda Neira, and Fort Nassau.

1811.—Reduction of Dutch settlements recommended by Mr. Stamford Raffles. Expedition against Batavia under Sir Samuel Auchmuty. Surrender of the island. Sultan of Palimbang massacres the European residents.

1812.-Massacre of Palimbang avenged by Conquest of Java. Colonel Gillespie. Mission of Mr. Elphinstone to Cabul, and of Sir John Malcolm to Persia.

1813.—Lord Minto returns to England. Renewal of Company's charter for twenty years; exclusive trade with China continued, but trade with India thrown open.

LORD MOIRA: MARQUIS HASTINGS.

1814.—Earl of Moira arrives at Calcutta in October. Aggressions of the Nepaulese. Repulse of the British at Kalunga, and death of General Gillespie. General Martindell's failure before Jyctuck.

1815.—Several forts taken by Colonel Ochterlony. General Wood fails before Jeet-Ochterlony gains various successes. Candy annexed to British empire by Sir Charles Brownrigg, governor of Ceylon. Gungadhur Shastry murdered at Punderpore by agents of the peishwa's minister, Trimbuckice Dainglia, who is finally sur-rendered to the British and confined in the fort of Thannah.

1816.—Peace concluded with Nepaul. Disturbances at Bareilly excited by Mahommedan fanatics, under the pretext of opposing a house-tax. Governor-General resolves on the suppression of the Pindarries.

1817.—Hattrass and Moorsaum taken by Ge- 1824.—Burmese invade Cachar. neral Marshall. Mr. Elphinstone concludes treaty with the peishwa, June 13; but on the 5th November the peishwa's troops plunder and burn the British resi-Peishwa's army defeated dency. Colonel Burr, and Poons surrenders to General Lionel Smith. Sir Thomas Hislop takes command of the army of the Treaty concluded with Scindia. Appa Sahib, rajah of Nagpore, attacks a small British force under Colonel Hopetoun Scott at Seetabuldee on the 27th November, but is signally defeated. rajah ultimately surrenders, and his capital capitulates, December 30. Pindar-ries defeated at Jubbulpore by General

Hardyman. Holkar's army defeated at Mahidpore, December 21, by Sir John Malcolm, acting under Sir Thomas Hislop. Governor-General created marquis of Hastings.

English. Naval disasters. Capitulation 1818.—Treaty with Holkar signed, January 6th. Captain Staunton with a small detachment repulses peishwa's entire General Smith army at Coorygaum. surprises peishwa's army at Ashtee, and makes prisoner the rajah of Sattara. Thomas Hislop takes Talneir, and puts the killadar to death after surrender. Appa Sahib convicted of treachery and dethroned. Mundela taken by General Marshall. Chanda falls to Colonel Adams, and Malligaum to Colonel MacDowell. Peishwa surrenders to Sir John Malcolm, and is dethroned, but obtains an extravagant pension. Appa Sahib excites disturbances in Nagpore; takes refuge in Asseerghur. Order of the Bath extended to Company's officers—Sir David Ochterlony the first G.C.B.

1819.—Asseerghur, after a stout resistance, surrenders to General Doveton; but Appa Sahib had escaped to Lahore. Pindarries annihilated - their leader, Cheetoo, killed by a tiger. Vizier of Oude encouraged by the Governor-General to assume title of king, and renounce his allegiance to emperor of Delhi. Affairs of William Palmer & Co.

at Hyderabad.

gurh. Occupation of Kumaon. General 1823.—Marquis of Hastings returns to Eu-Mr. Canning appointed to succeed him, but elects Secretaryship of Foreign Affairs. Lord Amherst therefore succeeds marquis of Hastings.

LORD AMHERST.

1823.—Lord Amherst arrives at Calcutta, August 1st, and relieves Mr. Adam of his provisional duties. Burmese attack a British post on island of Shapooree, at the mouth of the Naf, and refuse redress.

War declared. Bengal and Madras troops rendezvous at Port Cornwallis in the Great Andamans, under command of Sir Archibald Campbell. Capture of Rangoon. Stockades at Kemendine carried by as-General actions, in which the British always victorious. Successful expeditions against Khyloo, Martaban, and Mergui. Disasters in Arracan; defeat and death of Captain Noton at Ramoo. Burmese repeatedly defeated. Rangoon set on fire, December 14. Bassein occupied by Major Sale. Mutiny of the 47th Bengal native infantry at Barrackpore. Sir Edward Paget suppresses the mutiny with terrible rigour.

A.D.
1825.—Roduction of Donobow. Capture of Prome, April 25. Burmese driven out of Assam by Colonel Richards, and out of Arraean by General Morrison. Armistice concluded, October 18; but hostilities resumed, November 3, and Burmese again repeatedly defeated. Lord Combernere lays siege to Bhurtpore, December 10. The place stormed on the 18th, and the fortifications levelled.

1826.—Peace concluded with Burmah, 2nd of January; but hostilities resumed in a few days. Capture of Molloon. Enomy routed at Pagahm. Peace finally concluded at Yandaboo. Troaty with Siam. Mr. Jonkins concludes treaty with Nagpore.

1828.—Earl Amherst quits India, leaving Mr. Butterworth Bayley provisional governorgeneral.

LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK.

- 1828.—Lord William Bentinek arrives at Calcutta, and assumes the government of India. Half-batta reduction, November 29th.
- 1829.—Abolition of suttoo, or immolation of widows on the funeral pyre of their husbands.
- 1831.—Disturbances in Baraset between Hindoos and Mahommedan reformers. Governor-general, noting on orders from home, introduces various financial reforms. Siamese expelled from Queda by the Malays, but return through the assistance of the English.
 - Disturbances in Chota Nagpore. Rajah of Coorg becomes embroiled with the British government. Revenue settlement of the North-west Provinces by Mr. R. Mertins Bird.
- 1833.—Unsatisfactory correspondence between rajah of Coorg and the Government. Free-trade to India and China. East-India Company cease to trade, and become solely the governors of India, and administrators of its revenue.
- 1831.—Rajah of Coorg dethroned and sont to Benares: his territory annexed. Abolition of corporal punishment in the native army. Natives first admitted to the magistracy. Measures taken for the suppression of infanticide, thuggee, and dacoitee. Claims of the Lucknew bankers brought before Parliament.
- 1835.—Foundation of medical college at Calcutta. Lord William Bentinck returns to Europe. Temporarily succeeded by Sir Charles Metcalfe, who emancipates the press. Lord Hoytesbury appointed governor-general, but on the fall of the Pool ministry is superseded, previous to sailing, by Lord Auckland.

A 33

LORD AUCKLAND.

1836.—Lord Auckland arrives at Calcutta,
March 5.

1837.—Death of Nusseer-ood-Doon, king of Oude: disputed succession: Nusseer-ood-Dowlah placed on the throne by Colonel Low and the British contingent. Captain Burns at Cabul. Captain Vickovich, the Russian emissary, also at Cabul. Siego of Horat by the Persians.

1838.—British force occupies island of Karrak in the Persian Gulf; Persians mise siege of Herat. Tripartite treaty signed at Lahore, June 26, between the British Government, Runjeet Singh, and Shah Shoejah-col-moolk, with the object of restoring Shah Shoejah to the Affghan throne, from which he had been driven by his brother, Dost Mahomed Khan. Large army collected under Sir Henry Fane, who resigns in favour of Sir John Kenne.

1839.—Sir James Carma, governor of Bombay, deposes rajah of Sattara, and raises that prince's brother to the musnud. Army of the Indus takes the field. Kurrachee taken by Bombay force. Arrival at Candahar. Shah Shoojah enthroned. Death of Runjeet Singh. Chuznee carried by storm. Shah Shoojah enters Cabul. Doorance Order instituted. Colonel Honry, 37th Bongal native infantry, killed by Kojuks. Kelat falls to General Willshire.

1840.—Army of the Indus broken up, January 2. Lord Auckland created an earl, and Sir John Keane a peer. Orchard repulsed at Pishoot. Lieutenant Clarke's detachment cut to pieces. Kelat recaptured, and Licutenant Loveday murdored. Major Clibborn's disaster. Enemy defeated in valley of Bameean by Colonel Donnie. Defection of 2nd Bongal cavalry at Purwan, Dost Mahomod Khan surrenders himself to Sir William Macanghton. Kelat re-occupied by General Nott. Nasir Khan defeated by Colonel Marshall at Kotree. Captain Brown retires to Poolagee, after an heroic defence of Kahun.

1841.—Unsuccessful attack on Seboo, a Kojuck stronghold. Khelat-i-Ghiljie taken by Colonel Wymer. Sir William Macnaghten appointed to succeed Sir James Carnae as governor of Bombay, but detained at Cabul by the defection of the Ghiljie chiefs. Sir Robert Sale forces his way through the Kheord-Kabool pass and the valley of Tazeen, and reaches

Jellalabad on the 12th November. Riot in Cabul, 2nd November-death of Sir Alexander Burnes and other officers. General Elphinstone, enfeebled by years and disease, vacillates. British troops misconduct themselves in action. Major Pottinger escapes with difficulty from Kohistan. Continued reverses at Cabul. Sir William Macnaghten murdered at an Kurnool, in the Madras presicember. dency, annexed. 1842.—Evacuation of Cabul by British forces, 6th January—cut to pieces in the pass of 1844. Boothauk—ladies and married officers alone made prisoners—Dr. Bryden reaches Jellalabad, which is bravely held by Sir Robert Sale. General Nott defeats Akbar Khan at Candahar. Lord Auckland interview with Akbar Khan, 23rd De-

LORD ELLENBOROUGH.

quits India 12th March.

1842. —Lord Ellenborough arrives at Calcutta, February 28th. Colonel Palmer capitulates at Ghuznee: capitulation violated. Earthquake demolishes Sale's defences at Jellalabad, February 19th. Akbar Khan defeated, April 7th: death of Colonel Jellalabad relieved by General Pollock, April 16th. General England repulsed, falls back upon Quetta. nor General recommends withdrawal of British troops from Afghanistan. rals Nott and Pollock demur. General England reaches Candahar. Colonel Wymer brings off garrison of Khelat-i-Ghiljie, which he dismantles. Pollock forces his way to Cabul, and on the 16th September, plants British colours on the Bala Hissar. General Nott, on the 17th arrives at Cabul, bringing with him from Ghuznee the gates of the temple of General McCaskill storms Istaliff, September 29th. British prisoners enter Sir Robert Sale's camp at Urghandee, September 20th. Army retires from Affghanistan, and is received with honours by the Governor-General at Lord Ferozepore. Sir Charles Napier force a quarrel upon the Ameers of Scinde. Meer Roostum of Khyrpore persuaded to resign his turban to his younger brother Ali Morad. Panic-stricken, he flees to Emanghur, a fortress in the desert. 1843.—Sir Charles Napier crosses the desert and destroys Emanghur. The Beloochees attack the residency at Hyderabad, but 1851.are repulsed by Colonel Outram and Captain Conway. Sir Charles Napier defeats 1852.—Rangoon taken by Commodore Lamthe Ameers at Mecanee, six miles from Hyderabad, February 17th, and enters the capital of Lower Scinde, February 20th. Battle of Hyderabad, March 24th. Reduction of Omercote. Annexation of Scinde. Mama Sahib appointed regent of Gwalior through British influence, but soon deposed by the maharanee. some, hesitation governor-general decides upon interfering with the internal administration of Gwalior, and arrives at Agra December 11th. British army crosses the Chumbul under Sir Hugh Gough, and is attacked at Maharajpore, December 29th; Mahrattas defeated, and also at Punniar by General Grey, on the same day.

-The Mahrattas submit; treaty concluded January 5th; army disbanded, and a contingent raised. Lord Ellenborough recalled by Court of Directors.

LORD HARDINGE. 1844.—Sir Henry Hardinge appointed governor-general May 28th, 1845. Sikhs cross the Sutlej and threaten Sir John Littler at Ferozepore, December 14th; Lord Gough defeats the Sikhs at Moodkee, December 18th; Sir R. Sale and Sir J. McCaskill killed. Sir Henry Hardinge and Lord Gough defeat the enemy at Ferozeshah, December 22nd, after two days' fighting. Sikhs recross the Sutlej. 1846.—Sir Harry Smith loses his baggage at Buddiwal, January 21st, but defeats the enemy at Aliwal, January 28th. Lord Gough wins the battle of Sobraon, Feb. 10th. Lahore occupied, February 20th. Cashmere sold to Golab Singh. Governor General created a peer, 1847. Lord Hardinge resigns.

LORD DALHOUSIE.

1848.—Lord Dalhousie appointed governorgeneral. Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieut. Anderson murdered at Mooltan. Lieut. Herbert Edwardes and Colonel Cortlandt, with their irregular levies, hold Moolraj in check. City of Mooltan falls to General Whish, December 21st. nexation of Sattara.

Ellenborough and 1849.—Moolraj surrenders the citadel, January 21st. Lord Gough defeats the Sikhs at Chillian wallah, January 11th, and Punjab annexed, again at Goojerat. Sir Charles Napier ap-March 30th.

pointed commander-in-chief. 1850.—Differences between governor-general and commander-in-chief; the latter re-

-War declared against Burmah. of Jotee Pershad at Agra; acquitted.

bert and General Godwin, April 15th. Bassein falls May 19th, and Prome October 9th. Pegu annexed to British A.D. victed of forgery; Khyrpore annexed.

1853.—Peace with Burmah, June 30th. Punjab board abolished: Sir John Lawrence appointed chief commissioner. Nagpore annexed, for want of an heir. First railway opened, April 16th: Bombay line.

1854.—Ganges Canal opened, April 8th: constructed by Sir T. P. Cautley. Uniform cheap postage introduced, October 1st: electric-telegraph message from Agra to Calcutta, March 24th.

empire, December 20th. Ali Morad con- 1855 .- Treaty with Dost Mahomed signed at Peshawur. The four per cent. loan. Mr. Halliday appointed lieutenant-general of Bengal. Sontal insurrection; put down by General Lloyd. Calcutta and Raneegunge railway opened, February 3. 1856.—King of Oude deposed; Oude an-nexed, February 7th. Sir James Outram appointed chief commissioner. Lord Dalhousie returns to Europe, and is succeeded by Viscount Canning.

HISTORY

OF THE

BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA.

CHAPTER I.

REVIEW OF THE ANCIENT HISTORY OF INDIA .- CONQUESTS OF THE PERSIANS, AND ALEXANDER .- RISE, PROGRESS, AND DECLINE OF THE MAHOMETAN POWER IN INDIA.

THE early history of India is involved in the | whose manners and institutions had become leepest obscurity. When the country was first | fixed by time; where not only all the useful peopled, from whom the settlers descended, and whence they migrated, are questions which nay furnish appropriate exercise for speculaive ingenuity, but upon which there exists 10 information that can afford a basis for even clausible conjecture. Although it would not be perfectly accurate to affirm that the Hindoos nave no historical records, it is undoubtedly in this species of composition that their literature s most deficient. Genealogies of different lines of kings are not wanting; but these, apparently, are for the most part mythological, not historical; and, even where they have some pretensions to the latter character, the difficulties which surround every attempt to give them a consistent interpretation, deprive them of all interest for the general reader. researches of Oriental scholars may, in time, reduce to intelligible form the mass of crude materials which exists in the native records, and elicit light and harmony from sources which now present only darkness and confusion; but when it is recollected that the history of the earlier centuries of Rome, which had for ages commanded belief and respect, has been assailed, and, in the opinion of many competent judges, invalidated, by the acuteness of modern criticism, an additional reason is furnished for hesitating to ascribe much im-portance to records which have not yet been subjected to similar searching inquiry.

But, whatever opinion may be formed upon these points, destined, in all probability, long to remain subjects for controversy, the Hindoos are indisputably entitled to rank among the most ancient of existing nations, as well as among those most early and most rapidly civi-The earliest notices which have descended to us lead to the conclusion that, long before the commencement of the Christian era, arts, and many of those conducive to luxury and refinement, had been long known and successfully practised, but where man, resting at length from physical labour, and escaping from sensual enjoyment, found both leisure and inclination to engage in intellectual exercises. Ere yet the Pyramids looked down upon the valley of the Nile-when Greece and Italy, those cradles of European civilization, nursed only the tenants of the wilderness-India was the seat of wealth and grandeur. A busy population had covered the land with the. marks of its industry; rich crops of the most coveted productions of nature annually rewarded the toil of the husbandman; skilful artisans converted the rude produce of the . soil into fabrics of unrivalled delicacy and beauty; and architects and sculptors joined in constructing works, the solidity of which has not, in some instances, been overcome by the revolution of thousands of years. princes and nobles of India, unlike the wandering chieftains of the neighbouring countries, already dwelt in splendid palaces, and, clothed in the gorgeous products of its looms, and glittering with gold and gems, indulged a corresponding luxury in every act and habit of their lives. Poets were not wanting to celebrate the exploits of their ancestors, nor philosophers to thread the mazes of metaphysical inquiry, and weave the web of ingenious speculation, with as much subtlety, and perhaps with not less success than has attended the researches of subsequent inquirers. These conclusions are not based upon conjecture, but rest upon documents still existing, though grievously mutilated; for the historian of antiquity, like the comparative anatomist who examines the animal relics of the antediluvian world, must found his conclusions upon frag-India exhibited the appearance of a country ments—which, in this instance, however, are sea was necessarily slow. When completed, the less serviceable ships were laid up in the loss serviceable ships were laid up in the located the Rajah of Lyhere, and Lyricz Delta, while a select number of the best class onriched himself with much plander, stipmanned by about ten thousand Greeks and Phenicians, were placed under the command of Nearshap for the purpose of application of Mahmood were subsequently about the proposed were subsequently about the proposed were subsequently about the proposed with the proposed were subsequently about the proposed were of Nearchus, for the purpose of exploring quently often repeated, greatly to the in-the navigation between the Indus and the crease of his own wealth, and not without Euphrates, the king himself leading back the advantage to the cause of the Prophet. In

Euphrates, the king himself leading back the remainder of his army through the thirsty desert of Gedrosia. The Greek dominion in India did not expire with the life of Alexander. For two complete centuries after his death, the provinces bordering on the India were governed by monarchs of the Syrian and Bactrian dynastics, some of whom carried their victorious arms as far as the Jumna and the Ganges. Their coins are still found in great numbers in the neighbourhood of those rivers. An irruption of the Tartar hordes put an end to the Greek dominion in Asia. Any further crated to the service of the deity, whom they confederation of native princes, and effecting washed each morning and evening in water his own escape with difficulty. Having refrom the distant Ganges; the subordinate cruited his army, he in turn gained a victory ministers consisted of three hundred musicians, three hundred barbers, and five hundred Ajmere, and subjected it to tribute. dancing-girls, conspicuous for their birth and his generals, named Kootb-ood-Deen, expelled Three sides of the temple were probeauty. tected by the ocean; the narrow isthmus was fortified by a natural or artificial precipice; and the city and adjacent country were peopled by a nation of fanatics. They confessed the sins and the punishment of Kinnoge and Delhi; but if the impious stranger should presume to approach their holy precincts, he would surely be overwhelmed by a blast of the divine vengeance." Their confidence, however, was vain. The invincible temple was taken, and the gigantic idol to which it was dedicated broken to pieces. According to popular report, the Brahmins offered immense sums to ransom their god; but Mahmood, declaring that he was a breaker of idols, and not a seller of them, ordered the work of destruction to take place. It is added that his incorruptibility was rewarded by the discovery of a vast store of diamonds and pearls independent on the death of his master Mowithin the idol. The story is so striking, that it is a pity it should not be true. But unfortunately the earlier authorities make no mention of any offer of ransom, and as the idol was solid it could contain no treasure.

Although the career of Mahmood was almost a constant succession of conquests, his sovereignty over many of the provinces included within his empire was little more than nominal. The Punjaub was nearly all that was really subjected to the Mahometan government.

The dynasty of Ghizni was continued through a succession of princes, some of whom made incursions into India, either to add new territories to their dominions, or to vindicate their claims to those subdued by their predecessors. Latterly, their connection with that country was drawn more close by the state of their affairs elsewhere. The wars in which they were involved with the Suljook Turks and with the Affghan house of Ghoor, dispossessed them of a considerable portion of their original territories, and drove them from their capital The royal house in consequence took refuge in India, and the city of Labore became their capital. They recovered possession of Ghizni for a short period, but were again expelled from it, and their dynasty closed with a prince named Khoosrow Mullik, who -being treacherously seduced into the hands of Mohammed Ghoory, the empire was transferred to the race to which the victor belonged.

Mohammed Ghoory, founder of the Gaurian dynasty, was nominally the general of an elder brother, but in reality his ruler. Having settled the affairs of Lahore, he returned for a time to Ghizni. He subsequently advanced upon mounted the throne, to which no one to extend his conquests in India, but at first could show a better claim, all the members of over his former conquerors, took possession of the ruler of Delhi, and made that city the seat of a Mahometan government, compelling all the districts around to acknowledge the faith of Islam.

In the expeditions of Mohammed, plunder was regarded as an object equal, perhaps superior, in importance to the propagation of the faith. The accumulation of treasure went aand in hand with idol-breaking, and, when cut off by the hands of assassins, Mohammed left behind him wealth, the reputed amount of which the native historian represents as almost incredible. The larger portion of this wealth was undoubtedly obtained from India. His conquests extended into Guzernt, to Agra, and to the boundaries of Bengal. Succeeding princes carried the Mahometan arms into that country.

Kooth-ood-Deen, already mentioned, became hammed, and Delhi, the seat of his government, is thenceforth to be regarded as the capital of the Mahometan empire of India.

This prince had been a slave, but, manifesting an aptitude for learning, was instructed by the favour of his master in the Persian and Arabic languages, and in those branches of knowledge to which they afforded admission. His patron dying, he was sold by the executors of his deceased master to a merchant, who again sold him to Mohammed Ghoory, with whom he became a great favourite. His talents justified the distinction with which he was treated, and he was finally dignified with the title of Kootb-ood-Deen, the Pole Star of the Faithful.

The series of princes commencing with Kooth-ood-Deen are, in Oriental history, denominated the slave kings. After a few reigns, they were succeeded by the dynasty of Khilgy. Under Feroze, the first prince of this house, the earliest irruption of Mahometan arms into the Deccan appears to have taken place. This step was suggested by Alla-ood-Deen, the nephew of the reigning sovereign, to whom its execution was intrusted, and the motive to the undertaking was the reputed wealth of the princes of the south. From one of them immense plunder was obtained, and the commander of the expedition, on his return, mounted the throne of Delhi, having prepared the way by the assassination of his uncle and sovereign. The house of Khilgy terminated with a prince named Moobarik, who was murdered by a favourite servant, to whom he had confided all the powers of the state. usurper was defeated and slain by Ghazi Khan Toghluk, governor of the Punjaub, who therewithout success, being signally defeated by a the royal house having perished. Thus com-and the avowal of a determination to scourge his subjects for their rebellion, whatever might be the consequence. This intention he did not live to fulfil. An attack of indigestion relieved his enemies from the effects of his vengeance, and himself from a combination of difficulties which only the highest genius or the happiest fortune could have overcome.

Toghluk was still recognized, his cruelty and tained by an appeal to arms, and thus was extortion had excited a universal feeling of produced the extraordinary speciacle of two detestation, and he complained that he no emperors at war with each other while rule sooner put down disaffection in one place, than dent in the same city. For three years the it broke out in another. The person to whom possession of the sceptre was thus contribut, this complaint was addressed ventured to sug: the people being subjected to all the calamities gest as a remedy, that the sovereign should of civil war, as carried on in the East. At abdicate the throne. The advice was received length, Yekhal, an ambitious and intriguing by Mohammed with an expression of anger, oural, succeeded in obtaining the imperial power, which he exercised in the name of a prince who enjoyed nothing of sovereignty beyond the title.

It was at this period that Timour, emphatically called "the firebrand of the universe, commenced his march. He crossed the Indus and advanced towards Delhi, his course being everywhere marked by the most horrible ex-Under his successor, Feroze Toghluk, a qualified independence of the throne of Delhi seems to have been conceded both to Bengal and the Deccan. This prince, celebrated both for the number and magnitude of his public works, as well as for his elemency, moderation, and love of learning, is remarkable also for troops against the imperial city. Its wretched ruler issued forth to make a show of resistance; but it can scarcely be said than an engagement took place, for the troops of the Emperor of Delhi fled, almost without fighting, pursued by the conqueror to the very gates of the city. The sovereign and his minister fled from its walls under cover of the night, and the submission of the principal inhabitants having removed every impediment to the entry of Timour, he caused himself to be proclaimed emperor, and his title to be acknowledged in all the mosques. The first function exercised by a Mahometan conqueror is to levy contributions on the conquered, and arrangements were made for carrying into effect this necessary consequence of Timour's success. Some degree of equity was to be observed, for the measure of contributions was to be regulated by the rank and wealth of the inhabitants. Some of the richest, however, it was represented, had shut themselves up, and refused to pay their shares. Troops were sent to enforce compliance; confusion and plunder ensued; the city was set on fire, and the triumph of Timour closed with one vast scene of indiscriminate massacre and pillage. The flames which had been kindled by vengeance or despair, irradiated streets streaming with blood and choked with the bodies of the dead. Amidst these horrors, the author of them secured a booty so vast, that the cautious historian refrains from mentioning the reputed amount, inasmuch as it exceeded all belief.

The success of Timour was not followed by the permanent results which might have been days, and having glutted himself with plunder, returned to the capital of his Tartar dominions. His invasion of India resembled rather one of those predatory irruptions so common in Eastern warfare, than a settled plan of conquest. After he quitted Delhi, his authority virtually ceased, and the city remained for some time a scene of the most frightful disorder. It slowly recovered from this state, and the authority of its former ruler within its walls was to some extent restored, but the reins of extended empire had slipped irrecoverably from his grasp. The state of anarchy which had prevailed had emboldened the governors of the provinces to renounce their allegiance to the Court of Delhi. New kingdoms sprung into independent existence, and in a brief period a very small district round the city of Delhi was all that remained to its ruler.

Though the positive authority of Timour ceased with his departure from Delhi, a prince named Khizr, who obtained the government shortly afterwards, acknowledged a nominal vassalage to him, and caused coin to be struck in his name; but the dynasty of Timour was not actually established in India until the celebrated Baber, after some abortive attempts, Delhi.

or the recovery of the son.

The son of Baber, after a few years of stormy contention, was forced to yield the throne to an Affghan usurper, named Sheer. Many public works tending alike to use and ornament, are attributed to this prince; but their reputed number and magnitude seem hardly consistent with the brevity of his reign, which lasted only five years. In addition to his other measures for the public advantage, he established horse posts for the benefit both of the government and of commerce. tion adds, that during his reign, such was the public security that travellers rested and slept with their goods in the highways without apprehension of robbery. The death of Sheer was succeeded by a struggle for the crown, which ended in the restoration of the exiled succeeded in seating himself on the throne of son of Baber. This prince dying from a full very shortly after his elevation to sovereign

In establishing his authority, Baber encountered difficulties which, to a mind of less energy, might have appeared insuperable. He persevered, however, and extended his conquests as far as Behar, when his progress was terminated by his death. That event, according to some authors, was hastened by superstition. His favourite son, Hoomayoon, was dangerously ill, and some pious follower of the Prophet suggested that in similar circumstances Heaven had been sometimes pleased to accept the most valuable thing possessed by one friend as an offering in exchange for the life of another. Baber was struck by the suggestion, and exclaimed that, next to the life of Hoomayoon, his own life was what he most valued; and that this he would devote as a sacrifice for his son's. His friends pointed out a more easy though highly costly sacrifice in a diamond taken at Agra, reputed the most valuable in the world, and quoted the authority of ancient sages in proof that the proper offering was the dearest of worldly possessions. Baber was inflexible, and proceeded to carry his intention into effect, according to the most approved forms of Mahometan piety. walked three times round the sick prince, in imitation of the mode of presenting offerings on solemn occasions, and then retired to prayer. After some time, it is stated that he was heard to exclaim, "I have borne it away, I have borne it away;" and from that time Baber's health is said to have declined, and that of Hoomayoon to have improved. On the recovery of Hoomayoon, it is only necessary to remark that he enjoyed the advantage of youth. With regard to the decline of Baber, expected. He remained at Delhi only a few it is to be observed that he was previously in ill health, and no one acquainted with the effects of imagination in producing or aggravating disease, will doubt that the conviction of his being a doomed man might accelerate the fate which he believed inevitable, more especially when acting upon a frame previously enfeebled by sickness. But whether this effect was produced or not, there is certainly nothing remarkable either in the death of the father

pages of Oriental history.

the task of defending it was intrusted to a distinguished chief named Beiram, who entered with vigour upon the task of reducing to obedience all who disputed the authority of the He succeeded in giving stability to the throne; but his imperious temper, aided by the intrigues of those who hated or envied him, gradually diminished his influence at court; and the attainment by the sovereign of the period of manhood made him naturally anxious to be released from a state of pupilage. Akbar accordingly issued a proclamation announcing his own assumption of the reins of government, and forbidding obedience to any orders not bearing his scal. Beiram had recourse to rebellion, but, being unsuccessful, was compelled to throw himself on the clemency of his sovereign. Akbar received his repentant minister with the greatest kindness, and offered him his choice of a provincial government, a residence at court, or a pilgrimage to Mecca, with a retinue and allowances suitable to his rank. Beiram chose the last, but never reached the place to which discontent and devotion to the Mahometan faith had united in directing his steps, being assassinated had slain in battle.

The reign of Akbar was long, and during the greater part of it he was engaged in resisting rebellion or invasion within his actual nions; in endeavouring to reduce to subjection those countries which owned inal dependence upon him, or in extendhis empire by fresh conquests. At this riod the greater part of the Deccan was subsufficient in his own judgment to authorize his assuming the title of Emperor of the With one of the kings who had denied his right to superiority, Akbar entered into relations of amity and alliance. marriage to the son of Akbar. The offer was the princess on the occasion, and, at the invi-ward her influence was unbounded.

power, made way for his son Akbar, whose marriage, he died from the consequences of name occupies so conspicuous a place in the excessive drinking. His death, and the circumstances connected with it, severely affected Akbar was not fourteen years of age when the previously declining health of Akbar, who, he ascended the throne. The youth of the in about six months, followed his son to the the previously declining health of Akbar, who, sovereign exposed the empire to attack, and grave, after a reign of more than fifty-one years. Akbar left an only son, Selim, who ascended the throne after a brief struggle made by a party in the court to set him aside in favour of his own son. Selim, with oriental modesty, assumed the name of Jehangir, Conqueror of the World. He was himself, however, under the control of a female, whose name is distinguished in the romantic annals of the East, and as his passion is the most remarkable circumstance of his life, it merits some notice. The captivator of Jehangir was the daughter of a Tartar adventurer, who had raised himself to favour in the court of Akbar, and, according to the legend current in Asia, her birth and infancy had been distinguished by circumstances of an extraordinary character. But whatever might have been the events of her childhood, she grew up a woman of the most exquisite beauty; while in the arts of music, dancing, poetry, and painting, it is said sho had no equal among her own sex. Selim saw and admired her, but she was betrothed to a man of rank. The prince appealed to his father, who was then living, but Akbar would not suffer the contract to be infringed, even on the road by an Affghan, whose father he for the gratification of his son, and the heir to his throne. The death of the emperor, and the succession of Selim, removed the obstacle thus interposed either by justice or prudence. The object of Selim's passion had indeed then become a wife, but this was a matter too trivial to be an impediment to the gratification of the wishes of the Conqueror of the World. The presumption of her husband in appropriating a treasure which a prince had ject to Mahometan princes, the descendants of aspired to possess was punished by his death. former invaders; but community of faith did On the inexplicable coldness with which not protect them from the effects of Akbar's Jehangir subsequently regarded the woman desire for empire. Akbar demanded that they for whom he had incurred so much guilt, and should acknowledge his supremacy. This they on his sudden and extraordinary relapse into refused; and the emperor proceeded to attack all the wild abandonment of his former passion, His success was but partial, but it was it is unnecessary to dwell. Suffice it to say, that after the lapse of some years the emperor espoused the aspiring beauty, whose embraces he had bought with blood. The name of the enslaver of the Conqueror of the World was The changed to Noor Mahal, Light of the Harem. Shah of Beejapoor offered his daughter in At a later period her name was again changed by royal edict to Noor Jehan, Light of the accepted. The nuptials were celebrated with World; and to distinguish her from other great magnificence. Ferishta, the eminent inmates of the seraglio, she was always ad-Mahometan historian, is said to have attended dressed by the title of empress. Thencefortation of her husband, to have accompanied family were raised to the highest offices and the royal pair to the city of Berhampoor. But distinctions. Her father became vizier, and neither the conversation of the learned his torian, nor the charms of the youthful bride, preserved the prince from courses injurious to intrigues and triumphs, her crimes and her his health and very inconsistent with his mistortunes—is full of interest; but to pursue creed; for, within a few months after his it further would not be compatible with either the limits or the object of this work. event, immediately relating to that object, complained to the emperor that he was must not be passed over. It was in the reign annoyed by a set of "European idolaters," of Jehangir that an English ambassador, Sir who had been permitted to establish themthe Mogul court, in the hope of securing but who, instead of adhering strictly to the Little, however, was effected by the ambassa- acts of violence on the subjects of the empire. magnificent.

The latter years of Jehangir's reign were attended by many vicissitudes of fortune, of advert. which the haughty and vindictive character of impulse from Henry, the fifth son of John, his empress, and the rebellious spirit of his the first king of Portugal of that name. sons, were among the principal causes. The Under his auspices, several expeditions were death of the emperor made way for the suc-litted out for exploring the coast of Africa and cession of his son, Shah Jehan, who commenced the adjacent seas. The first discovery was not his reign by a liberal use of the bow-string and very important, but was sufficient to afford the dagger. Resolved, like Macbeth, to secure encouragement and stimulate to perseverance. the throne, he was more successful than that It consisted of the little island of Puerto usurper in carrying his resolution into effect; and, with the exception of himself and his sons, all the male posterity of the house of Timour were disposed of. Yet the reign of Shah Jehan was at an early period disturbed by disaffection. An able and ambitious general, named Lodi, who held the chief command in the Deccan, had manifested reluctance to acknowledge the claims of Shah Jehan, and it became necessary to employ force to produce phical knowledge then existing. conviction of the rightfulness of the emperor's gress seemed to have been made towards the title. Lodi yielded to this argument, and ten- attainment of the grand object of these enterdering submission, was apparently forgiven. His pardon was even sealed by an appointment to a provincial government, but being ordered to attend at court, his reception there was accompanied by such studied insult, that an affray took place in the royal presence; swords he had previously established an interest. Lodi, having experienced innumerable disasters, died, with the few followers that still Vasco de Gama. adhered to him, in an encounter prompted by the calamities which that unhappy country was destined to bear. A severe drought produced famine—famine was followed by pestilence, and the dreadful mortality which ensued probably hastened the termination of hostilities. During his progress homeward, Shah Jehan took possession of several fortresses, and extorted money or an acknowledgment of his supremacy, as well as a promise of tribute, from the princes through whose dominions he merce. passed.

One cuous part in India. The governor of Bengal Thomas Roe, deputed by James I., arrived at selves at Hooghly, for the purposes of trade, protection to the English in the commerce business of merchants, had fortified themwhich they were carrying on with India, selves, and become so insolent as to commit dor, although his reception was courteous and These "European idolaters" were the Portuguese, to whose extraordinary career of discovery and conquest it will now be proper to Their discoveries received the first Santo, so named from its having been discovered on the festival of All-Saints, was in the year 1418. In the following year the adventurers were further rewarded by the discovery of Madeira. For more than half a century the voyages of the Portuguese were continued in the same direction, but in general without more important results than occasional additions to the small stock of geogra-Little proprises—viz., the discovery of a new route to India—till the latter end of the fifteenth century, when Bartholomew Dias eclipsed the fame of all preceding navigators, by his success in reaching the southernmost point of Africa, and in doubling the famous promonwere unsheathed, and Lodi and his relatives tory called by himself Cabo Tormontoso, the He took the road to the Deccan, where Cape of Storms, but more happily and permanently designated by his sovereign, Cabo de Thither he was followed by the emperor at Bona Esperanza, the Cape of Good Hope. the head of an immense army. After a variety Emanuel, the successor of John of Portugal, of operations in different quarters, the impe-proceeded in the steps of his predecessor. An rial arms were everywhere successful, and expedition was fitted out in furtherance of the object in view, and committed to the care of It sailed from Lisbon on the 9th of July, 1497, doubled the Cape on the energy of despair. The emperor continued the 20th of November following, and finally to prosecute the war in the Deccan; but the reached Calicut; thus achieving the triumph ravages of the sword were but a small part of so long and so anxiously sought. The admiral was forthwith introduced to the native prince, a Hindoo, called by the Portuguese historians Zamorin, by native authorities, Samiri; and after a short stay, marked by alternations of friendliness and hostility, set sail on his return to Portugal, where he was received with the honours which he had so well earned.

The Portuguese returned, and received permission to carry on the operations of com-But disputes soon arose, and acts of violence were committed on both sides. In following the history of the Mogul em-[power and influence of the Portuguese, howpire, an incident which occurred in the reign ever, continued to extend, and the assistance of Shah Jehan directs attention to a Euro-afforded by them to the neighbouring King of pean nation which for a time acted a conspi- Cochin, in his quarrel with the Zamorin, was rewarded by permission to erect a fort for their protection within the territories of the reckless disregard of human suffering. former prince. Thus was laid the foundation of the Portuguese dominion in the East. An attempt to obtain possession of Calicut failed. Against Goa the invaders were more success-That city was taken by storm; and force, was again captured by the Portuguese, and became the seat of their government, the capital of their Indian dominions, and the see of an archbishop—the primate of the Indies.

The Portuguese were not slow in improving the advantages which they had gained. They claimed the dominion of the Indian seas, extended their commerce into every part of the East, established numerous factories and forts for its management and protection, and waged destructive wars-sometimes in maintaining what they had acquired, sometimes in endeavouring to add to their power.

At Hooghly they appear to have established themselves with their usual views, and they probably exhibited their accustomed insolence Shah Jehan entertained no and violence. affection for them, having, when engaged in rebellion against his father, been personally offended by the commander of the Portuguese force at Hooghly. The taunt was treasured up, and the complaint of the governor of Hooghly afforded an opportunity of showing that it was not forgotten. The emperor's than decisive :-- "Expel these idolaters from my dominions," was the imperial mandate. The subahdar, to whom it was addressed, lost attack the Portuguese factory, and a practicable breach being effected, the place was car-y assault. The Portuguese defended

y assault. The Portuguese defended es with courage, and after the enemy the town, continued to fight under the houses; but being no match for assailants in point of numbers, they were impelled, after an unsuccessful attempt to make terms, to lay down their arms, and trust to the elemency of the victor. Their fate was better than might have been anticipated, for the conqueror spared their lives, and contented himself with wreaking his wrath on their numerous images, which were forthwith broken down and destroyed. The affair was altogether trivial, and would deserve no notice, but as being the first instance in which the arms of the Mogul were directed against Europeans in the East.

In other quarters Shah Jehan carried on warlike operations upon a larger scale. Professing the opinion that "it is not enough for a great prince to transmit to his posterity the dominions only which he has received from his destined to execute the ambitious orders of the med married. emperor.

Those orders were marked by the most country was delivered over to fire, and the people to the sword. One hundred and fifteen towns and castles were taken in the course of a year, and the kings of Beejapoor and Golconda, unable to offer any effective although subsequently retaken by a native resistance, were compelled to propitiate the emperor by the most humiliating submission. They renounced their rank as sovereign princes, and received commissions from the emperor, constituting them hereditary gover-nors of their own dominions. In all their public acts they were to acknowledge the emperor and his successors as lords paramount, and to designate themselves the humble subjects of the Emperor of the Moguls. Tribute, under such circumstances, was not to be forgotten, and large annual payments were stipulated for, the first of them to take place on signing the treaty.

But the Deccan was not to enjoy any long interval of peace. A Persian, named Mir Jumla, who had acquired considerable wealth by trading in diamonds, became a resident at the court of Kootb, sovereign of Golconda, and ultimately obtained the highest command there. In that capacity he had conducted a war of several years' duration in the Carnatic, where he had gathered spoil of immense value. Dissatisfied with his sovereign Kooth, Mir Jumla threw himself upon Aurungzebe, son of orders on the occasion were not more brief Shah Jehan, who then commanded for his father in the Deccan. The desertion of Jumla was followed by the imprisonment of his son. and the confiscation of so much of his wealth no time in acting upon it. He proceeded to as was within reach. Jumla, who had acquired the confidence of Aurungzebe, thereupon exerted his influence with the prince to bring about a war with Kootb. Aurungzebe warmly pressed the same views upon the emperor, whose consent to commence hostilities was readily obtained. The command of the expedition was intrusted to Mohammed, Aurungzebe's eldest son. Kootb being wholly unprepared for war, became alarmed, and sought to save himself by concessions, but those which he was prepared to yield fell short of the demands of his invaders. hammed thereupon entered Hydrabad, and the scene so often acted under Mahometan conquerors was repeated. Fire and massacre raged through the city, and the activity of the first of these agents disappointed in a great degree the appetite of the conquerors for plun-So rapid was the progress of the flames, that nothing was saved except such articles as were indestructible even by fire. Similar horrors followed at the old city of Golconda. whither Kooth had retreated, and which was entered by Mohammed shortly after. Kootb fathers," he proceeded to manifest a practical was now at the mercy of his conqueror, and adherence to it by taking measures for the subjugation of the Deccan. An immense force was collected and divided into several armies, these scenes of blood and slaughter, Mohamthese scenes of blood and slaughter, Moham-

The termination of the war afforded the

Decean but a brief period of repose. In the devotion. Morad was entirely deceived by following year the dependent king of Beejapoor these professions, and a junction of their forces died. The vacant throne was filled without was determined upon. While Aurungzebe was reference to the emperor, and the omission waiting for the arrival of Morad, he learnt of this ceremony was deemed a fit occasion for that an immense force, under a distinguished again consigning the Deccan to the horrors Rajpoot commander, had advanced to oppose was given nominally to Jumla, who had esta- his defeat would have been almost certain: blished himself in high favour, but was actually but he was saved by the absurd vanity of the possessed by Aurungzebe. Victory again at- Rajpoot general, who waited for the junction tended the armies of the emperor. The prin-of the brothers, that he might in one day cipal fortresses were, in rapid succession, triumph over two imperial princes. That reduced, and the offending king constrained triumph was denied him, for after a long and to sue for peace, at the expense of any sacri-murderous conflict, he quitted the field a vanfice that the caprice of his conquerors might quished man, though exhibiting to the last demand.

The court and empire of Shah Jehan were contempt of dauger. now about to be agitated by extraordinary had taken to preserve the throne to his own his defeat, had been besieged by Soliman, the family, did not secure him in the tranquil son of Dara, in a fortress to which he had reoccupation of it. He had four sons, named treated; but as the combination of Aurungzebe Dara, Shooja, Aurungzebe, and Morad. The and Morad seemed likely to afford sufficient emperor being afflicted with serious illness, occupation to the emperor and his forces, it the exercise of the government devolved upon was deemed expedient to bring the war with Dara. An edict, directing that the seal of Shooja to as speedy a termination as possible. Dara should be considered as valid as that He was accordingly reinstated in the governof the emperor, had been issued some time ment of Bengal, on giving a solemn promise before the latter became incapacitated for rule, to abstain from converting his power into the but until that period Dara made no use of this means of attacking his sovereign. The army extraordinary power. The illness of the empe-lunder Soliman, being thus set at liberty, ror, however, accelerated a crisis which had marched to effect a junction with another long been in preparation. Dara issued an commanded by Dara, which was advancing order, forbidding, under pain of death, all against the rebel brothers, Aurungzebe and intercourse with his brothers on the existing Morad. Dara had fortified himself, about state of affairs. Their agents at court were twenty miles from Agra, in a position from imprisoned, their papers seized, and the pro- which it was difficult, if not impossible, to perty in their hands attached. His brothers, dislodge him; but a traitor within the camp on their parts, were not idle. Shooja, the suggested to Aurungzebe a circuitous movesecond, was administering the government of ment towards Agra, which was adopted, the Bengal. Aurungzebe was in the Deccan; tents, baggage, and artillery of his army being Morad, in Guzerat. Each on receiving intelleft to deceive their opponents. It was not ligence of his father's illness assigned to him-till the rebels were in full march to Agra that self the crown. Shooja was the first to advance Dara became aware of the artifice which had towards the capital. The emperor, however, been practised. He succeeded, however, in recovered, and Dara, with a propriety of intercepting their progress; but a trial of feeling not common in the East, returned the strength was now inevitable, although it was government into his hands. were not disconcerted by the change. Affect- the arrival of his son Soliman, who was ading to disbelieve the report of the emperor's vancing to join him with the flower of the recovery, he advanced, but it was to his own imperial army. The conflict which took place discomfiture. manded by Soliman, the son of Dara, and doubtful. Ultimately the victory was decided entirely defeated.

to make his blow more sure. He levied forces, but not, he professed, to promote any ambi-tious designs of his own. With characteristic day; and his remaining troops, seeing the ele-

The command of the invading force him. Had Aurungzebe been then attacked, abundant and extravagant proofs of his own

The result of the battle excited great alarm The atrocious care which Shah Jehan in the court of Shah Jehan. Shooja, ever since Shooja's plans important to Dara to postpone a battle till He was met by a force com- was obstinate, and the result for a long time by one of those accidents which have so often Aurungzebe was less precipitate. He paused determined the fate of armies and of nations. Dara, from some cause, dismounted from an tious designs of his own. With characteristic day; and his remaining troops, seeing the electraftiness, he assured his brother Morad, that his own views were directed to heaven, and not to a throne; but Dara, he declared, was unfit for sovereignty, while Shooja was a heretic, and consequently unworthy of the crown. Under these circumstances, he was anxious to assist Morad in ascending the struck by the supposed loss of their general, throne, after which he should retire to spend the remainder of his life in the exercise of timely junction with his father Dara.

possession of the person of his father. A long numerous army, and marched on the capital, series of stratagem and counter-stratagem was played between the emperor and his son, who strong position about thirty miles distant from sought his throne. greater artist, ultimately triumphed. An Autungrebe. That wary general was in no rungzebe then saluted Morad emparer, and harte, for he did not desire to bring the enemy gravely solicited permission to make a pil- to action till the arrival of his son Mohammed, reluctance, gave the required consent.

means for destroying the other. The superior Jerwunt Singh, the Rajpent chief where genius of Aurungzebe for intrigue again in insane vanity had formerly led to his defeat sured his success. Morad was seized and by the combined forces of Aurungzebe and to bear any extraordinary charge.

he had found himself scarcely able to maintain had recourse to dissimulation, that tener-the contest. The army of Aurungzebe had failing ingredient of Oriental policy. He cononce been saved from imminent destruction gratulated Aurungzehe on bis attaining the by the infatuation of the Rajpoot general, in throne, and relicited a commission continuing allowing his junction with the army of Morad, him in the government of Bengal. Armng-The combined forces of the rebel brothers were zebe, though he did not grant what was asked, now, to all appearance, preserved from a simi- met the overtures of Shoojs with great courlar fate by the inability of Soliman to effect a tesy, and both princes were profuer in profesmely junction with his father Dara. sions by which neither was descived. At The next object of Aurungzebe was to obtain length Shooja took the field at the head of a The latter, being the that city, where he awaited the approach of grimage to Mecca. Morad, who at last began who was advancing from the north with rein-to discern the real views of his hypocritical forcements; but, on receiving this accorded brother, was not disinclined to be relieved of strength, he moved forward with celerity, from his presence; and, after some feigned and the fate of the empire was pixed on the foun of a battle. On the first day of the con-Aurungzebe pretended to make preparations fliet, the evening closed without any decisive for his journey; it was never commenced; advantage on either aide. On the following and each of the brothers, lately confederates day victory seemed about to crown the arms in crime, and still estensibly warm friends, of Aurungzebe, when an unexpected act of turned all his thoughts to the discovery of treachery threw his army into confusion.

placed under restraint. The time had now Morad, had made his peace with the former arrived when Aurungzebo thought it rafe and prince, and on this occasion his troops were expedient to appropriate that prize which he arrayed in the cause of the new emperor. He had so long coveted. A body of those con- received orders to advance, and he made a had so long coveted. A body of those con-in ceived orders to advance, and he made a venient friends who are never wanting to the show of obeying them; but at a critical monavourites of fortune,—who watch the slightest intimation of a desire, and stand obsequiously ready to anticipate the wishes of those on whose favour they live—besought Aurungzebe all his force. To aggravate the effect of his to crown his possession of imperial power by the assumption of the imperial title. He allies, seizing the baggage and putting to the word the women, with whom the movements al, but not to disappoint the wishes of of an Eastern army are encumbered. Panic, who loved him, he finally accorded the so easily propagated through an Oriental who loved him, he finally accepted the so easily propagated through an Oriental our thus thrust upon him. His ascent to army, began to take place, and, but for the throne was not marked by any pompous firmness of Aurungzebe, would soon have deceremonial, for Aurungzebe affected to despise cided the question of victory or defeat. He magnificence, and his contempt for display remained seated on an elephant apparently rewas, at this time, strengthened by the know- gardless or unconscious of the danger which ledge that his finances were not in a condition menaced him. A personal conflict between the brother competitors for the empire was Shah Jehan and Morad, his youngest son, averted by an officer of Aurungzebe, who were now prisoners of Aurungzebe. Dara, rushed before that prince, disabling the elethe rightful heir to the throne, was flying phant on which Shooja was mounted, so as to ingloriously to the boundaries of the empire render him unmanageable. The place of before the arms of Aurungzebe. Soliman, the Shooja was immediately taken by one of his son of Dara, having been abandoned by the chiefs, who advanced against Aurungzebe on greater part of his once fine army, found a an elephant, and by the violence of the shock precarious refuge with the chief of a small threw that of the emperor on his knees, a poprecatious reings with the chief of a small threw that of the emperor on as knees, a postate near the source of the Ganges. Shooja, the second son of Shah Jehan, alone remained in a condition to offer any effective resistance of the actual possessor of the throne of Delhi. The rich and populous districts of Bengal afforded ample means for recruiting the loss phatic exclamation of an officer: "Stop—you which Shooja had sustained in his conflict with Shooja had sustained in his conflict with descend from the throne." Aurungzebe re-Soliman. To gain time for the purpose had spirated his place and the fight continued His Soliman. To gain time for the purpose, he gained his place, and the fight continued. His emergency. to carry away his booty. He had the further med to depart, and to take with him his wife, that he had defeated the emperor. The delu-the camp, in which, a short time before, Morungzebe, who entered Agra amid many manifestations of humility and self-denial. His father was within its walls, and, on his account, his filial piety silenced the guns which would otherwise have celebrated his entrance. was not fit," he said, "to triumph in the ears of a father over the defeat of his son."

Shooja fled in the direction of Bengal, pursued by Mohammed, at the head of a considerable force, against which the former was unable to bear up. Shooja, therefore, con- the army of Aurungzebe, had been constantly tinued to retreat, till an extraordinary incident retreating, was at last compelled to quit his for a time changed the aspect of affairs, and own dominions and seek safety in Arracan; afforded him hope of better fortune. Before but even there he was still pursued by the the war Mohammed had been enamoured of machinations of his implacable brother. Shooja one of the daughters of Shooja. An overture had carried with him considerable treasure, of marriage had been made and accepted, but and this added to his danger, by exciting the the breach between the imperial brothers had cupidity of the rajah with whom he had sought prevented its being carried into effect. Mo-hammed's passion seemed to have passed found, and, under the combined influence of away; but while engaged in pursuing the avarice and fear, Shooja and his two sons were retreating army of Shooja, he received a letter murdered. His wife destroyed herself, and from the object of his attachment, lamenting two of his daughters followed her example; the unhappy dissensions between her father a third was forced into a marriage with the and the man who had been destined for her rajah, but survived the closing calamities of This letter had the effect of re- her house but a short time. husband. viving the affection of Mohammed in all its former strength. The prince at once aban- in various directions, apparently without any doned the cause of his father, and passed over fixed purpose. In Guzerat he, after a time, lowed by a large part of his army, but in this to place himself at the head of an army; and he was disappointed. He obtained the hand having opened a correspondence with Jeswunt of her for whom he had sacrificed his position Singh, the Hindoo rajah-who, notwithstandas the heir of Aurungzebe, and the nuptial ing his recent treachery, appears to have ob-celebrations were joyous and magnificent; but tained the emperor's pardon, and to have calamity was approaching with rapid steps, been left in possession of his power,—that and the ruin of Mohammed followed hard on person intimated his intention of deserting the indulgance of his pression. The detectable the indulgence of his passion. The detestable Aurungzebe in the hour of danger, and urged policy of Aurungzebe discovered the means of Dara to hasten and support his defection. alienating the affections of Shooja from his Dara's evil fortune or want of judgment on son including and they was a support in Dara's evil fortune or want of judgment on son including and they was a support in the property of the support in the son-in-law, and they were employed with his this, as on so many other occasions usual precision and success. A letter was ad-He waited to augment his for elephant showing a disposition to turn, Au-|dressed by Aurungzebe to Mohammed, apparungzebe ordered his feet to be locked, and in | rently in answer to one from the prince to the this position the emperor sustained the thick-est of the fight. Shooja committed the error mild reproof to the conduct of Mohammed; which had been fatal to Dara, and from which his alleged professions of repentance were Aurungzebe was only preserved by the stern noticed in language of pardon and approba-warning of a follower. When his elephant tion; and the execution of certain designs, could not be moved forward he descended, and which were only darkly alluded to, was laid mounted a horre which was brought on the down as an indispensable condition of complete The appearance of the elephant forgiveness. The letter was placed by Shooja with the empty castle, gave rise to a report in the hands of Mohammed, who disavowed that Shooja had fallen, and flight became uni- having entered into any correspondence with Aurungzebe was unable to pursue his his father; but Shooja could not prevail upon victory, but he remained master of the field. himself to yield belief to his protestations, and In the night, however, his ally, the Rajpoot he dismissed the prince from his court. The chief, returned and plundered the camp. This infliction of perpetual imprisonment, or of sumact of aggression was chastised in the morning; mary death, would have been in perfect ac-but though in the scrambling conflict which en-cordance with the received practice of the sued fortune went against the rajah, he was able East; but Shooja not only suffered Mohamconsolution of a temporary enjoyment of the but also a vast amount of treasure, with which distinction of a conqueror, for he presented the munificence of the monarch had endowed himself before the walls of Agra, and boasted his daughter. The banished pair proceeded to sion was dissipated by the appearance of Au-hammed had held the chief command, but where now, though he was received with the honours due to his rank, the troops by whom he was surrounded were rather his keepers than his guards. He was placed in confinement at Gwalior, and whether he was ever permitted to emerge from his prison-house appears doubtful. But it is certain that he never again attained any portion of power, and that he died in obscurity and neglect.

Shooja, who, since the fatal conflict with

Dara, after his defeat, wandered for a time He had calculated upon being fol- obtained assistance, which canbled him again leisure to direct his armies against his elder Delhi, when returning from his atrocious brother.

tion near Ajmere. To dislodge him was a try people when only a short distance from difficult, if not an impracticable task, and its boundaries. Aurungzebe, as usual, thought treachery a better weapon than those upon which more Two chiefs, high-minded warriors depend. who had previously been adherents of Dara, now held commands in the army of Aurung haghur. But the rajah had his price, and zobo. At the suggestion of that prince, they Aurungzebe was willing to pay it. Soliman, addressed a letter to Dara, offering to renew aware of the negotiation, end avoured to each their former allegiance to him, and promising cape the fate prepared for him by flight to the to march over to his camp at sunrise the next northward; but, losing his way in the nounmorning. Dara was warned not to trust to tainous country, he fell into the hands of his this overture, but the warning was vain. He betrayer, by whom he was forthwith transordered that admission should be given to the ferred to the tender care of Aurungselse. expected deserters, and at the appointed time The course of events relieved Aurungrebe they commenced the anticipated movement, from another source of disquiet. After an To countenance the delusion, the artillery of imprisonment of more than reven years, his Aurungzebe opened a fire upon them, but father died, thus leaving the usurger without with powder only. On reaching the entrance a competitor. From the age which Shah to the camp the mask was thrown off-some Johan had attained, his death could not be what earlier, perhaps, than was intended, in regarded as a remarkable event; but the chaconsequence of the suspicious of one of Dara's ractor of his son was such as to countenance officers, who required the strangers to stop suspicion that nature had not been left entirely till he should be satisfied of their real designs, to perform her own work. The unwelcome challenge was answered by an | Aurungrebe was now the undisputed master arrow which pierced the heart of the cautious of a vast empire; but a new power was rising officer, and a contest hand to hand then commenced. The assailants gained the summit of a prominent place in the history of India. The Mahinttas consisted of reveral tribes of from this elevation cast down stones and fraghundred.

undeserving of mention that the treacherous territory, and presented an appearance suffi-chief, who had delivered his benefactor to captivity and death, did not lose his just re- his neighbours. When Aurungzebe entered ward. Having narrowly escaped death from the Deccan, he opened a correspondence with zebo, having overcome Shooja, was left at the indignation of the people at the gates of errand, he was less fortunate on approaching Dara had fortified himself in a strong posi- his own government, being slain by the coun-

> The occurrence of these events was anterior to the death of Shoofs, which has been already noticed. Soliman, the son of Dara, had for a time found an asylum with the flajab of Seri-

ments of rock upon their enemies beneath, partake of that obscurity which hangs over while Aurungzebe, with his whole line ad-Hindoo antiquity. At this period they were vanced in the front. Confusion raged through-brought into notice by the appearance among out the camp, and panic, that mighty con-them of one of those remarkable men whose queror of armed hosts, did its work. Dara's ambition and success astonish and afflict the loss is said to have amounted to four thousand, | world. The name of this Mahratta leader was while that of Aurungzebe did not exceed two Sevajee. His father, named Shahjee, had been a successful adventurer, who, though of Dara was once more a wanderer without a humble origin, had played an important part ing-place, and for a time was subjected to in the intrigues and wars of the Deccan. at inconceivable distress. He meditated Sevajee was born amid the storms of war, and ing into Persia, but the severe illness of during his childhood, was frequently in danger wife, which rendered her removal impos- of falling into the hands of enemies. Under sible, and his reliance upon the friendship of these circumstances his education comprea chief whom he had twice saved from death hended little more than instruction in horsewhen judicially condemned, delayed his purpose. The sultana died, and Dara proposed pose. The sultana died, and Dara proposed pose employed in the Deccan, in which accompose carry into execution his contemplated flight plishments he acquired considerable skill and activity. After proceeding a short distance are deep attachment to his native superstitions, with whom he had been accounted and a determined between of the Malayanana. with whom he had lately sojourned following him at the head of a large body of horse. His chosen associates were persons of wild Dara at first supposed that this was an escort and lawless habits, and scandal attributed to of honour; but he was soon undeceived by him participation in the profits of gang-rob-finding himself surrounded, disarmed, and bers. But his ambition soon aimed at higher bound. He was thus carried to Delhi, and, objects. The unsettled state of the country bound. He was thus carried to Delhi, and, objects. The unsettled state of the country after being paraded ignominiously through the favoured his views, and his operations were so city, was thrown into prison. There, after a cautiously conducted as to attract little notice, brief interval, he was murdered. It is not till he had possessed himself of a considerable

Sevajce, but both were such perfect masters indiversary, who had been stationed at a little of every description of political intrigue, that distance, and who, being unprepared for such neither succeeded in gaining any advantage. An attack, found themselves exposed to an Sevajee continued to pursue his own objects enemy before they could stand to their arms, by his own means until the government of The victory curiched Sevajee with a vast Resimpsor decined it necessary to make an amount of plunder, but this was little comactive effort to subdue him. An expedition was pared with the accession of reputation which despatched for the purpose, but Sevajee dissidenced to it,—the perpetration of successful posed of its commander in a manner perfectly treachery being, in Mahratta estimation, the characteristic. He affected alarm, and pro- highest exercise of human genius. posed submission. A Brahmin, in the service of his Mahametan enemy, was accordingly and a succession of disasters at length comof his Mahometan enemy, was accordingly and a succession of disasters at length com-despatched to confer with him. To this per-ron Sevajee chlarged on his own devotion to release the Hindoo faith, on the exertions he had jee was invited to Delhi; the invitation being made in its cause, and those which he utill accompanied by a promise, by no means un-meditated; the effect of these topics on the Brahmin being aided by large presents, and Decean. Upon the faith of this he proceeded still larger promises. By the united influence to Delhi, but his reception was unsatisfactory, of these motives, the pious Brahmin was so and having expressed some indignation, it was overcome as to be induced to suggest a plan intimated that the emperor for the future for getting rid of his employer. This was declined seeing him at court. He was subseeagerly embraced by Sevajce, and the con-quently placed under some degree of restraint, ference broke up. The desired object was to but he succeeded in outwitting his keepers and be effected by prevailing upon Afaool Khan, the Mahometan general, to afford Sevajee and interview, each to be attended by only a single energy to the task of more effectually esta-follower; and the worthy Brahmin found little difficulty in betraying his master into the parameter. At the appointed time Sovajee prepared himself for the holy work which he was favour for his son; and he availed himself of about to excent by the ceremonics of religion and the solace of maternal approbation. He performed his ablutions with peculiar care, and, laying his head at his mother's feet, beand, laying his head at his mother's feet, he-imactivity seemed to favour the belief that he rought her bleesing. Thus morally armed for was satisfied with what he possessed, and would the conflict, he did not, however, neglect to now settle down into a quiet dependent of the provide himself with the more substantial Mogul emperor. Those, however, who enter-requisites of success and safety. To appear tained this belief were deceived. His warlike ance his covering was only a turban and a habits were soon resumed; several important cotton gown, but beneath he wore a steel-chain places were taken, and Surat, which he had cap and steel armour. Within his right sleeve plundered some years before, was again subhe placed a crooked dagger, called, in the jected to the rame operation. On this, as on language of the country, a scorpion; and on the former occasion, the inmates of the English the fingers of his left hand a treacherous weather the fingers of his left hand a treacherous weather the fingers of his left hand a treacherous weather the fingers of his left hand a treacher of the former occasion. The Dutch three crooked blades of small dimensions the many attached their factors. three crooked blades of small dimensions, the were not attacked, their factory being beyond whole being easily concealed in a half-closed the scene of action. The French purchased hand. Thus accounted he slowly advanced to an ignominious immunity, by giving the Mahthe place of meeting. The Khan had arrived rattes a passage through their factory to attack before him, and Sevajce, as he approached, a Tartar prince returning from Mecca with a frequently stopped, as though under the influ-To assure him, the armed ence of alarm. attendant of the Mahometan general was, by the contrivance of the friendly Brahmin, removed to a few paces distant from his master, land, or to add to his wealth by successful and the latter approaching Sevajce, the conference commenced by the ordinary ceremonial of an embrace. The Mahratta prepared to no longer with exercising the functions of make the most of his opportunity, and struck sovereignty, but determined to assume the the tiger's claw into the body of the Khan, style of an independent prince, and to establish following the blow by another from his dagger. an era from the date of his according the The Khan drew his sword and made a cut at throne. He was enthroned with all the revehis assausin, but it fell harmless upon the con-rence which superstition could lend to the vast treasure of gold and silver, and other valuable articles. In addition to his land force, Sevajce fitted out a powerful fleet, calculated either to co-operate with his troops by piracy; and being thus prepared to support his intention, he resolved to content himself cealed armour. Sevajee's follower rushed to ceremony, and assumed titles not inferior in his support, and a preconcerted signal being swollen grandeur to those horne by other given, a body of troops attacked those of his Eastern potentates. The addition

Sevajee was not always equally fortunate.

With the Rajpont states, the hypocrisy of catter being subjected to arrestial tortures, the curungsche found another mode of exercise, was publicly tehesiled in the camp because. Conversion to the Mahometan faith was proposed to their acceptance, and the alternative destroyed. The brother of Sumilajee was was submission to an oppressive capitation placed on the throne, and all the forms of posed to their acceptance, and the alternative destroyed. The brother of Sumilajee was was submission to an oppressive capitation placed on the throne, and all the forms of tax. To prepare the way for the designs government maintained. Sattara became the of Aurungzebe, two Rajpoot princes are said residence of the mish, and the principal seat to have been taken off by poison, and a of the Mahratta power. In a few years a treacherous attempt to subject the children greater force was in the field than Sexajee had trencherous attempt to subject the children greater force was in the field than Sevajee had of one of them to the initiatory rite of Manjever commanded, and tribute was levied achometanism was defeated only by the despondenting to approved precedent. The emperic, rate valour of their guards. In the war which however, appeared unexpectedly before Satensued Aurungzebe gained little either of tara, which being inadequately provisioned for honour or advantage, and his fourth son a siege, lell into his hands, though not with-Akbar, while engaged in it, was tempted by out occasioning him severe less. From some the offer of the aid of the Rajpoots to raise error in the construction of a mine, it exploded the standard of rebellion against his father, in a direction not contemplated, and it is raid Aurungzobe took the same course by which that two thousand of the besiegers were debe had ruined his son Mohammed with Shooja, stroyed by the accident. A month before this Lie addressed a letter to Akbar, applauding a event, the Mahratta sovereign had died from protended scheme by which that prince was to the consequences of over-exertion. He was fall upon the Rajpoots when attacked by the succeeded by his client son, a boy only ten emperor. This, as was designed, fell into the years of age.

hands of the Rajpoot commander, and Akbar A child on such a throne as that of the Mahrattas, with his mother for a guardian, of the picture, it is neither instructive nor would seem to have little chance of success agreeable long to dwell upon it; and as the when opposed by a warrior so experienced, progress of the state is here more strictly the and a negotiator so unprincipled as Aurung-subject of attention than the character of its prosper; and though Aurungzebe, by a series Aurungzebe, the Mogul empire attained its of sieges which occupied several years, suc-widest boundaries, as well as the summit of fortresses, not only were his efforts to crush the enemy abortive, but the vast army which a contest for the succession. It ended in the elevation of his eldest son, Shah Allum, to the complete only five years. he maintained was insufficient even to support his authority. His embarrassments were aggravated by the difficulty of procuring the means of subsisting so large a force. scarcity of grain arose, and the supplies of the imperial army from Hindostan were intercepted by the Mahrattas, who everywhere ravaged the country in search of plunder. The grand army itself was attacked on its route to Ahmednuggur, a part of it defeated, renounced the peaceful occupation of his and its baggage plundered. The person of father for that of a robber chief, and finally the emperor might perhaps have fallen into the hands of the Mahrattas on this occasion had they ventured to persevere in the attack, but on the approach of the emperor's train the enemy retired. The great age of Aurungzebe probably saved him from the mortification of beholding a large portion of his conquests severed from the empire which he had so laboured to extend. But his earthly career was approaching its termination, and the close of his life found a fitting scene amid the turbulence, desolation, and suffering, which raged around him. He died in 1707, after a reign of nearly half a century, and at the patriarchal age of ninety-four.

The ruling passion of Aurungzebe was the love of dominion, and he subjected it to no restraint from the obligations of morality. He was a consummate hypocrite, ever ready to cover the most guilty designs with pretences of devotion and religious zeal. He is said to have made good laws, and to have enforced them with vigour, at the same time that the administration of the empire was mild and equitable; but though his dominions may not port which led to the popular outbreak, by have been in all respects so badly governed as showing Nadir Shah in person, giving orders those of some other Oriental despots, the to his troops to slaughter, without regard to general tenour of his life evinces an utter disregard of all the principles of justice, and a avenue in which they should find the body of total insensibility to the kind and generous a murdered Persian. These orders were fearemotions of nature. It may be that he rarely fully executed, and eight thousand Hindoos, committed a crime which he did not believe Moguls, and Afghans perished in a few hours. necessary to the furtherance of his purposes, but no moral obstacle was ever suffered to of the scene were aggravated by the flames impede them. He manifested a preference, indeed, for certain modes of obtaining any object of desire, but those modes were the meanest and the most vile. Craft and fraud nage. were his favourite instruments, and his long life was an unbroken chain of deceit and ing Delhi to escape with this limited experitreachery. A superficial observer of his cha-

The Mahrattas, however, continued to head, it will be sufficient to observe that, under the throne, which he occupied only five years. Several weak princes followed in rapid succession, whose brief and inglorious reigns may be passed without notice. The terrible visitation which marked that of Mohammed Shah, entitles it to be excepted from oblivion. Nadir Shah, a native of Khorassan, and the son of a maker of sheepskin-coats and caps, had seated himself on the Persian throne. being engaged in war with the Afghans, had reason, or pretended that he had reason, to be dissatisfied with the conduct of the court of Delhi in relation to his enemies. The murder of an envoy furnished him with a less equivocal pretext for hostilities; and he advanced to inflict punishment with that vigour and celerity which ever distinguished his movements. the plain of Karnal, about four days' journey from Delhi, he fell suddenly upon the unsuspecting forces of the emperor, and quickly putting them to flight, removed every obstacle to his advance to the capital, the gates of which were thrown open to receive him. For two days after the entry of the Persian, peace and order prevailed; but a report of the death of Nadir Shah having been raised, the inhabitants, under cover of the night, rose upon the invaders, and the city became a scene of tumult and violence. Nadir Shah made some efforts to undeceive the people, but to no purpose. The light of the morning, however, discovered the falsehood of the resex or age, the inhabitants of every street or Pillage accompanied bloodshed, and the horrors which rose from every quarter of the capital. The appetite of the destroyer was at length satisfied, and an order given to stay the car-

But Nadir Shah had no intention of allowence of the effects of successful invasion. racter will condemn his bigotry; a more profound one will probably acquit him of this presented as being of vast amount. The procharge, but it will be only to pass a severer perty of the subjects was not permitted to sentence on his atrocious hypocrisy. Where there is so little to relieve the moral darkness sovereign; contributions were demanded and levied with rigid severity. Among a people of the empire, and plundered its capital. The with whom avarice is so strong a passion, there were, of course, many attempts to conceal the possession of wealth; where this was suspected, torture was used to enforce a discovery. Famine and pestilence followed clovely on the devastation of the city, and assisted in completing the horrors of a scene from which numbers escaped by becoming their own destroyers.

Nadir Shah did not exercise the power which he certainly possessed of putting an end to the Mogul sovereignty, but contented himself with annexing to his own dominions the the Mogul state, coded to them as of right. provinces on the west side of the Indus, permitting Mohammed to keep the rest. conqueror then withdrew from Delhi, having retained possession of it not quite two months. In that space, however, a fatal blow had been struck at the grandeur of the Mogul empire.

That empire was, indeed, fast tending to its The Deccan can scarcely be considered as forming a portion of it after the death of Aurungzebe. Many years before the Persian invasion, a powerful chief had been appointed of Nizam-ool-Moolk, Regulator of the State. Though nominally the servant of the emperor, his object from the first was to establish himself as an independent sovereign, and he succeeded. In the subsequent history of India, the Nizam will be found occupying a promisevered from the Mogul empire soon after the visit of Nadir Shah; the sovereignty of Bengal being seized by one of those speculators in thrones, to whose hopes the unsettled state of the country afforded encouragement. government of Oude was usurped by another. On the western side, some of its provinces fell to the Afghans, who penetrated to the heart to be laid.

Seiks, a rect of remi-religious, remi-political adventurers, profited also from the distracted state of the country in this quarter. others, the Jats and the Robillas contributed to relieve the Mogul princes from the toils of government; while the Mahrattas, amidst there convulsions, were not unmindful of the opportunity of obtaining accessions of territory, power, and influence. A portion of the public revenue, which in their plundering ex-peditions they had originally levied as the price of peace, was now, by the weakness of The entire surface of India was studded with their possessions, which, extending eastward. westward, and routhward, to the rea, and northward to Agra, wanted nothing but compactness to constitute them a mighty empire. During the reign of a weak successor of the energetic founder of the Mahratta power, all authority was usurped by the principal officers of the state. Two powerful kingdoms were thus formed, the one under the Peishwa, whose capital was at Poona; the other subgovernor of that region, with the imposing title | ject to the commander-in-chi-f, who fixed the seat of his government at Nagpore. The latter acknowledged a nominal dependence upon the former, and both mocked the Rajah of Sattara with ceremonious but empty homage, while they withheld from him all substantial authority. Other Mahratta chieftains of innent place among the Mahomeian princes of ferior importance also assumed sovereign that country. Another important limb was power, the principal of whom, with the title of Guicowar, held part of Guzerat in a sort of feudal dependence upon the Pcishwa, and fixed his residence at Baroda.

Such was the state of India about the middle The of the eighteenth century, when a new power ther, was to enter the field of Indian politics, and the foundations of a new empire were about

CHAPTER II.

RELATIONS OF EUROPEAN NATIONS WITH-INDIA.—ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF THE ENGLISH EAST-INDIA COMPANY.-WARS OF THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH IN SOUTHERN INDIA. CRITICAL POSITION OF THE ENGLISH .-- DUFLEIX AND CLIVE .-- FATE OF CHUNDA SAMIB.

The first appearance of the English in India from another native prince, was, in like mangave no promise of their future grandeur. ner, fortified, and became a station of some The London East-India Company, established importance under the name of Fort St. David. solely for the purposes of trade, was incorporated towards the latter end of the reign of Elizabeth. Bantam, in Java, for the trade of the Indian Islands, and Surat, for that of the Continent, were long their principal stations. On the Coromandel coast they first established themselves at Masulipatam, subsequently at Armegum, and finally at Madraspatam, where, by the favour of a native prince, they obtained permission to erect a fortification, which received the name of Fort St. George. Tegna-

On the opposite coast, the island of Bombay, which had been ceded to the British crown as part of the marriage portion of Catherine of Portugal, Queen of Charles the Second, was, by that sovereign, granted to the Company, and in process of time it superseded Surat as their principal station on the western coast. In Bengal their progress was slow and subject to frequent checks. They, however, succeeded in establishing various factories, of which that of Hooghly was the chief, but for the most patam, on the same coast, which was purchased | part they were dependent on Fort St. George.

stration of British affairs in that part of India. | for the support of his rival; the English, on Against this place Dupleix directed the arms their part, engaging for his peaceable behaof the French; but the aid of the nabob had viour. These terms, it was believed, were now been secured by the English, partly by more favourable to the invaders than could the desire which he entertained of revenging have been obtained but for the extraordinary his defeat, partly by virtue of an engagement circumstances of the Carnatic. to defray a portion of the expense of his army; and thus assisted, the English were able to issue, in the year 1732. Three wives survived repel the attacks made upon them. pearance of a British fleet also added to their devoted themselves to death on his funeral confidence and security. Thus foiled, Dupleix had recourse to those arts of intrigue in which mode of quitting life, or, as was alleged, in he was a proficient, and by them succeeded in obedience to the wish of the departed rajah, detaching the nabob from his European allies. He was still, however, unable to possess himself of Fort St. David, and the arrival of an additional naval force under Admiral Boscawen emboldened the English to undertake an attack upon Pondicherry. This, however, failed, no less signally than the attempts of Dupleix upon Fort St. David. The information of the assailants was imperfect and erroneous; the engineers were unequal to their duty; in some instances even the want of courage was as manifest as the want of conduct, and the British force returned from Pondicherry with the loss of more than a thousand men. peace of Aix-la-Chapelle restored Madras to the English, who resumed possession in August, 1749.

Humble as was yet the position occupied by our countrymen in India, there were not wanting indications of an approaching change in their relations to the people of the country. Instead of seeking protection from the native authorities, they began to be regarded as in a condition to extend it. Prior to the restoration of Madras, a Mahratta prince had presented himself at Fort St. David to solicit their assistance in regaining the throne of Tanjore, from which he had been expelled. The fugitive prince promised that the fort and territory of Devi-cottah should be the reward

f placing him on the throne, and to remove doubts of the practicability of effecting his toration, he declared that, if supported by moderate force, the people would rise in his On the faith of these representations, the British authorities despatched an expedition against Tanjore, but the expected assistforthcoming; and after encountering some returned to Fort St. David. The government, however, resolved upon making a second hope of assistance from the population of Tan-jore could be entertained. It was thought defeat, and further, a strong desire existed to obtain possession of Devi-cottal, on account of its presumed commercial advantages. A

The Rajah of Trichinopoly had died without The ap- him, the second and third of whom duteously The first, either from a dislike to this conveniently communicated to his confidential minister, preferred to live and to succeed to the government. The commander-in-chief of the forces raised a party in opposition to her pretensions, and to resist him the queen sought the assistance of the Nabob of Arcot. It was readily given; and an army was despatched by that prince to Trichinopoly, under the command of his son, who was aided by the counsels of a man named Chunda Sahib. person, who was allied to his sovereign by marriage, possessed considerable ability and not less ambition. By the successful exercise of the former, he had found means to gratify the latter, having raised himself by a series of successful measures, first to the actual administration of the government, and, finally, to the attainment of the formal appointment of Dewan. In seeking the assistance of the nabob and his ambitious minister, the queen was not insensible of the danger which she incurred, and the foreign troops were not admitted into the fort until the good intentions of their leaders were vouched, to all appearance, by the most selemn obligation that can bind the conscience of a Mussulman. Chunda Sahib tendered his oath upon the Koran as the guarantee that the troops should be introduced for no other purpose than the confirmation of the queen's authority, after which they should be faithfully withdrawn; but the oath was actually taken, not upon the Koran, but on a brick wrapped in a covering similar to that in which the sacred book of the Mahometans is usually enveloped, and Chunda Sahib felt his conscience free. He exercised his freedom to the full extent, by putting an ance from the people of that country was not | end to the authority of the queen, imprisoning her person, and hoisting on the wall of the difficulties and disasters, the British troops fort the flag of Islam. Chunda Sahib having achieved this conquest, was thought the fittest person to administor its government under the attempt, although it was apparent that no authority of his master. This appointment excited jealousy and alarm in the minds of some of the advisers of the Nabob of Arcot, dangerous to continue under the repreach of and they endeavoured to communicate to that prince a portion of their feelings. this, they commenced a series of intrigues with the Mahrattas, the object of which was the new expedition was fitted out, and Devi-cot- removal of Chunda Sahib, who, with his eldest tah was taken. With this acquisition the war son, was finally made prisoner and marched to terminated, the reigning sovereign of Tanjore Sattara. A Mahratta governor took his place, conventing to confirm the English in the postand a large extent of country thus fell under session of it, and to make a small provision the power of that people.

took refuge at Pondicherry. treated with great respect by Dupleix, the intelligence of the advance of Nazir Jung, the an instrument of advancing the French inter-the spot when his father died, had seized his ests in India. prisoner of the Mahrattas was opened, and the his successor; and who, to give to his assump-French governor had the satisfaction of ascertaining that he was not indisposed to enter tended that his elder brother had renounced To serve them effectually, into his views. however, it was necessary that he should be at liberty; negotiations for the purpose were commenced, and Chunda Sahib obtained his freedom. He left Sattara early in 1748, and for some time his fortune was chequered by an alternation of happy and adverse events. But these were of little importance compared with others which followed, and which not only affected the interests of Chunda Sahib, but convulsed the whole of that large portion These] of India denominated the Carnatic. events were the death of Nizam-ool-Moolk, and the contest which ensued for the possession of his power and territories. The dementary disposition. Jung, the grandson of the deceased Nizam, in sight of that of Mozustar Jung, a body this determination being taken with a due of six hundred Europeans, commanded by regard to his own interests. His price was Major Lawrence. It is a remarkable fact, paid in his appointment to the rank of Nabob that while the English and French were thus was to be forthwith undertaken. was perfectly ready to assist the confederates, reference to this anomalous state of things, and a force of four hundred Europeans and Monsieur d'Auteuil sent a message to Major two thousand sepoys, under the command of Lawrence, intimating that although the two from Pondicherry. They joined without diffi- intention of the French commander to shed march to the capital, of which they immethe English were in that country, and tended The feeling was not ill-founded, for answered from three guns. Chunda Sahib, after wasting some time in ostentatious pageantry at Arcot and Pondi-made the communication which has been re-cherry, proceeded to Tanjore, demanding a lated, he was in a state of great difficulty and large sum for arrears of tribute alleged to be perplexity. Several officers who had obtained another sum of great amount to repay the the King of Tanjore to the invaders of his season of negotiation, and some demonstration quired wealth required leisure to enjoy it, of hostility, the Tanjore government agreed to and they had, consequently, solicited and ob-

The wife and younger son of Chunda Sahib pay a heavy ransom; but before the first pay-ok refuge at Pondicherry. There they were ment was completed, Chunda Sahib received governor, who designed to make Chunda Sahib second son of Nizam-ool-Moolk, who, being on A correspondence with the treasure, and was recognized by the army as tion of the sovereignty a colour of right, prehis claim. The news of his approach relieved Tanjore from the unwelcome presence of its invaders, for although but a small part of the stipulated ransom had been received, they broke up their camp with precipitation, and retired towards Pondicherry. Nazir Jung was at the head of an army estimated at three hundred thousand men, but the actual strength of which fell far short of that number. entering the Carnatic he sought the assistance of the English, who, it is said, were convinced by the vastness and splendour of his retinue, that he was the lawful ruler of the southern provinces. It is probable, however, that in complying with his request for military aid, ceased Nizam left several sons, and in addition the English were more influenced by the fact to their claims, whatever they might be, those that the power and influence of the French of his grandson, by a favourite daughter, were were exerted in favour of the rival of Nazir asserted, on the ground of an alleged testa- Jung, than by any regard to the legitimacy Chunda Sahib deter- of his title; but, whatever were their motives, mined to make common cause with Mozuffar they despatched to his camp, which was now of Arcot, and the conquest of the Carnatic preparing for hostile action in Asia, the two Dupleix nations in Europe were at peace. M. d'Auteuil, was despatched to their aid nations took opposite sides, it was not the culty the army with which they were to any European blood; but as he did not know co-operate, now amounting to forty thousand in what part of Nazir Jung's army the English A victory gained principally by means took post, he could not be blamed if any shot of the European troops, the death of the came that way. Major Lawrence answered reigning Nabob of Arcot, the capture of his that the English colours were carried on eldest son, and the flight of the younger to the flag-gun of their artillery, and that if Trichinopoly, left the conquerors at liberty to M. d'Auteuil would look out, he might thence ascertain where the English were posted; that diately proceeded to take possession. The he was as unwilling as the French commander news of these events reached Tanjore while to spill European blood, but that if any shot came his way it would certainly be returned. materially to assist them in making favourable Subsequently a shot from the French intrenchterms with the reigning prince. Between that ment did fly over the English battalion, and prince and Chunda Sahib there were many Major Lawrence, conceiving that it was fired grounds of enmity, and the success of the by M. d'Auteuil, with the design of trying latter was the source of great alarm at Tan-the disposition of the English, ordered it to be At the time when the French commander due from the sovereign of that country, and a liberal share of the partial payment made by expenses of the expedition. After a long dominions, had found that their newly-ac-

time and to seek repose in the city. This mander of the English troops, returned to created discontent among those called upon to Fort St. David, and Nazir Jung proceeded to supply their places. They complained loudly Arcot. There, regardless of the perils by of being exposed to danger without hope of which he was surrounded, he surrendered advantage, while the men who, without fight- | himself entirely to pleasure. ing, had acquired wealth at Tanjore, were permitted to retire from the field; and they demanded such an amount of money as would place them on an equality with those whom they succeeded. To restore military subordination, one of the malcontents was arrested, but the measure was met by a demand from all the rest to be placed in the same situation with their companion. This requisition would probably have been complied with, had not necessity forbidden it. So many officers could not be spared, and for the time they escaped punishment. The natural consequences of this impunity were manifested in the conduct of the private soldiers, who, imitating the example of their officers, became insubordinate, insolent, and regardless of their duty. The disorder was consummated by thirteen of the to defray the expenses of the British force. discontented officers throwing up their commissions and quitting the camp, when M. d'Auteuil, fearful of risking a battle under Ali. It would be ridiculous to call that which such circumstances, determined on withdrawing from the field and marching back to Pondicherry. This determination was a severe blow to the hopes of the party in whose cause they had taken the field; and it was the more fearful because there was little reason to doubt lose a single man, while the nabob lost nearly that the retreat of the French would be followed by the defection of the whole army. Before this should take place, it behoved the French advanced to Gingee, a fortress of some confederated leaders to choose the course strength, which was magnified extravagantly which appeared most likely to insure their in the estimation of native opinion. Of this safety. Chunda Sahib resolved to accompany place they gained possession with a rapidity the French to Pondicherry. Mozuffar Jung, calculated to astonish even themselves, and · to that prince. are held out to him, confirmed, it is stated, he sanction of an oath. They were fulperson of the defeated prince was secured, was subjected to all the rigours of cap-. tivity.

Among the immediate consequences of these events were the retaking of Arcot, and the transfer of the government to Mahomet Ali 100-resion of Arcot to Chunda Sahib.

tained permission to quit the camp for a short | The result was, that Major Lawrence, the com-

The French commander, in the mean time, was not idle. He captured a fortified pagoda about fifteen miles west of Fort St. David, and the restored Nabob of Arcot, becoming alarmed at his progress, claimed the assistance of the English, promising to pay all the expenses of the troops that should be afforded A force consisting of four hundred him. Europeans and fifteen hundred sepoys, commanded by Captain Cope, was despatched in answer to the request of the nabob; but differ. . ences not less irreconcilable than those which bad separated the English and Nazir Jung, and not very dissimilar in their nature, brought the plan of co-operation to a speedy close; an event accelerated by the inability or unwillingness of the nabob to discharge his engagement Immediately on the departure of that force, the French attacked the camp of Mahomet ensued a battle, for the French had only to march up to the intrenchments, which were abandoned by those within them. Horse and foot fled with the greatest precipitation and in the utmost confusion. The French did not a thousand, and with difficulty made his own escape to the camp of Nazir Jung. who had been for some time in negotiation which had the effect of awakening Nazir Jung with Nazir Jung, resolved to surrender himself from the torpor in which he had so long slum-Promises of liberal treatment bered. He took the field, but with a diminished army, and under other discouraging circumstances. Supplies were procured with in the mode usual in the East. When difficulty, and from this cause, combined with the inclemency of the weather, sickness began to appear in his camp. Within that camp, however, he had worse enemies than even famine and disease. Dupleix had been for several months carrying on an intrigue upon a large scale, and at length the disaffected offi-Khan, son of Auaverdy Ali Khan, the former cers of Nazir Jung commanded one-half of his nabob, who had fallen in the battle which gave army. This attack upon the fidelity of his enemies' officers had not prevented Dupleix But Nazir Jung was not of a disposition to from carrying on simultaneously a negotiation pursue his good fortune. Differences arose with their master, who, wearied with the letween the English commander and the difficulties with which he had to contend, prince, in consequence of the constant evasion difficulties greatly aggravated by his own of a request of the former for the confirmation weak and unwarlike character, had resolved of a grant of a territory near Madras, made by to end them by conceding to the French Mallomet Ali in return for the assistance ren- nearly all they asked. At the very time, dered him. Another cause of difference was however, when the concession was resolved on, the refusal of the Euglish to march with Nazir the plot, of which Nazir Jung was to be the Jung to Areat, a step which it was unadvistrictim, was ripened. Its maturity was analysis for them to take, as it would have exposed nounced to Dupleix, and he promised to take their settlements to the attacks of the French, measures for securing the success which so Europeans, and about three thousand sepoys, under the command of M. de la Touche, advanced from Gingee upon the camp of Nazir After defeating the advanced posts, they attacked the main body of the army with Some anxiety was excited by the appearance of a vast body of horse and foot at some distance, drawn up in order, and extending as far as the eye could reach; but it was set at rest by discerning in the centre an elephant bearing a white flag, which was the signal of the confederates of the French, and a halt was made until some further demonstration of their intentions should be made. The issue was not long doubtful; Nazir Jung fell by the hands of one of his treacherous dependents, and Mozuffar Jung was saluted is in Oriental armies almost invariably followed by flight, and this instance afforded no exception to the rule. selves to reap its fruits. In this labour, however, they met powerful competitors in the Patan chiefs whose perfidy had led to their triumph. These worthy persons proceeded to Pondicherry for the purpose of enforcing their demands, extending to the remission of all arrears of tribute, which they had not paid for three years, the grant of certain additions of territory, the exemption of those additions, as well as of the countries which of tribute to the Mogul empire, and, what more nearly concerned the French, the delivery of one-half of the value found in Nazir Jung's treasury. After much discussion, in the course of which Dupleix paraded his own moderation as an example for those with whom he was negotiating, some abatement was effected in their claims, and the nabobs swore on the Koran allegiance to the new viceroy.

Pleasure and magnificent display now occupied the entire attention of the French and their ally. The new prince was enthroned with the greatest pomp, and in the splendid pageant Dupleix was the principal actor. Attired as a dignified Mahometan in a dress presented to him by the new sovereign, the vain but wily European bent before the prince in acknowledgment of being appointed governor of all the provinces south of the Kistna. This was not the only favour bestowed on the French and their representative. Dupleix was elevated to the rank of a Heft Huzaree, or commander of seven thousand horse, and permitted to bear an ensign, assigned to persons of the highest note in the empire. money was to be current in the Carnatic but such as was coined at Pondicherry; the Mogul's revenues in all the countries under Dupleix's government were to be remitted to pursuing them led to his own destruction. him, and he was to account for them to the The flying chief turned on his pursuer, and in viceroy; the authority of Chunda Sahib, as a personal contest Mozuffar Jung received in Nabob of Arcot and its dependencies, was to the brain the javelin of his adversary, who

much time had been spent in preparing. In | be subordinate to that of Dupleix, and in the December a force of about eight hundred distribution of rewards and honours to those who had assisted Mozuffar Jung in obtaining the throne, the will of Dupleix was that of the sovereign. According to the constitution of the Mogul empire, many of these grants could have no validity till confirmed by the emperor; but Dupleix did not, on this account, postpone the assumption of the powers conveyed. He held his durbar or court in his palace at Pondicherry, surrounded by all the state which became an Eastern potentate. One Oriental custom was alike agreeable to his vanity and his cupidity, and it was rigidly enforced. Neither native nor European was suffered to approach his august presence without a propitiatory gift. The same spirit was carried into the settlement of his claims upon the gratitude of Mozuffar Jung. It is true that to Vicercy of the Decean. The fall of the chief the Patan chiefs he had vaunted of his moderation; but his self-denial was not so rigorous as to restrain him from receiving for his private Victory rested with the benefit a sum of money, which, it is believed, French, and they forthwith applied them did not fall short of three hundred thousand pounds sterling, besides other marks of the kind feelings of Mozustar Jung, in the form of valuable jewels. Thus provident for himself, decency required that he should show some regard for the interests of those whom he commanded and those whom he served. cordingly a sum of about fifty thousand pounds was obtained from the prince for distribution among the officers and troops who fought at Gingee, and another sum of like amount was they previously possessed, from the payment | paid into the treasury of the French government for the expenses of the war,

These affairs being adjusted, Mozuffar Jung set out for Golconda, escorted by a detachment of French troops, European and sepoy, commanded by M. Bussy. In passing through the territory of one of the Patan nabobs, who, having placed Mozuffar Jung on the throne, had failed of obtaining the full reward to which, in their own estimation, they were entitled, an affray took place between some horsemen of the prince's train and some villagers. This gave a pretext for the nabob of the district to attack the army of his acknowledged lord; and though the fidelity of himself and his brethren had been vouched by an oath on the Koran, it appeared that none of them felt any hesitation in turning their arms against one to whom they had so lately bound themselves by the most solemn sanction in relations of subordination and allegiance. Having betrayed the predecessor of Mozuffar Jung, they now arrayed their troops against the sovereign of their own choice and creation. A conflict ensued, in which, by the aid of the No French troops, the twice perfidious nabobs were worsted. One of them was slain, and another left the field desperately wounded. The imprudent ardour of Mozuffar Jung in followers of the prince.

In this emergency it became necessary to the interests of the French to find a successor to the viceroyalty of the Deccan, whose in- | The duties and occupations of writers at that clinations might be as favourable to them as period were far different from what they are were those of their fallen patron. Mozuffar now. Jung had left a son, but he was an infant, and themselves, by study and by practice in subthe favours received from his father were not ordinate offices, for controlling at a future sufficient, in the judgment of the French commander, to counterbalance his own want of tricts, or exercising the highest and most impower to add to them. The support of the portant judicial functions. They were literally power to add to them. The support of the French was therefore unceremoniously transferred to another branch of the vice-regal as now, a gradation of rank through which house, and Salabat Jung, a younger brother | they ascended, that gradation had reference of Nazir Jung, whose cause the English had embraced, was chosen by the French as the the superior classes were distinguished, factor, new ruler of the Deccan. This arrangement had been made by M. Bussy under circumstances which rendered it expedient that some determination should be speedily taken; and, on communicating it to his principal, Dupleix, he had the satisfaction to find that it was entirely approved. The new subabdar being ready to confirm all the cessions and privileges which his nephew had conceded to the French. and even to go beyond him in this respect, it duties unconnected with trade was an acciis obvious that he possessed the only qualification which, in the eyes of Dupleix, would general course of things, and their military give to one candidate for the throne a pre-establishment was maintained solely for the ference over another.

While the French were thus carefully and energetically advancing their interests, the scenes little adapted to the vivacious tempera-English were doing little for the protection of ment of Clive, and his career at Madras, where theirs, and Mahomet Ali seeing slight prospect of successfully maintaining himself as Nabob of Arcot by the aid of his English allies, was endcavouring to make terms with their ene-To avert this result, and in compliance troops were sent by the British to his assistance, but little success attended their operations, and the dominions claimed by Mahomet giving indications of those qualities which

The British troops finally impetitor. ed by Chunda Sabib and the French. and the French seemed indeed about to find a the English Company would have been lost coast, he would have thrown in their way impediments which would have rendered their commerce unprofitable. Such appeared to be when the foundations of the magnificent empire of British India were about to be laid.

next instant fell mortally wounded by the | ber of a very large family, and partly because the wayward character of the youth seemed to offer but slender hope of his succeeding in any pursuit that might be open to him at home. They were not employed in preparing period the revenues of vast and populous discommercial clerks; and though there was then, solely to commerce, as the names by which and junior and senior merchant, sufficiently indicate. From the peculiar situation of foreign traders in such a country as India, a few of the highest class of servants were occasionally called upon to discharge political and diplomatic duties; and from the same cause a few troops were entertained for the defence of the Company's factories. employment of the Company's civil servants in dental and extraordinary departure from the protection of their commerce.

The counting-house and the warehouse were he arrived in 1744, was not quite unmarked by that erratic conduct which had distinguished him at home. Instances are on record, and might readily be quoted; but as they form part of the personal, not the political history with his pressing solicitations, small bodies of of Clive, it is more important to advert to such incidents as are connected with public events, and have the further advantage of were gradually passing into the hands of were more fully developed at a future period. When Madras was taken by La Bourdonnais, refuge under the avails of Trichinopoly, Clive was among the English residents who became prisoners of war, and gave their parole. are conflict of interests between the English The subsequent infraction of the terms of the capitulation was regarded, and justly, as retermination in the complete and unchecked lieving them from any obligation which they ascendancy of the latter power. The trade of had incurred under that capitulation, and Clive, disguising himself as a native, succeeded with their political influence, for if Dupleix in making his escape to Fort St. David. The had failed entirely to drive them from the circumstances of the times concurring with Clive's inclinations, he, in 1747, obtained an ensign's commission, and was present at the unsuccessful attack on Pondicherry with Adthe probable tendency of events at the moment miral Boscawen. Here, on occasion of a want of ammunition for the battery at which he was posted, his impetuosity led him to run Among the commercial rervants of the Eng- himself for a supply, instead of sending for it. Isla Past-India Company was a young man This act was misrepresented as arising not named Rolect Clive. The son of an obscure from zeal but fear. Clive called upon the country gentleman, of good lineage but small party who had thus aspersed his military formal had been sent to India in the character for anti-fraction and the point would ferture, he had been sent to India in the character for satisfaction, and the point would receive of a writer, partly because the ap- have been referred to the last appeal sancpositioned afford d a provision for one mem- tioned by the unges of society in such cases, but for the interference of bystanders. court of inquiry was held on the conduct of more bold and vigorous than had yet been the two disputants, and the public submission taken. of his defamer cleared the reputation of Clive, soon to be more decisively vindicated by his offered himself to lead the expedition. own daring acts. Clive was engaged in the his suggestion and his services were accepted; second expedition against Tanjore, and held but the force placed under his command was the commission of lieutenaut. He volunteered proportioned to the means of the British to lead the attack, and Major Lawrence having government, and not to the duty to be perhad previous opportunities of becoming ac-formed. It consisted of only three hundred passage with some difficulty, and with the loss under Clive. These were eight in number; of four of their small party. close upon the Europeans. Instead of obey- August, marched to the attack of Arcot, in ing these orders, they waited upon the bank which was a governor and eleven hundred for the passing of more of their number, and men. the rear of Clive's handful of men was thus miles of the city, and the news of their apleft exposed. The consequence was, that when proach having preceded them, panic prepared just presenting their muskets to fire, a body the way for an easy conquest. The spies of of Taujore horse, which had been concealed, the enemy reported that they had seen the rushed out, sword in hand, and by a rapid English marching with unconcern through a evolution gained the rear of the European party, twenty-six of whom were immediately cut down. The sabre of one of the horsemen lessness of the approaching foe, that the garriwas lifted to add Clive to the number, and he son abandoned the fort, and the English, a few only escaped the fate of the greater part of hours afterwards, marched through a hundred his companions by darting aside while his thousand spectators to take possession of it. assailant passed him. Tanjore war Clive returned to the mercantile vourable impression was made on the inhabitservice, but was appointed commissioner for ants by the restoration to its owners of prosupplying the troops with provisions—an appointment which associated him, though not deposited in the fort for the sake of security. as a soldier, with the feeble and unfortunate The first care of Clive was to improve his attempt of the English to aid Mahomet Ali, which ended in their retreat upon Trichino-but it little suited his impetuosity to wait the To that place he subsequently accompanied Mr. Pigot, a member of council at Fort St. David, in charge of some recruits and Returning with an escort of only twelve sepoys, they were attacked by an hostile party armed with matchlocks, who harassed them for some hours and killed seven of their men. The rest, having expended all their ammunition, were ordered to disperse, and Pigot and Clive only saved themselves by the fleetness of their horses. Another reinforcement sent shortly afterwards was intrusted to Clive, who then received a captain's attack upon it with his entire strength, horse commission. It was joined by a detachment and foot. This attempt, too, failed, and or from Devi-cottah, under Captain Clark, who the arrival in the town of the detachment in took the command of the whole; and, after a charge of the expected field-pieces and stores, skirmish with part of the French force, ar- it was abandoned. rived safe at Trichinopoly. But the timid and petty spirit in which the operations of the more as the result of good fortune than of English had been conducted was ill-suited to military skill. He had now to show that he the genius of Clive, and on his return to Fort was not a mere child of fortune, and that the St. David he made such representations to the confidence reposed in him was not misplaced. governor, Mr. Sanderson, as convinced him It had been foreseen that the acquisition of

A effectually nided but by adopting a course far

Clive suggested an attack upon Arcot, and quainted with his courage and military talent, sepoys and two hundred Europeans, and the yielded to him the post which he sought despatch of even this insignificant number of The force placed at his disposal consisted of men almost denuded Fort St. David and thirty-four Europeans only, but seven hundred Madras of troops. The deficiency of numerisepoys were to act with them. A rivulet was cal strength was not made up by the skill and to be crossed, and the Europeans effected the experience of the officers who were to act A part of the but six of them had never been in action, and sepoys then passed, and Clive, with the Euro-peans, advanced briskly to attack the intrench-from the commercial service. With three ment in flank, the sepoys being ordered to field-pieces this small body, on the 26th of On the 30th they halted within ten violent storm of thunder and rain, and this report gave such an impression of the resist-At the close of the The greatest order was preserved, and a faperty to a large amount, which had been good fortune by making provision for a siege; chance of attack, and accordingly he made various sorties in quest of the enemy, who usually fled on his approach. On the 14th of September he attacked their camp by night, and dispersed its occupants in every direction, without the loss of a man from his own force. Two eighteen-pounders and some stores were expected from Madras. An attempt made by the enemy to intercept them was defeated; but the convoy sent out for their protection having greatly weakened the garrison of the fort, the enemy was emboldened to make an

Thus far Clive's success may be regarded that the cause of Mahomet Ali could not be Arcot would be followed by the withdrawal

Trichinopoly, and this was one object of the which, according to the current tradition, had attempt. Accordingly, the success of Clive was no sooner known than Chunda Sahib detached four thousand sepoys to act against him. These, being joined on their route by Rajah Sahib (son of Chunda Sahib) with one hundred and fifty French from Pondicherry, entered the town on the 23rd of September. On the 24th, Clive made a sally, driving the French from their guns-four field-piecesbut was unable to execute a design which he had formed of carrying them off. On this day he had a narrow escape from death. sepoy, who was taking aim at him from a window, was disappointed of success through Clive being dragged aside by an officer named Tremwith, who was immediately shot through the body by the man whose aim he had defeated. On the following day the enemy re-ceived a reinforcement of two thousand men from Vellore, and possession was taken of all the avenues leading to the fort. Thus invested by a large force, the fort of Arcot seemed little likely to sustain a protracted siege. The stock of provisions was not more than sufficient to supply the garrison for sixty days, and it became necessary to send all the inhabitants, except a few artificers, away from the Of the eight officers who had accompanied the expedition, one had been killed and two wounded; another had returned to Madras. The troops fit for duty were reduced to one hundred and fifty Europeans and two thousand sepoys. Even this small force was daily diminishing; for although none of the garrison were allowed to appear on the ramparts, except the few necessary to avoid a surprise, several were killed and wounded by the musketry of the enemy, who, sheltered by the surrounding houses, and firing from resting-places, were enabled to select their objects with deadly certainty. The besieging force consisted of one hundred and fifty Europeans and about ten thousand native troops of varidescriptions.

2 enemy being ill-provided with artillery, for some days produced little effect by r attempt at bombarding the fort. rival of two eighteen-pounders and several pieces of smaller calibre from Pondicherry, enabled them to erect a battery, which, almost as soon as brought into play, disabled one of Clive's eighteen-pounders and dismantled the The battery continued firing for six days, and a practicable breach was made to the extent of fifty feet. But Clive and his men had been no less active in constructing works for defence, and the enemy appeared afraid of attempting to improve their opportunity of attack.

The critical situation of Clive did not pre-

of part of the force of Chunda Sahib from | contained an unwieldy piece of ordnance, been brought from Delhi by Aurungzebe, drawn, as it was said, by a thousand yoke of oxen. Clive caused a mound of earth to be raised on the top of the highest tower of the rampart, so as to command the palace across On this the gigantic the intervening houses. engine of destruction was elevated, and being loaded with thirty pounds of powder and a ball proportioned to its dimensions, it was discharged by means of a train carried to a considerable distance on the ground. ball went through the palace, to the great terror of Rajah Sahib and his principal officers No other result appears to collected there. have been contemplated; but this was deemed sufficient to justify a repetition of the salute on two succeeding days, at the precise time when the rajah's officers assembled at head-On the fourth day the amusement quarters. derived from this exercise was terminated by the bursting of the monster gun which had afforded the means of its enjoyment. seems, however, to have imparted to the enemy a desire to retaliate. They, in return, raised a vast mound of earth, which commanded not only the gate, but the whole in-Clive suffered them to terior of the fort. complete the work, and to mount on it two pieces of cannon. He then began to fire on it with his remaining eighteen-pounder: in less than an hour the mound fell with fifty men stationed on it, some of whom were killed and others disabled.

The battery first erected by the enemy was to the north west of the fort. Subsequently another was erected to the south-west. wall in this direction was in a very ruinous condition, and a breach was soon made. garrison kept up a vigorous fire of musketry against the battery, and several times drove the enemy out of it, but the breach notwithstanding was daily enlarged.

With the prospect of an immediate attack from a force overwhelming, when compared with the means of resistance, Clive's confidence never appears to have deserted him. The Company's agents at Madras and Fort St. David were auxious to relieve him, but a small detachment despatched for the purpose were unable to effect their object, and after a sharp conflict with a considerable number of Rajah Sahib's troops, were compelled to re-treat. A body of six thousand Mahrattas, who had been hired to assist the cause of Mahomet Ali, lay about thirty miles from Arcot in a state of most suspicious inactivity. nabob's affairs being thought desperate, his mercennry allies were not disposed to waste their strength in his defence. In the hope of stimulating them to action, Clive found means that love of mischief by which his boyhood had been remarkably distinguished. The fort that the English could fight, and promised to send a detachment to their aid. Intelligence of these communications having reached Rajah distinguished in the Mahometan calendar. Sahib, who commanded the besieging army, Happy was the Mussulman to whom it he became apprehensive of the probable re-brought death from the sword of the unbesult, and sent a flag of truce with proposals liever, for his fall was regarded as but a sudfor the surrender of the fort. Honourable terms for the garrison were offered, and a this belief the enthusiasm of the enemy's large sum of money for Clive; while, that no troops was wrought up almost to madness, motives for compliance might be wanting, the and it was further increased by the free use consequences of refusal were declared to be of an intoxicating substance called bang. The the storming of the fort and the immolation morning came, and with it the expected of every man in it. Clive's answer was strikingly characteristic of the man. He not only refused to surrender the fort, but conveyed his refusal in terms of haughty defi-The merits of Chunda Sahib's claims were somewhat unceremoniously noticed for the purpose of reproach; the offer of personal advantage to Clive was treated, as it deserved. with contempt; and the threat of storm and divisions of the enemy's troops marched upon slaughter was met by the taunting remark, opinion of the prudence of Rajah Sahib, to believe that he would attempt to storm until he was provided with better soldiers than the rabble of which his army was then composed. Notwithstanding this answer, some of the enemy hovered round the ditch, conversing with the sepoys in the British service, and recommending them to desert. disregarded, it became necessary to render it more impressive by the adjunct of a volley of the musketry of the British force, turned and small arms, which killed some of the intruders and dispersed the rest.

Before any steps were taken by the enemy in consequence of Clive's refusal of the proffered terms, the promised detachment of the Mahrattas arrived in the neighbourhood and attempted to enter the town, but found every street and avenue barricaded. Thus impeded, they had recourse to their usual and most approved occupation of plundering, relieved by setting fire to some houses in the outskirts of the town, after which they retreated.

Clive was accurately informed of all the proceedings of the enemy, and as the day of attack approached, he succeeded in becoming nossessed not only of their general design, but of the precise disposition proposed to be made of their force. The dawn of day on the 14th November was to decide the success of the meditated attempt, and the signal for its commencement was to be the discharge of three The knowledge of its approach did not diminish the confidence of Clive, nor disturb his equanimity. He made the arrangements which appeared to him necessary for meeting the approaching conflict, and then, to remove the effects of the excessive fatigue which he had undergone, and to gather renewed strength for the struggle, he resigned himself to sleep, with as much calmness as though all danger was at an end, giving orders hour, and cost the enemy in killed and that he should be awakened on the first wounded about four hundred men. After an alarm.

The day of attack was one among the most den introduction to the highest paradise. movement. Clive was awakened, and found his garrison at their posts according to the disposition which he had previously made. On the enemy's side a vast multitude were in motion, bringing ladders to every part of the wall that was accessible. Besides these desultory operations there were others in progress, all directed to the same end. Four principal the four points where an entrance to the fort that the English commander had too high an seemed the more likely to be effected-the two gates and the two breaches which had been made in the wall. The parties who attacked the gates drove before them several elephants, armed with plates of iron on their foreheads, with which it was expected they would beat down the obstacles which stopped the course of the assailants: but the de-They were vice was more disastrous to those who emwarned to retire, but the admonition being ployed it than to those against whom it was directed. The elephants, wounded by trampled upon those who were urging them forward. At the north-west breach, as many as it was capable of admitting rushed wildly in, and passed the first trench before their opponents gave fire. When given, it was with terrible effect. A number of muskets were loaded in readiness, which those behind delivered to the first rank as fast as they could discharge them. Every shot did execution, while three field-pieces contributed effectually to thin the number of the assailants. In a few minutes they fell back: but the attempt was only suspended, not abandoned. Another and another party followed, and were driven off as had been those who preceded them.

Toapproach the south-west breach, the enemy embarked seventy men on a raft, who thus attempted to cross a ditch, and had almost gained their object, when Clive, observing that his gunners fired with bad aim, took the management of one of the field-pieces himself. This he worked with such precision and effect that a few discharges threw the advancing party into confusion. The raft was . overset, and those on board thrown into the water, where some were drowned. mainder saved themselves by swimming back, abandoning the unfortunate raft which was to have borne them to the breach.

These various attacks occupied about an interval employed by the assailants in endeavouring, under much aunoyance, to carry off want of cannon, to pass; the governor refusing their dead, the firing upon the fort was re- to surrender, although he agreed to take an newed, both with cannon and musketry. This oath of allegiance to Mahomet Ali. was again discontinued. A formal demand of great pagoda of Conjeveram was the next leave to bury the dead was complied with, object of attention. Here the French mainand a truce of two hours agreed upon. At tained a considerable garrison, which had the expiration of the prescribed time the afforded them opportunity of interrupting the firing once more recommenced, and lasted communication between Arcot and Madras. daybreak, the gallant defenders of the fort Arcot, and after murdering five or six as they learned that their besiegers had precipitately lay helpless in their litters, relented so far as abandoned the town. diately marched into the enemy's quarters, and Glass, whom they made prisoners. where they found several pieces of artillery being summoned to surrender, the French and a large quantity of ammunition. These commander, on the plea that none of his garspoils were forthwith transferred to the fort, rison understood English, required his two and thus ended a siege of fifty days.

ing the town, arrived in it. Clive, leaving a garhundred sepoys, and three field-pieces. Having diately yielded, the British force waited for tually commencing an attack. occupied with the interesting duties of plunder Their labours, to perform their engagement. however, received a check from a sudden attack of the French troops of Rajah Sahib, who surprised their camp, and by relieving them of such articles as could be conveniently arried off, demonstrated to the Mahrattas ant they must not hope to enjoy a monopoly of the occupation in which they delighted. Intelligence being received of the approach of labouring for the reduction of Trichinopoly. an European party from Pondicherry, Clive was anxious to obtain the assistance of the skill, and their labour and ammunition ex-Mahrattas in intercepting them before they pended with little effect. Their views, how-could join Rajah Sahib. But the only motive ever, were aided by the pecuniary distress of by which they could be affected was wanting.— Mahomet Ali, whose troops openly threatened there was no prospect of plunder—and Clive to desert a master who was unable to pay marched without his allies. Rajah Sahib them. Among the projects of Mahomet Ali, made a forced march to arrive where he was who seems to have had no definite plan of to be joined by the reinforcement from Pondi-cherry; but the Mahrattas were still immov-parties, in the hope that chance might work able, until they learned that the reinforcement something in his favour, was an application expected by the enemy were the bearers of a to Mysore for aid. That country had long large sum of money: a discovery which had a been governed in the name of sovereigns who remarkable effect in rendering them auxious possessed no particle of real power. A prince, for a conflict, to which they had previously labouring under the misfortune of having shown so much indifference. But not more been born deaf and dumb, succeeded to the shown so much indifference. But not more than six hundred horse could be collected for the duty, the rest being otherwise engaged. Throne early in the eighteenth century. His imperfect organization placed him at the Dy a forced march of twenty miles, Clive and his Mahratta associates came in sight of the enemy's force, and, notwithstanding a great system of royal pupilage. The ambassador of disparity of numbers, defeated them. In the pursuit a considerable booty fell into the pursuit a considerable booty fell into the fact of the victors, much to the gratification of the Mahrattas, with whom the service in magnificent promises, the extent of which was which they were engaged became popular. The fort of Arnie, Clive was compelled, for until two o'clock on the following morning, From this place they had surprised a party of when it ceased, never to be renewed. At disabled men returning from the siege of The garrison imme- to spare the lives of two officers named Revell prisoners to write to Clive informing him that In the evening of the day on which the if the pagoda were attacked they would be enemy fled from Arcot, the detachment from exposed on the works. The British officers Madras, which had been prevented from enter-made the desired communication, but added an expression of their hope that no regard for rison in the fort, took the field on the 19th of them would induce Clive to discontinue his November with two hundred Europeans, seven operations for the reduction of the place. Clive, however, was compelled to wait the summoned Timany to surrender, which imme arrival from Madras of the means of effec-These being the promised aid of the Mahrattas, who were obtained, the walls, after three days' battery, to join them with a thousand horse; but these began to give way, and the French com-adventurers were for some days too much mander, apprehensive of the just resentment mander, apprehensive of the just resentment of the English for his cruelty, abandoned the place in the night. Clive having destroyed the defences of Conjeveram, proceeded to Madras, and thence to Fort St. David, to receive the congratulations which awaited him, and which he had so nobly earned.

While Clive, in Arcot, had thus been pursuing an uninterrupted career of success. Chunda Sahib and his French allies were But their works were constructed without

From other quarters the nabob received precipitation. But the army of the latter was what route the disconcerted foe had taken. stronger in regular troops, and so little reforce place on his native allies, that he perfrom Fort St. David.

retirement of Clive, had again appeared in tion. some force in the province of Arcot, and appeared. fied; but, on the approach of Clive, it was of the field. abandoned, and his force concentrated at Con- The party who had been despatched to the jeveram. Thither Clive proceeded by a forced rear of the grove halted at the distance of garrison, who surrendered at the first sum-named Symmonds, advanced to reconnoited mons. The object of the enemy had been He had not proceeded for before he came to suspected, and it now became more apparent, a deep trench, in which a deep trench, in the The garrison at the fort of Arcot had been enemy's troops, who we considerably wealtened in order to add to the wanted, were sitting def-

The negotiation was brought force placed under the command of Clive, and to a successful conclusion, and its provisions it was anticipated that the enemy designed ratified by an oath. The face of Mahomet to take advantage of this circumstance. Clive Ali's affairs now began to brighten. In addition to the army of Mysore, the government the road received intelligence that the enemy of that country took into its pay six thousand had entered the town of Arcot, and skir-Mahrattas, of whom those who have been mished against the fort with muskets for sevealready noticed in connection with the siege ral hours. The attempt was to have been of Arcot, formed part. "In conformity," says aided by co-operation from within the fort, the historian of Mysore, "to the uniform the enemy having corrupted two native offiprinciple of Indian policy, as the affairs of Cers in the British service, who, on a given Mahomet Ali appeared to improve, he acquired more friends." The Rajah of Tanjore their admission. The intended treachery was already in his former and departed agent and the state of the content of the conten declared in his favour, and despatched a con- discovered in time to defeat it. The enemy siderable body of troops to his assistance. finding their signals unanswered, retired with These facts were communifurther aid, and his army, thus reinforced, cated to Clive by letter from the commanding became numerically superior to that of Chunda officer at Arcot, but he was unable to state

Uncertainty on this point did not long preliance did the officer commanding the British vail. Near the village of Coverpah, the van of the British force was unexpectedly saseveringly resisted their repeated solicitations luted by a discharge of artillery from a thick to attack the enemy till he was reinforced grove of mango trees. Clive immediately made provision for the safety of his baggage, The enemy, however, emboldened by the and for the disposal of his troops for ac-For a time no very decisive results Two parties of infantry, French having burnt several villages, and plundered and English, continued for two hours to fire some houses belonging to the English, they returned to Conjeveram, repaired the defences, garrisoned the place with sepoys, and threatened to attack the Company's fort of Poonamalee. This diverted to another quarter the British reinforcements destined for Tri-found that he must either become its master chinopoly, it being deemed indispensable to or determine on a retreat. The grove, in check the ravages of the enemy in Arcot. which the artillery was placed, was defended For this purpose all the force that the British in front by a steep bank and ditch, but in the authorities could assemble was required. In-rear it was reported to be open and uncluding a levy of sepoys, a detachment of guarded. Two hundred Europeans and four Europeans from Bengal, and drafts from the hundred sepoys were accordingly despatched garrisons of Arcot and Madras, it did not, however, amount to seventeen hundred men, of whom less than four hundred were Europeans. The European force of the enemy was about equal to that of the British, but hopes. The infantry who were left firing on his native troops, horse and foot, amounted to four thousand five hundred. The British had six field-pieces; the enemy a large train of artillery. The talents and previous success of Clive, and discouraged by the departure of the detachment sent to attack the enemy's artillery. The talents and previous success of the expedition in the absence of Major Lawrence, that able and experienced officer, who temporary absence. With his wonted advass among the first to discover the genius of dress he rallied the fugitives, though not Clive, having proceeded to England before without some difficulty, and the firing was garrisons of Arcot and Madras, it did not, thither, and the anxiety of Clive for their suc-Clive, having proceeded to England before without some difficulty, and the firing was that genius was fully developed. In antici-renewed. The attention of the enemy was pation of an attack from the English, the thus diverted from the more important onecamp of the enemy had been strongly forti-ration which was in progress in another part march, but found the pageda in charge of a three hundred yards from it, and an ensign,

dom shots. The approach of Ensign Sym- of the very post which he had desired to monds being observed, he was challenged, avoid, and the troops received the fire of six French officer, he was suffered to pass. Proceeding onward to the grove, he perceived that, besides the men stationed at the guns, there were one hundred Europeans to support them, but that they kept no look-out, except towards the field of battle. enemy, who, without returning a shot, abandoned their guns and sought safety in flight. Some took refuge in a choultry, or house of either party. so much crowded that they were unable to to the example of the Mahrattas. them, it was joyfully accepted.

formed the British troops in front of the enemy of the success of the attack on his The arrival of some fugitives from the grove conveyed the same intelligence to their opponents, who immediately followed the example of their companions and fled.

The sudden silence of the artillery in-

The force of the enemy having been broken in Arcot, Clive and his troops were ordered back to Fort St. David, preparatory to their being despatched to Trichinopoly. On their they passed the spot where Nazir had been murdered. To commemorate success of the French, Dupleix had and the erection of a new town, to be called Dupleix-Fateabad. In the centre of this city of victory was to have been placed a column with inscriptions in various languages. recounting the event which it was designed to keep in memory, and magnifying the valour of the French. "Unluckily," says Major Lawrence, "future ages will not be French must now depend for their supplies. the wiser for it." Clive destroyed all that Major Lawrence justly considered Clive as the foundation which was to support the com-

French glory scarcely endured longer than

record.

. The force destined for Trichinopoly was and the party in the tronch prepared to fire. pieces of artillery. It was returned from four His acquaintance with the French language field-pieces, supported by one hundred men saved his life, and probably provented the under Clive, while the line marched on, and failure of the attack, for, being mistaken for a was soon out of the reach of the enemy's guns. They then halted till the party with the fieldpieces came up. On the following day a inore serious affair took place; but the commander of the native cavalry of the enemy being killed, his men, according to established Having precedent, took to flight, and the rest of the made the observations necessary, he returned, army soon followed their example. The vickeeping at a distance from the trench where tory would have been more complete, but for his progress had nearly been intercepted, and the failure of the native troops to co-operate rejoined his detachment. Upon his report, with the British allies. The Mahrattas rethey immediately marched towards the point mained at a distance, idle, though probably of attack, taking the way by which he had not unconcerned, spectators of the fight. returned. They entered the grove unporceived, and at the distance of thirty yards liar situation of their leader, who was engave fire. The effect was to paralyze the gaged in a negotiation with Chunda Sabib, and feeling uncertain what turn affairs might take, was unwilling to commit himself with The rest of the British allies accommodation for travellers, where they were appear to have declined fighting, in deference use their arms, and quarter being offered the day was won without them, and the British detachment advanced undisturbed to Trichinopoly. Here the respective commanders had an opportunity of conferring on a plan of operations, but the Mahometans and Hindoos not being able to agree on a fortunate hour of attack, nothing was determined on. few days after the arrival of the English reinforcement, the French abandoned their posts, and retreated to the island of Scring-This movement being hastily made, and without due preparation, was attended with very considerable loss. The retreating enemy carried off their artillery and part of their baggage, but a large store of provisions was burned. A bold suggestion of Clive's was now acted upon by the commander of the British expe-It was to divide the small force dition. under his command, and while one half remained at Trichinopoly, to post the other half between Scringham and Pondicherry, in order to cut off the communication on which the existed of the projected town, including the fittest man to undertake the command of the separate body, but a difficulty existed in the memorative column. Thus the evidences of fact that all the captains in the battalion were his seniors. It was removed by the native the success which they were intended to generals, who unanimously declared that they would not make any detachment of the troops for the purpose, if they were to be commanded soon ready for the field, and Major Lawrence by any other person than Clive. Everything arriving from Europe at this time, it was being arranged, the favourite captain marched placed under his command. The detachment on the 6th of April, with four hundred Europeighteen miles of Trichinopoly. Here, being four thousand and an arranged that a first a few miles. informed that a strong party was posted to artillery. He took post at a fort a few miles intercept them, Major Lawrence resolved from Seringham, and on the high road to upon proceeding by another road; but, by a mistake of his guides, was led within reach Dupleix had become greatly dissatisfied with the prospect of affairs at Trichinopoly, and, in stormed, but it would admit only two men the hope of retrieving them, had sent rein-abreast, and the English deserters within forcements of as large amount as he could fought with desperation. The officer who led raise, under Mons. D'Auteuil, who was forthwith authorized to assume the chief command; M. Law, who had for some time held it, having displayed little either of enterprise or talent. Clive, apprized of the approach of this force, marched out to intercept it; and D'Auteuil, knowing how much depended on his effecting a junction with the army at Seringham, withdrew to a fort which terms, experienced another of those remarkhe had just quitted. Clive not meeting the enemy's reinforcement where he had been led to expect them, considered that the report of which he had received, he leant upon the their approach was a ruse to draw him from his fort, and marched back with all possible speed. This was not the fact; but the French commander at Seringham hearing of Clive's departure, but not of his return, resolved to take advantage of it, by attacking the few troops which had been left in possession of deserters came forward, and addressing Clive the British post. spatched eighty Europeans and seven hundred would shoot him. sepoys, aided by the services of eighty Engthe outposts, the attempt of the enemy had discharged it. The ball passed through the nearly succeeded. The party being challonged, answered that they were friends, and leaning, but from his relative position with one of the deserters stepping forward, stated that they had been despatched by Major occurrence is said to have facilitated the sur-This Lawrence to reinforce Captain Clive. assertion, corroborated by the fact of so many it necessary to disown the outrage which had of the party speaking English, satisfied the without the pass-word being demanded, and sepoys without the pagoda endeavoured to reone of the guard was despatched to conduct pass the boundaries of the British camp, and them to head-quarters. without giving any disturbance, or meeting out in pursuit of them, overtook and cut them with any, until they arrived at a pagoda, to pieces. Clemency is not a common weakwhere they were challenged by the sentinels, ness in the Mahratta character, and according and simultaneously by others posted at an to the report of those engaged in this exploit, adjacent choultry, within which Clive was not a single man of seven hundred escaped asleep. They answered these challenges, not as before, by an attempt to parley, but by discharging a volley into each place. That di-favour of the British cause. D'Auteuil conrected to the cheultry was not far from de-ciding the question of success, a ball having ther resistance appearing hopeless, if not imshattered a box at Clive's feet and killed a possible, he surrendered with the whole force servant elecping close to him. discharge the enemy pushed into the pagoda, hundred Europeans (thirty-five of whom were putting all they net to the sword. awakened by the noise, and not imagining and about three hundred and forty cavalry. A that the enemy could have advanced into the considerable quantity of military stores passed centre of ris camp, supposed the firing to pro- into the hands of the conquerors, and a large ceed from part of his own sopoys, and that amount of money was expected, it being known the cause of it was some groundless alarm, that D'Auteuil had with him a considerable In this belief he advanced alone into the sum. This expectation, however, was disapmidst of the party who were firing, as appointed, the wary Frenchman having con-peared to him, without purpose, and angrily trived to secrete a great part of it among his demanded the cause of their conduct. In the personal baggage, which he was permitted to confusion he was at first scarcely observed; carry away without examination. A part of man, attacked and wounded him. By this rupees were regularly taken possession of for time the French were in possession of the the benefit of the captors.

pagoda. Clive ordered the gate to be The progressive success of the Eritish arms

the attack, and fifteen men engaged in it, were killed, and the attempt was then relinquished until cannon could be obtained. daybreak the French officer, seeing the danger of his situation, endeavoured to escape it by a sally; but being killed with several of his men, the rest retreated into the pagoda. Clive, advancing to the porch to offer them able escapes in which his career so much abounded. Rendered weak by the wounds shoulders of two serjeants. Both these men were of lower stature than their commander, who, from this cause, as well as from the effect of weakness, stood in a stooping position, his body being thus thrown slightly behind theirs. An Irishman who took the lead among the With this view he de- in opprobrious language, declared that he This was not an idle threat, for he instantly levelled his musket in Through a mistake at one of the direction in which Clive was standing and render of the pagoda, the Frenchmen thinking been committed, lest it might exclude them The strangers were suffered to enter from being admitted to quarter. The enemy's They marched on succeeded; but the Mahratta cavalry setting with his life.

The tide of success now flowed stendily in After this remaining with him, consisting of only one Clive, British deserters), four hundred native infantry, but at length one of the enemy's sepoys dis- the remainder was embezzled by the troop- on covering or suspecting him to be an English-both sides, so that not more than fifty thousand the island of Seringham. The scarcity of sup- oath to perform the articles of his engagement. plies, and the small probability of effectually and prayed that his own weapons might be removing this difficulty, the constant annoyance sustained from the English posts, and the expectation, almost amounting to certainty, that these attacks would become more frequent, as well as more alarming—these causes tended to chill the friendship of the native chiefs who had brought their troops to the service of Chunda Sahib, and gradually to detach them from his interest. The greater part of them demanded their dismissal, a demand which he was in no condition to resist; and the request being granted, many of the dismissed parties passed forthwith without hesitation into the service of the British. The desertions, and the fatal blow inflicted on the French interest by the surrender of D'Auteuil, rendered the prospects of Chunda Sahib gloomy indeed.

He had vainly endeavoured to urge the French commander, Law, to a more enterprising course of action, and the time when such a course could have availed was now past. The health, too, of the ambitious aspirant to the government of the Carnatic had given way under the pressure of mental anxiety; and without the means of evading the difficulties which surrounded him, or the energy to attempt to force his way through them to a place of safety, his thoughts were no longer turned upon either of these objects. Only one termination of his wretched fortunes was before him, and the role question for his determination was, whose captive he should become. By the advice of Law, he was dissuaded from surrender-the results of the French officer. In work, cut on ms victim's near as evidence the word less estables of the French officer, of the deed. This was immediately sent to the first better and be given without discourt with an inspection of it, directed with a time from the decing the same secret; finite rativel Chanda Sahib, which the little of the rativel for the friendly intensive that it should be publicly exhibited for the pleasure of the multitude.

The fortune of those whom Chanda Sahib that quitted, to unhappily for himself, remains had materially affected the state of affairs in | poly. He bound himself by the most solemn turned to his destruction if he failed. engagement obliged him to convey the fugitive. under an escort of horse, to a French settlement; and, in addition to the weight of the general's oath, the sincerity of his purpose was confirmed by the testimony of one of his officers, who assured Law that he was appointed to command the escort, and exhibited a palanquin which had been prepared for the journey. Whether or not the oath, with its corroborative testimony, dispelled the doubts which had previously existed, cannot be known, but those by whom they were entertained were not in a condition to insist on any other security, and Chunda Sahib proceeded to the camp of Monackjee. He expected a guard to insure his safety; and a guard was ready to receive him. But, instead of taking his place in the palanquin which had been made ready for his journey, he was forced into a tent, and there loaded with irons. The news was immediately spread through the camp, and the fate of the prisoner became an object of intense anxiety to all parties. In the morning a conference was held on the subject, when great diversity of opinion prevailed. No one suggested the fulfilment of the engagement by which Chunda Sahib had been entrapped into captivity; but there were many competitors for the office of keeping him in safe custody, or consigning him to the still safer custody of the grave. The nabob Mahomet Ali, the Tanjore general Monackjee, the commander of the Mysore troops, and the ing to the English, and induced to trust his chief of the Mahratta force, all contended for 1-roon for a time to native faith. A negotial the possession of the person of Chunda Sahib; tion was commenced, which was managed by and Major Lawrence, who was present, seeing Monackjee, the commander of the Tanjore no chance of agreement, proposed that he treeps, with all the success derived from deal-should be given up to the British and confined er with a man who had no resource but to in one of their settlements. In resisting this Its completion was hastened by a re- proposal, the other claimants were once again entation from Monackjee of the necessity unanimous; and the meeting broke up without a spendy conclusion, lest the advance of the coming to any decision. Two days afterwards, the thould deprive him of the power of the cause of dispute was removed. A follower insuring the cafety of Chunda Sahib, a danger of Monackjee entered the tent, where lay the of which the negotiators on the other side were defeated candidate for the government of the felly aware. Still they hesitated; and their Carnatic, bowed down by sickness, bonds, and anxiety to discover and obtain some better se-mental suffering. He needed not to speak his curity than a Mahratta promise, led to a pri-cerrand. The prisoner too clearly understood vate interview between Law and Monackjee, it, yet still clinging to hope, where reasonable in which a demand was made of hostages for hope could not exist, implored that he might the safety of Chunda Sahib. To this demand the replied, that if treachers were designed, that he had something of importance to comto be state would prevent it; that the act of municate. But the business of his ferocious given any mould be tray the secret of the ne-visitor was not negotiation. The captive's ret sixty, and that the excape of Chunda Sahib quest was answered by a thrust which pierced " Atherety have adered impracticable. These his heart; and the assassin, having thus done the test to were not the only means employed his work, cut off his victim's head as evidence to be noticed. Before his departure, the English force had received a battering train from Devi-cottah, and the French commander had been required to surrender at discretion. Subsequently a more peremptory demand was made, and Law, being at length convinced of that which he was reluctant to believe—that D'Auteuil and his force had fallen into the hands of the British—requested a personal conference with Major Lawrence. The result was French, in thus being at war in India while in day which closed his earthly career.

Europe they were in peace, terms were agreed upon and a capitulation signed. The officers were to depart on parole, the privates to remain prisoners, the deserters to be pardoned. On the 3rd of June, Captain Dalton took possession of Seringham, with the artillery and military force. The troops immediately in the French service were marched to Fort St. David,-those of their allies were suffered quietly to disperse. Thus, without a battle, that, after much altercation, partly grounded ended the struggle to secure to Chunda Sahib on the anomalous position of the English and the government of the Carnatic, on the very

CHAPTER III.

DISPUTES RESPECTING THE POSSESSION OF TRICHINOPOLY, --- SUCCESSES OF CLIVE AND LAWRENCE .- WAR WITH MYSORE .- DEPARTURE OF DUPLEIX FOR EUROPE.

THE success which had attended the opera-|disputants an amicable adjustment of their tions of the force engaged in the cause of Mahomet Ali, it was the desire of Major Lawrence to improve. He accordingly urged upon the nabob the necessity of proceeding to the reduction of those parts of the Carnatic which had not yet been subjected to his authority. The propriety of this advice could not be disputed; but though calculated alike to advance the interests and gratify the vanity of the prince, he manifested a reluctance to act upon it, which, to the British commanders, was unaccountable. The mystery was at length explained. The price at which Mahomet Ali had agreed to purchase the aid of Mysore was, the cession to that power of Trichinopoly and all its dependencies, down to Cape Comorin. Under this agreement, Nunjeraj, the Mysorean commander, demanded the transfer of the fortress which had just surrendered. Mahomet Ali objected, but Nunjeraj refused to march unless his demand were complied with. Men are seldom at a loss for reasons to justify a course which they are disposed to follow, and on such occasions the ingenuity of Oriental diplomacy is never baffled. Mahomet Ali adduced numerous arguments with the view of convincing Major Lawrence and Nunjeraj that he ought not to surrender Trichi-With the former he found little difnopoly. ficulty, but the Mysorean leader was not so easily satisfied. In estimating the motives of Mahomet Ali, they may all be passed by, the fact being simply, that he was resolved not to part with Trichinopoly if it were possible to retain it. The state of affairs caused by the refusal of the nabob to execute an engagement with Mysore, which had been kept secret from the British, was productive of great embarrassment to the last-named power.

differences.

The office of a mediator, thus declined by the representatives of the East-India Company, was readily taken up by the Mahratta chieftain, Morari Row. This person having had the good fortune to secure the confidence of both parties, entered upon his duties in form. A conference was agreed upon, which took place in the nabob's palace, and was graced by his personal presence. The interests of Mysore were under the care of two commissioners specially deputed for the purpose. Captain Dalton, an English officer in command of the garrison, was present as a spec-The performances of the day commenced by a long speech from the Mahratta, who enlarged upon the circumstances which had led to the connection of Mahomet Ali with Mysore, and on the events which had When his hearers and himself had followed. been sufficiently gratified by the display of his eloquence, Morari Row produced the treaty on which the decision of the question at issue mainly depended, and, with the air of an honest and impartial umpire, called upon Mahomet Ali to fulfil his engagement by the delivery of Trichinopoly.

The nabob performed his part no less admirably. He listened to the harangue of his friend with patience, acknowledged his obligations to Mysore with becoming gratitude, and expressed his resolution to fulfil his engagement in due time. But he claimed indulgence, because, having no considerable fortified town but Trichinopoly, he was for the present unprovided with any place to which he could remove his family. When the whole of the province of Arcot should be reduced to obedience, the difficulty would no longer exist; Major Lawrenco applied for instructions and, to give time for the purpose, he required from the presidency, and both the contend- a respite of two months, at the end of which ing parties made applications to the same period Trichinopoly should be given up. This quarter. But the British authorities refused exposition of the intentions of Mahomet Ali to interfere, and only recommended to the was perfectly satisfactory to his friend the Mysorean commissioners withdrew. It was obtaining the yet unsubdued districts to which now no longer necessary to preserve the tone he laid claim; while Nunjeraj was well which had been previously maintained. The pleased that the nabob and his English allies chief actor in the scene which had just closed should depart for this or any other purpose, assumed a new character, in which no eyes as their absence was necessary to enable him but those of the nabob and Captain Dalton to put into practice the design which he had were permitted to view him. Casting off the formed of possessing himself of Trichinopoly. Solemn dignity of the umpire, and assuming a His desires and expectations were to a cerdeportment at once confidential and courtly, tain extent gratified. the versatile Mahratta expressed a hope that to the northward, accompanied by a British the nabob attached no importance to what he force consisting of five hundred Europeans had said in presence of the Mysorean commis- and two thousand five hundred sepoys; leaving sioners; and to show that his penetration into only two hundred Europeans and fifteen hunthe views of others was not inferior to his skill in concealing his own, he further intimated his conviction that the nabob had no intention of performing the promise which he had then made. The acute perception of Morari Row, so far from offending the nabob, Charmed not seemed to win his affection. more by the friendly disposition than by the profound sagacity of the Mahratta, Mahomet Ali presented him with a draft for 50,000 rupces, as a retaining fee for his services, with a promise of as much more if he could succeed in procuring relief from the fulfilment of the treaty. Morari Row readily accepted both the money and the commission, intending at all events to profit from both parties, and, if tish force, had no sooner left Trichinopoly possible, to overreach both by obtaining Trichi- than the designs of Nunjeraj became apparent. nopoly for himself.

the probable result of his advancing, induced cautions followed. Trichinopoly. accommodation. The nabob made over to by better.

Mahratta: the conference terminated, and the cause it would interfere with his prospects of The nabob marched dred sepoys in garrison at Trichinopoly, under the command of Captain Dalton. Mysoreans and Mahrattas were to follow; but their commanders chose that they should remain where they were. The army of the nabob was further weakened by the secession of Monackjee and his troops, in consequence of the authorities of Tanjore disapproving of the proposal to give up Trichinopoly to the the Mysore government. Other chieftains followed the example of Monackjee and departed with their troops, and Mahomet Ali was thus left without any efficient support except that which he received from the British.

Mahomet Ali, and a large part of the Bri-His first attempt was directed to corrupt The disputes, jealousies, and private designs a corps of Mahomet Ali's troops, whom he of the native powers, placed a bar on the had the satisfaction of finding not indisposed provecution of the object for which they to his purpose. Large sums of money were were osten-ibly brought together. Under the expended in bribing these men; and the libeexpectation that affairs would be arranged rality of Nunjeraj would probably have been between the nabob and the Mysoreans, the rewarded with success, had not its fame British troops had marched from Trichino-reached the cars of Captain Dalton. That poly to aid in establishing the authority of officer, previously on his guard, now redoubled Mahomet Ali in other parts of the dominious which he claimed. The troops of the nabob ramparts to be pointed every evening intend his allies were to follow; but neither words, towards the quarters of the Mysore dysercans nor Mahrattas were willing to the course who had been admitted within the move. Their inertness, and the information place, and those of the corps upon whose which reached the British commander as to cupidity Nunjeraj had practised. Other pre-At an inspection of the him to return two days after he had quitted army, the troops who had been tampered with The presence of the British were ordered to deliver up the flints of their troops brought about the appearance of an guns for the alleged purpose of being replaced This proceeding convinced the the Myere general the revenues of the island officers through whom the bribes of Nunjeraj of Seringham, and of some adjacent districts, [had been conveyed, that the transaction was which the latter was to collect for himself; no longer a secret; and their only course which the latter was to collect for himself; no longer a secret; and their only course the promise of surrendering Trichinopoly at the error of two months was repeated, and in the mean time Mahomet Ali agreed to receive it to the city seven hundred troops, provided that the city seven hundred troops, provided that the city seven hundred troops, provided that the city seven hundred troops, provided which he already knew, protested that they they were tot Mahoutas, for by this time the had taken Nunjernj's money from no other valod had been estaphicious of his favourite and taken Nunjernj's money from no other motive than the influence of compassion for the distress of their men, who had received scarcely any pay for nine months, and implicate and ally. On these conditions, the scarcely any pay for nine months, and implicate the purpose of plored forgiveness. To aid their suit, and had parties, which was to gain time and which parties, which they had received, and which, judging the the first of the principal officers (16,000 and the first into an around enemy, ben'; of Mys. re into an avourd enemy, be- rupees), appeared to have been dispensed with an airgand hand. Ornie, "made them few representer," Whether flidelity had been availed, and carried them to hir ferlearance was excasioned by a belief Captain Dalton. Whether the charity of the in the encepty of their repentance and a con-Mahratta, chief was exhausted, or whether his election of their returning fidelity, or whether good offices were on this occusion exerted in it engineted in some other motive, the history sain, does not appear, but the men were than does not relate. But it is cortain that, executed; and the result of this step was, notwithstandary it executed that Nunjeral could henceforward find among they had manifested. Captain Dalton did not his own people none hold enough to underthink their continuance at Trichingoly destates the work either of corruption or assessisirally the accordingly despatched them to join limition. He was obliged, therefore, to sock their master, Malieanet Ali.

"Captain Halton," says [desired. He reised the parties by whom his elienhere for emissaries, and after a short in-Neither the discouragement of defeat nor terral be imagined that he had found in a the uniferiant emissionness of having exclusives in the person of whom he was in proded maker without return, withheld Sumirearch. The individual thus honoured with jeraj from physicing the object on which belithe notice of the Mysorean leader was a Neahad set his need; and it now occurred to him ip ditan, named Clement Poverio. This man, that the assassination of Captain Dalt in and judic had been long resident in India, had the that the apparentation of Capitain Fair in more more seen ring resource in seeds, not sure of Rheire-Deen, the her ther-inday of Malor emmand of a company in the review of Mamert Ah, much be in pertant steps towards its homet Ah, and in the exercise of his duty attainment. Among such a population without Ah, and in the exercise of his duty attainment. Among such a population without the grand over the French then industried and surrout ded Tried tropoly, prisoners in the city. In addition to his milies two sects difficult to full intermments for the litery occupations. Poresio was engaged in er as yether have purpose. Several persons trading pursuits, which led him into the My-were to assect in executing the dark common servan comp, and from his knowledge of the sion, but its fortune was not better than that matice languages he had sometimes acted as of the plan by which it had been preceded, has interpreter between Captain Dalton and Intelligence was obtained of the design, and Nurjorn. Opportunities, therefore, were not two of these who were to have exerced it into mandleg for communication with Porerio, and effect were accested. Nucleral was represented of one of these Nucleral availed himself to with this atrocious attempt, but, as reight seek his aristance in getting possession of the line been expected, he decided all knowledge town. To show the feasibility of the project, of it. The two men who had been record? Nunjernj affirmed that, in addition to the were each sentenced to be blown from the Mys-rean tosops in garrison, he had many mouth of a gun, but the hursanity of Nunjfriends in the town; and to connect the interjeral, or some other feeling, induced him to jest of the atranger with his own, he held out interpose for their projection. He did not in promise of large reward. Poverio met the indeed appear perionly as a supplicant for everture with the air of a man who is not inmercy towards those whom he had instigated disposed to compliance, but who rees diffito crime. His assumption of such an office culties and dangers which require rome conwould have been inexpedient and probably indenation. He said that he must try the disvain; Le therefore had recourse to the Math position of his officers, and left Nunjerajounder ratia chief, Morari Row, who readily entering like impression that his object was likely to into the amiable feelings of his friend, sub-like attained. On his return to the town, cited from Captain Dalton the panion of the Porerio's first act nat to proceed to Captain guilty men. In consequence of this inter-Dalton, to whom he made a free communi-cession, the criminals escaped with no severer cation of all that had passed with Nunjeraj. He punishment than the terror of having been was instructed to return to the camp on the bound to the murrles of two guns, preparant day, and avow his willingness to underratory, as they believed, to their execution, take the task for which his service had been This unexpected exercise of mercy is accribed sought. He did so; and his management of by Orme to the reluctance of Kheirio Deen to the affair was so dexterous, that he succeeded offend the Mahrattas; but it was certainly in- in entirely securing the confidence of the judicious, and is not unfitly characterized by Mysorean leader. A plan of operations was a later writer as unaccountable. Its effect arranged, and the terms of carrying it into was shown in renewed attempts to corrupt effect fixed. An agreement embodying those the fidelity of the garrison. An overture was terms was drawn up, signed by Poverio and made to a native officer in command of one Nunjeraj, and solemnly impressed with the hundred and eighty sepoys, by two agents of great seal of Mysore. By this instrument it Nunjeraj, whose mission was authenticated by was stipulated that Poverio should receive the possession of engagements signed by their 20,000 rupees for his personal benefit, and master. But these emissaries made an unfortunnte choice of a subject for the commence-ment of their practice. The man whom they be set at liberty for the purpose of aiding in addressed, an old and faithful servant of the capture of the place. Simultaneously Company, acknowledged the favour intended with their release, Poverio was to selze on the him in a manner at once unexpected and un-gate nearest the place where the Mysoreaus signal for the army to move to take possession in the agreement with Poverio bearing the of the town. That nothing might be wanting signature of Nunjeraj, and distinctly informed to insure success, six resolute ruffians were pro- them that the city would not be given up at vided, whose especial duty it was to watch for all. He intimated, however, that the nabob Captain Dalton's appearance after the alarm was not forgetful of the expenses incurred by was given, and to despatch him. Hitherto all the state of Mysore on his account, and prowent well for the purpose of the British com- mised that the amount should be repaid; a mander. He had made the necessary prepa- communication which would have been more rations for defence without exciting suspicion satisfactory, if the promise had not been qualiof his connection with the visits of Poverio to fied by a postponement of its execution until the Mysore camp, or his cognizance of the the nabob's finances should be in a better plan which had been arranged with Nunjeraj. All the cannon that could be brought to bear not hesitate to avow his dislike. The claim on the Mysorean camp was prepared to greet the enemy on his approach, and about seven hundred men were concealed near the gateway where admission was expected, ready to receive the intruders in a manner not antici-But the attempt never was made, having been frustrated in an extraordinary When all his arrangements were completed, Captain Dalton informed Mahomet Ali's brother-in-law of the design which had been laid to surprise the place, and of the means which had been provided for its defeat. The representative of the nabob regarded the matter in a very different light from Captain Dalton. He had no disposition to encounter the hazard of an attack, and, in the language of Major Lawrence, consulting nothing but his fears, he sent a message to Nunjeraj, informing him that his plot was discovered, and that measures had been taken to prevent its Fort St. David), for the purpose of dissuading This step he deemed a masterexecution. stroke of policy, and communicated the intel-But his representations were disregarded. erlf-gratulation.

arce on Poverio, for whose person, dead or a recommendation from Major Lawrence to release on the enemy with their own weapons, Captain Dalton continued to hold frequent conferences both with Nunjeraj and Morari Row; and Major Lawrence's advice was that advantage should be taken of one of these opdealth I that they decided rightly.

Il - Lall ow friendship which subsisted bet my to Nicjerij was to take place.

were encamped, and to hoist a red flag as a their master, the proof of which he exhibited condition. To this qualification Nunjeraj did which he made amounted to 8,500,000 rupees; and as a proof of his moderation and desire for a peaceful settlement of differences, he professed himself willing to abandon his claim to Trichinopoly, if immediate payment of his demand were made-a condition which he knew could not be complied with.

Such was the state of affairs at Trichinopoly. To the northward Mahomet Ali succeeded in obtaining a partial recognition of his authority, but the more powerful chiefs waited the chance of events, and the stronger fortresses were invincible by his arms. In this situation he applied to the British authorities for an additional force to undertake the reduction of Gingee. To this attempt the judgment of Major Lawrence was decidedly opposed, and he proceeded to Madras (to which place the presidency had recently been removed from the Company's government from compliance. ligence of it to Captain Dalton with much Two hundred Europeans, with fifteen hun-Nunjeraj, as might have dred sepoys, were placed under the command been expected, abstained from any attempt of Major Kinneir, an officer who had recently against the city, and not thinking himself arrived in India; and this force, with six hunquite take within the reach of its guns, re-[dred of the nabob's cavalry, was destined to moved his camp to some distance. His dis-lachieve the object which Mahomet Ali had in arrointment sought relief in inflicting ven-arco on Poverio, for whose person, dead or gained, but upon the troops arriving within a disc, he offered a large reward. This led to short distance of Gingee, the wisdom of Major Lawrence's advice became apparent. The force under Major Kinneir was utterly unequal cither to attack the fortress or to maintain possession of the passes through the mountains by which Gingee was surrounded. The garrison was summoned to surrender, and with this pertunities to seize the two native generals, ineffectual measure ended the demonstration for authorities of the presidency decided against the place. In the mean time Dupleix examples this suggestion, and it cannot be had despatched a considerable body of French troops, which had taken a post in the rear of the force employed against Gingee. the restlement parties congregated in meet this new difficulty reinforcements were artiffic expiration of the two months fixed the enemy battle. Here misfortune continued as the date at which the surrender of the to attend this ill-planned and ill-fated expe-A dition. The point of attack selected by Major for it demonst was then made of it; but Kinneir was ladly chosen, and by an artifico Hat met Atis he chee, whose courage always the English were led away from their fieldto at 1 2 when to introduce danger was to pieces to a place where they were exposed leaver-readed, met the call in a spirit of to those of the enemy. Major Kinneir was left and that in. He represented the mer-severely wounded at a time when part of his engine of Nanjered with the treachery of troops were giving way. This increased the ponic which had already begun, and humpers Ian outpost which by beyond them. and natives niche find in diameter. Of the fenemy abandoned, and the whole army withentire fires, only two energies and fourteen drew in der the nalls of the timb. Ditibly greeneders, stool their prompt. These. In this situation they manifested so deter-pullantly defended their relians till slame mined a disjocition to temain, that Major induced a few of the fugitives to return, when Laurence became, weary of walting for a more than the defeat. It was so felt by Major seemy whom he was desirous of engaging, but Rinneir, who preserved of the leadily wound who would not advance, and whom he was which he had repeated, but shortly afternants fortiditien to follow. The Heitish force made each under a disease or gendered by a nounded a provipitate movement back to Hahoor, and epirit.

pared to despate's to the aid of the Pratically enless to the same effect as those which force in the neighbourhood of Port St. David, and preceded them, and an peremptory in and one company was embarked in small time as to leave him no choice but to aboy, country leads to power i thither. But the He did obeyond sanced in the direction in arrangement was defeated by a reweatest on Indial Major Laurence had retired, was at the part of Publica, which the Madian authority bed by that officer, and summarily defeated, tibes had not autoquated. When the bosts To enemy's live being broken by the linghels arrived in eight of Problems they were green first, gave may, and panic flight encreirol, the though taken out, entired rate the feeded. The nabelia manify were desired to town, and made que vers. This proceeding, pursue, but they found more agreeable em-Diplicia alleyed, was quote as yustifiable as the physician in plundering the enemy's camp, explains of his troops at Seriachara. In less Reviews, with thirteen of his officers and one enjurie of his troops at constant. It is a few and, and constant of his angers and one it would derive the exercise of a sery stalful fundred then, were made prisoners, and the exemitity to recomple any part of the hostile who less the enemy's starce, artillery, and experations exerted on between the English and administration was taken.

Treach in Irolas, whole the two events exercises. This success of the British army proat peace at heire, with the received principles direct a morked effect upon the sixte of ef the lan ef entires, rence forbade his entering its limits, and he he took the oath of fidelity to Mahomet All. conrequently contented himself with attacking |

This the

the abole retired in good order. The displace change. Stratagem at length relieved him brought on the Pritois arms by this affair was from the monotonous duty of matching an their apparent nant of confidence deceived The Buel'sh troops and there of Mahemet Hupleix, whose senguine reliance upon his Ali retered to a redould alse ut three miles from lown good fortung rarely suffered him to doubt First St. Itasid, where they waited for reine when appearances were favourable to his I received from Malror, at which place a body views. Kerjean was not deceived, and on of Swirs had just actively from Hunge in the receiving unless from his uncle to follow the service of the Company. There it was pro-Heglish, he removistrately. He was answered feeling at Terchangoly. Dupleix had been On the news of the ecience of the leads intriguing both with the Mysoreans and the and the largue ament of the troops searling Malastra, and he had not found it difficult Malma, it was see hed not to intrust the to detach them from a came towards which remainder of the Sures, consisting of another posither have any sincere good will. Emissaries company, to the rame mote of conveyance, of these parties had proceeded to Pondicherry, They were accordingly forwarded in one of where a treaty had been concluded, Dupleix the Company's thips, and Major Lawrence engaging to just the Myrorean chief in pos-endorsed with them. The enemy's force error of Trichinopoly. The mask of friendwhich had defeated Major Kinneir had been jobip for the nabob and his British ally was to four hundred and fifty Europeans, fifteen Mahrattas was actually despatched to join the hundred sepsys, and five hundred native horse. It was encamped close to the bounds of Fors St. David. The army of which Major Lawland to pass required time; and this saved rence took the command was superior as to number of the provinces through which they found to pass required time; and this saved them from a step which, under the circumstant of the provinces of the pro rence took the command was superior as to numbers. It consisted of four hundred Europeans, sevents on hundred sepons in the British sersaces, they would have regarded as false, sevents and about four thousand of the nabobs troops, cavalry and infantry. The enemy direction to their route. They proceeded to receive differences was too strong for them, as, on Major Lawrence's arrival, they retired in the night to Bahoor. Being followed, they still continued to retire towards Pondicherry; and prived of the honour of sharing in the glories of the day. What degree of credit Mahomet Ali afforded to these professions is uncertain, reuce, protecting against a violation of the French territory. The orders of Major Lawfriendship which ought to have been conclusive: French territory. The orders of Major Law-friendship which ought to have been conclusive:

The British authorities were not in a condition to add greatly to the amount of force in a gazonading strain, declaring that, if the employed in aiding the cause of the nabol. English persisted in the attack, he and his men Notwithstanding this, an application was made were determined to die in the breach. Clive by that prince for the means of reducing two resolved to give them the opportunity of restrong places, called Chingleput and Covelong, deceming their promise, if so disposed, and pro-All that could be furnished was a body of cocded to erect a battery at the distance of about two hundred Europeans and five hundred three hundred yards from the fort; but dred sepoys. This force was not only small, the construction of the work was impeded by but was formed of very unpromising materials. the fire of the enemy, of which both European's The European portion of it consisted of re- and natives manifested their dislike by taking cruits just arrived at Madras, whose character flight on every alarm. One shot striking a seems to have been such as left England little rock which was occupied as an English post, reason to regret their departure. Indeed such, seemed likely to be fatal to the hopes of Clive, according to Orme, was then generally the The rock being splintered, fourteen men were case with regard to military adventurers in killed or wounded by the flying fragments; the East; for, speaking of this body of re- and this mischance had such an effect upon the cruits, he observes, that they were, "as usual, rest, that it was some time before they could the refuse of the vilest employments in Lon- he brought to expose themselves to the danger don." The sepoys might have some advantage of similar untoward visitations. over their European coadjutors in point of ordinary regard which these troops manifested character, but they had none in respect of for their personal safety was strikingly illusceperience, being nowly raised and unactuated in the case of one of the advanced sencustomed to a military life. With such troops, tries, who, several hours after the alarming however, it was resolved to reduce forts of accident, was found calmly reposing at the considerable strength—a task which might bettem of the cautious justless have been reposted as hopeless but for large and a supersolved as the content of the cautious strength have been reposted as hopeless but for large and a supersolved as the content of the cautious strength and supersolved as the content of the cautious strength and the cautious strength and the cautious strength as the cautious strength as the cautious strength and the c justly have been regarded as hopeless, but for person is unfortunately not recorded. the union of talents, intrepidity, and persection were the instruments with which Clive verance, which had already enabled their had to perform the duty intrusted to him. His destined commander to triumph where cir-lown bearing was what it had ever been. cumstances seemed to warrant no feeling but Wherever the enemy's fire was hottest, there despair.

D 2

Clive, though in a miserable state of health, the consequence of the climate and of his previous fatigues, volunteered his services to command the expedition, and the offer was too welcome to fail of acceptance.

Covelong is situated about twenty miles from Madras. It had no ditch, but a strong wall flanked by round towers, on which were mounted thirty pieces of cannon. The French had obtained possession of it by stratagem in 1750. It was now garrisoned by fifty Europeans and three hundred native troops.

The British detachment, accompanied by · 24-pounders, marched on the 10th of Sep-

On arriving near their destination, the party were despatched under the cover night to take possession of a garden lying about six hundred yards south of the fort, which they effected. At break of day a detachment from the garrison approached unobserved, and their fire having killed the officer in command of the British party, his troops fled with a degree of determination which appeared to indicate that Madras was the point to which they were bent, and that their speed would not slacken until they arrived there. Their course, however, received a check from presentative of the French monarchy, who encountering Clive, who was advancing with the remainder of the force; but even the influence of this fortunate and popular commander was scarcely sufficient to turn the of artillery, which they had lost on the capture fugitives from their purpose. With great diffi- of Madras. On the following morning a body culty and some violence, they were at length of the enemy's troops, advancing from Chinbrought back to the garden, which the enemy gleput to relieve the garrison at Covelong, immediately abandoned. The French com- were discovered and attacked by ambuscademander being summoned to surrender, replied Mistaking the nabob's flag, which was parwas Clive, self-powered and unconcerned as if on parade. So impressive was the lesson conveyed by his cool intrepidity, that it was not without effect even on the debased specimens of manhood whom it was his misfortune to command. In the space of two days his example led them to assume some appearance of soldierly feeling, and to perform their duties with some degree of firmness. On the third day he had to march with half his force to meet a party of the enemy from Chingleput, who had advanced within four miles; but these troops seemed to have enjoyed a community of feeling with those of Clive. On his approach, they fled with great precipitation. On the following day the battery was finished, but its fire was silenced by a message from the French commander, offering to surrender the place on the single condition of being permitted to carry away his own effects. The offer was immediately accepted, the English marched in, and by this arrangement the French commander was spared the painful task which he had imposed upon himself of dying in the breach. The effects which he had been so anxious to secure by a special condition consisted of turkeys and snuff: the stock in trade of the reunited the business of a huckster with that of his military command. The fall of Covelong restored to the East-India Company fifty pieces tails ablite, by their own, they continued to impossible for the Dritish authorities long to hundred of them, and so paralyzed the respet assured hostility towards Nunjeraj. The mainder that a large propertion did not retain I have and trevoluently means to which the latter softeent presence of mild even to run. Two had reserted for the purpose of removing places of even in god postly three hurdred Captain Dalton, deprived him of any claim Clive, who, with the unvarying promptitude upon issuing the requisite instructions to treat of action, marched to Chingles ut, to follow up. Nurseral as an enemy.

The first hostile movement on the part of latters was exerted five hundred yards from the British took place late in the year 1752. the wall, but the distance being trospress, it when Captain Dalton, under cover of the was advanced to within two hundred pands, night, attached the comp of Nunjeraj. Orme In fart days a treath mar effected both in the observes, it at if the British had brought with enter and inner malie. The next labour was them a petanl, they might probably have to fill up the district pand this was about to be forced the pageda, and finished the war by o merred, when the Prench commander senting the person of the Mysorean comsister to survey der, if the garmon were personned. But no result seems to have been mitted to march anary with the procure of war, contemplated beyond that of exciting alarm in Though the wall had been freezhed, and the the remy's camp; and no other was achieved slitches might possibly have been filled up, the beyond appriring Nunjeraj of the precue place was yet capable of offering a degree of views of his late ally. This heatile visit was resistance out to be that indicate and a command. resistance not to be despiced by such a firme boom returned. Nunjersj attacked an adaps that at the days and of Clive. In this view franced post which the British had established, be exercised as only indepent in agreeing to lated fixing seeing, the troops stationed to the terms demonded. No one who has etu ned defend at, they were nearly all out to pieces, the character of Cline will surpect him of deel The British force was thus deprived of seventy clining to fight when there was a fair prospect | Europeans and about three hundred sepaysof gaining any advantage; and the fact that, I an amount of loss which it was not in A conin this instance, I e granted to the parason the ditton to lear. Captain Dalton now regarded prixilege of withdrawing from the place, may the presence of the large body of Mysorenna be regarded as considering fro fathat they were within the city with apprehension; and the in a condition to indict upon it. A pauce in mask of friendship having been dropped on the Irilliant career of this dutieguided com-both sides, they were required to depart, their mander will now for a time withdraw him from commander only being detained, under the the notice of the reader. His health being belief, apparently erroneous, that he was the prestly impaired, he proceeded to Empland brother of Nunjeraj. shortly after the surrender of Chingleput,

He continued, too, to make the warmest pro- Dalton abstained from any personal inspection, and carried to his own camp. It thus became food accumulated within the place.

advance with perfect confilence, till a valley postpane their choice between alendoning the ferm their concerted associable struck down a feature of Mahomet. All or assuming a position reserve, including the commanding effect, upon the British authorities, and of all right to were taken. The rest of the detachment, hope that their mediation should be exerted throwing away their arms, fiel luck to Ching to produce the foldiment of that provision of pleput, tearing the news of their own dis- the treaty with Mahomet Ali which stipulated confiture and of the occupation of Caselong for the surrender of Trichinopoly. It was to by the British. The receipt of this intelligence be expected, therefore, that the presidency of was immediately followed by the arrival of Madras should decide, as they ultimately did,

The French garrie a evacuated Chingleput, on the flat of October, and traiched to Pondicherry. On the list of October, and traiched to Pondicherry. On the list of November the troops under Major Lawrence were compelled by the quarters; and the army of Mahomet Ali was, from the same cause, broken up. From Trichinopoly, Morari Row, with the greater part the adjacent country destined for Trichinopoly were intercepted; and, in conformity with the of the Mahratias, departed for Pondicherry.

The prospects of the British force in Trichinopoly were becoming extremely gloomy. The Myseren commander, judging that famine would afford the most probable method union would afford the most probable method to produce town, adopted the most regular measures for bringing about the result which he desired. All supplies from the above a probable method to practice not common in Europe, but said to Those who had been led by the success of Major Lawrence to join Mahomet Ali pro-The prospects of the British force in Tri-Major Lawrence to join Mahomet Ali pro-ceeded, under pretence of seeking winter quar-ting off the noses of those who ventured to ters, to meet their countrymen from Trichi-disregard his wishes. The magazines in Tri-Nunjeraj deeming it necessary to chinopoly had been intrusted to the care of a account to the British commander for the de-brother of Mahomet Ali, who had always reparture of Morari Row, ascribed it to a dispute presented the amount of stores to be abunthat had arisen in the settlement of accounts. dant. Satisfied with his testimony, Captain fersions of friendship for the English, and, as a until, through the measures of Nunjeraj, both proof of his eincerity, he caused all provisions the inhabitants and garrison of Trichinopoly coming to Trichinopoly to be intercepted became entirely dependent on the stock of the stores had taken advantage of the growing overcoming the effects of poison prepared for scarcity in the city to sell at a high price a him by Murtern Elma, fell by the poisonard considerable quantity of the provisions on of a Patan assacia, hired for the work by the which reliance was placed for defeating the came person. But Muriera fiban did not blockade, and that what remained was only because the prize for which he had twice conequal to the consumption of a few days. In applied against the life of his relation. A storm this emergency his only hope rested on the was raised which he had not the courage to assistance of Major Lawrence, to whom a encounter; and, disquising himself in female was still able to offer a degree of resistance was the man to whom the patronage of Duwhich, under the circumstances, was formid-pleix was extended. Murters Khan, howable. While the English and the Mysoreans ever, notwith-tanding his former attempt were contending for the possession of Trichi-lupon the nabobship, displayed little alactity nopply, the prospects of the French had in securing the honour now tendered him. undergone various changes. Chazi-oo-Deen, That honour was indeed to be purchased by the eldest son of Nizau-col-Moolk, had sud- the distursement of part of his wealth, and dealy given a practical dealal to the assertion | Murteza Khan was intensely avaricious. The that he had renounced his right of succession, acceptance of it also involved some danger, by appearing before Aurungabad at the head and Murteza Khan was singularly pusillaniof an immense army, and proclaiming himselt, under the authority of the Mogul emperor, Soobahdar of the Decean. A vast Mahratta force, acting in concert with him, also entered the province of Golconda; and a proposal was determination. At length Murtera Khan so made to Dupleix to withdraw his assistance from Salabat Jung in consideration of great benefits to be bestowed by his rival. On this offer, however, Dupleix was spared the trouble dignity; and, greatly to the joy of Dupleix, of deliberating, as Salabat Jung found means advanced a considerable sum for the expenses to remove his brother by poison within a very short period after his arrival at Aurungabad. destined to rejoice in the co-operation of so His army thereupon dispersed. Dupleix, how- valuable an ally. The first advance made by His army thereupon dispersed. Dupleix, however, had still sufficient ground for anxiety. Salabat Jung, after the murder of his brother, had manufactured an edict of the Emperor of that the purchase of the nabolehip was an Delhi confirming Dupleix in the office of natural unpromising speculation, and that it would be bob. This was despatched with much parade; nd though Dupleix was far too shrewd and well informed to be deceived by the atpt, he thought it advisable to pretend to deceived. The mission was received with ostentatiously circulated throughout the country occupied by the French. But the alleged the main source of Dupleix's difficulties,

of more service than any title whatsoever."

British commander now learnt with dismay petrated by Chunda Sabib. The nabob was that the careful and honest administrator of succeeded by his sen Subder Ali, who, after assistance of Major Lawrence, to whom a community and a factor to his own fut. The difficulties of Major Lawrence at that of Vellore. Two years afterwards, the youths time needed no accession. He had left Fort ful son and successor of Subler Ali met the St. David early in January, and proceeded fate of his tather, and common report attribute Trividy, for the purpose of compentations with Mahomet Ali, to whom Dupleix the contributes of this muriler also. Such manifestal and the office a decrea of resistance was the man to whom the justicipal of Dumous. The recollection of his former inglerious flight from Arest would naturally net as a check upon his aspirations to return thitber, and Dupleix was long kept in doubt as to his far overcame his fears for his treasure and his personal rafety as to proceed to Pondicherry. where he was solemnly installed in his new of the war. But Dupleix was not long him was also the last. A little explanation of what was expected convinced Murteza Khan better to submit to the loss which he had already sustained than to incur the obligations attendant on completing the bargain. He accordingly discovered that his presence was indispensable at Vellore, and forthwith returned thither to repair the loss which his extraordinary respect, and the important in-telligence of which it was the channel was fortune had suffered by his temporary enjoyment of the rank of nabob.

Dupleix was thrown altogether upon his favour of the Mogul emperor did not remove own resources. Though by no means in-He different to the possession of wealth, the desire was grievously at a loss for money, which, as of accumulation was in him controlled by a Orme observes, "in the wars of Hindostan, is passion for securing to himself and his country the ascendant in the field of Indian politics, To supply this want he determined to create a and his large private fortune was freely disnew nabob of Arcot; and a person named pensed to gratify this passion. He was thus Murteza Khan, who had the reputation of able, in the month of January, to bring into being extremely rich, was selected for the ap- the field five hundred European infantry and pointment. It was a distinction which he had sixty horse, together with two thousand selong coveted, and which, some years before, poys. This force was powerfully aided by a he had taken some pains and incurred some body of four thousand Mahratta cavalry under guilt to obtain. Murteza Khan was a relative Morari Row, who dreadfully harased the of Dost Ali, the Nabob of Arcot, under whom British troops under Major Lawrence, that · the atrocious seizure of Trichinopoly was per- officer being sometimes obliged to march his pendered.

the respite was of short duration. An attempt to prevent it, was effected. made by Major Lawrence to force the enemy's to retire nearer the fortress, the enemy were men on the plains of Trichinopoly.

ent to fine to Fatt St. David to except his fairlant. In the Lope of being able cometimes 2714 her. This state of things the British (to exade the rigilance of the blockading force, a st common for would have been pied to terminate post was established at a place called the Golden by an engagement, but the breach could not Bork. This was attacked by a body of the be knowled to quit their introcharate, and a jeneral's troops commanded by M. Amstrue, a surcervial attack upon their camp was decreed French officer of reputed ability; and, before impracticable.

The intelligence from Telekinopoly deter defended the past were averence, and the rair of Major Lewrence immediately to mytch Trench colours hoisted. Major Lawrence, on with the larger part of his force to its relief, becoming awars of the attack, put in motion He arrived on the 6th of May, but his army all the troops at his disposal; but some were had suffered on its march from the described successfully left for the protection of the camp, of five proces, and at II more from the oppress land a confiderable number of sepays had goin eixe heat of the weather. Sexeral men diedlinto the fort to obtain rations. From these on the road, others note cent back to Pott causes, the force with which he marched to be. David, and on the day of arrest at Trioffic relief of the party on the rock amounted elangedy one lundred were placed in the lunk to about four hundred Europeans and Logital. After providing for the duties efficie hundred native image, aided by a few the partiese, the combined forces of Major field pieces. On alterating that the Preach Lawrer on and Captain Palton would futaith had succeeded in everying the rock, the British for the field only five his dred Histopenta and a mounter panel. Nearly the whole of the for the held city live his deed Europeans and is massiver placed. Nearly the whole of the two shound deep yets and it was not further that face supposed to him now met his eye, distantihed by the element of seven him. The work was covered by the enemy's report, died of the latter in sent hely positions. The supposed by the French Latthions. The presence of a hely of Maloniet Alik here public Myseric army was drawn up in the rear, was to be reported as a source of merities. The enemy's artiflery was firing from the rather than af etre other shows, in the bunging to the facts and rear of the Engineering of the horizontal methods with a store were purposed as the facts and rear of the Engineering and the store has made as a single that we have the store and methods with a store to numbed, sprifters, and muturus," they now just, social nully charging with a view to numbered their moud characteristers, and did percate confusion. With such a prospect, a not even discent le it en dielike to fighting. | pause might well be excused, but it was only limited, fully sounce of the importance of momentum. Finding his officers and men erupticacting the Cycet of Major Lourence's labbe analous to engage, Major Lourence dematch to Triction poly, halderpatched thather termined to treat to their enthusiam, and a speciality read remeats; as differences then party of grenadiors was ordered to march and arrayed there against the limitsh and their attack the sock with fixed lexangle. The ally 6 or hundred Europeans, Officer hundred patter was received with three cheers, and the septys in French pay, three themseld five party advancing at a spid pace, but with the hundred Malrattae, eight themseld Marrie most perfect regularity, neither halted nor home, twelve hundred Mysore sepoys, and pave fire till they reached the summit of the about fifteen themseld fregular infantry— sock; the enemy retreating precipitately down making together nearly thang thousand men, (the opposite side. Major Lawrence, with the This disproportion of force was sufficiently bemainder of his men, moved cound the rock dispiriting, and the success of the earlier opera-fond attacked the French battalian in front, tions of Major Lawrence was not calculated to while the British grennillers on the rock, with dispel the feeling which the comparison custs reject party of repoys who had followed, poured a heavy fire upon its right flank. Previously to the arrival of Major Lawrence, Thus assailed, the French troops began to Captain Dalton, by a series of annoying at-[waver, and a charge by the English bayonets tacks upon the force immediately engaged in completed their dismay. They fled with the maintaining the blockade, had knecceded in utmost precipitation, leaving three field-pieces frightening them from their position; and, in the hands of the victors. The English had after lingering in the neighbourhood for a few yet, however, a difficult task to perform in days, they rejoined the main body in the returning safely to the camp in the face of island of Scringham, thus affording room for such overpowering numbers; but this, notwiththe access of supplier to Trichinopoly. But standing some attempts of the enemy's cavalry

Brilliant as was the success of the British position in the island of Seringham failed. He arms, the numbers of the enemy's troops were then endeavoured to establish himself in the so great, that no reasonable expectation of position from which the enemy had recently ultimate success could be entertained, unless withdrawn, and the maintenance of which was reinforcements from some quarter could be so important for securing supplies. But this procured. Major Lawrence observes that a he was unable to effect; and being compelled victory or two more would have left all his cantiled again to interrupt the communication hope of obtaining the fulfilment of promises of with the country and stop the transit of pro-lassistance often made by the Rajah of Tanjoro, of the world."

Before this event, an attempt had been made by the representatives of the French and English East-India Companies to negotiate; but after several days had been consumed in profitless discussion, they separated without a single step being gained towards reconciliation. But the year was not to close without a renewal of proceedings for pacification conducted under different auspices. The extraordinary position of the French and English in the East had been forced on the attention of the respective governments at home; and the resolution to dispatch a British squadron with reinforcements, induced the French to consent to an arrangement for the settlement of the disputes between the two countries, by commissioners to be deputed for the purpose. The negotiations were to be conducted on the spot where the dispute had arisen, and it might have been expected that Dupleix would have been continued by the French government as its representative. This, however, was not the fact. He was superseded by the appointment of M. Godheu, who arrived at Pondicherry on the 2nd of August, and proclaimed his commission. The first result was a suspension of arms for three months, which commenced on the 11th of October. On the 14th of that month Dupleix departed for Europe.

Towards the close of the year a treaty was concluded, subject to confirmation in Europe; and on the 11th of January following a truce was agreed upon, till the pleasure of the European authorities should be known. In the mean time everything was to remain on the footing of uti possidetis. By the treaty both parties were restrained from interfering in the disputes of native princes, but by the articles of truce they engaged to oblige their allies to observe the provisions of the treaty, and in case of contumacy, to enforce compliance by arms. The commander of the Mysoreans, however, denying the right of the French to conclude any treaty for him, continued to prosecute his favourite scheme of getting possession of Trichinopoly, till, alarmed by the reported approach to his frontier of a body of Mahrattas to levy contributions, and by the simultaneous advance of Salabat Jung to demand the Mogul's tribute, of troops belonging to any nation in any part was not in strict accordance with the letter of the treaty with the French, but the latter, under M. Bussy, were rendering similar assistance to Salabat Jung. In Madura and Tinnevelly, the operations of the English were attended with little success and still less honour; and an attempt to coerce into obedience the notorious Murteza Khan was met by an intimation from the governor of Pondicherry, that it was regarded as an infraction of the treaty and would be dealt with accordingly. The attempt was thereupon abandoned.

he suddenly decamped.

The English continued to aid Mahomet Ali refractory vassals to obedience. This perhaps | expected prize.

The services of the fleet which had arrived from England under the command of Admiral Watson, not being required for any other object, were employed in the suppression of a system of piracy which for nearly fifty years had been a source of serious annoyance to the trade on the coast of Malabar. It was carried on by a family bearing the name of Angria, the founder of which had been the commander of the Mahratta fleet, and who, availing himself of the opportunities which the events of the times threw in his way, obtained the grant of certain forts and districts convenient for the exercise of the trade of piracy, and established a petty sovereignty. His descendants failing in their allegiance to the Peishwa, that potentate united with the English to chastise them. Early in 1755, a small British force commanded by Commodore James attacked and captured Severndroog, one of the forts of Toolajee Angria, and also the island of Bancoot. The Peishwa's fleet were to have assisted in the enterprise, but they never ventured within gun-shot of the fort. In February following, Admiral Watson sailed with the fleet under his command to attack Gheriah, the principal harbour and stronghold of the pirates. In this service he was aided by Clive, who had recently arrived at Bombay from England, with a force intended to be employed against the French in the Deccan, but which, from the change of circumstances that had taken place, was now at liberty for any other service. The Mahrattas were to co-operate in the attack on Gheriah, but the allies seem to have been quite as desirous of outwitting each other as of overcoming the Both parties meditated an exclusive enemy. appropriation of the booty which was anticipated, and both took much pains to attain The English were successful. their object. The place fell into their hands, and their in collecting his revenues and reducing his Mahratta friends were disappointed of the two months, when the aid of his military talents was called for in a part of India where they had never vet been exercised.

CAPTURE OF CALCUTTA BY SOORAJ-00-DOWLAH.—THE BLACK HOLE.—RECOVERY OF CALCUTTA BY CLIVE.—CAPTURE OF CHANDERNAGORE.—BATTLE OF PLASSY.—ELEVATION OF MEER BY OLIVE,—CAPTURE OF CHANDERNAGORE,—BATTLE OF PLASSY,—ELEVATION OF MEEL JAFFIER TO THE THRONE,—DEATH OF SOORAJ-OO-DOWLAH,—TREACHERY TOWARDS OMICHUND. Chive had returned to India with the ap- made an important difference in their position. pointment of Governor of Fort St. David. Thither he proceeded, when his services were Inther ne proceeded, when his services were uninvourable views towards the English. It has been said, indeed, that his predecessor, and has been said, indeed, that his predecessor, and the manufacture of the control no longer required on the western coast, and in the month of June formally entered on the duties of his office. But in this comparation of his content to his duties of his office. But in this comparation of his government, shared those views, and that his advice to his grandson was to denrive the The new Soubahdar was known to entertain duties of his office. But in this comparatively quiet post he had not remained quite

government, shared those views, and that his English of military power, But whether the hatred of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah were stimulated by the advice of his grandfather, or left to unfavourable views towards the English. It Hents was caused for in a part of India whore ley had never yet been exercised.

Aliverdi Khan, Soubahdar of the provinces its own operation, it is certain, that at a part of its own operation. Aliveral Kinan, Southandar of the provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, had died in the very early period after his accession to power, of Bengal, Benar, and Orissa, and died in the month of April. He was succeeded by Mirza it was actively manifested. Mahmood, better known by his assumed name of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, who appears to have been administered by an uncle of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, who double rela. of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, who appears to have been administered by an uncle of Sooraj-oo-tionship of orandanhaw and prandson.

Ali. | Dowlah, who had died a short time before time before time before the sourage of transmitters. verdi Khan had been the architect of his own real Kan and been the architect of his own december in the last state of the control of the cont Aliverdi Khan. His dewan, or treasurer, not his habits of life grave, and his government deoming his family or his property safe in as free from oppression as was consistent with the maintenance of an Oriental despotof his son, named Kishindoss, who had solicited ism. It has been said that he was "perhaps ism. It has been said that he was "perhaps Aliverdi Khan that the English were actuated the only prince in the East whom none of his by hostile feelings towards him. The death of his grandfather relieved him from restraint. and found a temporary refuge in Calcutta. the only prince in the East whom none of his subjects wished to assassinate." The character of his grandfather relieved him from restraint, after that event he ad-This gave offence to Sooraj-00-Dowlah, who endenvoured, but without effect, to persuado intellect was feeble, his habits low and de-Aliverdi Khan that the English were actuated intellect was feeble, his habits low and deprayed, his propensities vicious in the expression of the e His and immediately after that event he adtreme. From a child he had been sullen, ca. Pricious, and cruel. His education afforded action of these evil dispositions, but, on the contrary tended to foster them. He der. came in a small boat. and on landing dressed a letter to the President of Calcutta, on the contrary, tended to foster them. on the contrary, tended to foster them. He was the idol of the prince to whom he was already dier, came in a small boat, and on landing diess of age his early vears were passed of the British authorities. Omichand, who was introduced to the British authorities. Itined to succeed; and through the doting diness of age his early years were passed it the British authorities. Omichund, who was introduced to onerating upon such a nature as that of largely engaged in providing the Company's He dier, came in a small boat, and on landing of operating upon such a nature as that of largely engaged in providing the Company's noduced the result which investments and from this occuration a great is, operating upon such a nature as that of largely engaged in providing the Company's might have been anticinated. His advance nortion of his wealth had been derived. But might have been anticipated. His advance towards manhood was marked by a corresponding advance in vice. His companions towards manhood was marked by a corresponding advance in vice. His companions towards manhood was marked by a corresponding advance in vice. His companions towards manhood was marked by a corresponding advance in vice. His companions to this source of profit he had been derived. But years deprived, in consequence of some diswere selected from the lowest and basest of mankind, and with these congenial associates his days and nights were passed amidst every years deprived, in consequence of some disspecies of intemperance. satisfaction which had arisen with the quality Aliverdi Khan had occasionally called upon the English to contribute to replenish his trenof the goods, and which had led to the employthe English to contribute to replemen his treasury. These demands were sometimes refused, lab with increased distribute, and to have reasonable of Omichund to the stormage of the stormage of Omichund to the stormage of the ment of factors by the Company, to purchase sury. These demands were sometimes refused, and the refusal was followed by the stoppage arded it as a contrivance of Omichund to have refusal. But the Soubahdar was an intelligent give himself importance. The messenger was at the provincial markets. The British council appear on this account to have viewed the alleged communication from Sooraj-00-Dowprince, and knew the value of European commerce too well to destroy it. The disputes merce too well to destroy it. The disputes was not long before another communication and the English. on the whole, found little ferent subject. He had heard that the Engwhich arose never proceeded to extremities, and the English, on the whole, found little ferent subject. He had heard that the Eng-Khan and the accession of Soorni-oo-Dowlah. Soorni-oo-Dowlah. Ish were strengthening their fortifications, and he required them to desist, An answer give himself importance. The messenger wa accordingly dismissed without an answer. It reason to complain. The death of Aliverdi lish were strengthening their fortincations, An answer was not long before another communication was returned, in part denying the truth of the of the military officers, and among them those report which had reached the prince, and in of the highest rank, are represented as nopart justifying the proceedings which he ascribed to the English authorities, on the ground of apprehended hostilities with the This letter threw the Soubahdar into a transport of rage; and although then actually on his march to reduce a refractory dependent to obedience, he abandoned this object in order to turn his arms against the He forthwith presented himself before the English factory at Cossimbazar, which immediately surrendered without an effort being made to defend it.

The news of the fall of Cossimbazar was received at Calcutta with feelings of dismay. The garrison did not amount to two hundred; not more than a third of their number were Europeans, and few, if any, had ever been in action. In addition to the regular troops in garrison, Calcutta boasted a militia formed from the European and native inhabitants; but so little attention had been given to train-· ing this force, that when called out, it is said, there were scarcely any among them "who knew the right from the wrong end" of their muskets. The works were altogether inadequate to sustain a protracted siege, and had they been of greater strength little would have been gained, as the stock of provisions within the place was not more than equal to a few weeks' consumption of its crowded population. The supply of ammunition would not have sufficed for three days' expenditure, if in a good condition, and great part of it was spoiled by damp. There was hardly a carriage that would bear a gun, and numerous pieces of cannon were lying useless under the walls. Assistance was naturally sought from Madras and Bombay; but, with the use of ordinary expedition on the part of the Soubahdar, it was obviously impossible that any could arrive in time to save Calcutta from falling into the hands of the enemy. Application for aid was made to the Dutch and French authorities, but from neither was any obtained. answer of the Dutch was an unqualified re-The French, less dogged, but more insolent, offered to join the English, if the stricken fugitives, and among those who thus latter would quit Calcutta and remove their departed were Mr. Drake, the Governor, and garrison and effects to the French settlement the Commandant, Captain Minchin. Abanof Chandernagore.

In the mean time the Soubahdar was adlong suspense. enemy's guns were heard at Calcutta. small; but had they been greater, they would pated, afford the means of e-cape. Or lers probably have been vain, from there being no were sent to bring the ship as near the fort as one competent to direct them effectually. Some was practicable, and the commander proceeded toriously incompetent, and their deficiencies were not counterbalanced by the wisdom or vigour of the civil authorities. It is a small reproach to the civil and commercial servants of the Company, that they were generally deficient in military knowledge and skill; but many of them seem to have been no less deficient in energy, presence of mind, and a regard to the most obvious demands of duty. The natural result was, that while the thunder of the enemy roared without, insubordination, division, and distraction were aiding him All authority seems to have been at within. "From the time," says an eye-witness, "that we were confined to the defence of the fort itself, nothing was to be seen but disorder, riot, and confusion. Everybody was officious in advising, but no one was properly qualified to give advice." In such circumstances, the expediency of abandoning the fort and retreating on shipboard naturally occurred to the besieged, and such a retreat might have been made without dishonour. But the want of concert, together with the criminal eagerness manifested by some of the principal servants of the Company to provide for their own safety at any sacrifice, made the closing scene of the siege one of the most disgraceful in which Englishmen have ever been engaged. On the 18th of June, it was resolved to remove the female residents at Calcutta, and such effects as could be conveniently carried away, to a ship lying before the fort. In the night the general retreat Two civil servants, named was to take place. Manningham and Frankland, volunteered to superintend the embarkation of the females, and having on this pretence quitted the scene of danger, refused to return. Others followed their example, and escaped to the ship, which in the evening weighed anchor and dropped down the river, followed by every other vessel of any size at the station. In the morning no The means of escape were available, except two small boats which still remained at the wharf. These were eagerly seized by parties of panicdoned by those whose especial duty it was to protect them, the devoted community provancing, and the celerity of his movements ceeded to take measures for establishing some relieved the English from the perplexities of authority in place of that so unworthily re-long suspense. Within a very few days after nounced. The senior member of council rethe fall of Cossimbazar became known, the maining in the fort waived his claim, and Mr. enemy's guns were heard at Calcutta. The Holwell, another member, assumed the comusual method of calming the angry feelings of mand with the full consent of all parties. No eastern princes was resorted to. A sum of expectation was entertained of preventing the money was tendered in purchase of the Son- ultimate fall of the place; the only object in bahdar's absence, but refused. Some show of view was to defend it until a retreat could be resistance followed, but there was little more made, and a Company's ship which had been than show. The means of defence were indeed stationed up the river would, it was antici-

come so many of his superiors, lost his presence | majority being Europeans, to whose northern of mind, and ran the ship aground. There constitutions the oppressive climate of Bengal was now no hope but in the considerate feelings | could scarcely be made supportable by the aid of those who had fled from their companions, of every resource that art could suggest, and still exposed to dangers which they had refused several of them suffering from the effects of to share. Ignobly as they had abandoned their recent wounds. proper duties, it could not be believed that, when the consciousness of personal safety had not at first persuade themselves that their calmed their agitation, and time had afforded opportunity for reflection, they would coolly numbers in that narrow prison, or they might surrender a large body of their countrymen perhaps, as one of the survivors afterwards to the mercy of a despot, whose naturally cruel declared, have preferred to encounter instant disposition was inflamed by the most savage death, by rushing on the swords of the solhatred of the English. To the hope of succour | diers, to the lingering torture which awaited from this quarter the inmates of the besieged them. fort naturally turned when all other failed. horrors of their situation, an offer of a thou-For two days after the flight of the governor sand rupees was made to an officer of the and those who accompanied him, the defence guard if he would procure the removal of part of the place was maintained with little skill of the prisoners to another place. He withindeed, but with considerable perseverance. drew, but returned with an answer that it For two entire days did the besieged throw up signals, calling upon their fugitive companions to assist them in escaping the dangers which only to disappoint the hope of relief, if any those companions had feared so much, that hope existed, by declaring that the desired they had sacrificed even honour to safety. For two entire days did the fugitives look orders of the Soubahdar; that he was asleep, upon those signals, while the flames which burst from all parts of the town testified still more amply to the distress of their countrymen, and the continued firing of the enemy told of thirst soon became intolerable; and though their increasing danger, without making a single effort to answer the calls upon their humanity, or to interpose the slightest assistance. One who had given minute attention to the subject observes, that "a single sloop with fifteen brave men on board might, in spite of all the efforts of the enemy, have come up, and anchoring under the fort, have carried away all " who remained to become a tyrant's captives; but even fifteen brave men were wanting for the duty.

The enemy entered, and the Company's , ...is, civil and military, by consequence "on the word of a soldier," that no harm whose sufferings were thus shortened. should come to them. Harm, however, did the remainder, some were in a state of deli-come, whether by the contrivance of the rium; others rapidly advancing to that state, Soubahdar or of some of his dependents. Diffi- but still retaining a consciousness of the scene culty was found, or pretended, in discovering and circumstances around them, strove by ina proper place of security, and, after some sult and abuse to provoke the guards to fire search, a room attached to the barracks, on them. At length the morning came, and which had been used for the confinement of with it an order for bringing out the prisomilitary offenders, was selected for the purpers. The execution of the mandate was imeighteen feet by fourteen. there was no provision for the admission of some time to remove. Those in whom the air or light; on the fourth were two small spark of life was not extinct then came forth, windows secured by iron bars; but these, it is represented, from their position not being to the windward, could admit little air, an evil aggravated by the overhanging of a low verandah. Within a space thus confined and which they had been subjected. ill rentilated, on a sultry night in the sul- . The precise share of the Soubahdar in this to carry them into effect; but the pilot, in-triest season of the year, were immured one fected by the dastardly feeling which had over-hundred and forty-six human beings, a vast Few of the persons knew anything of the place; those who did could guards seriously proposed to shut up such When at length they perceived the was impossible. The offer was doubled, and the man again withdrew; but he returned change could not be effected without the and none dared to wake him. Of the horrors of the night which succeeded, no words can raise an adequate conception, The heat and resistance to the fate that impended seemed useless, to yield to it calmly was more than could be expected from human nature. rapidly sinking strength of the sufferers was exhausted, and their torments aggravated, by frantic struggles with each other to gain a position near the windows, or to obtain a few drops of the water with which their guards, more in mockery than in mercy, scantily supplied them through the grating. In these dreadful contests, some were beaten down and trampled to death-while, in the more remote parts of the room, the work of the destroyer me prisoners. They had at first no reason was in fearful progress through the overapprehend any great severity of treatment, powering heat and the vitiated condition of e Soubahdar having assured Mr. Holwell, the air—and happy might they be esteemed The dimensions of this place were peded by the piles of dead which blocked up On three sides the doorway; an obstacle which it required authority this wholesale murder of prisoners known at Madras; more than two months was took place. The character of the officers of subsequently consumed in disputes. a government is in a great measure determined by that of those whom they serve; and desirous of undertaking the command of the if the servants of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah exercised expedition, but he was without military exany discretion in the choice of a prison, it perience, and claimed more extensive powers may safely be concluded that their choice was than his associates in the government felt jusmade under a full impression that it would tified in granting, and they declined to gratify not be disagreeable to their master. The subsequent conduct of the Soubahdar shows Aldereron, who was at Madras in command that such a belief would have been well warranted. When Mr. Holwell was admitted to his presence on the morning after the murder, exhibiting on his person painful evidence of the sufferings of the night, the Soubahdar being intrusted with it was grounded on his expressed neither regret for the horrors that being integered to recognize their authors. had occurred, nor displeasure at the conduct and little disposed to recognize their authoof those who had been the direct instruments rity. of producing them; but harshly interrupted qualified for the command, and would, with-Mr. Holwell's attempt to describe them by a out doubt, have been nominated to it, had he demand for the treasure supposed to be con- not been incapacitated by the state of his cealed.

presidency of Madras even received intelli- Orme had the credit of suggesting him as the gence of the danger." The surrender of Cos- leader of the expedition, and the proposal, besimbazar was not known there until the 15th ing warmly approved by Clive's early and unof July. Disturbances with the native princes deviating friend, Colonel Lawrence, was finally were too common to excite much surprise, and adopted. The powers of the former governor it was supposed that the attack upon Cos-land council of Calcutta, in civil and comsimbazar was the result of a temporary out-|mercial affairs, were preserved to them, but in break either of jealousy or avarice, and that all military matters Clive was to be entirely the wrath of the hostile prince would in due independent. This was strongly objected to time be appeared, in the usual way, by a pre- by Mr. Manningham, a member of the council visable to strengthen the British establishment enviable distinction of having been foremost in Bengal, and Major Kilpatrick was des-|in the disgraceful flight from that place, and patched thither with two hundred and thirty who had been deputed by the fugitives on a troops, mostly Europeans. On the 5th of mission to Madras His remonstrances, withtroops, mostly Europeans. August news arrived of the fall of Calcutta, which "scarcely created more horror and resentment than consternation and perplexity."

Part of the council were opposed to sending any large force to Bengal, from a fear of diminishing the security of the English interests teen hundred sepoys. The squadron under on the coast of Coromandel, and desired to try the effect of negotiation. This line of policy these and in five transports the forces were atrocious transaction is not ascertainable. was strenuously resisted by Orme, the cele-One of the sufferers believed that the orders brated historian, then a member of the council were only general, and amounted to no more of Madras. He maintained the necessity of than that the prisoners should be secured. dispatching such a force as should be sufficient He attributes the barbarity with which they to act with vigour and effect against the Souwere enforced to the soldiers intrusted with bahdar, and, after much opposition, his advice their execution, and it is certain that the prevailed. To carry it into effect the cotheir execution, and it is certain that the horrors of the Black Hole afforded them entertainment. "They took care," says Holewell, "to keep us supplied with water, that they might have the satisfaction of seeing us fight for it, as they phrased it, and held up lights to the bars that they might lose no part of their inhuman diversion." Another of the prisoners seems to have thought that the orders were specific as to the place of confinement, but that they were issued in ignomance of its small dimensions. But these apolescent is suggestions, however creditable to the generosity of the sufferers, can do little to maintained or reduced? More than six weeks generosity of the sufferers, can do little to maintained or reduced! More than six weeks relieve the character of the man under whose had intervened before the fall of Calcutta was

Mr. Pigot, the governor of Madras, was Colonel Lawrence was in every way health. It would have been strange if in this "All was lost," says Orme, "before the emergency Clive should have been forgotten. It was, notwithstanding, thought ad- of Calcutta—a gentleman who boasted the unout doubt, received all the attention which the firmness of his character demanded, but they were ineffectual.

The troops destined for the expedition amounted to nine hundred Europeans and fif-Admiral Watson consisted of five ships. In ombarked; but, when on the point of departation and of the which Sooraj-oo-Dowlah ture, they were deprived of the royal artillery rejoiced. Mr. Holwell and other servants of and of the king's guns and stores by the pertition Company were treated with great cruelty, nacious refusal of Colonel Aldereron to suffer in the expectation that they might thereby them to proceed unless he had the command. be brought to discover some concealed trea-These were consequently disembarked. the 16th of October the expedition sailed from the place of its concealment could be made; Madras, and on the 20th of December all the land the Soubabdar having left in Calcutta a ships except two, after encountering some disasters, had arrived at Fulta, a village on the Hooghly, at some distance from Calcutta, at which the British authorities had re-assembled when beginning to recover from the effects of and Dutch, both of whom he threatened to their panic. ships seriously diminished the efficiency of the to the replenishment of his treasury. They boro the flag of Admiral Pocock, the second in respect and attachment, but the Soul-addar command, was the largest in the squadron, and had on board two hundred and fifty of the and, after nome hesitation, the Dutch were European troops: the other, a Company's ship, named the Marlborough, contained the greater part of the field-artillery. The detachment under Major Kilpatrick, which had been dispatched from Madras on the arrival of the news of the fall of Cossimbazar, was at Fulta, but, having suffered dreadfully from the Soubahdar, when on his march to Calcutta, offects of long encampment upon swampy with two hundred chests of gunpowder, a offects of long encampment upon swampy ground, was not in a condition to add materially to the strength of the British force. Of forget, even when engaged in plundering these two hundred and thirty men who had ori- to whom he was indebted for it. Thus, neither ginally composed it, one-half had perished, Dutch nor French had much reason to rejoice and of those who survived only thirty were fit in the success of the policy which had refor duty. Reinforcements were expected from strained them from affording aid to the Eng-Bombay, but Clive determined to wait neither lish. for them nor for the arrival of the two ships which had been separated from the rest of the of his own military genius and its results, be fleet, but to advance at once upon Calcutta.

importance, and dwelling with equal diffuseess and complacency on the glory of the queror. But, though satisfied with honour, oraj-oo-Dowlah was in other respects grievusly disappointed. He had imagined Calcutta one of the richest places in the world, and had anticipated immense wealth from its plunder.

On sure; but no none existed, no revelation of garrison of three thousand men, quitted it with little gain in any respect, except of selfantichection. His disappointed feelings found consolation in heatile mersages to the French The absence of the two missing extirpate unless they immediately contributed One of them, the Cumberland, which endeavoured to soothe him by professions of did not choose to be paid in such currency; obliged to purchase his forbearance by the contribution of four lace and a half of rupees, while the French obtained the like favour by the payment of three lacs and a half. better terms accorded to the latter were in consideration of their having furnished the service which the prince was too grateful to

From the view which Sooraj-oo-Dowlah took had never contemplated the probability of any The reduction of that place had been re- attempt on the part of the English to recover garded by Sooraj-oo-Dowlah as the most glo- that which they had lost. Indeed, had he rious achievement performed in India since been correct in his estimate of the population the days of Timour. The conquest was an- of that division of the earth within which nounced at Delhi by letters magnifying its England lies, and of which it forms a very of that division of the earth within which small part, he might have been justified in the proud contempt which he displayed for his enemies; for it was the belief of this prince that "there were not ten thousand men in all Europe !!" Yet the loss of the trade carried on by a small fraction of this scantily peopled portion of the globe was seriously felt in the Now that the prize was in his possession, he diminution of the revenues of Sooraj-oo-Dowfound that he had greatly over-estimated its lah; and he was meditating the grant of pervalue. Most of the inhabitants had removed mission to the English to return, under severe their property in contemplation of the Sou-restrictions, when this exercise of his elemency bahdar's visit, and the season of the year was was arrested by intelligence that they had one in which no large stock of merchandise returned without invitation, in great force, and was accumulated at Calcutta. The treasury were advancing upon their old settlement. of Omichund furnished about four lacs of The whole army of the Soubahdar was forthrupees, besides some valuable effects; and with ordered to assemble at Moorshedabad, merchandise to the amount of about two hun- the capital of his dominions, for the purpose dred thousand pounds, the property of other of resisting the daring strangers. In the parties, fell into the hands of the invaders. mean time dispositions had been made for de-The soldiers having appropriated so much of fending Calcutta by the officer in command this as they were able to conceal, and the there, who, says Orme, "had no courage but officers appointed to superintend the plunder much circumspection." To this person letters having provided for themselves as far as they were forwarded from Clive and Admiral Watimagined they might with impunity, the re son, addressed to the Soubahdar. They were mainder formed a solid appendage to th eopen, and the cautious officer, after ascertaining their character, declared that he dared | 2nd January, once more became masters of not send letters written in such menacing the place from which a few months before

On the 27th December the fleet left Fulta, and the next day anchored at Moidapore, where the troops were disembarked for the rise to fierce disputes as to the right of compurpose of marching to attack Budge-Budge, a fort of some strength, about ten miles distant. The march thither was one of dreadful fatigue, and occupied sixteen hours. The country was such as could not be traversed, under the most favourable circumstances, without extreme labour, and the troops on this occasion had not only to encounter the difficulties which it presented to their own pas-|left England. At the same time the Governor sage, but also to draw two field-pieces and a and Council of Bengal, though they had found tumbril loaded with ammunition. This arose their authority a burden in time of danger, from the continued apprehensions of the coun-were quite ready to resume it when the dancil at Fulta, who, clinging to their first fear ger was passed. A party of sepoys having with more than martyr's steadfastness, did not entered the fort at the same time with a venture to provide a single beast either of draught or burden, lest they should incur the Soubahdar's resentment. After such a march, it may well be believed that the troops stood in need of rest; but unfortunately they resigned themselves to it without taking the common precaution of stationing sentinels to ingly entered in defiance of it. He found the guard against surprise. Monichund, the go-|fort in possession of Captain Coote, a king's vernor of Calcutta, was in the neighbourhood officer, who showed him a commission from with a force of upwards of three thousand Admiral Watson, appointing him governor. horse and foot. movement of the English, and about an hour threatened to put Captain Coote under arrest after they had laid down to sleep commenced if he refused to acknowledge his own. mind succeeded in averting the danger so negligently incurred. He promptly made the state of affairs on shore, to which Clive asnecessary dispositions for repulsing the enemy, which were executed with precision and effect. The enemy were driven from the posts which they had occupied, but still seemed prepared to contest the fortune of the day, till a shot passing near the turban of Monichund so astounded that gallant commander, that he instantly turned his elephant and fled with his whole force.

Although the British troops were in this affair taken at a disadvantage, the result seems to have impressed the enemy with a conviction that they were not to be despised. sailor belonging to the British squadron having | Company's representatives. straggled to the ditch, crossed it, and scrambled over the ramparts. Finding no sentinels, British force that he had taken the fort, and on their proceeding to join him, it was found that the place was evacuated. returned to Calcutta, but remained there only in which Monichund had fled. A force was a few hours, when, leaving a garrison of five detached to attack Hooghly. hundred men, he went away with the rest of pared the way by battering the fort, and a his force to Hooghly, "where," says Orme, breach, barely practicable, having been made, "having likewise communicated his own terrors, he proceeded to carry them to the Nabob at the main gate was made by one division of at Moorshedabad."

they had been so ignominiously expelled. But the want of an enemy did not insure peace. The jealousy of the British authorities gave mand. Admiral Watson was singularly tenacious of his rights, and of those of the service to which he belonged. Clive was not slow in upholding his own claims as commander-inchief of the Company's forces in Bengal, and as holding, moreover, the rank of lieutenantcolonel in his Majesty's service—an honour which had been conferred upon him before he detachment from the ships were unceremoniously turned out by the latter; and Clive, on his arrival, was informed that none of the Company's officers or troops should have admission. His was not a spirit to submit mission. His was not a spirit to submit tamely to such an interdict, and he accord-He was apprized of the Clive denied the authority of the admiral, and Clive's intrepidity and presence of tain Coote thereupon desired that Admiral Watson should be made acquainted with the senting, a message was despatched to the admiral, who, in reply, informed Clive that, if he did not immediately evacuate the fort, it should be fired on. Clive replied that he could not answer for consequences, but that he would not abandon the fort. Further attempts to shake his resolution were made, but Clive persisted in maintaining his claim, with the qualification that if Admiral Watson would come on shore and take the command himself, he would offer no objection. expedient was adopted. The admiral came, The and having received the keys of the garrison following day was fixed for an assault on from Clive, held them till the next day, when Budge-Budge, but in the evening a drunken he delivered them in the king's name to the from Clive, held them till the next day, when Thus ended a very idle dispute, by which some time was wasted, the public service impeded, and much he shouted to the advanced guard of the ill feeling engendered among brave men engaged in a common cause. These divisions being healed, the British Monichund proceeded to push their success in the direction The fleet preit was determined to storm. A false attack the troops, while Captain Coote with the other Calcutta, after the discharge of a few shots, and some sailors succeeded in entering the was abandoned to the English, who, on the breach undiscovered. The garrison no sooner perceived the English on the ramparts than stead of going to the tent of the dewan, prothey quitted their posts and made their escape ceeded, in darkness, silence, and panting at a small gate.

tended the progress of the British arms; yet enemy on the following morning. The attack even the bold and sanguine spirit of Clive was made, but without much judgment. The began to doubt of the expediency of per-severing in hostility. The Soubahdar was advancing, and the terror of his approach deterred the country people from bringing cess to the best account. Neither party derived provisions either to the town or the army, much either of honour or of satisfaction from between England and France. between the two nations in India was consefield, the possibility of their junction with the government, which probably formed a very Soubahdar could not be regarded without the small part of them. The English were to be utmost apprehension. Sooraj-oo-Dowlah propermitted to fortify Calcutta in whatever might be sent to him. Two civil servants, Mersrs. Walsh and Scrafton, were appointed to this duty. On being introduced to the chief minister he affected a suspicion that they intended to assassinate the Soubahdar, and desired to examine whether they had not pistols concealed about them. This ceremony formed, he called upon them to part with swords, but with that demand they reto comply, and it was not enforced. n brought into the presence of the e read, and then having whispered to some of his officers, he desired the deputies to confer with his dewan. The conference, however, did not take place. the capture of Calcutta by the Soubahdar, had direction of Chandernagore.

haste, to the British camp. On receiving Thus far success the most ample had at-their report, Clive determined to attack the which was encamped at a short distance from the affair, but the Soubahdar's confidence was Another cause of alarm was the arrival greatly shaken by it, and he retired some disof intelligence that war had been declared tance with his army. Negotiation was then The truce renewed; and on the 9th February a treaty was concluded, by which the Soubahdar quentl yat an end; and as the French had a agreed to restbre the Company's factories, but garrison at Chandernagore containing nearly only such of the plundered effects as had as many Europeans as the English had in the been brought to account in the books of his fessed to be willing to treat, but did not manner they might think expedient, and to slacken his march. On the 3rd February the coin money in their own mint. All merchanvan of his army was seen advancing in full dise under their dustucks or passes was to be march towards Calcutta, while some villages exempt from tax, fees, or imposition of any in the distance were in flames. Either from kind; they were to have possession of certain a belief that an attack would be hazardous, or villages, and to be generally confirmed in all from a fear of interrupting a settlement by the privileges which had been granted them negotiation, little resistance was offered by by the Mogul emperors from their first ar-Clive, and on the next morning the main rival in the province. Two days after the body of the enemy advanced. A letter was signing of the treaty, the newly established at the same time received from the Soubahdar chain of friendship received another link by desiring that deputies from the English camp | the addition of an article of alliance offensive and defensive.

While the negotiations with the Soubabdar were in progress, the relative position of the French and English had occupied some degree of attention. It was part of Clive's instructions to attack the French settlement of Chandernagore, if during his command in Bengal news should arrive of war having been declared between England and France. news had been received; and immediately on the conclusion of the articles of alliance with ice, they delivered their proposals, which the Soubahdar, Clive had sought permission to act upon his instructions. was for a time evaded, and Clive availed himself of the Soubahdar's temporizing conduct Omichund, after to move a part of the English troops in the The French, been his constant follower, in the hope of however, were in correspondence with Soorajgetting back some part of the property which co-Dowlah, and the advance of the British he had lost. Being the owner of many houses force was stopped by a peremptory injunction in Calcutta, and having other interests there, from that prince. Clive was fearful of irritahe was anxious at the same time to maintain ting him by a resumption of hostilities; his influence with the English, and on this and the French, while endeavouring to eccasion he probably saved the lives of the strengthen their interest by negotiation with two deputies. He had been present at the Soubahdar, were unwilling, till those arther audience, and as the deputies were remaining he took an opportunity of advising from the English. Both parties sought to them to take our of themselves adding them to take care of themselves, adding, postpone the commencement of actual warmith a significant look, that the Soubahdar's fare, and an extraordinary measure for effectannon was not yet come up. The deputies, ing their common object was seriously disnot slow in understanding his intimation, nor lackward in acting upon it, ordered their waged war in India, while the two countries attendants to extinguish their lights; and ingested to reverse: peace was to be maintained be at Calcutta in a few days; that in a few respective nations, though war raged else-ships and more troops; and that I will kindle where. A proposal to maintain neutrality such a flame in your country as all the waters was made, and an arrangement based upon it in the Ganges shall not be able to extinguish. would most probably have been concluded Farewell! remember that he who promises had the French authorities at Chandernagore you this never yet broke his word with you or possessed powers to enable them to complete But they were dependent upon the government of Pondicherry, and in consequence of that dependence they were unable to enter into any other than a provisional agreement, subject to confirmation or rejection by the controlling authority. Clive was willing to suspend the commencement of hostilities upon the chance of the treaty being confirmed; but Admiral Watson took a different view, and expressed himself strongly against giving effect to any treaty until it had been ratified by the government of Pondicherry.

While affairs were in this state, advice was which had been despatched from Madras, and also of reinforcements from Bombay. Clive of agreeing to a neutrality, or of immediately attacking Chandernagore. adoption of the latter branch of the alternative, but it was not determined on without considerable hesitation. The members of the select committee were, Colonel Clive, Mr. Drake, Major Kilpatrick, and Mr. Becher. The two latter were for maintaining neutrality; Clive was for attack; Mr. Drake seems scarce to have been more master of himself than at the moment of his discreditable flight from Calcutta. "He gave an opinion," says Clive, "that nobody could make anything of." Subsequently Major Kilpatrick asked Clive whether he thought the land and sea forces of the British could oppose Chandernagore and the Soubahdar's army at the same time; and, adopt that of Clive. The conversion of Major Kilpatrick was followed up by voting the un-intelligible "opinion of Mr. Drake to be no opinion at all:" and thus a majority in favour of war was secured. The immediate result was the dismissal of the French deputies, although it is said that the treaty of neutrality was even fairly copied, ready for the signature of those by whom its terms had been arranged. But a new difficulty occurred. Admiral Watson, though opposed to neutrality, was unwilling to attack the French without the permission of the Soubahdar. To obtain it, he had addressed to him a series of and, latterly, even of menace. In a letter bearing date the 7th of March, he says, "I now acquaint you that the remainder of the troops, which should have been here long ago, and which I hear the colonel expected, will sufficient to accomplish the success." A body in Bengal between the representatives of the days more I shall despatch a vessel for more with any man whatsoever."

The answer of the Soubahdar presents a perfect contrast to the direct and blunt style of Admiral Watson's communication. referring to the principal parts of the admiral's letter, he thus proceeds: "If it be true that one Frenchman does not approve and abide by a treaty entered into by another, no confidence is to be placed in them. The reason of my forbidding war in my country is, that I look on the French as my own subjects, because they have in this affair implored my protection; for which reason I wrote to you to make peace with them, or else I had neither pleaded for them nor protected them. received of the arrival of Admiral Pocock in you are generous and wise men, and well know the Cumberland, together with part of the troops if an enemy comes to you with a clean heart. to implore your mercy, his life should be granted him, that is if you think him pure of had constantly maintained the necessity either heart; but if you mistrust his sincerity, act according to the time and occasion." The additional communication was the result partly of the strength now obtained seemed to favour the Soubahdar's fears, and partly of a timely present administered to his secretary. The words "act according to time and occasion" were vague enough, but they were construed into a permission to attack the French; and though subsequent letters evinced a contrary disposition on the part of the Soubahdar, they were not allowed to alter the determination of the British authorities.

Chandernagore was accordingly attacked, The honour of the conquest is prinand fell. cipally due to the naval force, or rather to a portion of it. The Cumberland could not be brought up the river in time, and Admiral Pocock, unwilling to be disappointed of a share in the approaching attack, took to on receiving an answer in the affirmative, he his barge, the oars of which were plied night desired to withdraw his former opinion, and and day till he reached the place of action, where he hoisted his flag on board the Tiger. The Salisbury was by an accident thrown out of action, and the entire brunt of the engagement was sustained by the flag-ships of the two admirals, the Kent and the Tiger.

"Few naval engagements," says Sir John Malcolm, "have excited more admiration, and even at the present day, when the river is so much better known, the success with which the largest vessels of this fleet were navigated to Chandernagore, and laid alongside the batteries of that settlement, is a subject of wonder."

The fire of the ships, says Orme, "did as letters written in a style of bold expostulation, much execution in three hours as the batteries on shore would have done in several days, during which the whole of the nabob's army might have arrived, when the siege must have been raised; otherwise the troops alone were of the Soubahdar's troops was stationed within price, and almost all feared that its conse-the bounds of Chandernagore, previously to quences might some time be fatal to themthe attack. They belonged to the garrison of selves. Hooghly, and were under the command of desire of change were not confined to the range Nuncomar, governor of that place. Nuncomar of the court or the camp: they had extended had been bought by Omichund for the English, even to a class of persons of all mankind the and on their approach, the troops of Sooraj-oo-most cautious, and peculiarly liable to loss Dowlah were withdrawn from Chandernagore, from political disturbances. lest, as the commander alleged, the victorious standard of the Soubahdar should be involved in the disgrace about to overtake the French.

able to effect the re-establishment of the British interests in Bengal in time to return in April with his troops to Madras, at which place a visit from the French was apprehended; and compliance with this expectation was now enjoined by the government of Fort St. George. But the state of affairs in Bengal did not, in Clive's judgment, warrant so early a departure. It can scarcely be questioned that this view was a just one. Had Clive at this time returned to Madras, he would have left the possessions and commerce of his country in Bengal to the mercy of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah and the French commander Law.

Alarmed by the success of the English at Chandernagore, and by a report that the Affghans were in full march to Behar, the Sou-bahdar thought it necessary to assume an appearance of cordiality towards the victors. He addressed letters of congratulation to Clive and Watson, but at the same time made a most suspicious distribution of his military force and protected the French who had escaped from Chandernagore. These, by the Soubahdar's assistance, reached the French factory at Cossimbazar, where M. Law held the command. Clive demanded leave to attack them, but in place of granting it, the Soubahdar furnished them with money, arms, and ammunition, to enable them to escape, under a promise of being recalled at some future two thousand horse in the service of Sooraj-oo-

he manifested very different feelings. The passage of a few British sepoys to Cossimbazar interview solicited with Mr. Watts it was was obstructed by the Soubahdar's officers, thought dangerous to grant, but Omichund and the transit of ammunition and stores to was sent to ascertain the object of the applithe English factory there, forbidden. execution of the pecuniary provisions of the representing that the Soubahdar would soon treaty was reluctant, tardy, and imperfect, and after a time the Soubahdar's dewan endearoured to obtain an acquittance for the while of the stipulated sum, though a part only had been paid.

Such was the conduct of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah towards the English. In the mean time a spirit was at work among his own subjects and servants, which exposed his throne to danger to re imminent than any arising from causes with which he was acquainted.

Bowlah had not a single adherent on whom he soubabdar, in which enterprise he promised could rely. Many were disgusted by his ca-them the assistance of some of the most pow-

The feeling of discontent and the Among those who wished to see the throne of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah occupied by another, were the Seits, native bankers, of great influence and great It had been expected that Clive would be wealth. These portents had not been unobserved by Law, the French commander. He had warned the Soubahdar of the disaffection of many of his servants, had pointed out the consequences which would follow, and on taking leave of the prince previously to his departure from Cossimbazar, had emphatically declared his conviction that they would never meet again. Clive, too, had watched the indications of the gathering storm, and saw in its approach the dawn of British supremacy. When it was determined to attack Chandernagore, he had said that the English, having established themselves in Bengal not by consent but by force, the Soubahdar would endeavour by force to drive them out-that consequently they could not stop where they were, but must go further. The soundness of these views was confirmed by the subsequent conduct of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah. It was obvious that he was resolved to get rid of the English, . and that he was ready to use the arms of their European enemy to accomplish his purpose: the state of feeling among the Soubahdar's subjects consequently acquired an increasing interest, and the British agents were instructed to observe it with great care.

On the 23rd April, an officer named Yar Loottief Khan requested a secret conference with Mr. Watts, the British resident at the Soubahdar's court. This applicant commanded riod. He had for some time carried on a Dowlah. He was, at the same time, in the pondence with M. Bussy, urging him pay of the Seits, native bankers, already menepair to the relief of his countrymen in the tioned, whom he was engaged to defend against ulahdar's territories. Towards the English any danger, even though his arms should be required against the Soubahdar himself. The cation. To him Loottief opened his views, march to the northward to oppose the Affghans -that he intended to temporize with the English until his return, when he had determined to extirpate them, and never again to permit them to establish a settlement in his dominions-that most of his officers held him in utter detestation, and were ready to join the first leader of distinction who should raise the standard of revolt. Upon these alleged facts was formed a proposal that the English, during the absence of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, should In the entire circle of his officers, Sooraj-oo- seize Moorshedabad, and proclaim Loottief erful interests in the country, including that authenticate his mission, and suspicion arose of the Seits. Part of Loottief's statement was that the letter was an artifice of Sooraj-ooknown to be true, and the rest seemed not Dowlah to try the sincerity of the English. It improbable. Neither the disposition of Soorajco-Dowlah towards the English, nor that of to the Soubahdar; a step which, whether the his officers towards himself, could be doubted : document were genuine or not, would have the it might readily therefore be believed that the appearance of amicable feeling. Further to Soubahdar entertained the intention ascribed | lull the Soubahdar into security till the moto him, and that his chief officers would cooperate in a plan for his overthrow. Watts communicated the overture to Clive, who thereupon suspended the movement of a detachment which was about to be despatched in pursuit of M. Law and his men, the march of which would probably have precipitated the commencement of open hostilities with the Soubahdar.

On the day following the conference with Peishwa's letter. Loottief, the proposal made by that person that document, which proved to be genuine, was again made to Mr. Watts, with this differthe Soubahdar appeared greatly pleased, but ence, that instead of Loottief being raised to be still hesitated to withdraw his army, and the soubabdarship, that honour was claimed expressed some doubts of Clive's sincerity. for Meer Jaffier, a distinguished commander These doubts Mr. Scrafton exerted himself to in the service of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, and related remove, and not without effect. Orders were to him by marriage. The rank and power of issued for recalling the army to Moorshedahad. Meer Jaffier rendered this proposal more advantageous than that of Loottief, it indeed the copital, and there gave an audience to Mr. latter had been seriously intended; but the Watts, under circumstances of great mystery probability seems to be, that it was only de- and danger. A treaty was then produced, signed to sound the disposition of the English which Meer Jaffier swore on the Koran to obbefore implicating Meer Jaffier in the intrigue. Serve, and acied, in his own handwriting, the This revised plan was immediately made known words :- I swear by God and the Prophet of to Clive, and by him to the select committee, God, to rive by the terms of this treaty while who, thinking that a revolution in the govern- I have life. The treaty confirmed all the arment, into whatever hands it might fall, would ticker agreed upon in the treaty of peace with be advantageous to the English, unanimously Socri- Dowlah; declared the enemies of determined to entertain the proposal. The the English, whether Indian or European, the Soubahdar had been relieved from apprehen-exemise of the future soubahdar; transferred sion of an invasion from the northward by the to the English all the factories and effects of arrival of intelligence of the retreat of the French in Bengal, Behar, and Orisza, and Affghans from Delhi. His only remaining the first of the latter nation from again settling anxiety was occasioned by the English, and to in those countries. A crore of rupees (about keep them in check he resolved to reinforce at a million sterling) was to be given as companlarge division of his army which lay encomped, soiten to the English Company for the planter at Plassy, about thirty miles from Moorshei of Calcutta and the maintenance of their farmer, abad and ninety from Calcutta. The destined fifty lace to the English inhabitants of that reinforcement consisted of not less than filter they twenty lacs to the Hinder and hinder thousand men, and the general selected for its mean inhabitants, and seres is it is command was Meer Jaffier, the man who was making inhabitants: the distriction of plotting for the destruction of his soversime which sums was to be misely the Dental and his own elevation to the throne. His 22 and orities. Certain transcribed was given by British resident. Mr. Watts, who was an all the British, and the administration in straining to stranger, who seems to have been traile to were to be green to

was consequently determined to send the letter ment arrived for striking the meditated blow, Clive broke up the English camp, removing half the troops into Calcutta and the remainder into Chandernagore; and he availed himself of this movement to call upon Sooraj-oo-Dowlah to give similar evidence of pacific dispositions by withdrawing his army from Plassy. point was pressed by Mr. Scrafton, who was despatched to the Soubahdar's court with the With the transmission of pointment separated the chief conspirator in the British resident, Mr. Watts, who was an invitation on behalf of his great the command, lest suspicion should be excited the correspondence with the Principle, and to make the conduct the correspondence with the Principle, and to make the provinces. A sufficient serious as a received in Calcutta from the Principle, and with the principle, and the straight of the provinces. A sufficient serious and the straight of the provinces. A sufficient serious and the straight of the sufficient serious and the straight of the sufficient serious and the straight of the sufficient serious seriou rapidly tending to a crisis.

Sooraj-oo-Dowlah at Plassy, he had been on had by some means transpired, and had belad terms with that prince. The Soubahdar's come a subject of common talk. It was thus ill feeling revived with the recall of the army, and Meer Jaffier was deprived of his command. This step was not the result of any knowledge with a party of one hundred and fifty seamen or suspicion of the plot in which Meer Jaffier from the fleet, marched to join the remainder was engaged; it was merely one of those of the British force at Chandernagore. Here capricious acts of offence in which Sooraj-oc-Dowlah was accustomed to indulge. Subsequently some confused reports reached his cars of the existence of a conspiracy, of which Meer Jaffier was the head, and in which other of the Soubalidar's principal officers were con-For several days fierco messages were interchanged between the prince and the On the 11th June, letters received in the city from Calcutta announced that the English were confederated with Meer Juffler, but the Soubahdar appeared to disbelieve it. Two days afterwards, the sudden departure of Mr. Watts, the British resident, convinced him that the announcement was true. Πo was then proparing to attack the palace of Meer Jaffler with artillery, but panic-struck by the discovery of the extent of the confederacy organized against him, he abandoned hostilities, and invited his rebellious general to a conference. Influenced either by fear or contempt, Meer Juffler refused to attend the added, that the English had determined to summons of his sovereign; on learning which, proceed to the island of Cossimbazar, and the terror of the Soubahdar overcame his pride, and waiving at once his right to command the presence of his subjects, and the (who was also engaged in the conspiracy), the state in which he was accustomed to receive bankers (Seits), and other eminent persons: them, he sought at the palace of Meer Jaffier and if it were found that they had deviated the interview which was denied him at his from the treaty, they would give up all further er own, and proceeded thither with a retinue too claims; but if it appeared that it had been small to excite apprehension. The result of broken by Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, satisfaction would the meeting to the Soubahdar was perfectly ander it impossible to disbelieve them. too was supplied-both parties awore on the wait upon the Soubahdar immediately. Koran to adhere to their engagements; and the Souhahdar, relieved from a degree of alarm out interruption, and on the 17th of June took which had been felt as almost overwhelming, was now excited to the highest degree of confidence and exultation. He forthwith addressed a letter to Clive, couched in terms of indig- the dubious conduct of Meer Jaffier, whose nation and defiance, and in proud anticipation of a victory over his English enemy, ordered such ambiguous import, that it was not unhis whole army to assemble without delay at natural to infer either that his reconciliation their former encampments at Plassy. A portion with the Soubahdar was sincere, or that he of the force, upon which his hopes were rested, consisted of the troops of Meer Juffer, commanded by that officer in person. Such was some altereation with his troops respecting the reliance placed by Sooraj-oo-Dowlah upon whom he so lately suspected of treachery.

In Moorshedabad the state of affairs was were received in Calcutta on the 10th June. Before Meer No time was to be lost in commencing opera-Juffier was selected for the command of the tions, for before this period the secret of his troops designed to reinforce the army of intended movement against Socraj-co-Dowlah that it became known at Moorshedabad on the 11th. On the 12th, the troops at Calcutta, one hundred seamen were left in garrison, in order that every soldier might be at liberty for service in the field; and on the 18th the rest of the force proceeded on their march. It consisted of six hundred and fifty European infantry, one hundred and fifty artillorymen including fifty seamen, two thousand one hundred sopoys, and a small number of Portuguese, making a total of something more than three thousand men. It was accompanied by eight field-pieces and one or two howitzers. On the day of its leaving Chandernagore, Clive despatched a letter to the Soubahdar, reproaching him with his evasions of the treaty, and other instances of perfidy; his correspondence with Bussy; his protection of Law and his troops; and his insolence towards various servants of the British Government. In contrast, Clive dwelt upon the patience shown by the English, and their readiness to assist him against the apprehended invasion of the Affghans. It was refer their disputes to the arbitration of Meer Jaffier, Roydooloob, the Soubahdar's dewan be demanded for the losses sustained by the tisfactory; professions of reconciliation, and English, and for all the charges of their army ises of fidelity, were exchanged with an and navy. Olive concluded by announcing, carance of sincerity, which seemed to want that as the rainy season was near at hand, hing but the solemn sanction of religion to and many days must clapso before an answer This could reach him, he had found it necessary to

The British force continued its march withpossession of the town and fort of Kutwah, where they found an immense store of rice. Clive, however, was kept in great anxiety by communications were few, and generally of wanted resolution to aid the accomplishment of his own design. Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, after arrears of pay, had succeeded in assembling at the effect of his recent conference with one and near Plassy his whole force, amounting to fifty thousand men, of whom fifteen thousand In the mean time the linglish had not been were cavalry, with upwards of forty pieces of ... The treaties signed by Meer Juffer cannon. The Hooghly flowed between the two armics, and to cross it was to provoke an | were placed portions of the artillery. engagement. hesitated to take a step which, if it should fail, would be fatal to the British power in Had a defeat ensued, said Clive, Bengal. " not one man would have returned to tell it. In this state of mind he had recourse to an expedient little in accordance with the bold and independent character of his mind. He called a council of war, at which he proposed the question, whether, in the existing situation of the British force, it would, without assistance, be prudent to attack the Soubabdar. Orme remarks, that "it is very rare that a council of war decides for battle; for as the commander never consults his officers in this authentic form, but when great difficulties are to be surmounted, the general communication increases the sense of risk and danger which every one brings with him to the consultation." In this particular case the natural leaning to the side of caution was perhaps strengthened by the unusual order in which the opinions of the members of council were taken. Instead of beginning with that of the youngest officer, and proceeding according to the gradation of rank to him who held the chief command, Clive first declared his own opinion, which was against hazarding an action. The inwas against hazarding an action. fluence of his rank, and the deference paid to his military talents, must be presumed to have had some effect upon the judgment of those who were to follow, more especially when the opinion of one of the most daring of men was given against the course to which his natural temperament would incline him. The result was, that of twenty officers who attended the council, thirteen were favourable to delay. Among those whose voices were given for immediate action was Major Coote, afterwards distinguished in Indian warfare as Sir Eyre

But the decision of the council was overruled by the man whose influence had in all probability mainly contributed to produce it. Sixteen years afterward Clive observed, that this was the only council of war that he had ever held, and that if he had abided by that council, it would have been the ruin of the East-India Company. On the 22nd of June, mango-trees.

At daybreak the army of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah of troops were seen advancing, with guns of hundred men. the largest calibre drawn by vast trains of killed and wounded was about seventy. oxen, while a number of elephants, gorgeously clothed in scarlet cloth and embroidery, added ade during the day, and to attack the camp greatly to the magnificence of the spectacle, if they contributed little to the strength of lowed as it was by the happy movement of the army which they adorned. The cavalry Major Kilpatrick, placed victory in his hands

They Uncertain of the support of marched as if intending to surround the Eng-Meer Justier, and doubtful of the success of lish force as far as the river would permit: an attack unaided by his co-operation, Clive but, as soon as their rear was clear of the camp they halted, and a party of forty or fifty Frenchmen advanced with some guns, their officer, named Sinfray, calling upon some of the Soubahdar's troops to follow him. But his invitation was disregarded; "for such," says Scrafton, "was their mistrust of each other, that no commander dared to venture on singly, for fear some other commander, suspected of attachment to us, should fall on him." A general cannonading, however, commenced from the Soubahdar's artil-This was felt severely by the English, who had quitted the grove where they were sheltered by a bank, in front of which they were now drawn up. Clive accordingly returned with his troops, and they once more took up their position behind the bank. enemy thereupon advanced their heavy artillery nearer, and fired with greater rapidity than before; but they produced little effect, the English troops escaping the shots by sitting down under cover of the bank. noon, a heavy shower so much damaged the enemy's powder that their fire became feeble; but the English, who had throughout the day answered the enemy's guns with their fieldpieces, continued firing without interruption and with considerable effect. Another disaster befell the Soubabdar's cause in the loss of Moodeen Khan, one of the most able and faithful of his generals, who fell mortally wounded by a cannon-ball. Shortly afterwards the enemy ceased firing, the oxen were yoked to the artillery, and the whole army turned and proceeded slowly towards their The Frenchmen, who seem to have behaved with much gallantry, still kept their post, till a party of the British force under Major Kilpatrick moved forward to attack them; when Sinfray, seeing himself unsup-ported, retired, but carried off his guns. The detachment which had dislodged the French party was soon joined by the remainder of the British force, and all the field-pieces having been brought up, a vigorous cannonade was commenced on the enemy's camp. Symptoms of confusion after a time encouraged Clive to attack at once an angle of the camp, and an the British force crossed the river. An hour eminence near it. Both were carried. A after midnight they arrived at Plassy, and general rout ensued, and the camp, baggage, took up their position there in a grove of and artillery of the enemy became prize to their conquerors. The enemy were pursued for about six miles, and it is supposed lost in was discovered in motion. Countless bedies the action and during the pursuit five or six The loss of the English in

Clive had intended to maintain the cannonat midnight. The retreat of the enemy, foland infantry were disposed in columns of four at an earlier period. "Sooraj-oo-Dowlah," or five thousand each, and between them Clive observed, "had no contact in his "Sooraj-oo-Dowlah," army, nor his army any confidence in him, he should remain thus long in suspense. Imand therefore they did not do their duty on mediately after his interview with the Soulabthe occasion," He might have added, that dar, when the pathetic appeal of the prince one half of those who held commands in his had drawn from the general renewed expresarmy had no intention or desire to do their sions of duty and attachment. Meer Jaffier army had no intention or desire to do their soons of dity and attachment, Meer Jahier duty. When Moodeen Khan was killed, the had addressed a letter to Cliva acquainting unhappy sovereign sent for Meer Jahier, him with the advice which he had just given Casting his turban at the feet of his servant, his master. That advice, it will be recohe implored him in piteous and almost abject lected, was to discontinue the battle for the terms to forget the differences which had extend to renew it on the following; and to isted between them, and conjured him, by the recure its adoption Meer Jahier had underrespect due to their departed relative Aliverdi taken to guard against the chance of a sur-Khan, to defend the throne of his successor, prise in the night. To Clive, this single-Meer Jaffier promised all that the Soutchdar minded man recommended immediately to could wish, and, as the best advice that a push forward, or at all events not to delay an devoted friend could offer, suggested, in con-attack beyond three o'clock on the following sideration of the advance of the day and the morning. But the messenger to whom the fatigue of the troops, that the conflict should letter was intrusted was afraid of the firing; be suspended till the following morning. The it was consequently not delivered till the Soubahdar objected that the English might course of the British commander had been attack him in the night, but Meer Jaffier in a great measure determined, and it only assured him that he would guard against this served to give further assurance of its expensions. Orders were accordingly de diency. contingency. spatched to the dewan, Mohun Lal, to recall the troops to the camp. The dewan remon- conduct throughout had been open to susstrated; but Meer Juffier insisted, and his picion. counsel prevailed. The work thus com- with both parties, so that, whatever the menced by one of the conspirators was completed by another. On the approach of the felt some doubts whether his treason in the English, Roy looloob advised the Soubahdar to council would be regarded by the English as retire to Moorshedabad, and the recommend-compensating for his neutrality in the field. ation was too well supported by the fears of In the interview with the English officers him to whom it was addressed to be disregarded. Sooraj-oo-Dowlah fled with the utmost rapidity, and was one of the first to bear to his capital the news of his own disgrace. The disappearance of the Soubahdar rendered hopeless any attempt to rally his troops, and nothing was left for the English to perform but to take possession of the camp and pursue the fugitives.

During the greater part of the day, Clive had remained uncertain of the intentions of · Meer Jaffier; it is probable, indeed, that eer Jaffier himself shared the uncertainty, and all that he had determined was to shape dependents of the government. course according to circumstances—to were consequently regarded with suspicion, not be employed in support of the Soubahdar, detachment under M. Law.

Meer Jaffier was not unconscious that his He had endeavoured to stand well which followed the flight of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, he evinced more apprehension than joy; the military honours with which he was received at the English camp, alarmed instead of gratifying him, and he started back "as if," says Scrafton, "it was all over with him." On being introduced to Clive, his fears were allayed by the apparent cordiality with which the colonel saluted him as Soubahdar of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa. A few days afterwards he was led by Clive to the musnud, in the hall of audience, at Moorshedabad, and received the formal homage of the principal officers and

Sooraj-oo-Dowlah was now a wanderer ceh the turn of events, and join the party through the country which lately owned no whom victory declared. Late in the day, law but his will. On arriving at his palace, a large body of troops was observed on the after his flight from Plassy, he found himself flank of the English, whose object it was not in danger of being abandoned by every adheensy to ascertain. This was the division of rent. To secure the continued fidelity of his Meer Jaffier; but, in consequence of the mis- | soldiers, he made a large distribution of money carriage of a message despatched by him to among them. They readily accepted his the English commander, no signs of recog-bounty, but deserted with it to their own homes. nition had been agreed upon. These troops His nearest relatives refused to engage in his support, or even to encounter the danger of and the English kept them at a distance with accompanying him in the further flight which their field-pieces. When, however, the general was now inevitable. That flight was acceleretreat took place, they kept apart from the rated by the arrival of Meer Jaffier; and, rest of the Soubahdar's army. Clive then be taking advantage of the night, Sooraj-oocame satisfied, not only that they were the Dowlah, with a very slender retinue, departed, troops of Meer Jaffier, but that they would in the hope of being able to join the French In search of and he was thereby encouraged to the attack shelter and food, he entered the dwelling of a upon the enemy's camp, which secured the devotee, who in the day of his power had been victory. Meer Jaffier had not intended that one of the sufferers from his cruelty. The taken back to Moorshedabad, and, it is said, was treated on the way with great indignity his son, a youth whose character strongly resembled that of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, cherished no such weakness. By Meerun the unhappy captive was devoted to death; but, either from the prevalence of respect for the rank of the destined victim, or from a belief that Meer Jaffier would not sanction the deed, some difficulty was experienced in finding an executioner. At length the task was undertaken the bounty, first of Aliverdi Khan, and subwhich had been heaped on him formed no imtwentieth year of a profligate and scandalous cruel reign.

Little now remained but the performance of the pecuniary stipulations agreed upon between the British government and Meer The wealth of the Soubahdar's treayet able to bear very heavy drafts. After some discussion it was decided that one-half to have been the cause of great delight. The offers, I might have been in possession of milwhich being placed in one hundred boats, the not have dispossessed me of." And he declared whole proceeded down the river in procession, Those who had sustained losses at the his own moderation. capture of Calcutta were to have compensation; and the army and navy had been en-either of his country or of the East-India couraged to look for reward. There was also Company to his own is certain; the temptaanother class of persons who were expecting tions to which he and his coadjutors were exto participate in the wealth which thus fol- posed, and the fact that the receiving of prelowed in the train of victory. negotiation with Meer Jaffier was in progress, by the covenants of the Company's servants, person of the applicant was known and the Mr. Becher, a member of the select cominjury was remembered, but the hospitality mittee, suggested that, as the army and navy implored was not withheld. The host received were to have donations, the committee, by his visitors with courtesy, and placed before whom the whole machinery had been put in them refreshment, availing himself of the time motion, were entitled "to be considered," occupied in partaking of it to despatch private and they were considered. Clive received on information of the arrival of his distinguished this account two lacs and eighty thousand guest to Meer Cossim, a relative of Meer rupees; Mr. Drake, the governor, the same Jaffier, who held a command in the neighbour- sum; and the remaining members of the comhood. The intelligence was too welcome to mittee, two lacs and forty thousand rupees be neglected; and Meer Cossim, proceeding each. The generosity of the new Soubaldar to the cell of the hermit, made prisoners of even extended to those members of council his visitors, and took possession of their who were not of the select committee, and The deposed prince was forthwith who consequently had no claim "to be considered" under the original proposal. Each of these gentlemen, it is stated, received a lac of and cruelty. Meer Jaffier felt or affected rupees. Clive, according to his own state-some compassion for the prisoner. Meerun, ment, received a further present of sixteen ment, received a further present of sixteen lacs of rupees. Mr. Watts, in addition to his share as one of the committee, obtained eight lacs; Major Kilpatrick, three lacs, besides his share; Mr. Walsh, who was employed in part of the negotiations, had five lacs; Mr. Scrafton, two. Others participated to a smaller extent in the profuse distribution that took Such transactions are perfectly in place. accordance with the spirit and practice of by a miscreant who had from infancy enjoyed Oriental governments; but they are not reconcilable with European ideas. Many years sequently of his grandson and successor, now afterwards, when the conduct of Clive was, on a prisoner and destined for death. The favours this account, impugned, he defended himself with some talent and some plausibility. pediment to his undertaking the murder of maintained his right to avail himself of the the man to whom and to whose family the munificence of Meer Jaffier, on the grounds assassin was so deeply indebted. Many there that he committed no injustice, and caused no were from whom Sooraj-oo-Dowlah could look injury to his employers; that his forbearance for nothing but vengeance; his death came would not have benefited them; that he had from one of the few on whom he had a claim abandoned all commercial advantages to defor gratitude. He had not completed the vote himself to a military life; and that all his actions had been governed by a regard to life, nor the fifteenth month of a weak and the honour of his country and the interests of the East-India Company. He even claimed credit for his moderation. "The city of Moorshedabad," said he, "is as extensive, populous, and rich, as the city of London, with this difference, that there are individuals sury had been greatly overrated, but it was in the first possessing infinitely greater property than in the last city. These, as well as every other man of property, made me the of the stipulated amount should be paid im-mediately, and the remainder at intervals on such occasions, and what they expected within three years. The first payment seems would be required), and had I accepted these money was packed in seven hundred chests, lions, which the present Court of Directors could that when he recollected entering the treawith banners waving above, and music pealing sury at Moorshedabad, "with heaps of gold around them. Many indeed had reason to and silver to the right and left, and these rejoice in the advance of the richly-freighted crowned with jewels," he stood astonished at

That Clive never sacrificed the interests either of his country or of the East-India When the sents was then forbidden neither by law nor must also be allowed their due weight. Nei-|the success of the conspiracy, disappoint all ther must it be forgotten, that the fixed emo-the hopes founded on it, and possibly involve luments of the Company's servants were at the British interests in destruction. Desire that time altogether inadequate to remunerate and circumstance thus combining to remove the duties which were required. In some in- all restraint upon the extent of his demand, stances they were not sufficient to provide the omichund required five per cent. on all the means of decent subsistence. The result was, money in the Soubahdar's treasury, and a porthat no one ever thought of being satisfied tion of his jewels. This Mr. Watts did not with his pay or salary, and that all were intent feel justified in promising; but in the articles upon discovering indirect means of acquiring of treaty, fowarded by him to the committee, wealth. Still, all these circumstances tend was one securing to Omichund thirty lacs of only to palliate, not to justify, the conduct of rupees. Clive and his colleagues.

ject of parliamentary inquiry, there was an-other point on which the conduct of Clive and secret, and it is said that he threatened to his colleagues was severely arraigned. wealthy native, named Omichund, has been emergency, Clive suggested the means of at already mentioned as an assiduous attendant once disarming his threatened hostility and at the court of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, where his sparing the Soubahdar's treasury. Omi-influence with the Soubahdar, as well as the chund's interests were to be protected by a information which he had the opportunity of special clause in the treaty. acquiring, had enabled him to render many were drawn up: one, written on white paper, services to the cause of the English: these contained no reference to Omichund; another, were highly estimated by the British resident, written upon red paper, contained all the stiwhose confidence Omichund appears, at one pulations of the white treaty, and, in addition, period, entirely to have possessed. He was an article in favour of Omichund, to deceive aware of the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the Norman Location of the white treaty, and, in addition, and article in favour of Omichund, to deceive aware of the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the Norman Location of the white treaty, and, in addition, and article in favour of Omichund, to deceive aware of the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by the overture made to the English by whom was the only purpose for which it extends the overture made to the English by disliked by Meer Jaffier, or, as it was sur-mised, by the Seits, who dreaded his influence, both the treaties; but Admiral Watson re-he was not at first intrusted with the secret fused his signature to the mock document, of the conspiracy which ended in the depo-sition and death of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah. It was would excite the suspicion of so wary a man difficult, however, long to evade the pene-tration of Omichund, and impossible to pre-pedient ready. It was to attach the admi-ral's name by another hand. The two treatherefore, appears to have thought it the ties were accordingly rendered complete, and most expedient plan to apprize him of the the red one answered its purpose. Omichund confederacy of the English with Meer Jaffier, kept the secret of the conspirators, Soorajand to secure his co-operation. His friendship oo-Dowlah was dethroned, and Meer Jaffier might be useful; his enmity would certainly elevated to his place. be dangerous.

uropean associates had similar views. was not, therefore, to be expected that he and he flattered himself that, by one master should neglect to stipulate for some advantage stroke, he had added to his former accumuto himself. with truth, that, connecting himself with the tune. He had not been without fear that designs of the conspirators, he incurred risk some deception might be practised upon him; both to his person and his fortune—the latter, but he had ascertained that his claim was revery probably, was in his estimation the more cognized in a treaty signed by all the Eng-dreadful—and he urged, therefore, that he lish authorities, and that the good faith of ought to have a sufficient interest in the suc-cess of the plan to counterbalance the hazard pledged to its discharge. He could not have of its failure.

Had Omichund demanded any compensaframed on the suggestions of that master pas-sion to which he was a slave, and with refer-ence to the relative situation of the English and himself. He knew that they were in his was about to receive that for which he had power—that a word from him might frustrate bargained, he attended a meeting of the prin-

The committee were astonished at the vast-When these transactions became the sub- ness of the sum, but dreaded the consequences A do so if his claim were rejected. In this Two treaties

The sequel of the tale is melancholy. Omi-Omichund knew well that none of the chund embodied the very soul of covetoustive agents in the proposed change would ness. In him, avarice had attained that stage in the attempt without the prospect when it becomes a disease rather than a pasgain, and he probably inferred that their sion of the mind. He had passed a long life It in unceasing labours to increase his wealth; He represented, and certainly lations a sum which was in itself a regal forbeen without anxiety as to the success of the attempt in which he had so large a stake; but tion of moderate amount, it would perhaps the arms of the English were victorious, and have been bestowed. But his claim was the sovereign of their choice occupied the

for the purpose of considering the state of the Soubahdar's treasury, and the mode of carrying out the pecuniary provisions of the "Yes, but this is a white one;" and turning only to linger out the remnant of his life in to Scrafton, who spoke the native language a state of idiotey. more perfectly than himself, he said, "It is !

cipal parties concerned in the revolution, held I now time to undeceive Omichund." The process of undeceiving the miserable man was short and simple. In compliance with the suggestion of Olive, Scrafton said, "Omi-That document was produced and chund, the red treaty is a trick, you are to read. Omichund became agitated, and said, have nothing;" and he needed not to say "This cannot be the treaty; it was a red more. The senses of Omichund had fled; he treaty that I saw." Clive coolly replied, fell back in a swoon, from which he recovered Clive coolly replied, fell back in a swoon, from which he recovered

CHAPTER V.

AFFAIRS OF THE CARNATIC, -NAVAL ENGAGEMENTS .- UNSUCCESSFUL SIEGE OF MADRAS BY COUNT DE LALLY .- VICTORIES OF COLONEL FORDE AND COLONEL COOTE .- SURRENDER OF PONDICHERRY .-- ANNIHILATION OF FRENCH POWER IN INDIA.

THE despatch to Bengal of a force, large with consisted of one hundred and fifty European reference to the means of the British Government, had left the authorities at Madras without the means of displaying much vigour in furnished by Tondiman, a native chief, and the The nabob, Mahomet Ali, the Carnatic. continued to be embarrassed by the impossibility of collecting his revenues; and, to add to his difficulties, two of his brothers availed themselves of his weakness to raise the standard of rebellion. Colonel Fords with a small force proceeded to Nellore, to aid the nabol's army in reducing one of them to obedience, but returned without success.

To counteract the designs of the other, Captain Calliaud, who then commanded at Trichinopoly, was ordered to march to Tinne-After some delay, occasioned chiefly by want of money, he marched to reduce the fort of Madura. An attempt to take the place by surprise failed; and Captain Calliaud was preparing to repeat his attack in the hope of being assisted from within, when he was recalled to Trichinopoly by intelligence that the French were in sight of that place. not receive the news till three o'clock on the 21st of May. At six he was on his march. It was commenced without tents, baggage, or artillery. The men bore their own food; a few bullocks were taken to carry ammunition, and persons attached to the commissariat were sent forward to make the necessary arrangements for refreshment at the different places of halt.

The force which menaced Trichinopoly was under the command of M. d'Autueil. Great exertions had been made to collect it. French garrisons were drained of their effective men, and the duties left to be performed by invalids, assisted at Pondicherry by the European inhabitants. The entire force thus set at liberty for an attack on Trichinopoly amounted to one thousand Europeans, infantry and artillery, one hundred and fifty European cavalry, and three thousand sepoys, supported by several field-pieces.

infantry, fifteen artillery-men, and seven hundred sepoys. There were also six hundred men king of Tanjore, and about four hundred belonging to Mahomet Ali. These added considerably to the number, but little to the strength of the garrison. The greater part of these auxiliaries are represented by Orme as being "only fit for night-watches; nor," he adds, "for that, without being watched themselves." There was within Trichinopoly another body of men, whose absence was, under the circumstances, much to be desired. These the circumstances, much to be desired. These were five hundred French prisoners. It was known that they maintained a correspondence with their countrymen without; and the expectation of their being able to emancipate themselves from restraint during the attack and aid its objects, was believed to have encouraged the present attempt against the city.

On the 15th of May the enemy began to throw shells into the town. The bombardment was continued through four successive days, when M. d'Auteuil made a formal demand of surrender. Captain Smith, who held the chief command in the absence of Captain Calliaud, answered by an avowal of his determination to maintain the town. It was believed that this would be followed by an attempt to carry the place by assault on the succeeding night, and some indications of such an intention were made. The arrival of Captain Calliaud and his troops was consequently looked for with great anxiety, and at six o'clock in the evening of the 25th they were only twelve miles distant from Trichinopoly. march had thus far been performed in safety; but a greater difficulty remained. The troops of the enemy had been so disposed as to command every line by which, in ordinary circumstances, the city could be approached from the direction of Captain Calliaud's advance, and it was discovered that some spies had mixed with the English troops, for the purpose of ascer-The force of the English in Trichinopoly | taining the precise route which would be taken.

French fleet,

Positicherry, Madura surrendered to the English. Captain Calliand being satisfied that, for lish, and with the exception of one, which was a time at least. Trichinopoly was increasely, had returned to Madura in July. Some attempts had been made to reduce the place during his absence, but they failed, and those during his absence, but they failed, and those subsequently made were attended with no dilapidated state of one of the English ships, latter success. It yielded at last to the potent influence of more y. About two-thirds of the mander, M. d'Aché, who contrary to the amount was destined for the liquidation of wishes of Lally, was above all things anxious the arrange of now due to the trops who had to avoid an engagement. His reluctance to the arrests of pay due to the troops who had to avoid an engagement. His reluctance to defended the place, the remainder for presents light received some countenance from the to the commander and principal officers.

of Chittapet, a place of some strength. It was objection, Lally offered reinforcements to sup-gallantly defended by the killadar in command, ply the place of the sick, and M. d'Aché was gainstity defended by the fillindar in command, ply the place of the rick, and al. d'Ache was and might probably have been saved had the Last compelled to proceed to sea; but, English Government afforded any assistance; instead of hearing down on the English squad-but Mahomet Ali had conceived a dislike to ron, which was unable to work up to him, the killadar, and his representations were kept the wind, plying for Fort St. ruffered to influence the conduct of the English. Trinomaly, and some other forts of in-working into the roads, and this probably ferior importance, were soon afterwards added influenced the determination of those who the consisting of the French who last no disfurenced the Kenlish sattlement. On the to the acquisitions of the French, who lost no defended the English settlement. On the time in taking advantage of their successes by land side, it was attacked by two thousand five making arrangements for recurring the revel hundred Europeans, and about the same numnues of the districts which fell into their ber of repoys. The garrison consisted of passed in comparative inactivity; but on the whom were seamen. A vigorous bombard-25th of April a French squadron of twelve sail ment had for some time been carried on, and was descried standing in for the read of Fort though the enemy had made no breach, they St. David. Part of these ships had sailed had dismounted some of the guns, disabled from France in the preceding year, having on the carriages, and inflicted serious injury on from France in the preceding year, having on the carriages, and immerca serious injury on board a military force commanded by the parts of the works. The tanks and reservoirs Count de Lally, who had been appointed a suffered, and water could only be procured governor-general of all the French possessions and establishments in India. After encountering much bad weather and suffering severely wasted. "The fort continued," says Orme, wasted. "The fort continued," says Orme, ing much bad weather and suffering severely wasted.

from contagious disease, the expedition arrived "to lay from contagious disease, the expedition arrived "to lavish away their fire night and day on at the Isle of France, where it was strengthereverything they saw, heard, or suspected." ened by the addition of some of the ships In addition to these circumstances, the native which the fears of M. Bouvet had, a few troops deserted in great numbers, and part of months before, so precipitately withdrawn the Europeans are represented to have been from Pondicherry.

excled. Among other matters referred to in! Lally lost no time in proclaiming his authothat letter, was the probability of the arrival frity and establishing means for effecting the by the middle of September of Admiral Wat-foljeers of the expedition. He proceeded with ren, with the ships under his command, from two of the ships to Pondicherry, and one pur-Bengal; and from the junction of these with the equation from Engal; and from the junction of these with the equation from England great results were anticipated. This intelligence so much distributed. This intelligence so much distributed. This intelligence so much distributed. They were to have been joined by to wait the chance of encountering a force superior to his own. He declared that he had done enough in landing the troops, and should equatron, which had discovered and bore down instructional bases, that he refused to discubarily had departed to Pondicherry. The English the attillers and heavy ammunition on account squadron was composed of the ships from the artillery and heavy ammunition, on account squadron was composed of the ships from of the time required to land them, and to take Bengal which had returned in February under in ballast to supply their place. The capture Admiral Pocock, and some others which had of the moreonger of the Council of Fort St. arrived under the command of Admiral Stevens. David and the discovery of his letter were An action ensued, in which the French suffered thus the means of relieving the English from severely in loss of men, and the English in the aunovance which was expected from the damage to their ships, but neither party could claim a victory. The French ships, from On the day on which Soupires landed at having sustained less injury in their masts Positicherry, Madura surrendered to the Eng-land rigging, were enabled to outsail the Eng-

fact of a large number of his men being dis-In October, the French obtained possession labled by sickness. To remove this ground of sixteen hundred untiver and upwards of six The carlier months of the year 1758 were hundred Europeans, two hundred and fifty of drunken, disorderly, and disobedient. On the suade him from such a proceeding; but the four thousand native troops. To defend the endeavours of the count were ineffectual to place the English had nearly one thousand induce D'Aché either to hazard another en-leight hundred European troops, two thousand gagement, or to abandon his intention of re- two hundred sepoys, and about two hundred turning to the islands. arrived shortly afterwards, was not more fortunate; D'Aché persisted, and his determination was, it is said, supported by the unanimous opinion of his captains. With some difficulty he consented to leave behind him five hundred seamen and marines, to serve on shore; and on the 3rd September he sailed with all his ships for the island of Mauritius.

我们的这一个,这个这一样是

Lally was greatly mortified by the ill success of his campaign against Tanjore. To alleviate the disgrace of its failure, and to supply his pecuniary wants, he now projected an expedition to Arcot. In this he was somewhat more fortunate; and after the capture of some places of minor importance, he made a triumphal entry into the city of Arcot, which had yielded not to the force of his arms, but to the effect of large promises made to the officer in

But, though the vanity of Lally was gra-tified, his pecuniary resources were not improved by his success. His conquests did not reimburse the expense of making them, and the treasury of Pondicherry remained in an exhausted state. Lally, too, had made a false step in neglecting to secure the fort of Chingleput, which commanded the country from which, in the event of a siege, Madras must mainly depend for supplies. This place was garrisoned only by a few retainers of one of the nabob's dependants by whom the district was rented, and if attacked must have fallen an easy prize. The anxiety of the council at Madras for the safety of their principal settlement had led them to concentrate there nearly all the force at their disposal: in consequence, several posts had been abandoned to the enemy. the importance of Chingleput, and they took the first opportunity afforded by the arrival of reinforcements from England to place it in a respectable state of defence. The march of the party of sepoys first despatched thither stopped the advance of a French detachment who were in motion to attack the place.

The pressing wants of the French government were at length relieved by a small supply Part of it was obtained from the Brahmins in charge of the pagoda at Tripetty, part was received from the island of Mauritius, and part Lally is said to have contributed from his own resources. This enabled him to put in motion his entire force for the reduction of It now became a question whether or not the seat of the British presidency should be attacked without previously reducing Chingleput. Lally, with characteristic rashness and impatience, determined to push onward, leaving Chingleput in his rear; and by the middle of December the French army were no dependence could be rested. The enemy soon gained possession of the Black Town, in the plunder of which a quantity of arrack having been found, the consequences were ere long manifested. The English being apprized of what had taken place, made a sally under Colonel Draper; and such was the state of the French army, that the approach of the English was first made known to them by the beating of their drums in the streets of the town. The fire of the English musketry, aided by that of two field-pieces, was very destructive, and a French regiment, which had been drawn up to oppose them, soon fell into confusion and fled. moment Colonel Draper called upon his men to cease firing, and follow him to take possession of four of the enemy's guns, to which he ran up, and discharged a pistol at the head of an officer who remained by them, but without effect. A pistol-shot being returned by the French officer with no better success, he was on the point of surrendering the guns, when Colonel Draper perceived that no more than four of his men had followed him. The French now gaining confidence from the hesitation of their opponents, returned in considerable numbers; and of the four gallant men who accompanied their commander, two were killed, the other two being severely wounded. The fight was, however, protracted for some time; but finally the English retreated with a considerable loss of men as well as that of their two field-pieces. Among those mortally wounded was Major Porlier, the unfortunate officer who commanded at Fort St. David when that place surrendered to the French. Having been The council, however, were duly sensible of blamed, and not without apparent reason, for his conduct on that occasion, he seems to have been anxious to lose no opportunity of showing that he was not deficient in personal courage. Under the influence of this feeling, he had requested permission to accompany Colonel Draper's party as a volunteer, and while thus engaged received a wound of which he soon afterwards died. The loss of the French was not less severe than that of the English; several of their officers were killed, and the Count d'Estaigne was made prisoner.

Lally himself, who of the nabob's cavalry, upon whom, however,

Though miserably deficient in nearly all the means of conducting a siege with a probability of success, Lally erected batteries, and on the 2nd of January commenced firing. The defence under the governor, Mr. Pigot, was conducted with considerable skill, and in an admirable spirit. Some sallies were made by the besieged, which, however, usually ended in discomfiture; but the communications of the enemy with Pondicherry and the country whence he drew his supplies were greatly imin sight of Madras. Their force consisted of peded by the operations of a body of sepoys two thousand seven hundred European and under a native commander, named Mahommed

Isoof, aided by a detachment from Chingleput member of the council of Madras who had under Captain Preston, some native horse accompanied Mahomet Ali, was the bearer of commanded by a brother of Mahomet Ali, a considerable sum destined to defray the exand some Tanjorine cavalry. An addition to penses of the garrison of Trichinopoly. The this force being desired, Major Calliaud had urgent want of means to enable Major Calliaud been especially deputed to Tanjore to endeavour to obtain it; but the sovereign was be a sufficient reason for diverting this sum persuaded that the fortune of England was on from its original purpose. The pretext for dethe decline, and so little value did he now lay was thus removed, but no horse were furattach to its friendship, that its representative inished. The money, however, which had been was not even received with ordinary courtesy. Obtained was not without effect, for its repuWith some difficulty, however, Major Calliaud tation induced the king to adopt a more prevailed on him to promise a further supply friendly bearing towards Mahomet Ali, to of cavalry, if their arrears of pay were discharged—a promise given in the belief that ceremonies. To give dignity to the nabob's the condition could not be fulfilled. Major entrance into Trichinopoly, Major Calliaud put Calliaud applied to the Tanjore agents of the house of Buckanjee, the principal bankers in conduct him thither. On quitting that place the Carnalic, but they peremutorily refused to a few days afterwards, he gave utterware to the Carnatic, but they peremptorily refused to a few days afterwards, he gave utterance to part with any money in exchange for bills on expressions of strong indignation against the become somewhat more explicit, and he pro- be conveyed to him. Major Calliaud was not mised that the horse should be ready in four deceived in the expectation that his wrath days if the money were paid. Major Calliaud would be reported to the king, nor altogether now applied to the Dutch government of Ne- in the hope that some effect might be progapatam, who professed to be willing to grant duced by it. The king was alarmed, and a loan; but the terms would have entailed on despatched the promised reinforcement, which, the English a loss of twenty-five per cent., however, proceeded slowly, in consequence of and the offer was declined. The British ne frequent disputes as to the advances to be gotiator then turned to Trichinopoly, where made to the men, which Major Calliaud was the house of Buckanjee had also an agent. fain to settle as best he might. A far more Here his prospects appeared to brighten, and valuable description of force which accomhe obtained the promise of a supply; but again panied Major Callinud to the relief of Madras was he doomed to disappointment. Mahomet was a body of sepoys from Trichinopoly. With Ali was at Madras when the French appeared these he arrived at Chingleput on the 7th of before it, but a besieged town not appearing February, having been absent on his mission to him the most agreeable place of residence, to Tanjore from the 1st of December. His he was desirous of quitting it. The English troops requiring rest, he left them there, allowauthorities had not the slightest desire to ing himself no repose, but proceeding on the counteract his wishes in this respect, and he evening of his arrival at Chingleput to the accordingly departed with his family by sea | Mount of St. Thome, where he took the comfor Negapatam. On the passage, his wife mand of the force without the walls engaged gave birth to a child. Arriving at Negatapam, in harassing the besiegers, and interrupting the nabob, through his agent at Tanjore, in their supplies. formed the king that he intended to pass the situation of his wife peculiarly demanded presence. On the morning of the 9th of Febstances under which Mahomet Ali had departed from Madras, combined with the view horse, with one hundred and three Euroof them taken at Tanjore, had alarmed the banker's agent at Trichinopoly, who now retracted his promise of assistance, and refused to furnish money upon any terms. The diffitown with treasure. Major Calliaud made culty was at last obviated. Mr. Norris, a

This refusal encouraged the king to King of Tanjore, in the hope that they might

Lally had seriously felt the annoyances inough that city on his way to Trichinopoly, flicted by this force. They were, he said, dicipating that the usual honours would be like flies, no sooner beaten off one part than Tered him. But the flight of the nabob by they settled on another, and he resolved to sea at a season subject to tempest, and when make an effort to relieve himself from their repose, was regarded as indicating a degree of ruary the British discovered the enemy addanger at Madras which rendered inexpedient vancing upon their post in two bodies, the any expression of respect for either the English or their allies. Under this impression, five hundred native horse, the other of three the king refused not only to receive the nabob hundred European cavalry and six hundred within his capital, but even to visit him without the walls. Major Calliaud endeavoured, The whole was under the command of a relationship to establish the appearance of tion of Lally, bearing the same name with a better feeling, and he had good reason to himself. The force available to repel the exert himself in the cause, for the girgum-lenemy consisted of two thousand five hundred. exert himself in the cause, for the circum-stances under which Mahomet Ali had de-sepoys and two thousand two hundred native advancing, he formed his native horse, placing himself with Captain Vasserot and his ten troopers on their left. The ardour of the horsemen appeared perfectly irrepressible; and anticipating the desire of the British com-mander for their advance, the whole body, in the words of Orme, "set off scampering, shouting, and flourishing their sabres." French cavalry advanced to meet them at a rapid pace, but suddenly halting, the first rank discharged their carbines, by which four or five of their opponents were brought to the ground. This had so unhappy an effect upon the enthusiasm of the rest, that they immediately fled, leaving Major Calliaud with no companions but Captain Vasserot and the These retreated into an inten troopers. closure, and the French pursued the flying cavalry until stopped by a discharge from some field-pieces, and by the fire of a party of sepoys. Some loss was subsequently sustained through the indiscretion of an English officer, in rushing with his troops from a post which he had successfully maintained, to push his advantage by pursuing the enemy. party were attacked in the rear by cavalry, thrown into confusion, and many of them cut The contest was maintained with fluctuating success throughout the day, but in the evening the enemy retired, leaving the English masters of the field. Most welcome to the English was this result, and little were the French aware of the value of the relief which their departure afforded. English were not far from being reduced to a state when, from want of ammunition, it would have been alike impossible to maintain the fight or to effect a retreat in the face of to the claims of public duty; and he saw the enemy. Their remaining stock was only sufficient to furnish six cartridges for each musket, and three balls for each of the fieldpieces. In the night Major Calliaud moved his force as silently as possible in the direction of Chingleput, leaving fires to deceive the With his usual activity, he shortly Dutch settlement of Sadrass. Lally, who appears to have thought that the law of nations was without validity in India, had taken forcible possession of this place, and relieved the Dutch garrison of their duties by transferring them to a French detachment. design of Major Calliaud was frustrated by the mistake of his guides, in consequence of attack, as he had intended, under cover of the night.

But the time was approaching when the British force, both within and without the walls, were to be relieved from the labour and anxiety attendant on their situation. For nearly two months Lally had been carrying on operations against Madras. His batteries had been opened about half that time, and a breach was made which, he believed, justified an attempt to storm. His officers, to commanders could make no provision. The

and to receive the French cavalry, who were whose judgment he appealed, but with a distinct expression of his own opinion, took a different view, and though they admitted the breach to be practicable, declared it to be in-accessible. Thus far they only complied with the demand made for their opinion on a particular point; but they proceeded to deliver their judgment upon another, on which Lally had not sought their advice, and probably did not wish to receive it: they declared their conviction, founded on a comparison of forces, that the prosecution of the works to quell the fire of the place would only be to sacrifice many lives without the slightest probability of ultimate success. This view of the prospects of the besieging army was extremely distasteful to Lally, who attributed it to intrigue and a spirit of personal hostility to himself. But whatever the value of the opinion of the French officers, and whatever the motives which had led to its expression, it was an adverse stroke which, falling upon Lally at a time when he was surrounded by a variety of discouraging circumstances, overcame even his self-satisfied and arrogant presumption. The He was without money, and without the means of raising any. The pay of the troops was several weeks in arrear; the supply of food was scanty and uncertain; the sepoys deserted in great numbers; some of the European troops threatened to follow their example, while the feelings of the officers towards their commander were almost avowedly those of disaffection and hostility.

The arrogant and imperious temper of Lally had indeed surrounded him with enemies, at a time when he needed all the assistance which personal attachment could lend that to linger before Madras would be but to incur the chance of finding himself universally deserted. He determined, therefore, to gratify his vengeance by burning the Black Town, and then to withdraw from a scene where he had lost whatever portion of the confidence of his army he had ever possessed. afterwards made an attempt to surprise the The execution of the former part of this determination was prevented, and that of the latter accelerated, by the opportune arrival, on the 16th of February, of a fleet under Admiral Pocock, with reinforcements for Madras. An impression prevailed in the town that an assault would be made that night before the troops from the ships could be landed, and not only every soldier in the garrison, which he was unable to make his meditated but every inhabitant capable of service, was under arms; but the expectation was un-The enemy kept up a hot fire founded. through the night, and the next day they were in full march towards Arcot. So hurried was their departure, that they left behind fifty-two pieces of cannon (some of them indeed damaged) and a hundred and fifty barrels of gunpowder. They left, also, about forty sick and wounded Europeans who were unable to march, and for whose transport their on British service during the siege of Ma rajoh, who was to entert it a revenue, with draw. He had surrendered, and was being led the exception of the encycets and town at ortune, who had withdrawn bimself from inheld to conquery to one the decises of to the

to Major Breroton, when he was met by the month of the eigens, which, such it exercises Mahammud Isoof, who, raising his seimetar, ones of the districts are excit to there, were to nearly severed the prisoner's head from his belong to the Company; and that he treaty hody, exclaiming -"These are the terms to for the dies and or restigat a of the poor rivers of either party should be made without the consent of both. Turally, the prime difficulty be kept with a traitor." Lally, on hearing of the departure of Major Brereton for Wandewash, had left Pondicherry in the way of action was removed by a stip i-with a party of Europeans, and ordered Soulation that the rajah should supply fifty thempires to join him at Chittapet. But his moveeand supers a mouth for the expenses of the ments were paralyzed by want of funds. He army, and six thousand for the private expense advanced to Coverpank, where distress and his of the officers. The united forces now exercical personal unpopularity gave rise to a state of feeling in his army which rendered it maniagainst M. Conflans, who had been left in command of a portion of the French force which had not accompanied M. Bussy; and they moved to victory. At Peddapore a fattle festly imprudent to risk a battle. The result was, that late in May the French went into cantonments, and the English shortly after-took place, in which the French, being totally wards followed their example. defeated, abandoned their camp to the victors, It is now necessary to turn to the events with many pieces of cannon, a large quantity which followed the recall of M. Bussy from of ammunitien, and a thousand draught bullocks. The honour of the victory belonged sidered as loans, and that the revenues of the exclusively to the English force. The rajah's countries which might be reduced on the furarny consisted of five hundred horse, whose ther side of the Godavery, excepting such as value Orme determines by the passing remark, that they were "incapable of fighting;" and about five thousand foot, some of whom were armed with fire-arms of extraordinary fabrication, and the remainder with pikes and bows. Horse and foot are alike included by the historian just quoted, under the term of "rab-ble;" and Colouel Forde seems to have been anxious for nothing so much as to get them out of the way. The only useful part of the rajah's force was a body of about forty Europeans, whom he had collected to manage a few field-pieces, and who performed the duty very satisfactorily.

The retreat of the French was conducted upon the principle of each man providing for himself. The flying troops took various routes, but most of them towards Rajahmundry. this place the French commander, M. Conflans, bent his way; and if he had gained little reputation as a soldier, he seemed resolved at least to challenge the distinction of being a bold and rapid rider. No instances are recorded of his care to preserve the remnant of his army; but it is related that he traversed the whole distance from the field of battle to Rajahmundry (which is about forty miles) at full gallop, and by obtaining changes of horses, performed the journey in an incredibly short space of time.

Rajahmundry possessed a fort, but it was almost incapable of defence; besides which supply. Colonel Forde had borrowed of his the French had lost nearly all their cannon. Under these circumstances it was deemed imprudent to linger at that place; and the Some treasure had arrived at Vizagapatam fugitives, with all possible speed, crossed the from Bengal, but the interposition of part of Godavery, on the bank of which river the the French force rendered its transmission to town stands. Rajahmundry, and waited some time for the for safety to the Dutch settlement of Cockarajah, who had engaged to make the first payment under the treaty as soon as he was in possession of the fort. The rajah, however, did not arrive to seize the prize; and Colonel Forde, with his forces, crossed the Godavery in pursuit of the flying enemy. But his progress was soon stopped by the want of money. He had brought with him a supply from Bengal, but on the faith of the rajah's promises, he had lent that prince twenty thousand rupees, and the loan, with the current expenses of the army, had now left the British the refractory troops would not serve in the commander without the means of proceeding. He consequently recrossed the river, to the the retrograde movement was made for the the first money which should come into his purpose of inflicting punishment on him, and hands, the prize-money then due. With regard in this belief fled to the hills. The interposi- to the second part of the claim, he represented tion of Mr. Andrews was again resorted to, that, as by the Company's regulations the but the rajah's fear of Colonel Forde, and his troops were only entitled to one-half of what reluctance to part with any money, seemed to is taken, he could not, on his own authority, have entirely divested him of all interest in engage that they should receive more; but the success of the expedition. difficulty a reconstruction of the treaty was Company at home, and to retain the amount effected, and it was stipulated that whatever in dispute until the question was determined. sums the rajah might advance should be con- The hasty resolves of excited men have belonged to the French, either by occupat on or grant, should be equally divided between the rajah and the English. The rajah then furnished a small amount in money, and a larger in bills, which enabled the British force to resume its march in the direction which had been taken by M. Conflans. That officer had recovered so much presence of mind as to collect part of his scattered troops at Masulipatam, where he seemed resolved to make a stand. He had made application for assistance to Salabat Jung, and that prince advanced with a body of troops from Hyderabad; his brother, marching with another, joined him near the Kistna. But the English commander, undismayed by these threatening appearances, steadily continued his march, though greatly embarrassed and delayed by the erratic excursions of his native ally in search of plunder. On the 6th March he was in sight of Masulipatam, and on the same day he received the cheering intelligence that Lally had been obliged to raise the siege of Yet his situation was surrounded Madras. by difficulties. He had begun to construct batteries, and to make preparations for attacking the fort, but his hopes appeared in imminent danger of being frustrated from the exhaustion of his resources. His military chest was empty, and the rajah refused any further officers all the money that they possessed, and even used the prize-money of the troops. Colonel Forde advanced to Colonel Forde impracticable, and it was sent While labouring under these embarnarah. rassments, the whole of Colonel Forde's European troops suddenly turned out with their arms, and threatened to march away. With some difficulty they were persuaded to return to their tents and appoint a deputation to re-present their demands. These extended to an immediate payment of the prize-money then due to them, and to a promise of the whole booty of Masulipatam in case it should be taken; and on any other terms it was declared siege. Colonel Forde, unable to comply with the first part of this demand, was compelled great dismay of the rajah, who imagined that to try the effect of a promise to pay, out of With some he promised to represent their case to the division of Europeans; and the sepoys, under it is not probable that Salabat Jung would Captain Maclean, were gaining entrance at a place called the South Gate, which was in imperfect repair. The two false attacks were also answering the purposes intended, although the rajah's troops were utterly unfit for any real service, and the force under Captain Knox, finding the enemy prepared, did not attempt to cross the swamp, but only fired Both, however, contributed to divert over it. the attention of the enemy and increase the alarm of M. Conflans, who is represented as having remained at his house issuing orders founded on reports brought to him there, which the arrival of the next report induced him to contradict. He at last resolved to make an offer of surrender on honourable The answer of Colonel Forde was. that the surrender must be at discretion, and further, that it must be immediate. M. Conflans neither objected nor hesitated, but gave instant orders to discontinue further resist-

The fall of Masulipatam was unexpected, and the success of the English was, without doubt, owing to the daring spirit in which the attempt had been conceived and executed. The prisoners exceeded the number of those to whose arms they surrendered. The fort was abundantly provided with stores, and defended by one hundred and twenty pieces of These, with a rich booty, fell into the hands of the conquerors.

The consequences of this success were immediately apparent. Salabat Jung was within fifteen miles of Masulipatam, but its fall induced him to manifest a disposition to treat; and Colonel Forde proceeded to his camp, where he was received with marked attention. A treaty was concluded, consisting of four articles. By the first, the whole territory dependent on Masulipatam, as well as certain other districts, was granted to the English, without the reservation of fine or military service. By the second, Salabat Jung engaged that the French force, which still remained in his country, should pass the Kistna within fifteen days; that, in future, the French should have no settlement south of that river; that he would thenceforward retain no French troops in his service, and that he would neither render assistance to that nation, nor receive any from it. The third article gave impunity to Anunderauze for the tribute which he had levied in the French possessions, and exonerated him from the payment of his own for one year-his future liability to make the accustomed payments being recognized, as well as the power of the Soubahdar to enforce them, provided he neither assisted nor gave protection to the enemies of the English. fourth article restricted the English from aiding or protecting the enemies of Salabat have granted so much had he not been under the influence of alarm from another source, in addition to the terror inspired by the capture of Masulipatam. His brother, Nizam Ali, was on terms of enmity with Bussy, whose dewan he had caused to be murdered. Clive. calculating on the influence of this prince's illfeeling towards the French, had written to him requesting his assistance in support of Colonel Forde's expedition. The precise effect of this communication cannot be ascertained, for Nizam Ali was quite ready, without any stimulus, to undertake any project that promised to gratify his ambition, or promote his interest; but whatever might be the force of the various motives prompting him to action, Nizam Ali no sooner learned that Salabat Jung was marching against the English, than he took the field and advanced to Hyderabad, for the purpose, as he alleged, of regulating the affairs of the state-in other words, of supplanting his brother and taking possession of his throne. Salabat Jung had hoped to secure the assistance of part of the English force in resisting this attempt against his authority, and he sought to prevail on Colonel Forde to grant it by the lure of personal advantages. But the English commander refused, and the result was that the Soubahdar, on marching to the defence of his capital, took with him that French force which, by an express article of the treaty, he had undertaken to expel. His return dispelled the danger by which he was menaced. tiation was commenced between the brothers, and Nizam Ali withdrew; but not without being restored to the government of Berar, from which he had been removed by the management of Bussy. This arrangement gave offence to Basalat Jung, another brother of Salabat Jung, who forthwith departed to promote his own views in the south, accompanied by the French corps which the Soubahdar, after engaging to expel, had brought to Hyderabad. This movement, and a report which obtained belief that a body of French troops had moved from Arcot, led to the despatch from Conjeveram of an English force under Major Mon-They marched on the 5th of July, and on the 17th appeared before Coverpauk, which was summoned to surrender, though with very slight expectation that the demand would have Greatly was the English comany effect. mander surprised by receiving an answer, offering to surrender the place provided the garrison were permitted to retire to Arcot, the soldiers with their knapsacks, and the officers with all their effects. The offer was accepted, and the English thus easily gained possession of a place which was in a condition to have put them to the expense of a siege; the time occupied from the summons to the surrender being only about an hour. Jung. This treaty gave to the English a facile triumph encouraged Major Monson to territory extending about eighty miles along proceed to Arcot, in the hope of finding the the coast and twenty inland. The provisions garrison under the influence of a similar spirit were altogether in favour of the English, and this he was disappointed. was manifested to maintain the place, and the lafter the engagement could set half their sails; garrison was so much superior to their opponents in artillery, that until a train could be topsails. This, like some other naval engageobtained from Madras, the place could not be ments about this time, was attended by no deas ailed with any prospect of success. Before cisive results. The fleets met, exchanged some this could arrive, the far greater part of the broadsides, and then separated, each having French army might reach Arcot from their cantonments, and Major Monson consequently marched back to Conjeveram, leaving a garrison in Coverpauk.

In April Admiral Pocock returned with his fleet from Bombay, to which place he had proceeded in the month of October of the preceding year, in order to avoid the north-east monsoon. A French fleet was expected from the islands, and the British admiral, in the hope of meeting it, continued to the windward of Pondicherry, and chiefly at Negapatam. Requiring a supply of water, which the Dutch authorities of the latter place refused to furnish, the admiral sailed for Trincomalee, in Ceylon, having a few days previously despatched the Revenge frigate in the same direction to look out for the enemy. ten in the morning of the 2nd of September, some ships were discovered to the south-east, and soon afterwards the Revenge appeared chased by one of the strange vessels. The English squadron immediately weighed, but was unable to get within cannon-shot of the enemy before dark; and from various circumstances arising from winds, currents, and the weather, the fleets were kept asunder until the house of the governor, and unanimously

The French fleet was that of M. d'Aché, cleven sail of the line and three frigates. crews amounted to five thousand five hundred labour had occupied many months, and provisions had been drawn not only from the French islands, but from Madagascar and other places. So great was the anxiety felt on this account, that a fleet had been despatched to rocure provisions from the Cape of Good lope, where a great quantity was purchased at a vast expense. A part of this outlay had, however, been reimbursed by the capture of from Madras.

The English squadron consisted of nine ships of the line, two Company's ships, and a flects in number of guns and men was very con-iderable. The action commenced soon delivery to M. d'Aché. the English, though the victors, appear to pause. If there were danger in returning, have sustained more damage in their ships there was also danger, though more remote,

A determination | than the enemy. None of the English ships all the French ships except one carried their sustained more or less of damage. instance the chief effect of the vast preparation made by the French was to inflict some degree of injury on the rigging of a few English ships. On the other hand, the French ran, and the English, therefore, must claim the victory; but it produced nothing. The English fleet returned to Negapatam, and the French, five days after the engagement, arrived at Pondicherry. Here they landed one hundred and eighty troops, and a small amount of treasure in money and diamonds, the latter having been taken in the English ship captured on the voyage to the Cape of Good Hope. D'Aché, with that yearning for the islands which he never failed to experience when at Pondicherry, declared his intention immediately to return,—a determination confirmed, if not caused, by intelligence of the approach of a reinforcement to the English fleet. Accordingly, on the 19th September the signal was made for weighing, and the ships loosed their topsails. preparations excited a perfect storm of indignation in the settlement. The military authorities and principal inhabitants assembled at passed a resolution, declaring that the precipitate defection of the squadron could not fail considerably reinforced. It now consisted of to produce the most dangerous consequences The to the state, as holding out to all the country powers a shameful acknowledgment that the men, and the greatest exertions had been made | French had been defeated in the last engageto victual and prepare the fleet for sea. The ment and could not sustain another, and that they utterly despaired of success on shore. Founded on this resolution a protest was immediately drawn, declaring M. d'Aché responsible for the loss of the settlement, and avowing a determination to appeal to the king for the infliction of such punishment as his conduct deserved. So great had been the speed of M. d'Ache, that it was only by accident that he became acquainted with this formal expresan English Company's ship homeward bound sion of the indignation of his countrymen. Ho was several leagues out at sea, as were all his ships but one, which had been detained from some cause after the others were under sail. The difference between the two To the commander of this vessel the protest was intrusted, with a charge for its immediate He was also furafter two o'clock in the afternoon, and con-hished with a number of copies, one of which timed for about two hours, when the enemy's was to be given to every commander in the rear, and shortly after their centre, began to squadron. For the opinion of either the augive way. Their van then made sail, and, thorities or the inhabitants of Pondicherry, with the entire equadron, hore away. They D'Aché entertained little respect, when yieldwere pursued, but soon escaped beyond the ing to it was likely to place him in a position reach of cannon-shot. The loss of men was of danger; but the threats of denouncing his supported to be nearly equal on both sides, but conduct to the government at home made him in flight. D'Aché called a council of his cap-| to take his place. The consequence was, that tains, after which he returned to Pondicherry, the advanced party being left unsupported, and went on shore to confer with Lally. Be- were exposed to a galling fire of musketry fore their deliberations were concluded, the from the rampart, which, from their situation, English fleet appeared standing into the road they could return only at great disadvantage, in line of battle. The state of the wind gave This party, which was led by Lieutenant de the French the opportunity to bear down and la Douespe, gallantly stood their ground exengage if they chose, while it deprived the pecting to be immediately joined by the main English admiral of this power. The French made their usual choice, and disposed their ships in such a manner as to place them beyoud the reach of the English, who kept their appear; the African troops in his division soon line throughout an entire day without exciting any other feeling in the enemy but that of by not being led on, and exposed to a fire which satisfaction at being out of danger. D'Aché they could not effectually return, likewise fied. yielded little to the remonstrances which assailed him on shore. He peremptorily adhered to his determination of returning to the islands, and all that could be wrung from him was a reluctant consent to leave behind four hundred Africans who were on board his fleet, and five hundred European sailors and marines, which latter body were courteously denominated by Lally "the scum of the sea.

The day of M. d'Aché's departure brought intelligence which in some degree relieved the gloom which hung over Pondicherry. British Government had meditated an attack on Wandewash, the most important of the enemy's stations between Pondicherry and Madras. Subsequently they appear to have been de-Brereton being most anxious to undertake it, they yielded. The garrison of Trivatore surrendered to this force on the first summons, and on the 28th of September the English army encamped under a ledge of rocks which extended about three miles north-west of the fort of Wandewash. The native governor had declined to admit into the fort any European troops except a few gunners, and the French consequently took up their quarters in the town. There, on the night succeeding the 29th, Major Brereton determined to attack The troops by whom the attack was to be made were formed into three divisions: the first, which was led by Major Monson, succeeded in obtaining entrance, and made ing the contest as long as possible. their way with little loss to a place where it was understood the main body of the French troops fire were tried; but the enemy after a time, tain Preston, was a man of unquestionable passed them, when courage; but he, being ignorant of the reason front, he cried "H. of Major Gordon's absence, would not venture word of command, body, but in vain; all the support they received was from two field-pieces, which opened a fire on the rampart. Major Gordon did not took to flight; and the Europeans, disheartened Still Lieutenant de la Douespe and his brave party kept their ground-where they would probably all have perished, had not Captain Preston run forward and brought them back to the place where the officers of the division were assembled, deserted by all excepting the artillerymen, who still stood by their commandant, Captain Barker, and vigorously plied their guns. The fugitives made their way to the third division, which was the reserve, and was posted on a ridge in the rear. It was commanded by Major Brereton, who, on the first notice of the approach of the fugitives, rushed towards them unaccompanied, and under a strong impulse of indignation, ran the first man he met through the body. Major Breresirous of postponing this operation, but Major ton then pushed on to the two guns, which Captain Barker and his men were still working; and there being no longer any object to be gained by their perseverance, they were withdrawn to the reserve.

Major Monson, ignorant of the position either of the enemy or of those from whom he expected assistance, had resolved to wait for the day. It broke, and brought upon him the point-blank fire of fourteen of the enemy's guns from the tower and esplanade. This he could only return with the fire of two fieldpieces and discharges of musketry. Such a disparity could not long be maintained; but, unwilling to relinquish the hope of support, Major Mouson sought the means of protracting the contest as long as possible. Various methods of sheltering the men from the enemy's were lying; but here they were surprised by moving part of their guns, so as to attack the finding no enemy, and embarrassed by not division in flank as well as in front, the fieldmeeting with the second division of the Eng- pieces of the English being disabled, and the lish force, which was under the command of men beginning to lose courage, a retreat be-Major Robert Gordon. A rocket was to be came advisable, if not inevitable. A singular the signal for the advance of this division to illustration of the instinct of discipline marked the place to which Major Monson had penc- this movement. The grenadiers of one of the trated, and it was given as soon as they had Company's battalions were to halt near the arrived; but Major Gordon appears to have gate, but seeing it open, they marched out into lost all presence of mind, and after it had the plain, quickening their pace at every step. been determined to advance, and the party Sensible that to call after men in such a state selected to lead the attack had actually gone of feeling would only have the effect of adding forward, the commander of the division had to their fear and driving them into wild and disappeared. The second officer in rank, Cap- disorderly flight, Major Calliaud foll and and in 'اv jin' turned, and followed the officer who had thus companies. recalled them to duty. The retreat was subsequently conducted in good order.

On the news of this affair reaching Pondicherry, Lally fired a hundred guns in honour of the great victory achieved by the French, and transmitted magnificent accounts of it to every quarter where it was likely to advance his interests.

Bussy arrived at Wandewash the day after the English had left their encampment before that place; he was proceeding with a detachment to join Basalat Jung. He marched to Trivatore, which surrendered to him as easily as but a short time before it had yielded to the English. Thence he advanced to Arcot, from which place he had made one day's march when his progress was stopped by the arrival of unwelcome intelligence from Wandewash. The pecuniary distress of the French had long been extreme. But little money had lately been issued to the troops, and that in place of provisions, which were not supplied with any regularity. More than a year's pay was due to the whole army. Discontent of no ordinary kind was the consequence, and force under Bussy, and its spirit was rapidly the feeling was aggravated by the soldiers having generally taken up the belief that a great amount of treasure had been brought by dewash seemed to add strength to the sense of grievance previously existing, and the soldiers complained openly and loudly. Their complaints were uttered with impunity; but some men of Loraine's regiment having been subjected to punishment for other military offences, the whole regiment turned out and marched from the camp to the spot which mised to be unusually abundant, and the the English had lately occupied. The officers of other regiments bearing the drums, turned out also, supposing that the camp was attacked. and this led to an apprehension on the part ing prize; and it was resolved to make an of the mutineers that they were about to be z surrounded. To ascertain the fact, a deputaion was despatched, the chief of the party ing the foremost man in the mutiny. His cent with the same spirit which already perthey forthwith determined to imitate the example of their comrades. The officers expostulated, but in vain; they were peremptorily commanded to retire. Arrangements were now made for supplying the necessities of the mutinous force. Parties were deputed to bring up the field artillery, the tumbrils, oxen, tents, and baggage; and even the market people, to the number of about two thousand, with a multitude of animals, were pressed into the service. When all was prepared, the mutineers proceeded to the spot which they had were stationed three hundred sepoys, five selected for the encampment, where their hundred irregular troops armed with lances, first step was to elect a serjeant-major their and two field-pieces. An attempt was made commander in chief. This functionary nominated another serjeant his major-general, and across it with a single opening, in front of appointed the usual officers to the various which was a trench, and behind a parapet for

The general issued his orders, which were read to the men in the ordinary way, and every detail of duty and discipline was observed with the greatest regularity.

The intelligence of this movement was communicated with all possible speed to Pondicherry. To allay the feeling which had led to it, Lally produced from his own chest a considerable sum, the members of the council sent their plate to the Mint, and some of the principal inhabitants followed their example. The Viscount Fumel was despatched to negotiate with the mutineers; and having succeeded in making some impression on the majority, he left them to deliberate, giving them three hours for the transmission of an answer. The influence of their serjeant-general was exerted in favour of compromise; and they resolved to return to their duty, on condition of receiving a general amnesty, six months' pay immediately, and the remainder in a month. This was agreed to; a pardon and six months' pay were forwarded, and the troops marched back to Wandewash. The news of the discontent had extended to the To appease it he was obliged at caught. once to advance a month's pay to his men, and then to wait until a supply could be obthe squadron, and that Lally had amassed and tained, to place them on a level with the secreted much wealth. The success at Wantroops at Wandewash.

The growing necessities of the French, and the fearful intimation which they had received, that their troops would not serve without pay, forced them to the consideration of the means of recruiting their exhausted treasury. In the rich and fertile island of Seringham, the approaching December harvest progovernment share was estimated to be worth six hundred thousand rupees. This, in the existing situation of the French, was a tempt-The expedition for this effort to secure it. purpose was intrusted to M. Crillon, and consisted of nine hundred Europeans, one thousand sepoys, and two hundred native horse. horiations impressed those to whom he was Neither the presidency, nor the commanding officer at Trichinopoly, appear to have been vaded those by whom he was deputed, and aware of this movement till it was too late to offer an effectual resistance. The approach of the force was only learned from the accidental discovery of an advanced party. A detachment, which was thereupon despatched from Trichinopoly, gained some advantage, and from the prisoners taken in this affair the first accurate information of the strength and object of the enemy was obtained. 20th of November, Crillon's force crossed into the island of Seringham, and encamped opposite the west face of the pagoda, within which were stationed three hundred sepoys, five the field-pieces. The French, however, ad- joined, and the best mode of employing the vancing their heaviest cannon, soon beat down force thus collected was deemed to be in atthe wall, and disabled their field-pieces; they tempting to reduce Wandewash. To divert then effected an entrance, though gallantly rethe enemy, Colonel Coote, with the main body sisted by the sepoys. Their victory was tar- of his army, marched to Arcot; while Major nished by a wantonness of cruelty disgraceful Brereton, with a strong detachment, after to a nation boasting of any degree of civil-traversing the intermediate territory, marched resistance had ceased, but, having turned out town almost without resistance. Intelligence all who survived the massacre, fired upon of this success being forwarded to Colonel some who were departing, while their cavalry Coote at Arcot, he made a forced march to rode after others and cut them down. It is join Major Brereton, who in the mean time said that these acts were perpetrated by the had been preparing a battery for the reduccommon men without the sanction of their tion of the fort. Another was subsequently officers—a very insufficient excuse. If the constructed, and both were opened on the officers disapproved of the conduct of their 29th of November. The enemy had conmen, they ought to have restrained it.

from England of two hundred recruits, and a King's regiment containing its full complement of one thousand men, under the com-mand of Lieutenant-Colonel Coote, who had formerly served in Bengal. He was now nominated to the command there; but the appointment was qualified by permission for him to remain with his regiment on the coast of Coromandel, if circumstances should render The amount of British it more desirable. force at this time in India was quite disproportioned to the demand for their services; and it followed that everywhere the various part of it as possible for their own protection. aware that Madras was threatened with a He knew the danger of the latter presidency; he also knew the hazard of di-minishing his strength in Bengal; and being naturally most anxious for the safety of those interests for which he was peculiarly responsible, he was unwilling to place any part of his force in a position from which he could not recall them in case of necessity. The state of affairs in the Carnatic was now thought to warrant the exercise of the option of detaining Colonel Coote and his regiment. Clive, however, had requested that, if Colonel Coote were detained, Major Calliaud might be spared for Bengal; and that officer, with two hundred men, was accordingly despatched thither.

When the presidency of Madras became aware of the movement of the expedition whole of the British army should take the No plan of operations appears to have been decided on, the choice being left to Colonel Coote, who, about the time the French obtained possession of Seringham, arrived at Conjeveram, where the largest division of the

They not only refused quarter after on to Wandewash, and took possession of the tinued to fire from the walls day and night The loss of Seringham was in some degree from the time of the arrival of Major Brereton. counterbalanced by success in another quarter, but with so little effect that only one man in The British force in the Carnatic had been the British force had been wounded, and he considerably strengthened, partly by ex-but slightly. The fire of the English batchanges of prisoners, and partly by the arrival teries, which was directed against the tower of the fort, succeeded, before noon on the day on which it was commenced, in silencing the enemy in that quarter and in making a practicable breach. The fort was then summoned to surrender, but the answer was, that it would be defended to the last extremity. The fire of the English was thereupon continued, and various parts of the defences were in succession dismantled. On the following morning the killadar sent officers to treat for his security in the event of his delivering up the place to the English. In the conference that ensued, Colonel Coote pledged himself to conauthorities endeavoured to secure as large a tinue the killadar in the fort, and in the occupation of the surrounding districts, as a de-Thus Clive retained the troops pendent of the Company, if he would deliver which he took with him to Bengal, though up the French whom he had admitted; but the promise was given on the condition of an unequivocal answer being returned by two o'clock in the afternoon. The appointed hour arrived without bringing the expected answer; but shortly afterwards the French soldiers, who seem to have reposed no great confidence in their Mahometan coadjutor, appeared on the walls and offered to deliver up the fort. Colonel Coote immediately ordered a company of sepoys to advance and take possession of the gateway; but having got there, they were told that the key was with the killadar. Against any check in this quarter, however, Colonel Coote had prepared. At the time of sending the sepoys to the gateway, he had himself advanced with another company to the breach, which was passed without opposition. They were followed by others, no resistance being offered; and thus Wandewash under M. Crillon, they determined that the fell into the hands of the English without the loss of a single man, and at the expense of only five wounded. The killadar had signed the agreement for surrender to the English before they entered; and it is discreditable to the British authorities that he was not admitted to the advantages which had been proarmy was in cantonment. The troops which mised him. It is true, that the time fixed for had landed with Colonel Coote subsequently receiving his answers had been ding

It appears to have been then the common mode | but whom nature had formed his superior, and of conducting an Indian campaign to leave the day to provide for itself. If a supply could be obtained, it was well; if untoward circumstances intervened, the troops were destined to suffer hunger.

The pagoda of Conjeveram contained some military stores, the loss of which would have been felt by the English: but Lally was without cannon to attack it; and all that he could perform was, to wreak the effects of his disappointment on the inhabitants of the town, by first plundering and then setting fire to their houses. With the booty thus acquired, and two thousand bullocks, the most valuable result of this expedition, Lally joined the other division of his army, and proceeded to Trivatore. Colonel Coote had no suspicion that the views of the French commander were directed to Conjeveram, till informed that he had arrived there by a communication from the other occupation. reached him; but before sunset his whole force which he had chosen, when a letter from M. with the cavalry, arrived at Conjeveram, a army. The headstrong passions of Lally readily after midnight. In the morning the remainder to be true, and it was with hesitation and diffiof the army arrived, but the departure of the culty that he yielded credit to Bussy's report. enemy had rendered their services unneces- He at first ordered only a part of the force to disappointment at Conjeveram. of opinion that to retake Wandewash in the whole force. face of the whole British force was impracticable, and that, with reference to the circumstances of the two armies, and especially to the superiority of the French in cavalry, a preferable course would be to keep together the regular troops and detach the Mahratta horse to lay waste the English districts. was anticipated by Bussy that the English would either be compelled to fight at a disadvantage or to fall back upon Madras for supplies; and that, in either case, the easy recovery of both Wandewash and Carangoly might Decency required that Lally he expected. should sometimes ask the advice of so distinguished an officer as Bussy, but the overweening confidence in his own talents, which never forsook him, led him on this occasion, as on many others, to distrust it. Infatuated by self-conceit, he appears to have attributed the advice of Bussy to jealousy of his own superior abilities, and of the probable fame which would flow from their uncontrolled exercise. The consciousness of his own feeling towards his able adviser might dispose him to believe in the existence of a corresponding feeling against Lally indeed was not envious of the sulted. himself.

to whose qualities as a soldier and a man the homage of public respect rendered a tribute which Lally himself could not command.

Lally determined to act on his own opinion, and on the 4th of January marched with a part of his force for Wandewash. The main body lie left under the command of Bussy at Trivatore; but there they did not long remain. On becoming acquainted with the departure of Lally, Colonel Coote marched and took up a position half-way between Wandewash and Chingleput, being thus within an easy distance of the former place while he secured a communication with the latter, and through it with Madras. The Mahrattas had been ordered to observe the motions of the English army; but the country was not yet quite exhausted, and while the work of plunder remained incomplete, the Mahrattas could spare time for no Lally was consequently British officer in command of the pagoda. It ignorant of the march of Colonel Coote until was late in the afternoon when the intelligence; the day on which he halted at the position was in motion, and the colonel, advancing Bussy announced the approach of the British distance of twenty-one miles, about an hour led him to doubt of that which he did not wish advance from Trivatore, but the unwelcome The attack of Wandewash, however, which news of the movement of the British army Colonel Coote had supposed to be the first ob- being confirmed from other sources, he gave ject of Lally's movement, was to follow his permission to Bussy to exercise his own dis-To this at- cretion with regard to the remainder. tempt Bussy was decidedly opposed. He was immediately marched for Wandewash with his

Colonel Coote had resolved not to advance upon the enemy till they were ready to assault, and then to make his choice according to circumstances, to attack either the troops engaged against the fort or the army on the plain which covered them. The sagacity of Bussy penetrated the intention of the English commander, and he once more cast away some good counsel in urging Lally to suspend the siege, and keep his whole force concentrated till his opponents either ventured on an engagement or withdrew. Various motives cooperated to insure the rejection of this advice it came from a man whom Lally hated, it impugned his judgment, and it pointed to a course which was tantamount to an acknowledgment of partial failure. All the predominating feelings of Lally's mind rebelled against it, and he determined to persevere in the siege at all hazards.

On the first arrival of Lally at Wandewash he had attacked the town with all his infantry in two divisions. They were received by a sharp fire from the troops in the town, and some mistakes being committed, confusion re-The prosecution of the attack was abilities of Bussy, for he believed his own to thereupon deferred to the following day, when be immeasurably greater; but he was in the French were observed advancing in a tensely jealous of the popularity of one whom single column against the south side of the the government had made his subordinate, town with two field-pieces at their head. This

Coote advancing with some of his officers to being obsions that their extillery was reach reconnoire, was suffered to approach and return without interruption. Equal inactivity appeared to prevail among these engaged in the attack upon Wandewash, for no firing was the attack upon Wandewash, for no firing was the attack upon Wandewash, for no firing was the much importance till fally referred from his appeared to the contract of the second from his appeared to the second form his appeared to the second from his appeared to the second form his appeared to the second from the second from the second from his appeared to the second from the second fro

On the return of Colonel Coote, he gave orders for the army to move towards the south side of the mountain of Wandewash, and in the direction of the fort. Arriving at some stony ground which protected them from the attacks of the cavaler the British infants. the attacks of the cavalry, the British infantry again drew up in order of battle opposite to the French camp, and halted for some time in this position. The Mahrattas were spread round the foot of the mountain, but none of them ventured to approach, and some of the French cavalry who came out to reconnoitre which was o impetuous as to best down these were speedily driven back by the fire of two immediately conversed to it. In a moment open plain in sight of the French camp. Within Indutatived for in answering with their gares till that comp no motion was perceived, and Colonel they had advanced cutte ently terr, when it turned from his unsuccessful charge of ear

were speedily driven back by the fire of two immediately opposed to it. In a moment of his enemies. But these challitions of result of a general engagement, our within Pondicherry would not repell. Pursome time after the capture of Villes ore.

English from its gates, to which they were the war in the Carnatic presents little dest approaching, having shut up the French serving of notice, except the departure of the within a very circumscribed space, where, if Mycoreans, in consequence partly of the in-

able to maintain their ground, they were in different prospects of their Prench albes, but imminent danger of perishing by famine. It principally because the situation of Hyder Ali was necessary, therefore, to take some measures at home required all the force that be could for relief, and it was necessary that they should command. In September, Lally made an atbe taken without delay.

tack upon the English camp, which was Lally had always manifested a profound planned with considerable skill, and to a cercontempt for the natives of India, yet be tain extent well executed; but a mistake

now consented to avail himself of native aid, occurred in the disposition of one of the dist-Through the agency of a Portuguese bishop, sions engaged in it, and the attempt produced he succeeded in concluding a treaty with nothing but an accession of latter feeling Hyder Ali, an adventurer who had raised between Lally and his associates in arrow himself to high station in the government of Lally attributed intentional misconduct to the

Mysore, for the services of a body of troops commander of the division in which the failure from that country. The immediate price to occurred, and alleged that he was actuated by be paid for this assistance consisted of the envy of the glory which was about to encircle forts of Thiagur and Elvanasore, one hundred the brows of him by whose genius the attack thousand rupees per month for the service of was suggested, and under whose auspices it the army, ten eighteen-pounders as a present was advancing to a successful issue. The to the general, and all the artillery and military French officers and authorities at this time stores in the two forts, as well as a supply of seem to have been remarkably liberal in appropriate parties for the liberal in ammunition while serving for the French, giving to each other credit for the possession There was also a prospective arrangement, of every evil and contemptible quality. relating to schemes of conquest to be realized. The officers in the English army kept when the English were expelled from the Car- selves free from the scandal attached to the

The officers in the English army kept them-

The negotiation was conducted with open and disgracuful quarrels of the French; great secrecy, and the English authorities but they were not without causes of disunion were not aware of it till a few days before the and discontent. Some ships recently arrived from England had brought reinforcements, mand. The presidency seconded the request which were highly acceptable; but they also brought commissions from the Crown appointing Majors Brereton and Monson lieutenantcolonels, with priority over Colonel Cootc. success w These officers were not to assume the advantages of their seniority while Colonel Coote remained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic; but Major Monson the inhabitants of Pondicherry were contained in the Carnatic part of the Car yield as little as possible of the dignity of his new rank. Instead of offering to serve under his present commander, he proposed to retire to Madras; but Colonel Coote determined to remove the difficulty by withdrawing to the command in Bengal, to which he had been originally appointed. He accordingly delivered over the command to Monson, and proceeding to Madras, demanded permission for himself and his regiment to depart for Bengal. The presidency demurred, and Colonel Mon- horses and men were likely to be taken by the son declared that if the regiment were withdrawn, the hope of reducing Pondicherry must be abandoned. Coote then consented to leave his regiment, and to proceed to Bengal without it. Between Coote and Monson some | 27th December an unwilling train passed out difference of opinion had existed as to the of the town, forced from their homes by the mode of carrying on operations against Pondicherry. Before the arrival of the new commissions, Coote had ordered a force to march the exception of a few domestic servests. and invest the fort of Ariancopang; but Monson did not approve of the movement, and the richer and more powerful Europears, and Coote, who appears to have surrendered his were expelled. Their number was foreign own judgment with great facility to that of hundred, and when the gain of the torn his second in command, countermanded the order closed upon the last, not one of the name for the march of the detachment. Monson had knew whither to turn his steps for supporter in view another operation, which his acquisition even for safety. To expende the formula of the command enabled him to carry into effect. Pondicherry was surrounded by a happy fugitive wandered in families and complete was strengthened by four redoubts. Against these, and a French post at Oulgarry, back. They returned to the given which had the attack was directed. It was in some re-voided them forth, and included the forth, spects ill conducted. pened: one of them, through the disappear-ilite! there are no whom they had in the int ance, at the moment when most wanted, of in rain. The energy of despair prompting Major Robert Gordon, the same officer whose some to attempt to five the very discussion managing inexplicable absence had occasioned so much met and form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form and the abandoned three of the redoubts and several form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief abandoned three of the redoubts and several form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the French characteristic form the mischief at Wandewash; but the wandewash is the mischief at Wandewash at Wandewash at Wandewash pieces of cannon. This measure of success construction in the second success of cannon. pieces of cannon. This measure of success of the control of the English. Among the wounder was Colonel Monson, and the chief command to consequently devolved on Major Gordina whose incompetence within a few hours at the words exposed the main body of his army to a night attack, which was disappointed of success only by the desperate valour of the command was soon transfer to abler hands. Colonel Coote had not at the command to a success and the command was soon transfer to abler hands. to abler hands. Colonel Coote had the state of the state with equal carnestness, and Colonel Coote complied. His military talents were forthwith exercised with the same perseverance and success which had distinguished his former

In the mean time the prospects of Lally and place; but famine was threatening to assail them, and the absence of a large part of the French force at a distance was actually regarded as an advantage, on account of the difficulty which would have been found in subsisting them in Pondicherry. being procurable, the few cavalry that re-mained were sent away, although their departure further diminished the strength on which the town rested for defence, and both English. Distress at length attained that stage when man regards his competitor for bread as an incumbrance from which he must deliver himself, whatever the means. On the arm of power. They were the native inhabitants of both sexes and of every age. With whose labours ministered to the comfort of Some mistakes hap mitted to the privilege of thering the common

e rays that three hundred men properly wise of the commander of the English arms, 'would not, for three hours after day, who ought not to have suffered such a firshion to resist them. The squadron which camp." On the part of the governor and connected to prevent the introduction of council of Pondicherry another memorial war provisions into Pondicherry by sea felt the presented, claiming personal freedom for the effects of the storm. Several ships were inhabitants, scounty for their property, and stranded, and most of the remaining ones constructed in the Roman Cath. he relation. upon a redoubt which still remained in the evening of the same day, possession of the enemy, and the command of which, if gained, would more effectually im- those who had been subjected to it gave un-stranded, and most of the remaining ones con-protection to the Roman Cath he relative. siderably damaged. The repairs of the latter Colonel Coole gave a short answer to Lalle, were, however, carried on with great celerity, declining to enter into discussion on the and within a week Pondicherry was again breaches of faith charged against the Reglish, blockaded by an English fleet. Similar dili-and accepting the offer of surrender at dis-gence was employed in restoring the works and cretion. Accordingly, on the following mornstations of the army. On the 6th of January ing the English were admitted to preservious an attempt was made to supply part of the of the town; and as some tumult was appreloss which had been sustained, by an attack headed, the citadel was delivered up on the

the following morning the post was vigor had they not been prevented by the escert, ously attacked by a party from the garrison, The shout was renewed on the appearance of and after a very indifferent defence, the officer Dubois, the king's commissary, who stopped and said he was ready to answer any one. the English East-India Company had, in re-One of the crowd stepped forward and drew his sword. Dubois did the same—he was a man advanced in years, and labouring under the infirmity of defective sight; the second pass laid him dead at his antagonist's feet. No one would assist his servant to remove the body; and the man who had taken his life was regarded as having performed a meritorious act.

On the fourth day after the surrender, Mr. Pigot, the governor of Madras, demanded that Pondicherry should be delivered over to the presidency, as having become the property of the East-India Company. Colonel Coote called a council, consisting of the chief officers both of the army and the fleet, and they decided against the claim made by the governor of The contest might have occupied considerable time, had it not been cut short by a declaration from Mr. Pigot, that if Pondicherry were not delivered up, the presidency of Madras would not furnish money for the subsistence either of the king's troops or of the French prisoners. This stopped all further argument, and the authority of the presidency was admitted, under protest.

the French, its fortifications had been destroyed. The court of France had indeed in- been made to effect this object-and after a structed Lally to destroy all the maritime series of wars, occupying many years, nothing possessions of the English which might fall remained to them but the recollection of The Court of Directors of defeat. into his hands.

taliation, ordered their governments to resort to similar measures in the case of conquests made from the French. In consequence of these orders, the fortifications of Pondicherry were demolished; and with a view further to embarrass any attempt that might be made by the French to re-establish themselves in India, all the buildings within the works were subsequently destroyed.

From the time when Pondicherry fell, the French power in the Carnatic was virtually at an end. Gingee still remained in their possession, as did also Thiagur, which had been restored by the Mysoreans on their departure: but the former yielded to a force under Captain Stephen Smith; and the latter, after sustaining sixty-five days of blockade and bombardment, capitulated to Major Preston. Mahé, and its dependencies on the coast of Malabar, also surrendered; and early in the year 1761 the French had neither any regular military force in any part of India, nor any local possessions, except their factories of Calicut and Surat, which were merely trading establishments. In that spirit of universal conquest by which they had long been ani-When Fort St. David fell into the hands of mated, the French had sought to establish a commanding empire in India-vast efforts had

CHAPTER VI.

EUPEROR CONFIRMS MEER JAFFIER IN GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL-HOSTILITIES WITH THE DUTCH-THEIR DEFEAT BY COLONEL FORDE-DEPOSAL OF MEER JAFFIER, AND ELEVATION MEER COSSIM - EMPEROR DEFEATED BY MAJOR CARNAC - ABOLITION OF INLAND duties — Meer Jaffier restored — Massacre of Europeans at patna — battle of - LORD CLIVE GOVERNOR OF BENGAL - MUTINY OF SIR ROBERT FLETCHER AND OTHER OFFICERS - CLIVE FOUNDS THE MILITARY FUND - RETURNS TO ENGLAND - HIS CHARACTER.

THE revolution which placed Meer Jaffier on which surrounded Meer Jaffier, and to procure the throne of Bengal was followed by the usual attendants upon a new and unsettled government - discontent, disturbance, and alarm: A very short time had elapsed when three distinct rebellions were raised in different parts of the country; while Roydooloob, who had been one of the most valuable of Meer Jaffier's friends, and was now one of the most powerful of his dependents, became alienated from his master; and to add to the difficulties of the new sovereign, an invasion of his do-minions was threatened from Oude. The aid of Clive was indispensable to extricate Meer of Clive was indispensable to extricate Meer and his English protectors—a sunnud from Jaffier from his difficulties; but coldness, if Delhi confirming Meer Jaffier in the authority not positive dislike, was engendered between which the English had conferred upon him. them, by the reluctance of the new sovereign to fulfil the pecuniary stipulations to which he was received from England, directing the eshad bound himself. Clive, however, applied tablishment of a new system of administering himself vigorously to remove the difficulties the government of Bengal.

the discharge of the English claims. His endeavours were not without success. He allayed the intestine commotions by which the new government was threatened, obtained payment of part of the sums due to the English, and security for the rest; and finally accompanied Meer Jaffier to Patna, with a view to overawe foreign enemies by the exhibition of a powerful force on the frontier, and by the same means to facilitate the attainment of that which was an object of strong desire as well as of high importance both to the sovereign of Bengal existed of offering violence to the feelings retreat. Clive expressed little niggrebated not had undertaken the office of president, that the lating the changes of success on both sides, in expedition under Colonel Forde was despatched order to determine to which he should finally to the Northern Circars. The progress of that attach himself. The advance of Clive decided expedition, and its brilliant result, the capture the question. The governor redoubled his ex-

Soon after his return to Calcutta a despatch By a despatch ...

the sovereign and his son Meerun were no less ruptly breaking up his camp and retreating active than their inferiors. A detail of them with great precipitation. This step was ocwould possess little of either instruction or in- casioned partly by the approach of Clive's terest: they may therefore be passed over advanced guard, and partly by the sovereign among the countless number of similar emana- of Oude having seized Allahabad, the capital existed of offering violence to the feelingst retreat. Clive expresses inthe apprehension in the live, or easting his merits into the shade, absence of any such intention is indeed aced beyond doubt by the fact that, three months before the council invited Clive to account of the office of president, he had been appointed to it by the Court of Directors on their becoming aware of his protracted residence in Bengal, and of the new claims which he had established to the confidence of his employers.

It was shortly after Clive, in compliance with the unanimous request of his associates, had undertaken the office of president, that the province, who nevertheless was calculated and undertaken the office of president, that the province, who nevertheless was calculated undertaken the office of president, that the province, who nevertheless was calculated in the office of president, that the province, who nevertheless was calculated in the office of president, that the province of success on both sides, in of Masulipatam, have already been related. ertions: the enemy was driven back after. The court of Meer Jaffier in the mean time gaining possession of some of the bastions, and continued to be a scene of intrigues, in which the repulse was followed by the Shazada abtions of a tortuous and vicious policy, which, of Mahomed Kooli, a prince engaged in assisting the shazada. The fugitives hastened to cross the river which divides the territories of couraged, being now the avowed enemy of with which the political relations of Europe the wandering prince had nothing to hope. The emperor was kept in a state of pupilage suffered from the exactions of Sooraj-oowhither to turn, the prince sought the protection of the British Government; but the emperor, or his minister acting in his name, had despatched an edict to Meer Jaffier, enjoining him as his vassal to seize and secure the person of his rebellious son. The empire' of Delhi was fast approaching to its close; but public opinion still attached high respect to its authority, and it was not desirable to embroil either the English or their native ally with a power which claimed supremacy throughout India, and which, though weak in actual resources, was strong in the recollections of aucient grandeur. Clive thereupon felt compelled to decline complying with the wish of the prince, but he sent him a sum of money, equal to about a thousand pounds, to enable him to make his escape.

The results of this invasion were fortunate. both to Meer Jaffier and to Clive. The shazada had previously borne the title (for this was all that he ever possessed) of soubahdar of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa. His disobedience to the reputed authority of his father led to the transfer of the titular distinction of soubahdar to the emperor's second son, Meer Jaffier being named as his lieutenant, with a perfect understanding that he should retain the substantial power, of which he was already in possession. Clive, at the solicitation a counterbalance to that of the English. of Meer Jaffier, was made an omrah of the empire_an honour which he accepted without appearing to consider how far he was justified in receiving it without the permission of his own sovereign, or whether the authority which he thereby gave to the emperor to demand his military service might not at some time interfere with his duty to the East-India Company, or his natural allegiance to the crown of Great Britain. A more substantial reward of Clive's services followed. To sustain the honour conferred by his feudal superior, Meer Jaffier bestowed on the fortunate captain who had raised him to a throne, and kept him there, a jaghire or estate. It was the quit-rent of certain lands which had been granted to the East-India Company, and was alleged to be worth thirty thousand pounds per annum. Clive accepted this mark of disappointment at its delay, and had taken country of any foreign force. Soon after-occasion to remind Meer Jaffier that a compe-wards a Dutch ship arrived full of troops.

It has already been seen that the course of events in India, at this period, was not Bengal from Oude; but the latter country marked by any pedantic adherence to the afforded no asylum to the shazada, its ruler, principles of international law. A fresh inby whom the invasion of Behar had been en-stance is about to be adduced of the looseness those who made the attempt. From his father operated in the East. The Dutch, in common with their European neighbours, had by an ambitious and powerful minister; and it Dowlab. On this account they were not diswas to escape a similar state of thraldom that pleased with his downfall; but either from the shazada had fled the court. Not knowing jealousy of the power by which it had been effected, or from some other cause, they were slow in acknowledging the authority of his successor. This gave great offence to Meer Jaffier, and on his being suffered to pass their settlement of Chinsura without the usual compliment of a salute, he stopped their trade. The Dutch, always humble when humility could promote their commercial interests. made a submissive apology, and were thereupon admitted to the advantages which they had previously enjoyed. They were now as assiduous in cultivating the favour of the prince as before they had been negligent in offering him even ordinary marks of respect. Meer Jaffier had begun to be weary of his English patrons, and was not indisposed to shake them off. The Dutch were envious of the advantage enjoyed by the Eng-lish in a monopoly of saltpetre which had been granted them by Meer Jaffier, and further felt aggrieved by the English Government requiring all ships coming into the river to take English pilots—a precautionary measure rendered necessary by the circumstances of the times. Under the influence of a sense of common grievance, Meer Jaffier and the Dutch, it was believed, had entered into a private negotiation, the object of which was to bring into Bengal a Dutch force to act as Some months after the date assigned to this negotiation, it was ascertained that a powerful armament was fitting out at Batavia. destination was unknown, but it was rumoured to be Bengal. By this time the adverse feeling of Meer Jaffier towards the English had undergone some change. Their arms were everywhere successful, and the magnificence with which the ruler of Bengal had rewarded the services of Clive in delivering him from the invasion of the shazada, attested the value which he now attached to his friendship. He was, therefore, not prepared to provoke their hostility. The news of the preparations in Batavia was consequently followed by an expression of the displeasure of Meer Jaffier addressed to the Dutch authorities, and by a demand upon the English for the fulfilment of that provision of the treaty favour with as little hesitation as the former. which bound them to render assistance to the He had indeed manifested some feeling of nabob in resisting the introduction into his tent jaghire was a convenient and almost indis- Meer Jaffier repeated his remonstrances to pensable appendage to the dignity of an omrah. the Dutch and his demand for the aid of the ting their immediate departure with the troops below and march them through the greatest safety and propriety, the last coudi-country. Clive pravided, as far as he had the tion in the nabob's letter, joined to his whole means, against both. Colonel Forde, who behaviour, convinced us that leaving the river had returned from the Deccan, was departabled behaviour, convinced us that leaving the river was no part of their intention; but that, on the contrary, they had his assent to bring up the troops if they could." This view of the subject was confirmed by the event. Instead of leaving the river the ships began to move up; and it was found that the Dutch were enlisting troops at Chinsura, Cossimbazar, and Patna—a process which could scarcely be carried on without the connivance of Meer Jaffier. When their preparations were thought complete, the Dutch addressed to the English authorities a remonstrance of great length and formidable purport. It recorded the grievances sustained from the assumption by the English of the right of search, and the obstructions offered by them to the passage of

This was an obvious subterfuge, as was | It was matter of doubt whether the Dutch once perceived. Clive, referring to this intended to bring their ships past the English amunication, says: "The season permit-batteries, or whether they would land the whem it would now be absurd to speak other-ment the ships of the Dutch were delivered up wise than as "the enemy." The demand was to them, made and refused, whereupon Captain Wilson Three days after the battle, the Dutch proceeded to act upon the concluding part of learned by the encampment of Meerun, son of his orders with that spirit in which the marine Meer Juffier, with several thousand horse of England, whether royal or commercial, have within a short distance of Chinsura, that there rarely been deficient. Undismayed by the was another party besides the English with inequality of force, he attacked the enemy, whom they had an account to settle. They and after an engagement of two hours the had been defeated, and this rendered it in the Putch commodere struck his colours; five of eyes of the nabob highly inexpedient to mainhis ships followed his example, and six out of Itain with them the appearance of friendship. seven vessels which constituted the Dutch fleet The terror of the Dutch was extreme, and they became at once prize to the English. One implored the protection of Clive, entreating succeeded in getting away, but was intercepted him, in the most carnest as well as the most below, and captured by two other English abject terms, to stand between them and the ships, which had just arrived. The number of the atened infliction of Mahometan vengeance. prisoners taken by Captain Wilson is said to He consented to give them the benefit of his have been three times the number of the men under his command.

On the same day on which the naval rupremacy of England was thus nobly asserted and su-tained, Colonel Forde was attacked by the garrison of Chineura while on his march to take up a position between that place and Chandernagere. They had posted themselves, with four pieces of caunon, amid the buildingof the last-named place. From this cover they was agreed upon. The terms were, that the were soon dislodged, when they fied to Chin- nabob should protect them in their trade and sura, abandoning their cannon, and pursued privileges, on condition that they should never with some loss to the very barriers of the meditate war, introduce or enlist troops, or town.

with two field-pieces, and met them on a plain, where an action ensued. The force of the force of the English fell considerably short of four hundred; in addition, they had about eight hundred sepoys. The action has been The restoration of peace on the coast was to justly described as "short, bloody, and deci-be followed by the recurrence of hostilities ' Its duration was less than half an hour, and the Dutch were entirely routed, leaving dead on the field about a hundred and twenty Europeans and two hundred Malays. About a hundred and fifty were wounded; three hundred Europeans, including Colonel Roussel and fourteen officers, and two hundred Malays were made prisoners. The loss of the English to march against Chinsura, it must have yielded Calliaud arrived from Madras, and he was

shore a large body of European and Malay on a summons; but this step was prevented troops. On the same day orders were sout to by an humble application from the Dutch for the commodere of the English squadron, Cap- a restoration of the relations of peace. A treaty tain Wilson, to demand from the Dutch com- was concluded, by which they disavowed the modore restitution of all the English persons, facts of their naval commander, acknowledged vessels, and property reized and detained by themselves the aggressors, and agreed to reimbim; and in the event of refusal he was, in the burse the English East-India Company the usual language of such commissions, to "fight, | amount of damage which they had sustained, sink, burn, and destray" the ships of those of and the charges of the war. On this arrange-

Three days after the battle, the Dutch good offices, and proceeded immediately to a situation near Chinsura, in order to check with more certainty than could be ensured at a distance the conduct of Meerun, of whose cruel and expricious temper some sudden and violent outbreak might not unreasonably be expected. Deputies from the Dutch Government were subsequently admitted to audience by Meerun, and after some altercation the basis of a treaty raise fortifications without his consent—that The following day decided the question of they should never keep more than one hundred success. Colonel Forde having been apprized and twenty-five European soldiers in the counof the approach of the troops landed from the try for the service of their several factories, Dutch ships, and of their having been joined Chinsura, Cossimbazar, and Patna, and that by part of the garrison of Chinsura, marched they should forthwith send away their ships and remaining troops. A breach of any of these conditions was to be punished by entire Dutch consisted of eight hundred Europeans and utter expulsion from the territories of and seven hundred Malays, besides some troops Meer Jaffier. The treaty being concluded, and utter expulsion from the territories of of the country. They were commanded by and the nabob satisfied for the trouble and Colonel Roussel, a Frenchman. The European expense of the march of his troops, the Dutch were delivered from the apprehension caused by their vicinity.

in the interior. Before the arrangement of affairs with the Dutch was completed, it was ascertained that the shazada was again preparing to enter the province of Behar, supported by several powerful zemindars; and that the foujdar of Purneah had taken the field on the eastern bank of the Ganges, about halt-way between Patna and Moorshedabad, was inconsiderable.

Colonel Forde reported his success, and requested further orders. Had he been directed clusion of the treaty with the Dutch, Colonel forthwith despatched with a considerable force to Moorshedabad, where in a few days he was marched from Moorshedabad for Patna, acjoined by Clive and Colonel Forde. these distinguished commanders were about to quit India. Clive introduced Colonel Calliaud vance of the force was delayed by the necessity to the nabob, and recommended him to his of previously appearing the nabob of Purneah, confidence; but it has been justly said that in order that an enemy might not be left in "confidence is a plant of slow growth," and the rear. This being, to appearance, effected, Meer Jaffier regarded the approaching departure of Clive with much alarm. threatened him from without, while within, an | The prince against whom it was advancing exhausted treasury, a discontented soldiery, was the same who has already been mentioned and an oppressed people, afforded abundant as the shazada, but he now claimed a higher grounds for apprehension. In addition to the character. His father had experienced the fate anxiety generated by these sources of annoy- which rank and power so often have brought ance, Meer Jaffier was subjected to constant upon their possessors—the captivity in which fear of the consequences which might arise he had long been held had been terminated from the wayward and extravagant conduct of by his murder. his son Meerun. More especially did he dread reached the shazada soon after he entered that, in conformity with the many precedents Behar, as which Oriental history affords, the prince emperor. might take some measures to quicken the natural course of the succession to the throne. The pride of Meer Jaffier bad sometimes re- had further the aid of a battalion of English volted at the interference of Clive, and circum-sepoys, and a few Europeans which had been stances had occasionally led him to cherish the left at Patna. On the approach of the invadthought of emancipating himself from his ing army he marched out of the city and control; but when difficulty arose, he felt encamped under its walls. Colonel Calliaud himself incompetent to meet it. Weak, timid, was most anxious that an engagement should indolent, and indecisive, Meer Jaffier looked to a stronger mind than his own for counsel, and repeatedly to the governor, warning him not the loss of Clive was felt by him as the removal to come to action. Ram Narrain was a good of the mainstay of his throne and safety.

departure was regarded with apprehension: ferent soldier, though his vanity led him to many of the Company's servants augured ill entertain a different belief. of the results. The nabob was surrounded by persons inimical to the interests of the injunctions of Colonel Calliaud, engaged the English, and the influence of their counsel, it enemy, and was totally defeated. The efforts was feared, might shake to its foundations the of the English troops enabled him, with some fabric which the genius of Clive had raised. These views were pressed upon him with much | what had happened, Colonel Calliaud advanced carnestness, but his determination was taken. · Calcutta, whence, in the month of February, he departed for England. The mode of sup-|run to give him the assistance of a small body plying the vacancy thus occasioned had been of cavalry for this purpose — but Meerun the subject of violent and vehement disputes refused, and without the aid solicited by at home. A detail of these is unnecessary, Colonel Calliaud no pursuit could take place. and would be uninteresting. It will be suffi. On the 2nd March it became known that the cient to state, that the continuance or abandonment of the rotation system formed one point of dispute; and when that was disposed of by a resolution of the Court of Proprietors, enforcing a return to the former practice under which the presidential authority was intrusted to a single person, a fresh contest arose on the choice of an individual for the office. An order of succession was finally carried, under advance of Colonel Calliaud; but not with stand-

Colonel Calliaud had, on the 18th January, Both companied by Meerun, with an army which was in point of numbers formidable. The adthrough the mediation of the English com-Invasion mander, the march of the army was resumed. Intelligence of this event Behar, and he therefore assumed the title of

The governor of Behar, Ram Narrain, was in command of a considerable force, and he be avoided until he arrived, and he wrote financier, and his arithmetical ability had It was not by the Nabob only that Clive's caused his elevation; but he was a very indifwith the greatest expedition, and on the 22nd was dissatisfed with the conduct of the February a battle ensued, in which the Engi of Directors, and the state of his health lish and their ally obtained a complete victory mg dictated retirement. After passing over the emperor. The ardent spirit of Colonel w days at Moorshedabad, Clive returned Calliaud suggested that the triumph should be followed by pursuit, and he entreated Meeemperor was in full march for Bengal; Colonel Calliaud followed, and on the 7th was within ten miles of him. The emperor then diverged, to enter Bengal by another route, which lay across mountains which no army had before traversed. His force consisted chiefly of cavalry and was unencumbered by baggagehe also had the advantage of a day's march in which Mr. Holwell was the fifth on the list; ing these circumstances, the latter succeeded but by the death or departure of those above in following him at no great distance. On the him, he had attained the first place when the field, and on the 6th proposed to attack to the office which Clive's withdrawal vacated.

furnish a body of cavalry. He met with the sion of his army. To prevent this misfortune, rame success which had attended his applicationd to avert the confusion and plunder by tion for similar assistance from the nabob's which it would inevitably be attended, it was con-the cavalry were refused. On the follow- resolved to conceal from the army, if possible, ing day Colonel Calliand came up with the fact of Meerun's death. A few of the rear of the emperor's army, a river only interposing between them. He then renewed his were entrusted with the secret, and through request to the nabob to march a body of their assistance the army was kept together cavalry to employ the enemy till the British during its march back to Patna, return thither infantry could be brought up. The request was being rendered necessary by the approach of discovered the charmy of the fact of the renew that the renew that the fact of the renew that the re disregarded, and the enemy thus gained anothe rainy season, not less than by the fatal opportunity of marching away unmolested, accident which had left the troops of the The emperor returned to Patna, and having nabob without a leader. The disappearance been joined by Law, with the remnant of the of Meerun was ascribed to illness, and during French force which followed that leader, seven days, which the march to Patna occumade two assaults upon the city. He was pied, the real cause was unknown, except by preparing for a third when he was compelled the few to whom it had been imparted in conto withdraw by the arrival of Captain Knox fidence. When the knowledge of the prince's with a detachment cent by Colonel Calliand to death became general, the troops took advanthe relief of the place. The next task which tage of the consternation excited by it, and demanded the attention of the English com- became clamorous for their arrears of mander was to resist the foundar of Purneah, They surrounded the palace and assailed the who, not satisfied that he was safe in trusting officers of the treasury,—reviled the nabob in Meer Jaffier, was again in arms for the purpose language the most gross and opprobrious, and of joining the emperor. Captain Knox left even threatened him with death if their de-Pana to stop his progress. He was accommands were not complied with. The storm panied by the Rajah Shittahroy, a gallant raged throughout two days, when peace was native chief, with a few followers. The rest restored through the interposition of Meer of the troops in Patna were either occupied. in settling important questions relating to nalsob gave a promise of full payment at a arrears of pay, or indisposed to engage in a specified time, and Meer Cossim became secuproject which they believed hopeless. One of rity for its performance. Meer Cossim conthe principal jemadars endeavoured to deter tributed still more effectually to calm the Shittabroy from accompanying Captain Knox, excited feelings of the mutinous troops, and representing the folly of meeting such a force put an end to the violence in which they found as that of the foundar with a mere handful of expression by producing from his own treasury men, intimating his suspicion that the defeat three lacs of rupees, the distribution of which of the troops of Ram Narrain would not give had the effect of inducing the discontented their master much concern, as thereby he soldiers to retire. would rave payment of the arrears which were due to them, but adding, that the officers had arrived from Madras to assume the office of resolved not to risk their lives by joining the Governor of Fort William in place of Mr. rash and infatuated English. These sinister Holwell, by whom it had been held since the anticipations of defeat were not realized, departure of Clive. As the appointment of Captain Knox was attacked by the foujdar, but the latter was defeated, and fled with the of the senior servants in Bengal, he could loss of the greater part of his baggage and scarcely hope to enjoy his elevation without artillery. A few days brought the armies of annoyance. He soon found that the disap-Colonel Calliaud and of Meerun to Patna. These pursued the flying foundar, and having overtaken him, a skirmish took place, after which the foundar continued his retreat, having burned all the heavy baggage and military stores that remained to him. Here again the obstinacy of Meerun rendered success imperfect. Colonel Calliaud had no cavalry, and Meerun, who throughout the action had kept in the rear, would not spare a single But the follies and horseman for the pursuit. crimes of this wretched prince were approaching an awful close. On the night of the 2nd of July was a heavy storm. The tent of Meerun, containing himself, a story-teller to amuse his indulgence, produced such a degree of dejection leisure, and a servant employed in patting his as seemed to unfit him altogether for the exerfeet, was struck with lightning, and all within cise of any function requiring the slightest it perished. The death of the general is degree of mental exertion. Clive, whose

It was about this time that Mr. Vansittart departure of Clive. As the appointment of Mr. Vansittart interfered with the pretensions pointment of his colleagues was not the only cause of disquiet which awaited him. man who had been placed on the throne of Bengal by the arms of the British Government was surrounded by enomics, secret and avowed -his pecuniary difficulties were great and inoreasing-his fidelity had long been more than questionable, and the death of his son Meerun had now opened a new fountain of discord in a controverted succession. That event, too, had added to the previous incapacity of Meer Jaffier for government. The blow falling on a man habitually indolent and unstable, somewhat advanced in years, and enervated by a life of always in the East the signal for the disper- vigorous mind had formerly held in captivity

the weaker intellect of Meer Jaffier, was away; the arrival of Mr. Vansittart. and at the time when the ruler of Bengal most had for some time been bent upon effecting a wanted a monitor and guide, there was no change in the government of Bengal. man on the spot possessing sufficient influence plans were communicated to Mr. Vansittart to assume the character with effect. This was almost as soon as he arrived; and all of praise not all. The new governor took possession of or of blame that belongs to the latter, in rea treasury so exhausted that the trading investments of the Company were obliged to be suspended, and it was with difficulty that the current expenses of the settlement were pro-The monthly subsidy for the payvided for. ment of the Company's troops while in the field in the service of the nabob was, like all similar engagements of that prince, considerably in arrear, and had it been paid with regularity it would have been insufficient for the expenses which it was intended to defray. Certain countries had been assigned for a stipulated time to the English, to afford them the means of recovering the losses sustained on the capture of Calcutta. The time of assignment had expired, but a considerable balance still remained due. The nabob demanded the restitution of the lands, and offered as security for the outstanding amount some jewels. These could only be made available as a resource in pecuniary difficulty by sale or mortgage, and the circumstances under which they were to be held by the British Government would, for a time at least, forbid recourse to such means of conversion. No remittances were made from Europe for the purposes of the Company, an implicit reliance being placed on the vast wealth believed to have been acquired by the recent changes in Bengal, and the government of Calcutta were expected to provide not only for their own necessities, but also for the wants of Madras and Bombay. At the former presidency an army was in the field, engaged in a course of operations which, if successful, would destroy the last remnant of French dominion in India. This army could be maintained but at a heavy expense; cost of defending the British interests ghout India had been improvidently cast u the resources of a single settlement. uch was the financial position of the government of Calcutta, and it was the parent of the policy which that government pursued. Meer Cossim, the son-in-law of Meer Jaffier, aspired to succeed to the throne. The money which he had advanced to allay the claim of the mutinous army had been furnished upon the condition that he should stand in the place of Meerun. Meer Jaffier had indeed two other sons, and the deceased prince had left one, but none of them were of an age to maintain their claim to the succession. That of Meerun's son was weakened, if not destroyed, by the death of his father prior to attaining the throne; and all the three, it has been alleged, laboured under the disqualification of illegitimacy. Circumstances thus conspired to favour the pretensions of Meer Cossim, who was, more-

Mr. Holwell spect of the transactions that followed, rests upon his having adopted and carried out the plans of his predecessor. He who had laid the snare was judged the most proper person to manage the process by which the prey was to be inveigled within it. Mr. Holwell, notwithstanding he had ceased to be governor. continued to correspond with Meer Cossim. The latter, indeed, occasionally addressed letters to Mr. Vansittart; but the more free and confidential revelation of his desires and hones was reserved for Mr. Holwell. A sufficient understanding having thus been established, it was judged proper that a closer communication should take place. The permission of Meer Juffier for Meer Cossim to visit Calcutta was obtained, under the pretence of its being necessary for arranging a plan for the next campaign against the emperor, and for effecting a settlement of certain accounts. Here, again, Mr. Holwell was the principal actor. At the express desire of Meer Cossim, that gentleman was deputed to confer with him; and the aspiring candidate for the throne of Meer Jaffier opened his views with a degree of candour which somewhat startled his English friend. That he should seek to possess himself of all the substantial power of the sovereign was expected—that he should even claim to enjoy the title was not improbable; but Meer Cossim, it appeared, looked to securing his seat on the throne by the death of him who then occupied it; and though the British negotiator does not appear to have been a very scrupulous person, he was not prepared to concur in a premeditated assassination. His delicacy astonished and disconcerted Meer Cossim, who expressed his fear that Mr. Holwell was not so much his friend as he had supposed. this trifling mishap was not suffered to interrupt the progress of the negotiation. Cossim had little hope of achieving any part of his object but by the assistance of the English; and, after some debate, the basis of a treaty was agreed upon. Meer Cossim was to be invested with the dewanny, or control of the exchequer-a most important power. He was, further, to exercise all the executive authority; but Meer Jaffier was to continue in possession of the title of sovereign: all affairs of government were to be transacted in his name and under his seal, and a suitable revenue was to be allotted for his support. Such were the arrangements affecting the actual and the nominal sovereign. For his own government, Mr. Holwell stipulated for the possession of Burdwan, Midnapore, and Chittagong, as means of defraying the Company's charges in maintaining the throne of Bengal. The terms were over, so fortunate as to obtain the support of the British Government. The way had been immediately communicated to the select com-opened for the recognition of his claims before mittee, and by them unanimously approved

he so pleased, adding that it had nover been | Mr. M'Guiro one lac and eighty thousand intended to deprive him of it. The courtesy of the latter part of this answer is more evident than its veracity : Meer Jaffier, however, was unmoved by it. Aware that Meer Cossim was to be put in possession of all actual power, Meer Inflier attached little importance to the honour of being called a sovereign. With far more spirit than might have been expected, he declined the name when stripped of the authority of a prince, and asked permission to retire to Calcutta. He set out the same evening. Meer Cossim was seated on the musnud, and the congratulations tendored him by the English authorities were followed by those of the principal natives, offered with all the sincerity which is commanded by suc-By the evening all was perfectly quiet, and a stranger might have entered Moorshedabad without suspecting that the city had rights of a sovereign prince, and a laudable that day been the scene of a revolution.

Moer Cossim had fully expected that he was to purchase the dignity of nabob by a liberal donation to those who had helped him to This was quite in conformity with attain it. Oriental precedent; and the example of Clive lations and dependants of former princes, as and his associates in the previous transfer of well as those who had acquired wealth by the government of Bengal had shown that ministering to their pleasures, were severely Englishmen had no objection to follow it. On pressed. The demands of Moer Cossim were the night on which the articles were signed, Meer Cossim and tendered to Mr. Vansittart a paper which, on examination, proved to be a note for the payment of twenty lacs of rupees to the members of the select committee. cither that body happened to be in the mood for indulging the feeling of disinterested favour, and had retired to the enjoyment in patriotism, or the abruptness wan whose yes, an offer had been made gave it, in their eyes, an appearance of indelicacy. They, one and all, grades of respectability, they had been enabled shrunk from the polluted paper, and desired to accumulate. "In short," says the native historian, "the advice of Zaidee, the poet, patriotism, or the abruptness with which the ness had shocked their moral feelings, that "he mistook their motives." The obtuseness "he mistook their motives." " Meer Cossim led him to repeat the offer, to save him from utter despair, Mr. tart was induced to promise, on the of himself and his coadjutors, that when mances flourishing, they would accept such marks of the prince's friendship as he might be pleased to bestow. The governor took this ment of revenue. It had been part of the proopportunity of soliciting a donation of five lace jected policy of Mr. Vansittart to make terms of rupees for the Company, which was promptly granted, and applied by the English Government in aid of the operations against Pondicherry. The promise which the portinacity of Meer Cossim had extorted from the committee was faithfully kept; and although it will be 15th he gave battle to that of the emperor, be more convenient to state the manner of its the prisoners taken were M. Law and his fulfilment here than to return to the subject remnant of French followers. This success rupees and five thousand gold mohurs. Mr. Culling Smith, who was secretary to the committee, had one lac and thirty-four thousand rupees; and Major Yorke, who commanded the detachment immediately attendant on Moor Cossim, benefited to the like extent. Mr. Vansittart, as was befitting his station, had the largest share of Meer Cossim's bounty -five lace of rupees were appropriated to his personal use. These payments were to be deferred till the nabob's finances were in a condition to bear them. When they became the subject of Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Sumner was questioned as to the circumstances of the country at the time when they were made. His answer was, that "it was a matter he supposed the nabob a proper judge of ;"—a reply indicating a most decorous respect for the desire to avoid any importinent interference in his affairs.

Money being the sole object of the revolution, Moor Cossim applied himself vigorously to the replenishment of his treasury. The renot confined to those enriched by his immediate predecessor: the retrospect extended to the reign of Soornj-oo-Dowlah, and even to that of Aliverdi Khan. The mandate to refund But reached some who had long since renounced the dangerous and uncertain struggle for courtly security, as they supposed, of the portion of 'Why collectest thou not from every subject a grain of silver that thou mayest form a treasure?' Meer Cossim had attentively listened to and now strictly followed." But his course was not perfectly smooth. The emperor was only about fifty miles from Patna. His affairs of the country were settled, and its standard offered a rallying point to the discontented zemindars and petty rajahs, and all were discontented when called upon for paywith the emperor, but the execution of it was interrupted by the necessity of immediately removing this source of inconvenience. Major Carnac had taken the command of the British army at Patna on the 1st January. On the an anticipation of the course of events, it will when the latter was entirely defeated. Among when, in the order of time, it would require to be noticed. A few months after the clovation of Meer Cossim, Mr. Holwell consented peror in his camp. The overture was after to receive two lacs and seventy thousand rupees, Mr. Summer two lacs and twenty-four mander finally conducted the emperor to thousand rupees, Colonel Calliaud two lacs, tercourse between the emperor and the Eng-[Oriental financiers, were considerably in arrear, lish was regarded by Meer Cossim with jealousy, and Meer Cossim demanded a settlement, and on hearing of it he lost no time in proceed- The demand was evaded, and Meer Cossim ing to Patna. There he was solemnly invested thereupon formed designs hostile not only to by the Emperor with a khelaut, or dress of the power, but to the life of Ram Narrain. honour, and acknowledged his confirmation in the soubahdarship by undertaking to render suffered greatly from its being the scene of an annual tribute of twenty-four lacs of rupees from the revenue of the three provinces. This ceremony performed, there was nothing which Meer Cossim so much desired as the absence of his lord, and he was soon gratified. The English, though disposed to support the emperor, were unable from various causes to favour him to the extent of their wishes, and his departure was accelerated by an insurrec-in vain. Ram Narrain sometimes promised tion in his camp, in which he would probably the accounts, but when the time for their prohave perished but for the timely interposition (duction arrived, none were forthcoming. Had of Major Carnac. He marched in the directhe accounts been rendered, and had they been tion of Oude, where he was to be met by the fair and honest, Meer Cossim might not have ruler of that country, who held the office of relaxed in his hostility to Ram Narrain, but

Meer Cossim and the English was thus re- his conduct was defended by the officers who moved, but others were not wanting, and a successively held the chief military command demand made by Meer Cossim upon Ram at Patna, can only be accounted for by their Narrain for a settlement of accounts was a dislike of the policy which placed Meer Cossim fertile source of difference, and exentually of on the throne, and their unfriendly feelings mischief.

Ram Narrain was a wily Hindoo, who having been raised by Aliverdi Khan to the rank avow, that he might get possession of his person and cut off his head. Clive answered, with the customs of the English;—that if the aid his purpose. nabob was inclined to resort to arms to reduce Ram Narrain to obedience, he was ready to assist him; but that if he made any promises, they must be fulfilled. Meer Jaffier, who possessed no superabundance of energy, pre-ferred a peaceful course, even though shackled by the disagreeable condition of fidelity to a promise. Clive accordingly wrote to Ram Narrain, telling him that if he would present himself to the nabob and acknowledge the authority of the new establishment, he should be continued in the government of Patna, on the terms under which he had held it from Soorajoo-Dowlah. Ram Narrain complied, tendered his submission, and was accordingly confirmed in his appointment. When the shazada first menaced Patna, Ram Narrain exercised a prudent care to stand well with both parties in the war till he could ascertain which was likely to prove the stronger. At a subsequent period his ambition to display his zeal and military skill was near producing fatal consewas indulged. His accounts, like those of most | longer any hope from evasion

The resources of the province of Behar had war; and it has been questioned whether Ram Narrain was really indebted to the nabob at all. The presumption, however, lies the other way. If nothing were due, it could have been shown by producing the accounts; but these neither threats nor persuasion could extort. The influence of Mr. M'Guire, chief of the English factory at Patna, was employed, but the withholding them clearly put the latter in One ground of jealousy and dispute between the wrong; and the pertinacity with which towards those by whom it had been adopted.

Nothing could be more unhappy than the state of feeling which prevailed among the different authorities in Bengal. Mr. Vansitof governor of Patna, had contrived to main-different authorities in Bengal. Mr. Vansittain himself there contrary to the wishes of tart was naturally disposed to support Meer Meer Jaffier, who distrusted him. That prince, Cossim, the nabob of his own creation, but on the ground that Ram Narrain would put he was not disinclined to protect Ram Narfaith in an English promise, but not in his own, rain if he would comply with the demand of had solicited Clive to write to him, assuring | rendering an account. Meer Cossim, however, him of the English protection, in order, as the was, perhaps from the beginning of the dispute, proposer of the scheme did not hesitate to but certainly soon after its commencement, bent upon the destruction of Ram Narrain, and he offered large bribes to both Major that such a proceeding would not be consistent | Carnac and Colonel Coote to induce them to Those officers, however, seem to have determined not only to protect Ram Narrain from injustice and violence, but to uphold him in resisting every claim upon him, however just and reasonable. were consequently involved at once in disputes with the nabob and with the British council, in which the president had a majo-With the former they were sometimes on the brink of positive hostility, while the correspondence between them and their official superiors was disgraced by the most bitter and unbecoming altercations. The disputes were terminated by the recall of Colonel Coote and Major Carnac to Calcutta: the command of the military force which remained at Patna was intrusted to Captain Carstairs, but its employment was to be entirely at the disposal of the chief of the factory. who had stood between Ram Narrain and ruin being thus removed, Meer Cossim proceeded to avail himself of an opportunity which he had long coveted. Accounts were quences to the cause in support of which it again demanded, and Ram Narrain having no dered. unbob; and had they been perfectly accurate and just they would still have been unsatis-It was declared that embezzlements to a vast amount were detected; the person of Ram Narrain was soized and his effects confiscated. This in the eyes of Meer Cossim was but an instalment of justice. The treasurer of the culprit and his banker shared the fate of their employer. All his dependents were subjected to amercement, and thus, as Gholaum Hossein observes, "the nabob acquired a great treasure." As might be expeoted, Ram Narrain was eventually mur-Such were some of the fruits of that injudicious and unjustifiable policy which had treated the sovereignty of Bengal as a commodity for barter. The governor and council had asserted their authority, and Meer Cossim was in possession of his proy; but peace was not thoreby secured. Presh sources of dispute and disturbance arose before the former were well dried. Shortly before the departure of Clive, a despatch had been addressed by the Calcutta council to the Court of Directors, complaining in no measured terms of the asperity with which some part of the conduct of that council had been noticed. By the Court the despatch was regarded as so offensive as to call for the dismissal of all those who had signed it, and orders to that effect were sent out. In addition to Clive, the offensive letter was signed by Messrs. Holwell, Pleydell, Sumner, and Clive was in England before these orders were despatched, and Mr. Holwell had resigned the service before their arrival in India; their only effect, therefore, was to remove from the service, and consequently from the council, Messrs. Ploydell, Sunner, and M'Guire. All these were supporters of Mr. Vansittart's policy, and their removal gave his opponents a majority in council. One conequence of this change (an "additional mis-'tune," Mr. Vansittart calls it) was the apsintment of Mr. Ellis, one of the most vehement of the governor's opponents, to be chief of the factory at Patna. Here he was not long before he entered upon a course of acts equally disagreeable to the nabob and the English governor. A complaint was preferred by a servant of the English factory against reveal all that he know on the subject, doone of the nabob's officers, for obstructing clared that he had never seen a single Euroone of the nations omeon, for constanting pean there, the transit of some opium duly authorized to pean there.

"Things," says Mr. Vansittart, "could not "T under the directions of the chief of the fac-stand long upon the point to which they were tory, and Mr. Ellis ordered Captain Carstairs now brought. Every word and action of the to seize the purson whose conduct had given nabely was construed into a declaration of offence. But military subordination at that interest the English, and particularly stime sat lightly, and Captain Carstairs, instead of obeying the order, which, whether judicious or not, Mr. Ellis had an undoubted right to give, contented himself with transmitting a statement of the complaint to the nabob, accompanied by a request that he would reprimend the offender and release the opium. "The forbearance of Captain Carstairs, instead of obeying the order, which, whether tions of the kind were frequent; whilst, on the part of the nabob, every ordinary motion of ours was represented to him in such colours as would most add to his nabob, accompanied by a request that he apprehensions of our intending to break with him." To endeavour to restore confidence in the mind of the nabob, the governor

They were unsatisfactory to the stairs," says Mr. Vansittart, "made no difference in Mr. Ellis's intentions;" and it was not to be expected that it should. The only effect likely to be produced on the mind of Mr. Ellis was to irritate him by the obvious contempt with which his authority was threat-Captain Carstairs, indeed, not only evaded the performance of his own proper duty, but in addressing the nabob on the subject without instructions, trespassed on that of Mr. Ellis. Other causes of dispute soon occurred. The nabbe complained of the conduct of one of the Company's ser-vants in Purneah: Mr. Ellis retorted by complaining of those of the nabob in the same district. At the same time an Armenian in the nabob's service, who had been detected in purchasing some saltpetro, of which the Company possessed a mono-poly, was seized by Mr. Ellis, and sent in irons to Calcutta. The council, however, acted with more forbearance than the Company's representative at Patna; they re-trained from adding to the violence which had already been offered, and sent the Armenian prisoner back to Patna, with a request that the nabob would punish him. Another opportunity for the exercise of that power which Mr. Ellis was in nowise indisposed to exert, soon occurred. It was reported that two English deserters had taken refuge in the fort of Mongheer. Mr. Ellis applied to the nabob's deputy in Patna for an order to the commander of the fort to give them up, or suffer a search to be made for them. request not being complied with, Mr. Ellis despatched a party of British sepoys to enforce his wishes. The sorgeant claiming admittance to the fort was answered by a warning to keep out of reach of the guns, or otherwise he would be fired upon. The party thereupon withdrew, but remained within sight of the fort for about three months. At length a search was granted. No deserters were found; but this certainly does not prove that the fort harboured none at the time when Mr. Ellis received his information: abundant time and opportunity had been afforded for their escape. An invalid Frenchman, however, who had been in the fort some months, and who was tempted by the offer of reward to sufficiently decisive; it was contained in a was well disposed to abate these evils, but he written paper delivered by him to Mr. Has possessed no influence with his council, and have completely fulfilled the treaty, and have five or six years, during which the Company's not in a single instance deviated from it. Yet, servants had been largely engaged in the prigentlemen, notwithstanding this treaty you vate trade, as having given to their claim to solemnly made with me, and ratified with the retain it something of the force of prescription. seal of the Company, you now demand a sum of money from me which I have never borrowed of you, nor obliged myself to pay, nor have you in any manner the least claim upon me. owe nobody a single rupee, nor will I pay your this object, he proceeded to Moorshedabad to demand," thority of the British name and flag, carrying on their trade clear of customs duty, the Company had over engaged. The internal trade of the country was in the hands of the natives. The exclusive right of dealing in some articles was claimed by the government, and by being farmed was converted into a source of revenue. All other articles, in accordance with the absurd and vexatious system then universal in the East, were subjected to duties levied at various stations, so that goods could scarcely be removed at all without rendering their owner liable to make some payment to the state, and could not be transferred to any considerable distance without subjecting him to many such payments. The influence acquired by the English from the revolution Company to enter on their private account into the internal, or what was called the privilege of carrying on their trade free. As proposed a special mission, to be intrusted to competition could be maintained, it was ob-Mr. Hastings. The council consented; but vious that the ultimate and not very distant when his instructions were under conside-|result of the course taken by the Company's ration, it was proposed to add to them a servants must have been to throw all the clause directing him to apply to the nabob trade in the country into their hands, and it for payment, for the use of the Company, of was equally obvious that the virtual abolition the twenty lacs of rupees offered by him to of both transit duties and monopoly profits, the governor and other persons engaged in which must accompany the change, would be concluding the treaty with him. This was seriously felt in the nabob's treasury. Both strenuously resisted by Mr. Vansittart; and prince and people, therefore, were interested his resistance was reasonable, although the in opposing the claims of the English. The interest which he had in the question pre-assertion of those claims on the one side, and cluded his obtaining credit for purity of mo-the resistance offered to them on the other, tive. The proposal for the additional instruct gave rise to innumerable disputes. Each party tion was undoubtedly factious, and its effect accused the other of resorting to violence. could scarcely be expected to aid the object of The nabob complained that the illegal trade the mission—conciliation; but the private was upheld by the exercise of force—the resifeelings of the governor's enemies overcame deuts at the English factories alleged that even their sense of public duty, and they suc- the lawful trade of the Company was interrupted by the nabob's servants-and on both The answer of the nabob to the demand was sides there was some truth. Mr. Vansittart He said, "By the grace of God I was moreover inclined to regard the period of Thus, powerless in his own government, and not fully prepared to exercise power had he possessed it, he applied himself to bring about a compromise; and in the hope of effecting try whether his personal influence with the While engaged on this mission, Mr. Hastings | nabob were greater than it was among his own took occasion to call the attention of the countrymen. He found the prince greatly ingovernment to certain abuses connected with censed, but not altogether intractable, and a trade, which were perpetrated under the au-body of regulations for the government of the The inland trade was agreed upon. The main pro-Company had long enjoyed the privilege of vision related to the amount of duty to be levied, which was fixed at nine per cent., to but this immunity was well understood to be be paid on the first moving of the goods, and confined to goods imported or exported by no further demand was to be made either during sea : such, in fact, was the only trade in which transit or at the place of sale. Most of the other provisions were directed to the suppression of abuses, the existence of which could not be denied. Had this arrangement been adhered to, it is probable that neither party would have had much reason for dissatisfaction; but by the cupidity of one of the parties, between whom the governor stood as a mediator, and the precipitancy of the other, the good effects which its author had anticipated were frustrated. It had been agreed to postpone the publication of the regulations till after the arrival of Mr. Vansittart at Calcutta, when copies of them were to be transmitted from the council to the different factories, accompanied by the orders of the nabob, with which in Bengal encouraged the servants of the the governor was furnished. Slow as for the most part is the progress of business in the East, the prospect of pecuniary advantage country trade. At first, they appear to have sometimes quickens it wonderfully. The tardy paid duties, but before long they claimed the process by which the regulations were to be carried into effect accorded not with Meer between traders burdened with the payment Cossim's impatience to realize the gratifying of heavy duties and those who paid none, no vision of a nine per cent. duty, and he resolved to anticipate the proposed communication from for convening a full board was carried into Calcutta. Scarcely had Mr. Vansittart left effect. The number assembled (including two him, when he despatched to all parts of the military officers, whose right to attend, except country copies of that gentleman's letter em- on the discussion of military questions, the bodying the proposed regulations; the nabel's president disputed) was twelve. Excepting officers were ordered to act upon them, and all the president and Mr. Hastings, all were of English gomestals or agents who refused obe-opinion that the Company and its servants dience were to be turned out of the country. The regulations being received at Dacca, the free, but some indulged a spirit of liberal concouncil of the English factory there lost no time in transmitting them to Calcutta with a letter of remonstrance against the new plan. This missive found the minds of the council well propared to insure its effect. They had proviously informed their president that the subject required consideration, and that they had consequently ordered his communication to lie on the table till his return. The news from Dacca converted dogged discontent into The council forthwith reactive hostility. solved that their president, in concluding the agreement with Meer Cossim, had assumed a right to which he was not entitled; that the regulations were dishonourable to Englishmen, and tended to the destruction of all public and private trade; that the president's conduct in acting independently of the council was an absolute breach of their privileges; that the regulations should be resisted; and that the absent members of council-excepting such as were at an inconvenient distance-should be immediately called to Calcutta, that the whole might be consulted on a matter of such "high consequence,"-for thus did they characterize a measure which the chief and council of the factory of Dacea had represented as affecting "all" their "privileges," all their "fortunes and future prospects.

ceeded in carrying their motion.

In this spirit did Mr. Vansittart's colleagues meet his views of accommodation. Whether or not he was empowered to make a final arrangement is a point which seems not to have been clear even to himself; but it is quite certain that the motives of his European pponents were entitled to no respect, and for hasty and ill-judged enforcement of the bulations by the nabob he was in no way accountable, that step having been taken in violation of a positive agreement. The spirit in which it was followed was calculated to add to the existing troubles and embarrassments, and as an amicable arrangement was previously a matter of great difficulty, it now became almost hopeless. "The views of the violent party in hopeless. "The views of the violent party in Calcutta," says Mr. Vansittart, "were but too well seconded by many of the nabob's officers." Armed as they were with their master's authority, and, as they supposed, with that of the English governor, they not only executed their duties in the most offensive manner, but proceeded late to effect their object, they attacked a to use their newly-acquired power for other party of British sepoys in charge of some saltpurposes than the protection of the revenue. These abuses gave rise to fresh complaints soners of the rest, with the Company's from the factories-complaints the more diffi-gomastah. cult for the president to deal with because countenance this movement, and after reprithey had some foundation in justice. In this manding the gomestah he dismissed all the state of things the resolution of the council prisoners. Wearied with a contest which he had a right to carry on the inland trade duty cession so far as to be willing to pay a trifling duty on certain articles. Finally, it was determined that salt only should be subjected to duty, and that the amount should be two and a half per cent. The resolutions of the board on this subject, with others subsequently passed for regulating the conduct of the gomastalis, were conveyed to the nabob in a letter from the governor; but some of his enomies insisted upon the insertion of a paragraph, explaining to the nabob that the authority of the English government was vested in the entire council, and that the governor on such occasions was only the channel of making known their will. As a further annoyance to the governor, it was proposed also to demand from the nabob the return of Mr. Vansittart's letter assenting to the former regulations for the private trade. Both points were carried.

Meer Cossim, anxious to adorn his newly acquired crown with the wreaths of conquest, had engaged in an expedition against Nepaul, but his success was not equal to his confidence, and in place of gaining, as he had hoped, both glory and wealth, he returned under the shame of defent. Almost the first news that greeted him was that of the members of council being summoned from the outlying factories to take part in the consultations at Calcutta; and he seems to have inferred from this unusual proceeding, that it was in contemplation to make provision for his immediate descent from the throno. He next learned that his orders for carrying into effect Mr. Vansittart's regula-tions were disregarded at the English factories, and that until orders from the council were given, obedience would not be yielded. complained heavily of these grievances in various letters addressed to Mr. Vansittart, and his complaint led to the extraordinary determination of the board to enlighten him on the extent of their powers in relation to those of the governor. While affairs were in this unsettled state, sorious affrays took place at Dacca and other places. The council of Patna employed a military force in the defence of their trade, and made one of the nabob's collectors prisoner. The nabob despatched a body of horse to release him, but arriving too potro at Tagéporo, killed four and made pri-The nabob, however, feared to degree of satisfaction, he now resolved to put the question, who should occupy the throne, in execution a plan which he had previously naturally presented itself. With regard to tion of all customs duties to cease.

Before the nabob's decision was known at tion should be despatched to explain in perendeavour to prevail upon the nabob to adopt Mr. Amyatt tendered his services, which were accepted, and at his request Mr. The nabob Hay was associated with him. showed some disinclination to receive them, and observed in a letter to the governor, that if the business of Mr. Amyatt was to dispute about customs, he had better not come, as the point was already settled by the abolition of those duties. But as this was a mode of settlement very distasteful to the majority of the council, it was determined, nevertheless, that the deputation should proceed; and an addition was made to their instructions, requiring them to demand the revocation of the obnoxious immunity. The result of their earlier interviews with the nabob seems to have been a hope that he would yield to their demands: but he had no such intention; and an opportunity soon offered for manifesting his real feelings. Some boats laden with arms for the British troops at Patna were stopped at Mongheer by the nabob's guards. Messrs. Amyatt and Hay demanded their release, but the nabob refused, unless the British force assembled at Patna were withdrawn, or that Mr. Ellis were removed from the office of chief of the factory there, and his place supplied either by Mr. Amyatt, Mr. M'Guire, or Mr. Hast-While demanding the removal of the troops from Patna, the nabob was taking measures to diminish their number by holding out to the men inducements to desert. of positive hostility followed; and there being no longer any doubt as to the course which events would take, the presidency began in earnest to make preparations for war. Messrs. Amyatt and Hay demanded their dismissal from the nabob. It was accorded to the former, but Mr. Hay was detained as a hostage for the safety of some agents of the nabob, who were in confinement at Calcutta. These events gave opportunity for the commence-ment of hostilities at Patna. Mr. Ellis, the chief of the Euglish factory there, was not indisposed to the work, nor was he without provocation to enter upon it. The immediate result of a sudden attack upon the city placed it in the possession of the English; but unable to maintain the advantage which they had gained, they were driven, not only from the city, but from their own factory; and failing to make their escape, were all either destroyed or made prisoners. Mr. Amyatt, too, was intercepted in his way from Moorshedabad to Cossimbazar, and with all his companions murdered in cold blood.

saw little prospect of terminating with any with Meer Cossim could not long be deferred, threatened to adopt. He ordered the collect the feelings which actuated the majority of the council, it will excite no surprise to find that they determined on the restoration of Calcutta, it had been resolved that a deputa- Meer Jasher, and on the 7th July, 1763, a proclamation issued under the scal of the Eastsonal conference the views of the council, and India Company declared that personnge once more sovereign of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, and invited all persons within those countries to repair to his standard and maintain his claims. The act of the same authority only three years before was thus nullified, and all that had been done for the support of the pretensions of Meer Cossim rendered unavailing. The president offered no opposition to the will of the majority. He consented to sign the proclamation and all other public deeds, with a reservation, that he did not mean thereby to "prejudice his former declarations and opinions." He could scarcely, however, look back to those declarations and opinions with much confidence in the expediency of the former, or the justness of the latter; he could scarcely refer to them without some feelings of regret, unless the consolation afforded by the five lacs of rupees which they had procured him was sufficient to banish all unpleasant recollections.

When the proclamation restoring Meer Jaffier was issued, the terms upon which his restoration was to be effected were not settled. It was possible, therefore, that the governor and council might have had occasion to recall the act by which they had acknowledged him as sovereign, and transfer the throne to another. Some differences occurred in the arrangement. but they were slight, and the council were not indisposed to yield to the new nabob in slight matters, seeing that he yielded to them in some points which they regarded as of the highest importance—the native traders were ngain to be subjected to duties, while the servants of the Company were to carry on trade duty free, with the exception of two and a Thus, whatever half per cent. upon salt. might be the situation of the settled inhabitants of the country, those who sojourned among them for a brief period, for the purpose of amassing as much wealth and with as much speed as possible, had reason to rejoice. In addition to the important provisions respecting the inland trade, the treaty with Meer Jaffier confirmed to the English the possession of Burdwan, Midnapore, and Chittagong. restored nabob also agreed to maintain twelve thousand horse and twelve thousand foot, and more in case of emergency; to receive an English resident; to enforce within his dominions the receipt of the coinage of Calcutta without batta, or allowance; to give thirty lacs of rupees to defray the expenses and losses of the Company from the war and from the suspension of their investment (a measure which had become necessary by the failure of their When it became evident that hostilities funds); to reimburse the losses of private undertaking the management of land rents.

Calcutta on the 11th July to join the British Cossim further gratified his disposition for force which had been put in motion to effect blood by putting to death the two bankers, his restoration to the throne. It was com- Seit, whom he had some time before compelled his restoration to the throne. It was com-manded by Major Williams, a king's officer. to attend him, lest they should give assistance On the 19th, an engagement took place, which to the English. Their bodies were exposed, terminated in favour of the English, and com-under the care of a guard of sepoys, to the pelled the enemy to abandon the fort of Kut-voracity of beasts and birds of prey, that they the lines of Mootejil, and thus obtained pos-the practice of their country; and on the session of Moorshedabad and about fifty pieces advance of the English army their bones were the English, on the 2nd August, crossed a ravine in the face of the enemy, who waited a practicable breach had been made, capitulated for them on the plain of Geriah, near Scotee, to the English. The news of this reached Here a general engagement took place. The Meer Cossin at Patna, and inflamed him to battle was obstinately fought, and for a time such a pitch of fury, that he resolved on the lattle was obstinately fought, and for a time such a pitch of any, that he resolved on the victory seemed to oscillate between the compatible. At one period the enemy had succeeding in enormity even the atrocities of ceeded in breaking part of the British line, and taking possession of some of their cannon; were on their march towards Mongheer, he but the advantage was soon recovered, and, after a desperate conflict of four hours, the precipitate flight of the enemy transferred to put to death his European prisoners, and concluding thus: "Exult not upon the the Earlish passession of all their cannon and success which you have gained merely by the English possession of all their cannon, and success which you have gained, merely by of one hundred and fifty boats laden with grain. The defeated army fled to Outahnulla, places, over a few jemadars sent by me. By a fort situate between a chain of hills and the the will of God you shall see in what manner river, and defended by an intrenchment, on this shall be revenged and retaliated." He 's commenced approaches and batteries, but the renegade European named Sumroo. The priattack on the bank of the river, the real attack | seized and sent away. was made at the foot of the hills, and after an obstinate resistance on the part of the enemy, attended by great slaughter, the English obtained possession of the fort and cannon. was said, that Meer Cossim had sixty thousand It is said that they made all the resistance in men in arms within the intrenchment. exceed three thousand.

This place Meer Cossim had made his capital, no inclination to sustain a siege in person, he from the sentence of general massacre.

persons duly proved before the governor and putting to death several prisoners of distinccouncil; to renew his former treaty with the tion, some of them his own relations, of whose Dutch, which limited their power of erecting fidelity he did not feel entirely satisfied. fortifications and raising troops, and to re-|Among them was the unfortunate Ram Narstrain the French, should they ever appear rain, a victim to his own avarice and the unagain in the country, from erecting fortifica- happy divisions in the British Government. tions, maintaining forces, holding lands, or It is said that he was drowned with a bag of sand fastened round his neck. On the way to The treaty being signed, Meer Jaffier left [Patua, to which place he was returning, Meer On the 24th, the British force stormed might not be disposed of in conformity with Pursuing their victorious course, found secreted in an apartment of a house.

Mongheer was regularly attacked, and, after which were mounted a hundred pieces of was threatened with the utmost vengeance of cannon. The ditch was deep, about fifty or the British nation if the prisoners sustained sixty feet wide, and full of water. The ground harm; but neither the desperate guilt of the in front was swampy, and there was no ap- act which was meditated, nor the fearful conparent mode of approach but on the bank of sequences which might follow to its perpetrator, the river where the ground was dry for about deterred Meer Cossim from giving orders for a hundred yards; upon this spot the English its execution. He found a fit instrument in a lesign was only to deceive the enemy, and soners were of course unarmed, and in order waw off their attention from the point which that this murder might be accomplished with was seriously menaced. On the 5th Septem- the greater facility, a previous search was ber, while the enemy were amused by a false instituted for knives and forks, which were

The 3rd of October was the day of slaughter. Some of the victims were surrounded and fired upon; others were cut to pieces by the swords It of the soldiers employed in the dreadful work. The their power by throwing bottles and stones at English force, Europeans and sepoys, did not their murderers. Among the murdered was Mr. Ellis, whose impatience for hostilities had The victorious army advanced to Mongheer. | been so conspicuously displayed, and Mr. Hay, who had accompanied Mr. Amyatt on the misand had strengthened it as far as time and sion from the English Government to Meer circumstances would permit; but, as he had Cossim. One Englishman only was excepted quitted it on the approach of the English, was a surgeon, named Fullarton, and the value leaving a garrison for its defence. He had of his professional knowledge probably was previously signalized his temporary residence the cause of his preservation. The English there by a characteristic act of cruelty, in prisoners in other places shared the fate of those at Patna. Mr. Fullarton, notwithstand-| labours to which the troops had been subjected, ing the favour which had been shown him, but the distribution of money only partially feeling some misgivings as to his own security, succeeded in effecting his escape about three weeks after the slaughter of his companions. It is said that the total number of Englishmen murdered in various places amounted to two hundred.

Patna, where the principal scene of this tragedy had been neted, was soon to pass out of the hands of the miscreant by whom it had been thus polluted. On the 6th of November it was taken by storm, and from this period the fortune of Meer Cossim was decided. His 13th May, the British force was attacked. army was pursued by that of the English to the banks of the Caramnassa, which river he crossed to seek refuge in the territories of the soubabdar of Oude, with whom he had pre-commanded. Their numbers would bear no fled to the enemy; and on the other hand, the comparison with those of the army of Meer vizier property to diminish the territory of Cossim, which a military witness declared to Meer Jaffier, by severing from it the province be better appointed and better disciplined of Behar. Nothing resulted from these atthan any he had seen in India before. Meer tempts, real or pretended, at negotiation; and Cossim, though possessed of little military late in the month of June the enemy returned talent and less courage, had been very anxious into Oude, a movement accelerated by a de-derable extent succeeded.

When Meer Cossim crossed the Caramassa, the emperor and the vizier were in camp at this the council at Calcutta inferred that there Atlahabad. Thither the fugitive proceeded, was no reason to apprehend any return of inand was honoured with a most gracious recep- subordination. tion; but the desire of Meer Cossim that the less favourable; and as his opportunities of vizier should march against the English was observation were better, this circumstance evaded, on the ground that he was about to might have shielded an officer of his expeemploy his army in reducing to obedience rienced character from the censure with which some refractory dependants in Bundlecund, who had refused payment of revenue; Meer Cossim offered to undertake the task, and his services being accepted, he performed the duty entirely to the satisfaction of the vizier, who on his return to the camp agreed at once to march into Behar in support of the claims of the exiled nabob. The English authorities had been led, by communications from both the vizier and his master the emperor, to believe that Meer Cossim would be surrendered, or at least stripped of his wealth and power; but in case of the failure of this expectation, Major Carnac (who had succeeded to the command of the army) was instructed to advance his army to the banks of the Caramnassa to oppose the entrance of the enemy into the Unhappily the services of the army country. could not be depended upon. A spirit of dis-affection had widely spread; some of the troops went off to the enemy's camp, and the fidelity of those who remained was very doubtprincipally by a body of French troops, which, ment, extensive, summary, and severe. The in the exercise of a very questionable policy, latter officer, who was in the king's service, had been taken into the English service. The had been called from Bombay with as many alleged object of the movement was to obtain troops, both king's and Company's a donation in recompense of the extraordinary | be spared from that presidency, allayed the discontent. The prevalence of this feeling in the army, the scarcity of provisions, and the disinclination of Meer Jaffier to commence hostilities, all tended to compel the British commander to confine himself to acting on the defensive, instead of adopting the bolder line which was repeatedly pressed upon him from Calcutta. On the enemy's approach an advance had been resolved upon, but it was subsequently found necessary to retire upon Patna. There, early in the morning of the The conflict lasted till sunset, when the enemy was compelled to retire. Overtures for accommodation were at this time made both by the emperor and the vizier, but the English auviously concluded a treaty.

This campaign was most honourable to the the delivery of Meer Cossim, the ruffian British force and to those by whom it was Sumroo, and the English deserters who had to improve his army by the introduction of monstration made by Major Carnac of carrying European discipline, and he had to a consi-hostilities beyond the frontier.

In the action on the 13th May the British troops had behaved most creditably, and from Major Carnac's opinion was he was visited by the council for not entering upon a more adventurous course than he thought fit to pursue. The name of Major Carnac was not unknown in Indian warfare, and those under whom he served must have been aware that he was not a man likely to evade encountering the enemy without good cause. He had avowed his opinion that the army under his command, "if stanch, was a full match for the enemy;" but he had added an expression of his form; an expression of his fear, that the open display of disaffection had only been kept down by the fear of punishment and the want of opportunity; and that numerous desertions would have taken place had not desertion been rendered exceedingly difficult by "the position he had taken, and the good look-out that was kept." While he held the command solitary instances of insubordination were not of unfrequent occurrence; and his successor, Major Munro, found the army, on his arrival to assume the command, in a state which, in his The mutiny was incited and kept alive judgment, called for the infliction of punishin proceeding with the troops which had accompanied him to Patna. The army previ- obedience or attempt at flight. The order was ously assembled there, Europeans and sepoys, were in a state of mutiny. Desertions were were blown away, and the remaining four frequent, and the mutineers soon went to the carried to another cantonment where consiextent of threatening to carry off their officers and deliver them up to the enemy. Not only did they clamour for payment of a donation and desertion were at an end. Such measures alleged to have been promised by the nabob, but an augmentation of pay was demanded; and the entire force of the British which had been assembled in the neighbourhood of Patna seemed on the point of breaking up. Such being the situation of the army, Major Munro, to use his own words, "determined to endeavour to conquer that mutinous disposition in them before" he "would attempt to conquer the enemy." In the spirit of this determination, he proceeded with a detachment and four field-pieces to one of the cantonments at a short distance from Patna. On the day of his arrival a battalion of sepoys marched off with their arms and accoutrements to join the enemy. A party, consisting of a hundred Europeans and a battalion of sepoys, whose officers reported that they might be depended upon, was despatched with two field-pieces in pursuit of the deserters. They came up with them in the night, surprised them while asleep, made them prisoners, and marched them back main body were to pass, and advance on the to the cantonment. The officer commanding opposite bank for the purpose of dislodging the detachment sent forward an express, announcing the precise hour at which his arrival British troops. It was important that Major Major Munro was prepared to receive them river at the same time that the main body serters fifty of those who bore the worst a view to secure this-and with so much precharacter, and who were likely to have been cision were they executed, that Major Chamtwenty-four reputed to be the worst men in the fifty was made, and these were immediately placed upon trial before a field court-martial composed of native officers assembled on the spot. They were found guilty of mutiny and descrition, and sentenced to suffer death, the mode of carrying the sentence into effect being left to the direction of the commander-in-chief. He ordered them forthwith to be bound to the guns, and blown away. The order was no sooner made known than four grenadiers repost of honour, they were entitled to suffer break on the morning after his arrival.

of the alarm created by the invasion from to return to the heads of their battalions, and Arriving at Calcutta, he lost no time the men were ordered to ground their arms under pain of being fired upon in case of discomplied with-sixteen more of the offenders derable desertion had taken place, there to suffer in like manner. From this time mutiny can only be justified by strong necessity, and though it is impossible to regard them without a feeling of horror, we must not, under the indulgence of such a feeling, forget the paramount necessity of upholding military loyalty and subordination, and the direful mischief of which an insurgent army might be the cause.

The army being once more in a state in which it might be trusted to meet an enemy, Major Munro prepared to take the field as early as possible after the rains; the 15th September was fixed for the rendezvous of the troops from the different cantonments. Before the army was put in motion, intelligence was received that the enemy had advanced several parties of horse, and thrown up some breastwork on the banks of the Soane to impede the passage of the English. To remove this obstacle, Major Champion was despatched with a detachment and four field-pieces to cross the river some miles below the place where the the enemy and covering the landing of the with the prisoners might be expected, and Champion should arrive on one side of the with the troops under arms. He immediately reached the other. The movements of both ordered their officers to pick out from the de- parts of the British force were regulated with authors of the movement, or chief actors in it. pion's detachment began to fire on the enemy This being done, a further selection of the at the moment when the van of Major Munro's army appeared on the opposite bank. enemy was soon dislodged—the English force was thus enabled to cross the river without molestation, and in four hours the operation was completed. Major Munro then continued his march towards Buxar, where the enemy lay. On the 22nd October he arrived there, and encamped just beyond the range of the enemy's shot. He found them intrenched with the Ganges on their left and the village of Buxar in their rear. The first intention of presented, that as they had always enjoyed the Major Munro was to attack them before dayfirst. Their desire was complied with, the spies were sent out to ascertain in what part four men bound to the guns were released, the of their encampment the force of their artilgrenadiers fastened in their places and exe- lery lay, where the tents of the vizier and cuted. The officers of the native troops in the Meer Cossim stood, and whether the British field then informed the major that the sepoys artillery could be brought to bear on the were resolved not to permit any more men to suffer. He immediately directed the four field-avoid attacking them on their left, in order, pieces to be loaded with grape-shot, and the said he, "that we might have a better chance Europeans to be drawn up with the guns in to drive them into the Ganges than they should intervals between them. The officers who had made the communication were commanded the spies. The British commander concluded that they had fallen into the hands of the the victors to afford. Surgical assistance could enemy, and he resolved to postpone the attack not be rendered, for all that was available was till the following morning. As the day broke, insufficient to meet the wants of the wounded two of the spics returned, and reported that of the English army; but for five successive the enemy had been under arms all night, that days the field was traversed in search of those they had been moving their artillery, and that in whom life was not extinct, and rice and the women and treasure had been sent away. water bestowed on all who would receive it. A reconnoiseance took place, and many of the To ensure the due discharge of this humane enemy's troops were perceived under arms, but not beyond the intrenchments; and it was the commander-in-chief, who thus showed that, the opinion of Major Munro and all the officers although when circumstances required severity who accompanied him, that the bustle apparent in the enemy's camp was a feint. "In this belief," said the major, "I returned to our camp, wishing they would come out and demands of military law. nttack us, for our army was encamped in order On the day after the battle the emperor adof battle." His wish was gratified. At eight dressed a letter to Major Munro, congratuo'clock the field-officer of the day announced lating him on the victory which he had gained that the enemy's right was in motion, and that over the vizier—by whom the emperor alleged he was confident that they were seriously re- he had been treated as a prisoner—soliciting solved on making an attack. The drums were the protection of the English, and adding, that immediately ordered to beat to arms, the troops though he had been in camp with the vizier, he advanced from their encampment, and in a few had left him on the night before the battle. minutes were ready to receive the approaching enemy. The action commenced at nine and Buxar, making provision for the wounded and raged till twelve, when the enemy gave way. They retired, however, leisurely, blowing up several tumbrils and three large magazines of powder as they went off. The British army broke into columns to pursue; but pursuit was frustrated by the vizier sacrificing part of his army to preserve the remainder. miles from the field of battle was a rivulet, over which a bridge of boats had been con-This the enemy destroyed before their rear had passed over; and through this act about two thousand of them were drowned or otherwise lost. Destructive as was this proceeding, it was, says Major Munro, "the best piece of generalship Shoojah-ad-Dowlah showed that day; because, if I had crossed the rivulet with the army, I would either have taken or drowned his whole army in the Caramnassa, and come up with his treasure and jewels, and Cossim Ali Khan's jewels, which, I was informed, amounted to between two and three millions.

The British force engaged in this memorable battle consisted of eight hundred and fifty-seven Europeans, five thousand two hundred and ninety-seven sepoys, and nine hundred and eighteen native cavalry, making a total of seven thousand and seventy-two men. They had a train of artillery of twenty field-pieces. The force of the enemy, according to some reports, amounted to sixty thousand men, and the lowest estimate fixes it at forty thousand. this vast number two thousand were left dead upon the field of battle, exclusive of those who perished from the destruction of the bridge; the enemy also lost one hundred and thirtythree pieces of caunon of various sizes. loss of the English in killed and wounded was severe, amounting to no less than eight hundred and forty-seven. The situation of the wounded enemy was pitiable, but they received provision, it was personally superintended by he would not shrink from its exercise, he was not less prompt in executing the gentle offices of charity than in enforcing obedience to the

The British army remained several days at burying the dead. Major Munro then marched in the direction of Benares. marched with his guards in the same direction, and every night pitched his tent within a very short distance of the British encampment. Subsequently to the transmission of the letter, the Emperor had sought an interview with Major Munro, in which he renewed his request for British protection, and offered to bestow in return the dominions of Shoojah-ad-Dowlah, or any thing else which the British government might please to demand. Major Munro had referred the subject to those under whom he was acting, and declined giving any countenance to the emperor's wishes until authorized by instructions from Calcutta. At length instructions arrived. They were favourable to the emperor, and he was thenceforward regarded as under British protection.

The emperor was not the only person who had reason to complain of the friendship of Shoojah-ad-Dowlah. Meer Cossim had become anxious to enjoy his alliance at a greater distance, and in the hope of escaping had proposed to depart for a season under pretence of The wary vizier was not collecting revenue. to be thus deceived. Suspecting that the real purpose of the proposed expedition was not that which was professed, he objected to its being undertaken, and Meer Cossim was com-But though the vizier thus pelled to submit. refused to allow his friend an opportunity of collecting his revenues, he was not disposed to forget that Meer Cossim had purchased his alliance by an engagement to pay a monthly subsidy. Payment was demanded, but Meer Cossim pleaded his inability to comply. The vizier then called to his aid the name of his master the emperor, who, he affirmed, was pressing for the Bengal tribute, and that if it were not forthwith paid, the effects of Meer all the attention which it was in the power of Cossim would be seized by the imperial besought the friendly offices of the vizier to avert this extremity; but the vizier declared that he could not interfere, and that the accounts must be settled with the emperor. Meer Cossim felt, or affected to be in despair; and to shame the vizier into greater consideration, he relinquished the state which he had been accustomed to maintain, and assumed the mortified habit and bearing of a devotee. The vizier, hearing of the change, appeared greatly shocked; he lost no time in visiting the desponding prince, and by repeated assurances of the undiminished warmth and sincerity of his friendship, at length induced him to abandon the dress and deportment by which his feelings of disappointment and dejection were expressed, and reassume his princely habiliments and mode of life. But Meer Cossim had yet to gain further experience of the character of his friend. His troops became clamorous for their pay, and surrounded the tent of their master, demanding a settlement. Meer Cossim was unprepared with the ordinary silver currency of the country; and to appease them he was obliged to have recourse to a cherished hoard of gold. This, however, was not a process to be repeated, and to avoid the necessity of again resorting to it, Meer Cossim resolved to get rid of an army which he was no longer able to pay without trenching upon resources that were reserved for the last pressure of extremity. The riotous troops were headed by Sumroo, the wretch who had been the willing instrument of executing the murderous orders of the Nabob at Patna. him Meer Cossim communicated his intention of dispensing with the services of the force which he had commanded, and he requested that the cannon, as well as the arms and accoutrements of the men, might be returned to one of his officers. Sumroo was not prepared to recognize the justness of the demand; he · had a strong opinion of the right of posses-He answered that the articles belonged those who had them in their keeping, and his practice illustrated his principle. He immediately tendered the services of himself and his battalions to the vizier, by whom they were most graciously accepted. Such an accession to the vizier's army was valuable; and it is not recorded that the prince entertained any scruples on account of the arms and equipments of the men having been furnished at the expense of his friend. This transfer had taken place before the battle of Buxar. Sumroo had there acted on behalf of the vizier; but, as has been seen, he gained for his new employer neither honour nor advan-The day after the discharge of the troops by Meer Cossim his tents were surrounded by the troops of the vizier, who, suspecting that his friend's stock of gold was not exhausted, was desirous of transferring it into his own coffers. Meer Cossim was mounted tute for this measure was more dishonourable on an elephant, and carried to the camp of his than the surrender would have been.

Meer Cossim, as was natural, extent of his effects, and all that could be discovered were appropriated by the vizier. Meer. Cossim, however, was able to secrete a number of valuable jewels, which were despatched by one of his followers to the Rohilla country.

In the plunder of his friend, the vizier observed neither moderation nor mercy. would have taken the last rupee which Meer Cossim possessed, if he had been able to discover where it was deposited. thus indulging his rapacity without restraint, he steadily refused—and his conduct in this respect was certainly creditable—to surrender Meer Cossim into the hands of the English. The demand had been made before the battle of Buxar and rejected; it was repeated afterwards with no better success. When Major Munro arrived at Benares, the vizier despatched to him an envoy, named Beny Bahadur, to make proposals of peace. The major insisted, as a preliminary, upon the delivery of Meer Cossim and Sumroo. Beny Bahadar declared the concession of this demand to be impossible, but said, that, if it were abandoned, the vizier would give twenty-five lacs of rupees to the Company towards the expenses of the war, twenty-five lacs to the army, and eight lacs to the British commander. The manner in which the proposal was received by Major Munro is thus related by himself :- "My answer was, that if he gave me all the lacs in his treasury, I would make no peace with him until he had delivered me up those murdering rascals; for I never could think that my receiving eleven or twelve lacs of rupees was a sufficient atonement for the blood of those unfortunate gentlemen who were murdered at Patna." This decisive declaration silenced the vizier's envoy, and he departed. He returned after a time, in the hope of softening the British commander, but the latter refused to vary his determination in the slightest degree. Beny Bahadur then requested that an officer, named Captain Stables, might accompany him back, as the captain was familiar with the country language, and the vizier wished to make a proposal to him. The officer whose presence was thus sought was left by his commander at perfect liberty to accept or decline this invitation according to his own discretion. Major Munro told him that he neither advised nor wished him to go, as he might perhaps meet the fate of the sufferers of Patua. Captain Stables, however, resolved to incur the danger, and he proceeded to the vizier's camp. A compromise was now proposed. Shoojah-ad-Dowlah would not de-liver up Meer Cossim, but he was ready to withdraw from him his protection (if protection it were) and connive at his escape. regard to Sumroo, the vizier was prepared to go further. He would not surrender him, though his scruple was inexplicable, inasmuch as the course which he proposed as a substially. A rigid investigation was made as to the plan was that two or three gentlemen from the English camp who were acquainted with power more conspicuous than was desired; and Sumroo's person should visit the camp of the to remove the succession out of the family of vizier. Sumroo was then to be invited to an the late nabob might, as the council observed, entertainment, and amidst the festive rites "create troubles." But though the new nabob was to meet his death, in presence of the Eng- apparently ascended the musnud according to lish witnesses. The vizier supported his plan ordinary rules, he was, in effect, but the creaby an argument seldom neglected in the field of ture of the British power, and in bestowing Oriental dialectics—he offered Captain Stables on him the throne, the opportunity afforded a large sum to use his influence with his com- for adding to the stability of that power was mander to get the terms accepted; but the not neglected. project was not one likely to meet the countenance of Englishmen, and its framer was still Company's government the military defence doomed to find his proposals rejected.

All hope of making terms with Shoojah-ad-Dowlah being at an end, the British army continued its march towards Allahabad. ing up any greater military force than might Chunarghur was besieged and a practicable be necessary for purposes of state, for the breach effected, but the assault failed through the bad behaviour of the sepoys, and the success of a second was frustrated in like manner by the failure of the European troops who led the van: these running back, the whole gave way. In the meantime Shoojah-ad-Dowlah was endeavouring to get into the rear of the British army, and one object of this movement was to carry off the emperor. But the were appointed for the management of the attempt was unsuccessful. converted the siege of Chunarghur into a the next object of anxiety. The old nabob blockade, and leaving a sufficient force to had been madly attached to a man named maintain it, retired with the rest of the army Nuncomar, one of the most faithless and proto Benares. Shoojah-ad-Dowlah continuing to fligate politicians that could be found even in approach, the English commander concentrated an Eastern court; to him all the power of his force by withdrawing the detachment from Chunarghur in expectation of a general action. The two armies, however, long remained in a state of quiescence, and before activity was again manifested, Major Munro had relinquished his command and quitted India.

The death of Meer Jaffier, which occurred in February, placed the throne of Bengal once more at the disposal of the English authorities. The competitors were Noojum-ad-Dowlah, the second son of Meer Jaffier (but the eldest surviving), and the infant son of Meerun. The former was on the verge of manhood, the latter was only about six years of age. As throne. Nuncomar's station gave him great both were illegitimate, neither had any legal influence, and his cunning and activity enabled right to the succession; but both had enjoyed him to make the best use of it for advancing the advantage of having been publicly recognized by the former nabob as entitled to it. lish authorities he had applied to the emperor The British Government determined in favour for sunnuds confirming Noojum-ad-Dowlah in of the candidate of riper age. Their decision the succession; and they arrived before the appears to have been influenced by a regard formal recognition of the nabob by the British to the public feeling in his favour, and by a government had taken place. But the power prudent desire to avoid giving to the successory of that government was in the ascendant. Sion the appearance of a new revolution. Previously the new nabob seems not to have stood comar to the terms proposed by them had high in their esteem. They avowed that they been removed—a treaty founded on those had no favourable opinion either of his terms had been signed, and Mahomed Reza abilities or his character; but, barring his illegitimacy, Noojum-ad-Dowlah was the successor manager. Besides the military defence of the to whom the Mahometan law pointed. The country, and the recommendation or appoint-son of Meerun was an infant, as were the ment of the chief minister of the nabob, the younger children of Meer Jaffier, and though council had stipulated for such a degree of the elevation of one of these might have con-influence in the appointment of officers of tributed to increase the actual power of the revenue as should be sufficient, it Company, it would also have rendered that to guard against any figurant

The tendency of events for some years past had been to throw on the of the three provinces. They were now to be formally invested with this office. The nabob was to be relieved from the expense of keepmaintenance of internal peace, and for enforcing the collection of revenue. To meet the increased expense that would thus be thrown on the Company, a monthly payment of five lacs, which Meer Jaffier had made for a short time, was to be continued. In adverting to the incapacity of the new nabob, the council had promised to take care that proper officers Major Munro affairs of the government. To ensure this was the state had been committed almost without control. Nuncomar was an enemy, and a treacherous enemy, to the English. The diminution of his power was consequently indispensable to the security of their interests, and this it was proposed to effect by transferring the exercise of the chief authority in the state to one believed to be better entitled to confi-The man selected for the office of chief minister was named Mahomed Reza Khan, and the favour shewn him by the English gave Nuncomar an opportunity of insinuating that it was intended to place him on the reproof.

these arrangements may fairly be supposed to and as a determined resolution to sacrifice the have had their origin in an honest zeal for the interests of the Company and the peace of the benefit of the Company by whose servants country to lucrative and selfish views. they were made, and of the country to which The same favourable view they belonged. cannot be taken of their conduct in another They renewed with Noojum-adinstance. Dowlah the agreement contained in the last treaty made with his father for continuing to the new nabob on the throne had the usual the English the privilege of carrying on the opportunities of promoting their own special inland trade free from duties, excepting the interests. Presents of large amount were tentwo and a half per cent. paid on salt. Not only it was in direct contravention of positive notunrelenting: asusual on such occasions, their orders from the Company at home. The Court scruples gave way before the arguments of their of Directors, by letter dated 8th of February, tempters. The nabob dispensed his wealth with continued. The Court of Proprietors shortly of Mahomed Reza Khan was manifested by afterwards recommended a reconsideration of the earnestness with which he pressed a partipany." The Court of Directors accordingly, in a letter dated the 1st June, 1764, desired ready, in the spirit of commercial speculation, the dispatch, "with his free will and consent, and in such a manner as not to afford any just Spencer, a gentleman who, most opportunely grounds of complaint"—a proper and equitor himself, had been brought from Bombay table plan for carrying on the private trade: just in time to improve his fortune to the exbut it is to be remarked, in giving these direction of two lacs of rupees. Among other large disapprobation of those articles in the treaty with Meer Jaffier which provided for the immunity of the Company's servants from customs duties except on salt, while the general these orders, the council of Calcutta inserted in their treaty with Noojum-ad-Dowlah an pany the privilege of continuing to trade upon two lacs and thirty-seven thousand rupeesorders were thus set at nought address those thousand five hundred.

important branch of the public service. All an express breach and violation of our orders, unaccountable behaviour puts an end to all confidence in those who made this treaty.

While the private trade was thus secured for the benefit of the Company's servants in general, those who had been instrumental in placing dered, and though for a time the members of was this unreasonable and unjust in itself, but council displayed a decent coyness, they were 1764, had required the inland trade to be dis- a liberality becoming his rank. The gratitude the subject with a view to its regulation in cipation in his good fortune upon those who such a manner as should "prevent all further had bestowed it on him; and Juggut Seit, disputes between the soubabdar and the Com- anxious for the support of the British council in aiding his influence with the nabob, was the council of Fort William to form, with the to purchase it. Mr. Vansittart had retired approbation of the nabob—in the language of from the government before the death of Meer Jaffier, and the chair was occupied by Mr. tions, the Court took occasion to express their sharers in the shower of wealth were Messrs. Johnstone, Leycester, Senior, and Middleton. These gentlemen had formed a deputation, to whom was entrusted the arrangement with the nabob of the terms of the treaty. exemption granted by Meer Cossim was to be Johnstone had formerly laid down the prinreversed. The Court write, "These are terms ciple that money bestowed in reward of service which appear to be so very injurious to the rendered by the representatives of the Comnabob and to the natives, that they cannot, in pany, and by their power and influence, rightthe very nature of them, tend to any thing fully belonged to the Company; he had but the producing general heart-burnings and expressed a tender regard for the reputation of disaffection; and consequently there can be Mr. Vansittart and his colleagues, by recommendation reason to expect that tranquillity in the mending the diversion of Meer Cossim's ntry can be permanent: the orders there-bounty into another channel, lest suspicion ontry can be permanent: the orders therein our said letter of the 8th of February" should attach to their motives; and he had the orders directing the entire abandonment bond of large amount was offered them, it had been disappoint to the readily of the readi until a more equitable and satisfactory plan not been immediately placed to the credit of can be formed and adopted." In the face of the Company. His views had undergone a change, neither the cause nor the process of which is anywhere explained; but he accepted article, reserving to the servants of the Com- | (and did not place to the credit of the Company) the same terms as had been granted by Meer his share thus considerably exceeding that of Jaffier-terms which the Directors declared the governor. Mr. Senior received one lac injurious to both prince and people, and twenty-two thousand five hundred rupees; incompatible with the tranquillity of the Mr. Middleton one lac twenty-two thousand country. Well might the authority whose five hundred; Mr. Leycester one lac twelve Messrs. Pleydell, by whom the new treaty was framed and con- Burdett, and Gray, members of council, recluded, in language of severe and indignant ceived one lac each. How the money had In expressing their opinion upon been merited in the case of Mr. Burdett does the treaty, the Court, after adverting to this not appear, as he had voted alone for calling article and to their previous orders, say, "we the infant son of Meerun to the throne. Permust and do consider what you have done as haps it was to prevent trouble arising from his

of the nabob's generosity was Mr. Gideon Johnstone, who was not in the council, nor at the time had ever been in the Company's service; he received fifty thousand rupees for no reason that can be discovered, except that he was the brother of the gentleman who was chief of the deputation.

While the arrangements consequent on the death of Meer Jaffier were in progress, the war in the northern provinces continued to be carried on to the advantage of the English. The council being, however, anxious to bring it to an end, made a very extraordinary proposal towards accommodation. The demand for the surrender of Meer Cossim and Sumroo being the principal obstacle, they expressed their willingness to recede from it on one condition, and the condition was, that the vizier should put Meer Cossim and Sumroo to death "as an act of justice." The Court of Directors, when informed of the proposal, declared it impossible to believe that this experiment on the vizier's regard for his friends was seriously meant, adding very justly, "if the law of hospitality forbad his delivering them up, surely it forbade his murdering them."

Chunarghur and Allahabad surrendered to the English in February. In the latter place the emperor took up his residence. The vizier fled to Lucknow, and from thence to seek refuge among the Rohillas. Meer Cossim had made his escape from the protection of the vizier, and followed the jewels which he had preserved from the plunder to which he had been subjected. Sumroo, having no affection for a falling cause, was seeking a new service.

The power of the vizier had indeed been completely broken, and the English were in a condition to strip him altogether of dominion, or to tolerate his retention of it upon any terms which they pleased to dictate; but before his fate was determined, Mr. Spencer had ceased to be the head of the British government in Bengal, and Clive, who during his residence in England had been created an Irish peer, arrived on the 3rd of May to supply his place.

The new governor was accompanied from England by two civil servants of the Company, Mr. Sumner and Mr. Sykes; and these, with Mr. Verelst and General Carnac, were to form a select committee, vested with extraordinary powers, to pursue whatever means they should judge most proper to restore peace and tranquility to the country. Whenever it could be done conveniently, the council at large were to be consulted; but the power of determining was to rest in the committee alone. As soon as peace and tranquillity should be "restored and established in the soubahdar-

A scarcely less remarkable object | ment, before whose victorious arms the vizier was flying; while, with the emperor, relations of friendly alliance had been established. Clive seems to have been disappointed that there was so little left for him to achieve; and he felt more especially aggrieved by the government having provided a successor to Meer Jaffier before his arrival. The promptitude of the council might have been influenced by views of personal advantage; but the dissatisfaction of Clive was unreasonable, and must be referred to a feeling more lofty, perhaps, than that of his rivals, but not more disin-The ardour of the council might be terested. stimulated by cupidity, while the complaints of Clive were the fruits of disappointed am-

The committee lost no time in entering upon their duties; but, as might have been expected, the members of the council showed no alacrity in recognizing their authority. Mr. Leycester and Mr. Johnstone were desirous of obtaining some explanation from the committee as to the meaning and intent of their powers, which were especially limited to the restoration of peace and tranquillity; but Clive answered that he would not discuss such points—that the committee themselves were the sole judges of their own powers, and were resolved to carry them into execution. fierce and haughty bearing of Clive silenced his opponents, if it did not satisfy them.

A subject which was among those that first occupied the attention of the committee was one which the council would gladly have post-The enormous presents, by which many of the Company's servants had enriched themselves at the expense of opulent and powerful natives, had attracted attention at home. The danger and the scandal of permitting such practices to be continued without restraint had been felt, and it had been resolved to prepare forms of covenant to be executed by the civil and military servants of the Company, binding them not to accept the gift of any land, rents, or revenue whatever, nor of any other property, beyond a small amount, without the consent of the Court of The covenants had arrived at Directors. Calcutta in January, but the council had not taken any steps towards procuring their execution; and, indeed, as the death of Meer Jaffier and the accession of his eldest surviving son immediately followed the arrival of the covenants, it is obvious that a hasty execution of those documents would to the council have been exceedingly inconvenient. It appears, also, that they disapproved of them on principle; they thought them too unreasonable and absurd to be adopted or acted upon. their own body stated that he had heard from ship of Bengal," the extraordinary powers of his brethren that the regulation appeared to the committee were to cease, and the committee itself to be dissolved. At the time of liable to so many objections, that they pro-Clive's arrival, the son of Meer Jaffier was in posed sending home a remonstrance against peaceful possession of the throne of Bengal, it, setting forth their reasons for judging the under the protection of the English Govern-measure inexpedient and improper. The select remptorily required that the covenants should to be inadequate; but the reasons which they be executed; and the demand met with urged against pressing for more were creditable little resistance, though it excited much dis- both to their liberality and prudence. The content.

A very unfavourable report of the conduct of those who had been engaged in placing Noojum-ad-Dowlah on the throne was made by the select committee to the Court of Directors. Some of Clive's opponents were men of energy scarcely inferior to his own; but he had the power to crush them, and was not indisposed to exert it. Some of the discontented, to avert worse consequences, retired; some of the more refractory were suspended, and no inconsiderable number were ultimately dismissed the service. Mahomed Reza Khan was exonerated from the charges preferred against him, but he was not permitted to enjoy his vast power unimpaired. The nabob had manifested great dislike to the arrangement by which it had been placed in his hands, and it was reduced by admitting Juggut Seit and Roydooloob to a participation. The nabob gained nothing by this division of power; but it might possibly in some degree soothe his irritated feelings, and it had the additional to the jaghire, and five lacs and a half of rupees recommendation of annoying Clive's opponents.

adjusted—the conclusion of the war with the ing to thirty-two lacs. Clive answered that it vizier, the settlement of the relations of the Company with the emperor, and a new arrangement with the nabob; for this, too, formed part of the plans of Clive. The vizier, with his allies, the Mahrattas, having on the 3rd of May been defeated by the English, he signified, a few days afterwards, his desire of peace, upon any conditions which the victors might of the English negotiators (so it is termed think fit to prescribe. Clive proceeded to the by themselves) drew from him expressions of English camp to arrange the terms; and the vanquished prince had no reason to complain of their harshness. The transfer of the entire domi ions of the vizier to the emperor had

: regarded by Clive (as well as by the Court directors at home, when they became aware numbered among things to be forgotten. the project) as impolitic and dangerous. The vizier was therefore restored to the possession of all the territories which he had previously governed, with the exception of Korah, and such parts of the province of bestow upon the Company the dewanny, or Allahabad as were then actually occupied by the emperor. A defensive alliance was to subsist between the vizier, the nabob, and the English; the latter were to carry on trade duty free; but the vizier objected to granting them permission to establish factories within his dominions, and the claim was not pressed. The surrender of Meer Cossim and Sumroo was no longer within the vizier's power—one impediment to peace was thus removed, and the prince evinced no reluctance to stipulate that he would never entertain, receive, or countenance them. As an indemnification for committee took a different view. They pe-|amount Clive and the select committee allowed vizier's "circumstances," they represented, "would not afford more without oppressing the country, and thereby laying the foundation of future contention and trouble." This explanation was followed by pointing out that no money had been granted "for any other consideration whatsoever." The intent of this remark is obvious; but as some of the select committee were not distinguished for shunning the favours of fortune, its good taste is less palpable. The emperor was less fortunate than his rebellious officer. Not only was his expectation of establishing himself in the place of the vizier disappointed, but in the settlement of his recognized claims to tribute from Bengal, more regard was shown to the convenience of those who had to pay than to the right of him who had to receive. The emperor demanded the amount, in money and jaghire, which had been fixed by engagements with Meer Jaffier and Meer Cossim. Clive successfully objected were thus annually saved to the revenues of Bengal. This point being yielded, the emperor More important matters remained to be applied for the arrears which were due, amountwas impossible to pay one rupee, on account of the impoverishment of the treasury from various causes, more especially the war, which he did not fail to remind the emperor had been maintained partly on his majesty's account. The emperor resisted this attempt to confiscate the arrears of his tribute, and the "obstinacy" "warmth and displeasure;" but the descendant of the emperors of Delhi had no choice but to abandon his claim with a good grace, or to continue to assert it without any hope of pro-· seriously contemplated; but the design fitting by his pertinacity. He took the former course, and the thirty-two lacs of arrears were negotiation proceeded, and in its progress the English government gained an important accession to its power and influence. emperor had some years before offered to collection of the revenue, of the three provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, but it was then declined. It was now solicited, bestowed, and accepted. The English East-India Company was acknowledged as the representative of the throne of Delhi in the three provinces; and the nizamut, or the executive functions of government, being at the same time confirmed to the nebels the British and the same time. to the nabob, the British authorities were fortified by the sanction of that power which not long before had been paramount in India, and which still commanded respectful homage, even when unable to enforce obedience.

the expenses of the war, he agreed to pay fifty lacs of rupees within thirteen months. This available had been previously prepared. Clive, by representing to the nabob the financial with his colleagues in the select committee, difficulties by which he was surrounded, had Messrs. Sumner, Verelst, and Sykes, for the prevailed upon him to accept of an annual allowance of fifty-three lacs of rupees for the been made to excuse Clive, on the ground that support of his dignity and contingent expenses, his share of the profits of the speculation leaving the remainder of the revenues to be (which were enormous) was not appropriated disbursed by the English government. grant of the emperor entitled the Company to certain friends and dependents. This cannot any surplus that might remain after the stipu- alter the character of the proceeding. lated payments were made; and they now had declared that the trade ought not to be lacked nothing of sovereignty but the name.

Clive, the nabob seems to have had little reason for complaint. His title to the throne he could no more be justified in entering upon was not the clearest, and it is admitted alike by the testimony of friends and foes that he was altogether unfit for the active duties of government. There is no evidence that he evinced any unwillingness to accept the name of sovereign and a large revenue, as a full satisfaction of his claims; and as he was one of the weakest, if not one of the worst, of Oriental princes—utterly sunk in intemperance | affluence of fortune, indifferent to the means and sensuality, incapable of rational thought by which it may have been obtained—is or vigorous effort—an arrangement which pro- there a man who, void of all but selfish feelvided him the means of unbounded indulgence, and relieved him from the cares of state, offered that promises not sudden riches to those, his as the price of power that which a mind like the nabob's might be presumed to value more. Towards the emperor Clive scarcely showed equal liberality. It might not be expedient to gratify his wish to employ the English as the instruments of making conquests for his benefit; but the mode in which his pecuniary claims upon the three provinces were disposed of was not that which the emperor of Delhi had a right to expect at the hands of those to whom he was giving a place among the states of India.

Among the various questions of which Clive had to dispose, during this his third period of residence in India, was that of the private trade. The Court of Directors, it will be recollected, had forbidden their servants engaging in that trade, till some plan should be near relation of Lord Clive; he had been Meer Jaffier and confirmed by his weak suc-fortune had been far inferior to that of his Clive, when at home, had strenuously urged the necessity of restraining the servants of the Company from trading in salt, betel-that it was tolerably proportioned to his merits. the chief objects of internal commerce, and with which the interference of foreigners had and another appears to have contributed to been felt as peculiarly vexatious. In a letter his comfort in an humbler capacity—he is to the Court of Directors before he left England, he said, "The trading in salt, betel, and tobacco, having been one cause of the present disputes, I hope these articles will be restored to the nabob, and your servants absolutely forbid to trade in them." Again, in another letter: "The odium of seeing such monopolies in the hands of foreigners need not be insisted on." It could scarcely, therefore, have been doubted that Clive would have been zealous in carrying out the orders of the Court of Directors, consonant as they were to his own avowed opinions: yet, within a month after his arrival at Calcutta, Clive entered into a partnership was resolved to perform.

purpose of dealing in salt. An attempt has The to his own benefit, but was distributed among permitted to the servants of the Company, In the arrangements made at this time with and the Court of Directors had forbidden them to engage in it. Under these circumstances. the trade in salt for the benefit of others than for his own. Clive, too, at the very time he was thus acting, was claiming the character of a reformer, and addressing the Court of Directors in such language as the following: "Is there a man auxious for the speedy return of his son, his brother, or his friend, and solicitous to see that return accompanied by ings, can withhold his approbation of any plan dearest connections-who can look with contempt upon measures of moderation, and who can cherish all upstart greatness, though stigmatized with the spoils of the Company-if there is such a man, to him all arguments would be vain-to him I speak not. My address is to those who can judge coolly of the advantages to be desired for their relations and friends, nor think the body corporate wholly unentitled to their attention." Clive at this time was engaging in a trade forbidden by the orders of his superiors, for the purpose of enriching suddenly several persons, some of whom, at least, had small claims upon the Company or the country. One of them, Captain Maskeylyne, was a devised more equitable than that conceded by in the service of the Company; his good patron, but it seems, from the testimony of a witness not indisposed to speak favourably, nut, and tobacco, articles which were among Another of the fortunate sharers in the salt profits was the private surgeon of Lord Clive; stated to have been his lordship's footman. On the inconsistency of such conduct with either the public duty or the public professions of Clive it is unnecessary to dwell.

Clive, however, found employment of a different nature to that of bestowing fortunes on his friends, and carrying out the inland trade among the Company's servants. Whatever might be thought of these acts at home, they could not fail to be popular in India. Not so the reduction of the emoluments of the army, which was one of the duties imposed npon Clive by his instructions, and one which he

After the battle of Plassy, the Nabob Meer directly or indirectly, by the government of Jaffier had granted to the English troops whom Ludia. But at the time of enforcing the order he was to support double batta, or field allow-When the mode of defraying the expenses of the army was changed, by the assignment to the Company of certain districts for the purpose, the Court of Directors ordered that double batta should be abolished. These instructions, though often repeated, had never been carried into effect; and, as in the case of the covenants against the receipt of presents. it remained for Clive to enforce orders which apathy, fear, or inclination had previously permitted to slumber. The select committee accordingly issued an order, directing that, from the 1st January, 1766, double batta should cease, except at Allahabad, where, on account of the distance from Calcutta, the allowance was to be continued while the troops were actually in the field, but was to be reduced to single batta when they retired into cantonments. At Patna and Mongheer the troops were to have half batta when not on service. At the presidency they were to be placed on the same footing as at Madras; they were to draw no batta, except when actually marching or serving in the field. Against this order remonstrance was offered, but in vain. The order was enforced; and the enforcement led to a wide-spread conspiracy among the European officers, organized with much care and great secrecy, the object of which was the simultaneous resignation of their commissions on a given day. The details of this discreditable business would afford neither instruction nor pleasure; the subject may, therefore, be passed over with more than ordinary brevity. Clive exerted himself vigorously to repress the mutinous movement; he was ably supported by Sir Robert Barker and Colonel A. Smith. who commanded two of the three brigades into which the army was divided. maining brigade was commanded by Sir Robert Fletcher; and he, it was discovered, though not is lil the mutiny was very far advanced, was the triver and instigator of the guilty proceed-He was brought to a court-martial, icied, and cashiered-a lenient punishmi, considered with reference to his aggravated guilt, and to the fatal consequences that might have followed his treacherous desertion of duty. A few officers of inferior rank were also brought to trial, and sentenced to punishment; the remainder were permitted to enjoy the benefits of timely penitence, by restoration to their commissions.

At the time that Clive was engaged in recalling the army to their duty, he had an opportunity of evincing his regard for that body by a liberal donation for its benefit. On his arrival from England, he was informed that Meer Jaffier had bequeathed to him five lacs in the royal expenditure. of rupees, which were in the hands of Munny Begum, the mother of the reigning prince, an extraordinary one, and from the first had He at first hesitated as to receiving the legacy, on the ground, as he stated, that he had pledged had found less occasion for exertion than he his word that he would not benefit himself, could have anticipated, and the little that for the discontinuance of double batta, he determined to accept the bequest, and apply it to the formation of a military fund for invalid officers and soldiers, and their widows. This legacy formed one of the subjects of inquiry when Clive's conduct in India was submitted to parliamentary investigation. The fact of any such bequest having been made by Meer Juffler was denied; and, supposing it had, the right of Olive to benefit by it, after the prohibition of the receipt of presents, was disputed. The bequest was certainly involved in some mystery: but those who had to pay the money do not appear to have objected; and if they had any personal object in heaping wealth upon Clive, they showed great disinterestedness in renouncing the credit of their own liberality, and placing it to the account of a dead prince. In itself, moreover, the bequest was not altogether improbable. Meer Jaffier owed every thing to Clive; and when he reflected on the treatment which he had met from Clive's successors, as contrasted with that which he had experienced from the great European soldier, he might naturally be desirous of marking his sense of the difference by some indication of his gratitude to Clive. There seems nothing, therefore, in the circumstances of the case that could render the acceptance of the legacy dishonourable; and a covenant prohibiting presents could not, according to the letter, be applied to a testamentary bequest. There was little reason, however, for raising any question on the subject, as the acceptance and appropriation of the money were sanctioned by the Court of Directors, and as no part of it was applied by Clive to his own use, or to the benefit of his personal friends. If all his pecuniary transactions had been equally free from reproach, his memory in this respect would have stood clear of any imputation that could cast a shade upon it. In April, 1766, in conformity with ancient custom, the nabob held his poonah, or annual court for the adjustment of the zemindary accounts. The forms proper to this anniversary were rigidly observed, and nothing was wanting of its accustomed state and splendour. The prince sate as nazim, and Clive, as the representative of the Company, appeared as dewan, or collector of the imperial revenues. Noojum-ad-Dowlah never assisted at another ceremony of like nature. In May he was seized with malignant fever, which his constitution and habits were little adapted to overcome, and which in a few days put an end to His brother, Syef-ad-Dowlah, was placed on the throne, and the opportunity was embraced of effecting a considerable reduction

Clive had regarded his mission to India as meditated returning at no remote period. He

remained for him to perform had been accome for its pro-cryation. In India thevery magniplished. Perce had been concluded with the tude of Clive's errors gave them comething of sizies; the position of the Company and the creatness—at home, apart from the imperishmals between each other had been fixed, able wreath of military renown, which faction as well as that of both with regard to the could not tear from his brow, there appears superest the covenants against the receipt of little to distinguish him from the mass of presents had been enforced, and the inland/successful Indian fortune-hunters. itade—not problibited, indeed, till the pleasure | The reader who looks back upon the reenes of the Court of Directors could be known—but through which he has been conducted, will at regulated, according to Chye's views, with once perceive that it is on his military character a me regard to equity. There was thus little that Clive's reputation must rest. All the left for him to perform, and the state of his qualities of a soldier were combined in him, health rendered him anxious not to protract and each conditionally proportioned to the rest. his stay in India. He had renewed the arrange—that none prodominated to the detriment of metals for carrying on the inland trade for a lany other. His personal courage enabled him second year, in spite of the demunciations reto acquire a degree of influence over his troops reived from home; but at length the orders of which has rarely been equalled, and which in the Court of Directors became too peremptery. India was before his time unknown; and this, to be directors became too peremptery united with the cool and consummate judgabout to colour for him further favours from | ment by which his daring energy was controlled the East-India. Company ; to whom, conse-fand regulated, enabled him to effect conquests quently, the influence of the governing body which, if they had taken place in remote times, was important, and who could not decently would be regarded as incredible, appear as a candidate for reward in the classimateria's the most unpromising he had to racter of a contumuctions regrant. One of the create the instruments for effecting these conlatest acts of Care's government was to give quests, and he achieved his object where all orders for the abolition of the society of private men but himself might have desprired. No trade from the period when the existing con-lone can dwell upon the more exciting periods tracts expired. The despetch top ring this of his instory without catching some portion tanly act of obedience was dated the 24th of the ardour which led him through these Innuary; and before the month expired, Clive stirring scenes; no one who loves the country quitted Bengal fer ever. He had no reven for which he fought can recall them to memory to complain of the reception which awaited without mentally breathing "Honour to the him at home. On being introduced to the name of Clive." In India his fame is greater Court of Directors, he received from the charrence of the approval and merely—it is his country's, satisfaction of the court. In the general court. Well had it been for Clive, well had it been for the country which he so nobly served, if mentals in the great to him and his representable by brilling qualities as a soldier had not been mendation to grant to him and his representa- his brilliant qualities as a soldier had not been tives the enjoyment of his jughire for an alloyed by any large admixture. It was not to additional period of ten years, to commence be expected that he should be exempt from all from the expiration of the former term. The touch of human weakness, but his failings were recommendation was adopted, and the grant such as could scarcely have been believed to formally made. As this gift must be regarded co-exist with the admirable military virtues in the light of a reward for Clive's rervices which he possessed and exercised. They were during his last government, it is difficult to not the splendid infirmities of an aspiring understand how he reconciled his acceptance spirit, but the mean propensities which might of it with his often-repeated determination not be thought incompatible with greatness of to derive any pecuniary advantage from the mind. In the field, daring, self-denying, and appointment.

as at an end. He was subsequently called east off with the occasion; and he whose noble upon to answer for much in which he had been bearing fixed the admiration of nations, and culpable; and for some things in which he was decided the fortune of thrones, could descend originated in factious and discreditable motives; to that of the banyan, so accurately and powerneither the accusers nor the accused appear in fully depicted by himself in one of his parliaa favourable light-personal hostility and poli- mentary speeches. tical intrigue prompted the charges-while the name of Omichund, the reputation of Clive Clive, in repelling them, is no longer the must labour under a foul and fearful blot; soldier whose cannon had shaken the thrones while men remember the means by which his of Hindostan to their foundations, nor the princely fortune was accumulated, their ad-statesman who had raised a goodly edifice of miration of his genius and courage will be British power upon their ruins—but occupies qualified, in gentler minds by a feeling of pity the undignified position of a man who, having for his weakness, in those of sterner cast by amassed boundless wealth by means not always indignation and scorn. Clive spoke of the love defensible, is resolved to struggle to the death of wealth as one of the master passions of the self-devoted, Clive seemed a miracle of chival-The public life of Clive may now be regarded rous valour—but the hero was assumed and These inquiries, for the most part, to the exercise of trickery and rapacity equal While history preserves human heart, and his conduct leads to the but he loved his country better. belief that, in this instance, he was no cold rhetorician—that he spoke as he felt. He was enslaved by the demon to whose power he bore witness, and the effects of his thraldom are discernible in almost every action of his life. Grasping in India gold, jewels, and jaghire, with more than Oriental avidity-communicating secret intelligence to his agents at home to enable them to make favourable bargains in India stock-every where private interest and plans for self-aggrandisement are mixed up with the highest public objects. Yet while truth requires that his undue appetite for wealth be noted, justice demands that it be at the same time recorded that this passion, powerful as it was, never interfered with his duty to his country. When his personal interest and the honour of the British name were opposed, he could, apparently without an effort, expel from his breast the ravening spirit which usually possessed it, and cast the darling passion of his soul a willing offering at the shrine When he determined to resist of patriotism. by force the hostile demonstrations of the Dutch, the greater part of his fortune was in their hands. He thought not of this; or, if towering height, and surrounded with trophies the thought occurred, it was only to be despised. Clive, indeed, loved wealth too well,

A mind sometimes soaring so far above the level of human nature, and sometimes sinking so much below it, is rarely to be found.

As a statesman, Clive's vision was clear, but not extensive. He could promptly and adroitly adapt his policy to the state of things which he found existing; but none of his acts display any extraordinary political sagacity. Turning from his claims in a field where his talents command but a moderate degree of respect, and where the means by which he sometimes sought to serve the state and sometimes to promote his own interests give rise to a very different feeling, it is due to one to whom his country is so deeply indebted, to close the narrative of his career by recurring once more to that part of his character which may be contemplated with unmixed satisfaction. soldier he was pre-eminently great. With the name of Clive commences the flood of glory which has rolled on till it has covered the wide face of India with memorials of British valour. By Clive was formed the base of the column which a succession of heroes, well worthy to follow in his steps, have carried upward to a of honour, rich, brilliant, and countless.

CHAPTER VII.

EXPEDITION TO MANILLA-RISC OF HYDER ALI-HOSTILITIES BETWEEN HYDER ALI AND THE ENGLISH-ALTERNATE SUCCESSES AND DEFEATS-DISCOMFITURE OF THE ENGLISH-HYDER ALI APPEARS BEFORE MADRAS, AND GRANTS PEACE ON FAVOURABLE TERMS.

of Coromandel had been placed in some degree of security by the reduction of Pondicherry and the annihilation of the French interests in the Carnatic, the ministers of the crown projected an expedition against Manilla, a Spanish ilement, and the capital of the Phillippine The East-India Company were ined to aid in this object, and the government Madras, in consequence, furnished about . two thousand men for the purpose. General Lawrence remonstrated against the draft of so large a force, which he thought inconsistent with the safety of the British interests on the coast; but his opinion was overruled. Part of the force left Madras at the latter end of July, 1762, and the remainder in the beginning of August, several civil servants of the Company accompanying, to take possession of the anticipated conquests. The land forces engaged in the expedition were commanded by General Draper, the naval force by Admiral Cornish. The operations against Manilla occupied twelve days, when it was taken by storm with very trivial loss. Articles were subsequently signed by the British commanders and the Spanish authorities, by which the private property of the inhabitants was secured, and the Spanish officers admitted to parole. On the other hand,

Soon after the British possessions on the coast | all the dependencies of Manilla were to be surrendered, as well as all military stores, and a sum amounting to about a million sterling to be paid by way of ransom, one-half immediately. Manilla was restored to Spain at the general peace in the following year, and neither the East-India Company nor the British derived much advantage from the capture. That peace also restored to the French their former possessions on the continent of India—a most unwise concession on the part of the British negotiators, who ought to have been more alive to the interests of their own countrymen in the East than to suffer their intriguing and restless neighbours to regain the means of assailing them.

> In the meantime the government of Madras had been engaged in assisting Mahomed Ali in reducing several rebellious vassals to obedience. The object was effected with a tolerable degree of ease, except in the case of Madura, which was held in opposition to his master by Mahamed Isoof, formerly a distinguished, and it was believed an attached, follower of the English. The siege of Madura was both tedious and expensive; but it ultimately fell, and Mahomed Isoof paid the ordinary penalty of rebellion in the surrender of his life.

Another subject, which threatened to disturb between Mah west Ale and the reversion of other spoil, of inferior note, travelled in the Tail its, relating to the repairs of a mound by frame direction. Subsequently the number of which the naters of the river Cavery were pro-Hyder's predatory troops was considerably tected. By the mediation of the British increased, and with the aid of a brahmin, dispercriment the quarrel was arranged, and tinguished by his proficiency alike in calculathis came of hostility removed.

loaded with gold coin, which before order was masqueraded for his honour and profit is not restored were clear of the outposts, and considerably advanced on their way towards the leave them altogether without re the person of that part of India was a dispute beadquarters of Hyder, Horses, muskets, and because of hostility removed.

That the energies of the British government plan was devised for the regular organization mere not long to be expended solely in reducing and government of this extraordinary force, so dependent chiefs to obschence, or arranging as at once to promote their active devotion to personal disputes between princes of greater the service and to secure to their chief a great dignity and dominion. A man of comparatively proportion of the fruits of their ingenuity and cherure crigin was rising into notice, and daring. The men, hesides their direct pay, pradually increasing that power which sub-were to receive one half the body which was requestly swept over a large portion of the realized; the remainder was appropriated to south of India with the rapidity and withering Hyder, and its faithful delivery secured by a influence of a destructive meteor. Hyder, the rystem of shocks which rendered it nearly new candidate for conquest and dominion, has impossible to defmud the captain of his due, after by been mentioned as attending temporary. Under the excellent arrangements the trade alirally been mentioned as all-nlive temporary. Under the c excellent arrangements the trade aristance to the French caucant at Fundicherry, of Hyder flourished wonderfully; his power He was the son of a man who had held the discources increased; his stock of elemity of a fouglar, but who, in one of those revolutions which are of such frequent securence phants, camela, tents, and equipments, enabled lutions which are of such frequent securence hum to via in this respect with the great in India, had bettied for all that they possessed. At this time Hyder was not more than some parts of age. His advance towards all the incidents attendant on the appointment, manhoul pave little indication of future great. Hyder proceeded, at the lead of a considerable force, to suppress a confederacy formed by the the period of maturity his life was totally. Polygars in the neighbourhood to resist the the period of maturity his life was totally Polygars in the neighbourhood to resist the descript to pleasure. The sports of the field payment of tribute, and he succeeded. The excupied a large portion of his time, the remember of his success was conveyed to court in mainder was currendered to voluntuous enjoys terms which did not diminish its importance, ment. He had an elder brother, who at an inor will the difficulties which the victorious early period of life had obtained military em- commander had surmounted; and the despatch ployment in the service of Mysore. It was not was closed by a formidable list of killed and till Hyder had completed his twenty-eventh wounded. Si satisfactory was the intelligence, year that he entered upon a similar course of and so great, the admiration felt for the comlife, by joining his brother's corps as a volunteer. [mander and his troops, that a special messenger Here he coundistinguished humself by the disclars despatched, with rich presents for the play of extraordinary courage, and of a degree follows who had distinguished themselves, and of coolness and self-possession not less admir- a sum of money to be applied to the relief of ralle. In time he advanced to the command the wounded men. To guard against imposiof a body of free booters whom he had collected tion (for it was felt that precaution was not around him, who might, says Colonel Wilks, unnecessary), an inspection was to take place. "well be characterised as brave and faithful The actual number of wounded was sixtythis ves. In the ordinary circumstances of a cam- | seven. Hyder thought that the honour of his paign," it is added, "they more than realized arms required that the return which he had the charges of their establishment by a variety made should be supported. To effect this he of plunder and simple theft from friends, when caused to be mingled with the real sufferors the enemy did not offer convenient means." seven hundred men, whose limbs, though un-Hyder thus commenced his march to empire injured, were enveloped in bandages of formidin the same manner as the distinguished founder able size, and these passed muster just as well of the Mahrattas, and his little band followed as the rest. The allowance which the comtheir avocation with a zeal, spirit, and success, missioner was authorized to distribute was at not inferior to that displayed by the adherents the rate of fourteen rupees per mouth for each of the Illustrious Sevajee. In the confusion man till cured. An estimate was made by the that ensued on the death of Nazir Jung, surgeons in attendance of the probable time these adventurers, bold, faithful, and furtive, that the cure of each would require, and managed to mix with the crowd near the according to the estimate and the muster the treasure of the deceased prince, which the money was paid. The liberality of Hyder treasurer had begun to load on the first alarm. bestowed on each of the really wounded seven But the caution and promptitude of the officer rupees per month, being one half of the amount did not prevent the separation of two camels which he received—what he gave to those who made on the same principle as the donation to in an Oriental court. "Nunjeraj," says Colonel the wounded. ployed, his faithful brahmin remained at court, rising on his approach and embracing him, sometimes sounding the praises of his master, apparently proud of this public justification ing his force. Augmentations were accordingly ness of Hyder frustrated their vigilance. one occasion he performed a manœuvre termed, by a native who witnessed it, "a circular muster," the result of which was, that ten thousand men were counted and passed as eighteen thousand. favoured his elevation. A mutiny broke out portant part in the project, and derive the in the Mysorean army, and he was the instrugreater share of the advantage in the event of ment of suppressing it. On this occasion he its success. The grievance, ever occurring in made the opportune discovery that some of the Oriental armies, of unliquidated arrears of pay, richest chiefs were among the ringleaders, was to afford the means of accomplishing the Their wealth, by a severe but necessary act of justice, was declared forfeited; and it need not be doubted that the coffers of Hyder benefited by this act, as well as the treasury of his master. An opulent chief, named Herri Sing, had been despatched to collect revenue in Malahar. Failing to effect his object, and entertaining a rooted dislike to Hyder, now one of the most powerful persons in the court of Mysore, Herri Sing was negotiating to enter the service of Tanjore. While thus engaged, he was unexpectedly attacked in the dead of night by a look of about three thousand men despatched by Hyder. The chief and a large portion of his men fell, and the plunder was of great value. Hyder presented to his sovereign Nunjeraj. Hyder could not refuse his good Their wealth, by a severe but necessary act of object. Some chiefs were admitted to such a distribution of the presents to the officers was stration of enthusiasm perhaps unprecedented While Hyder was thus em- Wilks, "paid him the novel compliment of

sometimes dwelling on the difficulties of his of his own discernment in the elevation of situation, and urging the necessity of increas-Hyder." But neither the warmth of the minister's authorized from time to time, and assignments friendship, nor the favours which he had of revenue made for the support of the new bestowed upon Hyder, precluded the latter levies. Special commissioners were always from intriguing against his benefactor. Nundeputed to watch the musters, but the adroit- jeraj had long exercised uncontrolled all the On authority of the state. The rajah and his family were disgusted by his arrogance, but distrustful of their own power to remove him. The means were suggested by the widow of a deceased relative of the royal house, in conjunction with Hyder's wily brahmin: Hyder, Hyder continued to rise, and circumstances it will be justly concluded, was to play an imgreat value. Hyder presented to his sovereign Nunjeraj. Hyder could not refuse his good three guns and fifteen horses—the remainder offices to procure justice to his companions in he levelowed on himself. About the same arms, but nothing followed. The visits of the time, by pressing his services on the notice of troops were repeated till their patience was at the cent. Hyder obtained the district of Ban- an end; when they insisted on Hyder going at and seas a personal jaghire. A demonstration their head to perform a superstitious ceremony rendering his accounts and resigning his office, sought was on the works directing the fire of and that under these circumstances it was un-the artillery. The attack upon Hyder was to just to hold him responsible for any pecuniary have been aided by six thousand Mahrattas. claim upon the rajah's treasury. The effect of but they, "according to custom, did not arthis explanation had not been left to chance. Some of the soldiers, duly trained, called out to remove the dhurna to the gate of the rajah. The proposal was received with acclamations; the steps of the discontented troops were directed to the palace, and Hyder, less unwilling than before, was compelled to lead them.

At the palace the business of the scene had been pre-arranged with much attention. messenger came out and requested that Koonde Row, the ever active brahmin, might be sent to communicate with the rajah. The brahmin went, and returned with a promise from the rajah to find means of satisfying the demands of the troops, on condition that Hyder should take a solemn oath to renounce all connection with the usurper, Nunjeraj. Hyder, deeply affected by the command to abandon his friend, pretended not to conceal the pain which it gave him; but he took the oath, and thereupon was admitted to an audience of the He returned and informed the govereign. troops that to complete the arrangements for satisfying their claims would require a few days, but in the mean time he tendered his personal responsibility as security. This was readily accepted, and the tumultuous crowd disappeared. To enable Hyder to discharge his old servant once more under his protection. the obligation thus incurred, additional assignments of revenue were made to him, and the value of such protestations, and of the sincerity territories under his administration thus came of his friend; but he afforded a fresh instance to exceed half of the entire dominions of the of the influence which men's wishes exercise rajah.

mentioned. dangerous man with the same plentitude of addressed to the principal leaders in the amy power which had been exercised by the deposed minister. The brahmin, who had been ment assumed to have been made for the deposed minister. appointed to the office of dewan, began to livery of Koonde Row into the hands of Nunregard the encroachments of his late patron jeraj, promised on the part of the latter the with some degree of distaste. The two persons reward alleged to be agreed upon, and intimated who not long before had raised Hyder to his that nothing now remained but for the conlofty position, now conspired to pluck him spirators to earn it. The bearer of the letdown, and advantage was taken of the absence ters was made prisoner, as was interest, and of a large part of his troops. Herder was conof a large part of his troops. Hyder was canhis charge placed in the hands of the general, toned under the fire of the contract of Section 1971 toned under the fire of the garrison of Seringa-patam, with about one hundred horse and Hyder's feigned penitence. Koose his horse fifteen hundred infantry, and notwithstanding to make the fire of the fare and horse fifteen hundred infantry, and notwithstanding to make the fire of the fare of fifteen hundred infantry, and notwithstanding completely deceived; he mornisal without his usual caution, was unsuspicious of the storm that was gathering around him. He was only awakened to a knowledge of it by a tremendous cannonade from all the works that tremendous cannonade from all the works that under any circumstances is the case the bore on his position. His first impulse was to send for his friend the brahmin—he was informed that the person whose presence he conjectured.

rive at the appointed time." Some communications took place between Hyder and the rajah's dewan, and it is said that the brahmin pointed out the way to retreat, and left the spot unguarded, that Hyder might retire in safety. However this may be, Hyder did retire with his cavalry and a portion of his treasure. His family were left behind, and these with the infantry and considerable property fell into the hands of his enemies. soldier of fortune was now again thrown upon the world. It would be inconsistent with the design of this sketch to follow in detail his various movements, but one was too extraordinary and characteristic to be passed over. Having been defeated by a force commanded by his former friend the brahmin, he suddenly presented himself alone and unarmed as a suppliant at the door of Nunjeraj. Being admitted to the presence of the retired minister. Hyder threw himself at his feet, and in strains of grief and penitence besought of him forgiveness. All the misfortunes that had thronged on him he professed to regard as the just punishment of his ingratitude to his kind and generous patron, whom he implored to resume his place at the head of the state, and to receive over their understanding. He consented to It was soon after he had reached this eleva- make common cause with Hyder, to aid him tion of power that he despatched a force to with a considerable body of horse and foot assist the French at Pondicherry, as already which he had collected during his seclusion. The main cause of the precipitate and to give to the man to whose treachery he retirement of that force, was the danger which owed his descent from power all the benefit of threatened his newly acquired greatness from his name and influence. Hyder made use of the jealousy and discontent of those by whose the former without reserve. Some time after aid he had acquired it. The female contriver his reconciliation with Nunjeraj, being closely of the plot perceived that the only effect of the pressed by the brahmin Koonde Row, he forged removal of Nunjeraj had been to invest a more letters in the name and with the seal of his ally and confusion had attained a sufficient height, Hyder fell upon his enemy's army in front and rear and gained a complete and easy victory.

Hyder now vigorously applied himself to destroy the remnants of the royal army and to strengthen his own. He was soon in a condition to dictate terms to the rajah. The arrangement actually concluded gave to the successful adventurer every thing but the title of sovereign. Districts sufficient to provide a moderate revenue for the personal expenses of the rajah and Nunjeraj were reserved for those purposes; the entire management of the regovernment were transferred to Hyder. Koonde Row was surrendered to the conquerer, who imprisoned him in an iron cage. Hyder's honours now flowed thickly upon nabob was designated as Hyder Ali Khan miles to the eastward of the capital. from which his title was derived, he engaged in an invasion of Bednore, for the alleged purpose of restoring to the throne a youth who pretended to have been unjustly excluded from In his progress he rarely met resistance, and when so unusual a circumstance occurred it was requited by severity calculated to discourage its repetition. A hundred men occupying a small fort ventured to fire on his troops. They were surrounded and taken, and have expected; but after being made prisoners their temerity was punished by cutting off their noses and ears, and in this state they were dismissed to spread the terror of the invoder's army.

turned to his own safety, and when dismay estimate of the amount of plunder realized by Hyder Ali fixes it at twelve millions sterling. This vast treasure secured, the conqueror dropped the mask under which the war had been carried on, and assumed his natural character. A former rajah had left the throne to an adopted son, constituting the rance or queen his guardian during the period of his minority. The widow formed a criminal attachment, which was manifestly so publicly as to outrage decorum not less than morality; and the young rajah having remarked on her frailty somewhat too freely, his reproofs were silenced by the hand of an assassin. The person whom mainder of the country and all the functions of Hyder had taken under his protection pretended to be the rajah who had been thus removed, and ascribed his escape to the mercy of the man employed to dispatch him, by whom he der's honours now flowed thickly upon represented himself as having been secreted For some services rendered to Basalat during five years. It is not probable that Jung in the reduction of a small fort, and in Hyder Ali ever gave credence to the tale, but consideration of a present of no great amount, | it suited his purpose to affect belief in it. That that potentate created Hyder nabob of Sera, purpose being answered by the conquest of although he had neither possession nor right Bednore, the pretended prince was sent a close in respect to the country bestowed. The new prisoner to a fortress a hundred and eighty Bahadur, and thenceforth used those appella- confinement was solaced by the company of the tions. Having asserted his right to the dignity rance, her paramour, and a child, whom they conferred upon him, by reducing the countries | had placed on the throne after the murder of its lawful occupant. Hyder Ali did not enjoy his conquest without molestation. While labouring under an attack of ague, a disorder common in the country, a confederacy was formed to dispossess and assassinate him. It was detected, and three hundred of the conspirators hanged. After this operation, it is stated that Hyder Ali's health visibly improved.

Subsequently, Hyder Ali suffered severely so far nothing occurred which they might not in contests with the Mahrattas, and was at length shut up within the lines of Bednore. He succeeded in obtaining peace on terms not unfavourable, considered with regard to his situation; and having quelled various manifes-Four, twelve, and eighteen tations of insurrection, which his late unproslace of przodas were successively offered to perous circumstances had encouraged in differpurchase Hyder's retreat, but in vain. He ent parts of his dominions, his restless and perstrated to the capital of the province, a aggressive spirit was turned to the conquest place a high its said previously formed a happy of Malabar. The operations of Hyder Ali exception to the common lot of India, in having were there marked by the same character no experience of the horrors of war. The which distinguished the course of his arms Tables and treasury were set on fire by their elsewhere—the most odious perfidy, the most intractes, and the inhabitants of the town field oppressive extortion, and the most intolerable to the woods and mountains for security. The cruelty. He succeeded in overrunning the fam. of the palace were subdued in time to country and procuring a nominal submission the districts which had been allotted for the jin which the country had for some time been support of the rajah, and plundered the palace placed had naturally produced the greatest of all the money and articles of value which it anarchy and confusion. The authority of tion, that nothing worth carrying away escaped nominal; and to prevent the intrusion of the the hands of the pillagers, except such of the French, the British government, in 1765, ornaments of the female inmates as they happened to have upon their persons when the clearance took place. As the rajah was now a pensioner upon Hyder Ali, his establishments were subjected to a rigorous revision, so as to reduce the expenditure to the lowest possible amount, and none were permitted to have access to the prince but the creatures of his

The politics of the Deccan at this period, and for some years preceding the return of Hyder Ali to Mysore, present an entangled web, of which it is scarcely practicable to render a clear account.

Some intercourse had taken place between Hyder and the government of Bombay, which on the whole was not of an unfriendly cha-On his return to Seringapatam, however, he found the government of Madras in league with Nizam Ali against him. principal events connected with this alliance may be related in a few words; the appropriation of a volume to the object would not afford the means of giving a satisfactory and lucid exposition of their causes, or of the motives of the actors engaged in them. It may be doubted whether the persons then forming the British government of Madras understood their own policy; and it is quite certain that to all others it must ever remain inexplicable.

The possession of the districts called the Northern Circars was an object, for various reasons, desirable to the English. Salabat Jung, Nizam Ali, and Basalat Jung, the three brothers who contended for sovereignty in the Deccan, had all tendered these provinces as the price of assistance; but a desire not to enter into Indian politics further than necessary rendered the government of Madras unwilling to accept the proffered gift from any of them. In the contest for supreme power in the Deccan, the fortune of Nizam Ali finally prevailed, and Salabat Jung became his pri-With the reigning prince the British government continued to maintain a negotiation singularly vague in its character, till they were assured that the title of Nizam Ali had been confirmed by the emperor. They then ventured to take an assignment of the management of the Circars from the former on the terms of a division of the profits. When Nizam

So complete was the latter opera- Hoossein Ali was, therefore, little more than agreed to aid him in establishing his authority. Part of the detachment destined for this service was sent; the march of the remainder was stopped by the advance of Nizam Ali with a considerable force to attack the nabob. the resolution of the invader failed on learning that the English were preparing to meet him, and after indulging himself in some plundering operations he retired, dispatched a friendly letter to the British governor, and sent him a present of an elephant. The letter and the elephant effected their object, and the government of Madras proceeded to extend their promised aid to Hoossein Ali as if nothing extraordinary had happened. This took place in the year that Clive last returned to India, and in the course of the negotiation conducted by him with the emperor, he, at the request of the Madras authorities, obtained sunnuds, bestowing on the Company the Northern Circars, to be held immediately of the imperial government. The sunnuds were transmitted to Madras, but the government of that presidency hesitated to use them till Bengal should be "quiet," unless under Nizam Ali's confirmation of them, alleging that it was not material to enter on possession till the following year, as Hoossein Ali had anticipated the revenues, and that little more could be obtained than he had secured to the Company. Of the validity of the last reason for forbearance, it is impossible to judge; but no difficulty exists with regard to that by which it is preceded. Bengal had not for many years been so "quiet" as it then was, and the project of calling upon a dependent to confirm the gift of his superior is too absurd to merit even exposure. At length, in March, 1766, the government of Madras took courage to give publicity to the grant from the emperor, and General Calliaud was dispatched with a military force to support the authority of the grantees. Still they could not divest themselves of the impression that it was necessary to secure the consent of Nizam Ali. They were finally gratified by the conclusion of a treaty, by which the occupation of the Northern Circars by the English was made subject to the payment of a considerable tribute: one of the Circars being bestowed as a jaghire on Basalat Jung, was not to be occupied till his Ali concluded this arrangement he was in death. By the same treaty the English governfear of the Mahrattas; having concluded a ment became bound to support Nizam Ali truce with those troublesome enemies, he against his enemies; and as, at the time when proceeded unceremoniously to annul the it was concluded, it was well understood that agreement with the English government, he was about, in conjunction with the Mahwho patiently submitted. Negotiation was rattas, to attack Mysore, the careful and sagarenewed, but without effect, and the coveted clous diplomatists who then administered the districts were committed to the charge of a government of Madras, in their anxiety to person named Hoossein Ali, by whom they avoid giving offence, actually plunged their had before been rented. The circumstances country into difficulties and dangers far greater time their meeting was inevitable. took place the surprise was reciprocal. The bility of capture. The attempt was made, and first struggle was for the possession of the hill. succeeded. Nine pieces had been taken on the It was secured for the English by the exertions preceding day, and fourteen more were subseof Captain Cooke: and some rocks, forming a position of considerable strength, were wrested from a large body of the enemy's infantry. When the troops were drawn up in order of battle, the contrast between the numbers was The English force consisted of fourteen hundred European infantry, thirty European cavalry, nine thousand sepoys, and fifteen hundred exceedingly bad native cavalry belonging to Mahomed Ali. The numbers of the enemy cannot be ascertained with equal accuracy, but they have been computed at seventy thousand, of which more than half were cavalry. These were drawn up in a crescent, half encircling the British force, and seemingly sufficient to overwhelm them. The enemy had about one hundred pieces of cannon, but not more than thirty could be brought into action. The English had about the latter number, which being steadily and skilfully served, nearly silenced those opposed to them. guns were then turned upon the dense and frowning masses of the enemy's cavalry. For a few minutes the fire was sustained with a sullen calmness, and the horsemen appeared to be in expectation of orders to charge. None were given — to sit inactive and unmoved amidst the deadly havoc produced by the welldirected fire of the English was beyond their power of endurance, and myriads of flying cavalry soon covered the field in every direction. Hyder, who had for some time per-ceived that all was lost, now drew off his cannon, and urged Nizam Ali to take the same The answer of the blunt soldier to whom it course; but the courage of the soubahdar at this moment raged at more than fever heat, and he declared that he would meet the death of Nazir Jung, rather than save his life by dishonourable flight. The advance of the British army in line abated his energy, and he gave orders for the guns to be withdrawn. The elephants bearing the women of his establishment were in the rear, and these too were ordered to turn. A soft voice from the covered vehicle borne by one of them exclaimed, "This elephant has not been taught so to turn, he ·follows the standard of the empire." The English shot fell thick and heavy around, but the feminine champion of the honour of the empire would not suffer her elephant to be turned till the standard had passed, when she withdrew followed by her train. Nizam Ali was less fastidious in reference to such minute points of honour. True, he had invoked the fate of Nazir Jung in preference to dishonourable retreat; but within an hour after this that officer was not compelled to halt by the burst of chivalrous feeling, he and a select body of cavalry were galloping to the westward, the superintendence of the retreat of his army being a duty unworthy of his royal attention. On the following day the confederated army was made some occasional demonstrations of activity. observed at a distance in full retreat; but a He moved in person with four thousand horse,

When it not too far advanced to be beyond the possiquently secured. The loss of the English was one hundred and fifty men; that of the enemy was believed to exceed four thousand. The defeat of the allies had the effect of clearing the country of various parties which had been employed in ravaging it, and had plundered almost to the gates of Madras.

The rainy season approaching, the British troops were withdrawn into cantonments. Hyder Ali, however, allowed not any repose to himself or his troops. Having gained possession of Tripatore and Vaniambaddy, two places of inconsiderable value, he proceeded to attack Amboor, a place of some strength. situated on the summit of a mountain of smooth granite. It was defended by Captain Calvert, an officer of distinguished bravery. In five days, Hyder Ali had so completely dismantled the lower fort, that it was no longer tenable; and Captain Calvert, with a garrison of five hundred sepoys and a few Europeans, retired to the citadel. The native governor being discovered to be in correspondence with the enemy, was placed in confinement, and his men disarmed. This proceeding disconcerted Hyder Ali's plans. He still, however, prosecuted the siege, and effected a practicable breach, but, fortunately for the besieged, in a part which was inaccessible. After many abortive attempts to surprise the place, Hyder Ali sent a flag of truce to summon the garrison, and the oppor-The answer of the blunt soldier to whom it was addressed was, that Hyder Ali had not yet offered him an opportunity of deserving the compliment. Another flag arrived, with the offer of a large bribe and the command of half Hyder Ali's army as the price of the surrender of the citadel. Captain Calvert, in reply, advised Hyder Ali to respect the lives of his servants, as the future bearer of any similar message would immediately be hanged in the breach. Hyder Ali had commenced operations against Amboor on the 10th Novem-His movements had called the British ber. army from their cantonments; and when Colonel Smith, on the 7th December, arrived in sight of Amboor, he had the satisfaction of perceiving the British flag still flying there. government marked their approbation of the conduct of the garrison, by directing the rock of Amboor to be borne upon their colours. On the approach of the British army, Hyder Ali retired, followed by Colonel Smith, when want of provisions. Colonel Wood, who had advanced from Trichinopoly, joined Colonel Smith, without an effort on the part of the enemy to prevent it. Hyder Ali however train of forty-one pieces of artillery was thought two thousand foot, and five guns, to attack a hand, Hyder Ali was denounced as a rebel and leffenders prevent were immediately consigned, mirdeeds, the dewanny of Mysore was transfor the sums in which they were respectively ferred to the English, upon the easy conditions muleted, and orders were leaved for taking of conquering the country, and rendering to frimilar proceedings with regard to those whose Nizam Ali a large additional tribute. The situation of Hyder Ali had tempted fears had kept them away.

So mirerably defective were the arrangesome of the Malabar chiefs to make an effort ments of the Madras government and their to throw off his yoke, and the government of Bombay had fitted out a formidable expedition against him. Mangalore being left with an insufficient garrison, fell into the hands of the English without material resistance, and the commander of Hyder Ali's fleet, from pique, it is said, at the appointment of a cavalry officer to be his superior, surrendered his charge to the same power. Buawaraj Drooj, or "fortified island," and some other places, were also captured; but in an attempt upon part of the works of Cananore the English were defeated with considerable loss. Indeed their temporary success soon deserted them. Hyder Ali not only despatched troops to support his interests on the western coast, but proceeded there in person. The greatest care was taken to withhold from the English force intelligence of his to throw off his yoke, and the government of ally the nabob, in obtaining intelligence, that creditable to any of the parties engaged in the nothing was gained by it. transaction. Colar surrendered shortly after-Colonel Smith, joined in August. On the attempts at negotiation—an aggravation of day on which the junction was effected, Hyder hostile feeling. Ali, having returned from his western expedition, entered Bangalore with the light troops Ali by means similar to those by which it was learned that the attack was made by cavalry, men should mount, but each stand at the head of his horse, and cut down without distinction every person on horseback. of Morari Row having received a wound, him the chain by which he had been attached. This he seized with his trunk, and hurled met, throwing them back headlong over a column of infantry who were behind them. These, ignorant of the cause of the shock, retired in dismay; and before order could be restored, the symptoms of motion in the English camp discouraged a renewal of the attack.

Early in September, Hyder Ali made a circuitous march in a southern direction, for the purpose of cutting off the division of Colonel Wood, who was ascending from Baramabal to join Colonel Smith. The route of Colonel Wood lay through a long defile, and Hyder Ali had made the requisite dispositions to be prepared to open on his troops an enfilading fire, on their arrival at a particular spot favourable well as that of Colonel Wood, was reported to

The division of the army under Colonel | honour of the approach of his coadjutor in Smith was occupied more to the northward, arms. This imprudent mark of respect and Kistnagherry surrendered to him on the 2nd exultation warned Hyder Ali to retire, and In June, possession was obtained of he lost no time in acting upon the intimation. the fortress of Mulwagul, in a manner little Colonel Smith gave orders for pursuit, but

The incidents of war were at this time wards. In July, Oosoor was taken, and some relieved by an attempt at negotiation; but other places to the south and west of it. A the British authorities demanded more than body of Mahrattas, which had been taken Hyder would yield, and the only result was into the English service on the suggestion of that which ordinarily follows unsuccessful

Mulwagul returned into the hands of Hyder of his advance. He was foiled in an attack lost to him. Colonel Smith had occupied it upon the camp of the Mahrattas, in which he with a party of his own troops. Two memsustained a loss of about three hundred men. bers of council, who were with the army under The lead in the attempt was assigned to the the name of field-deputies, thought fit to cavalry, who were to penetrate to the tent of remove them, and to supply their place by a Morari Row, and possess themselves of his company of Mahomed Ali's troops. Hyder head. The infantry were to follow, and com- Ali, by tampering with the Mussulman officer plete the victory which was anticipated as the in command, prepared the way for its yielding result of the attack. Morari Row no sooner at once to an apparent surprise. Colonel Wood made a movement to relieve it, but was too than, to prevent friends and enemies being late. He succeeded in recovering the lower mistaken, he gave orders that not one of his fort, but was repulsed with loss in an attempt to carry the rock by escalade. The day after this unsuccessful attempt a body of light troops These orders appeared in view, and their object, it was conwere strictly executed. From the irregular jectured, was to cover a convoy for the garrison. construction of a Mahratta camp, the advance Colonel Wood moved out with two companies of cavalry is subjected to numerous impedi-and a gun to reconneitre, and when at the ments, and confusion soon ensued. It was distance of two miles from his camp perceived increased by an accident. The state elephant three thousand horse, followed by a heavy column of infantry, approaching to surround broke loose from his picquets and rushed bim. He galloped back to the nearest picquet, wildly through the camp. He carried with and having sent forward orders to place the baggage in safety and form the line, he returned with the picquet guard, consisting, like the furiously against a mass of cavalry which he force which had accompanied him, of two companies and a gun. He found the first party completely surrounded, but he forced a passage through the enemy and joined it. Hyder Ali's whole army, however, appeared on an eminence about a mile in front, and the British commander saw that he had no course but to retreat with all speed. He accordingly abandoned his two guns, and prepared to force a passage in the direction from which he had just advanced. His object was aided by a battalion detached from the line to support him, and which attacked in flank the body through which he had to pass. With some difficulty the retreating force reached a point where they could receive further assistance to the object. The advance of Hyder Ali, as from the line, and the battle was maintained well as that of Colonel Wood, was reported to with vigour, but decidedly to the disadvantage Colonel Smith by scouts whom he had sent of the English force, who gradually receded out to collect intelligence; and the latter before the well-directed guns and impetuous officer, perceiving that he had time to antici- charges of the enemy. The unfavourable cirpate Hyder Ali, and post his division so as to cumstances under which the action had comreceive him with advantage, advanced with menced had never been overcome, and the accelerated speed, and despatched messengers fortune of the day seemed to be irrecoverably across the hills to apprize Colonel Wood of his lost to the English. It was retrieved by a intentions. The success of the plan was frus-stratagem. The baggage guard was comtrated by Colonel Wood firing a salute in manded by Captain Brooke. This officer had suffered severely in the escalade on the pro-lindiscriminate mass. Hyder Ali leisurely receding day, and his strongth amounted only tired, after appropriating everything movable, to four companies and two guns. With this and was nearly out of sight when Colonel insignificant force he conceived the idea of Wood returned from Oussoor. He appeared turning the tide of victory in favour of his again four days afterwards, intercepting the country. The sick and wounded were under his protection; as many of them as were able to move were drawn out to add to the apparent strength of his force; the two guns were dragged by volunteer followers, and manned by wounded artillerymen. The summit of a flatrock was chosen as the scene of operation, and was approached by a circuitous and concealed route. Immediately on its being attained, the two guns opened a fire of grape on the enemy's left flank, and the voice of overy individual in the little band, sound or sick, joined that of their commander in shouting, "Hurrah! Smith! Smith!" Throughout the field the impression was conveyed alike to friends and enemies, that the division of Colonel Smith had arrived; and the effect was almost The delusion, indeed, could not long be maintained; but the temporary advantage which it gave the English allowed Colonel Wood an opportunity of making a better disposition of his force; and when Hyder Ali, after discovering the deception, resumed the attack, he found his opponents well prepared to receive him. Repeatedly foiled in his attempts, he returned again and again, but still in vain; and when darkness put an end to the combat, the English remained in pos-session of the field. The loss of Hyder Ali was reported to amount to a thousand men; the loss of the English was less than a quarter of that number.

After various marchings and countermarchings unworthy of rolation, Hyder Ali laid siego ...tack from the enemy. ing camels, horses, or oxen. The gate was meeting with reverses, to excessive depression. suddenly shut, but the masses behind con- In Coimbatore, the English were gradually suddenly shut, but the masses behind con-tinuing to press on those in front, two thousand dispossessed of their posts, which appear to human beings, it is said, perished, in common have been arranged with little regard to sound kinds, the whole being forced together in an of the ablest generals of Hyder Ali, entered march of the English army towards Colar, to which place they were proceeding in search of supplies, drove in the outposts, and commenced a cannonade from a battery of twelve of his heaviest pieces, including among them those which he had taken at Bauglore. The cannonade was returned by the English, and maintained by both sides through the whole day. At night the enemy apparently retired, and Colonel Wood resumed his march, but had rearcely cleared the ground on which the former attack took place, when he was again assailed by the fire of Hyder Ali's infantry, which continued to annoy him throughout the night. In the morning an attempt was made to intersect the English columns, and destroy them in detail. This was frustrated. The march recommenced, and continued for about two miles, when another attack rendered it necessary to halt. The conflict thus resumed was kept up for some time, when Hyder Ali suddenly withdrew, without any motive discernible by the English. The cause was soon explained, by the arrival of the other division of the English army, now commanded by Major Fitzgerald, Colonel Smith having proceeded to the presidency. Major Fitzgerald having heard of the disaster at Bauglore, had concluded that Colonel Wood's division would be distressed for provisions and equipments. Recalling all the detachments that could be summoned in time, and collecting a large supply of rice, he made a forced march in the direction in which the suffering division was to Oossoor. Colonel Wood moved to relieve likely to be found, and the sound of the firing it, but so precipitately and incautiously, that in the last affair with Hyder Ali had guided effected little for the benefit of the garrison him to the exact spot where his assistance was 4 Oossoor, while he exposed Bauglore to an required. Colonel Wood was in such a state Bauglore was garri- of despondency as, in the eyes of Major Fitzsoned by part of Mahomod Ali's troops under gorald, rendered him incompetent to the duties the command of a British officer. The force of command; and the latter transmitted a of Hyder Ali approached in several distinct representation to the commander-in-chief, columns, preceded by cannon, and attended by Colonel Smith, of the necessity of placing the all the auxiliaries necessary to the conduct of troops under some other direction for the a siege. The enemy gained possession of the recovery of the lost honour of the army. pettah, or town, within the walls, but made Colonel Smith laid this document before the no attempt upon the fort; content with load-government, and Colonel Wood was ordered ing all the carts and tumbrils that could be to proceed under arrest to Madras. This pro-Wood's division, which had been loft in the Colonel Wood had displayed little military pettah for safety, and with the capture of talent; but he had courage approaching the some eighteen-pounders which were without the gate. A dreadful scene occurred on this his later engagements with Hyder Ali this correction. The entrance of the enemy had quality was not manifested; but the cause caused a rush of men, women, and children probably was that, like many other men of towards the fort for eafety, some of them driv-

with a larger number of beasts of various military principles. Fuzzul Oolla Khan, one

the province with seven thousand men and ten if terms of capitulation should not be arranged, guns, and proceeded vigorously, but cautiously, he should be at liberty to return. to effect the object of his advance. veriporam he received a check from an insig- Captain Orton trusted the promise of Hyder nificant force led by a man of very humble Ali. The result will readily be conjectured. station. An English serjeant, named Hoskin, commanded an advanced post of two companies and one gan in a mud fort, which he defended with a spirit that entitles him to remembrance. Reporting to his officer the success of his resistance to the attempts of the enemy, he added, "I expect them again tomorrow morning in two parties, with guns: I will take the guns from them, with the help of God." The success of the gallant serjeant was not equal to his noble confidence. In a subsequent attempt the fort was carried, but not until it had become a heap of ruins, nor then without a sanguinary conflict. The fate of its brave defender is unknown; he probably met a soldier's death on the spot where he had so eminently displayed a soldier's spirit. Another post at Gujelhutty was well defended by Lieutenant Andrews. It sustained two assaults, in the second of which the English commander fell, and the post was surrendered. Coimbatore and Denaicancota were lost by treachery; and the officer commanding at Palagaut was obliged to save himself and his garrison from In December, massacre by secret flight. Hyder Ali entered Bâramahâl, and the English posts in that province fell with the same celerity as in Coimbatore. In marching for the reduction of Eroad, Hyder Ali encountered an English party, consisting of fifty Europeans and two hundred sepoys, commanded by Captain Nixon. Two deep columns of infantry, supported by twelve thousand horse, moved to their destruction. Captain Nixon and his little force remained firm while the enemy were advancing, and, when the latter had arrived within twenty yards of them, gave fire. The Europeans then rushed forward, and their fifty bayonets spread instant confusion among the enemy's infantry, who broke and fled. This, however, was all that their gallantry achieved. The cavalry of the enemy at the same moment charged the sepoys in flank and rear; and the return of the killed and wounded of the English party included every man, European and native, with the single exception of an officer named Lieutenant Goreham. His life was saved by his knowledge of the country language, of which in the last extremity he availed himself, to request the humanity of a native of rank. Hyder Ali lost no time in advancing to Eroad; and to make his victory known, on arriving there he sent a flag of truce to request the attendance of an English advances for accommodation. surgeon to attend to the wounded prisoners. requested that an English officer might be sent An extraordinary proceeding followed. Hyder to confer with him, and Captain Brooke was Ali, on learning the extent of Lieutenant despatched thither in compliance with his Gorcham's lingual acquirements, enjoined him wish. Hyder Ali expatiated on the aggresto translate into English a summons, demand-sions of the English, and on his own desire for ing the surrender of Eroad, and inviting the peace; on the exertions he had made to procommander, Captain Orton, to repair in person mote that object, and on the unreasonable

Near Ca- infatuation for which it is not easy to account. Captain Orton was detained, and atrocious as this breach of faith at first appears, Hyder Ali was not without excuse. The officer second in command in the English garrison was a Captain Robinson, who had surrendered at Vanianibaddy under parole not to serve again during the war. He was now serving, not only to his own disgrace, but to that of the government which sanctioned the dishonourable act. Hyder Ali declared that the violation of parole by Captain Robinson absolved him from observing his promise to permit the departure of Captain Orton; but as a proof of his placability, he professed himself willing, if the latter officer would write an order for the surrender of the place, to permit the entire garrison, with their property, to retire unmolested to Trichinopoly. Captain Orton refused-on the following day he consented. How the change was effected does "The modes," says Colonel not appear. Wilks, "cannot be distinctly traced, but may well be imagined." That Captain Orton should have walked into the pitfall prepared for him by Hyder Ali is astonishing; that he should then have sought to extricate himself by an act which, in the eye of strict military justice, merited death, is astonishing; and not less astonishing is the fact that Captain Robinson obeyed the order extorted from Captain Orton, and surrendered the place. rison were removed, not to Trichinopoly, but to Seringapatam; and in a dungeon within that city the recreant Captain Robinson perished. This officer's breach of faith afforded Hyder Ali a pretence for a further act of deception. Captain Fassain, who had resisted at Caveriporam till resistance was vain, capitulated on condition of himself and his garrison being released on parole. Like the garrison at Eroad, they too were marched to Seringapatam.

Darkly and heavily did the year 1768 close upon the prospects of the British government on the Coromandel coast. A few weeks had wrested from them nearly all that they had previously gained, and Fuzzul Oolla Khan was sent to visit Madura and Tinnevelly, while his master ravaged the country in the neighbourhood of the Cavery-flaming villages and a flying population everywhere marking his progress. The government of Madras became alarmed, as well they might, and made Hyder Ali to Hyder Ali's tent, under an assurance that, manner in which his overtures had been refrom Mahomed Ali, and on the evil effects of that princo's influence in the councils of the He referred to the advantage of maintaining Mysoro as a barrier to Arcot against the Mahrattas, and, adverting to a threatened invasion by that power, intimated that he could not oppose both them and the English at the same time, and that it remained! for the latter power to determine whether hel should continue to shield them from the exact horse, advanced rapidly towards that former as heretofore, or whether he should place, and on the 29th of March appeared lequito with the Mahrattas for the destruction of fore it. A small party of infantry joined him the English. Captain Brooke, in reply, pointed on the following day. He image distely caned out the superior advantages of an alliance with the English to one with the Mahrattar, to pressing a desire to treat for peace, and rewhich Hyder Ali assented, and expressed a wish that Colonel Smith should come up to the army invested with full powers of negotiation. Captain Brooke suggested that Hyder Ali should send a vaked to Madras. This he refused, on the twofold ground, that it would give umbrage to the Mahrattas, and that at Madras all his efforts for peace would be frustrated by Mahomed Ali. Before taking his leave, Captain Brooke suggested to Hyder Ali that there was one proof of his friendly and pacific disposition which might readily and at l once be afforded: the discontinuance of the excesses by which the country was devastated, and the defenceless inhabitants reduced to the extremity of wretchedness. The proposal met probably with all the success which the proposer expected. Of friendly professions Hyder Ali was profuse, but of nothing more. He answered, that his treasury was not enriched by the excesses complained of, but that he had been compelled to accept the services of some volunteers whose conduct he could not Hyder Ali for the liberation of some persons The report of this conversation was forwarded to Madras, and Mr. Andrews, a comber of council, was deputed to negotiate.

h proposals to be submitted to the governor because it was felt to be vain to refuse, and council, having previously concluded a Thus terminated the war with Hyder Ali-truce for twelve days. The governor of Madras a war needle-sly and improvidently commenced, had every reason to desire peace: so great and conducted, on the part of the Madras gowas their distress that the Company's invest- vernment, with singular weakness and unskilments were entirely suspended, and it was fulness. Its conclusion was far more happy stated that their resources were insufficient to than that government had any right to expect, carry on the war more than four months either from their own measures or from the longer. Hyder Ali's proposals were, however, character of their enemy. rejected, and hostilities recommenced. Colonel jected; on the wrongs which he had received | Smith, who had returned to the field, watched the movements of Hyder Ali with uncasing vigilance, and frequently counteracted them with admirable skill. The manu urrer of the two armies had brought them about a hundred and forty miles to the worthward of Madras, when suddenly dismissing nearly the whole of his infantry, the greater part of his cavalry, together with his gans and baggage of every description, Hyder Ali, with air thousa letter to be addressed to the governor exquesting that Mr. Dupre, a member of council and next in surression to the chale, might be deputed to attend him. The character of the man who made this demand, the place from which it was made, and the circumstances under which he had arrived there, all contributed to recure attention to the message. Mr. Dupre proceeded to the exap of Hyder Ali on the morning of the receipt of his letter, and, after a series of conferences, the terms of a treaty were egged upon. The treaty was executed by the governor and council on the 3rd of April, and by Hyder Alica the 4th. With reference to the circumstances melet which the peace was concluded, Hyder Ali may be regarded as having displayed much moderation. A mutual restoration of exptured places was provided for, and Carnor, an ancient dependency of Mysors, which had been for some time retained by Mahomed Ali, was to be rendered back. After the conclusion of the treaty, difficulties arose from a demand of kept prisoners by Mahomed Ali, and of the surrender of some stores at Color. With much persuasion the nabob was induced to comply arrived in the camp of Hyder Ali on the with the former demand, and the latter was 3th of February, and quitted it on the 21st, yielded by the British government, probably

CHAPTER VIII.

PARLIAMENT PASSES A BILL FOR REGULATING THE DIVIDENDS OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY -APPOINTMENT OF SIR JOHN LINDSAY AS ROYAL COMMISSIONER - CONQUEST OF TANJORE -ADMINISTRATION OF CLIVE'S SUCCESSORS-WARREN HASTINGS. GOVERNOR OF BENGAL-TREATMENT OF THE EMPEROR-DEFEAT OF THE ROHILLAS-COMPANY APPLY TO GOVERN-MENT FOR A LOAN-CHANGES IN THE CONSTITUTION OF THE COMPANY.

The dividends of the East-India Company, like those of other mercantile bodies, had been accustomed to fluctuate accordingly as circumstances were prosperous or adverse. In 1766, the dividend had for some time been made at the rate of six per cent. per annum. The news of the acquisition of the dewanny of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, impressed the proprietors with a belief that more might reasonably be expected; and at the same general court in which the success of Clive's negotiation was announced, a motion was made to raise the dividend to eight per cent.; but the Court of Directors having delivered an unanimous opinion that the proposal was premature, the motion, in deference to their judgment, was At the next general court, howwithdrawn. ever, the subject of increase of dividend was again brought forward, and an augmentation of still greater amount was called for. It was moved that the next dividend should be made at the rate of ten per cent. per annum. The Court of Directors, anticipating that a proposal for increasing the dividend would be made, had prepared a report, the result of an investigation of the Company's affairs, with special regard to the subject of debate; and their conclusion was, that the circumstances of the Company were not such as to warrant any increase. Notwithstanding this, the motion was pressed to a division, and was finally determined by a ballot, the result of which gave a victory to the advocates of the pro-posed increase. This was followed by a proposal to make overtures to Government for an extension of the duration of the Company's charter, on consideration of their admitting the State to participate in the advantages of their recent acquisition. The proposal, however, was met by a motion for the previous question, which was carried. This result was followed by a motion, recommending the Court of Directors to take measures for obtaining from parliament further powers for extending the trade of the Company, and securing to them the benefits of the grants and acquisitions recently obtained. An amendment upon this was moved, embodying the views of those who had supported the first motion, but without specially referring to them; motions of adjournment sine die, and of adjournment to a future day, were made, and, after a protracted debate, the court broke up, with an understanding that the subject should be resumed at the quarterly court, which was approaching. variety of papers, but the committee did not

But the successful results of Clive's policy had attracted the notice of others as well as of the proprietors of East-India stock. months before the discussion last noticed, the Duke of Grafton, then prime minister, had intimated to the chairman and deputy-chairman that the affairs of the East-India Company would probably occupy the attention of parliament in the approaching session, and that it might be expected to meet before Christmas. It had met on the 11th November; and on the 25th, a motion was made in the House of Commons, for a committee to inquire into the state and condition of the Company. It was carried, upon a division, by one hundred and twentynine against seventy-six; and it was then further resolved, that the committee should consist of the "whole House."

On the 10th December, the court received orders to lay before the House of Commons a variety of papers, including copies of all treaties and grants from any native powers between 1756 and 1766, both years inclusive; as well as of all correspondence relating thereto, and an account of the state of the Company's territorial revenues. At the time of making these orders, the House also called for a statement of all expenses incurred by Government on account of the East-India Company during the period to which the order for copies of the treaties and grants applied. These proceedings of parliament were made known to the general court held a few days after the service of the orders, and the effect was to create a general impression that, under the circumstances, it was not advisable to make any application to parliament. With reference to the order for a statement of expenses incurred by Government on behalf of the Company, it was suggested that a counter-statement should be prepared, of charges thrown upon the Company by the acquisition and preservation of their possessions, the reduction and temporary retention of Manilla, and other similar causes; but the Court of Directors, it was intimated, had already anticipated the wishes of the proprietors on this point, by giving orders for the preparation of such a statement. The general court adjourned till the 31st December, on which day a motion, recommending the Court of Directors to treat with the ministry and report their proceedings, was carried unanimously.

The House of Commons had called for a

proceed to business till the latter end of March. | the extent of such addition had varied from It sat at intervals through the month of April and part of May. In the mean time the desire of the proprietors for an increase of their dividend continued, but the ministers and the Court of Directors were alike opposed to its gratification. At a general court, held on the 6th May, the chairman reported the results of the negotiations between the Court of Directors and the advisers of the Crown, and apprized the proprietors of the feeling entertained by the latter against an increase of the dividend. It was, notwithstanding, moved, that the dividend for the ensuing half-year should be at the rate of twelve-and-a-half per cent. per annum, and the motion was carried. On the following day, the House of Commons called for the proceedings of the court at which this vote was passed; and at another general court, held on the 8th, the Court of Directors recommended that it should be rescinded. After a debate of great length, a resolution was passed, to the effect that, in the arrangement with the ministers of the Crown, four hundred thousand pounds per annum should be secured to the This did not differ substantially from the former resolution, as that sum would have furnished a dividend of twelve-and-a-half per cent. On the day on which this court was held, Mr. Fuller, the chairman of the committee of the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a bill for regulating the Company's dividends, and the motion was carried. The bill was brought in on the 11th, and read a On the 12th it was read a second time, and ordered to be committed on the 19th. The object of the bill was to restrain any increase of dividend beyond ten per cent. till the next session of parliament.

On the 18th May, the chairman reported to a general court then held, that copies of the resolution passed at the preceding court, had een delivered to the Duke of Grafton, premier, Townsend, chancellor of the exchequer, General Conway, one of the secretaries of An interview with the Duke of Grafton . I been sought, but the answer of that nobleman seemed to offer little encouragement to the hopes of the proprietors. The Court of Directors, however, had deemed it expedient to try the effect of a personal conference: the chairman and deputy accordingly availed themselves of the expressed readiness of the minister to receive them; but all that they obtained was a reference for his views to his written message. Under these circumstances, the Court of Directors recommended the presentation of a peti-tion to the House of Commons, pressing the claims of the company, but modifying them in some degree so as to meet the views of the administration. One of the main points in which modification took place, was that of the period during which the proposed agreement between the crown and the company should remain in force. The proprietors had required thirty-seven to fifty years. Ministers would conclude no agreement for more than three years, and the first clause of the proposed potition expressed acquiescence in this arrangement. The fourth, fifth, and sixth clauses proposed that the trading profits of the company, and the residue of the territorial revenue. after deducting the expenses of administration, should form a fund out of which the company should receive four hundred thousand pounds per annum as a dividend, and that the surplus should be equally divided between the Company and the public, the share of the Company being appropriated to the discharge of their debts. The remaining clauses related to various points, fiscal, military, and commercial, but of inferior importance with reference to the existing circumstances of the Company. The debate of this day was fierce and long. At a late hour, a motion being made for a petition to the House of Commons, praying that the petitioners might be heard by themselves or their counsel against the bill for regulating the Company's dividends, a ballot was demanded; and, as the bill was to go into committee on the following day, it was suggested, contrary to usual practice, that the ballot should take place forthwith. At nine o'clock in the evening it was moved and carried, that the ballot should then commence, and continue open till eleven. Against this decision several proprietors delivered a protest. Another protest was signed by the Court of Directors, who also refused to appoint any Scrutineers were accordingly scrutincers. chosen by the proprietors, who reported that the motion was carried by one hundred and The debate was thirty-eight against two. then resumed on the petition proposed by the Court of Directors. It was conducted with no less vehemence than that which had preceded the ballot. It was finally determined to instruct the Court of Directors to alter the petition, by suggesting the payment of four hundred thousand pounds per annum to the public in place of the proposed participation in the Company's profits; and a few minutes before four o'clock in the morning of the 19th May, this memorable court adjourned. The petition praying to be heard by counsel against the dividend bill was presented to the House of Commons on the same day. A motion, to refer it to the consideration of the committee being opposed, the debate was adjourned till the following day. motion succeeded for a return of the names of the proprietors who had balloted on the day before under such extraordinary circumstances, and of the amount of their stock. It was op-posed; but, on a division, carried. The petition originally prepared by the Court of Directors, and which submitted the proposals of the Company for an arrangement with the State, was presented on the 20th, and referred to the The adjourned debate on the committee. former petition was then resumed, and the a considerable addition to the term of their petition was ultimately rejected. On the 25th, charter, and the expectations expressed as to it was ordered that it be an instruction to the crime of dishonouring the name of their master | Harland was not the only source of disquiet by associating it with a miserable and scandalous deception.

Sir John Lindsay, on arriving at Madras, proceeded to assume the exercise of the high powers with which he was invested. He announced to the governor and council that he was the bearer of letters and presents from the restore him - a most ill-judged exercise of Crown to the Nabob of Arcot, and invited lenity. Sir Robert Fletcher could not plead them to grace the delivery by giving their want of experience in extenuation of his guilt, attendance on the plenipotentiary. This was declined, and an angry correspondence commenced, which was subsequently continued on subjects of more grave importance. Hyder Ali was attacked by the Mahrattas, and both the belligerents were desirous of the assistance of the English. The government of Madras wished to maintain neutrality, but had they felt at liberty to join either party in the war, their inclinations would have led them towards Hyder Ali. On the contrary, the nabob was disposed to favour the Mahrattas; and he succeeded in enlisting the king's plenipotentiary on his side. On this discreditable portion of Being ordered to Trichinopoly, he applied for the British history of India it is unnecessary, and would be uninteresting, to dwell. Court of Directors, on becoming acquainted with the powers bestowed on Sir John Lindsay the first intimation of which was derived from Madras-remonstrated against the course taken by the ministry, of which, it may be presumed, the latter were in some degree ashamed. The powers, indeed, were not withdrawn, but a change was made of the person to whom they were intrusted. Sir Robert Harland was appointed to succeed Sir John Lindsay, and the Court were informed that such instructions had been given him as left "no Sir Robert Fletcher to the discharge of his reason of apprehension to the Company."

In the mean time the government of Madras and become involved in hostilities with Tanjore, arose out of disputes between the rajah et country and Mahomet Ali. The fortress vellum was attacked, and taken; the city of anjore was besieged, and would probably have fallen, had not a premature peace been concluded by the son of Mahomet Ali. The conditions agreed to by the Rajah of Tanjore not being performed within the stipulated time, hostilities recommenced. They terminated in the surrender by the rajah of the fortress of Vellum, and the districts of Coiladdy and

Elangad.

The new plenipotentiary, Sir Robert Harland, had arrived in August, 1771. standing his alleged instructions were such as to leave "no reason of apprehension to the of Bengal subsequently to the departure of Company, his conduct was even more officious Clive. The government of Mr. Verelst, who Company, his conduct was even more officious and dangerous than that of his predecessor. He entered into negotiations with the Mahrattas, and involved himself in endless disputes with the governor and council. He finally departed, in great wrath, having neither offered to the governor nor received from him the courtesies usual on such an occasion.

into insignificance, when compared with the council received from the conduct of Sir Robert to them. Sir Robert Fletcher, it will be re-membered, had been concerned in the mutinous proceedings in Bengal, and for this offence he had, under the sentence of a court-martial. been most justly dismissed the service. proprietors, however, had thought proper to and that guilt was greatly aggravated by his rank. It was particularly his duty to set an example of military obedience to those whom he commanded. When that duty was forgotten, and the influence of his rank given in aid of the cause of mutiny, neither the crime nor the danger was of ordinary character. These obvious truths were, however, forgotten or cast aside in the zeal of personal friendship. Sir Robert Fletcher, on his restoration, appointed to the chief command, and to a seat in council at Madras. There he soon became involved in violent disputes with the governor. a passage to England, in order, as he represented, to attend his duty in parliament, of which body he was a member. He was informed, that when he had set an example of military obedience, any representation from him would receive due attention. The lesson which he had already received was probably not lost upon him—he proceeded to Trichinopoly, and took charge of the fortress. council then passed a resolution, that out of respect and veneration for the House of Commons and their privileges, no impediment should be offered to the immediate return of duty in that assembly.

Before this transaction, the government of Madras had been engaged in aiding Mahomet Ali to punish certain Polygars who had offended him. They soon afterwards gratified him by making war upon Tanjore. The country was subdued, and the rajah made prisoner. Space cannot be afforded for a minute inquiry into the justice of this war, but it was at least questionable. Mahomet Ali had long thirsted for the possession of Tanjore, and the English government at length indulged him by its conquest. The Dutch had purchased of the rajah the town of Nagore and its dependencies; but their retention of the purchase was alike disagreeable to the English and the nabob, and an arrangement was made for its surrender.

It is now necessary to glance at the affairs succeeded to the chair, affords little deserving He interfered to protect the emof notice. peror and the vizier from a menaced invasion by Abdalee Shah, projected an unsuccessful expedition to Nepaul, and concluded a new treaty with the vizier. Mr. Verelst was suctreaty with the vizier. Mr. Verelst was succeeded by Mr. Cartier, the principal events of The annoyance which the governor and whose administration were a dreadful famine, was one little calculated to secure, either to himself or his country, the confidence of natives of rank. For this act, however, he was not responsible; it was forced upon him by the for postponing them. office of dewan had hitherto been exercisedhead of the revenue department, and to commit to European servants the discharge of the functions with which the Company had been of previous authorities it became necessary to invested by the emperor. But this was not make provision for his guardianship. The all. Reports prejudicial to the character of choice made by Hastings of a guardian for the Mahomed Reza Khan had reached the Court infant prince was certainly an extraordinary of Directors. They had travelled through no prevails in India, where women of rank never it is believed in the intringer of Nancomer. it is believed, in the intrigues of Nuncomar. emerge from seclusion, excepting under very Unhappily, the Court of Directors listened to extraordinary circumstances, it could scarcely them; and orders were sent out to seize Ma-have been anticipated that a female would homed Reza Khan, his family, partisans, and be selected for an office of state, and still less adherents, and detain them in custody till his such a female as was chosen for the guardian accounts should be duly examined. Hastings of the nabob. The object of the governor's lost no time in executing these orders; and choice was Munny Begum, a favourite inmate among the parties apprehended was the gal- of the harem of Meer Jaffier, the mother of lant native Shitabroy, whose services to the Noojum-ad-Dowlah, but not of the reigning English might have saved him from such an prince. Hastings defended this step, on the indignity. Although the Court of Directors ground that the only man who could pretend seem to have been aware of the character of to the trust was the brother of Meer Jaffier; seem to have been aware of the character of to the trust was the brother of Meer Jaffier; Nuncomar, they relied in a great degree and that, as he had a numerous family, the upon evidence which he was expected to produce for establishing the charges against his sons might be dangerous to the life of the rival. His zeal, indeed, could not be questioned; and Hastings enlivened it by appointing his son, Goodias, treasurer of the nabob's of the young nabob. There is undoubtedly force in this objection; but if a regard to the safety of the young nabob rendered it advisable to seek a guardian from the gentler sex, there seems to have been no reason for excluding from the trust the prince's mother, who was that of his father—placid, gentle, and without appears to have existed. The character of the but that arising from his ascendancy over the person actually chosen was not such as to mind of his son. There can be no doubt that justify the irregularity of setting aside the the honour bestowed on the son was virtually superior claims of the nabob's mother. Prethe honour bestowed on the son was virtually superior claims of the nabob's mother. Prebestowed on the father; and that the influence viously to obtaining the favour of Meer Jaffier, of an able, intriguing, and unscrupulous man Munny Begum had been a public dancinglike Nuncomar, would be unbounded over the girl, and in the exercise of this occupation had mind of one in whom the habit of filial respect attracted the notice and won the affections of had prepared the way for the ready surrender the master of Bengal. Her reputation, it is not of his judgment, and who possessed no share to be presumed, was either better or worse than

far as can Le discovered, he was actuated only were afterwards assidnously searched to find

and the death of the Nabob Syef-al-Dowlah of by a desire to carry out the views of his emsmall-pox. The nabob was succeeded by his ployers; and in the means which he adopted brother, Mobarik-al-Dowlah, a boy about ten to conciliate Nuncomar, without, as he beyears of ago. On the departure of Mr. Car-lieved, trusting him, his judgment was probatier, his place was occupied by Warren Hast-bly more to be blamed than his intentions. ings, who had been brought from Madras for The inquiry into the conduct of the deposed the purpose of succeeding to the chair, of Naib advanced slowly, and the confinement of which he took possession in April, 1772 himself and his associate Shitabroy, in conse-Among the earliest acts of his government quence, was protracted. Hastings alleged the vast influence of the chief prisoner, and the necessity of breaking it before any efficient proceedings could be adopted, as the reasons Though tedious, the orders of his superiors. The Court of Directors inquiry was probably fair-for Mahomed Reza were dissatisfied, and not without cause, with Khan was acquitted. Shitabroy participated the financial results of their government in in the acquittal, and was dismissed with ex-Bengal; and they had resolved to discontinue traordinary marks of honour. But these were the use of the machinery through which the ineffectual to their intended object of soothing his wounded spirit. He died shortly afterto dispense with the native agency, which it wards, and his death is attributed to the comhad been deemed necessary to maintain at the bined influence of grief and of the debilitating effects of the climate of Calcutta.

The nabob was a minor, and in the abolition either of the ability or the guile of his parent. that ordinarily maintained by the class of per-Hastings, however, could be little disposed sons to which she belonged—and the character to trust Nuncomar, and there is no reason to of the dancing girls of India is too well known conclude that he then entertained any hostile to need description. It is not surprising that, feeling towards Mahomed Reza Khan. As when the annals of the Indian government the disquiet of his after-life.

been assigned for his emport in his arrangement in the sexts of the Liping green, ment with the British povernment. That government now resumed the districts—a were not indisposed to all Lira in the latter, measure not injustifiable, as they had been transferred to their enemies. It was, at the Robilla territory was the non fulfillient of extensions. fribute and to all future payments for ever.

is, it was urged, would be only a just recomso for defending against the Mahrattas his event of their being restored to him, unable to support any longer so ruinous an expense." No minute scrutiny into the moof that by which thrones are supported.

stipend, the expenses incurred in defending pense of their ally, which while thus ceasing to his territorial possessions. They had recorded be a charge upon the Company's finances, their opinion, that if the emperor should make would be "employed usefully for their inte-matter of accumation against Hastings, this invertures for reasoning his allieure with the extraordinary appointment should have given (Company, his right to recision the destricts extractionary appointment known lave given trainplay, not replied to receive the charges preferred a finel formerly and not be in a could not be dischin. It has never been ratisfactorily explained, pure d. Notwithstanding the area of the rail no. If home thy made, it was most discreditable proper ceremony than the superil. The most of finelings's judgment: in whatever light tive which was the most powerful in budies contemplated, it is a blot upon his administ to the discontinuous of the latter properly tration, and it was one of the main source of also to the tracter of the forces. The lemperor's districts of Rorsh and Allebalad But it was not matter of internal regulation were coded to the visier in receiveration of only that called for the attention of the goesples been of rapers, twenty of which were to vernor. The empeter had repeatedly precedible paid without delay, and the remainder for the nedictance of the English to enable althin two years. In addition to these page him to march to Dolhi, but had invariably ments, better terms than had previously been been refused. In the Mahrattis he found obtained were secured for the month of Religion more complained allies. By them he was consistency to be subsequently ampliyed in the ducted to the place where his nucretors bedieveness of the viries. This alreada was indeed been sovereigns, but where, however important to the British givernment, and the his situation might be disquired, he was but service of a British force that at that time the shadow of a prince. The Mahrattas never ardently desire I by the vizier. He enterwork without their price; and part of the tained designs of invaling tie Do ab, and payment of their covices to the emperor was attacking the Robillas, and was designs of the transfer to them of the districts which had abtained the aristance of the Region govern-

same time, resolved to discontinue the pays tain pocuniary stipulations entered into by the ment of the annual tribute to the emperor. Robilly chiefs with the vizier in coordination This, too, as a temporary expedient, while the of his intervention to drive away the Maheattas. emperor was leagued with a power dangerous The Robillas were backward in completing to the British government, or rather was their arrangements, and the vizier had there a entirely at the mercy of that power, was a plausible cause for war. But his designs exmeasure of ordinary precaution. But it was tended beyond the mere entirement of his not and temporary expedient that this measure pecuniary demands upon the Robillar; he was adopted. It was laid down by the go meditated the conquest of the country, and its vernor and council as an express condition of annexation to his own dominions. In this any future arrangement with the Company, project the governor of Bongal was desirous of that the emperor should be required to re-engaging, although he felt that the question nounce his claim both to the arrears of the involved very heavy responsibility. It appears not, however, that a regard to the justice of the project at all embarraged his consideration of its expediency. This is no uncharitable sursessions in Korah and Allahabad, in the mice, for his reflections on the subject are upon Andrecord. He thought that the Robillas were other reason was assigned for this proceed-dangerous to the virier, "the only usefulfally ing, and, in the opinion of the governor and of the Company;" that they could not be council, one of even greater weight than the relied on to upper the Mahrattas, but, on the former. "We are justified," said they, "by contrary, were likely to join with that power the stronger plea of absolute necessity, in in attacking Oude; that the acquisition of the insisting upon it, as our revenues are utterly Robilla country would be very beneficial to the vizier and the Company, inasmuch as it would strengthen the frontier of the former, without tives of the discontinuance of the Company's rendering the country less accessible to the stipend will be necessary. That which had forces of the latter-would give the vizier dictated the policy of Vansittart, decided also wealth, of which the Company might expect that of his successor, Hastings. An empty to partake, and security, without dangerous treasury had led to the dethronement of Meer increase of power. Lastly, he thought of forty Jaffior, and the same cause deprived Shah Allum lacs of supees, which the vizier had promised as the immediate reward of the desired service, The Bengal government had assigned as and of the advantage of having a large portion one reason for depriving the emperor of his of the Company's army supported at the exdiscipline and practice in war.'

times seemed to demand caution. He re-lits success, they remained the same. But it minded the board of the public clamour which prevailed at home, of the notice which Indian ance to rid them of their first oppressors, nor affairs obtained in parliament, and of the avidity with which the ministers of the Crown would seize upon any false step, in the approaching negotiations for the renewal of the objective the vizier or his European ally. Company's charter. With reference to all While these transactions were taking place, these considerations, it was finally determined the affairs of India were discussed at home not to decline the invitation of the vizier, but with an unusual degree of interest and exciteto give such an answer as would probably in- ment. The Company were unable to meet duce him to withdraw it. The conduct of the their engagements with the public, and were vizier was nearly as undecided as that of the even compelled to apply to government for a British Government. For a time he refrained loan. Borrowers are seldom regarded with British Government. For a time he refrained toan. Borrowers are seldom regarded with from further calling on them; but, after a much favour; their errors never escape conbrief interval, he laid claim to their assistance. I demnation, and not unfrequently their misforthe English brigade, under Colonel Champion, tunes are converted into crimes. In this case, was accordingly put in motion; and on the 23rd April, 1774, gave battle to the Rohillas, riches of India was a phrase which had passed and gained a complete victory over an army of into a proverb, and the possession of a large about forty thousand men, commanded by portion of a country, which was supposed to Wafiz Rehmut Khan. About two thousand overflow with wealth, was looked to as an inof the enemy fell on the field: more than fifty, fallible restorative of the dilapidated finances of the enemy fell on the field; more than fifty fallible restorative of the dilapidated finances pieces of cannon were taken, and standards of Great Britain. It was astounding, therewithout number. The vizier manifested the fore, to learn that, from some cause, the countmost dastardly pusillanimity. The night be- less treasures of India did not find their way fore the battle, he refused Colonel Champion home-or, at least, not into the coffers of the the use of some pieces of cannon for which he Company; for it was a startling fact, that applied, and urged him to decline the fight, while the Company was needy and embar-Finding the British commander inexorable on rassed, many who had entered their service the last point, he promised to support him with poor, quitted it, not merely with competent the last point, he promised to support him with spoor, quitted it, not merely with competent all his force, and especially with a large body incans of support, but with fortunes rivalling of cavalry, to act under Colonel Champion's directions. Instead of this, he remained inactive at some distance from the field, surrounded by his cavalry, and with a large train of artillery unemployed, till the news of the enemy's mind it was still evident that India abounded defeat reached him. His cavalry then moved in riches, though, from some extraordinary with admirable celerity, pushed into the enemy's camp, and carried off immense plunder, ill-fortune, or ill-management, the Company did not succeed in obtaining their share. The intrasture, clephants, camels, camp equipage, lenvy excited by these sudden acquisitions of in treasure, elephants, camels, camp equipage, and other effects. The Company's troops, justly indignant at the conduct of those of the vizier, are said to have exclaimed-" We have the honour of the day, and these banditti the profits."

The contest was now virtually decided. The obstinate determination of a chief, named Fyzoolla Khan, occasioned the united armies to make a movement against him; but the business was settled by negotiation, and the vizier was placed in quiet possesion of his new territory. His acquisition cannot be regarded in any other light than as an unrighteous conquest, and the English government must bear their share of the guilt attending it. In extenuation, it has been urged that the Rohillas universal attention, and converted it into the formed but a small portion of the inhabitants means of universal excitement. of the country; that their possession of it was not of long standing, and that it had been sion of the seat of government at Calcutta, acquired by the same means by which it had two committees were appointed by the House been lost. All this is true: the Rohillas were of Commons to inquire into the affairs of the enterprising Affghan adventurers, who had East-India Company - the one secret, the reduced to subjection a comparatively feeble other open. The Company proposed to send rests, and conveniently for keeping up its own majority of the inhabitants of the country. Before the invasion of the vizier, these were Still he hesitated: the circumstances of the victims of Mahometan usurpation; and after envy excited by these sudden acquisitions of opulence and grandeur added to the unfavourable feeling engendered by the embarrassments of the Company; and the parliament, the press, and the conversation of men of all ranks and parties found a never-failing supply of matter for discussion and invective in the alleged mismanagement of the affairs of India, and the enormous wealth brought from that country by those who had been officially connected with it. At no period before or since has the subject attracted so much interest. India, for the most part, has been a word that has fallen on the public ear almost unheeded. It was then invested with a spell which commanded

About the time that Hastings took posses-Hindoo population, who still constituted a vast out a superintending commission, but a parliamentary regative prevented the accomplish-| strong terms, of various provisions in the bill. ment of their purpose. The ministers were was submitted to the proprietors, and, on a ment of their purpose. The ministers were was submitted to the proprietors, and, on a ready to relieve the embarrassments of the ballot, adopted by four hundred and forty Company by a land, but they were not less votes against fourteen. It denounced the bill ready to take advantage of their position and as destructive of every privilege which the that of the Company by prescribing their own terms. The claim of the crown to four hundred and forty company enjoyed under the most sacred secutives.

The claim of the crown to four hundred and forty to the property of the people at large; company enjoyed under the most sacred secutives of the appointment of officers by personnels. ored thousand points per annual was to be to the property of the people at large; com-suspended till the loan was repaid; but, in plained of the appointment of officers by par-other respects, the Company regarded the liament, vested with the whole civil and mili-proposed conditions as harsh, and even as in-tary authority of Bengal, and with a power of superintending the other presidencies, which resisted, but with the usual fortune of those officers the Company had no means of recall-who resist a ministerial majority. The minis- ing, and over whom they could exercise no ter declared that though the Company should real control, while the territorial possessions decline the lean, parliament would, never-were, notwithstanding, declared to be still thelers, interfere for the regulation of their vested in the Company, and prayed the House affairs. Parliament did interfere, and most not to give its sanction to an act which, under affairs. Parliament did interfere, and most extensively. The plan for a superintending the commission had been rejected, but it was not the intention of the minister to permit the intention of the minister to permit the powers of the Company, and virtually transfer them to the Crown;" it represented the had refused the Company the and interests of the Company in many other power to do, he meant to do himself. The Company had been occupied in preparing a plan for the improvement of the administration of justice in Bengal. This task, too, was seized by the minister. The question of territorial right he expressed himself unwilling to agitate; but a series of resolutions, proposed in the House of Commons by General Purgoyne, chairman of the select committee, were carried, the first of which declared "that all acquisitions made under the influ-"that all acquisitions made under the influence of military force, or by treaty with fobody in the kingdom; professing to be alarmed reign printes, do of right belong to the state." by such proceedings, inasmuch as the priviThe views of the ministry were finally emleges of the city of Lac Tont Louis Common tedies in a bill presented to parliament. By security as those of the Last-India Company; this fill the government of Bengal was to be and alleging that the bill had been brought place of one, and that one-fourth part of the entire number should be renewed annually. It also provided that all the Company's correspondence relating to civil and military affairs, the government of the country, or the administration of the revenues, should be laid before one of his Majesty's secretaries of state. The receipt of presents by servants, either of the Crown or the Company, was prohibited; and the governor-general, councillors, and judges, were restrained from entering into trade, or deriving profit from it.

With this act begins a nemeral is the liberty of the East-India Company. The property of the new government with the property of another chapter. Here it is only some of observe, that Warren Hastings, from the wines governor of Bengal, was named as the last of the new government. Mr. Farmely a first servant of the Company, and then in their was nominated one of the council, The and maining councillors were, General Claredown Colonel Monson, and Mr. Philip Francis, all of them at the time in England.

CHAPTER IX.

DISPUTES BETWEEN HASTINGS AND HIS COLLEAGUES - NUNCOMAR HANGED FOR FORGERY. HASTINGS'S PROCEEDINGS DISAPPROVED OF AT HOME-COLONEL MACLEAN DECLARES HIMSELF AUTHORIZED TO TENDER HASTINGS'S BESIGNATION—REPUDIATED BY HASTINGS—DISPUTES BETWEEN HASTINGS AND GENERAL CLAVERING - CONTEST BETWEEN THE SUPREME COURT AND THE GOVERNMENT-DUEL BETWEEN FRANCIS AND HASTINGS.

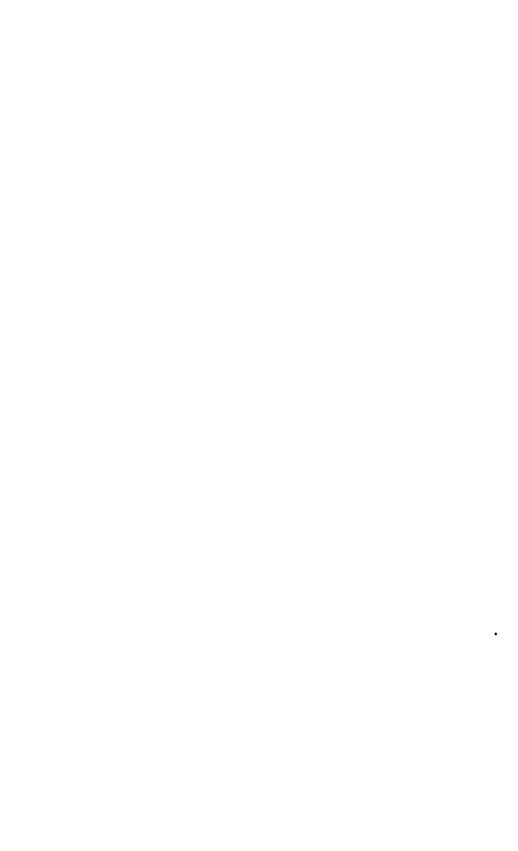

THE members of council who had to proceed from England, as well as the chief justice and puisne judges of the supreme court of judicature, arrived at Calcutta in October, 1774, and on the 21st of that month the new government was publicly proclaimed. The Court of Directors had framed, for the guidance of the governor-general and council, a very long and minute code of instructions, commencing with an injunction to preserve harmony. But from the moment at which the voyagers set foot on the shore of Bengal, it was evident that there was but small ground for hoping that the good advice of the Court would be followed. The

to overflowing with the prevailing impression of universal misgovernment in India, and the elements of discord were thus abundant. They soon began to ferment. Mr. Barwell was in the interior, and till his arrival the public business and the angry passions of the members of the government alike had rest. sion of the absent councillor set both in motion. The governor-general laid before the board a minute, containing a relation of the principal events of his own administration, and an exposition of the existing state of the Company's affairs. The Rohilla war and the Company's relations with the vizier necessarily formed reception given by the governor-general to his prominent topics in this paper, and out of new associates was in their judgment deficient these arose the first explosion of ill-feeling. in respect, for though they received a salute | Hastings had prevailed upon the vizier to from the battery, it consisted of only seventeen receive at his court a British resident, and a genguns, whereas they were of opinion that they tleman named Middleton had been appointed were entitled to twenty-one. The minds of all to the office. Between the resident and but as they had no means of enforcing the artillery, they laid before the board a letter den at i against the will of Hastings, they of which they had prepared for transmission to necessity were forced to submit. They had, the Court of Directors. It consisted of no less however, an expedient by which they could than seventy-four paragraphs, some of them of anney the governor-general, if they could not considerable length, and all full charged with current him. Colonel Menson suggested the denunciations of the governor-general's policy, recall of Mr. Middleton. General Clavering This document was prepared with a view to an i Mr. Francis supported the proposal; Mr. its being perused by other parties than those Farwell took part with the governor-general; to whom it was addressed. In a note which Int the former three constituting a majority accompanied the delivery of the letter to the of the board, their views necessarily prevailed, board, the framers of it observe, "the whole and a resolution for the recall of the resident at of the papers, as they apprehend, must, in the court of the vizier was passed. Another obedience to the act of parliament, be trans-re-clution followed, directing Mr. Middleton mitted by the Court of Directors to one of his to bring with him the whole of his correspon- Majesty's principal secretaries of state." dence during his residence at the court of

to by before the beard the whole of the corre- of the new councillors had been announced by spendence. His opponents no less obstinately what they regarded as the stinted measure of albered to their demand for its production; honour conveyed by seventeen discharges of

The members of the council of Bengal could Onde, including all that the governor-general not directly address the ministers of the Crown Find refused. The next subject of discussion | -at least, they could not officially address was the choice of a successor to Mr. Middleton. them; but there can be little doubt that this Hartings was requested to nominate some per-letter was intended for the ministry, though the three was intended for the ministry, though then, but declined. General Clavering then proposed that the duties of the resident should be transferred to Colonel Champion, the officer of the commanding the brigade on service in Oude. Mr. Parwell objected to the office of resident this case before the Court of Directors in a separate communication, and the Court were thus enlightened by three sets of despatches on being united with the chief military command, the same subject—one from the governor-general Manner and Mr. Perpendiguity of the contraction of the ministry, though the set of the ministry, though of the ministry, though of the ministry, though of the ministry, though one that the delication is called the following them the delication of the ministry, though one that the duties of the resident should be transferred to Colonel Champion, the officer of the court of Directors in a separate communication, and the Court were thus enlightened by three sets of despatches on the color of the ministry, though of the ministry of Colonel Monson and Mr. Francis supporting from the governor-general only, and a third General Clavering, his resolution was carried, from three members of the council. Mr. Bar-Hastings was subjected to the mortification of well, though agreeing with the governor-gen-I sieg instructed to write to the virier, appriz-leval, declined to become a party to his appeal

the amount of three lace and filty-four thousand rupees had been received by the governorgeneral in the manner described by Nuncomar, too, was a man of great we dishgeneral in the manner described by Nuncomar, the had been proposed of extra relinary powers and that such money of right belonged to the East-India Company—a resolution naturally enough followed by another, calling upon the governor-general to pay the amount into the Company's treasury for their use. The secretary conveyed these resolutions to Hastings, of the highest caste. As a Brahmin, his perwho refused to receive or to give any answer to them. Another resolution was thereupon mitted all possible crimes, benishment, mitipassed, that the proceedings should be transparted by the privilege of carrying away all his mitted to the Company's attorney, for the property, was the severest penalty to which he purpose of being submitted to counsel for their could be subject; and, by his countrymen, opinion how to preced for the recovery of the forgery was scarcely deemed a crime at all, money. On a future day it was recolved to Under the influence of all the feelings excited opinion how to preceed for the recovery of the forgery was reareely deemed a crime at all, money. On a future day it was resolved to Under the influence of all the feelings excited summon certain witnesses; Hastings advised by this unprecedented case, no native exthem not to attend. The majority resolved pected that the entence of the court would be that the refusal was a high indignity to the carried into effect. The approach of the day board. The governor-general once more de clared the board dissolved, and retired; where postponement of the fatal punishment, scarcely awful preparation for inflicting the last penalty application, without preparation and without of the law Nuncerna and the last penalty application, without preparation and w of the law. Nuncomar met it with even more notice, appears similar in effect to that of the Hinden methy. than Hindoo apathy. He took solemn leave ex post facto law. The executive of his friends: but neither his counterneed to post facto law. of his friends; but neither his countenance, deportment, nor intervening occupations indicated any internal conflict. After the departure of those on whom his eyes were never again to rest, he engaged himself in writing notes and examining accounts, as though transacting ordinary business under ordinary circumstances. He entered with a calm step the palanquin which was to bear him to an ignominious death, and ascended the steps of the scaffold with equal firmness. The crowd collected was immense. The Hindoo portion of it was convulsed by conflicting feelings of doubt, The Mahorage, despair, shame, and pity. metan spectators, it is said, felt joy at the downfall of the artful and unrelenting enemy of Mahomed Reza Khan. The feelings of the one party were soon to be outraged, and those of the other gratified, by the conclusion of the spectacle which had brought them together. The signal was given—the platform on which the criminal stood prepared for death sunk from beneath his feet, and the spirit of Nuncomar was on its way to a more awful tribunal than that before which he had lately appeared. The effect upon the Hindoos, who formed the great mass of the assembled crowd, resembled that of an earthquake. Uttering a wild and piercing cry, they fled from the spot-force and panic carried with them the rest of the multitude, so that none remained near the place of execution but the servants of the law, and the few Brahmin followers whose duty it was to take charge of the culprit's body.

The trial and execution of Nuncomar have given rise to discussions almost without number. The legality of the proceedings has been The legality of the proceedings has been questioned—their justice denied—and the matives of those engaged in them impugued. The supposed illegality rests upon the assertion | that the criminal law of England does not extend to its outlying possessions, unless they be specially named. This is a question purely technical, and far too important to be discussed incidentally. For these reasons, it may here be passed by. The question of the justice of the proceedings, which ended in the execution of Nuncomar, stands on different grounds; and, with reference to the violent and longprotracted controversy to which it gave rise, it would not be excusable to pass it over without notice.

In India, the crime of forgery, as has been observed, had never been punished with death. Notwithstanding its dangerous character, it was regarded there as a slight and venial offence; and it may be feared that, if dexterously performed, those who were uninjured by the crime would be more ready to admire the ingenuity of the perpetrator than to condema his want of honesty. The English law, with its severe provisions against forgers, were nuknown to the mass of the people within the affected their belief. It came, and with it the circle of the Supreme Court, and its suited awful preparation for infliction the land of the Supreme Court, and its suited awful preparation for infliction the land.

law was thus suddenly introduced were not and he proceeded without ceremony to annul sound; they were corrupted and debased by such of their acts as were most offensive to the falso medium through which successive him. When the council insisted on the recall generations and been accustomed to contem- of Mr. Middleton from Oude, the functions of plate their rights and duties, and to some of the resident lad been temporarily vested in the plainest dictates of morality they were in the plainest dictates of morality they were in the plainest dictates of morality they were in the officer commanding the brigade. After a sensible. To men thus surrounded by contaminating influences—men who had never want to the office of resident; but they were enjoyed the benefit of a pure moral amosphere, far from agreeing as to the person who should extraordinary consideration was due. The be selected for the purpose. The preventer-lands instance which had accurated a property of the purpose. single instance which had occurred of a con-general proposed the Hunograble Frederick viction for forgery in the mayor's court of Cal-Stuart. The opposing majority refused to cutta was probably known to few except the concur; they proposed a gentleman named parties immediately interested in it. The case Bristow; and hobbing the power in their can of Nuncomarhad from various causes attracted hands, their proposal, as a matter of course, inusual attention, and it offered a fitting occasion for making the law known—while the Monson, Hastings retaliated by proposing the court, by exercising their power of requiting recall of Mr. Bristow, and the re-appointment the convict, with a view to the extension of the Mr. Middleton. General Clavering and the mercy of the Crown, might have relieved Mr. Trancis stoutly resisted; they talked themselves and the law that they administered builty of the injustice done to Mr. Bristow, in from the imputations of injustice and cruelty, fremoving him from a situation which he had which, from their pursuing a different course, have been freely cast upon both.

The death of Nuncomar was succeeded by a comparative calm. The state of feeling in the council remained unaltered, and the majority continued to determine and to act without reference to the views of the governor-general | and the single member who supported him. But the stream of accusation, which had set so they should have some experience of the morstrongly and so formidably against Hastings, censed to flow. Men were appalled by the fate | vered, and it was decided that Mr. Bristow which he had long been a stranger. had been closed by an ignominious death, his of the office of resident. They thus alike adold rival, Mahomed Reza Khan, attained a mitted that their motives were to a great extriumph. The Court of Directors, having become satisfied of his innocence, and of the greatly blamed for restoring a man of acknowinfamy of his accuser Nuncomar, had directed ledged competency to an office from which he is restoration to office. There was some am- had been somewhat capriciously removed; but, different constructions of them. The will of cious refusal of Hastings to submit the unmuthe majority was, that Mahomed Reza Khan tilated correspondence of himself and the resishould be restored to his former charge, which dent to the board. A still less excurable act involved the duties which had been assigned of retaliation was perpetrated with regard to a to Goodias. The latter, however, was consoled civil servant, named Fowke, who had been in some degree for his loss, by appointment to appointed under the ascendancy of the late another office; but inferior in trust, dignity, and emolument to his former post.

filled with credit to himself and advantage to the Company, and for no other avowed reason than to give his place to another; but argument and declamation were alike vain. The foot of the governor-general was upon the necks of his opponents; he remembered how they had employed their power while power rested with them, and reemed resolved that tification which he had endured. He persoof the chief accuser, and the governor-general should give way to Mr. Middleton. Both enjoyed a degree of peace, in this respect, to parties agreed in declaring that there was no objection to either Mr. Middleton or Mr. Bris-Soon after the intriguing life of Nuncomar tow-that both were well fitted for the duties ouity in the orders of the Court, and the two on the other hand, it must not be forgotten rties in council, in conformity with what that, in this instance at least, the contest had as now long-established custom, adopted been in some degree provoked by the pertinamajority to a situation at Benares. This gentleman and his father had taken part with the Little occurred at the board to disturb the opponents of Hastings, and under the pretence monotony of eternal bickering till the death of that the duty assigned to Mr. Fowke was spe-Colonel Monson, which took place in September, cial, and had been performed, he was removed. 1776. This event reduced the two parties in Immediately afterwards, another civil servant council to an equality in point of numbers; was appointed to reside at Benares, with an but as the governor-general had the casting assistant bearing the name of Hastings's convote, its effects were to reverse the former stant supporter, Barwell. If in the removal position of the combatants, and to throw into of Mr. Bristow, and the re-appointment of the hands of Hastings all the power which his Mr. Middleton, Hastings had some grounds of opponents had previously exercised. What justification, in the case of Mr. Fowke there followed may readily be anticipated. Hastings were none. It was, as described by General exercised his long-lost authority in the same Clavering, "a vindictive measure couched unspirit which actuated its former possessors; der the appearance of a public service." In this spirit was the business of the Indian before any further steps should be taken in g wernment conducted till the authority of the business. The court, on this occasion, was Hastings was once more chaken by the arrival [thronged by peers, privy councillors, and adheof intelligence of a new arrangement for carry-frents of the administration. Treasury influence ing on the government, in which the name of is said to have been employed to a great extent Hastings this not appear. General Clavering against Hastings; and the first lord of the was to be governor-general, and Mr. Wheeler, Admiralty, the Earl of Sandwich, is represented formerly a director, was nominated to the las having been unusually active in aiding the vacant scat in conneil.

To explain these changes, it will be neceseary to refer to the course of events by which they were brought about.

Wearied with the annoyances of his situation, Hastings formed the determination of te-igning his office; and two gentlemen, Mr. Graham and Colonel Maclean, seem to have been intrusted with authority, under certain circumstances, to tender his resignation. latter only appears to have acted in the business, and his proceedings partake, in no small degree, of that mystery which hangs over almost everything connected with the name of Hastings. On Colonel Maclean's arrival in England, he found the state of feeling in almort every quarter unfavourable to his principal. The administration were decidedly hostile, actuated partly by the representations which they had undoubtedly received from the members of council opposed to the governorgeneral, and partly by a desire to bring the entire government of India within the sphere of their patronage. The Court of Directors had passed resolutions condemning the policy of the Robilla war, and expressing an opinion that the whole of the corre-pondence between the governor-general and Mr. Middleton, rerident at Oude, ought to have been laid before the council. There resolutions were subsequently adopted by the general court; a prefatory clause being, however, introduced, re-cognizing the services and integrity of the g vernor-general, and acquitting him of all suspicion of corruption. On some other subjects, the Court of Directors visited the conduct of Hastings and his associate Barwell with On the 8th May, 1776, a motion was made and carried for an address to his Maje≺ty, praying their removal from office.

On hearing of the intention to bring forward the motion, Hastings's agent made overtures both to the ministers and to influential directors, with a view to accommodation. They appear to have been nugatory, and the friends of Hastings having, as one of them observed, "nothing to lose by a defeat," determined to try the result of a general court. To that tribunnl they accordingly appealed, with a view to reversing the decision of the Court of Direc-A requisition being obtained, a general court was summoned for the 15th of May; and on that day it was moved that it be recommended to the Court of Directors to reconsider their resolution for procuring the removal of Mr. Hastings and Mr. Barwell from office; and that they should report to the general lean was called in, and a question was proposed Court of Proprietors, as speedily as possible, to him as to his authority. This was certainly cause with which the ministry had connected itself. The debate was protracted till the approach of midnight, when the friends of Hastings proposed to adjourn to the following day. The ministerial party opposed, and, on a division, the motion for adjournment was lost. Hastings' supporters then demanded, that the question which had been the means of calling the court together should be determined by The result was victory to the cause of the governor-general, the motion of his friends being carried on the ballot by a majority of one hundred and six.

On the 10th July, the resolution for removing the governor-general and Mr. Barwell was rescinded by the Court of Directors with regard to Mr. Barwell, and on the 16th the like indulgence was extended to the governor-general. Notwithstanding this, some of the friends of Mr. Hastings seem to have entertained little hope of maintaining him in the chair at Calcutta in opposition to the powerful interests arrayed against him. Colonel Maclean appears to have been engaged in a long and somewhat complicated series of intrigues, the object of which was to enable Mr. Hastings to quit office with some degree of credit. Honours from the Crown were talked of, but these, it was intimated, could not be conferred. series of propositions seem, however, to have been at length agreed upon by Colonel Maclean and Mr. Robinson, a confidential servant of the ministry, which were to serve as a basis for peace.

The minister being propitiated, Hastings's agent turned to the Court of Directors. At a court held on the 11th of December, a letter from him was read. It stated that Mr. Hastings, seeing the necessity of unanimity in the supreme council of Bengal for conducting the affairs of the Company there, and for establishing any permanent system of government for the good and prosperity of the country, finding from the unhappy divisions which have occurred in the supreme council that such was not likely to subsist, and having anxiously on every occasion studied to promote the welfare of the Company, a course which he would ever continue, had, from these motives, authorized the writer, Colonel Maclean, to signify his desire to resign the office of governor-general, and to request the court to nominate a successor to the place which would thereby be vacated in the supreme council. On the 18th the letter was taken into consideration. On this day, also, Colonel Mactheir proceedings on such recommendation, a natural and proper inquiry, but it appeared unconditionally. stead of laying them before the court, to subexamining them. proposal, and Mr. Roberts, the chairman, Mr. James, the deputy-chairman, and Mr. Becher were empowered to make the requisite inspec-They reported that Colonel Maclean had shown them certain papers relating to his powers, and had informed them that he had On a future day they further reported that, from the purport of Mr. Hastings's instructions, contained in a paper in his own handwriting, given to Colonel Maclean, and forwarded by him to them, Mr. Hastings declared that he would not continue in the government of Bengal unless certain conditions therein specified could be obtained, of which they saw no probability; that Mr. George Vansittart had assured them that he was present when these instructions were given to Colonel Maclean, and when Mr. Hastings empowered that gentleman to declare his resignation to the court, and that this had been confirmed by Mr. Stuart, who stated that Mr. Hastings had informed him that he had given instructions for this purpose to Colonel Mac-The court determined the evidence of the colonel's authority to be sufficient, and a resolution that the resignation be accepted was carried unanimously; the friends of Hastings supporting the resolution, because they thought it in accordance with his interests and wishes; his enemies, because it gratified their longcherished desire to be rid of him. Mr. Wheeler was then nominated to succeed to the vacant in council, and a petition to the Crown ying the appointment of that gentleman creed upon.

The consent of the Crown gave effect to the nomination of the court, and the new appointment was formally announced to the Govern-ment of Bengal. The news raised a storm exceeding in violence any that had previously Hastings repudiated the acts of Colonel Maclean, and determined to retain his post at the head of the government: General in summoning a council in his name; to the Clavering was equally bent on assuming the latter he replied by stating that the despatches dignity, to which he conceived himself entitled. Both proceeded to exercise the functions appertaining to the disputed office, both issued summonses for meetings of council, and each found a follower. Mr. Barwell answered the summons of Hastings, and Mr. Francis that of General Clavering: there were thus two councils sitting at the same time under the authority of two different persons, each claiming to be governor-general.

that the agent was not prepared to answer it they were carried on almost partakes of the He professed to be quite ludicrous. Mr. Barwell, on taking his place ready to give the court satisfaction, but inti-at the council called by Hastings, informed the mated, that in the papers to which he must "board" (consisting of Hastings and himself) refer, the subject of his powers was mixed up that on his way he had received a note requirwith other matters "of a nature extremely ing his attendance at the council at which confidential;" and he therefore proposed, in- General Clavering was to preside. Before the minute which was to record this fact was commit them to the inspection of three of the pleted, a letter, addressed to "Warren Hast-directors specially deputed for the purpose of ings, Esq.," without further appendage, was The court agreed to the put into the hands of the person thus desig-It was from General Clavering. After recapitulating the steps by which the assumed change in the government had been effected, Hastings's competitor required that the keys of Fort William and of the Company's treasury should be delivered to him, and intimated his intention of being at the council-house at a specified hour to receive them, unless Hastings should prefer any other method of complying with the requisition; one condition only being insisted upon-that the surrender should take place in the course of the day. The answer of Hastings and Barwell was that they knew of no act or instrument by which the office of governor-general had been vacated, nor by which it had devolved upon General Clavering; and that they would maintain, by all legal means, the authority and trust conferred by the act under which the existing government was constituted.

The rival council in the mean time had met. General Clavering had taken the usual oath as governor-general, and, in concert with Mr. Francis, had framed a proclamation announcing the change in the government, publication of which was ordered to be made without delay. It was also to be translated into the Persian and Bengalee languages, but the Persian translator refused to perform his office. The secretary was less scrupulous; he had readily obeyed the instructions of General Clavering, but subsequently received orders from the other party not to summon any council without the order of Hastings as governor-general, nor to perform any official duty without his authority, or that of a majority of council assembled under it. He was also required to send to the council convoked by Hastings the despatches from Europe which had excited this ferment. His answer to the former of these instructions was an apology for having acted under the orders of General Clavering had been delivered to the party whose authority he had thus recognized. Scarcely had the secretary made report of these circumstances to General Clavering and Mr. Francis, when Mr. Barwell presented himself before He was asked whether he meant to . take his place as a member of council; but on this point he maintained an obstinate silence. His business was to obtain possession of the fatal despatches which had thrown the govern-The effects of these contests might have been ment into confusion, and he requested that seriously disastrous; the manner in which they might be delivered to him. General

Clavering replied, "The council is sitting; I or admitted as a member of council." the authority of those whom he addressed, or asserting that of Hastings. He replied that he required the despatches as a member of the Council of Bengal, in which capacity he was entitled to peruse and take copy of any public papers. This privilege it did not suit the schismatical board at that moment to recognize. General Clavering answered, "You have heard whether the papers would be delivered to him The general replied that he was not hear the despatches read. The demand for the delivery was then made in a more formal manner. General Clavering refused to vary his answer. Mr. Barwell ordered the secretary to send him the papers in dispute as soon as they came into his possession; and thus this extraordinary conference ended.

Hastings, however, remained firm in the assertion of his authority. The commandant of the garrison of Fort William, the commanding officers at the various stations, the provincial councils and collectors, were all formally reminded that their obedience was due opinion by any redundancy of argument. only to Hastings, as governor-general, and the majority of the council, and warned against yielding it to any other authority. the legality and necessity of cachange against yielding it to any other authority. The legality and necessity of cachange against yielding it to any other authority. The legality and necessity of cachange against yielding it to any other authority. The legality and necessity of cachange against yielding it to any other authority. The legality and necessity of cachange against yielding it to any other authority. The legality and necessity of cachange against yielding it to any other authority. The legality and necessity of cachange against yielding it to any other authority. The legality and necessity of cachange against yielding it to any other authority. The legality and necessity of cachange against yielding it to any other authority. The legality and necessity of cachange against yielding it to any other authority. The legality and necessity of cachange against yielding it to any other authority. The legality and necessity of cachange against yielding interpretary of the law, Hastings appealed to the judges of the Supreme judges of the Supreme Court. The judges Court; his opponents acquiesced in the appeal. unanimously decided that the council had no Court; his opponents acquiesced in the appeal. unanimously decided that the council had no They appear, indeed, to have possessed little power to remove one of its members, or declare confidence in their own views; for, with reference to the appeal to the judges, they resolved decided otherwise, without publicly exhibitwhich they had passed. The decision of the justice. judges was in favour of Hastings, who used his victory in a manner as little creditable to calmness of feeling which the actors in them his character for discretion as for good-feeling. With the aid of his steady adherent, Barwell, he passed a series of resolutions singularly manifested by all parties. General Clavering intemperate, vindictive, and absurd. After re- in assuming the government had a pretence citing the acts performed by General Clavering, under his assumed authority, they declared not only that by those acts he had usurped the colourable. The instrument under which Geneoffice of governor-general—a proposition which the decision of the judges would have justified—but that the general "had thereby relinquished, resigned, surrendered, and vacated governor-general, the Court of Directors nomithe office of senior councillor of Fort William," as well as the place of commander-in-chief of firmed the nomination; but the operation of the Company's forces in India; that Mr. Bar- these acts was contingent upon an event which well had thereby become senior councillor; depended on the judgment or the caprice of that the office of commander-in-chief no longer the person whose removal was to create a existed; and that, for "the preservation of vacancy in council. There is therefore no the legality of" their "proceedings, General difficulty in determining that General Claver-Clavering should not in future be summoned ing, in assuming the office of governor-general,

These cannot part with them." The applicant, with-proceedings seem to have excited considerable out arguing the right of the alleged council, alarm in the enemy's quarters. Mr. Francis inquired at what time he could have the let- attended the next meeting of council, and pre-This produced a question as to the faced a motion for reversing the resolutions authority by which he demanded them. Still respecting General Clavering, with a repre-Mr. Barwell refrained either from impugning sentation of the dangers which surrounded the government, of the evils which had arisen from passion and precipitancy, and of the necessity for recurring to a more moderate and prudent course. He claimed for himself credit in regard to his immediate and implicit submission to the decision of the judges, and implored that he might be allowed to act the part of a mediator. In this character he them read once; you may hear them read a urged the reversal of their late proceedings; second time." Mr. Barwell demanded to know he referred to the origin of the existing government; contended that there were only four ways by which the right of General Clavering there to answer interrogatories, and repeated to the place which he had previously occupied his former intimation, that the inquirer might in council could be voided—by death, resignation, removal by the Crown, or succession to the office of governor-general; and that none of these events had taken place. claims of General Clavering to hold the office of commander-in-chief of the Company's forces in India, he held a similar line of argument, varied only with reference to the different circumstances of the appointment. Mr. Francis was answered by Mr. Barwell, who expressed his belief in the legality of the resolutions passed on General Clavering, and his determination to uphold them, but did not sustain his governor-general, in the unrelenting spirit which he so frequently manifested, maintained his seat vacant; nor could they, indeed, have to suspend the execution of all the orders ing themselves as unfit to occupy the seat of

In looking back upon these events with the could not maintain, it is impossible not to be struck with the violence and precipitancy barely colourable, and it is scarcely conceivable that he could have believed it more than ral Clavering claimed to take upon himself the office of governor-general did not supersede Hastings. Anticipating the retirement of the nated a new councillor, and the Crown contion, acted illegally as well as unwisely.

imputation of illegality: he had a right to casual conversation, and that his resignation retain his office if he so pleased; the question of the office of governor-general should have remains whether he was morally as well as been felt to be of so little moment, that he legally justified. The precise powers which could not recollect whether the man whom he he conveyed to his agents cannot be ascer-land avowedly intrusted with some power was tained. He gave them two papers, one lay-commissioned to tender it or not. ing down certain conditions as indispensable to his retention of the government, the other this respect was subsequently withdrawn. explanatory of one of those conditions. Whe-This statement rests upon a letter addressed ther there were any further instructions in by Hastings to Mr. Graham and Colonel writing, Hastings professed to be unable to Maclean, in which he professes to retract the recollect, and there are no satisfactory means resolution communicated to them in a former of supplying the deficiency of the governor-letter. That resolution was to leave Calcutta general's memory. More than these two and return to England by the first ship of the papers appear to have been shown to the select ensuing season, if the advices from that three appointed by the Court of Directors to country should convey disapprobation of the confer with Colonel Maclean, for it is re-treaty of Benarcs and the Rohilla war, and corded that Hastings's agent had laid before should "mark an evident disinclination to-them "several papers," and "had acquainted wards" him. The knowledge of Hastings's them that he had more to produce relative to intention in this respect was stated to be con-the powers with which he was invested." It fined to his agents, who were to use it accordseems, however, that the acceptance of the ing to their discretion. This resolution it is supposed resignation, as far as it rested on that he retracted; and it is clear that the redocumentary ground, was based on Hastings's tractation of the governor-general's intentions declaration, that unless his conditions were to take his departure from India at a particular complied with he would not continue in the time, if certain circumstances occurred, is a government; and upon this, aided by the very different thing from the withdrawal from avowal of Colonel Maclean that he had his agents of the discretionary power of tenauthority for what he did, and the testimony dering his resignation previously given. The of Mr. George Vansittart and Mr. Stuart, powers claimed by Colonel Maclean, and the court proceeded. Hastings affirmed that vouched for by Mr. Vansittart and Mr. Stuart, Colonel Maclean had exceeded his instruc-tions; and to discredit the evidence by which the alleged authority of his agent was con-firmed, he observed, that he had never called writing, like the conditions upon which upon the parties from whom it proceeded to Hastings insisted if he continued in the gobe witnesses to any transactions, nor ever vernment, it is not so easy to say authorized them to give testimony. These It is no part of the duty of t statements might be true; but if Mr. Vansit- to vindicate the character and conduct of tart was, as he stated, present when the Hastings's agent, Colonel Maclean. He was actions were given to Colonel Maclean, obviously an intriguing man, and there is conceive the necessity of empowering others council presumed to be vacant. In this case, waited for my ratification, and which it was at supplied the want of formal and authoritative all times in my own power to perform for proof. The Court of Directors wished to avoid and Mr. Francis, in abetting him in the assump-|myself without agency." But it is incredible that a matter of such vast importance should The conduct of Hastings is free from the pass from his mind like an idle subject of

It has been said, that the power given in

It is no part of the duty of the historian d Mr. Stuart received a confirmation of abundant reason to believe that he was an unem from the lips of the governor-general at scrupulous one; but it being presumed that a future period, their evidence was nothing Hastings had given him the authority which the worse because they had not been formally he claimed, there does not appear any ground invested with the character of witnesses, for accusing him of either mistaking or neglect-Hastings himself acknowledged that he knew ing the interests of his principal. One point, one of these gentlemen to possess judgment however, in this strange series of transactions and probity, and believed the same of the must strike every one who examines them—it other: as men of judgment they were not is the extreme facility with which the Court likely to misunderstand the governor-general of Directors yielded belief to the representa-—as men of probity they would not misrepre- tions of Colonel Maclean, that he was authorsent him. It is remarkable, too, that Hastings | ized to tender the governor-general's resignanever denied having given the alleged instruction. This assertion, indeed, was supported tions, but only disavowed all recollection of by corroborative testimony, the truth of which them, and added plausible reasons to show there was no reason to suspect; but a verbal how unlikely it was that he should have given authority, though confirmed by respectable them. "I can only say," he observes, "that evidence, was not sufficient to justify the I do not retain even the faintest idea of grave and important step of putting in motion having given such a commission; nor can I the power of the Crown to fill up the place in to do, in my name, an act which must have as in many others, an inclination to be satisfied

a collision with the ministry on the one hand, for government from coming to a dead stand, or with the ministry of the proprietors on the To Hastings this state of things was perhaps other. The pressure suggested by Hastings's not disagreeable, although it placed him in a agent sected tradical the means of effecting effication of extraonlinary responsibility. this; it moreover pave the opponents of liked power, and he liked the appearance of Hastings all they wanted, without subjecting it not less than the reality. He had great conhas friends to the martification of defeat; it fidence in himself and a strong disposition to was embedgetly embraced. Could amony his opponents. The additional responthe party hertile to Hartings have foresten sibility incurred by his peculiar position was the dissequence of their conduct, he would therefore little felt; and if it ever ent unbut have enjoyed the appertunity of disappurually heavy on him, its presence was light-pointing their wishes by disapowing his agent, ened by the gratification which he derived from but they were too much pleased with the the reflection that those who hated him, and propert of attaining their of het by compro- whom in turn he hated, were under his roll, take to examine very sampulously into the without power of moving hand or foot in the authority on which the arrangement rested, or exercise of their public duties, except so far as into the probability of the governor-general he pleased to permit them. perferming that which had been promised on Among the rubjects which at an early to behalf. Havings found it convenient to period after the arrival of Mr. Wheler occuabandon his agent, or he had forgotten the pied the attention of the council, was a letter instructions which he had given, or Maclean indiluted to the governor-general by Molarikhad exceeded his authority. The result was a sul-Dowlah, complaining bitterly of the conduct e avultion which might have apprected the of Mahomed Rega Khan in the management ren founded empire of Great Britain in India, jof his affairs, and alleging, that as that person Ind it not solvished almost as soon as raise I, was not connected with the prince either by the In allaying the storm, the judges of the ties of nature or attachment, his continued posthe staying the count, the judges of the three institute or attainment, incommined pos-countries count did good expice to the chate; recion of the high degree of power with which and it next not be denied, that while General he was invested was oppressive and dishonour-Clasering and Mr. Francis had by their able to the family. The nabob observed, that ablence placed the British Government in danger, they embedmently exinced a far more law and many of Mahomedanism, he ought to exhibitory spirit than was shown by their epp wents.

of the junger, continued to exercise his power standing as to be incapable of conducting as alle dutely as before, and to be subjected to them. He reminded the governor-general the came at novances from the nurcleating operation of these leagued against him. In from the support of his ancestors, and on these August, 1777. Sir John Clavering followed grounds claimed to be emancipated from the his ally, General Mone in, to the grave; his tutelage of Mahomed Reza Khan, and addeath being, it is believed, accelerated by the mitted to the personal management of the irritation of mind in which he had long been affairs of the nizamut and of his household. Lept, and the verations to which he had lat- The letter was laid by the governor-general terly been subjected. Hastings and Barwell before the council, and it is unnecessary to say had now a numerical majority in council, and that it gave rise to great differences very for a few months the casting vote of the for-warmly expressed. Mr. Wheler proposed to mer was not necessary to the success of his do nothing till the decision of the Court of Sir John Clavering's death, and took his seat general opposed; but it happened that Mr. in council as the successor of General Monson. Barwell was absent, and Mr. Francis sup-The news of General Monson's decease had porting Mr. Wheler, the motion was carried. reached England before Mr. Wheler's depar- At the next meeting of council Mr. Barwell ture, and, in consequence, the previous appoint- was at his post : the resolution of the previous ment of that gentleman to succeed on the meeting was summarily roversed, and the vacancy occasioned by the retirement of nabob's request complied with. Hastings was revoked, and its place supplied lapso of a few months, the governor-general by a new one, nominating him to the place produced another letter from the nabob, sugin council actually vacant by the death of gesting a plan for disposing of the salary of General Monson. Mr. Wheler affected to Mahomed Reza Khan. In the distribution a maintain a neutral part between Hastings considerable share was allotted to Munny and Francis; but, as might have been expected, he almost invariably supported the

he added, in no very elevated strain of self-Hastings, fixed in his reat by the decision landation, that he was not so devoid of under-Mr. Wheler arrived not long after Directors could be ascertained. The governor-Begum. Another portion was to be enjoyed by the nabob's mother, Baboo Begum. latter, and thus reduced the contending forces happened, too, that the amount of money to that equilibrium which had prevailed before proposed to be distributed exceeded that for the death of Sir John Clavering, and which merly enjoyed by Mahomed Reza Khan by required the interposition of the governor-eighteen thousand rupees per annum, and general's casting vote to prevent the machine Company were invited to make up the recorded minutes assigning reasons for their a place in council. In the latter capacity he opposition. The governor-general and Mr. usually supported Hastings, but not with the Barwell embarked in no strife of words. The undeviating constancy of Barwell. Barwell former moved that the requisitions of the had passed twenty-three years in India, during nabob should be complied with; the latter ten of which he had been a member of council. simply wrote, "I assent to the governor- He had enjoyed abundant opportunities of general's motion." Barily carried.

animadverted upon by the Court of Directors, may be presumed, was not indisposed to acwho ordered their wish for the restoration of celerate. It would relieve him from a steady Mahomed Reza Khan to be signified to the opponent, and deprive Hastings of a friend, nabob, and an assurance of their continued whose vote was never denied to any measure favour to be conveyed to Mahomed Reza which he chose to recommend. In proportion, Khan himself. but in the letter, not in the spirit. In com- desired by Francis, it was dreaded by Hastmunicating the desire of the court, Francis ings. He discerned in it the downfall of that and Wheler proposed to call upon the nabob absolute power which he had for some time to comply with it. contended for a simple communication of the friendship might render him reluctant to aban-wish of the court, leaving the intelligence to don the governor-general and his measures to produce its own effect. It did produce all that a council where two would always vote against could be expected-a remonstrance from the him, and the third could not be depended nabob; and but for an event which will soon upon for steady or permanent support, it be noticed, the restoration of Mahomed Rezal Khan might have been postponed till the cause defer for any long period the gratificapower of thwarting it had departed from Hastings.

The Court of Directors had also ordered the restoration of Mr. Bristow, whom the governor-general had removed from the residency at Oude, and of Mr. Fowke, whom he had displaced at Benares. These orders were treated with the same degree of respect which was accorded to those relating to Mahomed Reza Khan, they were received, read, and quency of his attacks, and to secure, by a surcoolly set at naught.

A few months, however, wrought a change, and in a manner calculated to excite surprise. From the temper which had been manifested mind was most deeply interested. both by Hastings and Francis, the expectation an accommodation being effected between . must have appeared one of the most avagant that could be entertained; but about to take place. parties are not perfectly clear. Both, indeed, professed to be weary of controversy; but few persons who have studied the characters of by Francis appear to have been explained at the combatants will be disposed to give either the meeting. The result was communicated of them credit for the feeling. Each had a to Hastings, and the two principals subse-confidence in his own judgment amounting to quently met to complete the pacification so presumption; and the change in their conduct is probably to be ascribed to circumstances rather than to any abatement either of of the negotiation may be estimated by the their arrogance or of their mutual hatred.

act had passed, continuing the existing gover-the express orders of the Court of Directors.

Mr. Francis and Mr. Wheler objected to this, Coote had been appointed to succeed General as they did to the entire arrangement, and Clavering in the command of the army, and to That motion was neces- acquiring wealth, and, having improved them, was desirous of retiring to the enjoyment of This part of Hastings's conduct was severely his fortune at home. This event Francis, it These orders were obeyed; however, as the retirement of Barwell was Hastings and Barwell exercised; and though Barwell's feelings of could not be expected that he would from this tion of his own yearnings for case and home. Regarding the departure of Barwell, therefore, as an event that could not be far distant, Hastings was not indisposed to soften the asperity of an enemy whose power of opposing him was about to be greatly increased. could not hope to convert him into a friendprobably he did not wish it, but he might expect to diminish both the vigour and the frerender of some points on which Francis had been most pertinacious, the liberty of pursuing unmolested those plans in which his own the best account that can be given of the probable motives of those concerned in the negotiation. The overture appears to have proceeded from Francis, and to have been made as it was anticipated, such an event was on his behalf by a Mr. Ducarel to Major Scott, The motives of the a great favourite of the governor-general, and his agent in various important and confidential transactions. The principal conditions required happily commenced by their agents. value which Hastings attached to the success sacrifices which he made to secure it. A man The period of office secured by the act of more unrelenting in his hostility never lived; 1773, to the persons therein named as governor-yet he consented to purchase peace on the general and council, had expired before Hastings condition of immediately restoring Mr. Fowke and his coadjutors had notice of any provision to the office which he had formerly enjoyed, being made for such an event; they conse-from which Hastings had removed him, and to quently continued to exercise their functions, which he had shortly before refused to restore and were in course of time apprised that an him, though his restoration was required by nor-general in office for one year. Sir Eyre Mr. Bristow, who had been removed in like the jurisdiction of the court, he should not recognition of its authority over them. This appear, or plead, or do, or suffer any act which might appear on his part to amount and collectors, with orders to give it publicity; to a recognition of the authority of the judicature, as extending to himself. The advocategeneral further advised, that in all similar cases, as well as in that before him, the power of the government should be withheld from affording aid to the judicature of the court; that the court should be left to its own means of executing its process; and that the judges should (in the language of the advocate) "thus render themselves responsible to the state for having, should such be the event, unnecessarily hazarded the dignity and authority of the king's judicature, by exposing its process to contempt and its officers to resistance and repulse." The advice of the advocate-general was followed. The European collector at Midnapore was instructed to apprize the zemindar of the views of the governor-general and council, and if applied to by the sheriff for military assistance, to refuse it.

The writ of capias was returned unexecuted; and a writ was thereupon issued to sequester the lands and effects of the zemindar in order to compel his appearance to the ac-To enforce this writ the sheriff's officer was attended by a body of about sixty sepoys and European seamen; the former furnished by Cossinaut, who, in accordance with a common practice among wealthy natives, kept in pay an armed force; the latter consisting of sailors discharged from ships in the river. The whole were armed and provided with ammunition. On this preparation becoming known to the governor-general and council, they ordered Colonel Ahmuty, the officer commanding at Midnapore, with a view to preserve the peace of the country, to despatch a sufficient force to intercept and apprehend any those understood to be employed for execu-

7 the work of sequestration. These orders ot arrive in time to prevent an attempt ecute the writ. A sergeant, with part he sheriff's force, effected an entrance into .ue house of the zemindar and endeavoured to pass into the zenana. They were resisted, and for the time overpowered; but the sheriff's party being reinforced, possession of the house was obtained, the sanctity of the zenana violated, the zemindar's dewan seized and detained as a prisoner. The state of affairs was soon changed by the arrival of a party of government. The sheriff's men were made prisoners and marched off to the presidency. These proceedings were followed by the issue of a government notice addressed to all zemindars and landholders, advising them that they were not subject to the Supreme Court, except under particular circumstances, which was transmitted to all the provincial councils and those authorities were, at the same time, directed not to afford any aid to the service of the process of the Supreme Court in cases where, by the terms of the notice, the parties against whom such process was directed were declared to be exempt from the jurisdiction of the court. These events occurred in the months of November and December, 1779. On the 18th January following, rules were granted in the Supreme Court, calling upon certain persons alleged to be connected with the resistance offered to the process of the court, to show cause why attachment should not issue against them. Those persons were Lieutenant Bamford, the officer commanding the party by which the sheriff's followers were dispossessed and made prisoners; Mr. Swanston, assistant to the collector at Midnapore; and Mr. North Naylor, the Company sattorney. The principal offences charged on the lastnamed gentleman were his having made inquiry at the sheriff's office as to the means taken for executing the writ, and being privy to the despatch of the military force by which the execution was frustrated. Application was at the same time made for rules against the governor-general and Mr. Barwell; but the chief justice was under the influence of a remarkable degree of discretion, and he declared that the court would not grant a rule which they "could not enforce," but he directed copies of the rule to be served upon both, in order that they might answer the matters sworn to if they chose. The leniency with which the chief justice treated the members of the government was not extended to their attorney. On a future day the rule against Mr. Naylor was made absolute, and body of men answering the description of he was required to answer a string of twenty interrogatories. Mr. Naylor regarded compliance with this order as inconsistent with his professional duty; and, with a view to the influence of meditation in effecting a change in his judgment, he was committed a prisoner to the common gaol of Calcutta. The governorgeneral and council were, about the same time, served with a summons from the Supreme Court, to answer to Cossinaut Baboo in an action of trespass. There could be little doubt as to the ground of this action, but as it did not appear on the summons, and might, "by bare possibility, have relation to questions of a troops despatched by Colonel Ahmuty under private or personal nature," appearance was the orders which he had received from the entered for all the parties. The plaint confirmed the suspicion which had been entertained; and it being evident that the action related to matters done by the governorgeneral and council in their public capacity, they directed their council to withdraw their The wrath of the court was appearance. thereupon roused to fury. The conduct of were pointed out, and warning them not to the government was declared to be "a clear plead to any action brought therein, nor to do contempt of his Majesty's law, and of his or suffer any act which should amount to a court;" but the indignation of the judges subrided on recollecting from whom the contempt mitted to their care. The land was passing proceeded. The counsel for the Company had out of cultivation under the terror of the tendered a paper containing the resolutions of Supreme Court; the people flying from their the government. paper to be recorded, "but," says Sir Elijah its myrmidons to their persons and their feel-Impoy, "as it was in the case of the governor-lings; and, if its course had not been timely general and council, did no other act in con-farrested, the country would have become a requence of it." The judges, however, deterrequence of it." The judges, however, deter-desert—the bailiffs of the Supremo Court its mined that the defendants could not withdraw lords. The governor-general and council could their plea without leave, and that if they ap- | not have been justified in suffering this state plied for such leave, it would not be right to of thingsto ensue. The violence of the remedy grant it; that both as British subjects, and was warranted by the extreme wrong which as being employed by, and in the service of gave rise to it. The judges usurped powers the East India Company, they were subject to which the legislature did not intend them to the jurisdiction of the court as individuals, and possess, and the government resisted them.

that there was no distinction between their The one party strained the law, to extend their concurrent and individual acts; and, finally, lown authority; the other resisted the process that the court would proceed in the case before of the law, in order to protect the people from them as in any other where there was a default oppression. In the performance of this duty, of appearance. The plaintiff had previously for a duty it was, Hastings cordially joined applied to the court to have the cause set with that party in the council with which he down to be heard or parte for default of plea, was usually at enuity. His friend, Mr. Barand the application had been granted. But well, was far less decided in his conduct. The this affair, which had threatened consequences most devoted supporter of the policy of scarcely less regions than those dreaded at an Hastings, he wished not to separate himself carlier period from the conflict of rival claims from the governor-general; the attached for the first place in the government, termi-friend of Sir Elijah Impey, he recoiled from nated in a manner as extraordinary as it was giving offence to the chief justice; vacillating, unexpected. Cossinant Baboo suddenly dis- under the influence of these contending mocontinued his actions against the governor-tives, from one side to the other, defending general and members of council, and also that the legality of the acts of the Supreme Court, against the zemindar, out of which the others and at the same time perfectly convinced that had arisen. His motives are unknown. It their acts were destroying the sources of the bility, that Hastings could have thrown some auxious in this dispute to stand well with all light upon them. A still more remarkable parties. Hastings did not thus temporize : he months from the discontinuance of Cossinant's the choice which he had made. But here actions. Sir Elijah Impey, chief justice of the approbation must end: the means by which Supreme Court, was made judge of the Sudder the dispute was terminated, though very dewanny adawlut, the highest court of justice characteristic of Hastings's policy, were very existing under the authority of the Company. To this appointment a salary of sixty thousand accommodation. rupees per annum was annexed.

Thus terminated the conflict between the government of Bengal and the Supreme Court, provoked by the judges, and carried on by them with a lamentable disregard of their own duty and of the public interest. Their infatuation led to resistance from the power which was bound to lend its support to their authority. The course taken by the government cannot be defended upon any ordinary principles, but the circumstances under which they were called upon to act were not of an the authority of an act of parliament, and the delible. subject to appeal to the king in council; but something approaching to scorn. so fearful, that the government had only to tinguished member of his own profession, witnessing the total ruin of the country com- as council, and the next accepting emoluments

The court ordered this habitations to escape the outrages offered by has been surmised, and with strong proba- revenue, Mr. Barwell seems to have been event was to follow at the distance of a few chose his part, and he acted vigorously upon discreditable to all parties concerned in the.

To the reputation of the chief justice the appointment was more injurious than even to that of Hastings-it was deadly. Elijah Impey died before accepting this fatal gift, he would by impartial observers have been regarded as a man of narrow mind, headstrong passions, and overbearing temper; but no imputation, based on sufficient evidence, would have shaded his judicial integrity. His own act effected that which all the ingenuity of his enemies would have failed to accomplish, He inscribed on his own brow the record of ordinary character. The judges acted under his disgrace in characters deep, broad, and in-The temptation was so undisguised governor-general and council had no legal right in its approach, the scandal of accepting it to interpret that act. According to strict law was so glaring, that the slightest feeling of the court might determine its own jurisdiction, judicial decency would have repelled it with What could the assumptions of the court were so monstrous, his contemporaries, what could posterity think and the consequences likely to flow from them of a chief justice, found, in the words of a dischoose between resisting the power of the "one day summoning the governor-general court, on the one hand, or, on the other, calmly and council before his tribunal for acts done

nearly equal to his original appointment, to | personal wishes would have led him to withbe held during the pleasure of the same

Before the completion of the arrangement by which the chief justice was to be rendered supple and accommodating, the slumbering embers of discontent within the council had burst into renewed life; and so powerful was the reaction of hostility, after the temporary calm, that the pen became too feeble an instrument to express the feelings of the two chief combatants. Among the articles of agreement between Hastings and Francis was one, it was stated, securing to the former the management of the Mahratta war, the details of which will be related in a future chapter. According to Hastings's view, this article was violated, and he produced in evidence an alleged copy of the stipulation in the following words:-"Mr. Francis will not oppose any measure which the governor-general will recommend for the prosecution of the war in which we are supposed to be engaged with the Mahrattas, or for the general support of the present political system of this government: neither will he himself either propose or vote with any other member who shall propose any measure that shall be contrary to the governor-general's opinion on these points." Francis denied Francis denied that he ever was a party to such an engagement, and, referring to a conversation with Hastings, in which the governor-general produced a memorandum containing, as he believed, the article in question, Francis affirmed that he returned it with a declaration that he did not agree to it. Between the truth of these conflicting statements there are but slender materials for determining. The balance of probability, however, somewhat inclines in favour of the assertion of Hastings. He had given up to Francis many points on which his views almost uncontrolled.

stand a surrender; it is inconceivable that he should not have bargained for something in return. If everything were to be conceded to Francis, and nothing to the governor-general, the latter might as well have risked the consequences of Mr. Barwell's possible retirement. He probably would not have retired, if his friend and leader had not believed himself secure of a satisfactory share of power. Hastings, too, at the time when the arrangement was concluded, seems to have been convinced that the provision relating to the Mahratta war was part of it. It has been suggested that both parties were guiltless: that Francis had declined to assent to the disputed article, but that Hastings had not understood him. seems incredible. On a subject of so much interest to both, care would be taken that the main provisions of the compact were understood; and it is not easy to evade the conclusion that either Francis was guilty of a gross breach of faith, or Hastings of the assertion of a scandalous falsehood. The presumption, on the whole, lies against Francis, and his character will, probably, never be relieved from the imputation. But whoever was the guilty party, the dispute was near finding a tragical termination. A challenge given by Francis was accepted by the governor-general: the parties met, exchanged shots, and Francis was wounded. The previous language of the disputants was so violent, that such a result, however reprehensible, was far from unnatural. On the indecency of such a mode of determining disputes existing in a council intrusted with the care of vast and important interests, no remark can be necessary.

Francis quitted India in December following, and Hastings was thus left to pursue his own

CHAPTER X.

JETILITIES BETWEEN THE BOMBAY GOVERNMENT AND THE NABOB OF BROACH - ENGLISH TAKE POSSESSION OF SALSETTE-ROUT OF COLONEL EGENTON'S FORCE - CAPTAIN POPHAM'S ACHIEVEMENTS--COLONEL CAMAC DEFEATS SCINDIA--PEACE CONCLUDED.

On the western side of India were certain of Bombay had formerly concluded a treaty; places which the East-India Company had long been desirous of possessing; these were the island of Salsette, the port of Bassein, Kenery, Hog Island, Elephanta, and Auranjee. They were occupied by the Mahrattas; and with the view principally to taking advantage of any opportunity that might occur of securing those places by negotiation, permission had been sought and obtained for the residence of an English agent at Poona. It was some time before any event favourable to the views of the English Government occurred; but, at length, the success of the Company's arms against the nabob of Broach seemed to afford an opening for attaining the desired object.

but it being alleged that be had levied a higher rate of customs' duty on the goods of merchants under English protection than his engagements warranted, an expedition was fitted out against him, in conjunction with the nabob of Surat, who claimed from the government of Broach a certain amount of tribute, a large portion of which was to be made over to the English, in consideration of the expense which they incurred. But this step was undertaken under imperfect information; and on the expedition arriving before Broach, it being obvious that the attempt must fail, the nabob was prevailed upon to save the honour of the British arms, by requesting that the troops might be With the nabob of Broach the government withdrawn. Negotiation followed, and a new treaty was concluded. The expedition against [was formally invested with the office he was Breach was strongly condemned by the Court destined to bear. The investiture took place of Directors, but this did not prevent the in May, 1774. government of Bombay from despatching another with the same object, their disabedience authority in deference to the rights of an being defended by allegations of the continued infant, he would have departed widely from deceitful and perlidious conduct of the nabob. The second expedition was more successful than the first, the city of Broach being taken by storm; but the Court of Directors again expressed their dirapprobation of the attack.

It was part of the plan of the Bombay government to offer Breach and a place called assist him in supporting them. Among others, Fort Victoria to the Mahrattas in exchange he had recourse to the English, and the desire for those which it was desired to obtain from felt by the authorities at Bombay to obtain them. The British resident took care to inti-possession of Salsette and Basson led them mate that such an exchange might be effected; eagerly to encourage his overtures. They

ment towards accepting the offer.

At a later period circumstances reemed to favour the views of the English, and nego-insth Row, however, proceeded unsatisfactorily. tiations were entered into with a personage On the point which the government of Bomnamed Rugonath Row. He was the brother bay regarded as most important he was obduof a former Peishwa, and the uncle of two suc- rate; he peremptorily refused to give up ceeding ones, the latter of whom was assassi- Salsetto and Bassein; and in despair of accomnated. Rugonath Row enjoyed the reputation [plishing their object by any other means, the of having contrived his nephew's death; a English authorities had resolved to accept an more indulgent opinion, supported by respecta- offer made by the killadar in command of the ble authority, regards him as intending only to seize the power of his relative, and acquits island of Salsette, to put them in possession him of conspiring against his life. Rugonath Row, on the death of his nephew, succeeded to the office of Pei-hwa, and to a multiplicity of foreign and domestic troubles. He was Bombay had decided upon closing with the engaged in a war with Nizam Ali, which he offer, the killadar alleged that it was no longer centrived to bring to a conclusion, but without in his power to perform that which he had advantage to himself. He meditated an experproposed, the Mahrattas, alarmed by the dition into the Carnatic, which was to cripple inovements of the Portuguese, having reinat once the power of Hyder Ali, Mahomet Ali, forced the garrison. But the British authoriand the English. But these great designs came ties were not thus to be disappointed. Negoto an abortive conclusion; Hyder Ali, taking tintion having failed, they had recourse to advantage of the pecuniary distress of Rugo-arms: Tannah was taken by storm, and the nath Row, which was great, made peace with island of Salsette, together with that of him on his own terms. Rugonath Row had Caranja, passed into the hands of the English. proposed to himself to rescue from that wily Immediately after the despatch of the armandventurer certain districts which he had acquired from the Mahrattas. induced him to surrender his claim to part of them, in consideration of the payment of a small sum of money, and the promise of threatening the stability of his power, com- upon its functions. By the act under which pelled Rugonath Row to relinquish his further designs on the Carnatic; but he provailed vested with a controlling power over the other upon Hyder Ali to recognize his title as presidencies. The government of Bombay Peishwa, and to engage to pay tribute to him. were aware of the passing of the act, but were of Rugonath Row was that of the alleged and their formal assumption of authority, pregnancy of Gunga Bye, the widow of the until after the expedition against the islands late Peishwa. Rugonath Rowthercupon commenced his march towards Poona, and met municated without delay to the government of with some success; but the want of funds pre- Fort William. vented his pursuing it, and he suddenly turned his course to the northward. Shortly after- nath Row were renewed, and, finally a treaty

Had Rugonath Row abandoned his usurped the principles which govern Mahratta policy, whether national or individual. He did not thus discredit the people to which he belonged, but, amidst many difficulties and much distress, continued to maintain his pretensions to the office of Peishwa, and to seek allies to but the Mahratta government received the were rendered the more anxious by an apprecommunication coldly, and without any move-hension that the Portuguese were about to forestall them in the possession of these much coveted places. The negotiations with Rugogarrison at Tannah, the principal fort on the of the place for a sum of money. The bargain, however, was not carried into effect. By the time that the governor and council of ment against Tannah, a Portuguese fleet Hyder Ali appeared off Bombay, and the commander delivered in a protest against the conduct of the British authorities.

Before the capture of the island was effected The intelligence of some events the new government of Bengal had entered that government was constituted it was in-The news which had arrested the progress ignorant of the arrival of the new councillors,

In the mean time negotiations with Rugowards, the widow of the late Peishwa gave was concluded, by which former treaties with birth to a son, who, at the age of forty days, the Mahratta state were ratified; both parties engaged to abstain from assisting the enemies over the enemy, or that the detachment should of the other; the East-India Company agreed be in such a situation that it would be danto aid Rugonath Row with a considerable gerous either to retreat or to pause, or that force, and he in return agreed to surrender to a negotiation should have been commenced them Bassein and certain other places. Ru-between Rugonath Row and his opponents in gonath Row was also to procure from the consequence of the support afforded by the Guicowar a grant for the Company of the English. The council, seldom agreeing in any share of revenue collected by that prince in thing but in annoying each other, were unani-the town and pergunnah of Breach. He mous in approving the first part of the profurther stipulated to pay to the Company posed orders to Bombay: with regard to the annually seventy-five thousand rupees from exceptions by which the order was modified, the revenues of Oklaseer, and a lac and a half there was a difference of opinion. Barwell, as of rupees monthly for the military assistance usual, supported the governor-general altowhich he was to receive, or a proportionate gether—the three remaining members of the share for so much as might be furnished, as council thought that the order for the withsecurity for which payment he made temporary drawal of the troops should be made subject to assignment of several districts. Six lacs of no exception but that of the impracticability rupces were to be immediately deposited with of their retiring in safety, and thus the inan agent of the Company; but as Rugonath struction to the government of Bombay was Row had them not, and knew not where to framed. obtain them, it was agreed that he should deposit jewels in their place. Rugonath Row same time to open a negotiation with the was to defray all expenses that might be in- authorities at Poona. The choice of the percurred in taking possession of any of the son who was to represent the British governplaces ceded to the Company; he was not to ment at the capital of the Peishwa gave rise, as make war in the Carnatic, and he was bound usual, to a contest. Hastings proposed Colonel to assist the ships of the Company, or of per-Dow; General Clavering recommended Colonel sons under their protection, if wrecked, and to Upton; and the latter officer, being supprotect the cargoes. This treaty was greatly disapproved at Ben-a minute of considerable length, and certainly been intrusted to Colonel Keating. It arrived marked by great ability. He maintained that at Camba about the middle of March, 1775, the treaty was unseasonable, because formed and in April effected a junction with all that at a time when Rugonath Row appeared to remained of the army of Rugonath Row, that have been abandoned by his former adherents; chieftain having been defeated some time that it was impolitic, because the Company before, and his forces dispersed. After some was subjected to the whole burden of the war, considerable delay, arising from various causes, taking, without money or certain resources. Poona. Nothing of importance occurred till and because it was undertaken without regard the 18th May, when an action took place, attlements in India; that it was unjust, though they sustained dreadful loss. ties to Rugonath Row, but, on the contrary, loss of the battle. were in positive negotiation with the very powers against which they had since declared condition to maintain the burden of the war the law precluded the subordinate governand an application was made to Bengal for ments from commencing hostilities, declaring men and money. The governor-general was war, or negotiating any treaty of peace without disposed to comply with the request, on the the consent of the governor-general and council, ground that the question then to be decided except in cases of imminent necessity, where was not whether the government of Bombay it would be dangerous to postpone the com- had acted properly or not, but by what means mencement of hostilities or the conclusion of were the Company's affairs to be extricated from the Company-which exceptions did not necessary to say that the governor-general was ported by the majority, was appointed.

The government of Bengal resolved at the

The command of the British force destined The governor-general, Hastings, recorded to act in conjunction with Rugonath Row had without a force at Bombay equal to the under the combined body moved in the direction of to the general interests of the other British which terminated in favour of the English, cause the English had received no injury British commander does not appear to have m any part of the Mahratta state which displayed any great military skill, and an ould authorize an interference with their alleged mistake of the word of command by a mutual dissensions, and were under no actual body of European grenadiers nearly led to the

The government of Bombay were not in a war; and that it was unauthorized, because without assistance from the other presidencies, treaties, and except when the subordinate from the danger in which they were involved government might have received special orders by a war precipitately undertaken. It is unapply to the treaty concluded with Rugonath supported by Barwell, and opposed by the Row. On these grounds, the governor-general other members of council. The latter party proposed to direct the government of Bombay positively refused to send any mon, but, as the to cancel the treaty, and withdraw the detachment sent in pursuance of it, unless some ment were urgent, they were willing to forward decisive advantage should have been gained a small supply of money. About a month negotiation at Poona. "We have reason to ment of Bombay fiercely attacked the treaty, and lasting peace with them. counting for this refusal, Colonel Upton says, with about two hundred adherents, to Surat. " I conceived it owing to their imagining that I must treat with them at any rate;" and it Company in the possession of Salsette and the appears that they proposed questions to the islands which they actually occupied. Bassein, British negotiator which it would have re-not being in their possession, was excepted. It is quired great ingenuity to answer satisfactorily. They asked him why the government of Bengal made such profession of honour, and how it happened that, while they disapproved of the war commenced by the Bombay government, they were so desirous of availing themselves of the advantages of it. After much lieh, and it was at Poona that Colonel Upton discussion, Colonel Upton demanded of the first learned that such was not the case. ministers what was their final determination, and they answered that they knew of none but this series of transactions is, that immediately The government of Bengal now withdrew the restriction which they had imposed on the hostile operations of the government of Bombay; they addressed a letter to Rugonath approving of the treaty of Surat—the treaty Row, offering him the assistance of the British concluded by the Bombay government with arms in all parts of India, to place him with full authority in the seat of the government at Poons; they resolved to write to Nizam Ali, Hyder Ali, Morari Row, the Rajah of Berar, renewing the war, for part of the cessions had Holkar, and Scindia, with a view of engaging been abandoned by the latter treaty concluded their assistance for Rugonath Row, or at least by Colonel Upton. of securing their neutrality; they directed the British resident at Oude to prevail on the Upton were so vague, that, after they were brigade to the frontier of Korah, next Calpee, with a view to promote the interests of Rugonath Row; they wrote to the government of continued by Mr. Mostyn, who was appointed Madras for reinforcements in aid of the same resident there, an office which he held before cause, and they requested the officer in com- the breach caused by the alliance with Rugomand of the squadron on the coast of Malabar nath Row. The resident, too, found other occu-

after this determination, Mr. Taylor, a member imeasures were taken by the Bengal governof the council of Bambay, arrived at Calcutta, ment on the 7th March, under an impression specially to represent to the government of that the negotiations at Poons were at an end. Bengal the necessity of giving to the Bombay On the 1st April they received a letter from government such support as would could Colonel Upton, informing them that the diffethem to avert the consequences likely to arise rences with the Peishwa's ministers had been from an abrupt termination of the engagement arranged, and that a treaty was in progress, with Rugonath Row, but his representations The treaty was concluded, and, with some were not more successful than those of the modifications, accepted by the government of governor general. The majority in council Bengal. By this treaty Rugonath Row, on were fixed in their determination to put an condition of disbanding his army, was to have end to the war at once. General Clavering, an establishment at Kopergoam, on the banks indeed, had expressed an opinion that such a lof the Godavery. This he refused to accept, step was likely to assist the progress of the and hence arose new difficulties. The governhope," said he, "that the Mahrattas, seeing and maintained that Rugonath Row should the justice and moderation of this government, have been allowed the option of residing in and that our intentions are finally to put a one of the Company's settlements; that the rtop to that chilit of conquest, encroachment, ministers at Poona would not have objected if and injustice, which recins hitherto to have their intentions were honest; that thus placed, prevailed too much in India, will listen to the Rugonath Row would have been a useful inproposals that we have made to conclude a firm strument for operating on the fears of the other party in the Mahratta state, and would The coundness of these views was seen have afforded the best security for the preserbrought to the test. Colonel Upton, having vation of peace. Rugonath Rowland expressed reached Poons with great difficulty, entered a determination to appeal to the Court of on the lessiness of his mission, but found the Directors, and, till the result should be known, ministers of the Peishwa little disposed to corto seek an asylum at Bombay. The governdiality. He was instructed to stipulate for the ment of that presidency were quite ready that possession of Salectic and Bassein. The Mah | he should find a home there, but that of Bengal ratta authorities refused compliance. In ac-interfered and forbade it. He finally retired,

The treaty with the Mahrattas confirmed the a fact strikingly illustrative of the imperfect information possessed by the Bengal government when they undertook, through the agency of Colonel Upton, to negotiate a treaty with the Mahratta state, that they actually believed that Bassein was in the possession of the Eng-Another remarkable circumstance attending after the conclusion of the treaty with the minister of the infant Peishwa at Poona, orders were received from the Court of Directors Rugonath Row-and directing that possession should be kept of all the places thereby ceded. These orders it was impossible to obey without

The terms of the treaty concluded by Colonel vizier to permit the removal of the Company's nominally fixed, the labour of adjusting them had to be performed. Even after Colonel Upton's retirement from Poons the work was to give it all the support in his power. These pation in the intrigues of a Frenchman, bearing the authority of his own government to nego-| who is stated to have been an inefficient officer. tiate with the Mahrattas. This person, who and whose powers were controlled by a combore the appellation of the Chevalier St. Lubin, mittee of field deputies. The force placed was not unknown in India. He had obtained under this anomalous control was about four the confidence of the government of Madras, and had been a main cause of producing the disasters which had attended their war with and in a few days was deprived of Lieutenant-Hyder Ali. He subsequently introduced him- Colonel Kay and Captain Stewart, two of its self to the ministry of France, ever jealous of best officers. Sickness soon compelled Colonel the extended empire of the English, and ever Egerton to relinquish the command, a circumready to annoy them in their distant possess stance in which the army probably suffered sions. To them the chevalier boasted of his no loss. He was succeeded by Lieutenantinfluence with the most distinguished potentates of India, of the services which he had rendered for command were not subjected to long trial. Hyder Ali, and of his intimacy with the Mahratta rajah. The gross ignorance which at his European allies, had suggested to them that time prevailed in Europe on all matters that no power of consequence would declare relating to India led to his being believed and for him till some advantage had been obtained. employed. His intrigues excited the alarm of the Bombay government, and that of Bengal that which he had intended; the committee was apprized of their feelings. The governor-general immediately proposed that a large military force should be assembled at Calpee, ing negotiations with the authorities of Poona to march to Bombay, or to such other place as and commencing a retreat towards their own subsequent events or the will of the government territory. It was suggested that it would be of that presidency might determine. The pro- well to wait the result of the negotiation debate, and had it been made somewhat earlier, joined his voice to those who invoked the comit would have been defeated. But General mittee to pause before deciding on a step Monson and General Clavering were dead: which was certain ruin, but his efforts were as Hastings's influence predominated in the fruitless as those of others. The night of the council, and the proposal was carried. The 11th January, 1779, constitutes a dark epoch placed under the command of Colonel Leslie.

poused the cause of Rugonath Row. be embraced.

not complied with.

thousand strong. It advanced slowly, was subjected to great annoyances from the enemy, Colonel Cockburn; but that officer's talents Rugonath Row, to stimulate the activity of The communication had the opposite effect to posal was the subject of long and vehement before retreating, but in vain. Rugonath Row force, consisting of six battalions of infantry, a in the history of British India. On that night company of artillery, and a corps of cavalry, was the British detachment, which had not long before moved in the proud hope of shortly The councils of Poona were distracted by giving a ruler to the Mahratta state, turned complicated intrigues. The ministers there its back in flight upon the men whose power had separated into parties, one of which es-it had so recently defied: the heavy guns With were thrown into a tank, the stores burnt, them the government of Bombay was well and, without an effort to achieve the object disposed to co-operate, and their views were for which the army had advanced, without an accordance with those of the court of act that could in the slightest degree soften rectors, who had expressed dissatisfaction the disgrace which involved this ill-fated exity the transfer and the court of the disgrace which involved this ill-fated exity the transfer and the court of the disgrace which involved this ill-fated exity the transfer and the court of the disgrace which involved this ill-fated exity the court of the court with the treaty concluded by Colonel Upton, pedition, the British force commenced its re-and intimated that if a fitting opportunity trograde march. It was fondly believed that should arise for its abandonment, it ought to this movement was secret, but those who Some articles of the treaty thought this knew little of the enemy with were unfulfilled, and the answer given to a whom they had to contend. Three hours after demand, whether the ruling party intended to the commencement of the march the advanced fulfil its provisions, was regarded as evasive. guard was fired upon by horsemen, and the A new agreement was thereupon formed with fugitives then became aware that they were Rugonath Row, differing in one important not unobserved. They were soon afterwards point from the former. Rugonath Row was attacked in the rear, and by break of day were to be regent only; all the acts of government completely surrounded. Throughout that day were to be performed in the name of the infant and the following the English army were Peishwa; and its entire powers surrendered to sorely pressed, and the fearful effects of illability on the explicit of the majority. him on the expiration of his minority. The success in an Indian army began to be mani-government of Bengal had authorized that of fested in numerous desertions. On the 13th Bombay to take such a course if the terms of further retreat was deemed impracticable, and the treaty with the ministers at Poona were it was determined to trust solely to the effect of negotiation. The Poona ministers demanded The detachment from Bengal was a long the surrender of Rugonath Row, and his panictime on its march, and, unfortunately, the stricken allies would have complied had they government of Eombay were too eager for possessed the power. Rugonath Row had, the commencement of active operations to however, taken care of his own safety, and wait its arrival. They prepared and put in this additional disgrace was spared them. As motion an expedition under Colonel Egerton, the case was, there was quite enough of army was secured by the Mahrattas, the Eng-lish, in return, agreeing that Salsette and all the recent acquisitions from the Mahratta states should be restored, and that the Bengal detachment should be ordered back to Calcutta. By a separate agreement with Scindia, whose influence was considerable, the fort and government of Broach were to be delivered up to that chief, and two English gentlemen were to be left as hostages for the performance of the engagement. This arrangement cost forty-one thousand rupees, distributed in presents. Thus disgracefully terminated the hostile purposes of the Bombay government with regard to the Mahrattas. Morbidly anxious for war with that people, they had commenced hostile operations imprudently, conducted them without skill, and abandoned them without "Success," says Captain Duff, "that grand apology for statesmen's blunders, had not attended the schemes which they had been labouring to be permitted to attempt. the time the supreme council exercised their fresh authority by a precipitate interference, the majority of the members of the Bombay government endeavoured, by argument and artifice, to bring about their own designs; and instead of taking an enlarged and dignified view of the national interests and government in India, which would have been an honour to themselves and a reproach to their opponents, they lost the commanding ground on which they stood by following a course which brought about its own undoing." "Their contracted policy," says the same author, "was directed merely to carry their point in favour of Ragoba, and to aggrandize their own In sending off the expedition, it would seem as if they had been actuated by the puerile desire of showing the Bengal government what Bombay could do without their assistance." "In short," he adds, "the Bom-bay government neglected opportunity, they overlooked changes of circumstance, they desperately sent a handful of men against the strength of the Mahratta empire, and committed the conduct of an enterprise, practicable only by celerity, address, and resolution, to men unfit for such a charge.

was appointed to succeed to the command; governor-general, "I hope the board will so-but before the order for effecting this change with me the propriety of conveying them in was passed, death had removed Colonel Leslie such a form and temper as may give encoufrom the possibility of being afficted by it.

A convention was concluded, by had marked those of his predecessor, and he which the peaceable return of the British displayed extraordinary tact and judgment under very embarrassing circumstances. He had been exempted by the government o Bengal from the necessity of yielding obedience to that of Bombay; still an acquaintance with the views and wishes of the latter government might often be desirable. In taking the field in favour of Rugonath Row, the Bombay government had written to Colonel Goddard, urging him to advance. On concluding the memorable convention with the Mahratta state, the field deputies again wrote, advising him that "the face of things was so materially altered, as to occasion their marching back to Bombay," and directing that he should in like manner march back with his army to Bengal. Three days afterwards they again wrote, intimating that, upon recollection, they did not think themselves authorized to give the orders which they had sent for his return, and desiring him to pay no attention to them. pay no attention to them; his march was pursued with extraordinary celerity. He thus avoided twenty thousand horse which had been sent from Poona to intercept him, and arrived with his army in safety at Surat. His reception by the government of Bombay was honourable to all parties. He was requested to join in the deliberations of the council, and recommended for the appointment of commander-in-chief.

Mr. Hornby, the governor of Bombay, was resolved not to recognize the convention concluded by the field committee with the Mahrattas, nor to make the stipulated cessions of territory; and as the Poona authorities had been distinctly informed that the committee had not power to conclude any definitive treaty, there was scarcely even the appearance of injustice in this determination. The government of Bengal, on becoming apprized of the transaction, took the same view of the subject as did Mr. Hornby. That gentleman was of opinion, moreover, that the agreement with Scindia should be ratified, and in this view also the government of Bengal coincided. The conduct of Hastings-for to him the chief merit is to be attributed—in relation to the gross errors committed by the government of Bombay, was singularly mo-The slow progress of Colonel Leslie with the derate, dignified, and judicious. It was most Bengal detachment had been owing partly to fortunate that at the time he possessed the unfavourable weather, but principally to his power, which he had sometimes wanted, of engaging in negotiations and disputes with carrying his own views into effect. His lanthe chiefs of the country through which he guage in reference to the course which, under had to pass. In five months he advanced only the circumstances, it behaved the government a hundred and twenty miles; and his progress of Bengal to pursue, deserves to be quoted—was so unsatisfactory as to lead Hastings, it deserves to be remembered on all similar whose confidence he had previously possessed, occasions, if similar occasions should ever to acquiesce in his recall. Colonel Goddard occur. "Whatever our resolutions," said the om the possibility of being afficted by it. ragement and confidence to the presidency of The character of Colonel Goddard's move. Bombay, instead of adding to their depression. ments was widely different from that which, They are the immediate guardians of the Coman attack upon Lahar, a fortified place, about party, in case of premature discovery, or, in fifty miles west of Calpee. The place was the event of success, to prevent the garrison stronger than had been anticipated, but Cap- from escaping. At break of day the van tain Popham, having summoned it to sur- arrived at the foot of the scarped rock. ing a siege. The guns were too light to have were intimidated by the unexpected attack, having been made, it was resolved to storm. Both the leading officers, Lieutenant Logan and Cornet Gardener, fell before they arrived at the top of the breach; but their place was worthily supplied by Mr. Odell, a volunteer, who mounted the walls, followed most gallantly by the rest of the party. They were exposed to a murderous fire; but, notwithstanding, succeeded in driving the enemy Dreadful slaughter ensued on before them. garrison, which had consisted of five hundred brilliant; but it was purchased with the lose of a hundred and twenty-five of the brave men to whose gallantry it was attributable.

A still more splendid prize was soon to reward the enterprising spirit of Captain Pop-ham. Gwalior had been regarded by the native military authorities as impregnable. Such a belief has existed with regard to so many places which have afterwards yielded to European skill, that little regard is due to Indian opinions of impregnability. Gwalior, notwithstanding, was a place of considerable strength, and it was so situated as to render it both difficult and dangerous to make the observations necessary previously to undertaking an attack. Captain Popham did not proceed hastily or rashly. He devoted considerable time to the purpose of ascertaining the weak points of the fortress. It was built upon an exceedingly high rock—was scarped nearly round, and was garrisoned by a thousand men. The part selected for attack was sufficiently formidable. The scarp was about sixteen feet high; from thence to the wall was a steep ascent of about forty yards, and the wall which was to be escaladed was about thirty feet high. Having made choice of his point, Captain Popham determined upon an attempt which to himself appeared not unlikely to end in defeat; and the cavalry were ordered to march at two, ing remark : "The fact is, that military " " o'clock to cover the retreat of the English in India seems always to have been ex-render, would not withdraw without an effort spies ascended by wooden ladders, and, having to gain possession of it, although he was un-made fast ladders of ropes, the troops followed. provided with the requisite means of conduct- Some resistance was offered, but the garrison much effect; but a very imperfect breach and the assailants, with little trouble and small loss, were soon masters of the boasted stronghold of Gwalior. The arrangements made for intercepting the garrison, in case of their attempting flight, were less successful than those which had led to the capture of the fortress, for the greater part of them succeeded in effecting their escape. Captain Popham was rewarded for his gallant services by being promoted to the rank of Major.

Before the fall of Gwalior, Hyder Ali had both sides. The enemy defended themselves invaded the Carnatic with a force one hundred with desperation; and it was not until the thousand strong. This incapacitated the government of Bengal from rendering any assistmen, was reduced to their killadar and a mere ance to that of Bombay. The latter had, handful of his dependants, that quarter was consequently, to depend on its own efforts, demanded. The triumph of the English was and with very limited means the war with the Mahrattas in that quarter continued to be carried on with considerable vigour. General Goddard marched in October to attack Bassein, and arrived before it by the middle of Novem-Finding the place very strong, and defended by a numerous garrison, he determined to carry on his operations with regularity and precaution. On the morning of the 25th of November, he had completed a battery of six guns and six mortars within nine hundred yards of the place, and, under cover of their fire, carried on his approaches to a spot where he erected a grand battery of nine 24-pounders, which was opened on the 9th of December within five hundred yards of the wall. Be-ides these, he had a battery of twenty mortars of various sizes, which opened upon one of the flanks of the parapet. These preparations were formidable, and they were used with such . effect, that on the day after the opening of the grand battery, an offer of surrender was made. Some difficulty in the arrangements occurred, and the firing recommenced; but, on the 11th, the place surrendered at discretion.

The operations of the besiegers were covered by a force under the command of Colonel Hartley. The Mahrattas had hoped to be able to throw succours into Bassein, but finding their attempts abortive, they sought vengeance but "the object," said he. "was glorious," and in the destruction of Colonel Hartley's army, he took all the precautions in his power to They attacked him with a force of about twenty frustrate the disastrous consequences of a re-thousand horse and foot, but were unable to pulse, should such be the fate that awaited gain any advantage over him. This army had him. At midnight, on the 3rd of August, been engaged for nearly six weeks in almost ladders and all other auxiliaries for scaling daily skirmishes. It had suffered everyly from being prepared, the party for the attack was sickness as well as from other causes, and if formed. Two companies of granadiers and military renown could be apportioned precisely light infantry led the van; Captain Popham to merit, the army under Colonel Hartley followed with twenty Europeans and two would enjoy a very large share. In ref. reacbattalions of sepoys. A battalion, two guns, to this subject Captain Duff makes the I disw-

gallant army by whom it was maintained." western side of India had for some time been British government had been endeavouring to eminently successful; but the governor-general strike an important blow at the power of was, nevertheless, most anxious for peace. Scindia, who had the reputation of being the This feeling was not unreasonable. In the chief fomenter of the war. A detachment Carnatic treat had been unskilfully conjunder Colonel Camac had been dispatched, ducted; great disasters had been sustained, with the primary object of reinforcing General and the utmost despondency prevailed at Goddard; but its march was subsequently Madras. The government of Bengal, too, countermanded, and the force under Major naturally contemplated with alarm the extent Popham being incorporated with it, the whole of the confederacy with which they had to was placed under the command of Colonel of the consederacy with which they had to was placed under the command of Colone contend. Hyder Ali, Nizam Ali, and nearly Camac. The instructions to that officer email the Mahratta powers, were either openly powered him, if he thought it practicable and or secretly engaged against them. Hastings expedient, to carry the war into the territories had expected to secure the rajah of Berar as of Scindia and Holkar. To this, Francis and an ally; but the rajah's friendship cooled in Wheler objected. The governor-general alleged proportion as the success of the English detath he could perceive no objection to the proclined, and it became obvious that he could posal, except on the ground of expense, and to not be depended upon even for neutrality, obviate this, he offered to furnish the requisite Amidst all these difficulties, Hastings had to amount from his own resources. His oppocontend with that which had so often pressed ments, however, still resisted, and it was this heavily on his predecessor—the want of funds. subject of dispute which gave rise to the duel He was at this time, too, more than usually between the governor-general and Francis annoyed and thwarted in council by violent—The proposed instructions to Colonel Canac and probably, with regard to one, at least, of were variously modified, in the course of the his colleagues, there would be no breach of discussions which took place; but finally, charity in adding dishonest—opposition. Sir Hastings, by the accidental, or professedly Eyre Coote was absent from Calcutta—when accidental, absence of Francis, was enabled to present, indeed, his temper does not appear to carry his point. His views were afterwards have been always such as was calculated to confirmed by the judgment of the commandersmooth the troubled waters upon which he was in-chief. But the expedition was soon incast; but his absence left Hastings without a volved in great difficulties. Colonel Camac supporter against the combined attacks of had penetrated into Malwa, in expectation of Francis and Wheler. The governor-general assistance from some neighbouring rajahs, of had taken upon himself the responsibility of which he was disappointed. While encamped conducting the Mahratta war to a successful at Seronge, Scindia's army approached with a issue, but those who should have aided were large train of artillery. The English army at anxious only to embarrass him. The conduct this time began to be in want of provisions, e was surrounded, all conspired to make him enemy, there was no prospect of procuring a desirous of peace; and the wish of the Bengal supply. In this situation the English camp government being communicated to Bombay, was cannonaded during some days, when the government of that presidency were incolonel Camac determined to retreat. He structed to discontinue hostilities, on being duly apprized that they were suspended on the part of the Peishwa, but in the mean time to the desultory annoyances of the enemy, he reprosecute the war with vigour. The latter solved to become the assailant, and attacking part of these orders was scarcely fulfilled. Scindia's camp, he gained a complete victory, General Goddard marched to threaten Poona. carrying off several pieces of cannon, with the The Bhore Ghant was gallantly attacked and greater part of the enemy's stores, ammunicasily carried by Colonel Parker, at the head tion, and baggage. This defeat greatly abated of an advanced party. The main body followed, the martial propensities of Scindia, and he and the head-quarters of General Goddard were made overtures of peace. After some months, established at the foot of the Ghauts. But a separate treaty was concluded with him, and this demonstration failed in producing the he at the same time undertook to interpose his effect anticipated, and no attempt was made influence to promote an amicable settlement of to push on to Poona. The minister of the the differences between the English and the reshwa amused General Goddard for a time other belligerent power. Indeed, the English with pretended negotiations, and these being at this time evinced rather too great an auxiety broken off, the general, whose army had been for peace. All the presidencies were at once greatly harassed, prepared for retreat. This pressing it; and General Goddard, who had was effected with considerable difficulty, and been intrusted with powers to negotiate, was with great loss of men, stores, and equipments. pursuing the same course. A treaty was ulti-

rather in proportion to the result, than to the In the conflicts which took place the British duty performed; and this trying and well-troops lost nothing of honour, but the spirits fought campaign is scarcely known even to the of the Mahrattas were greatly elevated by llant army by whom it was maintained." the success which they had gained.

The operations of the British arms on the While these events were in progress, the of his colleagues, the circumstances by which and the country being laid waste by the mately concluded by Mr. David Anderson, Both parties to the treaty stipulated that the agent of the governor-general. As may be allies of each should maintain peace with the supposed, it was little favourable to the the conquests made since the loss of their conquests by the exclusion of all treaty of Poorunder were remoded in a chief.

the blood and treasure expended in making Portuguese, from forming establishments within them consequently thrown away. But if the the Mahratta dominions. Scindia, who was Mahrattas were indisposed to acquiesce in the surety for the due performance of the treaty conquests made by their enemies, they at the on both sides, as well as one of the Peishwa's same time evinced a laudable impartiality by negotiators, was rewarded for his mediation consenting to stipulate for surrendering those and his guarantee by the confirmation of the made by an ally. All the conquests made by cession of Broach to him. Some delay took Hyder Ali from the Nabob of Arcot, as well place at Poona, but the treaty was finally as from the English, were to be restored. ratified there as well as at Calcutta.

CHAPTER XI.

DISPUTES BETWEEN LORD PIGOT AND THE COUNCIL OF MADRAS-HIS ARREST AND DEATH-CAPTURE OF PONDICHERRY-INCOMPETENCE OF THE MADRAS GOVERNMENT-DESTRUCTION OF COLONEL BAILLIE'S DIVISION BY HYDER ALI-SUCCESSES OF SIR ETRE COOTE-LORD MACART-NET GOVERNOR OF MADRAS—CAPTURE OF DUTCH POSSESSIONS—DESTRUCTION OF COLONEL BRAITHWAITE'S FORCE--NAVAL ENGAGEMENT--DEATH OF HYDER ALI--PROGRESS OF HOS-TILITIES-PEACE CONCLUDED WITH TIPPOO SULTAN.

BEFORE passing to the events which more imidiately after the proclamation of the rajah, a mediately connect the Madras presidency with civil servant of the Company, named Paul the transactions related in the last chapter, it Benfield, intimated that he held assignments will be necessary to revert to some which occurred in the period that intervened between the subjugation of Tanjore and the irruption of Hyder Ali into the Carnatic. The conquest | for large sums lent to individuals. of Tanjore and the deposition of the rajah had allegations were more than suspicious. been condemned by the Court of Directors, and their displeasure was manifested by the removal of Mr. Wynch, the governor under whom these acts had taken place. His successor was Lord Pigot, who had formerly held the office, and had therein acquired considerable reputation, more especially by his conduct when Madras was besieged by the French under Lally. His instructions were to restore the rajah of Tanjore, under certain conditions; an act extremely distasteful to Mahomet Ali, and which he opposed with all the argumentative power and rhetorical artifice which he He resolutely could summon to his aid. asserted his own right to continue in possession, vilified the character of the rajah, pathetically appealed to the services which he had rendered to the Company, and to his own declining years, and urged the assurances of the King of Great Britain, conveyed to him by Sir John Lindsay. As a last resort, he implored delay, till he could bring his case once more before the Company in England, but in vain. The governor, resolved to carry out his instructions, proceeded to Tanjore, and issued a proclamation announcing the restoration of the rajab.

At this time, a man memorable, or rather notorious, in the history of the British con-on the revenues of Tanjore for sums of vast amount, lent by him to the Nabob of Arcot, and other assignments on the growing crops was not to be supposed that Benfield brought with him to India any wealth, and he had there enjoyed no opportunity of honestly amassing any. The scantiness of his means had not been assisted by parsimony, for the habits of Benfield were expensive and ostentatious, beyond those of most men at the presidency. The governor properly demanded some evidence that the claims were just, but none was offered that could satisfy any one who was not previously prepared to be satisfied. A majority of the members of the government determined against the claims, on the ground that those against individuals were not sufficiently made out, and that the claim against the nabob could not be entertained. The means by which Mr. Benfield succeeded in shaking the opinion of some of the persons constituting the majority cannot be told; but to whatever cause it may be attributed, a change took place-the subject was reconsidered, and the board, which had just resolved against the claims, reversed their own decision. by determining that the crop sown during the nabob's possession was his property-a proposition not deficient in plausibility, more especially as the government of Madras had recognized his right by assisting him to take possession of Tanjore: but it was followed by nection with the Nabob of Arcot, first became another, more startling and much more to Mr. conspicuous. The nabob had hinted that if he Benfield's purpose, namely, that the alleged were dispossessed of Tanjore, his ability to assignments of the nabob to that person gave discharge the debts owing by him to British to his demands the character of public claims. subjects would be seriously affected. Imme- The governor had strenuously opposed these and even his customary and recognized claim impaired by age and an Indian climate, sunk to precedence in the conduct of the public under the irritation to which he had been exbusiness denied and invaded.

This struggle was succeeded by another. A British resident was to be appointed for Tanjore. Lord Pigot proposed Mr. Russell, a civil servant; the majority of the board supported Colonel Stuart, who held the second military command at Madras, and who was destined by the same party for the appointment of commandant at Tanjore. The question was violently debated at several meetings, the governor refused the formality of his signature to the papers necessary to carry into effect the will of his opponents, and at length the latter determined to act without it. The governor was equally bent upon maintaining his own rights, and upon two members of the board affixing their signatures to a paper to which his had been refused, he charged them with acting in a manner subversive of the authority of the government. This charge was formally made, and as it was irregular for members of the government against whom a charge was pending, to deliberate or vote on questions arising out of such charge, the governor was able, by his casting vote, to pass a resolution suspending the accused parties, Messrs. Brooke and Strat-This gave rise to proceedings not dissimilar to those which shortly afterwards took place in Bengal. The persons constituting the former majority seceded, and having forwarded a protest against the conduct of Lord Pigot, i to themselves the rights of the go-ment, and claimed the obedience due to a authority. This was followed by the ...or and his friends declaring all the relory members of the board suspended, and Lidering Sir Robert Fletcher, the commanderin-chief, into arrest, for the purpose of being brought to trial by a court-martial.

The adverse party followed the example of their chief with no slow or indecisive steps. They determined to arrest his person, and on the 24th of August, 1776, the governor of Madras became the prisoner of certain members of his own council. He appealed to Sir Edward Hughes, the admiral commanding the squadron in the roads, for protection, and the admiral demanded that safe-conduct to the ships should be given him. The ruling body inquired whether Sir Edward Hughes would be responsible for Lord Pigot if the request were complied with. The admiral answered that he tendered the requisition in the king's name, and would make no terms. The acting Crown empowered its officers to require the it. removal of any servant of the Company, in such a situation as that of Lord Pigot, from under the authority of the Company's govern-conclusions, but his opinion was disregarded, lamentable; the constitution of Lord Pigot, posed and the restraint to which he was subjected, and he died the prisoner of those over whom he had been appointed to preside. It being recollected that the government of Bengal now possessed a controlling authority over the other presidencies, an authority which it was not indisposed to exert, it will naturally be asked how, in the case of the revolutionary. proceedings at Madras-for such they werethat power was exercised? The answer must be, that it was not exercised at all; the Supreme Government remained inactive, while one of those subordinate to it was falling into anarchy. If ever there was a time when the superintending authority of Bengal should have been called into action, it was this. General Clavering and his party might be disposed, it may be thought, to sympathize with the malcontents at Madras, whose conduct bore so strong a resemblance to their own; but Hastings could have no such feeling, and where, it must be asked, was his wonted energy, at a time when it was so much required? Did he propose interposition, and was he foiled by the perverseness of his colleagues? Not so-he and they were unanimous in declining to interfere, and his friends claim for him the credit, or the shame, of having given the tone which, on this occasion pre-vailed in the council of Bengal. Hastings had always maintained his own rights as governorgeneral with unyielding pertinacity; why was he so blind or so cold to the rights of the governor of Madras? Though with more of moderation than some of his colleagues, he had been quite ready to interfere to restrain the lawful government of Bombay; how came the unlawful government of Madras to find such favour in his eyes? If his previous conduct convicts him of inconsistency, his subsequent acts abundantly support and justify the judg-He endeavoured to expel from the ment. council of Bengal certain members, on the ground of their having usurped powers which did not belong to them, and Lord Pigot did no more; indeed, he did not attempt so much, for he only suspended his disobedient councillors, while Hastings declared that his opponents had absolutely forfeited their right to sit in council. It has been seen that Hastings did not hesitate to join in controlling the government of Bombay; it will hereafter appear that he suspended the governor of that very presidency, Madras, with which he now declined council replied that they had no proof that the to interfere, though rebellion held sway over Into the motives of this tenderness it were vain to inquire. It would be difficult to assign one that could confer honour on Hastings, and his forbearance but furnishes an ment; and the admiral rejoined that the case additional proof that he was without any fixed was unexampled, that he had done his duty or determinate principles of action—that he in making the requisition, and must leave had no rule but expediency—and that even those who had resisted it to meet the consellofty character which regards indirect and not beyond the moment, and defies the scruples of a far-seeing prudence not less than the rules tion, declaring the exclusion of Messrs, Stratton of abstract right.

At home the proceedings at Madras excited a strong sensation, and gave rise to much dis-The Court of Directors appear to have been greatly divided. On the 26th March, 1777, the subject was brought forward in a general court, when it was moved, "that it be recommended to the Court of Directors to take such measures as shall appear to them most effectual for restoring Lord Pigot to the full exercise of the powers vested in him by the commission from the Company, as governor and president of the settlement of Madras, and actors in imprisoning his lordship, and dis-possessing him of the exercise of the legal feeling in favour of the deposed governor was out to Madras a commission of inquiry and members of council who had adhered to himassumed, without authority, the entire powers of the government, and to suspend them the Company's service: but with the view of conciliating the opposite party, it was proposed to qualify these acts by placing the restored members of council at the subordinate settlements, and by declaring that the governor's proceedings appeared to have been, in several instances, reprehensible. A series of resolucarried in the affirmative. was not set at rest. court after that event, the chairman, Mr. tion of the other propositions of the chairman each. was then postponed; and at a court held on remote consequences as well as immediate con- the following day, both parties enjoyed some venience—that it was of that kind which looks degree of triumph. The friends of Lord Pigot successfully resisted the passing of a resoluand Brooke from council arbitrary and unconstitutional; and they carried two other resolutions, condemnatory of the violence offered to his lordship, and of the suspension of those members of council who supported him. the other hand, the enemies of the unfortunate governor proposed and carried a resolution condemning the conduct of Lord Pigot in receiving certain presents from the Nabob of Arcot. This act of the governor was clearly contrary to law, and is incapable of defence. The presents were, indeed, of very trifling value—not exceeding a few hundred pounds for inquiring into the conduct of the principal their receipt was openly avowed in a letter to the Court of Directors-they were bestowed by the Nabob of Arcot, towards whom Lord powers wherewith he was invested." A ballot Pigot certainly manifested no undue parwas demanded, which took place on the 31st, tiality; but these circumstances cannot rewhen the motion was carried by 382 votes move the illegality of accepting them, and it when the motion was carried by 382 votes move the illegality of accepting them, and it against 140. In the Court of Directors, the is to be lamented that Lord Pigot should have given his enemies an opportunity of reproachmuch less strong. It was proposed to send ing him on this ground. On the 23rd of April the subject again occupied the attention of a supervision; but a motion to that effect, made general court, when it was resolved to adjourn on the 9th of April, was lost. On the 11th, it for a fortnight. On the 7th of May the court was moved to restore Lord Pigot and the again met, and, after much debate, it was resolved to refer to the decision of a ballot to pass a censure on the members who had a series of resolutions of an extraordinary character. They censured the invasion of his lordship's rights as governor, and acquiesced in his restoration; but recommended that such restoration should be immediately followed by his recall, in order that his conduct might be more effectually inquired into: for the same reason they recommended the recall of the councillors who had supported Lord Pigot, and also of those who had opposed him. These tions, embodying these points, was put to the resolutions were carried, on the ballot, by 414 vote, and the numbers on each side were against 317. On the 21st of May, the case of equal. In conformity with the rule which Lord Pigot was brought before the House of then prevailed, the question was referred to Commons, and a series of resolutions favourthe decision of the lot, and by that process was able to him proposed. They were opposed by native. Still the question the ministry, and lost. The Court of Direc-The annual change in the tors, on the 30th of July, passed resolutions Court of Directors took place, and at the first designed to give effect to the recommendation of the general court; but before the question Wombwell, intimated his intention of sub- was decided, the party principally interested mitting a series of resolutions on the recent was beyond the reach of either additional events at Madras. At a subsequent court he injury or tardy redress. Two years afterwards moved, and the court resolved, that the powers | the House of Commons addressed his Majesty, claimed for and assumed by Lord Pigot were praying that the attorney general might be "neither known in the constitution of the ordered to prosecute Mr. Stratton (then a "neither known in the constitution of the Company, nor authorized by charter, nor warranted by any orders or instructions of the Court of Directors." The chairman followed our this blow by another. He moved, "that the proposition to send Mr. Russel to Tanjore as resident was not warranted by the orders of the Company, nor necessary for the carrying them into execution;" but here success deserted him: the motion was lost. The consideration of the other propositions of the chairman each.

When the Court of Directors determined to

recall Lord Pigot and his council, provision Goddard, the place was, after a few months' was made for the appointment of what was possession, abandoned; the guns were shipped called a temporary government, to not pending off to Bombay, and the fort blown up, the proposed inquiry. It consisted of six Hyder Ali had formally protested against members, and Mr. Thomas Rumbold, a direct any attack upon Mahe, and its capture was tor, was to be president and governor. The consequently very offensive to him. This was English had for some time been engaged in not the only cause of diseatisfaction afforded by hostilities with their colonies in America. The the English. The attempt of a British force French monarch made common came with the to pass through part of his territories tended revolted colonists, and war between England to increase his displeature. The circumstances and France ensued. Its operations were ex-tended to India with extraordinary prompti-tude and vigour; and most of the minor. In the arrangement made with Nizam Ali French settlements having been previously for the transfer to the English of the Northern secured, General Munro, early in August, Circars, it was provided that one of them, 1778, advanced with a considerable force against Pondicherry. The attack was to be of the Niram's brother, Basalat Jung, during nided by a small fleet under Sir Edward his life. Basalat Jung subsequently gave un-Vernon, consisting of one ship of sixty guns, one of twenty-eight, one of twenty, a shoop. and a Company's ship. He was opposed by a French squadron under Monsieur Tronjolly, whom he brought to action on the 10th of August, and, after a conflict of some duration, put to flight. It was expected by the English [domaind by the presence of an armed force on that the fight would be renewed on the following day, but the French commander, who had compliance with the demand were refused, taken refuge in Pondicherry, entertained no ruch intention; and after cluding for reveral days the attempts of Sir Edward Vernon to bring him again to action, he followed the example of some of his predecessors under similar circumstances, by escaping from the coast with his ships, and abandoning Pondicherry to its fate. In the mean time General Munro had taken possession of the bound hedge, and cut off all communications with the miss the French from his service, and trust urrounding country. On the 6th of Sep-'n vigorous fire from twenty-eight pieces of heavy artillery and twenty-seven mortars, The garrison, under M. Bellecombe, made a gallant defence, and their efforts, aided by the state of the weather, considerably retarded the progress of the assailants; but point after point was lost, and the English commander, having surmounted many of the difficulties strongly objected to negotiating with the nizam, with which he had to contend, determined on a general assault. This was prevented by a proposal to capitulate on terms made on the government of Madras, however, persevered day preceding that destined for the attack. The proposal was accepted, and Pondicherry thus passed once more into the possession of entertained by his brother was not exclusively The terms granted were exthe English. tremely favourable to the besieged. European part of the garrison was to be sent English, and Portuguese, who had deserted to France, and the sepoys to be disbanded. The whole were permitted to march out with the honours of war, and the regiment of Pondicherry was allowed to rotain its colours.

An expedition despatched under Colonel Braithwaite against Mahe, on the coast of that as the retention of these foreigners in the Malabar, was not less successful than that district of Guntoor seemed to give uncasiness against Pondicherry, and the conquest was to his British ally, he had sent a person of far more easily attained. Mahé surrendered distinction to get them removed, and to stop hefore a gun was fired against it. But Colonel the revenue appropriated to their support.

easiness to the Madras government by receiving a body of Prench troops, and a reference was made to Bangal for instructions on the rulifect. The answer authorized the Madras government to demand the dismission of the French troops, and to prepare to support the the frontier of Baralat June's territory. that prince was to be informed that per cision would forthwith be taken of Guntoor, and a negotiation opened with the nizam for its immediate cossion to the Company upon such terms as might be agreed upon. The government of Madras hesitated, and, after come consideration, determined, instead of applying to Basalat Jung, to address the nizam, calling upon him to compel his brother either to disfor the protection of his country to the English, mber he broke ground, and on the 18th to whom the reversion belonged, or to allow them to occupy the circar at an annual rent. The determination to negotiate with the nizam appears to have been taken on the ground that Basalat Jung was no party to the treaty; but before carrying it into effect, it was thought proper to communicate the intention of government to the nabob of Arcot. Mahomet Ali and proposed to send a vakeel from himself to maungo the business with Basalat Jung. The in applying to the nizam, and his answer was most courteous. He alleged that the force French, though a Frenchman might have the The command, but contained Germans, Dutch, from various places. He assigned as reasons for employing them, that the dependents of Basalat Jung were disobedient and powerful, and that his country was bordered by the torritories of Hyder Ali Khan; but he added, Braithwaite, being ordered to join General "Every article and condition of the treaty between us," said the gracious prince, "shall | country, and some disputes and quarrels may remain fixed and unaltered, even in a hair's take place between your men and these sepoys, breadth." This letter was received soon after Lord Pigot's second assumption of the govern-

The diplomacy of the "person of distinction," if such person were sent by the nizam to his brother, produced no satisfactory results; for nearly three years after the period of the through his dominions. nizam's communication, Mr. Rumbold, who these intimations, Colonel Harpur was inthen held the office of governor, complained structed by his government to advance, and that French troops were still entertained in Guntoor, and that they were recruited under the protection of the governor of Pon-The commencement of the war between Eugland and France naturally quickened the observation of the Madras government, which, till a very short time before, had been so distracted by disunion as to leave its members no time to spare from the care of this mission was to ascertain the precise views their personal interests for those of the public. About this time, too, Basalat Jung felt, or politics of India; another to endeavour to affected, some alarm at the strength of the remove unfavourable impressions as to the French party. Both parties were thus prepared to negotiate, and a treaty was concluded, by which the Company were to rent Guntoor of Basalat Jung during his life, for the sum which he had previously realized from it, to be ascertained from his accounts. He on his part was to dismiss his French troops, and the Company were to assist him with such a force also to explain the cause of an act which had as might be necessary for the purposes of defence, revenue, or dignity, the charges to be sive to the nizam—the withholding of the defrayed by Basalat Jung. Soon after the conclusion of this treaty, fears were entertained that Hyder Ali, who had made some conquests in the vicinity, was about to add to them the territories of Basalat Jung, and the English government, in consequence, resolved to send three battalions of sepoys, a company of artillery, and some field pieces, for their protection. This force was placed under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Harpur, and was to proceed from Guntoor to Adoni, the capital of Basalat Jung's other dominions in the Deccan. Basalat Jung expressed great joy at its approach, and took the pains of pointing out a right to demand. The grant from the Mogul," particular route as the most eligible. This continued the governor, "was free and unconroute Colonel Harpur subsequently discovered ditional for the five circars, and the receiving led him several days' march through the territories of Hyder Ali, and the servants of that nizam Ali Khan, on paying him an anuual potentate forbade his advance. One of them, peishcush, was a sacrifice of the Company's in answer to an application from the English rights." The governor's view of the subject commander, wrote—"I have received your was supported by reason, but his practical letter, in which you acquaint me, that as a sincere friendship exists between the nabob dishonest and disgraceful. Hyder Ali Khan and the Company, you propose marching the troops under your command to Adoni, through Durnall and Atcour, which I understand. It is as manifest as the sun, that but if this could not be effected, a strenuous a sincere friendship exists between his Excellency and the Company, and that they have The governor's colleagues entirely approved no separate interests; it is, therefore, my duty of the recommendation of their chief, and Mr. to pay a regard to the friendship they have Hollond was instructed accordingly. The gofor him; yet you will march your troops by vernor had observed that the opening of the another road, that this friendship may be pre-business to the nizam would require the control of the another road. served; for there are sepoys stationed in that management on the part of Mr.

who are of a very quarrelsome disposition. have so much regard for our friendship that I would not wish this to happen." Another of Hyder Ali's officers informed Colonel Harpur that their master had given express orders that the English force was not to march Notwithstanding he continued to do so till his detachment was in danger of being surrounded, when he retired within the circar of Guntoor.

While these affairs were in progress, the government of Madras had been maintaining a mission at the court of the nizam, under the management of Mr. Hollond, a civil servant of that presidency. One of the objects of of the nizam with regard to the distracted conduct of the British government in supporting Rugonath Row, to whom the nizam was violently opposed. In subordination to these primary purposes, he was to give such explanation of the subordination nations as might be necessary in relation to the negotiation with Basalat Jung, and the occupation, by the English, of Guntoor. He was taken place of a nature likely to be very offenpeishcush, or tribute, due from the Company to the nizam on account of the Northern Circars. This was to be ascribed to the encouragement given by Basalat Jung to the French, and the nizam was to be assured of punctual payment for the future. Such were the instructions issued to the English agent on the 22nd of February, 1779. On the 5th of June following, the governor of Madras recorded a minute, in which he declared that he "had always considered the peishcush paid by the Company to the nizam as disgraceful to them, and an acknowledgment which" that prince "had no them afterwards as a grant from the soubahdar application of it can only be characterized as dishonest and disgraceful. "The time," said he, "seems favourable to throw off so heavy a burden," and accordingly he proposed that it should be thrown off, altogether, if possible; effort was to be made to reduce the amount.

"who must," said he, "by turns soothe and work upon his apprehensions as occasion may Madras surrounded by difficulty and dismay. require." The agent did as he was required; Sir Thomas Rumbold had quitted India, asbut Nizam Ali was neither to be soothed nor suring the Court of Directors, "that everything alarmed into the surrender of his peishcush. was quiet in the Carnatic;" "that he was He declared that, if denied, he should forth-inclined to think they should remain in peace:" with prepare for war; and, in desiring that and that "he could speak with confidence. Mr. Hollond would immediately report at that there was no likelihood, at that time, of Madras the result of the application, he ob- any troubles on that side of India." Long served that, if there were any delay in forward-before the date of these soothing assurances, ing an answer from the English government, he both the language and the acts of Hyder Ali might possibly advance upon Colonel Harpur. had manifested his hostile intentions towards The nizam bad previously expressed great the English. The governor himself had felt dissatisfaction with the negotiations entered anxiety; he had despatched a special mesinto between the British government and senger to ascertain the feelings of Hyder Ali, Basalat Jung, and however soothing the and the result had not left them doubtful. mode of advance, the demand for the surrender | Another mission followed, and this was treated of the peishcush was not calculated to restore with contempt and contumely. Yet Sir the prince's equanimity, or to dispose him to Thomas Rumbold, in the last minute which regard the other acts of the English government with favour.

ment becoming known at Calcutta, the go- his last act of authority giving countenance vernment of Bengal deemed it necessary to to a delusion which he could not believe, the exercise their controlling authority. A letter governor divested himself of the cares and was addressed by the latter government to the responsibilities of rule, and bent his course nizam, lamenting that "the negotiation had homeward in search of ease and enjoyment. been imperceptibly carried beyond the limits His successor, Mr. Whitehill, slumbered on, originally prescribed to it," and that some luxuriating in those dreams of peace and propositions had been made to his "highness safety which the retired governor had shawhich he had received as demands, and mis-dowed forth. They were sometimes invaded which he had received as demands, and misconstrued them into an intention to depart from the treaty subsisting between "him "and the Company." These suspicions it was sought to remove by an assurance that the government of Madras had never entertained such ment of Madras had never entertained such property of the Madras had never the manufacture of th an intention; and that, as a proof of the British government, but without effect. Time friendly feelings of the Supreme Government, flowed on, and the sources of alarm multiplied. Mr. Hollond had been directed to suspend the From every quarter, reports of threatened business of his commission till he should invasion and complaints of inefficient means of Bengal were communicated to that of Madras, of the governor would occasionally suggest where they excited the strongest feelings of the necessity for a more active course; but indignation. They determined to recall Mr. Hollond from the court of the nizam. This come. At last, in the middle of June, some That | was proposed by Sir Thomas Rumbold. governor soon afterwards quitted India, leaving behind him a minute, recommending that the recall of Mr. Hollond should be followed up by his suspension from the service. The Ali's movements and intentions, he thought it recommendation was adopted by the new pre- a proper measure, in case of any disputes in sident, Mr. Whitehill, and carried into effect. Mr. Hollond, however, did not quit the court view to the protection of Basalat Jung, forof the nizam, being retained there by the merly commanded by Colonel Harpur, then by government of Bengal as their representative.

In the mean time Basalat Jung, intimidated by Hyder Ali and the nizam, had stopped the Macleod, who commanded a king's regiment, march of Colonel Harpur, for whose advance he had previously been so anxious, and demanded the restoration of Guntoor. The government of Madras refused to comply with These orders found the government of ent with favour.

On these proceedings of the Madras governing the calm was to be apprehended. Thus, by wive from that government further instruct defence rushed in; but no measures of pre-These acts of the government of caution were taken. Some of the colleagues symptoms of reviving sensation, feeble as they were tardy, began to appear, and the governor coolly informed the select committee, that, as there were various reports concerning Hyder the Carnatic, that the detachment sent with a Colonel Baillie, should recross the Kistna.

More than a month passed, and Lord deemed it his duty to represent to the governor that the report of Hyder Ali's invasion might be true, and that, at all events, some measures ought to be taken to oppose him. Mr. Whitethe demand; but on this subject, as well as hill, with philosophic calmness, replied, "What on that of the peishcush, the government of can we do? we have no money;" but, to Bengal took a different view, directing that console the impatient soldier, he added, "We the treaty with Basalat Jung should be annulled and Guntoor restored. an army without money seems on a level, in junction. To aid in removing the difficulties point of rationality, with the postponement of in the way of this object, Sir Hector Munro, such a measure till the enemy was almost at on the night of the 8th of September, desthe gates of the British presidency. On the patched, under the command of Colonel evening on which this conversation was held, Fletcher, a detachment amounting to one intelligence arrived which deprived the go-thousand men, and forming the flower of the vernor of the power of speaking hypotheti-larmy. This measure has been severely concally of the existence of "despoilers" in the demned by military authorities, as imprudently Carnatic. It was ascertained that Porto Novo, weakening the main army, and exposing the on the coast, and Conjeveram, not fifty miles most valuable part of it to be cut off in detail. from Madras, had been plundered by the That such a result did not follow will excite tom Aladras, had been plundered by the that such a result did not follow will excite enemy. Hyder Ali commenced his irruption with all those circumstances of horror with telligence department of Hyder Ali's army which his appearance as an enemy was invariably attended. Around every place which he distinct to fall before him he drew a circle, the British force; while all those on whom within which all was consigned to desolation, the English relied for information were in the The towns and villages were soon wrapped in pay of their enemy. fiames, and the inhabitants peremptorily re-inected with the march of the English detachquired to depart with their flocks and herd . ment was as well known to Hyder Ali as to If by the influence of local attachments, so those by whom it was planned, and the watchpowerful in the breast of the natives of India, ful ruler of Mysore prepared to intercept it. any houseless wanderer presumed to linger The sagacity of Colonel Fletcher disappointed near the spot where recently he had a home, the expectant chief of his prey, and insured and where his fathers had resided from a the safety of the detached party. Suspecting, period auterior to all record, his disobedience with good reason, the integrity of his guides, was punished by the mutilation of his person, the suddenly changed his route, and escaped efforts were made to procure money, to secure Early on the morning of the 9th of September the possession of important forts, and to comthe joined Colonel Baillie, thus giving to the bine an army much too scattered to act effect troops under the command of the latter offitually. But weakness, or something worse, con- cer an increase of confidence, of which they tinued to paralyze their measures. It was deter-1 stood greatly in need. mined that the commander in chief, Sir Hector Munro, a general who had gained some fame pleased at the successful passage of Colonel in India, should not quit the presidency. The Fletcher. It still more confounded the officers command was to be intrusted to Lord Maclcod, of the French party, which had been diswho appears to have been an intelligent and missed by Basalat Jung, and who, after someritorious officer, while Sir Hector Munro journing for a time with the nizam, were now was to remain at Madras to secure to the in the service of Hyder Ali. select committee the benefit of his military judgment. It was the opinion of the commander-in-chief that the army should assemble near Conjeveram. Lord Macleod, admitting that this might have been a proper arrangement before the invasion took place, maintained that, for various military reasons, it was then inexpedient, and shrunk from the responsibility of executing plans widely at variance with his own judgment. Sir Hector Munro, thereupon, consented to take the field. He arrived at Conjeveram on the 29th of August, and took the command of a force about five thousand strong. The detachment in Guntoor, under Colonel Baillie, was to join him To frustrate this junction, Hyder Ali despatched a force under his son Tippoo, and he soon afterwards broke up his camp before Arcot, which place he had previously invested, and posted his own force about six miles to the westward of that of Sir Hector Munro. position, the force under Tippoo Sultan at-these attacks. But the enemy continued to harass him; and tion in which the baggage was p. Colonel Baillie informed Sir Hector Munro some guns which they had that he doubted of his being able to effect a A halt took place for the Nearly everything con-By the government of Madras some feeble the fate which had been prepared for him.

Hyder Ali was not less astonished than dis-By them the movement of Colonel Fletcher was regarded as part of a series intended to bring Hyder Ali's army between those of Sir Hector Munro and Colonel Baillie, and they advised immediate retirement. Hyder Ali took a different and more correct view, and determined to maintain his ground.

In the evening the force under Colonel Baillie began to march. Hyder Ali had prepared for this step. He had sent off the greater part of his infantry and guns, remaining himself with his cavalry, ready either to protect his camp or to aid any attack that might be made upon Colonel Baillie. Very might be made upon Colonel Baillie. soon after the British force was in motion it was challenged by the enemy's videttes, and the challenge being answered by a platoon from the advance guard, its march became known to the enemy. For several miles its progress was interrupted only by rockets and a few irregular troops, but the flanking On the day on which Hyder Ali took this parties prevented much mischief arising from At length a heavy body of tacked Colonel Baillie, though without success. horse was observed approaching in the direca better disposition for the security of the the sick and wounded in the doolies, and even baggage, and a party was despatched to seize on women and children; and the lower order the guns; its progress was intercepted by a deep trench, which had been cut with a view to the irrigation of the land, but which now formed a defence to the enemy's troops and guns. The latter, were, however, silenced by the superior execution of the English artillery; and all reason for delay being at an end, everything was prepared to continue the march. Colonel Baillie, however, determined to prolong the halt. The reason of this has never been explained, and it has generally been regarded as the master error of the day. Had he continued his march, there seems little doubt that he would either have actually joined Sir Hector Munro, or at least have advanced so near to him, as to have insured all the advantages expected from the junction. The delay enabled the enemy's cannon to be withdrawn to a point knows that his profession calls him to privation, where they could again be employed in embarrassing the English force; it allowed time death. In camp and field he looks on these to Hyder Ali to become apprized of their as ordinary contingencies; but when the situation, and to take his measures accord-deadly strife has ended, and the sword of the ingly.

Soon after the march recommenced, the enemy opened a fire from a few guns at a considerable distance. The British commander again halted, and despatched a body of sepoy grenadiers to attack the guns. They gained possession of some of them, and put to flight the party by whom they were defended, when the cavalry of Hyder Ali appeared in sight, covering the plain like a cloud, and threatened to cut off the return of the British party, which thereupon retired. Hyder Ali had left his camp without striking his tents. The movement of his cavalry was only designed to mask the advance of his infantry and artillery, and lonel Baillie found himself exposed to an from the whole force of the enemy. fore than fifty pieces of cannon opened on the British corps, while cavalry and infantry almost innumerable pressed it on every side. Ten British field-pieces indeed returned the more numerous fire of the enemy with powerful effect while ammunition lasted; but this at last failed—a result accelerated by the explosion of two tumbrils which were exposed to the enemy's shot. Repeated charges of the enemy were met and sustained with a steadiness highly creditable to the troops, and the Europeans cried out to be led on. To the last these gallant men maintained their order. The sepoys gradually fell into confusion, some preparing for flight, others keeping up a desultory fire without object or effect. All being lost, Colonel Baillie went forward waving his handkerchief as a demand for quarter, and supposing his request complied with, he ordered his troops to lay down their arms; but the savage host arrayed against them continued long afterwards to slaughter their now unresisting Colonel Wilks says, "Hyder's young soldiers, in particular, amused themselves with fleshing their swords and exhibiting their skill on men already most inhumanly mangled, on horror, on entering a wretched shed, pervious of horsemen plundered their victims of the last remnant of clothing."

Nothing remained to relieve the gloom of this ill-fated day but the recollection of the gallant conduct of the defeated corps, and more especially of the European part of it. Colonel Baillie displayed few of the qualifications of a commander except courage; but in this he was not deficient. Eighty-six British officers were engaged in the conflict; of these, thirty-six lay dead on the field at its termination, or subsequently died of the wounds which they received; thirty-four more were wounded, but not mortally, and sixteen only surrendered unwounded. Among the killed was the gallant Colonel Fletcher.

The worst was yet to come. The soldier fatigue, danger, suffering, and possibly to conquered has been lowered in submission to the victor, the usages of all civilized countries entitle him to expect that the offices of humanity will be interposed to alleviate the sorrows of his situation, and, as far as practicable, to render even captivity tolerable. With the usages of civilized nations Hyder Ali was little acquainted, and he was uninfluenced by that natural generosity which has sometimes thrown a lustre over barbaric conquest more brilliant than the conquest itself. Seated in his tent, the ruffian conqueror regaled his eyes by having his prisoners paraded before him, while from time to time the heads of the slain were deposited at his feet. The sequel was worthy of the commencement: every indignity that malice could devise, every privation that cruelty could inflict, awaited the unhappy Europeans, who were destined for years to remain the prisoners of Hyder Ali.

The memory of these atrocities is preserved in the personal parratives of some of the sufferers; and the general character of the treatment sustained by the English prisoners will be shown by a brief extract from one of these, written by Lieutenant Melvill, a king's officer, whose left arm was shattered during the engagement, and the muscles of his right severed by a sabre-cut after the surrender. After lying many hours on the field, exposed to all the suffering inseparable from such a situation, he was carried to the camp of the conqueror, where the wounded were crowded together in one tent, without succour, and without hope. From thence, with his companions, he was marched forth to Arnce, and afterwards to Bangalore. had looked forward," says Lieutenant Melvill, " to the close of our long and painful journey, with the cheering expectation that it would cause some mitigation of our woes. great was our disappointment, or rather our

to wind and weather, the destined place of been removed from one prison to another for our captivity, and on beholding the miserable that execrable purpose. objects by whom it was already tenanted—our guarded us were apprized of our fears, and brother-officers in chains, whose meagre coun-calculated their measures so as to increase tenances and squalid forms revealed at once them. The slightest advantage gained by the secrets of the prison-house, and disclosed their troops was magnified to a decisive victhe welcome provided for its new inhabitants. tory, and announced to our trembling ears Our misery, indeed, exceeded theirs, in pro- by the fire of the artillery planted round our portion as our hodily pains were greater, and prison; each flash, each report of which struck our wants more numerous. The party of horror to our hearts and affected us like the British whom we now joined in the prison of knoll of a dear departed relative or bosom Bangalore had been taken either unwounded, friend. We were often told, and through other or so slightly hurt, as to be capable of bearing channels we knew it to be a fact, that actual a speedy removal into Hyder's territory. wounds we had suffered were more severe, our countrymen in other prisons, with the and required surgical aid. Some were maimed expectation that when they bore the indelible and helpless. All medicine was denied, and it mark of Mahometanism they would apostatize was very difficult to procure it claudestinely, from God and abjure their earthly sovereign, under the strict prohibitions of introducing it The same abhorred expedient recurred to our which prevailed, and the danger of punish- minds as intended for us whenever a stranger ment if detected; and while our bodies were of rank visited the prison, especially if he racked with pain, and enfeebled with sickness, our minds became a prey to gloom and despon- sons. In such a state of complicated mental disdency. If, in consequence of any favourable tress nearly four years of the prime of life were rumour, as of peace, or the success of our consumed; and during this sad period our arms, a ray of hope entered our dismal abode, it was roon dispelled by reports of a contrary nature, and thus conspired with everything else to confirm and aggravate our despair. We were cometimes visited as objects of curiosity by men of rank; but the contempt and abhorience with which, in general, they regarded us, were exceedingly mortifying, and hurt us more than the ignominy of our chains. Our unfeeling guards, in imitation of their superiors, and to gratify the same malignant passions which influenced them, insulted and tyrannized over us with a brutality suitable Suchwasthetreatment of the prisoners of Hyder to their low birth and condition. Applica- Ali, as attested by a witness of unquestionable tions for redress were heard at best with con- veracity and honour, himself one of the suftemptuous indifference; and we were often ferers. If the extension of British influence told, in plain terms, that it was not intended in India had no other effect than to put an we should survive our imprisonment, unless and to horrors like these, who would be found we complied with the infamous requisition of to regret it? It is a gratifying fact that the bearing arms against our country. Those French officers retained by Hyder Ali, had who know from experience the high feelings not forgotten in his service the courtesies of of a British officer, accustomed to command civilized warfare. They did much to mitigate the sons of liberty, may judge of the bitterness the sufferings of the wounded prisoners, and of our degraded, abject state, when, even would have done more had they not been within the narrow bounds of our prison, we restrained by the tyrant whom they served were controlled, threatened, and sometimes "No pen," says another of Hyder Ali's vicstruck, by the lowest menial who guarded us. tims, "can do justice to the humanity of Like slaves, or rather felons, we were must those officers, without whose assistance many tered and examined twice a day; and the of our officers must have perished; but their severest and most ignominious scrutiny of our merit will for ever be embalmed in the hearts persons followed a suspicion that we cor- and minds of all who felt or who witnessed responded with our friends confined in other their beneficence." prisons, or that we received supplies of monoy or of necessaries from any quarter. Upon these occasions, we were conducted separately into places apart from the prison, and searched it took place, discovering that Hyder Ali had

The tyrants who The force had been used on the persons of many of seemed to cast a scrutinizing eye on our percorporcal sufferings were not inferior in their degree to those of our minds. Our couch was the ground, spread with a scanty allowance of straw; the same wretched covering which shielded our limbs from nakedness by day, served to enwrap them also by night. The sweepings of the granary were given us in any dirty utensil or broken earthen pot. Swarms of odious and tormenting vermin bred in our wounds, and every abomination to the sight and smell accumulated around us, till its continuance became intolerable to our guards.

by the principal officers of the fort. This separation from each other was needlessly prolonged, and never failed to excite in our minds the most lively apprehensions that we were selected to fall by poison or the sword, like many of our unhappy brethren, who had

by the explosion of the tumbrils, and suddenly, of misconduct and of suffering, of disaster and he says, the firing ceased. He continued his disgrace, had been crowded! march to the right in expectation of meeting Colonel Baillie, "not doubting," he observes pervaded the minds of the inhabitants. Some with great naïvets, "but that he had repulsed sought opportunity of returning to England, the enemy." After marching about two miles, his confidence was somewhat shaken by meeting with a wounded sepoy, who reported that had been so uselessly sacrificed and whose Colonel Baillie was entirely defeated. consoled himself, indeed, by determining that this information was not to be depended upon; yet the non-appearance of the detachment, and the cessation of the firing, he admits, gave too much reason to suspect some disaster. accordingly returned to Conjeveram, where the appearance and reports of other wounded stragglers confirmed the news of Colonel Baillie's defeat. Still the general could not bring himself to believe it. His incredulity was all but invincible. "The reports of the governor-general and council had waited for sepoys," says he, "differed so much as to par- further information before interposing in any ticulars, that no credit could be given them.

Another question arising out of the extraordinary nature of these transactions is, why did Sir Hector Munro defer moving to the support of Colonel Baillie till it was too late? His own explanation is, that when he first learned that Colonel Baillie was in danger, his only resource for provisions was a stock of paddy collected in the pagoda of Conjeveram; that if he had then moved, Hyder Ali would have occupied his ground, and cut him off from all provisions, whereby his army would have been starved. He returned to Conjeveram, after his tardy and fruitless march in search of Colonel Baillie, and then learned, apparently for the first time, that the stock of provisions, for the protection of which he had left Colonel Baillie's detachment to its fate, was barely sufficient for one day's consumpion; that he had not, therefore, by the sacrifice of so large a portion of his army secured the means of feeding the rest, and that, if he remained where he was, he should be surrounded by Hyder Ali's cavalry. He, therefore, resolved to proceed to Chingleput, where he hoped to find supplies; but on reaching it, after a harassing march, attended by the loss of a large portion of his stores and baggage, he was destined to the disappointment of learning that here, too, as at Conjeveram, one day's consumption was all that could be procured. At Chingleput he was joined by a considerable detachment from the westward, under Captain Cosby; but increase of numbers, where there was before a deficiency of food, was but an increase of weakness, and Sir Hector Munro was compelled to make a forced march to St. Thomas's Mount, only a few miles from Madras, where he arrived on the 14th of Sepremoved to a more secure position at Marmalong, with a river covering its front. Sir Hector Munro had quitted the presidency on

At Madras, fear, indignation, and sorrow. others prepared for flight to Bengal. joined in lamenting the brave men whose lives departing spirits were ungladdened by the reflection that the pouring out of their blood was the purchase of victory to their country. All joined in bitter condemnation of the counsel which had led to such fatal results. He The authorities of the presidency were in a state of inexpressible alarm, and a fast-sailing vessel was despatched to bear to Bengal the intelligence of their mismanagement and its consequences. The danger of the Carnatic was previously known at Calcutta, but the way in regard to it. When the fatal news of the destruction of Colonel Baillie's force and the retirement of Sir Hector Munro arrived, they were not without abundant employment for their time and resources. The Mahratta war was raging, and the proceedings of the Rajah of Berar were of a very equivocal character. He had sent an army into Cuttack ostensibly for the purpose of invading Bengal. It was pretended that this step had been taken solely for the purpose of maintaining appearances with the nizam and the authorities at Poona, and the governor-general, in consequence, had been induced to supply this force both with provisions and money. Still there was abundant ground for distrust, and, under circumstances of less alarm, the presidency of Madras would probably have been left to its own resources. But the emergency was great, and was so felt at Calcutta. It was resolved, therefore, to assist Madras with the immediate advance of fifteen lacs of rupees, and with reinforcements of troops, both European and sepoy, as soon as possible. Sir Eyre Coote was also invited to proceed to Madras to take the command of the army, and he forthwith departed for that purpose. These measures were accompanied by another, which only very extraordinary circumstances could justify. The governor-general and council determined to suspend Mr. Whitehill from the office of governor of Madras, on the grounds of disobedience to the superior government in various matters connected with the negotiations with Basalat Jung, and more especially in the nonrestoration of the Guntoor circar, in compliance with the orders of the governor-general and . The restoration had been delayed on various grounds, but more especially because a On the 15th, the English army lease of the circar for a term of years had been granted to the Nabob of Arcot; but the circar had been relinquished before the resolution of suspending Mr. Whitehill was adopted the 25th of August—twenty days only had by the governor-general and his council, though passed before his return to St. Thomas's not sufficiently long for them to become aware Mount; but within that brief space, how much of the fact. There had been, however, enough pleasure; and had the governor of Bengal management of his French officers. At the been more lenient, Mr. Whitehill's hold of the end of six weeks two practicable breaches were reins of power would not have been greatly made, and on the 31st October the place was lengthened. The date of his suspension by simultaneously assaulted by two columns; one the governor-general and council preceded that under Hyder Ali's son, Tippoo Sultan—the of his dismission from the service by the Court of Directors by exactly three months. His incompetency as a governor needs no proof, and charges far more serious than mere incompetency were freely made against him. In truth, for several years preceding this period, garrison retired to the citadel, the spot where the most monstrous corruption appears to have constead at Malers, and the entire time of the found. It was not have year destined to general to several the serious that the continuous contraction of the found. It was not have year destined to general the serious truth of the continuous contraction of the found. existed at Madras, and the entire time of the fame. It was not, however, destined to susprincipal servants of the Company seems to tain another fifty days' siege. have been employed in endeavouring to turn a brahmin, had been taken prisoner in the the current of dishonourable gain into their assault; but instead of being subjected to own coffers. Clive, in Bengal, had acquired the hardships and insults inflicted by Hyder imperial wealth, but he had never sacrificed Ali on his European prisoners, he was treated the interests of his country to its acquisition, with extraordinary consideration, and declared Even among those who followed him there to be invested with the same office under was found some decent attention to current Hyder Ali which he had recently held under business, and some regard to the preservation the nabob of Arcot. The desired effect folof the Company's authority and dominion, lowed; the pliant brahmin readily renounced But at Madras, for some years, there is reason his allegiance to his former master, and ento believe that to carn the wages of corruption tered cordially into the objects of his new one, was the sole employment of many of the Com-By his influence over the native troops form-pany's servants, and that the pursuit of their ing the garrison, such a spirit was generated private interests was never shackled or im- as left to the officers who commanded them peded for an instant by the elightest regard no choice but to surrender; and the possession to those of the Company or their country, of the citadel of Arcot thus crowned the cap-The intriguing Mahomet Ali impoveri-hed ture of the town. himself by purchasing the services, or pre- Two days after its surrender Sir Eyre Coote tended services, of Europeans; and among the arrived at Madras. He took his seat in counservants of the Company, as well as beyond cil, and the letter from Bengal announcing their circle, he was so fortunate as to find the suspension of Mr. Whitchill, as well as their circle, he was so fortunate as to find the suspension of Mr. Whitchill, as well as many ready to accept with thanks his gold or another entering into the reasons for that act, his bonds. His army was ever inefficient and mutinous for want of pay, but his European mently against the exercise of the authority parasites were rewarded with true princely of the government of Bengal, and called upon munificence. Lord Pigot opposed himself to his colleagues to support him, but with little the torrent of corruption, and it swept away his power. The usurped authority before which he fell yielded to that of the councillors sent consoled his chief by declaring that he did not out from England, and some of the members approve of his suspension, though he acknowout from England, and some of the members approve of his suspension, though he acknow-of the new government were, after no long ledged the power of the supreme council, and period, ignominiously dismissed from the ser-voted accordingly. This was all the encouragevice of the Company for acts believed to have ment afforded to the unfortunate governor; been corrupt. The moral atmosphere of and a majority of the council voted Mr. Smith, Madras appears at this time to have been the next senior servant, acting president. pestilential; corruption revelled unrestrained; More than three months had elapsed since and strong indeed must have been the power Hyder Ali entered the Carnatic, more than which could effectually repress it while Mahomet Ali had purposes to gain, and either to take the command of the army, and more money or promises to bestow. It is not than seven since his disastrous return to St. wonderful that, where public spirit and public Thomas's Mount; yet, with an enemy so decency were alike extinct, the government active and acute as Hyder Ali almost at the should have been neither wise nor strong. is a fact more calculated to excite surprise that been made for its defence. Nothing had been it should have been able to maintain itself- done towards adding to the remnant of an that amid the storms which raged around it, army which was left for service; and the seevery vestige of British dominion did not dis- vere loss which had been sustained by the appear from the coast of Coromandel.

of delay to justify the expression of their distinguishing, and erected batteries under the The governor,

It gate of the presidency, no preparation had destruction of Colonel Baillie's corps was aggra-After the defeat of Colonel Baillie, Hyder vated by daily desertions; the despondency Ali had resumed the siege of Arcot. The for-tifications of this place were good, but not perfect. Hyder Ali commenced a series of field artillery was useless for want of carriages, the construction of which was only just com-|and the English were in undisputed possession mencing; while the supply of beasts of draught and burden was inadequate, and of the few which were ready for service, but a small portion were fit for it. Provisions were so scarce, that the troops in camp could with difficulty procure a supply from day to day; and Hyder Ali's cavalry prowled over the country within five miles of Madras. Application was made to the nabob of Arcot; he answered that he had neither men, money, nor influence, but trusted to the Company for everything. Sir Eyre Coote found, consequently, that he had proceeded to Madras not merely to take the command of the army there, but also to make the requisite preparations to enable him to possess an army to command. Happily it was the rainy season, and this circumstance afforded a reasonable excuse for the troops remaining in their quarters. Time for preparation was thus afforded, without necessarily revealing how much it was needed.

The interval thus gained was well employed, as far as circumstances would admit, and on the 30th December, Sir Eyre Coote called a council of war, to deliberate on the plan of It consisted, in addition to the operations. commander-in-chief, of Sir Hector Munro, General Stuart, and Lord Macleod. result of their deliberations was, a unanimous opinion that the army should march in relief of certain garrisons which were severely pressed by the enemy; and this object being accomplished, return to Madras. One of the garrisons proposed to be relieved, that at Amboor, surrendered before the English army was able to take the field, which was not till the 17th January. On the 19th, Sir Eyre Coote succecded in relieving Chingleput, in which only fifteen days' provisions remained. The fort of Carangoly, in the occupation of Hyder Ali, y about thirteen miles to the south-west, d Sir Eyre Coote having been led to believe hat the enemy were quitting it, and carrying off the store of provisions, resolved to make an attempt to relieve them from their charge. For this purpose, at midnight on the 20th of within musket-shot of the ramparts, it was January, a detachment of one thousand men, under Captain Davis, was despatched, the and that the gates were shut. main body following some hours after. The tenant Flint halted, and demand intelligence, however, under which the force had been detached, was erroneous, and so far from the place being deserted, Captain Davis found the garrison perfectly ready to receive him. He determined, notwithstanding, to execute his orders; and the place being unprovided with a draw-bridge, a twelve-pounder was rapidly run up to the first gate, which, at the second discharge, was Lieutenant Flint advanced to the conference blown open, so as to allow passage for a single with four sepoys only, and, after the usual presented themselves, and these were ulti- from Mahomet Ali; but added, that he posmately forced, though with greater difficulty, sessed that which under the circumstances the assailants being during the whole period was to be considered as equivalent—the order of operation exposed to the enemy's fire from of his own government, written in communicaabove. The third gate being carried, the gar-tion with the nabob. rison escaped by ladders on the opposite side, much lower estimate of the value of the docuof Carangoly. The loss of the victors was severe; but the effect of so brilliant a stroke at the opening of the campaign was highly beneficial, more especially after the shadow which had so recently passed over the power of the British arms. One main object of the attack was also secured, in the capture of a quantity of grain. Wandowash was about twenty-three miles further, and this was the next object of anxiety. When Hyder Ali entered the Carnatic he found no great difficulty in obtaining possession of the forts, where the officers of Mahomet Ali had the actual command. A short negotiation with the killadar saved a long siege. To avert such consequences, English officers, with small bodies of Company's troops, were despatched to various places, and among others to Wande-The officer to whom the charge of defending this place was allotted was Lieutenant Flint, who arrived before it with a force of about a hundred men. Having ascertained that the place was still occupied by Mahomet Ali's troops, he sent a message to the killa-dar announcing his approach. The killadar answered that the British officer would be fired at if he should come within range of the The guns. Not deterred by this threat, Lieutenaut Flint persevered, and at the verge of the esplanade met a picquet sent to stop him. The native officer representing that he could not be permitted to pass, Lieutenant Flint answered that the officer must have misapprehended his orders, which could only have been to stop the approaching party till satisfied that they were friends, of which there could no longer be any doubt; and he succeeded in shaking the faith of the officer in his own conviction of the meaning of his orders, so far as to prevail on him to seek an authoritative explanation of them. In the meantime the English party continued to advance, all messages of warning, several of which followed the first, being met by Licutenant Flint with a further request for explanation. Arrived perceived that they were manned with troops, tenant Flint halted, and demanded admission for himself and a few attendants, to deliver a letter from the nabob to the killadar. the killadar refused; but, after some parley, agreed to receive the letter between the gate and the barrier of the fortress. Here he took his place on a carpet, attended, for state, by several men of rank, and, for protection, by thirty swordsmen and one hundred sepoys. Passing this, a second and a third gate compliments, avowed that he had no letter The killadar took a troops, led to the abandonment of further/master from the fate which he reemed deter-

attempts against the place.

Hyder Ali had been characteristically emologuipped bim for flight, "We will best them ployed in a variety of minor enterprises, of to-morrow; in the meanstale, mount your which the acquisition of booty formed one horse." The advice of the faithful media principal object. On bearing of the attack was followed, and Hyder Ale war soon at a on Chilambrum, he made a forced movement distance from the impensing danger. of a hundred miles in two days and a half. The Linglish army engaged on that day placed himself between the English army and amounted to about eight thousand men. The of a hundred miles in two days and a half, Cuddalore, and began to fortify a position not larmy of Hydre Ali was at least eight times more than three miles from the British engither number. The enemy had forty seven component, at the came thus covering the pieces of counce of heavy calibre; the Eng. whole country with his cavalry. The situa-lish guns were lighter, but rather to be notion of the English army was now most critici mercure, they were fifty five in norther. A cal; its possible destruction was contemplated, frault reheader from the Billish squares even by its own commander; and while part lopened her fire upon a mass of Hyder Alex or the equation under Sir Edward Hughes casalry when they nere watering, and the was to cover Cuddalore, the remainder was to broad-de vas fard to a d-stinguished community the operations of the army, and to mander and a considerable number of men, receive, if necessary, the remaint that might This unexpected attack, magnified by the be left from defeat, should that result await fears of these upon whom it was made, led it. The battery-guns were embarked; and, them to believe and report that the fire of the divested of overy impediment to rapid motion, entire squalron was turned upon them, an attempt was to be made, either to turn or . The loca of the English in the fattle of the force the enemy's position, or to bring on a 11st of July was comparatively trilling. About general action.

July the British army had presed out of its framest be stated with certainty, but it is the onemy's works, and was not even aware of the truth is not exceeded.

the onemy's works, and was not even aware of their precise position, for Hyder Ali's cavalry renewed the siege of Wandewash. On the had closed all avenues of intelligence. After hight of the 16th of July an attempt was marching about a mile and a half, the works under to earry the place by an exaltic at all precises closely distinguishable and Sie Erral precisits. It follows seek address at the course of the first of the place by an exaltic at all precises closely distinguishable and Sie Erral precisits. It follows seek address at the became clearly distinguishable, and Sir Eyre accessible points. It falled: each column, as Coots spent considerable time in a careful it approached, was received with a discharge of the English, which was made in two attempts had already experienced. On the columns. The battle raged for six hours, and 18th of July Sir Eyre Coote arrived at Caranovery inch of ground was fiercely contested, goly, on his way to effect a junction with a "Every individual in the Company's service," detachment which had arrived from Bengal; says one chronicler of the battle, "fought as and on the same day Tippee Sultan decamped if the fate of the day had depended on his from Wandewash, leaving the garrison the single efforts." Their energy met its reward employment of destroying a number of works in a brilliant victory. At four o'clock the which had been constructed with vast labour enemy's line gave way, and a precipitate before the design retreat followed. Hyder Ali had throughout been entertained. the day viewed the battle from a small emi-preparations for intercepting Sir Eyre Coote nonce, where, sented cross-legged on a low by the route which it was expected he would stool, he witnessed the gradual yielding and take. The British general avoided them by ultimate flight of his vast army. That which taking another road, which enabled him to he saw was so much at variance with that arrive safely at Pulicat, where he was joined which he had anticipated, that he could by the expected reinforcement. scarcely believe his senses; and at last, when some of his followers suggested that it was unable to attempt either of two objects of time to move, the intimation was met by a great importance, the relief of Vellore or the torrent of that vulgar abuse which always siege of Arcot. Tripassore, a fortress of some constituted the staple of Hyder Ali's ele-importance, seemed to offer an easier acqui-

Coole's belief, a large number of regular Jeremony when danger was at hand, saved his mined to invite. Seizing the feet of the chief, During the inactivity of the British army, the forced on his suppers, observing as he thes three hundred was the total amount of loth At seven o'clock on the morning of the let; killed and your led. The less of the enemy

His army was during this of graps, and irretrievable confusion followed, period exposed to a distant but continuous Orders to renew the attempt at escalade on uncounde, but the English artillery did not the ensuing day produced indications of mutora a single shot. The necidental discovery tiny, the moral influence of Hyder Alia late a road which Hyder Ali had made for defeat coming in aid of the discouragement one purpose of his own, facilitated the attack occasioned by the failure which Tippoo's before the design of attack by escalade had Hyder Ali had made

Thus strengthened, Sir Lyre Coote was still A groom whose long service had sition, and on the 19th of August he appeared conferred on him the privilege of disregarding before it. On the morning of the 22nd, a appeared, proposing a surrender, upon terms rendering its services beneficial. Sir Eyre that had previously been offered, but which Cooto returned, and on the 27th of September, were now refused, and unconditional surrender within a quarter of an hour demanded. The instant after the answer was despatched, it great degree by surprise. The loss of the was reported that large bodies of the enemy was believed to be not less than five were in sight, and on reconnoitering, the thousand, that of the English was not more advanced guard of Hyder Ali's army was than a hundred. By sacrificing a large numperceived in full march. There was now not ber of his cavalry in charges having no object a moment to lose—Sir Eyre Coote issued but to gain time to secure the guns, Hyder orders to storm instantly; and the troops had Ali was enabled to carry off nearly all his just emerged from the trenches, when the flag of truce returned with the declaration of surrender, and the assailants ascended the breach without opposition. On perceiving this, the enemy withdrew. The question which had protracted the surrender was, whether the garrison should or should not be prisoners of this battle, principally occupied in endeavours of the process of the means of subsistence and one garrison should or should not be prisoners of the process of the means of subsistence and one garrison should so them prisoners of the means of subsistence and one garrison should so the prisoners of the means of subsistence and one garrison should so the prisoners of the means of subsistence and one garrison should so the prisoners of the means of subsistence and one garrison should so the prisoners of the means of subsistence and one garrison should so the prisoners of the means of subsistence and one garrison should so the prisoners of the means of subsistence and one garrison should so the prisoners of the process of the means of subsistence and one garrison should so the prisoners of the means of subsistence and one garrison should so the prisoners of the means of subsistence and one garrison should so the prisoners of the means of subsistence and the prisoners of the means of the me but to provide food for one thousand four tinually misled on this and other points by hundred men was an additional difficulty, false intelligence. Late in November it rowhich the exhausted state of the British commissariat was little able to bear. Sir Eyre Coote proposed to Hyder Ali to exchange them for an equal number of British troops; but the Mysorean chief did not set on his garrison at Tripassore sufficient value to induce him even to wish to preserve their lives. In answer to Sir Eyre Coote's proposal, he said, "The men taken at Tripassore are faithless and unworthy; they know that they dare not approach me; they are your prisoners, and I advise you to put every one of them to death speedily.

Hyder Ali had taken up the same fortunate position which he had formerly occupied when opposed by Sir Hector Munro, and there, on the 27th of August, a battle was fought, the result of which was, that the enemy were driven from their position, and the English left in possession of the field. But the victory thereupon claimed by the English was not very decisive, and the claim is contested by the Mysoreans, who allege the battle to have been a drawn one. It rather tended to restore to the enemy a portion of the confidence which had been lost by the battle of the 1st of July; and when, two days after the engagement, Sir Eyre Coote returned to Tripassore, he did not possess a day's provisions for his fighting men, while the non-military persons attached to the camp had been without food for two days. Under these dispiriting circum-stances, Sir Eyre Coote, "feeling the con-viction," says Colonel Wilks, "that he was wasting his large store of character and what little remained of life, by continuing in command of troops unprovided with all but arms, proceeded to the presidency to represent the inutility of keeping together an army in-capable, for want of stores, of effecting anything, and to express his own desire to be relieved from the command of it. A new governor, Lord Macartney, had arrived at Madras; his advice prevailed on the veteran Ali had not prospered. The native chiefs breach having been effected, a flag of truce bility of keeping the army together, and The result had left them prisoners; to procure the means of subsistence, and conturned into cantonments, near Madras,

The English were now at war with the Dutch as well as the French. Sadrass and Pulicat, both Dutch possessions, had been taken soon after the arrival of Lord Macartney, and to these were added, in October 1781, the more important settlement of Negapatam. This capture was effected by a military force under the command of Sir Hector Munro, aided by the fleet under Sir Edward Hughes. The army commanded by Sir Hector Munro included a detachment under Colonel Braithwaite, which had been employed with some success in Tanjore. Towards the close of the year, Trincomalee and Fort Ostenburgh, Dutch possessions in Ceylon, were added to the conquests of the English.

Sir Eyre Coote had proposed to proceed to Bengal, to concert, if possible, with the governor-general, some plan for relieving the army from the embarrassments and privations which deprived it of efficiency and wasted its energy in an unremitting search after food. The state of his health, too, which had sunk under the fatigues to which he had been subjected, suggested the expediency of change; but the dangers which threatened Vellore, and the necessity of relieving it, determined the general to remain to perform this duty in person. He rejoined the army on the 2nd of January. On the 5th he was seized with apoplexy, and remained insensible two hours. He recovered sufficiently to be able to march the next day, and on the 11th arrived with supplies under the walls of Vellore; this being the very day which had been declared by the commandant to be the last to which he could protract the defence unless relieved. Sir Eyre Coote commenced his return to Madras on the 13th, and arrived there on the 16th, after encountering some opposition from Hyder Ali, which was promptly overcome.

On the coast of Malabar the cause of Hyder soldier to make further trial of the practical exerted themselves vigorously, and the

of referring to Sir Eyre Coote. The English | manded by Colonel Humberstone, being part general wished the English prisoners in the of that despatched from England under General custody of Hyder Ali to be included in the Meadows, had landed at Calicut. They joined exchange; but this proposal, it is believed, the troops previously under the command of was rejected by M. Suffrein. To whatever Major Abington, and Colonel Humberstone cause, however, the failure is attributable, it took the command of the whole. is certain the negotiation ended without any forcement had been destined to assist in the arrangement being completed. M. Suffrein operations in progress on the eastern side of thereupon landed his prisoners at Cuddalore, India and at Ceylon; but the officers, with and deliberately transferred them to Hyder that independence of authority which was not Ali, by whom they were marched in chains to Mysore. M. Suffrein was not ignorant of the has been described. Some success at first at-fate to which he consigned his wretched tended the operations of this force; but it prisoners. Several of his countrymen, greatly to their honour, interposed their endeavours to shake the determination of the French ndmiral, by depicting the horrors to which Hyder Ali's English prisoners were subjected. Their efforts were fruitless, and M. Suffrein doomed his prisoners to captivity in Mysore, and his own character to universal reprobation. "The whole civilized world," says Colonel Wilks, "must unite in its abhorrence of delivering to the custody of a barbarian notorious for his contempt of" the customary laws of war among civilized nations, "prisoners entitled to honourable treatment from an honourable enemy.'

Sir Eyre Coote's health was now too much shaken to permit of his continuing longer in the state of mental and corporeal excitement in which he had been placed since his arrival on the coast of Coromandel. In aggravation of the toils of war, he had been engaged in a avert confusion, it was important to conceal series of disputes with the governor of Madras. his death till his successor was on the spot to Sir Eyre Coote had been invested by the government of Bengal with extraordinary powers, very properly entrusted, with reference to sent from the camp under an escort in a some of the parties in the government of manner similar to that in which valuable Madras, but which the general was disposed to maintain pertinaciously, and somewhat the state went on as usual, and inquirers after offensively, against the claims of Lord Macariney, a man neither tainted with the corruption in which his immediate predecessors were steeped, nor deficient, as they had been, in ability for his high office. The governor was greatly annoyed; but, having much the advantage of his opponent in point of temper, no direct breach took place. On the contrary, Lord Macartney invariably treated the general with the most punctilious respect, though he to assume their power in the name of Hyder occasionally suffered some fragments of blame Ali's second son, a young man of weak into escape him, clothed, however, in the most tellect, in whose hands empire would have courtier-like terms. ventured to act without consulting the commander-in-chief. He thus acted in the attack in irons; the belief that Hyder Ali still lived able to his judgment. But such insubordinal sented as the consequences of his personal tion was very disagreeable to Sir Eyre Coote, orders. The army marched in the direction of manner which would have rendered the main- of Hyder Ali occupied its accustomed place, tenance of a governor at Madras a piece of care being taken to restrain too close approach, useless expense and pageantry. These broils lest the repose of the royal patient should be were suspended by the departure of Sir Eyre disturbed and his recovery impeded by noise Coote for Bengal, the command of the army or interruption. At length the illusion was devolving on General Stuart.

then unusual in India, took the course which tended the operations of this force; but it was, after a time, compelled to make a rapid retreat before the army of Tippoo Sultan. Colonel Humberstone returned to the coast with about three hundred men, the remnant of one thousand with which he had landed a short time before. Colonel Macleod had been sent by Sir Eyre Coote to take the command, and he resisted a night attack on his position by Tippoo Sultan with spirit and success. Further attacks were apprehended, and Sir Edward Hughes, who now appeared off the coast with his squadron, joined Colonel Maclead with a reinforcement of four hundred and fifty Europeans, when circumstances were unexpectedly changed by the sudden departure of Tippoo Sultan to the eastward. This retrograde movement was caused by the receipt of intelligence of the death of Hyder Ali, who closed his ruffian life at an age not falling short by many years of that of Aurungzebe. To maintain his claim. The body was accordingly deposited in a chest filled with aromatics, and plunder was conveyed. All the business of though extremely weak, he was in a state of slow but progressive amendment. Of the few persons entrusted with the secret, one only, named Mahomed Ameen, proved faithless. This person, who commanded four thousand horse, formed a project, with some others, to take off by assassination those who provisionally administered the government, and Occasionally, too, he been but an empty name. The plot was detected; the conspirators seized and sent off on Negapatam, the result of which was honour-being encouraged by these acts being reprewho was disposed to exercise his powers in a Tippoo Sultan's advance, and the palanquin dispelled by the arrival of Hyder Ali's suc-Early in the year 1782, a British force, com-cessor, who assumed the sovereignty which vigorous blow, but it was not improved. government pressed upon General Stuart the carried, and several of their guns taken. expediency of the immediate march of the the day on which this conflict took place, the army; but the answer of the general was, fleet under M. Suffrein made its appearance, that he did not believe that Hyder Ali was and a few days afterwards, having received on dead, and if he were, the army would be ready board twelve hundred men from the force for action in proper time. The recommendation to march was repeated, and General fleet took place. The fight was maintained Stuart then declared himself astonished that with much spirit, and closed at night in the there could be so little reflection as to talk of accustomed manner; both parties being seundertakings against the enemy in the actual verely crippled, while neither had gained any state of the army and the country. Thus was decided advantage. On the following day Sir opportunity thrown away: when it was lost, the army was put in motion. On the 15th but in vain, and being unable, from the state January, thirteen days after the arrival of of his ships and the want of water, to remain Tippoo Sultan in his father's camp, and his where he was, he reluctantly bore away for unopposed accession to the government, the English army made its first march, for the purpose of conveying provisions to Tripassore, its first intermediate depôt; and it was not till thirty-four days after the arrival of Tippoo Sultan, and sixty days after the death of Hyder Ali, that any step of importance was taken towards the attainment of the objects of the campaign.

General Stuart was well disposed to assume loss. the extraordinary powers which had been exercised by Sir Eyre Coote; but he had no pretence for claiming them, and Lord Macartney was naturally indisposed to yield to his desire for absolute authority. He accordingly assumed the direction of all military measures, leaving to the general only the duty of executing them. In one of the plans most early acted upon, both the governor and General Stuart concurred. It was that for destruction of the forts of Carangoly and the government of Bengal, and by almost

Two events now occurred, calculated to dispirit the English and give confidence to their enemies. Sir Eyro Coote, having improved in health, returned to Madras in the Company's armed ship Resolution, which bore also proceeded to execute them with promptness, a large supply of money. Towards the close almost amounting to precipitation. Bednore of the voyage, the Resolution was classed surrendered on terms; Mangalore, and some during two days and nights by a French ship other places, also yielded on capitulation; but of M. Bussy, to take the command of the to treachery. French troops in India, accompanied by rain- Bednore was retained by the English about awaited him with an extraordinary affectation | Cuddalore : M. Bussy took his on a spot not of humility and grief.

The death of Hyder Ali afforded a favourable opportunity to the English for striking a tacked by the English on the 13th of June, far distant, and began to erect field works with The with success, part of the French works being Edward Hughes sought to renew the battle, the Madras roads. M. Suffrein now returned the twelve hundred men who had been furnished by M. Bussy, and landed from the fleet two thousand four hundred more. Thus strengthened, the French general, on the 25th of June, made a vigorous sortie with his best troops. The attack on the English trenches was pushed with vigour, but not a single point was forced, and the French sustained a heavy

A brief retrospect of the progress of the war on the western side of India, during the year 1783, will now be expedient. On the news of the advance of Tippoo Sultan, the government of Bombay had despatched General Mathews with a force for the relief of Colonel Humberstone, at Paniani. Sultan had withdrawn before his arrival, and several places of some importance fell, almost without resistance, into the hands of the English. On becoming acquainted with the andewash; a proceeding severely condemned death of Hyder Ali, the government of Bombay sent positive orders to General Mathews very individual who has passed a judgment to discontinue all operations on the coast, and make an immediate push for Bednore. According to almost invariable practice, the general and the government under which he acted took different views. He protested against the orders which he had received, but of the line. The anxiety of the general kept a few it was necessary to carry by the sword. him constantly on deck, where the excessive Among the latter was Anantpore, where the heat of the day and the heavy damps of the English assailants were accused of having night, combined with the agitation consequent acted with great barbarity. A large part of on the circumstances of the voyage, gave to the enormities ascribed to them were absohis enfeebled frame a shock from which nature lutely false; a portion, which seems, unhapwas unable to recover. The ship arrived in pily; to be true, is ascribable to a conflict of safety at Madras, and two days afterwards Sir authorities, arising out of the unsettled cir-Eyre Coote expired.

The other event referred to was the arrival English to believe that they were subjected forcements from the Isle of France. General three months. Tippoo Sultan returned from Struct had taken up a position to the south of the Carnatic with a force which General

Mathews was in no condition to resist; and Burgoyne, the second officer in rank, declared on the 3rd of May the English garrison that he should obey the orders of General marched out of Bednore, on conditions die- Stuart. The dispute was cut short by the tated by the conqueror. Tipped Sultan found a pretext for violating, taining him as a prisoner till an opportunity and having charged the English officers with offered for his proceeding to England. It is enriching themselves by the plunder of the remarkable that the officer against whom the public treasury, he marched them off in irons government of Madras felt necessitated to to distant places.

The next effort of Tippoo Sultan was directed to the reduction of Mangalore. It was the revolutionary orders of the majority in ably defended by Colonel Campbell, and after council, by arresting the then governor of sustaining a protracted siege, was unexpectedly | Madras, Lord Pigot, relieved from a part of the besieging force by the arrival of news of the conclusion of peace with Tippoo Sultan, on the western side of between England and France. that the communication of this intelligence was deferred for ten days, during which the These arrangements were rendered ineffective siego was botly pressed. Tippoo Sultan was by the most scandalous evasions on the part bewildered by the loss of his European friends, and not knowing what to do, consented to an armistice extending to Mangalore, Onore, and the British forts in Malabar.

On the eastern side of India, the intelligence of peace in Europe arrived immediately after the unsuccessful sally made by M. Bussy explain, nothing effective was done. on the English. But peace between the con-flicting authorities at Madras there was none. General Stuart, always auxious to possess the extensive powers enjoyed by his predecessor, larton should be placed under his orders. by these contradictory instructions - one set without inflicting on him any wrong. require his services if they were not necessary. But the conduct of General Stuart, on this offence at the presidency, and he was summoned to repair thither to explain or justify his disobedience. He minifested no more alacrity in obeying this than former orders from the same authority, but at last proceeded to Madras, where the various points of dispute were fiercely discussed. Finally, the governor proposed the dismissal of the general, and the other members of committee con-The denounced officer, however, avowed his determination to retain the com-

These conditions government arresting General Stuart, and deadopt a measure so severe, should have been the same who, some years before, had executed

By the terms of the armistice concluded It is said India, arrangements were made for the periodical supply of Mangaloro with provisions. of the besiegers, who continued moreover to carry on their works without respect to the engagements subsisting between them and the Relief was anxiously expected in Mangalore from Bombay; but from some causes which it is difficult satisfactorily to supinones has been ascribed to respect for an article in the preliminaries between Kingland and Franco, in which it was stipulated that four months should be allowed to the bellihad requested that a corps under Colonel Ful- | gerent powers of Hindostan to accode to the pacification. The government of Madras gave The application was complied with roluc inclice of this article to Tippod Sultan's political tantly, and the general was enjoined not to agent, and thought fit to date the commenceuse the discretionary power with which he was ment of the period of four months from the invested, except in case of urgent necessity. 2nd of August. A singular liberality was Such a case, he alleged, occurred, and he in-displayed in fixing this date, as Tippoo Sultan structed Colonel Fullarton to move towards had acknowledged being acquainted with the The government at the same time peace twenty four days before the 2nd of issued orders directing Colonel Fullarton to August, and it was believed that his knowmove in a different direction. Embarrassed ledge might have been dated ten days earlier emanating from the civil authority, which he is of little importance to argue when the four was at all times bound to obey; another from months allowed to the Indian belligerents for the chief military authority, who had a right consideration ought, in reason, to have comto command him in case of emergency—
Colonel Fullarton had only to make choice abstain from hostile proceedings—he disregarded alike the general stipulation contained violate the instructions of his government; in the preliminaries between England and and probably he did well, acting on the pre- France, and the special convention concluded sumption that General Stuart would not with himself. It was absurd to suppose that one party should be bound by conditions which the other set at mught—that the English were and various other occasions, had given great to abstain from means of defence as well as of offence during four months, while Tippoo Sultan was at liberty to propare, unchecked, measures for their destruction; but into this absurdity the British authorities on the western side of India fell. Even when the sacred four months expired, they were not prepared offectually to relieve Mangalore. On the day which, according to their own view, found them at liberty to act vigorously, they were unprovided with the means of succouring the place. On the 1st of December a squadron mand of the king's troops, notwithstanding was off Mangalore, but they were destitute of the decision of the government; and Sir John water, and all but one ship departed on that day; that solitary one, on board of which was to the ultimate expediency of advancing on Brigadier-general Maclood, following on the Seringapatam, where it was understood disafsequently thrown in, but they appear to have of Coimbatore. Here his progress was arrested passed under the provisions of the armistice by instructions from commissioners proceeding with Tippoo Sultan, which he was every hour to the court of Tippoo Sultan to negotiate. garrison became extreme. The salt meat was only to suspend his operations, but to abandon uncatable, the biscuit swarmed with vermin, and sea scurvy, the consequence of this loath-limits posseded by the English on the 26th of some and unwholesome food, raged throughout the preceding July. Such instructions were, the garrison. The sepoys had neither salt nor to say the least, prematurely given—they condiment of any kind; blindness, alleged to were founded on an assumption "that the condiment of any kind; blindness, alleged to proceed from the consumption of rice without constitut of arms appeared to have been disany antiseptic addition, seized vast numbers, turbed in partial instances by accidental cir-Two-thirds of the garrison were in hospital, eumstances, and without any authority from and it was not unusual for the men to drop government on either side," when it was down on parado in the valu endeavour to notorious that it had been agatematically vioshoulder arms: On the 23rd of January it lated by Tippee Sultan himself. It is inconseemed impossible longer to protract this state sistent with the ordinary duty of a soldier to of suffering with any adequate advantage, inquire whether he will obey lawful orders or Negotiation was opened: on the 26th, articles not, and to exercise a discretion which is not of capitulation were agreed upon, but not entrusted to him. Colonel Fullarton departed signed till the 30th. In the interval, Colonel so far from general rule as to determine, while Gordon arrived with two ships containing a yielding obedience to that part of his recent month's provisions. Had these arrived earlier, instructions which required him to suspend the siego might have been prolonged; but now further operations, to abstain from carrying the articles were agreed upon, though not into effect the remainder, and he expressed signed, and Colonel Campbell would not re-this intention to retain all his conquests till the cede from that to which his faith was pledged. receipt of further orders. In extenuation of The garrison were permitted to march to Tel-this irregularity, it is to be urged that he licherry with arms, accourrements, and the knew the orders which had been conveyed to honours of war. The gallant officer, who, after him to have originated either in a gross ignonobly defending for many months a place of no rance of facts or in gross weakness. great strength against a vast army, had, on The commissioners entered on their duties, its surrender, obtained for himself and his men and there was apparently not much difference terms rarely granted, did not long survive the in the views of the opposite negotiators. Mufatigues and anxiety to which he had been tual restitution was to be the basis of peace, but subjected: he died on the 23rd of March in o same year.

About the middle of October, Colonel Fulauton, who, after his march in the direction of General Stuart's army, had returned to the should in the first instance be restored; that southward, received intelligence of the insolent violation of the convention of Mangalore, and he in consequence moved on to Paligaut, with a view to effect a junction with a force commanded by General Macleod. Paligaut sustained a short and vigorous siege, but fell Mangalore had not yet fallen, and the agents suddenly and unexpectedly. Captain Maitland, being on duty in the trenches, took advantage should precede the release of the English of a heavy fall of rain to drive the enemy from the covered way, which was not palisaded; and pursuing the fugitives through the first and second gateway, the garrison were struck with panic and immediately surrendered.

The anticipated co-operation of General Macleod in the relief of Mangalore it was found could not be obtained. Tellicherry, which was relied upon for provisions and stores, could afford neither; the troops under General Macleod could not be furnished with field equipage in less than two months, and the state of the country presented insurmountable difficulties in the way of a rapid quently acted weakly. They resolved to enadvance. Colonel Fullarton had therefore to force the orders of the commissioners for the order in which the restitutions were to take place gave rise to much discussion. The English proposed that all places captured by the release of all the English prisoners should then follow; and, finally, on the English being satisfied that this condition had been faithfully executed, that exchanges of all places captured on the western coast should be made. of Tippoo Sultan demanded that its surrender prisoners, pledging their faith for the due ful-filment of the latter provision. The first commissioner, Mr. Sadleir, was ready to assent to this arrangement; the second, Mr. Staunton, had no such confidence in the good faith of Tippoo Sultan, and he refused to comply. In this situation, the question could only be decided by a reference to government, and its decision was most properly given in favour of the opinion of Mr. Staunton. At the same time, a third member, Mr. Huddleston, was added to the commission. In this instance the government acted wisely; they subse-They resolved to endetermine on a new course, and with a view Colonel Fullarton to abandon his conquests, and retire within the limits prescribed by treatment of the English prisoners by Tippoo his previous instructions. Colonel Fullarton Sultan. Hyder Ali had treated them with a oloyed. On his march he met the celebrated missionary, Swartz, who had been requested to assist the commissioners in the capacity of tan did not hesitate to employ direct means to an interpreter, and was on his way for the purpose of entering on this duty. Even this ringle-minded and peaceful man could not on the fatal day of Colonel Baillie's defeat; refrain from expressing his astonishment at the orders given to Colonel Fullarton. "And is the peace so certain," said he, "that you quit all before the negotiation is ended? The possession of these rich countries would have kept Tippoo in awe, and inclined him to reasonable terms. But you quit the reins, and how will you manage the beast !" The colonel could only answer, "I cannot help it." It yet remained for the government to bear wit- avenging them. ness against its own folly, credulity, and precipitancy, and this was done. Colonel Fullarton had not entirely fulfilled his former orders, when he received counter-orders, requiring him to retain possession of all that to multiply the points of difference. had not previously been given up, until he received further instructions.

Some inadequate supplies were sub-fection prevailed, he proceeded to the capital At length the distress of the These instructions required the colonel not all his conquests, and to retire within the

The commissioners had hitherto treated only with Tippoo Sultan's servants at a distance by that prince. This was opposed by Lord from their master. In their progress towards Macartney, and was never carried into effect, the camp of the Mysorean chief, they were Lord Macartney had, with much difficulty, subjected to every inconvenience and indignity obtained from the nabob of Arcot an assignwhich could be devised. They were conducted ment of the revenues of the Carnatic for the by routes almost impassable, and several of support of the war. This was disapproved by their camels perished. Their journey was so regulated as to keep pace with the progress of famine at Mangalore, and when only twenty miles distant from that place, they were met by a letter from the Sultan, informing them that, at the carne-t desire of Colonel Campbell, he had agreed to take charge of the fort. Arrived in the camp of the insolent Mahometan, the tent of each of the commissioners was graced by the erection of a gibbet in its front. Their communications with their countrymen in the ships lying in the roads were placed under restraint; and the commissioners learned that several British prisoners, inclu-ding General Mathews, had been murdered by the tyrant into whose power they had fallen. It was not unnatural that they should become apprehensive that the gibbets were crected with intentions beyond that of mero insult.

. It would be both tedious and useless to pursue the course of the negotiation through all its tortuous windings. It may suffice to say that, as the arrogance and insolence of Tippoo Sultan had been encouraged by the timid submission of the Madras government, so the indications of a bolder policy led to different results. On the 11th of May the long pending treaty was signed. It was based on the principle of a restitution of conquests, but no the office of governor-general. compensation was obtained for the atrocious cruelty which manifested an utter disregard to the preservation of their lives; Tippoo Suldeprive them of existence. Captain Rundey, who led the charge against Tippoo's guns Lieutenaut Fraver, one of that officer's staff; Lieutenant Sampson, a gallant officer, whose name is yet remembered among the Mahrattas; General Mathews, and many of the officers taken at Bednore, all perished in captivity, and not from natural causes. But the British government were too eager for peace to inquire rigidly into such matters, and too weak to protract hostilities in the hope of

Between the governor-general and Lord Macariney there had never been much cordiality of feeling, and the difficulties in which the government of Madras was placed tended governor-general had a plan for surrendering to the nizam the northern circars, in consideration of a body of cavalry to be furnished the government of Bengal, and the assignment ordered to be rescinded. Before these orders were received at Madras, orders of a contrary character arrived from the Court of Directors. The government of Bengal, however, stubbornly refused to yield, and Lord Macartney was equally immovable. The treaty with Tippoo Sultan afforded other grounds of difference. It was disapproved by the government of Bengal, among other reasons, because it did not include the nabob of Arcot; and a new ratification, declaring it to extend to that personage, was directed to take place. Lord Macartney again resisted; and had the governor-general possessed confidence in the stability of his own authority, some violent measures might have resulted from these disputes. But Hastings was now tottering in his seat—heavy charges were in circulation against him in England, and he had despatched an agent thither for the defence of his character and interests. The influence of Lord Marcartney at home appeared to be rising as that of Hastings was declining; he continued to exercise his authority without impediment, until, in consequence chiefly of the revocation of the orders of the Court of Directors relating to the assignment from Mahomet Ali, he voluntarily relinquished it, and was ultimately appointed to succeed to

CHAPTER XII.

DISPUTES WITH CHEYT SINGH, RAJAH OF BENARES - DANGER OF HASTINGS - TREATY WITH THE VIZIER OF OUDE-HASTINGS PROCEEDS TO LUCKNOW-HIS DEPARTURE FOR ENGLAND.

It is now necessary to return to the affairs of to clude payment altogether, he furnished part Bengal, for the purpose of adverting to some important acts of Hastings's government not hitherto noticed.

During the war waged with Meer Cossim and the Vizier of Oude, the English had received some support from the Rajah of Benares, named Bulwant Singh. His conduct had been sometimes regarded with suspicion; but, on the whole, it had afforded so much satisfaction, that it was deemed right to secure his peaceful possession of the country which he administered by a special provision in the treaty con-cluded with the vizier. On the death of Bulwunt Singh, the British government again interfered to procure a continuance of the zemindary to his son, Cheyt Singh; and this object was effected, the young rajah being subjected to the charge of a considerable present to the vizier, and a small increase of his annual tribute. On these conditions, the vizier granted sunnuds confirming Cheyt Singh in the rights exercised by his father. Subsequently, by virtue of a treaty concluded between the East-India Company and Azoff-al-Dowlah, the territories administered by Cheyt Singh passed into the hands of the former authority. New sunnuds were granted to Cheyt Singh by the punishment of the rajah might conveniently be British government, confirming him in the exercise of the powers and rights which he had viously held under the soubahdar of Oude, bject to the payment of the same amount of sute, and to an additional sum of about ninety thousand rupees levied under the title of nuzzerana.

When the war with France rendered it necessary for the Company's government to make additional preparations for defence, it was determined to call upon Cheyt Singh to contribute to the establishment of three battalions of sepoys, to be raised and maintained at his ex-The rajah did not object, and his vakeel at Calcutta proposed that the amount of the annual charge should be fixed at three This was deemed insufficient lacs of rupees. by the British authorities, who determined that the sum of five lacs was not excessive, and required that it should be paid without The rajah, in conformity with the usual practice of Oriental debtors, endeavoured to procrastinate, and the English resident was directed to assume a threatening tone; but, ultimately, that sum was paid as the first year's subsidy.

of the required sum, but declared himself unable to complete it. His inability was not removed until two battalions had been put in motion against him. He then paid the Lalance of the suisidy, as well as the military expenses incurred by his resistance. The proceedings of the third year differed little from those of the record. After the ordinary delays, a military force was ordered to advance, but the timely submission of the rajah rendered their presence unnecessary. In addition to the subsidy, the British government now demanded from Cheyt Singh the assistance of a body of cavalry, to be continued during the war. rajah did not comply, and fresh cause of irritation was thus created. Shortly afterwards the time arrived for demanding the fourth year's subsidy. It was reported and believed, that the rajah had inherited great wealth from his father, which he had secured in two strong fortresses, and to which he continued to make yearly additions. To these accumulations the eye of the governor-general was directed for a twofold purpose. He deemed the conduct of the minh contumncious and disaffected, and on these grounds deserving of punishment. combined with the relief of the necessities of the British government by the infliction of a large pecuniary fine; and this plan he resolved to adopt. Having secured the consent of his condjutors, he departed on a journey to Benares. At Buxar he was met by Cheyt Singh, with a large fleet of boats. Several interviews took place between the governor-general and the rajah, at one of which the latter placed his The governorturban on Hastings's lap. general, however, continued to prosecute his to the object, and he was required to consent journey to Benarcs, at which place he arrived on the 14th of August. Here he declined personal conference with the rajah, but despatched a letter to him, stating at length the grounds of the dissatisfaction of the British government, and requiring an answer. The answer, as must have been expected, was unsatisfactory, and Hastings chose to regard it as offensive. His next measure was a strong one. ordered the British resident, Mr. Markham, to proceed to the house of the rajah, and put him under arrest. The resident executed the order without difficulty, the rajah calmly submitting

While the governor-general was preparing to ' carry out the design to which the seizure of the The second year brought a fresh demand rajah's person was preliminary, he was infrom the British government, and fresh evasions formed that large bodies of armed men had aron the part of the rajah. After many attempts I rived from Ramnaghur, and had proceeded to the rajah's house. rainh consisted of two companies of grenadier sepoys, who were stationed in an enclosed square which surrounded the rajah's apart-By some extraordinary neglect, these troops had been sent without ammunition. To supply the want, another company of sepoys was subsequently despatched, but on their arrival they found their passage disputed by a multitude of armed men, who had surrounded the house and blockaded all the ave-The British party were thus unable to advance to the succour of the troops in the square, who were attacked by the rajah's men, and, being unprovided with the means of resistance, were speedily cut to pieces. In the confusion, the rajah left the house by a wicket which opened to the river, and by means of turbans tied together, descended the steep bank to a boat, which was waiting to convey him to the opposite shore. Those to whom he owed his escape followed him; and the company of British sepoys, who had arrived too late to aid their companions, took possession of the place where they had been slaughtered. The departure of Cheyt Singh's men in the train of their master delivered the governorgeneral and his attendants from apprehensions which it was by no means unreasonable to Had they proceeded to the governor-general's quarters, he and every Englishman with him must have fallen an easy prey. This catastrophe was averted, and the escape is probably to be attributed to the irregularity and disorder which marked the entire proceedings ending in the rescue of the rajah.

Hastings now found himself involved unexpectedly in actual warfare. An attack was sion of the fortress, planned upon Ramnaghur, one of the principal accordingly refused, under the orders of the strongholds of the rajah. This failed through governor-general, and the place finally surrenthe perversity of the commander of a detachment, who, by a premature and ill-judged movement, brought his party into a situation where, in the language of Hastings, they were "annihilated rather than defeated." In the mean time, Hastings became alarmed for his own position, which there was reason to believe was intended to be attacked. The opinion of a council of officers coincided with that of the governor-general, that retreat was desirable, and the party in consequence moved to Chun-The rajah continued to solicit peace, but Hastings did not condescend even to answer his communications.

At Chunarghur, however, he continued to be dreadfully distressed for money and provi-Supplies and reinforcements at length arrived, and after some minor successes, it was resolved to attack the fortresses of Cheyt Singh. Pateeta was taken by Major Popham by storm; and on the same day Major Crabb defeated a party who endeavoured to intercept his advance of loan for the use of government; but those to the pass of Sackroot, on which an attempt was to be made simultaneously with the attack | careful to place any part of it in danger. on Pateeta.

Cheyt Singh had not expected that the English would venture to attack him, and the almost to force an inquiry whether the public

The guard placed over the concurrent success of Major Popham and Major Crabb filled him with alarm. He fled in the direction of Bidzeghur, where a principal part of his treasure was deposited, and thither he was pursued by Major Popham. In the mean time the governor-general returned to Benares, to make arrangements for the administration of the country, a duty which it was declared Cheyt Singh had forfeited the right to perform. The zemindary was bestowed on the son of a daughter of Bulwunt Singh. His age was nineteen, and it might have been presumed that he would have been held competent to exercise the duties of his office in person. But from some cause which does not appear, this did not meet the views of the governor-general, and the actual management of the country was committed to the father of the new zemindar, under the title of Naib. Contemporary with these arrangements, the annual payment from the zemindar to the Company was considerably raised.

Major Popham advanced towards Bidzeghur, and on his approach Cheyt Singh withdrew, taking with him as much wealth as he could secure. His wife and mother remained, and in their names the fortress was defended with considerable resolution. A surrender was proposed, on condition of securing to the widow of Bulwunt Singh the possession of her property and the administration of a specified pergunnah. The latter condition was obviously objectionable; and as the rance claimed all the property within the place, alleging that her son had carried away all that belonged to him, compliance with the former would have left the captors nothing but the barren possession of the fortress. The conditions were dered on the single stipulation of personal protection to the prisoners. Some treasure, though far less than was expected, was found within the fortress; but no part of it was destined to recruit the Company's exhausted treasury. It was seized and appropriated by the military as prize. Major Popham, it is said, was not disposed to approve of this act, but he was overawed by the clamour of his officers. This was a serious disappointment to Hastings. He had calculated on raising a large sum by way of fine on Cheyt Singh—the resistance offered on behalf of the zemindar had rendered it necessary to incur expense in military operations, and when a portion of treasure was secured, it was diverted to private benefit, the finances of government being burdened instead of relieved by the operations in Benares. Foiled in the principal object of his visit to Benares, the governor-general sought to obtain an advance from the officers by way who had so promptly seized the spoil were too of his respect for the governor-general, which distance at which the troops were placed from was accepted. This, too, was applied to public purposes; but, at the same time, it afforded opportunity for the employment of a series of disguises and misrepresentations on the part of Hastings, for which, as the money was employed properly, though obtained dishonourably, it is difficult to find a motive, except in the governor-general's unconquerable love of mystery.

The spirit which Hastings manifested towards Cheyt Singh was so intensely bitter as

Hastings has been accused of intending to appropriate it to himself, but the evidence does not sustain the charge. The gift of the vizier, however, he certainly destined to his personal benefit, and, in this instance, he servants and adherents from honours and entered on the purpose which he had in view rewards to which they might reasonably aspire. in a manner far more direct than was usual In proof of the purity of his motives in conwith him. He did not advise the Court of senting to a reduction, Hastings appealed to Directors of the transaction until four months the facts that he was thereby diminishing the after it had taken place. A part of the sum only had then been paid, for the vizier's incurring the resentment of those injuriously treasury did not overflow with money. For affected by the arrangements, as well as of the remainder, bills had been given, the their long train of friends and connections, amount of which was eventually realized, The second article of the treaty, a amount of which was eventually realized, The second article of the treaty, after though tardily, and with difficulty. Having reciting that great distress had arisen to the stated the fact to the Court, and promised to vizier from the military power and dominion render a faithful account. Hastings without assumed by the individual account. render a faithful account, Hastings, without assumed by the jaghiredars, provided that the any preparation, or the suggestion of any vizier should be at liberty to resume such reasons in support of the request, coolly added, jaghires as he might find necessary, with a "If you shall adjudge the deposit to me, I reserve that, in all cases where the Company shall consider it the most honourable approbation and reward of my labours, and I wish to owe my fortune to your bounty." The gift of a hundred thousand pounds has not often been asked with so little ceremony. The application was not complied with.

The visit of the vizier to Hastings was, however, productive of more important results than the transfer of ten lacs of rupees from that prince to the Company, or their governorgeneral. A new treaty was concluded between the British government and the ruler of Oude. one main object of which was to relieve the latter from burdens which he declared himself unable to bear. His stipulated payments to the Company had fallen greatly into arrear; the maintenance of the British troops in Oude was thrown upon the government to which they belonged; and though the charge was regularly carried to the account of the vizier, there seemed little or no prospect of the respective entries ever being neutralized by a record of corresponding payments on the opposite Under these circumstances, the continuance of the British force in Oude to its existing extent was, not without reason, regarded by Hastings as desirable for neither party; the British government making an should be withdrawn. Other reasons were resident at Duckhow to dominate assigned by the governor-general in justification of this part of the treaty. He alleged, made and refused; but the refusal was softential that the by an offer to furnish two thousand the government to which they were responsible exempted the officers from due control, afforded opportunity for unwarrantable emoluments. and diffused the contagion of peculation and rapacity throughout the army. Further, he represented that the number of British officers, civil and military, at the court and in the service of the vizier, their vast influence and enormous emoluments, were not only injurious to the revenue and authority of the prince, but exposed the British nation and government to the envy and resentment of the people of the country, by excluding the vizier's native patronage of himself and his colleagues, and was guarantee, the amount of the net collection should, on the resumption of the lands, be paid in ready money to the dispossessed jaghiredar, through the British resident.

The third article related to Fyzoola Khan. This was the chief whose protracted resistance had for some time deferred the final termination of the Robilla war. More fortunate than some of his companions in arms, he obtained by treaty the grant of certain districts of considerable value, binding himself, in return, to retain in his service not more than five thousand troops, and in time of war to assist the vizier with two or three thousand, according to his ability. To this treaty Fyzoola Khan was very anxious to obtain the guarantee of the British government, and he finally succeeded. On the breaking out of the French war, the English sought assistance from Fyzoola Khan. Some was afforded, but not enough to meet their necessities or wishes, and the vizier was requested to demand from Fyzoola Khan the aid of five thousand horse. The answer of the chief was to the effect that his force consisted of only two thousand horse and three thousand foot; that the former were at the service of the British government, and that part of them were actually so employed; but that the three outlay which it could ill afford; the vizier thousand foot were wanted at home, and that adding to a debt, already large, which there without them the collections could not be was but little probability of being speedily made. The governor-general thought fit to It was therefore provided by the regard this answer as evasive, and, with the new trenty, that a portion of the British force concurrence of his council, directed the British one thousand foot; an offer which the instruc- vizier's long-cherished wish. It is true that tions of the British negotiator did not permit to the younger begum the good faith of the him to accept. The vizier, therefore, proposed British government had been pledged for the the resumption of the jaglire of Fyzoola protection of her property. In consideration Khan; and the third article of the treaty of of sums amounting to more than six hundred Chunarghur declared that the chief had, by thousand pounds, advanced by her to meet the his breach of treaty, forfeited the protection exigencies of her son, the Company had of the English; a declaration followed by a provision permitting the vizier, "when time should suit," to resume the jaghire, paying to the chief its value as recognized by the treaty, after deducting the charges of the troops which he stood "engaged to furnish by treaty," the amount of which was to be paid to the Company.

In quitting this subject it is only necessary to state, that Fyzoola Khan was not dispossessed of his dominions—that his military service was ultimately commuted for a pecuniary payment, on which occasion Hastings gave a true version of the treaty between the vizier and his dependant, and represented the assumed. great advantages of thus getting rid of "an her support in all the rights she possessed in article of a treaty, which was of such a tenor virtue of the treaty concluded between her and so loosely worded, that the vizier could and her son, under the guarantee of the Comnever have derived any real advantage from

it."

The fourth article of the new treaty with the vizier related to the withdrawal of the British resident from Furruckabad, and requires no notice here. All these articles were suggested by the vizier, and conceded for his grati-In return, the governor-general fication. demanded nothing, but offered to the vizier an abundance of good advice with respect to the reduction of unnecessary expense, and the regular and orderly management of his finances, to which the prince engaged to father and predecessor, or fraudulently approattend.

related to the general resumption of jaghires, Among those affected by it were two females ment; that they had encouraged the rebellion of high rank-one the mother of the reigning prince, the other his grandmother. These in other places. The first of these reasons is ladies were endowed with jaghires for their not very formidable. If the begum had really maintenance, which were now doomed to connor right to the wealth which she possessed, fiscation; thus leaving them dependant for their future support on the good pleasure of the vizier, or on the power and inclination of the British government to compel him to per-late. form his engagements. The begums knew the precluded by their own acts from taking character of their miserable relative too well advantage of it. to place any confidence in him, and the recent conduct of the governor general was not such of hostility to the English-rests on a vast as could lead them to entertain much respect mass of documentary testimony, the analysis for English faith.

were endowed, the begums possessed con-consists of hearsny evidence of the loosest and siderable treasure. The vizier had long coveted most unsatisfactory character, scarcely meritthe possession of this; and Hastings, feeling ing any sort of notice, and certainly far from that nothing could be more convenient to the sufficient to justify such a measure as the finances of the British government than a plunder of two women of high rank of all that transfer to the vizier of wealth which would immediately undergo a second transfer to the made to give importance to this evidence by treasury of Bengal in liquidation of his debt, the mode in which it was taken. It consisted strenuously recommended the execution of the solemnly guaranteed to her the full and entire enjoyment of her estates, effects, and jaghires. Subsequently to this agreement, both ladies had occasion to seek the protection of the British government against their relation, and its interference was afforded in a manner which evinced a just appreciation of the respective positions of all the parties concerned. In favour of the elder begum, who had no claim of right upon the Company's government, the resident at Oude was directed simply to remonstrate. With regard to the younger begum, whose property that government had bound itself to defend, a higher tone was The resident was directed to afford pany. Notwithstanding this treaty-notwithstanding the subsequent formal recognition of its binding force, Hastings had, by an equally solemn instrument, consented to the deprivation of the begum of her jaghire, and to the confiscation of her movable property. It was necessary to find reasons for the spoliation. The two following are those assigned by Hastings and his friends:—First, that the wealth of the younger begum belonged of right to the reigning prince; that it had either been improperly alienated from him by his printed by his mother, and that her retention The second article of the treaty, that which of it was at variance with the Mahometan law. Secondly, that both the begums were actuated of Cheyt Singh, and had excited disturbances how came the British government to recognize the existence of her right, and formally engage to defend it? The objection, if valid, came too The governor-general and council were

The second head of justification—the charge of which would fatigue without enlightening In addition to the jaghires with which they the reader. It must suffice to observe, that it sworn before the chief justice of the Supreme | regiment, he directed the march of four, with Court of Calcutta and the judge of the Sudder a field train; but the resident was apprehen-Dewanny Adawlut. that the two titles do not designate two per- would be disagreeable to the vizier, and on sons: Sir Elijah Impey, charged with the his suggestion its march was countermanded. administration of justice in two courts subsist- In the mean time Mr. Middleton applied himing under two different authorities, found self to quicken the flickering energy of the time, notwithstanding, to exercise magisterial vizier, and at length obtained his authority to functions which do not appear to have devolved seize the kellah at Fyzabad, in which the upon him in virtue of his connection with younger begum resided. This was effected either. His stormy contests with the governorgeneral lulled into the most soothing calm, he was now ready to lacquey the heels of the troops; the force which had been collected for same governor-general, for no higher purpose than that of hearing affidavits sworn at a place drawing up in front of another house belongwhere this leviathan of judicial dignity could ing to the elder begum, to which the younger not, either as a King's or Company's judge, pretend to any jurisdiction. The plan origithereupon issued an order, requiring all armed nated with the chief justice himself. Hastings men, except his own troops, to depart beyond was preparing a narrative to vindicate his the precincts of the town, under pain of being own conduct in relation to Benares and Oude. Tenderness for the reputation of the governorgeneral induced the learned judge to suggest, with more zeal than politeness, that the people younger begum surrendering themselves, the of England would not believe Hastings on his town was soon evacuated by their armed folown word, and that it would be advisable to lowers. After an interval of a few days, an support his statement by affidavits. The arrangement was made, the begum undertaking governor-general thereupon inquired whether to surrender all the treasure which had belonged Sir Elijah Impey would receive the necessary to the former vizier. affidavits, and the ever-ready judge promptly appear generally to have procured the deposi-repugnance with which it was undertaken. tions, the chief justice swore the party offering To quicken its progress, the two confidential them, and thus was this remarkable body of advisers of the begum were put in irons and evidence collected.

had thus prepared to justify was, however, more tardy than he had either wished or its terms, the usual proportion of oriental expected. From timidity, or some other cause, delay and evasion was not wanting. After the vizier was slow in carrying out the views which he appeared to entertain in common to the fears of the prisoners, they were removed with the governor-general. On the part of to Lucknow. The following letter was adthe begums there was neither timidity nor dressed to the officer of the guard there by impending alienation of their property. They Nabob having determined to inflict corporal prepared to follow up remonstrance by resist- punishment upon the prisoners under your ance; and so formidable did their preparations guard, this is to desire that his officers, when appear to the British resident, that he rethey shall come, may have free access to quested a regiment of sepoys to support the the prisoners, and be permitted to do with vizier's officers. It is here necessary to observe, them as they shall see proper; only taking that Mr. Bristow, who had been reluctantly care that they leave them always under your re-appointed to the office of resident at Oude, charge." It is not clear whether the infliction re-appointed to the office of resident at Oude, in consequence of the compact with Francis, of direct torture was actually intended, or had been again removed, and his place supplied by Hastings's attached follower, Mr. Middleof the Court of Directors; but such acts on money. the part of the governor-general had become ever acted upon, and as the prisoners do not so frequent, that they scarcely call for notice, appear to have complained of any severities except where it is necessary to enable the exceeding those that they had previously sufreader properly to understand the events pre- fered, the presumption is, that imprisonment, sented to him.

designs of the vizier should not miscarry for able to find the name of a servant of the British want of a sufficient force, proposed to answer government attached to a letter avowedly the call of Mr. Middleton with an extraordi-sanctioning the use of torture as the means of nary degree of liberality. Instead of one extorting money. Nor can it even be denied

It will be recollected sive that the approach of so numerous a force without bloodshed by a regiment of British sepoys, supported by a portion of the vizier's the defence of the dwelling ratiring, and lady had previously withdrawn. The vizier attacked. Some delay took place in yielding obedience to the order; but the two principal eunuchs attached to the establishment of the

The process of surrender commenced, but The resident and his assistant proceeded with a tardiness proportioned to the restrained from food. To relieve themselves, The execution of the design which Hastings these persons entered into an engagement for the payment of a large sum; but, in fulfilling various attempts to extort payment by appeals They remonstrated against the Mr. Johnson, the acting resident:-"The whether this letter was only a new expedient to work upon the fear of the miserable prisoners, This was in open disregard of the orders in the expectation of drawing forth a little more There is no proof that the order was fetters, and deprivation of food, constituted The governor-general, resolved that the the sum of their sufferings. Still it is lament-though opposed in council, he succeeded in carrying this point also. On the 17th of February he departed on his journey, and, passing through Benares, had an opportunity of witnessing the wretched state of the districts formerly administered by Cheyt Singh. The manager first appointed to act for the rajah had been dismissed, because he did not make his payments with punctuality. successor, acting upon the principle that the sum fixed for the revenue must be collected, had subjected the inhabitants to terrible exactions, which, together with a long-continued drought, had reduced the country to devasta-At Lucknow, where he arrived on the 27th March, the principal business of Hastings was to make arrangements for the payment of the vizier's debt to the Company, but he also took the opportunity of restoring to the begums a portion of the jaghires of which they had recently been violently deprived. This act is more difficult to be accounted for than embarked for England. that by which the ladies were despoiled.

his own services to proceed to Lucknow, and, is true that the treatment of the beguns had been severely animadverted upon at home, but Hastings was not in the habit of paying much attention to such circumstances; and it is somewhat remarkable that, after denouncing the princesses as the inveterate enemies of the British government, watching for opportunities of undermining it and anxiously desiring its destruction, he now spoke of both ladies as being entirely in his interest, and expressed his belief that their influence with the vizier would be exercised beneficially for the country which he represented. The reader who has followed the history of Hastings to this period will, however, have become accustomed to these sudden changes, and have ceased to feel any surprise at them. On the 27th of August Hastings quitted Lucknow, and on his way through Benares endeavoured to restore some degree of order, the country being almost without a government. He arrived in Calcutta This early in November, and in February following

CHAPTER XIII.

INDIAN QUESTIONS BEFORE PARLIAMENT - MINISTERIAL CHANGES - INDIA BILL OF COALITION MINISTRY - MR. PITT'S BILL - AFFAIR OF THE MARGE OF ARCOT - IMPRACHMENT OF WARREN HASTINGS-HIS ACQUITTAL AND CHARACTER.

By an act of parliament passed in the year addressed the Crown, praying for his recall, 1779, the powers of the existing government and an order to that effect was transmitted. of Bengal were continued for one year: by another act, passed in 1780, they were renewed for one year more. In 1781 an act was passed, by which the right of the Company to their exclusive trade and to the territorial possessions of India was confirmed to them until the expiration of three years' notice, to be given by parliament after the 1st of March, 1791. In the same session an act was passed to remedy the abuses of the Supreme Court. This session also produced the appointment of a select and a secret committee of the House of Commons on Indian affairs, the one proposed by the opposition, the other by the Each committee made numerous and voluminous reports.

India, indeed, continued to occupy, in an unusual degree, the attention of parliament. In May, 1782, a resolution, condemnatory of the conduct of Hastings, was voted by the House of Commons, and the Court of Directors resolved to recall him. In the general court Hastings was more fortunate, a considerable majority declaring against his recall.

Other resolutions subsequently passed the House of Commons, affecting various persons, and among them the king's chief justice, the By the king they were hated. Mr. Fox and Company's chief judge of the Sudder Dewanny his party he had long disliked, and his late Company's chief judge of the Sudder Dewanny his party he had long disliked, and his late Adawlut, and the governor-general's taker of favourite, Lord North, by his union with that Impeachment was threatened, but not carried into effect.

A period was approaching when the excitement previously existing on Indian affairs, great as it had been, was to be increased. The ministry of Lord North had fallen early in the year 1782. The feeble and short-lived administrations of the marquis of Rockingham and earl of Shelburne followed in succession. The latter was destroyed by the force of the united parties of Mr. Fox and Lord North, whose triumph introduced a cabinet famous in the history of British party as the Coalition The two sections of which this Ministry. ministry was composed had been long engaged in determined hostility to each other. habitual urbanity of Lord North had restrained him from indulging in the furious invective of his opponents, but the violence of their languago towards him had been unmeasured: yet they were now his allies-a common desire to storm the seat of power having brought together men whose differences appeared irre-They had succeeded: the seals of concilable. office were theirs, but not the confidence of the Crown, nor the good-will of the people. affidavits, Sir Elijah Impey. The House party, had lost for ever the confidence of his

nesses to establish the case which he was a bill for the better government and manageintroded to support, requested that the house ment of the affairs of the East-India Company. ward in lulge him by adjourning to the next Its leading provision was, "that a board day. This was opposed-especially by Earl should be instituted, to be appointed by his Fitzwilliam, who was named in the bill as the imaje ty, consisting of one of the principal first commissioner of the superior board. The recretaries of state, the chancellor of the duke of Portland, the maniful head of the Exchequer for the time being, and a certain administration, followed, and a herted to an number of the privy councillors," to which extraordinary rumour which had been circus beard the despatches of the Company were to lated pretty generally, in which, he said, the he submitted for approval. The bill was rame of the most secred character in the brought in, passed through the earlier stages, kingdom had been approach, and the name of and then, on a division, lost. Mr. Fox immea noble lord, he hoped, alms d. The duke of distely moved for leave to bring in a bill on Bichmond spoke more distinctly, and read the same subject, but no progress was made from a ministerial newspaper on article one with it. The context between the two parties nouncing the prevalence of a report, that his found other matter of excitement, which kept majesty had withdrawn his approbation from the House of Commons in a perpetual heat till the Ext-India Bill, and his confidence from the 24th March, when parliament was dissolved. there by whem it was framed, in consequence. In the new parliament the balance of parties of an interview with Earl Temple, but treating was reversed, and the minister had a powerful the rumeur as a fal rication. Earl Temple majority. On the 2nd July he introduced an the reapon re c, and admitted that the king India Bill, recembling in its principal pro-had honoured him with a conference, in which visions that which had been lost in the prehe had given certain advice. What that coding review. It was opposed vehemently by advice was, he would not ttate; but he was the coalition party, but passed the House of ready, he raid, to tell their lordships what it Commons on the 28th July. It passed the was not—it was not friendly to the principle Lonis with far greater ease, and ultimately and object of the India Bill. After some became law, further discussion, a motion to perspane the Purning the train of home affairs, we find further hearing of evidence till the following the debts of the nabels of Arcot occupying the day was carried. On that day the business attention of the Court of Directors, the governthat "the bill be committed" was lost by a of Commons. By the act of 1784, an inmajority of nineteen. This was the result of quiry into this subject had been required, the interview of Earl Temple with the Ling, The Court of Directors proceeded to carry and of the ascertained fact that his majorty into effect the intention of the act, and framed disapproved of the bill. Many been who had a deepsteh, addressed to the governor and intro-ted their proxics to ministers, withdrew council of Madras, requiring them to enter them, and the prince of Wales, who two days upon a full investigation. But the authority before had voted with ministers on the quer- with which the court had to co-operate took tion of adjournment, on this occasion absented a different view. The newly constituted himself from the house. The fate of the Board of Commissioners, at the head of which checouraged by the decision of the upper house, alleged debta into three classes, they resolved the sovereign resolved to dismiss them. The that the account of the whole should be made mode in which this was effected was singularly up with interest, and that a portion of the expressive of the royal disapprobation. At twelve o'clock on the night of the 11th of December, a messenger delivered to the two recretaries of state an order from the king, "that they should deliver up the seals of their effices, and rend them by the under secretaries, Mr. Fraser and Mr. Nepeau, as a personal interview would be disagreeable to him." The seals, as soon as delivered, were given to Earl Temple, who by letter announced to the remaining members of the cabinet their dismission from office.

A new ministry was forthwith formed, of which Mr. William Pitt, then only twenty-three years of age, became the head; but he found an intractable House of Commons, for the papers connected with the inquiry found an intractable House of Commons, for the papers connected with the inquiry against whose opposition he for several weeks. The motion was lost, as were two contended without effect. On the 14th of motions in the House of Lords; but

Company's e-need, having called some wit-[January, 1784, he moved for leave to bring in

was recurred, and on the day after, the motion (ment Board of Commissioners, and the House ministry, as well as the fate of the bill, was was Mr. Dundas, declared that no such in-now scaled. They had still an overwhelming quiry as that proposed by the Court of Di-majority in the House of Commons; but, encouraged by the decision of the upper house, alleged debts into three classes, they resolved

Burke having concluded his task, Fox rose to state the course which the managers, on behalf of the Commons, proposed to pursue. It was to treat each charge separately; to open it, and then await the prisoner's defence before proceeding to another. The Lord Chancellor inquired whether this course would be agreeable to the counsel for the accused; they objected, as it must have been anticipated The Lords withdrew to conthat they would. sider the point, and determined that the entire case for the prosecution must be opened before the prisoner was called on for his defence. This decision was obviously just and reason-The mode of proceeding proposed by the managers was contrary to the practice of all courts of justice, and its adoption would have been an act of cruelty towards the prisoner, by subjecting him to the chance of being entangled in snares and pitfalls from which neither discretion nor innocence might be able to preserve him.

The first charge opened against Hastings related to his conduct towards Cheyt Singh, and the court was addressed on this subject by Mr. Fox and Mr. Grey. In the examination of witnesses which followed, a fresh difference arose between the managers and the counsel A witness called by the for the prisoner. former having answered a question put by one of them in the negative, was asked whether he had not, on a former occasion, answered the same question in the affirmative. Hastings's counsel objected, on the known principle that a party must not discredit his own witness. The point was decided by the Lords against the managers.

The second charge brought forward related to the begums of Oude. It was opened by Adam, who was followed by Mr. Pelham. · i.on days were spent in hearing evidence, or which Sheridan summed up in a speech Sometime of Burke in nts exciting effect. No further progress was made during this session. The trial had occupied thirty-five days, and two charges, out of a list containing ten times that number, had been entered upon. Further proceedings were adjourned till the next session of parliament.

The illness of the king and other causes prevented the resumption of the trial until the 21st of April, when a charge of receiving presents was opened by Mr. Burke. Having occasion in his speech to refer to Nuncomar, he used expressions of which Hastings complained by petition to the House of Commons. He said that "Hastings had murdered Nun-comar by the hands of Sir Elijah Impey." The language was strong, and its use could be justified only by reference to the extraordinary latitude of exaggeration in which advocates are accustomed to indulge. In the House of Commons the matter was treated in a great degree as a party question, and a motion submitted by Mr. Pitt, declaring that the House was nothing amounting to legal evidence. had given Mr. Burke no authority to impute the The same remark will apply to the fourth death of Nuncomar to Hastings, was carried.

In the prosecution of the charge relating to the receipt of presents, various questions arose as to the admissibility of evidence; the managers continually claiming an exemption from the ordinary rules of the courts, and the Peers invariably deciding that they were bound by them. In this manner the session of 1789 was consumed; and when half only of the charge relating to the receipt of presents had been proceeded with, the consideration of the remainder was postponed to a future session. Hastings complained of being subjected for so great a length of time to the anxiety of remaining on trial. His complaint was just, but it was couched in a tone of affected and overstrained humility, ludicrously contrasting with the arrogant character of the man. The next session was wasted in the same manner as the preceding. Parliament was then dissolved, and a question arose, whether the impeachment did not abate by the dissolution. much delay, both houses determined that it did not; and, on the 23rd of May, 1791, proceedings were renewed in Westminster Hall. Another charge, imputing corruption in various forms, was opened, and with this the managers intimated their intention of closing their case. On the 2nd of June Hastings read his defence, and with this the proceedings of the session

Two succeeding sessions, those of 1792 and 1793, were occupied by the speeches of counsel and the examination of witnesses in defence of Hastings. In that of 1794, the managers proceeded to reply to the case of the accused, and to adduce evidence in disproval of it; and their labours occupied all the time allotted by the House of Lords to the trial during that session. In 1795, the long-protracted proceedings were at last brought to a close. the 23rd of April, in that year, Hastings was acquitted on most of the articles of charge by large majorities, and on some unanimously. Thus terminated this most extraordinary trial, after a duration of seven years.

Of the four charges on which the Commons proceeded, the first afforded no just or reasonable ground for impeachment. Cheyt Singh was regarded by the accusers of Hastings as an independent prince, liable only to the payment of an annual tribute, which under no circumstances was to be increased. not his position. He was a disobedient dependent, and Hastings erred only in meditating the infliction of a punishment dispro-portioned to the offence. This deserved blame, but it did not deserve impeachment. charge respecting the begums was far better founded. Here the conduct of Hastings merited something more than mere censure. The charge relating to presents would also have justly subjected him to punishment, could it have been proved; but though there were many suspicious circumstances, there charge, implying various acts of a corrupt

CHAPTER XIV.

LORD CORNWALMS APPOINTED GOVERNOR-GENERAL -- WAR WITH TIPPOO BUILTAN -- ALTERNATE SUCCESSES-LORD CORNWALLIS TAKES THE COMMAND OF THE ARMY-ORLIGED TO RETIRE FROM BEFORE SERINGAPATAN—FURTHUR HOSTILITUES—BRITISH ARMY APPEARS A SECOND TIME REFORE SERUNGAPATAM - TREATY WITH TIPPOO - PERMANENT SETTLEMENT OF DENGAL - JUDICIAL ARRANGEMENTS-LORD CORNWALLIS SUCCEEDED BY SHE JOHN FHORE-VIZIER ALL OF OUDE DECLARED ILLEGITIMATE -- DEPARTURE OF SIR JOHN SHORE.

When Hastings resigned the government of was still in the Company's rervice, the dis-Bengal, the next member of council was Mr. missal having been irregular. John Macpherson, formerly agent to the na-lopinion the majority of the Court of Directors bob of Arcot, in which character he had been resolved to act, and the government of Madras received some years before by the duke of was apprised that Mr. Macpherson remained Grafton, then prime minister. Mr. Macpher- in the Company's service with his proper son, it will be recollected, had at that time standing; but it was added, "as his behagiven some advice to the minister too agreeable] to be refused. The gratitude of the nobleman induced him to recommend the nabob's agent to the favour of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, and in consequence he was appointed a writer on the Madragestablish-By some means not explained, the governor of Madras, Lord Pigot, obtained a copy of a memorial, believed to have been transmitted to the nabob of Arcot by Mr. Macpherson, recounting various services ren-dered to the prince in England. It being deemed improper that such a paper should be addressed to a native prince by a servant of the British government, an inquiry into the alleged authorship took place. Mr. Macpherson's answer was evasive: the governor moved that he should be dismissed the service, and the motion was carried.

At home, Mr. Macpherson's offence was rearded with greater leniency, and a case was bmitted to the Company's standing counsel, iring his opinion, whether he could be colored by a more majority of the Court of Directors only; or whether, in conformity with the provisions of an existing act of parliament with regard to dismissed servants, the concurrence of three-fourths of the directors and three-fourths of the proprietors would be necessary for his restoration. The opinion of the Company's counsel was to the effect that the dismissal was informal, but that, nevertheless, Mr. Macpherson could not be restored by the vote of a simple majority of the Court of Directors; and he added, "it is worth while considering, if Mr. Macpherson should be restored, whether he is a proper person to be continued in the Company's service. He had, in my opinion, too much connection with the nabob of Arcot; and when the Company's interests and the nabob's are affected, as they will often happen, they will greatly disturb a man of honour and integrity." This opinion seems not to have been satisfactory, for, about a month after its delivery, another was obtained from the solicitor-general, afterwards Lord Lough-

Upon this viour was disrespectful to your board, and in other respects very reprehensible, we direct that you give him a severe reprimand, and nequaint him that a like conduct will meet with a severer punishment."

The reprimand was never received, nor the danger of the severer punishment incurred. Mr. Macpherson was declared still in the service; but either he evinced no anxiety to onjoy the emoluments thus reopened to him, or his masters hesitated to complete the measure of their indulgence by sanctioning his return to his presidency. Mr. Macpherson remained in England three years and a half, how engaged it is unnecessary to inquire. At the end of that period he was appointed a member of the council, not of Madras, to which presidency he belonged, but of Bengal, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Barwell. The appointment under the existing state of the law required the confirmation of the Crown. This was granted without objection, and the agent of Mahomet Ali thus became the coadjutor, and eventually the successor, of Warren Hastings.

At this time, when the eyes of all political parties were intently fixed on India, such an appointment was not likely to pass without notice. The select committee of the House of Commons instituted an inquiry into the facts, and honoured Mr. Macpherson with an claborate report of some length, solely devoted to the illustration of his history. Mr. Macpherson was young in the Company's service; but this objection to his appointment was of comparatively trifling importance. His previous conduct ought to have been regarded as an insuperable obstacle to his admission into the service at all, and his selection, by the body against whose rights and interests he had conspired for a scat in the supreme council with a chance of eventual succession to the office of governor-general, is one of those extraordinary facts which secret history alone can adequately explain. The chairman and deputy chairman of the Company were examined before the select committee, but with little advantage to borough, determining that Mr. Macpherson the object which the committee had in view.

which had dietxed the appeintment, they were the propriety, and indeed the necessity, of dumb. It is eaid, that when Mr. Macpherson submitting to his majesty's ministers certain returned to Degland from Madra, he afforded regulations which he considered indispensable recet information respecting the designs of for the calvation of this part of the empire, France which was highly meful, and which and of laying before them there conditions on led, in the enecoding war, to the early and which only he felt himself able to fulfil the cary capture of Pondicherry. This veryice purposes of his appointment with advantage to undoubtedly merited reward; but if it could the public and reputation to himself. Other not be avowed as the ground of the appointment, come mole of acknowledgment less open tell, rendered every precaution on his part, to enspicien ought to have been found. Upon if not necessary, at least expedient." These the case, as related in the report of the relect committee, opinions could rearcely differ. The appointment appearance utterly indefensible, and had accepted the office of governor-general, he applied to not a lateral it. no attempt was made to defend it.

first raised himself to distinction cannot be teo cartney determined to leave Mr. Macpherson exercly condemned, it is justly due to him to in continued possession of the seat of power, state that his exercise of the chief power in On his lordship sarrival in England, he entered India was entitled to much praire. He applied into immediate communication with the chairhimself vigorously to enforce necessary to man and deputy-chairman of the East-India forms, and to restore the credit of the Com- Company, with the view, as it would appear, forme, and to restore the credit of the Company, with the view, as it would appear, pany's government. To him, in a good degree, belongs the merit of introducing order the office of governor-general, under conditions and regularity into the administration of the which would remove his previous objections to finances of India, which previously received accepting it. Lord Macariney alleged that little more attention than was necessary to provide for the exigencies of the passing hour. This character appears to have been that of an evided for; he represented that great abuses able and uncompulous mans—of one caring still existed in the civil revice, and complained little in whose cervice his talents were every little in whose relyies his talents were exer-especially of the power possessed by the ma-circles, so that they were duly rewarded, but jority of council of thwarting the designs of who left his employers, whoever they might the governor-general. To the parties then exter, no pround for complaint that the interests erising the highest civil and military authority intracted to him had suffered either through in Bengal he had personal objections, which incapacity or negligence.

from Madras, the government of which pre-Macartney on these points having been comsidency he had recently resigned. His prins municated to the ministers of the Crown, he cipal object in proceeding to Bengal was, to was invited to an interview with Mr. Pitt and to endeavour, by personal representation, to Mr. Dundas. No important difference appears impress upon the superior governments rease of the difficulties in which that of Madras previously discussed with the chairman and would be placed, in consequence of the orders deputy-chairman of the Company, but a diffifrom England, directing the restoration of the culty arose from Lord Macartney intimating assignment granted by the nabob of Arcot, that it would be necessary, for his own reputageneral of Bengal. The distinction was the favour of the Crown, and that he had flattering, as it had not been solicited; it hoped that Mr. Pitt had been prepared to was the more flattering as Lord Macartney anticipate the expression of his desire for an was unconnected with the political party then in power, and had not been supposed to possess any large there of their confidence. The latter the conference, Lord Cornwallis was lordship's biographer, not without some antici- to by name in the House of Commons as pation of its future enjoyment. The writer eminently fitted for the situation. observes, "he had many and strong reasons Lord Cornwallis found in the administration for declining at this time to take upon him of the Bengal government much that required self the government of Bengal. his native climate. The general situation of every department of the state. Some of the

To questions relating to the peculiar motive classisis in India likewise pointed out to him would have been obliged to act; and, under While the means by which Mr. Macpherson the influence of all these motives, Lord Mahe thought rendered it inexpedient that they During the administration of Mr. Mac should be members of a government of which phereon, Lord Macartney arrived at Calcutta he was to be the head. The views of Lord to have existed on the points which had been While in Calcutta, he received a despatch, tion and the benefit of the public service, that announcing his appointment as governor- he should receive some distinguished mark of general of Bengal. The distinction was the favour of the Crown, and that he had honour was, however, declined, though, as appointed governor-general of Bengal. This may be gathered from the statement of his nobleman had some years before been referred

The ill state immediate correction. Hastings had made of his health, broken down by the fatigues and some provision for the maintenance of the vexations which he had undergone in his late public peace, and for the management of the government, required a speedy removal to revenue, but corruption and abuse pervaded supporters too convenient to be despised by a belonged, though possession had been deman who needed all the strength which he manded. It remained for Lord Cornwallis to When no such motives interposed. multiply, derived impunity, not from the disinclination of Hastings to correct them, but from his want of power or of opportunity. Placed, during a great part of his career as governor-general, in conflict with his colleagues, engaged in vast and wide-spread military operations requiring constant thought and giving rise to constant anxiety, it is rather surprising that he should have found time to do anything for the improvement of the internal administration of the country, than that he should not have done more or better. The government of Lord Cornwallis was not free from the distractions of war, but in one respect his position had a decided advantage over that of Hastings. The unavoidable difficulties of administering the affairs of the country were not aggravated by the infusion of faction. In combating with the evils, which circumstances had allowed to attain a gigantic stature, he feared no unreasonable opposition either at the council-board or at home. The earlier years of his administration being undisturbed by war, opportunity was found for considering such changes as appeared to be necessary in the administrative system of the country. Whether or not these were in every instance judiciously effected, as been matter of debate. Some notice will e history of the government of Lord Cornwallis is brought to a close.

Among the external relations of the Company's government, those subsisting with Oude soon claimed Lord Cornwallis's attention. The ever unsatisfactory state of that unhappy country was certain, indeed, of furnishing subject of appeal to a new governor-general. Lord Cornwallis made some modifications in the existing arrangements, but declined to comply with the vizier's request for the withdrawal of part of the English force stationed for the protection of his dominions. The relation now established between the two states was that which has since been so widely is thus described by the governor-general:-"We undertake the defence of his country; management."

to be adjusted, and these not unattended by passed not long before the departure of Lord

existing evils Hastings had, perhaps, little in-|difficulties. Basalat Jung, the brother of the clination to correct. As an instance, may be nizam, who, it will be recollected, had a life inmentioned, the prevailing practice of gratifying | terest in Guntoor, one of the Northern Circars, followers and dependents by lucrative agencies, was dead, but Guntoor had not been surrenwhich was a mode of purchasing friends and dered to the English, to whom the reversion could enlist in his service to stem the current repeat and enforce the demand. An agent of opposition which not unfrequently set of the British government was accordingly against him in India, and shield him from the despatched to the court of the nizam; and that dangers which he was conscious awaited him his mission might want no auxiliary to success, a military force was put in motion in the the cvils which were allowed to increase and direction of the circar claimed. Nizam Ali made little opposition to the demand for its transfer, and this part of the negotiation was brought to a conclusion with greater ease than was expected. But so long as the circar had been withheld from the English, after the event which gave them a claim to possession, they had neglected to pay the nizam's peshcush, or tribute, while he, for the same period, had received the revenues of Guntoor. To settle these accounts, one of the ministers of the nizam proceeded to Calcutta. Besides the ostensible motive for his journey, there was another-the desire of concluding such engagements with the English as should secure their aid, in case the nizam should be attacked either by Tippoo Sultan or the Mahrattas. He had not long before been engaged, in conjunction with the Mahrattas, in war with Tippoo Sultan, but had little cause to be proud of his Peace had been restored, and Nizam Ali proposed an indissoluble union between the Sultan and himself. The answer of Tippoo was favourable, but he required that the connection should be cemented by intermarriage between the families. The pride of Nizam Ali recoiled from this proposal, and thus the effect of his overture for a political alliance tended to alienate rather than to unite the two great Mataken of the more important of them before hometan powers of the south of India. Instead of conciliating the friendship of Tippoo, he felt that he had increased the enmity of that potentate. His increased danger added to his ardour for an English alliance, but the manacles which bound the hands of Lord Cornwallis seemed to preclude him from compliance. The English in India had been involved in some unjust wars, and with that headlong wilfulness with which popular opinion tends to rush to extremes, the English parliament and the English people seem to have concluded that every war waged by Europeans in India must be unjust. Parliamentary speeches, parliamentary resolutions, and parliamentary reports, denounced the pursuit of conquest, and thus extended—a subsidiary alliance; and its nature far no objection can be taken to the views which they embodied. But when those who thus cheaply carned popular applause proceeded and, in return, he agrees to defray the real to deprive Indian statesmen of the power of expenses incurred by an engagement of so effectually serving their country and maintaining much value to himself. The internal adminition security of its dependencies, they manifested stration of his affairs is left to his exclusive either a total ignorance of the position of the British nation in India, or a culpable disregard With Nizun Alithere were some differences of its interests. By an act of parliament,

Cornwallis for his government, after recit-should be granted whenever the nizam might ing that "to pursue schemes of conquest and extension of dominion in India are measures repugnant to the wish, the honour, and policy of this nation," it was declared that it should not be lawful for the governor-general and council, without the express command and authority of the Court of Directors or the Sultan. The views of that restless and unprin-Secret Committee, to declare war, or commence hostilities, or enter into treaty for making war, or guaranteeing the possessions of any country powers or chiefs, except in cases where hostilities should actually have been commenced or preparations made for their commencement against the British nation in India, or some power or state where territories the Company were bound to defend. This conctment seemed to preclude the gratification of Nizam Ali by any new engagements, and what were those actually subsisting between the two states it and Tippoo, was declared still to be in full was by no means an easy task to determine. In 1768 the English government had concluded a treaty with Nizam Ali, in which they accepted from that prince the dewanny of part of Hyder Ali's dominions, subject to their conquest, and the payment of a certain amount of tribute. But in the following year they had negotiated with Hyder Ali as the lawful master of the territories which he governed, and in that character had concluded a treaty with him; and fifteen years afterwards they had, in like manner, recognized the claims of Hyder Ali's son, Tippoo Sultan. Did these engagements with the successive rulers of Mysore nullify their former agreement with Nizam Ali, which acknowledged his right to dispose of Hyder Ali's dominions, and accepted a free gift of them? Lord Cornwallis decided that they did not—that the treaty of 1768 was yet in force. What then became of the arrangements with Hyder Ali and Tippoo Sultan! The English mightabandon theirown claims to the dewanny, but they could not abandon those of Nizam Ali to the sovereignty, if any claim he had. The difficulty was attempted to be met by a declaration that circumstances had totally precluded the execution of the article relating to the dewanny, and a promise that if it should happen that the Company, with the nizam's nesistance, should gain possession of the country, the claims of that prince should be respected, as well as the right of the Mahrattas to chout; for this the British government, by the treaty of 1768, undertook to pay, although the Mahraths were no parties to the treaty. The governor-general thus recognized the cotemporary operation of two treaties, to both of which the Company was a party; one acknowledging the right of Tippoo Sultan to certain territories, the other transferring those territories to the English.

This was not all. By the treaty with the nizam, the English were bound to furnish that prince with a certain amount of military An explanation of this article was afforded by the governor-general, in which it was declared that the stipulated assistance core applied to the government of Madras for apply for it; but it was not to be employed against any powers in alliance with the Company. Toguard against mistake, these favoured allies were named, and the list comprehended every power of any importance in the south of India except one—the exception was Tippoo cipled tyrant afforded just ground for apprehension, but the governor-general was pre-cluded by act of parliament from entering into any treaty which should place the British government in a condition to contend with him effectually. An evasion was therefore resorted It was thought desirable to conciliate the nizam, and secure his co-operation as an ally; and to attain this object, an old treaty, portions of which had been virtually rescinded by the treaties made by the Euglish with Hyder Ali operation, and a letter was written to the nizam, confirming and explaining it. letter, it was explicitly declared, was to be equally binding as a treaty. If it had been an object to devise means to embarrass the British government in India, to divest it of the power of defending the Company's possessions, or compel a recourse to pitiful subterfuges to avert their loss, no means more efficient could have been found than the ill-considered and absurd enactment by which the governor-general was required to defer preparation for war till preparation would probably be vain.

The exception of Tippoo Sultan from the number of princes against whom the English battalions furnished to the nizam were not to act, marked the point from which the governor-general apprehended danger. course of events proved that the apprehension was not groundless. By the treaty of 1784, the peace concluded with Tippoo Sultan was to extend, not to the English alone, but to their allies; and among these the rajah of Travancore was specially named. Tippoo Sultan, however, meditated the conquest or dismemberment of Travancore; and, to save appearances, made repeated attempts to attain his purpose through the instrumentality of others. He had endeavoured to prevail on the zamorin of Calicut to invade Travancore, in prosecution of some antiquated claims; and would probably have succeeded, had he not offended the Hindoo prince by his furious zeal for making compulsory proselytes to the The Mahometan faith. He next sought the assistance of the rajah of Cochin, whom he instigated to reclaim the territory on which the lines of Travancore were formed. These lines had been constructed principally upon a strip of land coded many years before by the rajah of Cochin to the rajah of Travancore, in compensation for assistance rendered by the latter prince in resisting an invasion of the territorics of the former by the zamorin of Calicut. Alarmed by the intelligence of the hostile views of Tippoo Sultan, the rajah of Travanhad succeeded Lord Macartney as the head of proposed the appointment of commissioners that presidency, promptly granted it. He at the same time addressed a representation to Tippoo Sultan, warning him that any act of aggression upon Travancore would be regarded by the English government as a violation of the treaty of 1784, and equivalent to a declaration of war against that government. To this Tippoo responded by professing a desire to maintain relations of amity with the English state. His acts, however, did not correspond with his professions; for a few months afterwards he commenced his march in the direction of Travancore, with a force of about thirty-five thousand men.

On an estuary at one extremity of the lines of Travancore were situate two forts belonging to the Dutch, named Cranganore and Ayacottah. On the approach of Tippoo, the Dutch, under the provisions of a treaty of long standing, called upon the rajah of Travancore to assist them in the defence of these places. With this requisition he was ready to comply; but Mr. Hollond, who, by the departure of Sir Archibald Campbell, had become acting governor of Madras, informed the rajah that the English battalions could not be permitted to be employed, except upon such parts of the line of rades passed, and thus miserably did numbers defence as actually belonged to Travancore. To overcome this difficulty, the rajah resumed a negotiation, which had been commenced some his palanquin trampled to death—himself restime before, for the purchase of the two forts from the Dutch, and a bargain was concluded. Against this transfer Tippoo Sultan remon- and this not until he had received injuries the forts, inasmuch as they were but tribu-fered till his death. es to the rajah of Cochin, who was himself of the possessions of Mysore. appears to have yielded a very willing car to the on the lines of Travancore, the same course representations of Tippoo Sultan; he condemned the purchase, and encouraged the nomy. The value of this motive was duly sultan to expect that the places would be appreciated by Lord Cornwallis. Referring restored. prince were, however, monstrous falsehoods. this inexplicable folly had no longer the power The Dutch had originally obtained the disputed possessions by conquest from the Portuform giving credit to the late government for rajah of Cochin, or acknowledged his supe- of the supreme government, after having reriority; and the dependence of that prince ceived the most gross insults that could be upon Mysore, so far from preceding the acquisitions of the Dutch, had its origin in the conthat every cash of that ill-judged saving may quest of Hyder Ali, and had not continued cost the Company a crore of rupees." Anomore than twelve years. Dutch to sell, it was reported and believed, Munro, then a subaltern in the Madras army had also been recognized by the man who now and a very young man, but manifesting the impugned it. Tippoo Sultan, it was alleged, had offered to become a purchaser; and had sequently raised him to rank and power, the rajah of Travancore delayed the complewould in this way have possessed himself of private letter written at this period, he says, increased means for his destruction.

plaint, which were the subject of long and an army can be put in motion, Tippoo may be assistance; and Sir Archibald Campbell, who fruitless discussion. The English government for the investigation of the points of dispute: but Tippoo Sultan had resolved to submit the question to a different and more decisive arbitration. He had for some time been gradually approaching the lines, part of which formed the principal subject of dispute. On the night of the 28th of December, 1789, he marched to attack them, and gained a considerable extent of rampart. The Travancore troops retreated before him; but his leading corps having suffered severely, an attempt was made to relieve Before this movement was it by another. completed, the fire of a party of about twenty men, posted under a thick cover, fell heavily on the corps about to be relieved, and killed The whole were imthe commanding officer. mediately thrown into inextricable disorder, and rushing wildly back upon the corps advancing to their relief, threw them also into confusion.

Panic now became general; and the living torrent was borne on to a ditch, over which some of the fugitives leaped, while others were forced into it by the resistless masses which pressed on them from behind. The bodies of these formed a road, over which their comof Tippoo's troops perish. The sultan was thrown down in the struggle—the bearers of cued from the same fate only by the vigorous exertions of some active and faithful followers, ated; alleging that the Dutch had no right to from the effects of which he occasionally suf-

Contemplating the probability of war, Lord ne tributary of Tippoo, and that consequently | Cornwallis had instructed the Madras governthey had assumed the right of alienating part ment to be prepared for it. The instruction Mr. Holloud was disregarded; and even after the attack The assertions of the Mysorean to it at a period when the governor guilty of guese; they had held them for more than a economy in not making the necessary preparacentury; they had never paid tribute to the tions for war, according to the positive orders The right of the ther distinguished authority, Sir Thomas germs of that talent and judgment which subpassed a similar sentence upon the ill-judged tion of the treaty, his enemy, it was probable, parsimony of the Madras government. In a "It will require some time to assemble an Tippoo found various other grounds of com- army able to face the enemy, and before such

in actual perfection of Travancore and all the lond. In answer to the proposal of the latter southern countries. little benefit from experience and misfortune. In the year 1790 now sees us as unprepared as the Tippoo had declared that he had himself year 1780 did for war." "We shall commence ascertained that there was no the war," he subsequently observes, "under need of commissioners; but he added, that, the disadvantage of a want of magazines, nevertheless, if Mr. Hollond wished it, he for we have now at present but at Madra; might send commissioners "to kettle the for we have none at present but at Madray. I might send commissioners "to the presence." Since the conclusion of the late war we'lt was now the let of Tippee to make a simihave noted as if we had been to enjoy a lar offer to the English governor, perpetual peace. culties which we then encountered from the that officer on his arrival and appointment to want of them has not cured us of the narrow the government, he remarked, with a tone of policy of preferring a precent small saving to concern, that, "notwithstanding the bonds of a certain though future great and essential friendship" were "firmly established, in conadvantage." The same miserable policy which sequence of the intervention in certain neces-had disgraced the Madras government before sary and important concerns, and the repre-the attack of Tippeo on the lines of Travan-sentations, contrary to the fact, of certain core, continued to be pursued after that event. Towards Tippoo they maintained a friendly, had "caused an army to be assembled on both and even ob equious deportment; and, instead sides. As this event is improper," continued of making any endeavour to remedy the evils the sultan, "among those who are mutually resulting from their past errors, they vigor-lat friendship, I therefore wish, in order to ously contested the propriety of the views clear it up and to have certain important materiarisation in Bengal, and defended the right ters represented, to send to you a person of of Tippoo to restrain the cale of the Dutch fortresses. Lord Cornwallis was about to proceed himself to assume the administration of the government of Madras, but the supersestion of Mr. Holland by the arrival of General Meadows, recently appointed governor, led to the postponement of his visit.

The British government must now be regarded as at war with Tippop Sultan. actual commencement of hortilities relieved upon war as declared from the moment of the them from the difficulty imposed on them attack upon their ally, the rajah of Travanby the law, which, though it forbade the core, and upon that issue the dispute now government to prepare for war, did not pro- rested. The sultan received the answer of the ceed so far in abourdity as to restrain them governor at Coimbatore, and as soon as it from seeking the means of carrying it on when reached him he retired with his main army to actually commenced. The ridiculous pretence his capital, Seringapatam. He had provoked of upholding the engagements concluded with war without being prepared to meet it. He Nizam Ali in 1768 was now dropped, and a had calculated on passing the lines of Travannew treaty of offensive and defensive alliance concluded with him. A similar treaty was made with the peishwa. The accersion of both powers to the alliance was accelerated by the expectation of recovering from Tippoo the possessions of which they had been deprived ately in self-confidence and haughtiness. The

by himself and his father.

Before these arrangements were completed, a British army, under the command of the governor of Madras, General Meadows, of brigades, was assembled on the plains of Triwas joined by the governor, who, on the 26th, marched in the direction of Caroor, the nearest frontier post of the chemy. General formal letter to Tippoo Sultan, announcing his success is mainly to be ascribed. Tippoo, governor of Madras. The answer of the My-Intoxicated with pride, he seems, on many sorean prince was not received until the occasions, to have thought that he had only

We have derived but for appointing commissioners to settle the The distresses and diffi- ter to General Meadows, after congratulating short-sighted persons to" the governor, they dignity, together with some other persons, that the vakeel of the circar, having arrived with you, may explain the whole circumstances to you, and that the dust which has obscured your upright mind may be removed." The answer of General Meadows was short and decisive. Its purport was, that the English, equally incapable of offering an insult The and of submitting to one, had always looked core with case, and then overrunning the country. After his unexpected failure, the obsequiousness of the government of Madras had led him to believe that he was still an object of dread, and his tone rose proportionassembling of the English army, and the decirive conduct of General Meadows, showed him that the new governor was ready to assert with the sword the rights of his country and about fifteen thousand men, formed into six those of its allies; and Tippoo Sultan, having tried to gain some advantage by procrastina-There, on the 24th of May, it tion, acknowledged his weakness by a retreat which left a large tract of country almost undefended. All this was highly characteristic of Tippoo Sultan. His father, Hyder Ali, Meadows, some time before, had addressed a was master of his passions, and to this cause his arrival and assumption of the office of on the contrary, was the slave of his passions. general was on his march. Its tone was to will in order to obtain. Reverses produced greatly subdued in comparison with that of on him their usual bitter effects, but unacthe sultan's communications with Mr. Hol-companied by any portion of that wholesome have a tendency to effect. misfortune, except during its actual pressure, traordinary, as the killadar had met an invita-Tippoo Sultan recovered from it only to launch tion to surrender on favourable terms, by into fresh extravagances, and thus prepare for threatening, if any similar message were subhimself fresh disappointment and humiliation.

was abandoned on their approach. From the defects of the commissariat department, their abandoned by part of his garrison. It was progress to this place was slow; but they met fortunate for the English that neither the with no annoyance, except from the desultory killadar nor his men were aware of the cause attacks of parties of the enemy's horse, and which led to the premature assault. from the weather. Their course lay over arid plains, under the operation of a powerful wind was again despatched to attack Paligaut, but raising clouds of dust which obscured the face of day, and which, being inhaled with every cable route. Batteries were opened at day-act of respiration, laid the foundation of light on the 21st of September. In less than From this cause, on the serious disease. arrival of the army at Caroor, no less than twelve hundred men were placed in hospital) there.

The capture of Career was followed by that of Aravacourchy, a weak place, which offered no resistance beyond the discharge of two guns on the approach of the British advanced guard. The killadar, on being summoned to surrender, earnestly requested permission to save his credit with the sultan by a few more discharges, kindly promising that no damage should arise to the British party. Notwithstanding this pledge, and the danger in which the killadar's honour was placed, his request was refused, and the English took possession of Aravacourchy without any further resistance, either real or pretended. The surrender of Daraporam, another weak place, followed. Here a depôt was formed; a number of sick were left in hospital, and some heavy stores and camp equipage deposited, to enable the army to move with as little incumbrance as possible. A brigade was left for their protection, and the army marched to Coimbatore, here they arrived on the 21st of July.

From this place an advanced force, under lonel Stuart, was detached to attack Paliaut; but the route taken was nearly impracticable from the effects of heavy rains, and Colonel Stuart fell back without effecting his object. An attack on Dindigul, conducted by the same officer, was more fortunate. Against this place batteries were opened on the 20th of August, and by the evening of the 21st a breach, though a very indifferent one, was effected. Imperfect as it was, Colonel Stuart resolved on risking an immediate assault—a determination taken with reference to the remaining stock of ammunition. The continuance of the firing for two hours longer would have consumed all the shot of the English, and a fresh supply could not have been obtained in less than a week. The assault was made with great gallantry, and repelled by the killadar at the head of his mon with equal vigour and spirit. The English were foiled, played on the breach, and an offer was made relieved by the rest of the British cavalry.

change of spirit which, in better natures, they to surrender, on condition of security to persons Unaffected by and private property. This was the more exsequently sent, that he would blow the The British army advanced to Caroor, which messenger from a cannon. The change in his resolution is attributed to his having been

> On his return to Coimbatore, Colonel Stuart with augmented means, and by a more practicable route. Batteries were opened at daytwo hours the fort was silenced, and by the evening a practicable breach was effected. But the necessity for an assault was spared. Some English officers, engaged in reconnoitring, observed a defenceless part of the works, of which possession was immediately taken; and on the following morning the place capitulated on conditions, one of which was, protection against the fury of the Nairs, who had joined Colonel Stuart, and were serving in the siege. These were natives of Malabar, on whose countrymen Tippoo Sultan had exercised great cruelties. It was apprehended that they would rejoice in an opportunity of taking revenge on the troops of their oppressor, and it required some effort to restrain them.

Eroad had previously surrendered to an English detachment under Colonel Oldham. The greater part of the troops employed in this service subsequently joined a corps com-manded by Colonel Floyd, whose general operations were confined to the south of the river Bahvany. By a detachment from that corps Sattimungul was taken, with little trouble and no loss. Sattimungul is but a few miles distant from the foot of the pass of Gugehutty. Through that pass Tippoo Sultan and his army began early in September to descend. Rumours of his approach were soon afloat, which appear at first to have received little credit; but their accuracy being confirmed by testimony that could scarcely be doubted, Colonel Floyd forwarded the intelligence to General Meadows, and accompanied the communication by a suggestion that the advanced corps of the army should fall back upon head-quarters. Either from the report of Tippoo's descent being disbelieved, or from some other cause, the suggestion was rejected, and Colonel Floyd was ordered to maintain his position. On the 18th of September, a large body of the enemy's army passed the ford of Poongar; and the British pickets, which had been sent out to patrol, were driven in by Tippoo's force. A. regiment of horse, which had been despatched and compelled to retire; but at this moment, to support them, was surrounded, and comgreatly to their surprise, a white flag was dis pelled to take post among some inclosures till carried.

orders were given to the killadar of the fort Mussulman part of the British army. to recover possession of the pettah at all risks. gallantry, and the streets of the town were, for a lengthened period, the scene of a deterwas maintained by firing, little advantage was when the governor-general obtained possession gained on either side. It was finally decided of Bangalore. by the bayonet, with which the Mysoreans seek refuge in the fort, with a loss of two thousand in killed and wounded. The loss of the English was not great; but among the killed was Colonel Moorhouse, who fell at the He had risen from the ranks; "but "ture," says Colonel Wilks, "had made him gentleman-uneducated, he had made himattachment." His memory was honoured by except in the result of the engagement: he the expense of the Company in the church of loss of a thousand killed and wounded; the Madras.

The capture of the pettah was followed by preparations for obtaining possession of the fort. Batteries were erected, a breach made, and, on the night of the 20th of March, a storming party advanced in silence to the attack. They had made some progress before the garrison took the alarm; but the resistance offered to the assailants, though late, was fierce and powerful. The killadar, Bahadar Khan, a distinguished soldier, in whom the pressure of seventy years had not quenched were odious beyond the power of description. the fire of military ardour, nor seriously The army of Nizam Ali began to assemble diminished his personal ability to obey its in the neighbourhood of Hyderabad about the suggestions, was in a moment at the head of time that General Meadows took the field. It the north of the fort, and this was the primary his men. But his courage was unavailing: object of attack. It had several gates, one of the assailants established themselves on the which being selected for assault, the requisite ramparts, and, after a contest of an hour, the preparations were made, the field artillery and six battery guns being placed under Colonel Moorhouse, a highly distinguished officer. loss on the part of the garrison was severe: The first barrier was gallantly carried, and it more than a thousand of the bodies of their was expected that the application of a field-fallen enemies were committed to the grave piece would soon force the gate. This was by the victors. Among the slain was the found ineffectual, and some eighteen-pounders brave killadar, who, having in vain endeawere brought up, which slowly performed the voured to collect a party to make one more desired work. In the mean time a vigorous stand, fell sword in hand, without a single fire of musketry and rockets from the turrets supporter near him. It was thought that galled the English troops; it was borne, however, with the greatest steadiness: the shattered fragments of the gate were torn who had served him so faithfully, and an away after each discharge; and an opening, intimation that they would not be withheld though a small one, being at length made, was conveyed to him; but either the merits Lieutenant Ayre, of the 86th regiment, who of Bahadar Khan were obliterated by his illis represented as being of very diminutive size fortune, or Tippoo really entertained the feeland stature, was raised on the shoulders of ing which his answer is said to have expressed some grenadiers, and passed through. General —that the killadar could be buried nowhere Meadows, who was present, called on the with greater propriety than in the neighbourtroops to "support the little gentleman;" hood of the place in defence of which he had they responded to the call, and the place was fallen. By the English authorities all the respect that could be shown to the dead was manifested; and the body of the veteran Tippoo Sultan, who with his army was in the immediate neighbourhood, was alike soldier was attended to its final resting-place astonished and irritated at this result, and by the most distinguished members of the

The English were now fixed in the heart of They were obeyed with great spirit and Tippoo Sultan's dominions; but before pursuing further the campaign under Lord Cornwallis, it will be convenient to notice tho mined and doubtful conflict. So long as it operations of other armies up to the period

When General Meadows marched in the were driven from every post, and compelled to direction of Madras, Colonel Hartley was left with a force consisting of one regiment of Europeaus and two battalions of sepoys, with some field artillery, to act against a body of the sultan's troops amounting, at the lowest estimate, to six thousand, left under the command of an officer named Hussein Ali. officer, disdaining the cautious policy of his self a man of science; a career of uninter-master, took up a strong position near Calicut, rupted distinction had commanded general and resolved, if challenged, to abide the result respect, and his amiable character universal of a regular action. He was not disappointed, a public funeral and a monument erected at was attacked and utterly defeated, with the general himself and nine hundred men were made prisoners on the field, and the flying remnant of the army being hotly pursued, fifteen hundred more laid down their arms.

A few days before this action, General Abercromby, the governor of Bombay, arrived with a respectable force at Tellicherry, advanced to Cananore, which surrendered unconditionally, and in a very short time occurrence. pied the whole of the province of Malabar, where the name and authority of the sultan was joined by a detachment of English sepoys to the captors. The guns and stores were acand a company of European artillery, and, cordingly left by the retiring garrison; but it after considerable delay, marched to lay siege was said that the powder had been wilfully to Copool. operation. The situation of Copool is upon a stores destroyed to the extent which the time lofty and precipitous rock. The cannon emand means of the commander allowed. ployed against it were disabled by a week's firing, and the efforts of the besiegers were suspended for a long interval, until a new battering train could be collected from various They were resumed, but with little prospect of a speedy termination, till the alarm caused by the unexpected news of the fall of Bangalore led to a surrender, after a resistance of several months. Dahandur Bundur, a fort about three miles to the northward of Copool, in a like manner yielded to the good fortune of the allies.

With the Mahrattas, as with Nizam Ali, an English detachment was destined to act. It consisted of two battalions of sepoys and three junction was one object of the governorcompanies of artillery, two native and one European. It was despatched from Bombay, and proceeded in boats up the river Jaigur as far as navigable. The period of debarkation was the very height of the monsoon; the ascent of the Ghauts was performed under the most discouraging difficulties; but by perseverance they were surmounted. At Coompta the detachment joined the Mahratta army, thousand foot, under the command of Pur-seram Bhow. The first blow was to be struck were of little use in the conduct of a siege, and the means of reduction were found inadequate. Application for reinforcements was made to Bombay, and a regiment of European infantry, a battalion of sepoys, and a considerable number of European artillerymen, were despatched, under the command of Colonel Frederick. An assault prematurely made ended in repulse; and shortly afterwards Colonel Frederick died from the effects, as it was believed, of disap-The siege continued to be lanpointment. guidly prosecuted, till the fall of Bangalore became known; an event which produced at Darwar the same effect as at Copool—an offer to surrender.

The garrison were permitted to march out with their arms and ammunition, and with colours flying; but four days after their departure their camp was attacked and plundered by the Mahrattas, many of the party killed, and the commander, covered with wounds, sent as a prisoner to a Mahratta fort. Such an exploit would be perfectly in accordance with the Mahratta character if undertaken solely with a view to plunder; but it was alleged, and it is believed not without ground, that the commander had provoked the attack by a virtual breach of the conditions of the One of these conditions was, capitulation.

This was a protracted and tedious rendered useless by damping, and the other

The surrender of Darwar was followed by that of the strong fort of Khooshgul, cleven miles distant, and by the early possession of every place north of the Toombuddra.

Lord Cornwallis marched from Bangalore on the 22nd March, and a few days afterwards unexpectedly encountered the army of the sultan. Tippoo's only anxiety was to escape from a situation in which he might be compelled to fight, and with some difficulty he effected his object. The army of Lord Cornwallis was now strengthened, or at least numerically increased, by the junction of about ten thousand of Nizam Ali's horse. To effect this general's march; another was to meet a valuable convoy, with a reinforcement of between four and five thousand men, under Lieutenant-These were met at Veni-Colonel Oldham. tataghery, and both objects of the movement having been attained, Lord Cornwallis returned to Bangalore, where he arrived on the 28th of April.

Notwithstanding the success which had thus consisting of twenty thousand horse and ten far attended the British arms, the governorgeneral was not in a condition to prosecute the war with vigour. He was especially distressed the attack of this place, which they reached stores; and this deficiency might have ap-by very slow marches. The Mahratta forces peared to justify some cossession of were of little use in the conduct of the conduct by a deficiency of the means of transport for peared to justify some cessation of active exertion. The love of enterprise scarcely entered into his character; yet, while placed in circumstances which seemed to excuse inactivity, he resolved on a step which, with reference to his position, may be regarded as a bold one: it was to march at once upon Tippoo's capital, Seringapatam. One obvious motive for this decision was a desire to bring the war to a speedy termination; but there was another, not without weight—the apprehension of a rupture with France, from which country Tippoo might then expect to derive assistance, which would render the difficulties of the contest far greater than those with which the governor-general had now to contend.

To make the best use of the limited means of transport possessed by the British army, all superfluous equipage was to be left in Banga-The officers were requested to reduce their claims for accommodation to the lowest practicable degree, as well as to assist the public service by any means which they could command; and they cheerfully sacrificed their own convenience to the demands of the state. On the 4th of May the army was put in It advanced by a circuitous route, motion. interrupted by jungles, rivers, and ravines. From these causes the inadequate supply of that the guns and stores were to become prize cattle for transport became still further duced. Numbers died from exhaustion, and, oven at this time not been perfectly carried large quantities of stores were destroyed out, and among the victims of the Sultan's because they could not be carried forward. With the usual policy of Ifyder Ali and his son, the country traversed by the invaders had been divested of all power of affording relief were destined to delight the car and eye of to their necessities. Configgration had done their enslaver by the graces of song and gesits work—the grain not burnt had been buried; and not an inhabitant remained through the pience to be apprehended from these witnesses expanded waste to recount the story of its devastation, or guide the steps of those who now traversed its blighted fields. Their march seemed to be over a country where some great convulsion of nature had at once swept away every human being, and everything by which murder of other prisoners, who like them had human life could be supported. At length, at | been unlawfully detained. a stone fort called Malavelly, some grain was found; but the quantity lost on the march by the fall of Bangalore, and the anticipation was so great that even this opportune and happy discovery did not preclude the necessity of reducing the daily issue of rice to one-half and the anxiety of Tippeo increased with the of the usual allowance. Thus, struggling with difficulties, and amid the terrors of famine, the British army reached Arikera, about nine defended this course by reference to the exmiles east of Seringapatam, on the 13th of ample of his father, who had gained little or

Its approach was regarded by Tippoo with no common apprehension. From the moment of the fall of Bangalore, the attack upon which place he had regarded as mad and hopeless, he became alarmed for the safety of his capital. Under the first impulse of fear he had ordered the removal to Chittledroog of his treasure, his harem, and the families of his officers, whom he retained in pledge for the fidelity of those to whom they belonged; but by the advice of his mother, who exercised a powerful influence over him, and who represented that such a proceeding, being imputed to despondency. would have a bad effect on the minds of his troops and subjects, he abandoned his intention. The parent to whom he was indebted for this service rendered him another. Tippoo he given personal offence to the family of the In the hope of detaching that prince nom the confederacy, the mother of the sultan · wrote to him, imploring his forgiveness of an act which she attributed to the intoxication junction with General Abereromby, who, with sultan deeply regretted.

But though Tippoo allowed himself to be dissuaded from one manifestation of fear, he gave way to others, which distinctly showed the state of his mind. His hatred of the English had, been gratified by causing the walls of the houses in the principal streets of Seringapatam to be decorated with caricatures right protected by the Cavery, its left by a of the people whom he abhorred, of enormous chain of hills, with a deep swampy ravine, the size, and, in some instances, of disgusting character. These were now by royal command obliterated, and the walls of Seringapatam no longer spoke the sultan's contempt where exceeded a mile and a half, and within and aversion for his European enemies.

of Tippoo's feelings towards the English, and in such a position were obviously great; but these too were to disappear. The enfranchise-the result of such information as could be perfidy were twenty English youths, who, having received the same kind of education which is given to the dancing-girls of the East, To relieve himself from the inconveto his treachery, assassination offered the ensiest and most effectual means; consequently, according to the moral code of Tippoo, the best. The youths were murdered, and the course of trime was followed up by the secret

Such were the results of the alarm produced of an attack upon Seringapatam. An English army was now within a few miles of the capital, apparently increasing danger. He had hitherto, cautiously avoided a general action, and he defended this course by reference to the exno advantage from general actions, but whose chief success aroso from striking at detachments. Stimulated partly by his fears and partly by the representations of his officers, which were aided, it is said, by the remonstrances of the women of his harem, who expatiated on the discredit of suffering his capital to be menaced without an effort to repel those by whom it was threatened, he now resolved to depart from the policy which he had hitherto steadily pursued.

On the arrival of the English army at Arikera, a considerable body of the enemy was visible at the distance of about six miles in front. This force was drawn up with its right to the river Cavery, and its left to a rugged hill a short distance from the bank. It was at first supposed to be only a large detachment sent to observe the motions of the British army, and Lord Cornwallis proceeded to take measures for ascertaining the best point for crossing the river, with a view to a of youthful pride, and which she declared the the Bombay army, was posted at Peripatam, about forty miles westward of Seringapatam, and whose co-operation was deemed necessary to the reduction of the latter place. English general, however, soon learned that though only a small part of the enemy's army could be seen, the whole was encamped between his position and Seringapatam; its passage of which was defended by batteries running along the whole of the front. distance between the river and the hills nocannon-shot of Tippoo's line was not more than The capital of Mysore contained other proofs a mile. The difficulties in attacking an enemy ment of prisoners under the treaty of 1784 had obtained of the country seemed to show that to Seringapatam, where they were encamped, to another road leading to the same place; and Lord Cornwallis thereupon resolved to attempt by a night march to turn the enemy's left flank, and by gaining his rear before daylight, cut off the retreat of his main body to the To effect this object, six European regiments, twelve battalions of native infantry, three native regiments of cavalry, were ordered to be in readiness to march at eleven o'clock on the night of the 13th May, leaving their pickets and camp guards behind, and their tents standing. Nizam Ali's cavalry were to follow in the morning; but the order was not to be communicated till the moment of moving, lest the plan should be frustrated by treachery.

The ground occupied by the British army was intersected by ruined villages, inclosures, and deep ravines, and from this cause much in a second line under Colonel Harris, while time was lost in forming the troops in the pre-scribed order of march. Before they moved, a destined for an attack upon the enemy's corps terrific storm arose, and the march was per- on the hill. This attack might have been formed under a deluge of rain, accompanied by made at an earlier period, but it was judiciously thunder and lightning of the most awful character. Exhausted by fatigue, scared by the lightning, and benumbed by the chilling effects of the rain, the cattle could scarcely be made the troops moving forward to drive his detachto move; and the night, except when temporarily irradiated by the vivid flashes, being impenetrably dark, several regiments lost their action commenced. On the approach of Colonel way, and portions of the British force were Maxwell, the enemy's eight guns were drawn moving in almost every variety of direction. off. Repeated halts thus became necessary. On maintained a heavy, though ill-directed, fire of one of them, Lord Cornwallis found himself musketry. Colonel Maxwell had no guns, but with no more than one company and one gun. A staff-officer, who made the discovery that the general had thus outmarched the greater part of his force, or had become, in some other way, separated from them, attempted to find the column by tracing, with the aid of the lightning, the marks of the gun-carriage wheels; but the tracks, though so recently made, had been completely obliterated by the unceasing torrents of rain, and he narrowly escaped riding into the enemy's encampments. The dawn of day removed one of the difficulties which had retarded the progress of the British force; but it destroyed the hope of executing the original plan, which required the cover of night: still, as the most arduous part of the march had been accomplished, Lord Cornwallis determined to persevere, and to endeavour to force Tippoo to action on ground believed to be less advantageous to a manner far surpassing any expectation that him than that which he had chosen. The had been formed of them; but the near approach sultan did not decline the challenge. The of the first line of the British army caused approach of the English was unobserved till them to waver. Colonel Maxwell had been they had begun to descend the heights on the ordered, after carrying the hill, to leave there castward of the ravine. Their first object was only a sufficient force to retain possession, and to gain possession of a hill commanding the left of the enemy. This was perceived by Tippoo, and he made arrangements for defeat-the left flank of the main army of the enemy.

it would be practicable to cross a ridge on the He despatched a considerable body of cavalry right of the English army from the high road and infantry, with eight guns, to seize the hill towards which the views of the English were directed, and sent out some cavalry to hover on the right of the English, and to take advantage of any opportunity to charge—thus impeding their progress, and giving to his troops advancing to the hill time to take possession Tippoo also very promptly changed his front to the left, covering one flank by a steep with three field-pieces, one European, and hill previously in his rear, and the other by a ravine which had run along his former front.

From the nature of the ground, the weak state of the cattle, and the annoyances of the enemy's horse, the passage of the British infantry to the same side of the ravine with the enemy was slow. It was at length accomplished, and the requisite disposition for action made. Opposite to the enemy's main body, nine battalions were posted in a first line under General Meadows and Colonel Stuart, and four postponed till the other parts of the disposition were complete, in order to deter Tippoo from making any attempt on the flank or rear of ment from the hill.

With the attack on that detachment the The infantry kept their ground, and he had made provision for covering both his flanks against cavalry. Thus unencumbered and unapprehensive of interruption, he advanced with a rapidity and impetuosity which speedily broke the line of the enemy's infantry, and even overtook some of the guns on tho opposite descent of the bill. The infantry made a struggle to defend them, but in vain; the possession of the guns followed the possession of the hill. The rapid success of Colonel Maxwell on the hill was the signal for the advance of the two lines below against the main body of the enemy. The battle now became general along the entire front. The enemy's cavalry, who had greatly annoyed the British army while advancing to take up their ground, made no stand after they were formed in line of battle; the fire of Tippoo's artillery even began to relax. His infantry behaved in The | had been formed of them; but the near approach ing it, which have deservedly received the He was rapidly performing this duty, when approbation of eminent military authorities. Colonel Floyd, with the British cavalry, who had been kept out of the range of the enemy's for which so many public and private sacrifices shot, ready to take advantage of any oppor-had been made, was within sight, but it was tunity that might occur for their services, not to be grasped. charged the rear-guard of the enemy's retreating infantry, and nearly destroyed them. Intelerable labour to the troops, from the want Their progress was checked by a larger body of cattle, the British army by two marches of infantry, which rallied and made a stand on reached Caniambaddy, the ford at that place of infantry, which rallied and made a stand on a space of broken ground extremely disadvantageous for cavalry. Colonel Floyd accordingly ing the river; and there, on the 20th of prepared to withdraw his men from a position May, exactly a week after his arrival at where they could not act effectively; but at Arikera, Lord Cornwallis determined to rethis moment the cavelry of Nizam Ali, which linquish, for a time at least, all attempts had followed the English cavalry, throw themselves in an unwieldy mass in front of the left wing of the British army, the advance of which they impeded, while from the nature of the ground they could prove of no service had they been disposed to perform any. For some time they could neither be brought to advance nor recede. "And thus," said the governorgeneral, "an invaluable though short space of time was lost, which enabled the enemy to much cause for exultation. Tipped had disavail themselves of the vicinity of the batteries carded his usual caution—had ventured on a upon the island, and by retreating to their general action, and had been defeated, the bitprotection in the utmost confusion, to save terness of defeat being aggravated by its their army from entire destruction."

extraordinary conduct, charitably gives the in which he had been victorious; but with actors the praise of "good intentions." Colonel reference to the object for which the enterprise Wilks takes a less favourable view. "It is had been undertaken and the battle fought, he Mysorean army, that this impediment was riority," says Colonel Wilks, "the victory designed; that a horseman, with a particular was complete; and had there been no movebadge from Assud Ali, was seen at this moment ment of the cavalry, would probably have to deliver a message to Tippoo, who was in been very decisive. But the observation of the rear anxiously urging the escape of his Sir Eyre Coote, on a parallel occasion, was ap-guns, of which many had been actually aban-plied by an old officer to the present: 'I would doned, but were recovered during this delay, gladly exchange all these trophics and the and one only fell into the hands of the English in this branch of the attack; and that another messengerattended Tippoo on the same night."

infantry on this occasion, Sir Thomas Munro | the price that had been paid for it. says :- "They stood the fire of musketry till y defended every point; they rallied whereever the ground was favourable; and when at last driven from the field, they retreated without confusion. All this change of behaviour," he adds, "was, however, less owing perhaps to the improvement of their discipline than to other causes—the strength of the ground, which, being full of rocks and ravines, afforded them everywhere shelter, and made it difficult to follow them; and their proximity to the island, the batteries of which covered them from pursuit." Lord Cornwallis attributes the good behaviour of Tippoo's infantry to his presence and exertions among thom; whatever the cause, it is evident that the difficulty of putting them to flight was greater than had firing might cease. Similar communications been anticipated. But the task had been performed-victory sat upon the banners of the British commander found himself suddenly British army; yet the fruits of victory were to roinforced by two Mahratta armics, one under be abandoned—the object for which so much Hurry Punt, commander-in-chief, the other fatigue, so much loss, and so many perils had under Purseram Bhow, who, after the fall of been incurred, was to be renounced; the prize, Darwar, had marched towards Seringapatam

In great distress for provisions, and with being regarded as an eligible spot for crossagainst Seringapatam, and to retrace his steps to Bangalore. On the 21st, orders were despatched to General Abercromby to return to Malabar; on the 22nd the whole of the battering train and heavy equipments of the army were destroyed; and on the 26th the governor-general commenced his retrograde march.

Neither party in the war had at this time having occurred within sight of his capital. Lord Cornwallis, while complaining of this The English commander had provoked a battle reputation of victory for a few days' rice!"" "We gained nothing by the victory," says Sir Thomas Muuro, "but the liberty of look-Adverting to the good conduct of Tippoo's ing at the island,"-a privilege scarcely worth

The British army commenced its retreat, ur troops were within a few yards of them; and before the conclusion of the first day's march, a large body of horse made their appearance on the left of the principal column, This was not a point from near its rear. which an attack had been apprehended; but from knowing the rapidity with which the cavalry of Tippoe moved in all directions, no doubt was entertained that the approaching horsemen belonged to his army, and that they would immediately fall on the stores and baggage. Colonel Stuart, who commanded in the rear, instantly prepared to resist the attack; and the British had begun to fire, when one of the horsemen rode towards a staff-officer who was giving some orders, and shouting that he was a Mahratta, entreated that the were made at the head of the column, and the

The Mahrattas were believed to have enforce the demand by arms. but every one of them had been intercepted

by the light troops of Tippoo. Had the junction of the Mahrattas taken place somewhat earlier, some heavy sacrifices made by the British army might have been welcome. They brought a supply of bullocks, large stores of all necessary articles of consumption, and of some which were not strictly to be regarded as necessary. The march of the confederates was slow, in order to afford opportunity for the arrival of large convoys of provisions and plunder coming up in the Mahwithin three miles of Hooliordroog, a fort established on a small rock, of great strength. being occupied without difficulty, the killadar direction of Madoor, under the care of an English escort, the commander of which had distance to Madoor if required. All, however, visible on the route. Fear was thus dispelled, plished, the leader of the retiring party intitrouble. It accordingly returned, but was no sooner at a sufficient distance to permit the manifestation of Mahratta enterprise, than the freebooting allies of the British, in conformity with established custom, fell upon the unfortunate fugitives, and plundered them of everything they possessed.

Hooliordroog contained many state prisoners, and there the captors found new evidence of the sultan's cruelty. "Among a number of captives," says an historian of the period, "that were bound in chains of various construction at Hooliordroog, several, who had their ancles fastened asunder by a heavy iron bar of about eighteen inches in length, had from habit acquired a straddling amble, which, closely pinioned, could move neither arm; others had acquired a stoop, from which they were unable to stand erect: in short, as most of them had been confined in this wretched state for a period of about ten years, there some of them without resistance. Ryaccotali were few indeed who had not lost the power was not so easily obtained: it was defended by proceeded on its course. Oostradroog was killadar in the strength of his works and his

of some limb or other."

to join the English army. A British detach-|summoned to surrender, but the killadar sent ment accompanied the army of Purseram a refusal, and it was not thought prudent to Savandroog been not less than a hundred and fifty miles was reconnoitred, but appeared so formidable, distant from the army which they so suddenly that even the ceremony of a summons was in joined. Above a hundred messengers had been sent forward to announce its approach, Bangalore on the 11th June. Before the arrival at that place, a plan of future proceedings had been arranged. The continued co-operation of the Mahrattas it was necessary to purchase by a loan of nearly a hundred and fifty thousand pounds, the means of making the averted. As it was, their accession was most advance being secured by stopping the commercial investment of dollars in transit from England to China. To the English the campaign had been a cause of heavy loss. The Mahrattas, on the contrary, had, by the assiduous use of their usual practices, been greatly enriched, both individually and nationally. Yet the latter thought it fit that ratta rear. On the 18th of June the army was the English should pay for their continued services against a common enemy, and the governor-general did not feel himself in a At the foot of the rock was a town, which situation to refuse. This important preliminary being arranged, Purseram Bhow, with his surrendered the fort on a promise of security army and a detachment of Bombay troops, to private property, and of special protection proceeded by Sera to commence a series of against the Mahrattas. The inhabitants, who operations in the north-west. The greater had taken refuge in the fort, proceeded in the part of the nizam's cavalry, under Assud Ali, were to operate to the north-east. The army of Lord Cornwallis was to be interposed orders to accompany the travellers the entire between the enemy and the Company's territories, as well for the protection of the latter, appeared quiet, and not a single Mahratta was as for the convenience of bringing forward supplies, for reducing such of the intermediate and when about half the march was accom- fortresses as might be necessary, and for establishing a chain of tenable posts from Madras mated to the English officer that, as there was to Seringapatam, by which the transit of supno reason to apprehend danger, it would be plies might be facilitated when the army unnecessary to subject the escort to further should be called to assemble before the enemy's capital,

The first movement of Lord Cornwallis was in a south-eastern direction to Oossorc. his approach the garrison evacuated and blew up the fort. A train had been laid for the magazine, intended to explode after the entry of the English troops; but by a happy accident it did not take effect. Here again the perfidy and cruelty of Tippoo were brought conspicuously to notice. Three Englishmen had been confined in Oossore; one of whom, named Hamilton, having given up all hopes of recovering his freedom, had reconciled his mind to the circumstances in which he was placed, and apparently contemplated Oossore as his final abode. As in other instances, the full of when liberated, they could not for a length of Bangalore had led to the murder of these untime alter or amend; some, from having been happy men, whose graves were now pointed out to their indignant countrymen.

From Oossore the English army moved in the direction of the Policode and Ryaccotah passes, and took possession of various forts, successive ranges of works, and garrisoned by Hooliordoorg was dismantled, and the army eight hundred men; and so confident was the mons to surrender, but fired on the flag that brought it. The task of reducing this place fell to a brigade under Major Gowdie, who sent a detachment of about three hundred and fifty men, with guns, to attack the pettah. The gate was soon blown open; but the garrison, aided by the inhabitants, kept up a brisk fire on the assailants from the upper and central works. Major Gowdie led the succeeding attacks in person, and carried several successive gates, but did not venture to attempt the sum-On the appearance of the main body of mit. the army, however, the place surrendered.

The capture of other forts of inferior importance demands no especial notice; but the attack on Nundedroog is entitled to some attention. This fort was situated on a granite rock of tremendous height, and no labour had been spared to add to its strength. Gowdie, who had reduced many of the minor forts, found his means inadequate to an attack upon Nundedroog. Reinforcements were obtained, and the guns having with incredible labour been carried part of the way up the hill, batteries were constructed, and began to fire The fire was vigorously with visible effect. returned from the fort; but at the end of twenty-one days two breaches were effected by the besiegers-one in the exterior rampart, the other in an outwork. Lord Cornwallis now advanced his army within a few miles of the place, and orders were given for a night as-It took place soon after midnight of the 19th of October, and was made simultaneously by two parties upon the two breaches. The enemy were prepared to receive the assailants with a heavy fire of musketry and rockets; but more injury was inflicted by stones of immense size and weight rolled down upon those who were ascending. The resistance. however, was not long protracted; and Nun-Maxwell then proceeded towards Kistnaghery, dedroog was added to the acquisitions of the with the intention of destroying the pettah, so attack was made, a portion of the garrison clamorous for surrender; and on its ing place, some descended the wall by laders of ropes, and escaped through the jungles; others, abandoning their posts, fled for shelter to the principal pagoda, where they were subsequently made prisoners. The commanding officer was in despair. His name was Luft Ali Beg; he was a man of high rank, and had stood well in the esteem of Hyder Ali. the battle of Arnée he had been ordered to make a charge with a large and select body of cavalry on the rear of the English, with a view to facilitate the retreat of Hyder Ali's artillery. He attempted to execute his orders, but was checked by the active and well-directed fire of the horse artillery of the English, which his troops refused to face. The wrath of the capricious barbarian whom Luft Ali Beg served was extreme; and his unfortunate servant was him severe corporal punishment, the marks of shot, obtained from Major Cuppage, he hoped garrison, that he not only rejected the sum-|which were to be exhibited to two Brahmin witnesses, in proof that the sultan's orders were carried into effect. The ingenuity of Luft Ali Beg and his gaoler contrived to evade the actual execution of the sentence by the use of a caustic, which produced the appearance necessary to satisfy the witnesses, without subjecting the sufferer to any serious inconvenience; and as under an Eastern despotism such incidents are soon forgotten, Luit Ali Beg, after a time, became again an important personage in the court and camp of the Mysorean sovereign. By Tippoo he was associated with three other of his servants in an embassy to Constantinople, which was to have proceeded from thence to Paris; but the ambassadors never got beyond the former city, where their reception was cold and unsatisfactory; and after an absence of nearly five years they returned, without any result but the expenditure of about twenty lacs of rupees, the loss by contagious disease of several hundreds of their followers, and the contribution to the state papers of Mysore of a journal of vast extent. former failings, Luft Ali Beg had now added that of having suffered one of the strongest and most important places in his master's dominions to fall into the hands of the English.

The reduction of Nundedroog was followed by the despatch of a detachment under Colonel Maxwell into Baramalial, to counteract the depredations in progress there by a force under Bakir Saib, son of the gallant killadar of Darwar, slain in the capture of that place. The business assigned to this force was to devastate the whole country, so as to incapacitate it from contributing to the supplies of the English army, and its chief post was at a mud fort named Penagra. The fort was speedily taken. and Bakir Saib withdrew from the country which he had been sent to ravage. oritish army under Lord Cornwallis. Before as to leave the enemy's predatory parties no cover there. Possession of the pettah was soon gained; and an opportunity seeming to offer for a successful attack upon the upper fort, the attempt was made and failed. British detachment sustained considerable loss, but retired in good order, after setting fire to the pettah.

In Coimbatore, the defence of the fort bearing the same name with the province, and of Paligaut, with their reciprocal communications, had been intrusted to Major Cuppage. That officer deeming Coimbatore incapable of sustaining a siege, removed the heavy guns, ammunition and stores to Paligaut. Lieutenant Chalmers, who was left at Coimbatore, on examining the guns which had been cast aside as unserviceable, found three which stood proof. By collecting and joining wheels and fragments of carriages which lay scattered about the fort, he found the means of mountcommitted to the custody of another Maho-ing them. With these and a few swivels, a metan officer, with instructions to inflict upon quantity of damaged powder, and five hundred to make a stand for a few days, in the exent of jonly was the ditch filled by the assailants, but the fort being attacked.

by a force of two thou and infantry, a con-libed not a timely reinforcement been sent to eiderable body of cavalry, eight guns, and a his relief; and Lieutenaut Chalmers, who was number of irregular troops. The garrison personally engaged in defending the weakest consisted of a hundred and twenty topases, point of the works, was in danger of a similar literally, wearers of hats, partially of Portus late. At a moment when successful resistance guese origin, and about two hundred Travaus becamed scarcely longer practicable, one of the coreans, half of whom ran away when they barrels, being thrown amongst a crowded mass found a riege was expected, while there who of the enemy, exploded, and the fortune of the tenrined were extremely insulardinate.

the expiration of two days without effect. On and within the ditch exceeded the entire the third day a battery was completed, and the strength of the garrison by whom they had fert was once more summoned, but with an offer been ro bravely repulsed. of favourable terms. The offer was rejected. and in the evening the besiegers began to fire abandoned; and though a due regard to the from the battery. The shot did considerable rafety of Paligant prevented Major Cuppago damage to the works, which it gave the gar- from doing much for their relief, he afforded tion abundant employment to repair. Anorrome a istance, and with the aid of some rether battery was completed on the following venue troops under the direction of Mr. Macday, and a vinerous fire of guns and rockets lead, a gallant and enterprising civil servant, was maintained. A third leatery was soon in the enemy were driven from the pettah, which a forward state. In the mean time Lieutenant they had continued to occupy, and chased to Chalmers had prepared reveral casks, filled the Bewany, a dictance of about twenty miles, with combustibles, which were placed on the with the loss of a large quantity of their comparts, to be used against the enemy should refores. To add to the permanent strength of they attempt an escalade, which, from their the garrison, a company of sopoys, commanded preparation of ladders, reemed to be intended, by Lieutenant Na-h, was ordered in, and by The enemy prepared a fourth battery, and the come further additions it was increased to besleged opened three names. As the danger about reven hundred men. increwed, the mines were loaded and the gates. Scarcely had Lieutenant Chalmers time to blocked up with earth and stones. The store repair the breaches in the works and make of shot beginning to fail, the hammermen were other dispositions for defence, before the enercisely employed in making iron clugs, to my evappeared. The force now arrayed against supply the dehelency of balls. The works of Coimbatore consisted of eight thousand regular the besiegers continued to be carried on till infantry, with fourteen guns, four mortars, they were advanced within fifty yards of the and a large body of irregulars and horse, ditch; and as it was known that large rein- it was commanded by Kummer-oo-Deen. The forcements were proceeding to their assistance, enemy took possession of the pettah without a general attack was now hourly expected, opposition, erected batteries, and oponed ap-At this time the store of ammunition within the fort was nearly exhausted; the wounded, who were numerous, were without medical assistance; and the Travancoreans who remained were clamorous for surrender. Still the gallant commander, who was nobly supported by a young French officer named Do la Combe, in the rervice of the rajah of Travaucore, refused to succumb.

Two months, within two days, had passed before the enemy ventured on a general as-They advanced with great steadiness, planted their ladders, and mounted the parapet at five distinct places. The first struggle took place at a point defended by De la Combe, whose personal gallantry communicated its influence to those whom he commanded, and for the western army, was assembled at Paliprepared for the assailants a fierce resistance. gaut, and Kummer-oo-Deen made a demon-The enemy had avoided the mines, and resort stration of getting into Major Cuppage's rear, to the combustible barrels was delayed till not for the purpose of occupying the pass. This numbers of them were actually on the ram-The apprehension of attack was roon con-parts, fighting hand to hand with the besieged verted into certainty. The place was invested De la Combe would have been overpowered day was turned. The besiegers gave way, The enemy pitched on the north-west of the pertal, and as party after party retired from the pertal, and summoned the place to surrender, tamparts, their disconfiture was increased by ursler pain of death to every percen within it, hurling down on them wast pieces of rock, not excepting women and children. The summer the wast classified, it was repeated after of the conflict lasted two hours, and the number mens was diverganted; it was repeated after of the enemying dead left on the ramparts proaches, under the cover of a heavy fire, which the besieged were able to return very inadequately. But the spirits of the garrison were cheered by intelligence that Major Cuppage was advancing with three battalions of Company's sepoys, two of Travancoreans, and six field-pieces, to compel the enemy to raise the siege. To divert this force from its object, and probably at the same time to strike a serious blow at the efficiency of an important portion of the English force, Kummer-oo-Deen, leaving a strong body in the trenches, marched with the remainder of his force a distance of about ten miles, to the vicinity of a pass where the woods of Arivally terminate and the plain commences. A large convoy of oxen, intended would have enabled him to cut off the passage of English officers for the reputed impregnaof the convoy, and by the force of numbers bility of Indian fortresses; and it was deterto embarrass Major Cuppage's return to mined to test the claims of Savandroog in That officer accordingly fell back, this respect. and the occupation of the pass was decided by a severe action, in which Major Cuppage was He immediately returned to Pavictorious. ligaut, while Kummer-oo-Deen proceeded to resume the siege of Coimbatore, relieved from the fear of interruption.

It was not fitting that such men should be

The fate of that place was now sealed. All hope of relief was cut off, the ammunition, from the first, bad, was nearly expended, a wide breach had been made perfectly practicable, and the sap had been carried to the covered way. Lieutenants Chalmers and Nash were both wounded in one day; and the most determined of the gallant defenders of this miserable fort saw the necessity of surrender. Negotiations for this purpose were commenced, and soon brought to a conclusion, the enemy being quite ready to grant the besieged favourable terms. The place was first invested on the 13th of June; one hundred and fortythree days afterwards, on the 3rd of November, the conquerors took possession of it. In reference to its strength or importance, Coimoccurrences.

It was a condition of the capitulation, that the garrison should be permitted to march to the place, it was pretended that this condition could not be acted upon without the sultan's ratification. The sequel of this tale of perfidy need scarcely be told. After a detention of thirteen days at Coimbatore, the prisoners were marched to Seringapatam, where they were subjected to the cruelties and indignities which were the ordinary lot of those who fell into the hands of the barbarian Tippoo Sultan. comment upon a fact of such frequent occurre would be alike tedious and vain.

While these events were in progress, the attention of Lord Cornwallis had been constantly directed to the establishment of such means for the transmission of supplies as might prevent the necessity of abandoning the mediabout eighteen miles west of Bangalore. greater height than Nundedroog, rising from any attempt for that purpose be made. a base eight miles in circumference, and sepanot long before been reconnoitred, and was deemed unassailable; but the capture of some other hill forts, and more especially of Nun-

The conduct of the siege was intrusted to

Colonel Stuart, and the force assigned to him. in addition to a powerful artillery, consisted of two European and three native regiments. The remainder of the army was disposed so as to watch every avenue from Seringapatam by which the operations of the siege could be disturbed. On the 10th of December Colonel Stuart pitched his camp within three miles of the north side of the rock, the point from which the chief engineer, after reconnoitring, proposed to carry on the attack. operation was one of vast labour and difficulty -it was to cut a gun-road from the encamp-ment to the foot of the mountain, over rocky precipices, and through a thick forest of bamboos, and when made, to drag the guns over A noxious and pestilential atmosphere added to the dangers of the besiegers, and Tippoo, on hearing of the attempt, is reported to have congratulated his officers on the infatuation of the English in engaging in an enterprise that could not fail to terminate in batore has little claim to occupy a large space defeat and disgrace. According to the sultan's in the history of the war with Tippoo Sultan; belief, one half of the Europeans employed but the gallantry with which it was defended were destined to die of sickness, the other has removed the siege from the list of ordinary half to be killed in the attack. Not daunted by this royal prediction, the besiegers, on the 17th December, opened two batteries, one at a thousand yards, the other at seven hundred Paligant; but, after the actual surrender of yards' distance, by which the defences of the wall were much damaged; but the effect was scarcely equal to the expectations which had been formed. The wall was built with stones of immense size, those of the lower tier being riveted to the rock by iron bolts. On the 19th another battery was erected, which it was found necessary to advance to within two hundred and fifty yards of the wall. course of that and the succeeding day a practicable breach was effected, and orders were given to storm on the following morning.

The bamboo forest, which had been a source of difficulty in the construction of the gunroad, was found of some service in the close approaches of the attack. Under its cover, and that of crevices and rugged parts of the tated attack upon Scringapatam from the rock, a lodgment was made for the troops cause that led to the relinquishment of the within twenty yards of the breach. The stormformer. One of the most serious impediments ing party, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel to success was the possession by the enemy of Nesbitt, was directed to four different attacks, the strong fortress of Savandrobg, situated and parties were detached round the mountain, to draw the attention of the enemy from the consisted of an enormous mass of granite, of main object, and prevent their escape, should

The hour fixed for the assault was eleven rated by a chasm, at the distance of about o'clock, and it was to commence on the distwo-thirds of its total elevation, into two cita- charge of two guns from the batteries. At dels, each independent of the other. It had the appointed hour the expected signal was given, and the party advanced to the storm, while the band of one of the English regiments pealed forth the inspiring air of Britons strike dedroog, had tended to diminish the reverence home. A large body of the enemy had been observed running down from the western bill, jouly object was to pain time for propering for the defence of the breach, which was a more efficiently for defence, the again trecom-little below the extern hill; but on the appear-menced, and wall after wall was carried, till ance of the English they were reized with placed, and wall after wall was carried, till the resallants reached the summit. Some of punic, and hell. The extern hill was com-pletely carried, without mesting or even over-tures. The attackbase and confering of the carried by crealade. taking the carmy.

Momen, to whom it was intrusted, was keen as a ringle European was eeen above any instructed either to advance or not, as circum of the walls, they fled precipitately. Tho stances might render expedient. The officer killadar was made prisoner, and many of the in command of the citated having withe sed garrion killed. Many more, terrified at the the abandoment of the eastern hill and the cicht of the European bayonets, precipitated at the purpose of taking them in flank, when he ing on one mode of death in their anxiety to war unexpectedly met among the rocks by a cape another. The terror of the garrison the party of Captain Moreon. He retreated had commenced before the actual danger. On with appealment on the party of the detailment of the method of the detailment to the contract of the detail of the contract of the detail of the contract of the detail of the deta with precipitation, followed with great vigour the appearance of the detachment before the by the English. An attempt was made to place, they had mutinied, and four hundred shut the first gate against the pursuers, but finen had deserted in the night. To the prethe man who was performing the duty was valence of fear the English were unquestionkilled by a shet fired from rome distance by a lably indebted for the case with which they killed by a slot first from rune distance by a jubly indebted for the case with which they regrent of the 71st regiment. The English obtained posession of this fortress. "Althor rushed in, and entering every succeeding though," says Major Dirom, "such was the barrier with the enemy, were room in possession of the top of the mountain. Thus, in less than an hour, and in open day, the stunight have defended the place against an pendens fortress of Savandroog was carried by army, it was only at the last gateway that stum, as d the boast of its impregnishing for they attempted any resistance, and that only ever element. The English had not a man by fitting a few musket-shot, by which two hilled and only one consider. killed, and only one wounded.

dar was, that he would not surrender his part taken with little trouble. till the English Lad taken Springapatam. It The army of the nigam had long been was supposed that the fall of Savandropp engaged in hesigning Goorumconda, but with might have made him less computous, and a la very indifferent prospect of bringing their flag of trace was despatched, offering life ral operations to a successful ending. The manusterms. The staff efficer who accompanied it artillery was unable to breach the lower fort, was beckered from the fort to advance; he and to supply their deficiency some guns were complied with the invitation, and when within despatched by Lord Cornwallis after the fall of rixty yards of the gate, a fire of musicitry Nundedroog. Still nothing was effected till was opened on him and the non-commissioned Capitalia Read, who commanded the English officer who here the flar, but from which, detachment rerving with the nizam's army, Lappily, both e-caped unhurt. On the follow-rendered weary and indignant by the clumsy Lappily, both e-caped unhurt. On the follow-rendered weary and indignant by the clumsy ing day the fort was attacked in a manner for proceedings which he had been compelled to which the governor was not prepared. A witness, offered, if intrusted with the exclunumber of field-pieces were run down to ap-|sive management of the attack, to put the pointed stations, and under cover of their fire hizam's officers in possession of the lower fort, an escalade commenced.

The side of the rock assaulted roce at an angle of about thirty-five degrees, and was defended by seven ramparts, rising above each first stormed. The orders given to the artillery assailants, against the next wall in succession, I ticable breach. for the purpose of keeping down the fire of the garrison. The pettah was carried so on for the attack; and the small party of artilrapidly as to astonish the killadar, and induce lerymen, who were the only European troops him to demand a parloy. It was granted; with the detachment, volunteered to quit their

The a-tonishment and confusion of the enemy The attack on the watern bill was thought were so great, that their fire, though heavy, to be a work of greater difficulty, and Captain was for the most part thrown away, and as soldiers were wounded." The total number The pext place attempted was that which of wounded in the English detachment was was next to Expandency in ettenoth and im-livery small; and, like Savandroog, Optradroog pertance. Outra-freez had some time before was carried without the loca of a ringle life. been summoned, and the answer of the kills Some other forts of inferior importance were

which commanded the only access to the hill, and having effected this service, to leave them to conduct the further operations in their own way. The offer was accepted; and Captain other, including that of the pettah, which was Read, having constructed a battery of two twenty-six and two eighteen pounders within officers were, as fast as one wall should be four hundred yards of the wall, in two days carried, to point the guns, over the heads of the lafter it commenced firing, had effected a prac-

The night of the 7th of November was fixed but it soon becoming apparent, from the guns and lead the assault. Measures having movements of the garrison above, that the been taken to divert the attention of the enemy, the assailants advanced, and with injury-in the presence of one of his minions little opposition mounted the breach. Having | ready to perform any act which he believed cleared the obstacles by which their progress would be gratifying to his master, and who was impeded, they advanced along the rampart in this instance was influenced by feelings of till they met a body of the enemy, who made personal hatred. Hafiz was carried to a cona stand at the second bastion. The artillerymen charged them, and they instantly gave dark and bloody deeds, and there murdered way. No further resistance was offered, and with circumstances of extreme barbarity, Aly the greater part of the garrison took refuge in the upper fort. The lower fort was delivered to the charge of Nizam Ali's troops, but they were not destined to retain undisturbed possession of it. A large reinforcement, soon after the capture, arrived from Hyderabad, under the command of the minister, Moosheeroo-Moolk, who, on his departure with the main body of his forces and the English detachment to take part in the operations of ing from these murders, was nearly all that Lord Cornwallis, left the charge of the lower Tippoo gained by the recapture of the lower fort fort to an officer of some reputation, known by the name of Hafiz Jee. In December, the cldest son of Tippoo Sultan appeared before Goorumconda, with an army amounting to about twelve thousand horse and foot. Their approach was quite unlooked for; and Hafiz, supposing the party to consist but of a few plunderers, mounted an elephant and went out to reconnoitre, accompanied by only a few horsemen. He was speedily surrounded, and, descending from his elephant, was about to mount a horse and endeavour to force his way back, when he was made prisoner. The troops, who issued from the fort in small parties, were destroyed in detail, and panic seizing the rest, the recent acquisition was precipitately evacuated with considerable loss. Hafiz Jee was an object of peculiar hatred to Tippoo. He had been employed on an embassy from the nizam to the sultan, by whom he had been treated with that disrespect which the despot of Mysore was in the habit of exhibiting to the accredited servants of other states. had afterwards, in his capacity of minister of the nizam, been associated with the refusal of t prince to connect his family with that of poo by the tie of marriage; and this offence I never been forgiven. Aly Reza, the man nrough whom the rejected proposal of matrimonial alliance had been made, was now with the army before Goorumconda, and in his · hands rested the fate of Hafiz Jee. soner had soon the means of judging of the spirit in which he was regarded by those into whose power his imprudence had thrown him. He was plundered of everything about his person, even to the last article of clothing; and, but for the charity of some one who bestowed on him an old quilt, he would have been left altogether destitute of covering. In this forlorn condition he was visited by his old antagonist, Aly Reza, who reproached him with his conduct respecting the proffered marriage. Hafiz answered, that he and Aly Reza were then serving their respective masters, selves for making so pitiful a defence." It was and that the day was past. The remembrance of the intention of the stormers not to allow any it was, however, not past. The victim was of the Mahratta plunderers to enter the place;

cealed situation, fitted for the execution of Reza feasting his eyes with the vengeance inflicted on his opponent. The success of the attack upon Goorumconda was further signalized by the murder of a French officer in the service of the nizam; and thus the triumph of Tippoo's army was celebrated by acts of treachery and cruelty which Tippoo himself need not have disdained to superintend. The advantage, whatever it might be, resultof Goorumconda, which was speedily restored to the nizam by the English detachment.

The Mahratta army under Purseram Bhow, with a British detachment under Captain Little, had, on leaving Lord Cornwallis, proceeded to attack a fort named Dooradroog. The Mahratta general had anticipated that it would surrender without opposition; but, after repeated attempts, its reduction was found impracticable, and the army continued its march towards Chittledroog. That place was reconnoitred, but deemed too strong for attack. Purseram Bhow entertained some hope of buying over the killadar; but either that officer's honesty, or the fact that his family were detained in Seringapatam as hostages for his fidelity, forbade the conclusion of a bargain. Purseram Bhow consoled himself for the disappointment by plundering whenever oppor-tunity presented. The illness, real or pre-tended, of the Mahratta general delayed for a time the progress of the army; but on the 18th of December they arrived near Hooly Onore, a fort which Captain Little immediately proceeded to reconnoitre. It was thought that it might be attacked with a prospect of success. The pettah was gained with little difficulty, and thence some guns opened on the fort, at a distance of one hundred and fifty A breach having been effected, the fort was stormed with success, and without the loss of a man, on the same day which, with similar immunity from loss, transferred the important fortress of Savandroog into the possession of the English. The garrison was reported to be a thousand strong, but Lieutenant Moor, who was one of Captain Little's detachment, concludes that they did not exceed half that number. Assuming their strength at this reduced estimate, that officer, however, makes a remark, the truth of which is in no degree invalidated by the colloquial simplicity with which it is conveyed, that "they ought to have been ashamed of themselves for making so pitiful a defence." It was in the power of a prince who never forgot an but the news of its capture was soon carried Simega. Tippeo had strengthened his pro-the most brilliant of the war. vincial troops in Bednore by the addition of a The army of Reza Saib being dispersed, division under his relation Reza Saib, and that Captain Little prepared to prosecute the siego intention of making an attack on the rear of the fulation upon terms was made and accepted. a distance.

The force destined to the attack upon Rezul

After the fall of Hooly Onore, the Mahratta to the success of the day; they were rather army sucl Captain Little's detachment pro- an incumbrance than a support. By military cooled in a south-western direction towards writers this action has been regarded as one of officer was thus enabled to take the field with of Simoga. A battery of five guns, after a a force of eight thousand men and ten guns, day's firing, effected a practicable breach. All This force was posted in the jungle, with the was ready for the storm, when an offer of capiconfederates, as soon as they should be engaged The commander of the fort duly appreciated in the riege of Simoga, simultaneously with a the value of the Mahratta faith, for it was tartic to be made from the fort. This being thought necessary to stipulate, not only that known, it became an object of importance to private property should be respected, but that dislodge them previously. The position of the inhabitants should be considered under Reza Sails was strong; his right rested on the the protection of the British, who were to river, his front was covered by a deep ravine, guarantee the treaty and take possession of and his left by jungle, deemed impenetrable the fort. These conditions were to continue there, but which became somewhat lighter at in effect only until the English detachment retired from the vicinity. On its march to the southward, the custody of the fort was trans-Saib was composed of about a thousand English forred to the Mahrattas, and also the charge repoys, with four guns and five hundred Mah- of some prisoners of rank, who, within the ratta infantry. Three thousand Mahratta English camp, had been treated with marked horse were posted near the place of attack, attention and kindness, and been totally the change, these prisoners were seen by some division, on being discovered, pushed briskly camp. Their condition was wretched: they enemy's lines about a quarter of an hour after had been plundered of overything valuable, their approach became known. and, receiving neither money nor subsistence, they had been compelled to sell their clothes menced, was ascending the Carigaut Hill, an to procure the means of sustaining life. Some eminence on the right of the enemy's camp, officers of inferior rank were in one respect kept in irons. Such is Mahratta faith and part of the island, and protected the right Mahratta humanity.

determined to perform his engagement with range over which Colonel Maxwell had chased the British governor-general, since no advan- a corps of the enemy at the battle in the month tage seemed likely to accrue from taking any of May preceding.

other course.

army under Lord Cornwallis, which was at of the 72nd, the regiment by which the hill Octradroog, awaiting the coming up of some artillery, some stores, and a battering train, as well as the expected junction of the army of the nizam. These objects being accomplished, the combined army commenced its march, and distant point than was intended, and was conon the 5th of February Lord Cornwallis was sequently later in reaching the hedge than the once more in sight of Seringapatam, and of central column; but about half-past eleven this Tippoo's army encamped under its walls.

On both sides of the river, opposite to the island of Seringapatam, a large space is inclosed by a bound hedge, which marks the limits of tions contemplated by Lord Cornwallis, and the capital, and affords a place of refuge from the incursions of cavalry. On the north side, the inclosure was occupied by Tippoo's army. Within it were several redoubts, one of which, erected on a commanding eminence, was a post cordingly, having left a sufficient force for the of great strength. calculated to shield his troops from attack, or acilitate retreat in case of necessity, and his nt line was defended by a hundred pieces of wy cannon. In the fort and island which rmed his second line there were not fewer than three hundred pieces of cannon. Reconnaissance having been made, Lord Cornwallis determined to attack the enemy on the night of the 6th February, an event quite unexpected by Tippoo, and the apparent temerity of any assistance. which, seeing that it was to be performed by infantry alone, without guns, filled the allies has already been noticed, was subdivided into with astonishment, The attack was made in three columns. Between ten and eleven o'clock the central column, on its advance, encountered the enemy's grand guard, a body of cavalry, who were approaching with rockets to disturb the English camp, which annoyance they had practised on the preceding night. The horsemen immediately galloped off to their lines, leaving the bearers of the rockets to harass the column and endeavour to impede its march. Many rockets were thrown, but they had little The second, or central subdivision, after clear-exempted from restraint. A short time after the approach of the British column. The front officers who had known them in the English forward, reached the hedge, and entered the

The left column, when the rocketing comnear the termination of the bound hedge. better treated—they received an allowance, The hill is steep, and of great height; it but to counterbalance this advantage they were commands one of the fords and the castern wing of the sultan's camp. This post was Purseram Bhow was to have joined Lord justly regarded as of great importance, and Cornwallis with all despatch before Seringa-proportionate care had been taken to strengthen patam. Instead of this, he preferred a plun-it; it was defended by a double breastwork design avandation into Belance but had been asked to be a strength of the dering expedition into Bednore; but being in front of a stone redoubt, but the work was alarmed by the approach of a force sent against not entirely completed: a considerable body of him by Tippoo, under the command of Kum-infantry, but without artillery, was stationed mer-oo-Deen, who had retaken Simoga, he upon it. The Carigaut Hill terminates the The same officer now commanded the column directed to this point, and It is now necessary to return to the British the works were scaled by the flank companies was stormed on the former occasion.

The right column, under General Mcadows, was to attack the left of the enemy's position. From some mistake, it was led to a more column also entered the inclosure, and proceeded to attack a redoubt within the enemy's lines, but not included in the course of operawhich, after a severe conflict, was carried. was intended that the right column should advance to meet the central column, and then await further orders. General Meadows, ac-There were other works defence of the captured post, proceeded to move in a direction which he expected to bring him to the spot marked out for him; but the occurrence of rice swamps compelled him to make a larger circuit than had been anticipated, and thus the track of the central column was missed. No firing being heard, it was conceived that all was past, and that, whether the other columns had gained a victory or sustained a defeat, it was too late to render them

The central column, the advance of which three parts. The front subdivision, after forcing the enemy's line, was to pass into the island with the fugitives. Orders were issued to the captains of the leading companies not to suffer themselves to be delayed in the camp, but to push with all possible expedition to the great ford near the north-east angle of the fort. Each captain was held responsible for his own company, as success was more dependent upon the celerity than the solidity of the movement. effect beyond that of announcing to the enemy ing the right of the camp, was to follow into

reserve under Lord Cornwallis, who took up a seven miserable, half-starved men, some of position where he might support the other whom had passed years of captivity in heavy parts of the column, and wait the co-operation | irons, owed their release. of the right and left divisions under General Meadows and Colonel Maxwell.

bound hedge under a heavy but ill-directed has been detailed, and by another ford, which fire of cannon and musketry, advanced steadily, the enemy receding before them. The leading forced the gate, and entered. Captain Hunter, companies pushed for the river, passing the who commanded this party, was not aware that sultan's tent, which appeared to have been abandoned with much precipitation. The he therefore took post, resolved to wait for in-advanced companies, partly from the badness telligence or orders to direct his movements. of the ground, partly from the nature of the He remained for two hours without learning duty which they had to execute, were soon anything. The dawn of morning was not far separated into two bodies. reached the river crossed under the very walls post would not be tenable; he perceived, also, of the fort without opposition; and "had it a body of the enemy on the opposite bank, not been found," says Major Dirom, "that the with two field-pieces, which he apprehended east gate of Seringapatam was shut and the they intended to open on his party. bridge drawn up, that night might have put decided his course; and quitting the garden, an end to the war; as Captain Lindsay pushed he rushed with his men into the river, which into the sortie (the entrance which leads he passed under a heavy fire, attacked the through the glacis into the fort), in hope of party with the guns before they had time to entering the gates with the fugitives." This unlimber them, and thence made his way party proceeded along the glacis through an extensive bazaar, destroying numbers of the Cornwallis. enemy, and dispersing several bodies of horse; The second they then took post, part at a bridge over a passed to the left, as intended, for the purpose canal running nearly across the island, part of breaking the right wing of the enemy's at a redoubt commanding the southern ford.

which their companions had passed a few horse. They were received by a volley, deminutes before. ably impeded by the rush of the enemy towards and when the smoke cleared away, the horse the island, but no attempt was made at re- were seen at a distance scattered over the sistance. On reaching the opposite bank they field. The sultan's redoubt was found abanturned to the left, and advanced for about a doned; and this being occupied by a party mile to the western gate of the pettah. It detached for the purpose, the remainder moved was shut, but was soon forced open; the troops on to co-operate with the column under Colonel stationed for its defence having, on the first Maxwell. alarm, rushed out to man the lines and bat-teries on the river. The firing from these lines and batteries informed the British party Lord Cornwallis, was formed near the sultan's that the right of the enemy's camp had been redoubt, and there it waited in anxious expecpenetrated, and it was concluded that the tation of being joined by General Meadows. assailants were probably attempting to force He came not; but, at a moment when a rein-their passage into the island. Three parties forcement was most desirable, the troops under were detached to aid the operation, by taking Captain Hunter, who had just recrossed the the batteries in reverse, while Colonel Knox, river from the sultan's garden, made their who commanded this portion of the advanced appearance. They had scarcely time to recompanies, having taken possession of the place their ammunition (their cartridges having street which led to the batteries, remained at been damaged by the water) before a large the gateway with about thirty men, either to body of troops, forming part of Tippoo's centre support any of the parties who might receive and left, having recovered from their panic, a check, or to resist any attempt by the enemy advanced to attack the force under Lord Cornto recover possession of the pettah. But the wallis. The attack was vigorously made and enemy were too much confounded even to bravely resisted. maintain what was still in their possession. The lines and batteries, which were all open were met and driven back by the bayonet. to the rear, were abandoned, and those by Their numbers, however, were overwhelming; whom they should have been defended disfugitives who was made prisoner, Colonel renewed the attack, and were as Knox received information that some Euro- pulsed. peans were confined in a house at no great with the governor-general was

The third, in the rear, formed a distance; and to this circumstance twenty-

Seven battalions of Europeans and three of sepoys passed tho river at a period subsequent The front subdivision, having forced the to the passage of the two parties whose course brought them to the sultan's garden; they any other troops had passed into the island; he therefore took post, resolved to wait for in-The first that distant, and after daylight he knew that his through the camp to the reserve under Lord

The second subdivision of the central column army. On approaching the sultan's redoubt, The second body crossed by the same ford its progress was opposed by a large body of Their passage was consider-livered with great steadiness and precision;

The rear division of the central column, which was under the immediate command of The fire of the enemy was well returned, and on a nearer approach, they and, in the confidence that from this cause persed in confusion. From one of the terrified victory must finally be theirs, they repeatedly The danger to which the creased his anxiety for the arrival of the aid which he had so long expected; and he is reported to have said, "If General Meadows be above ground, this will bring him." General Meadows being killed by the advanced company arrive in time to render any service to the commander-in-chief. The repetition of the enemy's had altered to the continued for pearly two hours, when attacks continued for nearly two hours, when Lindsay made a push to enter this gate, but they finally withdrew. To secure his troops found it shut. When Captain Lindsay apfrom being surrounded, Lord Cornwallis then peared before the gate, only a few minutes could moved to the Carigaut Hill, at the foot of have elapsed from the entrance of the sultan. which he was met by the division of General Meadows.

be noticed. After gaining the Carigaut Hill, amount of treasure was placed. The 6th of and occupying the works upon it, this column February was the day for issuing pay to the continued its course towards the enemy's camp, troops. The required amount had been counted under a galling fire from a party sheltered by out to each buckshee, or paymaster, but the a tank. Passing through the camp, it was issue to the men was not to take place till the met by the central portion of Lord Cornwallis's following day; and in the mean time the redivision, under Colonel Stuart. It was now desired to find a convenient spot to pass the treasurer, in bags bearing his own seal and the water reached to the necks of the men, and where they were exposed to a heavy fire from the lines and batteries on the island. Their ammunition was unavoidably damped in the passage, and when they gained the opposite bank they were without a single cartridge fit ever, to proceed with his work, and completed for use. Happily they were not in immediate it. The camels were loaded, and driven across necessity, for at this moment the enemy were the ford, intermingled with the British troops driven from the lines and batteries by the and the flying servants of Tippoo. They parties despatched by Captain Knox from the reached the bank in safety; and the unhaving been discovered, the remainder of the a considerable distance along the glacis, column passed over, and a junction was effected entered the city by the Mysore gate, and had with the detached companies from Lord Corn- the satisfaction of depositing his charge in wallis's division which had crossed at an earlier security, without the loss of a single rupee. The morning of the 7th of February thus found within the pettah of Seringapatam man was not shared by all the followers of the the left column and part of the central column sultan. As is usual when misfortune overof the British force, which had moved on the preceding night; the right column, and the remainder of the centre, being on the Carigaut and the reports of the morning after the attack

. It is natural to inquire, where was the suitan while his camp was traversed by a hostile force? He had just finished his evening meal when the alarm reached him: he hastily rose and mounted, but waited the arrival of accurate intelligence as to the nature of the attack, before taking any measures to repel it.

The first precise information was received from a mass of fugitives, who, rushing from the bayonets of the English, announced to the astonished sultan that his centre had been penetrated. The terror of the informants but too well attested the truth of their report; of which, moreover, the sultan was soon assured by the evidence of his own senses. In the pale moonlight he perceived a lengthened column of the English army passing through the beart of his camp, and making their way to the main ford, the possession of which would skill in fortification, and had actually concut off his retreat. There was not a moment structed the redoubts the credit of which was to be lost; and Tippoo, departing with all claimed and enjoyed by Tippoo.

Next in importance to the danger to which eadows.

The progress of the left column remains to bability, estimated that in which a large spective sums remained in the custody of the A small party crossed at a point where that of the buckshee to whom they belonged. On the first alarm of an attack, the treasurer began to load his charge upon camels with all possible despatch. Musket-balls soon began to pass around him, and by one of them he was severely wounded. He continued, how-A more practicable part of the river daunted treasurer, conducting his caravan for

The spirit of this courageous and persevering takes an eastern army, a great number of the troops deserted. They passed away in crowds, presented a total of twenty-three thousand killed, wounded, and missing—the last class contributing in by far the largest proportion to swell the amount. The treasurer, who had so perseveringly protected his master's chest, recommended the proclamation of a further issue of pay, as a probable mode of bringing the fugitives back. The suggestion showed a perfect acquaintance with the character of his countrymen, but the plan was not successful. Fear was more powerful than cupidity, and very few of the wanderers returned. While the native followers of Tippoo were thus deserting him by multitudes, a number of Europeans, principally Frenchmen, who had long served him and his father, took the opportunity of quitting a service of which they were weary. Among them was a man named Blévette, whose departure was a serious loss to the sultan, as he possessed considerable under which Tippoo had to renew the contest, than if they had been loaded with the richest he could not decline it. As the day advanced, jewels in Tippoo's treasury." the guns of the fort opened on such of the British troops as were within their range, and boxes from this unlooked-for supply, when a portions of the scattered remains of the enemy's fresh attempt was made on the redoubt. The force began to reassemble. Colonel Stuart, sultan had been greatly disappointed by the who, as the senior officer, had assumed the ill success of the former attack, and had command of all the British troops on the island, passionately demanded if he had no faithful had taken advantage of the daylight to re- servants to retrieve his honour. move to a position better adapted than that little alacrity in responding to the sultan's which he had occupied during the night, for call; but, after some hesitation, a body of keeping up a communication with the force cavalry was found to volunteer their services which remained with Lord Cornwallis. He in fulfilment of the wishes of their prince. had scarcely effected this change, when his About one o'clock they advanced towards the men were fired upon by a body of the enemy's redoubt in compact order, two thousand strong. infantry, which had advanced under cover of At first it appeared as though they intended some old houses and walls. The British troops to charge at once into the gorge; but they were in a considerable degree sheltered, but suddenly stopped, just beyond musket-shot, part of their ammunition having been damaged and four hundred of them dismounting, rushed in passing the river, and much of the remainder expended during the night, they returned the fire but faintly, till the arrival of a supply of ammunition and a reinforcement of men, which Lord Cornwallis despatched to their assistance. The enemy then drew off.

This attack was no sooner repulsed than the attention of the English on the island was directed to the sultan's redoubt, which the enemy were now making the most determined efforts to regain. The party within it consisted of somewhat less than a hundred Europeans and about fifty sepoys, commanded by Captain Sibald, of the 71st regiment. defence of the redoubt, the first object was to shut up the gorge, which was open towards An attempt to effect this was made the fort. by throwing across some broken litters and the carriage of a gun. This being perceived from the fort, three guns immediately opened from thence upon the gorge, and two fieldsoon shattered into splinters, and considerable in part of the operations of the preceding injury done to the works. The gorge being night, and being brought into a situation of clear, the enemy, about ten o'clock, advanced They were beaten back, but with to assault. considerable loss; and soon after they had retired, a cannon-shot deprived the party in the redoubt of their commander, Captain Sibald. Major Skelly, one of Lord Cornwallis's aidesde-camp, who had been despatched to this spot on some special duty, now took the command, but found the probability of protracting the defence greatly diminished by the prospect meditating the best means of husbanding the small stock that remained, Major Skelly was informed that two loaded bullocks had wandered into the ditch, and that it was supposed they were part of those which had been appointed for the carriage of spare ammuniforemost falling, the rest came to a stand, fell tion. The conjecture was right. The animals into great disorder, and went off. were soon released of their lading; and these stray bullocks, with their unsightly burdens, doubt; and never was relief more welcome "were," says Major Dirom, "more precious than that afforded to the garrison by the

Discouraging as were the circumstances to the major and his party at this juncture,

Scarcely had the men filled their cartridge-There was impetuously forward, to force the entrance with their sabres. The gorge had been necessarily kept clear during the continuance of the cannonade; but when it ceased, by reason of the approach of the assailants, the garrison formed across the opening, while the portion of the parapet which bore on the enemy was also fully manned. Their fire was coolly reserved till it could be given with effect, and by the first discharge the leading part of the column was completely brought down. covering from the momentary hesitation caused by the fall of their comrades, those behind again began to advance; but the steady and rapid fire of the garrison threw them into confusion, and, regardless of the sultan's appeal and their answer to it, they fled to their horses and soon disappeared, their retreat being covered by the firing from the fort and the rocks.

After the repose of an hour the garrison pieces were sent to some adjacent rocks, the were threatened by another attack. It was fire of which was directed to the same point, led by the sultan's European corps, commanded By these means the inefficient barrier was by M. Vigie. This corps had been engaged night, and being brought into a situation of some danger, it broke, and officers and men alike sought safety in disorderly flight. object was facilitated by the uniform of the corps being red; and M. Vigie himself rode quietly through one of the British columns. no one interrupting him, in consequence of his being mistaken for a British officer. behaviour of this corps at the redoubt did not tend to obliterate the disgrace of their previous flight. The garrison were prepared for a conof an approaching want of ammunition. While flict far more severe than those which they had already sustained; but the expectations founded on the supposed superiority of this corps to the native troops were not realized. M. Vigie and his men advanced but a little cessation of the enemy's attacks. had been oppressively sultry, and within the narrow limits which bounded the efforts of the garrison two officers and nineteen privates lay dead; while three officers and twenty-two privates, miserably wounded, were passionately imploring water, which their companions had perfect order, and highly animated by their not to bestow, there not being within the place | success." Thus, surrounded within by a single drop. death and suffering, exposed without to the attacks of a vast army supported by the guns of a well-appointed fort, did this gallant band maintain, not their post only, but their own honour and that of the country which they Great were their labours and their difficulties, but brilliant and unfading is the glory by which they were compensated.

No further attempt was made on the re-

So long as the enemy's attention had been directed to the redoubt, no attempt had been made upon any other of the British posts. But about five o'clock two heavy columns entered the pettal, and driving before them some followers of the British camp who had dispersed in search of plunder, advanced in the direction of the lines of Colonel Stuart, throwing rockets as they proceeded. A detachment being sent to meet them, they retired for a short distance; but their numbers were greater than had been anticipated, and the officer commanding the British detachment applied for further assistance. A reinforcement being obtained, the work of clearing the pettah of the presence of the enemy was They were rapidly not of long duration. course of the conflict, reported that Tippoo had convened his principal officers, and exhorted them to make a bold effort to drive the Eng-Hyder Ali; that the chiefs had thereupon placed their turbans on the ground, and sworn to succeed or perish in the attempt. The attack, the prisoner added, was to be made that night, and the march of the assailants was to be directed along the bank of the communication with the camp. was so circumstantial that it appeared de- Cornwallis. imprudent to disregard it. throughout the night. It passed, however, without alarm; and the morning showed the whole of the redoubts north of the river abandoned. The English camp was thereupon advanced as near to the bound hedge as was practicable, pickets were sent into the deserted redoubts, and a chain of posts comfort, converting the enemy's fortified camp

The day | the attack of his capital. "The proud city of Seringapatam," says Major Dirom, " which we could scarcely discern from our first ground, was now in forty-eight hours strongly and closely invested on its two principal sides; the enemy's army broken and dispirited; ours in

Preparations for a siege were commenced without delay. A little to the eastward of the pettah was a garden of great extent, containing the tomb of Hyder Ali and a new palace erected by Tippoo. It was filled with magnificent trees, now destined to fall beneath the axes of the English pioneers, and to be employed in operations directed against the last retreat of the man to whom their spreading branches had formerly afforded shade, and their fruits refreshment. Throughout the 5th of February, while the English were actively engaged in proparing for the meditated blow against the citadel, Tippoo showed no symptom of energy, beyond wasting a large quantity of ammunition in a fruitless cannonade directed to the island, to the redoubts, to every scattered English party, and sometimes to their headquarters; but the distance on all sides was considerable; and the pleasure of maintaining a continuous noise, and darkening the atmosphere by masses of smoke, was the only advantage derived from the exercise. In the evening he resolved to renew his attempt at negotiation. No intercourse of a pacific character had taken place for more than a month, and to the last driven from street to street, and finally forced overture from the enemy Lord Cornwallis had to retire altogether. A prisoner taken in the indignantly answered, that when the prisoners taken at Coimbatore, and unjustly detained in breach of the capitulation, should be sent back, he would, in concert with the allies, make lish from the island, and recover the tomb of arrangements for the commencement of negotiation. Two of these prisoners Tippoo now determined to employ as instruments of a new appeal to the governor-general. Lieutenants Chalmers and Nash were unexpectedly summoned to an audience of the sultan, and on their attendance were informed that they were northern branch of the river to turn the right about to be released. After communicating flank of the British line, and to cut off the this welcome intelligence, Tippoo inquired if The account the former officer were not related to Lord Receiving an answer in the serving of credit—at least, it would have been negative, he then asked if he were not an Lieutenant Chalmers Arrangements officer of high rank. were accordingly made for effectually repelling having disclaimed this supposed ground of an attack, should any be made. The force in influence with the British commander-in-chief, possession of the pettah was strengthened by Tippoo next inquired whether the emancipated the addition of four field-pieces to their means prisoner, on his return, would have any personal of defence, and the troops lay on their arms intercourse with the governor-general; and having learned that he expected to be admitted to an interview, the sultan requested that he would take charge of letters making overtures of peace, and lend his aid towards attaining the object. The charge was accompanied by a present to the officer receiving it of two shawls and five hundred rupees, and a promise pleted along the north and east faces of the that the baggage of both himself and his companion should be sent after them. Lieutenant and works into lines of countervallation for Chalmers undertook to gratify the sultan's wishes by the delivery of the letters; but at persons whom they met on their way; but the same time warned him, that beyond this it before they reached the tent towards which might not be in his power to promote his they were furiously riding, their ardour re-

In the communication thus transmitted, Tippoo, with his habitual disregard of truth, asserted that the terms of the capitulation at Coimbatore had been misrepresented—that Kummer-oo-Deen did not engage positively for the liberty of the garrison, but only promised to recommend it. The counterpart of the articles of capitulation, signed and sealed attempt was justly thought to call for some by Kummer-co-Deen, had been retained by additional precautions for securing the safety Lieutenant Chalmers; and had he been able of his person. to produce this with the letters of which he was the bearer, the veracity of Tippoo would engaged in preparing for the siege of Seringahave required no further illustration. the sultan was too tender of his reputation to expose it to such hazard; and before the English officer was permitted to depart, he was forcibly dispossessed of the document which would have furnished so unseasonable a commentary on the letters. Lieutenant Chalmers, however, was able to speak to its contents, and to the manner in which it had passed out of his keeping; but notwithstanding this—notwithstanding that the demand for the surrender of the prisoners taken at Coimbatore had been but partially complied with, Lord Cornwallis, with that degree of moderation which verges on weakness, if it do not actually pass the line of separation, yielded to the sultan's request, and consented to admit his vakeels to confer with those of the allied army.

Coincident with the pacific mission to the English camp of Lieutenants Chalmers and Nash, Tippoo was preparing another of a very different character. His object was the death of the English commander-in-chief; and on an expedition directed to this purpose, a select body of horse moved on the same day on which after meeting with some annoyance from the the two British officers were released, and crossed the river at Arikery. The movement was observed, but no particular importance was attached to it. The following day was employed by the detached party of the enemy in collecting information. On the third day their advanced guard interposed itself between the camp of Nizam Ali and that of the English, not unobserved, but without exciting suspicion, the intruders being mistaken for a party of Nizam Ali's horse. So similar were they to that body in appearance, that they were allowed, without interruption, to advance to the British park of artillery. Arrived there, they carelessly asked of some natives in attendance on the guns, which was the tent of the burra Sahib suspicion was excited, but the question was European servants in the modern principles of misapprehended. The inquiry was supposed fortification, enhanced the difficulty of approach to apply to the tent of Colonel Duff, the com- on this side. Notwithstanding these circummandant of the artillery, which was, without stances, it was, in the first instance, selected hesitation, pointed out. The horsemen then as the point for the main attack, and the suddenly drew their swords and galloped ground of the choice appears to. towards the tent which they supposed to be expectation that, as there were that of Lord Cornwallis, cutting down the few but those of art to encoun ceived a check. On the alarm of their approach, a small body of sepoys turned out, whose fire soon changed the course of the horsemen, and sent them towards the hills in flight, at the same headlong speed with which they were previously rushing to the tent of Colonel Duff. Although, from the mistake that had occurred. Lord Cornwallis had been in no danger, this

While the army of Lord Cornwallis was But patam, it was joined by that of General Abercromby. That officer, on the former retreat of the governor-general from before Tippoo's capital, had, in conformity with his orders, withdrawn his army to Malabar. He had himself proceeded to Bombay, where his duties as governor required his presence; but returning to Tellicherry after a short absence, with a new battering train, a supply of ammunition and stores, and a body of recruits, the army of Bombay thereupon quitted its cantonments and reassembled at Cananore. Its subsequent march lying through a mountainous country, the transport of the artillery stores was attended with great difficulty; but it had been surmounted, when, late in January, General Abercromby received orders from Lord Cornwallis to leave his battering train and advance with his field artillery only. The heavy guns and stores were accordingly sent back to the top of a ghaut which the army had just descended, and there placed in batteries erected for the defence of the pass. On February 11th General Abercromby crossed the Cauvery about thirty miles above Seringapatam, and enemy's cavalry, who took part of his bag-gage, joined Lord Cornwallis on the 16th. The vakeels of Tippoo had arrived, in accordance with the permission given by Lord Cornwallis, and the process of negotiation was carried on simultaneously with the most vigorous preparation on one side for the prosecution of the siege—on the other, for the defence of Seringapatam. The fort was of a triaugular figure, covered by branches of the river on its two largest sides. The third side, which was towards the island, was covered by strong outworks. Two broad and massy ramparts, the second at a considerable distance within the first, and both having good flank defences, a deep ditch with drawbridges, and various the principal commander. Even yet no advantages derived from the skill of Tippoo's European servants in the modern principles of ments "ity...

of the British troops and artillery would secure force from Coimbatore. success. More careful observation led to the armies were thus concentrating their force adoption of a different plan, the change being around Tippoo's capital, they were exempted accelerated by intelligence and suggestions from the difficulty which had formerly driven from Tippoo's European servants—who were Lord Cornwallis from before Seringapatam now quite as ready to exercise their skill and when victory seemed to be within his reach: the knowledge for his destruction as they had pre-supply of provisions was abundant. Such was viously been assiduous in using them for his the condition of the armics of the allies defence—and it was resolved to make the numerous, well appointed and well supplied; principal attack across the river against the the thunder of their cannon was about to be north side of the fort. The curtain there was poured upon a fort, the last hope of the enemy, perceptibly weak, and by extending close to within which sat the prince whose aggressions the bank of the river, left no room for out | had brought to his gates as a foc the head of works. The flank defences were few, and of the English government of India, bound by little value—the ditch excavated from the rock the most imperative instructions to preserve was stated to be inconsiderable, and was more-peace if practicable, and disposed by his own over dry. The stone glacis built into the wishes to maintain the same course. On the river was in two places imperfect. The walls, head of the man who had so wantonly proit was concluded, might be trenched to the tracted the calamities of war was the storm foundations, and the probable effect would be now approaching about to burst. The Engthe filling up the greater part of the ditch. lish army almost looked upon themselves as in The main objection was the intervention possession of Seringapatam, when, on the of the river; but this was not thought suffi- 24th of February, orders were sent to the cient to counterbalance the advantages of the trenches that the working should be disconvanced with great rapidity and great secrecy. When their design became fully visible, Tippoo, despairing of success in the endeavour to repel the invaders by the fire of the fort, attempted been some mistake-but it was soon ascerto distress them by turning the water from a tained that this belief had no foundation. large canal by which the English camp was The orders became intelligible when it was principally supplied. The attempt was dis-known that, after several days' conference covered in time to prevent its completion, and between the agents of the respective governthe small damage which had been done to the ments, those of the allies had delivered their bank of the canal was speedily repaired. On ultimatum—that the conditions therein laid the 22nd of February, General Abercromby down had been assented to by the sultan, and advanced his posts for the purpose of aiding in the preliminaries signed. The discussion had the operations of the siege. On the same day been brought to a conclusion on the 22nd, and Tippoo made a new effort to drive the English the demands of the allies forthwith submitted posts to a greater distance from his capital, but to Tippoo. They were embodied in five articles was defeated. Through two succeeding days to the following effect :- First, that one-half the besiegers steadily proceeded with their of the dominions of which Tippoo was in pospreparations; in four days more it was ex- session before the war should be ceded to the andy to open, together with an enfilading and thirty lacs of rupees, one-half immediately, pattery of at least ten pieces. These were to and the remainder by three instalments, at be assisted by a cross fire from the island, but intervals not exceeding four months each. Six be assisted by a cross fire from the island, but intervals not exceeding four months each. Six more especially from the redoubt formerly crores had been originally demanded; but the called the Sultan's, but which had most properly received from the English the name of master to pay more than the sum finally agreed Sibald's redoubt, in honour of the brave officer upon, and offered to confirm their denial by who fell while commanding the gallant band the solemnity of an oath. After the tender of who so nobly defended it. Colonel Duff had bis park fully provided and arranged. Even did not. The third article stipulated that all and from the combustible nature of the mateand from the combustible nature of the mate-rials of which many of the buildings within lish, the Nizam, the Mahrattas, and Tippoo-the fort were composed, it was anticipated that from the time of Hyder Ali, should be restored; the fire of the batteries would not long be opened before the place against which it was be given as hostages for the due performance directed would be wrapped in flames. To add to the embarrassments of the enemy, Purseram Bhow, with the Mahratta army and Captain the articles of the treaty, under the seal of the Little's brigade of English sepoys, was now sultan, a counterpart should be sent from the approaching, as was Major Cuppage, with a three powers, hostilities should entirely cease,

While the allied tinued, and all hostile demonstrations cease. The works constructed by the English ad-|The orders were received with that feeling which accompanies the hearing of sudden and inexplicable communication. was at first supposed that there must have cted that two breaching batteries, one of allies from the countries adjacent to theirs: enty, the other of twelve guns, would be secondly, that Tippoo should pay three crores and the terms of a treaty of alliance and per-|cluded. Most just would the retribution have petual friendship should be agreed upon.

On reading these articles, Tippoo assembled his principal officers in the great mosque, and having laid before them the Koran, adjured them by its contents to answer sincerely the question he was about to propose to them. Having read the articles, he said, "You have heard the conditions of peace—you have now to hear and answer my question. Shall it be peace or war?" The assemblage thus appealed to were loud and unanimous in professions of devotion to their sovereign, and of their readiness to lay down their lives in defence of his person and capital; but they were equally unanimous in declaring-softening, however, the repulsive truth so as to render it not quite unfit to reach the ears of an Oriental despot, were altogether dispirited, and that no confidence could be placed in them. The reed to which the fast-sinking hopes of Tippoo clung was now broken. The men who never before had ventured to intrude upon the royal ear any unwelcome sound, nowdared to speak that which was true in preference to that which was agreeable. The extremity of danger had made them sincere, and for once their master had received counsel signed and despatched to Lord Cornwallis, but indulgence was solicited with regard to that which stipulated for the transmission of the preliminaries by the youths who were to be detained as hostages. They were not thus transmitted; a short delay was asked to allow of due preparation for the departure of the princes, and the governor-general, with a very laudable feeling, granted it.

The liberality of Lord Cornwallis was not met with any indication of a similar nature on the part of the enemy. Even the stipulation for the immediate cessation of hostilities, to which the sultan's seal had been affixed, was disregarded. Immediately on receiving the preliminaries, Lord Cornwallis had issued of the princes was about ten years of age; his those orders for the cessation of all warlike brother two years younger. Each was mounted operations which excited in his army so much on an elephant richly caparisoned, and their surprise, not unaccompanied by something of dresses glittered with numerous and valuable despondency and something of indignation. | jewels. They were attended by the Mysorean It was not without difficulty that the men vakeels who had conducted the negotiation: could be restrained from proceeding with the several messengers mounted on camels, and works which they had anticipated were to put seven standard-bearers, carrying small green them in possession of Seringapatam, and en-flags suspended from rockets, preceded the able them to effect the triumphant deliverance princes; a hundred pikemen, with spears in laid able them to effect the triumphant deliverance of those victims of Tippoo's tyranny and perfidy who still remained within his power. But discipline prevailed—the wishes of the army yielded to the demands of duty, and all coffensive operations ceased. Not such was the conduct of Tippoo and his garrison. For several hours the fire of cannon from the fort, and of musketry from the advanced parties of the enemy, was kept up more vigorously than before; a British officer and several men were wounded in consequence of this audacious contempt of an engagement so recently con-

been, had the governor-general revoked his former orders, recommenced the construction of his abandoned works, and prosecuted the siege to the point when the possession of Tippoo's capital should have been decided by the comparative valour or the comparative numbers of those who assailed and those who defended it. Lord Cornwallis, however, contented himself with a series of messages, the earlier of which produced no effect. It may be doubted whether the latter were more efficacious than those which preceded them, or whether the discontinuance of the firing is not attributable to the influence of that caprice to which Tippoo was accustomed to surrender himself; but from some cause the firing came to an end, and the irritation which it occabut still without disguising it—that the troops sioned in the minds of the British troops, who found themselves placed on unequal terms with the enemy, subsided. On this instance of the sultan's folly and perfidy the observations of Major Dirom, deserve notice, from their justness and force. "This extra-ordinary conduct in the enemy," says he, "was supposed in camp to arise from a mistake in the vakeels not having acquainted their master that hostilities must cease; but the sultan that was above suspicion. He felt that it could not be ignorant of the articles he had could not be disregarded. The articles were signed and sealed the preceding night; nor was this any great testimony of the sincerity of his wishes to terminate the war. Indeed, his conduct could bear no other construction than an insolent and revengeful bravado, to fire upon us when he could with impunity, and to impose upon the ignorant part of his own subjects, and our allies, and leave their minds impressed with an idea that his superior fire (for we had opened no guns upon the fort) and his resolute defence hal been the means of his obtaining peace."

On the 26th of February, the fourth article of the preliminaries was carried into effect by the departure of the hostage princes from Seringapatam to the British camp. The elder

t he ordered a royal salute to be fired in fin the country. Not satisfied with this meaestimony of his ratisfaction.

expected, invariably over-rated the resources claim to the protection of the British governof the provinces to be surrendered, and underment, which could only effectively be exerted rated those which were to be retained by by the transfer of his tributary dependence their master. The vakeels of the nizam and from Tippeo to the power whose interests the the Mahrattas produced counter-statements, Coorg Rajah had so zealously promoted which in all probability were not less unfairly Were he given up to the discretion of the exaggerated or diminished than were those of Sultan of Mysore, no question could exist as

In partial payment of the sum stipulated by the preliminaries, a crore of superaway levying contributions on the territory adjoining his own frontier, and by these predatory forwarded by Tippos to the British camp. The vakeels continued to meet for the arrangement of the definitive treaty; but their processors to the commencement of hostilities was embarrassed by the usual arts of Indian negotiators. The cossions to be made by Tippos were to be determined with reference to revenue; but the sultan's vakeels pretended that the revenue accounts of many through his dominions, and greatly facilitated their operations by the supply of provisions, the communication of intelligence, and the districts were lost, and proposed to supply be communication of intelligence, as strong expected, invariably over-rated the resources claim to the protection of the British governsure of success, he retalisted on his enemy by other hand, as that country was not properly tunity. adjacent to the territories of any of the allied powers, the demand was not in strict accordance with the terms of the preliminaries.

The rage of Tippoo, on learning the demand made on behalf of the English, was un-"To which of the English possesbounded. sions," he asked, "is Coorg adjacent? Why do they not ask for the key of Seringapatam?" To these passionate inquiries he added a declaration, that his enemies knew that he would sooner have died in the breach than consent to the cession, and that they dared not bring it forward till they had treacherously obtained possession of his children and treasuro. It is certain that the possession of Coorg was most important to the English, as enabling them to hold Tippoo in check. For this reason, as well as in regard to the just claims of the the attempt, with a fair probability of success, rajah upon their protection, it is deeply to be would not remain effective. In other quarters lamented that the preliminaries were not so there was ground for apprehension. framed as to allow of the demand for its surrender without giving the sultan even a colour- | Mahratta allies of the British, and but little able pretence for complaining of bad faith. reliance could be placed on the fidelity of The importance of Coorg, and the services of either, while Scindia was in motion with views the rajah, could scarcely have been overlooked when the preliminaries were drawn. If such were the fact, the case was one of most reprehensible negligence. But the more probable and increased its danger, while it enabled opinion seems to be, that, from the weak Tippoo to add something to the difficulties anxiety of the governor-general for peace, it with which it had to contend. To gain time was judged expedient to frame the prelimi-by protracted negotiation was obviously the naries in such a manner as to keep out of sight interest of the enemy, while to the English it any point likely to be peculiarly startling or was important to bring the point in dispute at disagreeable to the sultan's feelings. The once to a close. With a view to expediting disagreeable to the sultan's feelings. The result was, that the English were ultimately compelled either to assert a claim in which tuen right was, to say the least, suspicious, or sent to the surrender of Coorg, the two to abandon a meritorious supporter to the hostage princes were apprized that they must merely of the twent of Newson their right was, to say the least, suspicious, or mercy of the tyrant of Mysore.

In this choice of evils, the governor-general made his election in favour of that which perhaps was, on the whole, the less. the cessation of all active labours on the part were affixed without delay to a definitive treaty, to the use which would be made of the liberty. | demand of the Coorg country furnished the The honour of the British government seemed, sultan with a sufficient excuse for pursuing therefore, involved in the assertion of the his operations without disguise, and he lost demand for the transfer of Coorg; but, on the no time in availing himself of the oppor-

The ability of the English to carry on the siege was greatly impaired by the delay which had taken place. The greater part of the materials collected for the purpose had become unfit for use, and fresh supplies could be obtained only from a considerable distance, and with considerable labour. The trenches had suffered much injury, and required repairand worse than all, the army, especially the European part of it, by confinement to a fixed spot, in an unhealthy situation, during the most unhealthy season, had become greatly enfeebled by the encroachments of disease. So rapidly was sickness extending, that there was some reason to fear that by the time the necessary preparations for assault were completed, the requisite number of men for making ences existed between the nizam and the believed to be not friendly to British interests. Thus circumstanced, every hour of delay diminished the strength of the British army such a result, on the return of the vakeels with the report of Tippoo's refusal to asprepare to move the next morning towards Coromandel, and their Mysorean guards were disarmed and placed under restraint. He refused youths, who were much affected by the intito recede from the demand, ordered some guns mation, were, in accordance with it, conducted which had been sent away, to be brought back to the rear of the army, but were there perto the island and redoubts, and preparations mitted to halt and await the result of a further recommenced for prosecuting the siege. Tippoo, with equal vigour, began to prepare for induce their master, as they said, "to hear
reason." These officers were desired to intidiscontinued the work. For some time after the cessation of all active labours on the part of the English, the stir of preparation was observable within the fort. This, being contrary to the rules of an armistice and the custom of war, no less than to the conduct of the besiegers, was made the subject of remonstrance. Tippoo, in a tone of insolence thinly disguised under an appearance of extreme humility, answered, that Lord Cornwallis must have been misinformed; but for his lorsemen set vigorously to work, and carried off a number of camels and cattle belonging lordship's satisfaction, if he desired, one of the bastions should be thrown down, that he might see into the fort. The unexpected mination. After various excuses, the vakeels, on the 18th of March, once more appeared with the treaty duly ratified in triplicate, and on the following day it was formally presented to Lord Cornwallis by the captive sons of the rultan.

The effect of this treaty was to bring the frontiers of the Mahrattas to the river Toombuddra, which was their boundary about thirteen years before; to restore to Nizam Ali his territories north of that river, and the posregsion of Kurpa on its south; while the English obtained Malabar, Coorg, Dindigul, and Baramahal, all of them cessions of conriderable importance in adding to the strength and compactness of the Company's territories.

In judging of the proceedings of Lord Cornwallis, due allowance should undoubtedly be made for the influence of the delusive state of Scringapatam, Tippoo assembled the chiefs of feeling with regard to Indian affairs which was his army and the heads of departments, and all but universal in England, and for the desire informed them, that the contribution of three which the governor-general may be supposed crores and thirty lacs, by which he had to have entertained to offer to that feeling as purchased the absence of the invaders, must be little offence as possible. But one of the preliminary articles was so shamelessly and scan- army, and the people at large. His own share dalously evaded, that no consideration of expediency ought to have been permitted to restrain benignity, fixed at one crore and ten lacs—the British Government from expressing its one third of the entire amount. Sixty lacs the British Government from expressing its indignation, and, if necessary, compelling by force the due execution of the provision thus nuzzerana or gift—a donation bestowed as atrociously violated. It was provided that all freely and with the same degree of good-prisoners from the time of Hyder Ali should will as was formerly in England the "benehe set at liberty. Tipooo had carried off a volence," so called, in aid of the sovereign's great number of prisoners from Coromandel, necessities. The remaining one crore and whom he had detained in violation of the sixty lacs were to be provided by the civil treaty of 1781, and who, notwithstanding the officers and the inhabitants generally. The conclusion of the subsequent treaty, were mode of distributing this last share of the unable to regain their liberty except by stealth. burden was left to the heads of the civil These persons fled in considerable numbers, departments, who prudently endeavoured to and were received by the English, but in a relieve themselves as far as possible from its manner which seemed as though they were pressure. The accounts, however, were made ashamed of performing this duty, and no up with all the strictness which was due to means were adopted to accertain how many of public decorum, and to the characters of the there unhappy persons still remained within responsible parties who exercised control over the tymut's power. Some inquiry was made them. Each civil officer was debited with the respecting the officers and soldiers taken during sum which in fairness he might be called upon the war, but with regard even to them the to pay, and a corresponding entry of the English authorities appear to have been satisdischarge of the claim was made with due fied with whatever explanation it pleased the precision. Had the sultan condescended to vakeels of Tippoo to give, although there was examine those records, he must have been strong ground for suspecting that in several delighted, not only by the accuracy with which in tances the missing parties had fallen victims they were made up, but by the severe exactto the sultan's vengcance. Some of the follows maintained by those who prepared them, lowers of the English camp who had been in regard to their own contributions. But the made prisoners returned after a time, each books were false witnesses, and those by whom mutilated of a hand. These unfortunate men they were compiled paid nothing. Their were shown to the vakeels, who said, that they chares were paid by an extra levy upon the had been caught plundering, and that the bar-inhabitants of each district beyond the amount harous punishment inflicted on them was withcat the sultan's knowledge. The ignorance inconvenience attending this ingenious operated the sultan was indeed always pleaded to tion. The great men, with whom it originated, experate him from responsibility for the cruel-tion exercised under his authority. He, it was inferiors; the latter were not to be persuaded valid, did not sanction them, and could not that these above them possessed any exclusive inquire into all the details of his governs claim to the exercise of fraud and extortion meet. With each ready apologics as these the and it followed that, to secure impunity to covernor general was content. themselves, the higher officers were obliged to

If, however, Lord Cornwallis failed in some points in which the national honour was materially concerned, he manifested great personal disinterestedness, by relinquishing for the benefit of the army his share of booty. example was followed by General Meadows: who, though he had proved himself unfit for the exercise of an independent command of importance, appears to have merited the character of a brave soldier and a generous man.

As soon as the arrangements between the belligerents could be regarded as finally concluded, Lord Cornwallis became anxious to remove his army with all practicable speed from the pestilential spot which was rapidly consuming its strength. The governor-general arrived at Madras late in May, and in Bengal in July following. After his departure from provided for at the joint cost of himself, the was, in the exercise of his royal grace and were to be furnished by the army, as a connive at conduct similar to their own in idirected to the reduction of the possessions of every person engaged in the collection. It is France in that country, and they fell almost not difficult to conceive what was the situal without an effort to maintain them. tion of a country thus plundered at the dis-[Cornwallis hastened from Bengal to undertake cretion of every revenue officer, from the the command of an expedition against Pondichief who stood in the royal presence, to the cherry; but no such difficulties or labours as lowest runner who conveyed to the miserable were encountered by Sir Eyro Coote fell to inhabitants the unwelcome order to deliver the lot of the English when again the capital their cherished heards. Under such a system, of the French possessions in India was sumit is obviously impossible to ascertain how moned to surrender. No protracted siege much was extorted from the suffering people; no formidable array of lines and batteries but it was generally believed that the sum far were required. Before the arrival of the exceeded the whole amount which, according governor general the place had yielded to a to the allotment made by the sultan, they British force under Colonel Braithwaite. This were called upon to pay. Yet, at the end of event took place in August, 1793. The rereveral years, a balance of sixty lacs still stood duction of the minor French settlements was on the books of the treasury against the effected with equal case and celority; and country. Torture in its most horrible forms again, as had happened thirty-two years was resorted to; but from utter destitution even torture could extort nothing; and that obstinate determination, which in the East so often accompanies and fortifies the love of money, not unfrequently defied the infliction. prince or the prisoner of the British govern-Such are the ordinary incidents of native ment. governments; and it must be remembered, that of ruch governments, that of Tippoo was changes effected by Lord Cornwallis in the by no means the worst. With regard to the internal administration of the territories subfulfilment of the pecuniary engagements of that ject to the presidency of Bengal. It will be prince with the allies, it will be sufficient, recollected that the dewanny or administration without entering into details, to state, that at of the revenue and financial departments of the end of about two years its progress permitted the restoration of the two hostage Company by the Mogul, and that the power princes to their father. They were accomband been formally assumed, although the panied by Captain Doveton; and Tippoo, in condition on which it was granted was not the exercise of that hatred to the English implicitly observed. From the weakness of which long indulgence had rendered almost the native governments, the nizamut, uncontrollable, he stated whether he should remaining powers of the state, passed at first admit the British officer to his presence. The covertly, and afterwards estensibly, into the question was submitted for the opinion of hands of the English, who thus became the his councillors. They represented that the sole rulers of a very extensive and eminently sultan's refueal might excite suspicion, and ill-governed territory. In all native states that the Englishman might be amused with abuse is the rule, not the exception; and professions of friend-hip, while "whatever Bengal, under its later nabobs, might be taken was in the heart might remain there." This as a type of the worst-ordered. During the sage and honest advice the sultan followed. period of transition, when the old authority Captain Doveton was received with great was rapidly falling into decay, and gathering courtesy, and personally surrendered his charge round it the ordinary concomitants of weak-to the sultan. Tippoo exhibited no emotion ness, contempt, and opposition—while that on recovering from captivity two persons who might be supposed so dear to him. His reception of them was far less warm and affectionate than that which they had met from Lord Cornwallis on being placed under

The war with Tippoo was the great event of Lord Cornwallis's administration; and no- ing musnud of an indolent, effeminate, powerthing of a similar nature occurred to deserve less prince, and the council chamber of the notice, except the capture of the French stranger merchants whom the course of events settlements in the year following that which had so wonderfully associated with the destihad terminated the disputes with Mysore, nies of Hindostan-when all was unsettled. The French revolution had lighted up the indefinable, and precarious, the native policy, flames of war throughout Europe, and Eng- which prescribes that each man should secure land land embarked in the struggle to chain to himself as large a portion as he can of the the demon, whose avowed object was the objects of human desire, without regard to destruction of all existing thrones, institutions, the means employed or the personal claims of and forms of government. The attention of others, received an extraordinary measure of the British governments in India was thus acceleration and strength. The before, not a staff throughout the wide expance of India was surmounted by the French flag; nor did a French soldier remain in the country, except as the servant of some native

It now remains only to advert to the which was supplanting it had as yet neither the physical power nor the moral respect which are the growth of time—when no one precisely knew with whom any particular portion of authority resided, nor in what manner the rights and duties of government were apportioned between the tottering, sink-

With respect to the administration of justice, [avoiding such occurrences in future would be, the situation of Bengal at the period alluded to to introduce a permanent rettlement of the was not less wretched than with regard to the revenue on reasonable principles, such settlecollection of the revenue. The government re-|ments to be made, in all practicable instances, here suspended; but every man exercised it who had the power of compelling others to submit to his decisions." What it was that, in such a state of society, every man who had power dispensed to his neighbours, may readily be imagined. It will not be suspected that it was either justice or law. The administrator in this case, like the revenue officer, had no object but to promote his own interest. "Decisions," like other commodities, were marketable, and, in conformity with the custom of trade, were sold to the best bidder. Where any exception occurred, the volunteer administrator of what was called justice was actuated by personal motives of favour or revenge. These enormous abuses were tolerated too long; but at length a movement was made for their suppression, and, under the authority of instructions from home, Hastings exerted himself vigorously to introduce improvement. A board of revenue was here suspended; but every man exercised it might be incapable of the trust, with a relation

holders." the act only prescribes the establishment of them, or upon some other persons; as nothing, permanent rules, for the regulation of tributes, in his judgment, would be more pernicious rents, and services; but by the mode in which than to regard the right as appertaining to the requisition was carried out in Bengal, the the state. Lord Cornwallis either entirely actual amount of tribute or rent assessed upon overlooked, or chose to appear ignorant of, the land was permanently and unalterably This was obviously more than the act fixed. demanded.

liberally the intentions of the legislature, their mouth, recommended caution and further ingovernor-general was not slow in imitating quiry; but the governor-general seemed to their example in his method of dealing with think that his duty was not to inquire, but to his instructions. A settlement for ten years act. The sanction of the home authorities for was made, preparatory to the irrevocable step declaring perpetual the decennial settlement which was to deprive the government for ever which had recently been made was asked and of any future claim upon the land. In the obtained; and on the 22nd of March, 1793, mean time some inquiry was instituted in the assessments made under that settlement obedience to the commands of the court, into the rights and duties of the zemindars; but a for ever. very slight examination was sufficient to satisfy the governor-general. At the threshold of the inquiry lay the question, to whom did the property of the soil belong? On this point different opinions have ever been maintained, and all of them with some degree of plausi-By some it has been held that in India the land has always been regarded as the proparts of the country the persons called zemindars are the rightful proprietors; while by a great majority of cultivators have a permanent interest in the soil, and that the zemindar was only the officer through whom in many cases the claims of government were settled. These theoretical differences of opinion have given rise to others of a practical character, as to the parties to be recognized by government in levying its claims upon the land—whether a settlement should be effected with a person called a zemindar, who is responsible for the whole assessment upon a given district, generally of considerable extent; with an association of persons occupying lands within a particular locality, termed a village, the inhabitants of which are connected by peculiar institutions; or with the individual cultivators, known in the language of the country by the name of ryots. These three modes of settlement are respectively described as the zemindary, the village, and the ryotwar systems; and the presumed advantages of each have been maintained with great zeal. But no difference on this point embarrassed the go-vernment of Lord Cornwallis. All the influential servants of the presidency appear to have agreed with the governor-general in the not only affirmed his belief that it actually the courts below; but they were also, to a belonged to them, but declared that if it did certain extent, courts of primary jurisdiction.

It is not unworthy of remark that not, it would be necessary to confer it upon the possibility of other rights existing in connection with the land besides those of the government and the zemindar. Mr. Shore, If the home government construed somewhat an able civil servant, afterwards Lord Teignwere authoritatively proclaimed to be fixed

The provinces permanently settled have undoubtedly prospered: being among the richest and most fertile portions of the British dominions in India, it must be a perverse system of government indeed which could materially check their prosperity; but a vast mass of inconvenience and suffering is directly traceable to the haste with which the imporperty of the sovereign; by others, that in most tant measure of a permanent settlement was carried out. The rights of hereditary cultivators were sacrificed. From the default of third party it has been contended, that the the zemindars, from their incompetence, and from other causes, the office often became vested in the hands of persons whose character or position in society commanded no respect, and who used it only as an instrument of extortion. Lawsuits in consequence of these circumstances abounded, and the privations and penalties which follow in the train of litigation were frightfully multiplied.

Changes affecting minor branches of the revenue were made by Lord Cornwallis, but the land so far transcends in importance all other sources of income, that a particular reference to those of inferior value may be spared. Some notice, however, is demanded of the new machinery created for dispensing civil and criminal justice. One of the most decided changes was the severance of judicial authority from that connected with the revenue. The power heretofore exercised by zemindars was taken away, and the European collectors were also deprived of their judicial character. For the administration of civil justice the governor-general and members of council were to form one chief court, called the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, which was to hear appeals and control the exercise preference expressed by the home authorities of the power of the inferior courts. No appeal for the zemindary system of settlement. On could be made to the Court of Sudder Dewanny the right in the soil, the same unanimity did Adawlut unless the sum in dispute amounted not prevail; but the governor-general cut to one thousand rupees. The courts immcshort all inquiry by determining, certainly diately under this were called provincial with great precipitancy, to recognize the right courts. Like that above them, they were as residing exclusively in the zemindars. He courts of revision and appeal with relation to

In each of these courts were to be three name of every witness examined, the title of judges, chosen from among the covenanted every paper read, and a statement of the servants of the Company. They were ompowered to try, in the first instance, such suits These courts were empowered to take cognias should be transmitted to them for the purpose by government or the Court of Sudder the succession or right to real or personal Dewanny Adawlut, and to order their decision property, land, rents, revenues, debts, acin such cases to be executed by the judges of the zillah or city courts; to receive original suits or complaints which any judge of the zillah or city courts had refused or neglected to entertain or proceed with, and to cause such suit was brought, were actually within the judge to hear and determine such case; to limits of the court's jurisdiction. Those limits receive petitions respecting matters depending in the courts below, and give directions | zillah or city in which the courts might be therein to the judges in such courts; to receive any charges which might be preferred tended to all persons not British subjects, in against the zillah or city judges for corruption, and forward them to the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, as well as to report to that court on any negligence or misconduct of such judges. They were also to hear appeals from the zillah courts if preferred within three months from the passing of the decree appealed against, or after that period, for sufficient reason. Whenever it should appear to a provincial court that a suit had not been bond rendering themselves amenable to the sufficiently investigated in the zillah court, they might either take such further evidence rupees. European officers of the government, as they might deem necessary, and give judgment thereon, or remit the suit back to the zillah court with instructions. The decisions of the provincial courts were to be final for sums not exceeding one thousand rupees.

The next class of judicial establishments consisted of the zillah (or district) and city civil courts. Over each of these a European judge presided. He was assisted by a register, also a European covenanted servant, and in some cases by an assistant similarly qualified. As all questions relating to succession, inheritance, marriage, caste, and all usages and institutions of the like character, were to be decided by the Mahometan law with respect

: Mahometans, and by the Hindoo law with Bord to Hindoos, each court was provided ill a native officer of each porsussion, pro-sumed to be well versed in the principles of law as expounded in their respective creeds; these persons acting as assessors to the judge, who received their written opinions, and regulated his judgment accordingly. The pleadings were directed to be in writing, and to consist of, first, a plaint; secondly, an answer; so seldom realized, of bringing substantial thirdly, a roply; and fourthly, a rejoinder justice to every man's door, inferior judica-If anything material to the suit had been tures were constituted, called courts of native omitted, either in the plaint or answer, one commissioners. supplemental pleading of each kind, but no to exercise their functions in three different more, was to be admitted. might be written, at the option of the parties, cither in Persian, Bengalee, or Hindoostanee. exercising original jurisdiction. Their autho-The pleadings being completed, the courts rity was restricted to suits in which the value were to proceed to hear evidence, either of the thing in litigation did not exceed fifty written or oral, and the latter was to be rupees. They were to be nominated by the zance of all suits and complaints respecting property, land, rents, revenues, debts, accounts, contracts, marriage, caste, claims to damages for injuries, and generally all suits of a civil nature, if the property sought to be recovered, or the defendant against whom the were the same with the boundaries of the established. The power of these courts exthe sense in which those words were then legally applied. European subjects of the King of Great Britain were consequently exempted; but it was provided that none excepting officers of the King's or the Company's army, or civil servants of the Company, should reside within the jurisdiction of any zillah or city court, at a greater distance than ten miles from Calcutta, without executing a court for sums not exceeding five hundred as well as native officers, were also declared amenable to the courts for acts done in their official capacity in breach of the regulations or laws enacted by the local government. Those regulations formed the code by which the decisions of the courts were to be guided, save in cases where the native law was permitted to operate. Where no specific rule might exist for their guidance, the judges were directed to act according to equity, justice, and good conscience, An appeal lay to the provincial courts in all suits without exception.

To relieve the zillah and city courts from part of the business supposed, from the inferior value of the matter in dispute, to be of inferior importance, the registers of those courts were empowered to hear and decide causes in which the amount or value of the thing at issue did not exceed two hundred rupees; liberty of appeal to the court to which the register was attached being in all cases reserved.

Still further to relieve the zillah and city courts, as well as in the expectation, which in other countries has been so often held out and These commissioners were The pleadings characters: as aumeens, or referees; as salis, or arbitrators; and as moonsiffs, or judges reduced to writing in one of the languages judges of the zillah and city courts, and to be previously mentioned. The decree followed, approved by the Court of Sudder Dewanny and this it was provided should contain the Adawlut. To the latter court alone was given the power of removing them. tant provision in a country where judgment | deprived of his privilege or fined. had been so long bought and sold. In their character of referees, the native commissioners ministration of civil justice. In one respect were to try such causes as might be remitted the task of legislating for the exercise of to them by the zillah courts, proceeding in the criminal judicature was less embarrassed by manner prescribed for the conduct of suits in those courts. decide disputes not brought before the court, provided the parties executed bonds, engaging law of Mahomet. The Koran was necessarily to abide by the decision of the commissioners, | the chief authority; the sayings of the Prophet, and to make the award a decree of court. In stored up in the memory of his followers and no case were these commissioners to have the power of enforcing their own decrees. Monthly reports of causes decided, such reports being accompanied by all original documents, were to be made to the zillah court to which the commissioner was immediately subject, and that court was to enforce the decision reported, if not appealed against within thirty days; cation with him, formed another resource; and the power of appeal being subject to no other lastly, came reports of decided cases by judges limitation.

various grades, and the distribution of business | decessors afforded no guide. among them, it was attempted to improve the obtained was not of the best description, and character of the vakeels or agents who might its administration, it is unnecessary to say, be employed in them. Previously, all that a was corrupt and venal. Hastings endeavoured suitor did not perform in his own person was to correct some of the evils which existed both committed either to some servant or dependant, in the law and the judges, by subjecting both or to men who were ready to transact any busi- to the control of the British government. For ness for any person who would employ them, eighteen months he personally exercised this but who were not recognized by the courts, control, but at the end of that period, the nor subject to any regulations. In the former | numerous demands upon his time and attencase, the suitor was represented, and his in- tion rendered it impracticable to continue the terests maintained, by persons for the most labour which he had imposed on himself, and part entirely ignorant of law of any description. the duty of watching and superintending the In the latter, the amount of the advocate's administration of criminal justice once more knowledge seldom extended beyond a slight passed into Mahometan hands. Some years acquaintance with the ordinary forms of prochicane. It was proposed, therefore, to introduce a better class of vakeels, by insuring the vested with a portion of magisterial authority, but the greater and more important portion of the office which they undertook, and by sub-jecting them to due control. The appoint-ment of these officers was vested in the Sudder ther alteration was made till Lord Cornwalls Dewnuny Adawlut. They were to be selected submitted to his council proposals for amenafrom the students in the Mahometan college at ing both the law and the courts by which a Calcutta and the Hindoo college at Benares. If these establishments were unable to supply the requisite number, any natives of good character and competent ability might be appointed. They were to be sworn to the due discharge of their duties, and to be remunerated according to a regulated table of fees. A small retaining fee was to be paid on the engagement of the vakeel; his subsequent emoluments were deferred till the termination of the suit, when he was to receive a commission on the amount involved, varying from five per cent., upon the smaller sums, to one-laif per cent., upon those of larger amount. They were liable to suspension by the court in which

The native they practised for promoting or encouraging commissioners were to be sworn to the admin-litigious suits, for fraud, or for gross misbeistration of their duties, and to be liable to | haviour of any kind. The suspension was to prosecution for corruption, or for oppressive | be reported to the Court of Sudder Dewanny and unwarranted acts of authority—an impor- Adawlut, by whom the vakeel might be either

Such were the main provisions for the addifficulty. There was little or no conflict of As arbitrators, they might laws, criminal proceedings having been almost universally conducted on the principles of the handed down by tradition-perhaps occasionally invented to answer existing emergencies -supplied some of the deficiencies of the Koran, which were neither few nor unimportant; the opinions and judgments of learned Mahometans, contemporaries with the Prophet, and who enjoyed the benefit of personal communiof later date, who had ventured to exercise In addition to the establishment of courts of their own judgment where that of their pre-The law thus possession of some measure of qualification for the duties connected with the restraint and

tian and European feelings were thus brought | secutors and witnesses. The darogal was also to the improvement of the code of Mahometin authorized to apprehend vagrants and suspivarious important particulars. The proposals cious persons. of the governor-general were adopted and em- declared subject to the orders of this functionbodied in regulations, which, however, mani-lary, and were required to give him all the fested a singular tenderness towards the law assistance and information which they could which they were designed to improve. The afford. authority of that law was still recognizedthe native officer still expounded its decree for | ments of Lord Cornwallis may appear to possess the information of the European judge; but little either of interest or instruction; but some the latter was forbidden, in certain cases, to notice of them was called for, first, because they act upon the opinion thus given. If the law were the earliest arrangements which could of Mahomet prescribed mutilation of person aspire to any higher character than that of for any offence, the officer declared that such temporary expedients; and, secondly, because was the will of the Prophet; but the punish- it is upon the improvement of the internal ment was not inflicted. It was commuted for government of the country that the reputation a term of imprisonment, varying according to of Lord Cornwallis has, in a great degree, been the degree of severity maintained by the law rested. The effects of the important revenue which was thus superseded. The threatened mulet of two limbs subjected the convict to double the term of imprisonment incurred by him whom the law of Mahomet would have existing, but they had perhaps little effect in deprived but of one. Again, in cases where abating them. The amount of power was the heir of a murdered person refused to pro- altogether unequal to the labour to be persecute, the native law officer was to be called upon to state what would have been the decree | was too small-in many cases their acquaintance of the law had the heir been of sterner mind, and then the same sentence was to be passed their doing much good, while the native agents as though the right to prosecute had not been waived. Further, the rules of evidence, according to the Mahometan law, were not altogether such as the British government approved. It did not, however, venture to in-|certainly succeeded. Suits multiplied, till terfere with the integrity of the hely codethe rules were left to be still solemnly enun-the files of their courts in despair, convinced ciated by the native adviser of the court; but where the evidence of a witness was impugned by reason of his religion, the officer was called upon to say what would have been the decree of the law had this defect not existed, which it in a more summary manner, and breaches of being done, sentence was to be passed precisely as though it did not exist.

To put in motion this remarkable combination of Mahometan and European law, the In a country which had long been without any resorted to were nearly the same as settled or well-ordered judicial tribunals, hose employed for civil proceedings. The governor-general and council formed a high abound. If in connection with this consideracourt of revision and control, called the Sud-|tion reference be had to the love of litigation der Nizamut Adawlut; the provincial courts which forms so prominent a part of the native were constituted courts of circuit within their character, it will be seen that the governor-respective localities, throughout which they general had no easy task to perform. His great were to make two gaol deliveries in each year; error appears to have been that he did not duly the zillah and city judges were to be magis-appreciate the difficulty of that which he untrates exercising the usual authority of the dertook to effect. Like most Indian reformers, office, both in regard to preliminary proceed he expected to do at once that which required ings in criminal cases of importance and in the la long series of years, and like most Indian had formerly been responsible for the peace of His police arrangements were thought to be the country, and whatever of police authority inferior to those which they superseded, and in existed was exercised by them. From these spite of all the provision made either for the duties they were now relieved. Each zillah punishment or the prevention of offences, was divided into police jurisdictions, superincrime continued to flourish with a luxuriance tended by a darogah, a native officer, who was which showed at once how deeply it had struck empowered to receive charges of criminal of- its roots in the soil, and how inadequate were

The village watchmen were

The above sketch of the judicial arrangechange effected under his administration have been briefly noticed; the judicial changes could scarcely aggravate the evils previously formed—the number of European functionaries with Indian character too limited to allow of were often, it is to be feared, too corrupt to offect anything but evil. If it were an object of the change in the mode of administering civil justice to increase litigation, the plan those who should have decided them looked at that the life of man was insufficient to clear off the overwhelming mass of arrears. who felt aggrieved, and who saw themselves partially excluded from redress by law, sought the peace from this cause were frequent.. It would be unjust to charge the whole of these evils upon the judicial plans of Lord Cornwallis. The wrongs would multiply, causes of complaint cognizance and punishment of petty offences. | reformers also, he evinced an unwise and an Zemindars, and persons of similar condition, unwarrantable disregard of native institutions. fences, and to remit the accused to a magistrate, the means provided by the governor-general taking security for the appearance of the pro- for its eradication. Year after year some change was made in the system established by would have had the effect of neutralizing the Lord Cornwallis: experiment succeeded experiment, each tending to confirm a truth of One of the parties with whom he had to deal which European innovators have so often been forgetful, that it is impossible by a stroke of of right and wrong are endowed with such the pen to change the character of a people, or convenient flexibility, that it is quite impos-to render either useful or popular, institutions sible to estimate, with any approach to accu-

Lord Cornwallis did not return to Bengal after his visit to Madras, undertaken with a view of reducing the French settlements on the coast of Coromandel. He quitted India in by counter proposals—the Mahratta chiefs August, 1793, and was succeeded as governorgeneral by Sir John Shore, a civil servant of the Company, who had been a member of council at Bengal, and who, it will be re-membered, when the permanent settlement was in contemplation, had offered some suggestions for securing the rights of the inferior landholders, which Lord Cornwallis had disregarded. Sir John Shore was not a man of brilliant abilities, but he enjoyed, and justly, a high degree of the confidence of those whom he served. His reputation for knowledge in and his wishes disposed him to seek British matters of Indian revenue was great, and his protection, however vague the conditions on upright and honourable character universally which it was to be rendered. He represented admitted.

The attention of the new governor-general was soon directed to the circumstances and position of the two powers in concert with whom his predecessor had undertaken the reduction of Mysore. By the treaty concluded by the three powers—the English, the nizam, and the Mahrattas—previously to the commencement of the war with Tippoo, it was with that prince, he should molest or attack either of the contracting parties, the others should join to punish him; but the mode and conditions of effecting this object were left for future settlement. On the termination of the war, Lord Cornwallis had proposed the reduction of this conditional stipulation into a formal treaty of guarantee; but he was desirous of clogging the engagement with a con-dition which would without doubt have left Mahrattas, and the nizam had, therefore, to either party at liberty to evade the perform-all appearance, a claim to call for the assistance of the treaty, and without much danger of incurring the imputation of bad faith. one of the allies were attacked, the others were occasion, while he evinced no extraordinary not to be bound to render assistance until they aptitude for the government of a great state, were convinced that justice was on their side, displayed a talent for casuistry which, if he and that all measures of conciliation were had devoted himself to the legal profession, fruitless; and, as no one can estimate the must have obtained for him a high reputation degree of conviction which operates on the in the science of special pleading. He determind of another, it must be obvious that such mined that, the alliance being tripartite, the a treaty would have been to all practical purposes a nullity. If the allies of the party gations which it imposed upon the remaining attacked thought it their interest to assist two. He accordingly resolved to surrender their neighbour, they would assist him, and the nizam to the combined power of the ther neighbour, they would assist hill, that the initial to be combined power of the this might be relied upon without any treaty. It there interests inclined them to take another a word destitute of meaning, and of Tippoo, course, they could deny the justice of the infuriated by recent degradation, and burning cause of their ally, and refuse to aid him. Still Lord Cornwallis must not be too hastily ling him to it. The result, in one respect, was blamed for insisting upon an article which engagement into which it was introduced. was the Mahratta state, and Mahratta notions not framed with due regard to national habits racy, whither a positive engagement to defend and peculiarities.

The Mahrattas had some demands for chout, both on Tippoo and the nizam, which they did not mean to abandon; and the proposal of Lord Cornwallis was met being anxious to obtain the assistance of the British to carry out their own views, but averse to any alliance which should impose upon them a necessity for peace and moderation. These proposals were distasteful alike to the nizam and the British government; and the latter, after some protracted discussion, desisted from pressing the execution of any treaty whatever. The nizam did not share in the reluctance of the Mahrattas to execute the proposed treaty; his interests that the failure of one of three parties to fulfil its engagements afforded no justification to the other two for the violation of theirs, and he urged the conclusion of the projected treaty before the departure of Lord Cornwallis from India, but in vain. That nobleman left the relations of the British government in this respect in a most unsatisfactory state, and Sir John Shore had to contend with difficulties provided, that if, after the conclusion of peace from which his predecessor seems to have been glad to escape.

The long-impending storm at length burst. The Mahrattas attacked the nizam. According to existing engagements, the British were not required to take arms in this case; both parties were their allies, and though generally bound to assist either against Tippoo, they were under no obligation to assist one against ance of his British allies. He did call for it, If but without success. Sir John Shore on this ad Sir John Shore now found that the result [mending himself to reverse of the parties battalions carried the colours of the republic once more establishing the French interest in to the successor of Mahomet Ali the cession India on the ruins of that of the English. All of certain territories, with a view partly to the

of his policy had been to hand over the nizam, engaged, and, in consequence, his principal his power and resources, from the English minister, who had been given up as a heatage to the nation with which, in Europe, they for the performance of some of the disgraceful were waging a war of unparalleled difficulty, conditions of the late peace, was set at liberty, Whatever may be the faults of the French and some territorial considerations extorted from the people, it is certain that indifference to the nizam were relinquished. The passions and power and glory of their country is not among divisions of the Mahratta chiefiains thus interthem. M. Raymond, who commanded the poved in favour of the nizam, whom his British force which has been referred to, was in- ally would have left to be crushed by the defatigable in labouring to increase the in-powerful and unprincipled confederacy to fluence of the French in the Decean. His which they belonged.

The year 1705 was marked by the death of one and indivisible, and the cap of liberty the notorious Mahamet Ali, and the question graced their buttons. A detachment was how the affairs of his ill-governed dominious moved to Kurpa, near the British frontiers, should in future be administered, gave rise to and through the agency of its officers a mutiny was excited in a battalion of sepoys on the Madras establishment. A correspondence was bart, and the controlling government of Bengard with the Eventh pricepose of Park. opened with the French prisoners at Pon-gal. Lord Holart, without previous commu-dicherry, and no probable means neglected of nication with the governor-general, proposed security of the Company's claims, and partly his ordinary plan of suffering affairs to take to the relief of the country from the frightful their own course. The first of them was the mass of oppression and abuse to which, under death of Fyzoolla Khan, the persevering Ro-Mahomet Ali, it had been subjected. views of the government of Bengal went vizier into the confirmation of his jaghire, but They were desirous of obtaining further. the cession of the whole of the nabob's territories. Thus far the object of the two governments differed only as to degree. But Lord Hobart was disposed to employ some degree of force to effect his object, while the government of Bengal were determined to carry it by negotiation, or not at all. The details of the dispute would now possess little interest. may suffice to say, that the nabob resolutely refused to comply, and compliance was not The prevailing abuses, therefore, enforced. not only continued but increased. It was indeed impossible for such a system to be stationary. If not abolished, it would in-Every form evitably grow and extend itself. of rapine and extortion, every device by which usury could heap interest upon interest, every cruelty by which avarice could realize its golden hopes was practised, till the wretched inhabitants might almost have rejoiced in the irruption of a powerful enemy, and hailed as a deliverer any invader who would have relieved them from the weak, perfidious, and profligate government by which they were borne down. The nabob asserted that he was unable to yield that which the British government demanded—that the host of natives and Europeans who benefited by the continuance of abuse were too strong for him. This, it will be obvious, was an idle excuse. Although he could have effected nothing without the aid of the British government, he might with their support have relieved his dominions from their oppressors; but he disliked the mode by which relief was to be obtained, and would not purchase protection for his subjects at the cost of gratifying the British government, which he hated. It was natural, indeed, that he should be reluctant to dispossess himself of power; but sovereignty in his hands was but a namepower he had none. The usurers of Madras were masters alike of him and his subjects, and heavily did the yoke press both on prince and people.

The same year which produced this abortive attempt to rescue some of the most valuable districts of the Carnatic from the ruthless grasp of those by whom they were desolated was signalized by the reduction of the Dutch settlements in India and the Indian seas-Ceylon, Malacca, Banda, Amboyna, Cochin. All except the last yielded after very slight resistance.

It has been seen that the policy of Sir John Shore was essentially quiescent. But besides the attack of the Duch settlements, the necessity for which was imposed upon the Indian government by the alliance of Holland with the revolutionary rulers of France, two events occurred in the northern parts of India which compelled the governor-general to depart from to the Mahometan law; the acquiescence of

The hills chief, whose resistance had wearied the whom Hastings engaged, in concert with that prince, to dispossess of his territories, although it subsequently appeared that he had no intention of carrying his engagement into effect. Mahomed Ali, the eldest son of Fyzoolla Khan, claimed to succeed his father, and his claim was enforced by the vizier, as well as recognized by the principal persons in the province. His younger brother, Gholam Mahomed, however, an ambitious and unprincipled man, raised a rebellion, made Mahomed Ali prisoner, and after a time murdered him. On these events becoming known to the governor-general, he felt, as might have been expected, that the honour of the British government required the intervention of their arms to suppress the rebellion raised by Gholam Mahomed, and avenge the treacherous murder of his brother. But the just indignation of Sir John Shore took a turn which, with reference to his mild and amiable character, was truly wonderful. He determined to punish, not only the usurper, but the entire family which the culprit had disgraced and injured—the innocent with the guilty—by confiscating the jaghire granted to Fyzoolla Khan, and transferring the districts of which it consisted to the direct government of the vizier. The justice of such a proceeding it would be difficult to vindicate, and it would be not less vain to attempt its defence on the ground of humanity. The dominions administered by Fyzoolla Khan were in a state of prosperity, broadly and strongly contrasting with the condition of the ill-governed and miserable territories of the vizier, to whose wretched sway the governor-general proposed to commit them. The promptitude of Sir Robert Abercromby, the officer commanding the British force in Oude, prevented the full execution of this notable plan. Before the arrival of instructions from Calcutta, he had marched with part of the army of the vizier against the rebel chief. A battle was fought, in which the usurper was defeated. vizier benefited by the acquisition of considerable treasure; but a jaghire was granted to the infant son of the chief who had been so basely murdered. The rebel fratricide escaped with impunity.

The other event which roused the governorgeneral to action was connected also with the affairs of Oude. In 1797 the Vizier Azoff-al-Dowlah died. He was succeeded by his reputed son, Vizier Ali, whose title, though impugned by the voice of rumour, was recognized by the British government. The grounds on which this recognition was afforded were the acknowledgment of Vizier Ali as his son by Azoff-al-Dowlah, an acknowledgment corroborated by various acts and declarations, and believed to be valid according reached the governor-general, and in the same the vizier's officers, at the monthly wages of minute from which the above reasons are four rupees:—that she was the parent of three quoted—in the same paragraph in which they sons, of whom the eldest was purchased by the appeared, and in the very next sentence to vizier for five hundred rupees, and received that in which they are enunciated, Sir John Shore speaks of its being the "popular belief" that the birth of Vizier Ali was spurious. It is not easy to reconcile the facts of the popular belief being against his claim, and the governorgeneral being aware that such was the case, with the apparent general consent of the in-habitants of Lucknow in his favour alleged in the preceding sentence in justification of his recognition.

Notwithstanding the force ascribed by the governor-general to the reasons in favour of having been requested by the vizier to honour the claim of Vizier Ali, he was not at ease; and he left Calcutta to proceed to Oude, not, as he says, with any view to an alteration of declined with civility; but at the same time the succession, but under the impression of a possibility "that the repugnance of the in-babitants of Oude to the title of Vizier Ali might be such as to force upon" him "the further consideration of it." At Cawapore he was mot by the minister of Oude, Hussein Reza Khan; and here that which had been anticipated occurred. The consideration of the new vizior's title was "forced" upon the attention of Sir John Shore, the minister declaring, without reserve, that there was but one opinion on the subject, that opinion being that the reigning prince and all his reputed brothers were spurious; and that Sandut Ali, the brother of the deceased vizier, was the lawful successor to the musnud.

The minister, who had been instrumental in elevating Vizier Ali to a place which he now affirmed belonged to another, endeavoured to excuse his conduct by reference to the same circumstances which the governor-general pleaded in justification of his own. Sandut Ali, according to the report of this functionary, had but few hearty supporters, his extreme parsimony having rendered him unpopular. while the profuseness of Vizier Ali had concilinted the soldiery, who were far more readily influenced by the liberal dispensation of pay and gratuities than by any regard to the lawful claims of inhoritance. Other information corroborated the report of the minister as to the Vizier Ali's want of title, and the governor-general resolved to prosecute inquiry, as far as was practicable without exciting suspicion, as to the birth of the reigning vizier, and his brothers or reputed brothers, as well as into the popular belief on the subject. The result of his investigation as to the former point went to establish the following facts:that the deceased prince was the father of two sons only, both of whom had died in infancy;— tion at an earlier period, Sir John Shore that he had been in the habit of purchasing continues:—"Feeling in all its force the children and their mothers, and that the impression of the popular belief of the spu-children thus acquired were, in various in: rious birth of Vizier Ali, and aware of all the begum; and the apparent general consent up as his own; that the mother of the reignof the inhabitants of Lucknow. A report ing prince was a menial servant of the lowest hostile to the claims of Vizier Ali had indeed description, employed in the house of one of the name of Mahomed Ameer; the second, less fortunate, became a menial servant; while the third shared, and even surpassed, the good fortune of his elder brother, being in like manner purchased by Azoff-al-Dowlah for five hundred rupees, endowed with the name of Vizier Ali, acknowledged by the prince as his son, and heir to his dignity, and finally raised to the throne. It appeared that the younger begum, the wife of Azoff-al-Dowlah, had invariably refused to see Vizier Ali :- that the nuptials of his heir, by allowing him to be introduced to her on the occasion, she had declared to the officer who delivered the message, that she would not disgrace the dignity of her family by admitting such a person as Vizier Ali into her presence. All circumstances seem to have combined to discredit the claim of Vizier Ali except one-the elder begum, the mother of the deceased prince, supported the person thus denounced as an unjust pretender to the throne. This, however, cannot be regarded as conclusive, or even strong evidence in his favour. In the impure atmosphere of an eastern court, regard to family honour is often sacrificed to personal motives.

The effect produced on the mind of the governor-general by the evidence which he was able to collect, is thus stated by himself:-"The result of the whole, in my opinion, is this,—that Vizier Ali, and all the reputed sons of the deceased nabob, are undoubtedly spurious. The impressions which I received on this subject since my inquiries commenced are very different from those which I entertained in Calcutta. The parentage of Vizier Ali, as many of the persons to whom I have appealed observe, is not considered as any matter of delicacy in Lucknew. A supposition that he is the son of Azoff-al-Dowlah would have been treated with ridicule, excepting by the partisans of the nabob (Vizier Ali), or those who benefit by his follies and extravagance; and I could add many anecdotes to prove that Vizier Ali has often, previous to the death of Azoff-al-Dowlah, been repreached as the son of a Fraush, and that the nabob frequently alluded to his base origin. His elevation to the musnud was a matter of surprise to persons of all ranks, and was even spoken of with contempt by the native troops at Cawnpore." After adverting to certain metives for declining to enter into the investigastances, acknowledged by him, and brought the consequences to our political reputation and justice which might result from the ac-| the fact. knowledgment of him as the successor of great blame. The most probable solution of Azoff-al-Dowlah, I still was not authorized to the difficulty is, that Sir John Shore's almost make them the grounds of rejecting him in invincible habit of leaving affairs to settle opposition to the acknowledgment and declaration of his presumed father; whilst I felt equal repugnance to fix obloquy on the reputation of the deceased nabob by an inquiry dictated by general rumours only. It is now no longer dubious that the repugnance to the admission of Vizier Ali's succession, after an interval of reflection, was general; that the acknowledgment of it by the Company excited surprise and disppointment; that it was esteemed both disgraceful and unjust, and that nothing but the support of the begum and of the Company would have suppressed the ex-pression of that repugnance. That may now exist in a less degree, but the disgrace attached to our decision still remains. I conclude with repeating, that the prevailing opinion of the spurious birth of Vizier Ali was not a partial rumour originating in enmity or interest at his accession; that it has ever invariably and universally prevailed, in opposition to the acknowledgment of him as his son by the nabob, Azoff-al-Dowlah, which never obtained credit with a single human being; and that the truth of it is now established by the clear, positive, and circumstantial evidence of Zehseen Ali Khan, which curies with it the fullest conviction of its truth, as well from his character as from his situation, which enabled him, and him only, to have a personal knowledge of the circumstances which he has detailed. In his house Vizier Ali was born, and he paid the purchase-money for him to his mother. That evidence so clear was to be obtained was not indeed within the probability of expectation."

Few unbiassed persons, after an examination of the evidence, will arrive at a conclusion different from that of the governor-general; resident at the court of Lucknow whose duty it was to watch and to report to the government which he represented everything of the slightest public importance, the general disbelief of the claim of the recognized son of the sovereign to the inheritance for which he was disregarded by the British government. The latter, however, appears to have been the fact. Before the death of Azoff-al-Dowlah, the witness, on whose evidence Sir John Shore relied and acted, had communicated to the resident part, at least, of the facts which he afterwards

One or both must have deserved themselves led him to acquiesce in the recognition of a title which he could not but feel to be questionable, and this view is not inconsistent with his own language. The consideration of the question was at length, as he says, forced upon him; he took it up upon compulsion, but he investigated it with an earnest desire to discover the truth, and his decision was a sound and an honest one.

The elder begum, though she had supported Vizier Ali, had given offence by dissuading him from certain acts of indecorum and extravagance; and in return for the good advice expended on him, the vizier recommended her withdrawal to Fyzabad. The English government, however, had found it expedient to intimate to the begum that her interference in public affairs might be dispensed with; and this communication tended to allay her resentment towards the vizier and turn it on the English. Her chief adviser was a rich and powerful frequenter of the court of Lucknow, named Almas, who had long been regarded as a determined enemy to the influence of the British government. Almas, however, suddealy sought an interview with the native minister, whose communications had led to the inquiries instituted by Sir John Shore, and fell in with what he was satisfied was the course of the prevailing current, by making heavy complaints of Vizier Ali, whom he designated in terms the most opprobrious. He spoke of the baseness of the vizier's birth, and the profligacy of his character; declared that the begum entirely disapproved of his conduct, and that it was the earnest wish, both of her and himself, that the reigning prince should be deposed, and his place supplied by one of yet it cannot but excite surprise that, with a two brothers of the late severeign, whom he named, to the exclusion not only of all the reputed sons of Azoff-al-Dowlah, but also of Sandut Ali, the undoubted heir to the throne, if the children of the late vizier were spurious. The minister recommended him to open his views to the governor-general, and to him he destined should have been either unknown or held language similar to that which he had previously employed. He subsequently re-peated it in the presence of the officer in command of the British force in Oude; and these communications were important in preparing the way for that which was to follow, as they enabled the English authorities to opened more fully to the governor-general. obtain a distinct admission of Vizier Ali's Strange does it appear that they excited no defective title from the party most likely to greater degree of attention—that no particular defend it in opposition to that of the rightful investigation of them then took place—that all claimant. True it was that the begum and inquiry into the conflicting claims of candidates Almas supported other candidates, and not for the succession was postponed till it was ne- Sandut Ali, but the claim of Vizier Ali was cessary to decide at once between them; when, abandoned by all capable of rendering efficient as was certainly far from improbable, the question was improperly determined. It argues of intrigues which had followed the death of little for the activity of the resident, or of the Azoff-al-Dowlah are thus recounted by Sir governor-general, that such should have been John Shore: -- "The preceding detail furnishes a history which has been rarely paralition into the hirth of Vizier Ali had weakened leled. Vizier Ali, without any title in the or subverted all the grounds upon which our public estimation, was elevated to the musual acknowledgment of his title had been made; by the selection of the begum, and set of the he acknowledgment of him as his son by the resident and minister. He was confirmed upon late nabels-his birth in the harems-the force it by the acknowledgment of his title by the of the Mahametan law in favour of that ac-Company, and their declaration to support it. |knowledgment - the apparent satisfaction of Without that acknowledgment and support the inhabitants at Lucknow at his elevation, he would have been opposed by Almas, whose and the decision of the elder begum in his influence over the begum would have gained favour. It proved, that if the succession to her consent to his deposition. The declarations of Almas on his deposition. The declarations of Almas on his deposition from Lucknow were during the first interval of surprise and conequivalent to a remunciation of allegiance fusion attending the sudden death of the to the Vizier Ali, and his measures were so make h Azoffal-Dowlah, and if no appeal had suspicious as to excite general alarm. Vizier her made to the unbiased voice of the people Ali immediately began to act in opposition to as a jury, their verdict would have pronounced the influence and interests of the Company, and the interference of the begum in the administration of affairs produced disorder. The and that the sons of Signishead Distallables ministration of affairs produced disorder. The and that the sons of Shoojahead Dowlah had begum and Vizier Ali were not then united. an undeniable right to it. The evidence of She censured and condemned his conduct; he Zehseen established to my entire conviction felt sore under her control, and urged her the justice and truth of the public scattment; departure to Fyzabad. An intimation to the and I had the mortification to learn that the begun to withdraw her interference united reputation of the Company had suffered by an them, and under their union the most violent act which, in the opinion of all reputable and insulting measures to the Company were people, had been no less diagraceful than unadopted. The begum, from whatever motives, just. It was impossible to silence these imnow disclaims Vizier Ali, as illegitimate and unqualified; and proposes to depose the person of not directly interfered in deciding upon the herehoice, and transfer the succession to the sons | succession, since, in the opinion of all, Vizier of Shoojah ad-Dowlah. The proposition is Ali's elevation was considered an act of the brought forward by Almas, who joins in it." This extraordinary succession of incidents gives occasion to a very characteristic remark on the could not have maintained his situation, the part of the governor-general :- "If," says | On the other hand, it might be argued, that the interests of the Company and humanity, the reputation of the Company for honour and justice, did not oppose the measure, my own feelings would have induced me to withdraw from a scene of so much embarrasement." He could not withdraw, but his mind appears to have been greatly divided as to the course which he should take. He seriously entertained the thought of continuing Vizier Ali on ine throne and endeavouring to control him through the begum. As a temptation to adopt this course, the begum had offered to make the governor-general, after reference to precean addition to the annual subsidy. Such a dent, by arguing, "that our acknowledgment plan would have given to her and her ally, of Vizier Ali in the first instance had been ex-Almas, all that they wished; but no one can torted by the urgency of the case, and that believe that it would have been beneficial to the more deliberate confirmation of it was the interests of the British government. An-|made upon presumption which could not be other mode which occurred to the mind of the set aside upon the evidence or information governor-general was, to place the administra- before us ;-that the public sense of Vizier tion of the affairs of Oude directly under the Ali's want of all title to the mushud had uncontrol of the Company's government. But dergone no revolution, nor ever could ;--that this, he observed, could only continue during there is not a man living who ever believed the minority of Vizier Ali (who was seventeen him to be the son of Azoff-al-Dowlah, or to years of age), and be deemed such a plan open have a shadow of right to the mushud; on the to weighty objections. With much hesitation, contrary, that in Lucknow he is generally he chose the right course; and as his conduct known to be the son of a Fraush; and if his was the result of deep and anxious considera-tion, the reasoning by which he was finally determined is deserving of notice. "The pre-ceding statement of facts and information," said he, "suggested questions of very serious ciled to his title from various motives—the English government; and it is certain that, without their acknowledgment and support, the state of the care was now altered; that the nabob having been acknowledged, and that acknowledgment confirmed, the question was no longer open to decision; that the discredit of the act had been incurred, and that the reputation of the Company would not now be restored by an act which, in the first instance, would have promoted it; that the public were in some degree reconciled to the succession of Vizier Ali, who had gained many partisans.

The objection above noticed is combated by embarrassment. The course of my investiga- support of the Company, his liberality, influence, interest, or indifference - men of the under the administration of Vizier Ali, admost respectability, who were not biassed mitting that we could extort from him Allahby such motives, had not changed their senti-nents upon it." The governor-general, thus addition to the subsidy; he must be put under continues:—"The investiture of Vizier Ali, in restrictions, the begun must be compelled to the words of Abdul Lateef, was doubtless considered by all men of respectability as an act of injustice to the immediate descendants of Shoojah-ad-Dowlah, as the rightful heirs; and no one gave the Company credit for acting from motives of supposed justice, but all ascribed their acknowledgment of Vizier Ali to the situation of the Company secure would be political expectation of establishing a more fruitless." After adverting to the difficulty of easy and effective influence in Oude than they finding proper instruments for effecting this, otherwise could. If so, with a certainty that the governor-general adds:—"Tho restrictions the sentiments of Abdul Lateef were general, which must be imposed upon Vizier Ali would with evidence that they are well founded, the political reputation of the Company can only be restored by the establishment of a family on the musnud which in the universal opinion has an exclusive right to it. Wherever that opinion extends, the justice and reputation of the Company must be affected by confirming reason that they have been quoted at length. the succession of an empire to the son of a Fraush. musnud, upon what grounds can we defend the denial of it! Whilst the presumption was in favour of Vizier Ali, we determined to maintain his title, not only against Saadut Ali, but against all opposition. That presumption is done away, and the right of Sandut Ali, as the representative of the family of Shoojah-ad-Dowlab, stands undeniable by justice and universal opinion. It may be argued that we are not bound to run the risk of hostilities in support of it; and the argument would be unanswerable if we could withdraw from all interference in the question, or if our interference did not amount to a denial of his right. The begum and Almas, by their admission that were vanquished by a sense of public duty. Vizier Ali has no title to the musaud, and by All the feelings and inclinations of Sir John their proposition to invest Mirza Jungly (a Shore, but this one, disposed him to acquiesce younger brother of Sandut Ali), on whatever in the existing state of things, but he did not principle it may be founded, have precluded yield to their influence. Saadut Ali was rethemselves from all right of opposition to the stored to his right through the agency of the claims of Sandut Ali. I do not mean to assert British government, and the usurper compelled that they will not oppose his claim against the to withdraw to a private station, with an allowsupport of the English; but having admitted ance for his support, proportioned, not to his the superior right of Shoojah-ad-Dowlah's natural place among men, but to that which he sons, their opposition to the representative of had for a time so strangely occupied. that family would prove a total dereliction of all regard to right and principle on their parts, and a determination to maintain their own interests against all opposition. On the other hand, as every act of injustice is the parent of more, we must not overlook the future possible consequences of denying that right to Sandut Ali, to which, in the opinion of all, his title stands good. We are so implicated in our connection with Oude, that we cannot withdraw from it, and we are so situated in it, that without a decisive influence in its administration we cannot have any security. The consequences of such a situation might be fatal if the government of the country were employing any Europeans, or permitting any recretly hostile to us, and such, in my judg- to settle in his dominions without the consent ment, would be the situation of the Company of his British ally.

relinquish all interference in the administration, and the power of Almas must be reduced; without this, which would be equivalent to taking the administration of government into our own hands, all attempts to improve the administration of the country and render the never be borne by him, but under a secret determination to embrace the first opportunity of shaking them off."

The above remarks contain much that admits of far wider application than the events which called them forth, and it is principally for this They contain an unanswerable justification of If Sandut Ali has a right to the the course which the governor-general ultimately determined to pursue-granting the facts on which it was based, which indeed scarcely admitted of doubt. It is only to be lamented that these facts were not ascertained at an earlier period. After the series of arguments which have been quoted, Sir John Shore briefly adverted to some personal objections to his acting against Vizier Ali, grounded on their being on apparently amicable terms, and on the governor-general's dislike to all deception. It is impossible not to be struck with the delicacy of sentiment which these objections display, and equally impossible not to admire the determination with which they treaty which determined the relations of the new vizier and the English, the annual subsidy was fixed at seventy-six lacs, and the fort of Allahabad surrendered to the latter power. The English force in Oude was to be ordinarily kept up to ten thousand, and if it at any time exceeded thirteen thousand, the vizier was to pay for the number in excess; while, if it were allowed to fall below eight thousand, a proportionate deduction was to be made. Twelve lacs were to be paid to the English as compensation for the expense of placing Sandut Ali on the throne, and he was restrained from holding communication with any foreign state,

Sir John Shore's administration presents to an Irish peerage by the title of Lord nothing further for report. He was elevated Teignmouth, and quitted India in March, 1798.

CHAPTER XV.

THE EARL OF MORNINGTON APPOINTED GOVERNOR-GENERAL - POSITION OF THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT IN INDIA -- HOSTILE DESIGNS OF TIPPOO SULTAN -- DISSOLUTION OF THE FRENCH CORPS IN THE NIZAM'S SERVICE - BRITISH ARMY TAKES THE FIELD - SIEGE AND CAPTURE OF SERINGAPATAM - DEATH OF TIPPOO - SETTLEMENT OF MYSORE - PARTITION . TREATY WITH THE NIZAM-DISTURBANCES CREATED BY DROONDIA.

Some hesitation occurred in providing for the own dominions they exercised a certain influvacancy occasioned by the retirement of Lord Teignmouth. The Governor of Madras, Lord Hobart, had expected to succeed to the chief place in the government of Bengal; but the expectation was disappointed by the selection of Lord Cornwallis to re-assume the duties which a few years before he had relinquished, This appointment was notified to India, but never carried into effect, his lordship being subsequently named lord-lieutenant of Ireland. The choice of the home authorities ultimately fell upon the Earl of Mornington, who previously stood appointed to the government of Madras, and he quitted England late in the year 1797. The new governor-general had established for himself the reputation of a distinguished scholar, a brilliant parliamentary speaker, and an able man of business. His attention had for a series of years been sedu-lously devoted to the acquisition of such information as was calculated to fit him for the office which he had now attained. His pursuit of this branch of knowledge was, in all probability, the result of inclination rather than of any other motive; as the probability of success to any aspirant to an office so honourable and so highly remunerated as that of governor-general must be regarded as small. But whatever the motives, the result was nort happy. The Earl of Mornington proled to his destination prepared for his

a by as perfect an acquaintance with the y and circumstances of British India as the , most assiduous inquiries could secure. In addition to the fruits of his private studies, he had derived some advantage from having served as a junior member of the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India. At the Cape of Good Hope he met with Major Kirkpatrick, an officer who had filled the office of British resident at more than one of the native courts; and the information derived from him, added to that which had already been accumulated by reading and official observation, enabled the governor-general to enter upon his office with a confidence which in his case was well warranted, but which, with inferior opportunities, no one would be justified in entertaining.

The position of the British government in India at this time was not inaccurately described by Lord Teignmouth as "respect- as, in states constituted like that of the nizam, able." The Company possessed a considerable, the influence of the army was far greater than but not a compact territory. Beyond their in those wherein the due subordination of

ence, which might have been much greater had its extension been encouraged instead of being checked. But still the political prospects of the British in India were far from being bright. In various quarters the elements of danger were gathering into heavy masses, which the most supine observer of the times could scarcely overlook; and the policy which for some years had been pursued threatened to leave the British government to brave the storm without assistance. The probability, indeed, seemed to be, that, in the event of its being attacked by any native power, it would find in almost every other an enemy. Statesmen, whose views, entirely moulded upon European experience, were incapable of adapting themselves to a state of society so widely different as that existing in India, had determined that if ever the British government should emerge from the passive acqui-escence to which it was usually doomed, it should be for the purpose of maintaining a principle which had long been regarded as the conservator of the peace of Europe—the balance of power. The attempt to preserve the peace of India upon any such principle must now appear, to every one acquainted with the subject, not only idle, but ludicrous. But at the period under review, the hope, wild as it was, found harbour in the breasts of statesmen of high reputation; and the new governor-general was earnestly enjoined to maintain the balance of power as established by the treaty of Seringapatam. That balance, however, such as it was, had been destroyed; and the apathy or bad faith of the British government had contributed to accelerate its destruction. The dominions and resources of the nizam had been left to be partitioned by the Mahrattas at their pleasure; and though the dissensions of the conquerors had relieved the conquered party from a portion of the humiliation and loss incurred by his defeat, he had, notwithstanding, suffered greatly both in honour The means for preserving any and power. portion of either, which had been forced upon him by the policy of the British government, afforded, as has been seen, additional cause for alarm to that government. The main strength of his army was under French control; and

In the north, the extraordinary scenes | English nation. The mission falled, and the which had recently taken place in (tude were meanners of the presents which Tippoo had yet fresh in the memory of all, and the new thought worthy to be offered to the monarch potenment which Lord Teignmouth had been of one of the most powerful nations in the compelled by duty to establish, though in world afforded abundant room for those etrict accordance with public feeling, had not sportive effusions of wit and ridicule which which is the growth of time. It was apprehended that Almas would resist it by arms, and fears were entertained of an insurrection of the Rohilla chiefs, a hardy and warlike race, never slow to draw the sword when an opportunity presented itself for asserting their independence. Zemann Shah, the ruler of Caubul, without effecting anything for the purposes of who had on reveral occasions disturbed the favourable to a renewal of his attempts. This provenged himself by accusing them of partici-

yet nequired any portion of the confidence even the obvious approach of the moral earthpeace of India, might, it was thought, deem colleagues on account of his having proviously the existing combination of circumstances been in the position of a menial servant, pating in indulgences forbidden by the Prophet. I covered that the rank and mission of the com-Tippoo, not unprepared to feel displeasure at mander were fletitious. The result of their the unsatisfactory termination of an attempt inquiries was communicated to the sultan, which had been the cause of considerable together with a representation of the danger expense, soothed his feelings by disgracing the which he would incur by disclosing his views ambassadors. But he did not thus easily to the English without any prospect of timely relinquish an object so near his heart. The or adequate succour from the French. But fourful changes which swopt over France Tipped was too auxious that the Frenchman's shortly after the departure of Tippeo's ministers assertions should be true to allow him to from that country made no alteration in his entertain a doubt of them. He met the views or conduct. Through the agency of the warnings of his ministers by a reference to the government of the Mauritius various commulatorine of predestination, by which a sincere nications were made by Tippoo, in all of which Mussulman consoles himself under all calamihe professed the strongest attachment to the ties, and excuses his want of exertion to avert French people, and attributed to this cause them. The purchase of the vessel was ar-the hostility of the English, and the misfor-ranged, but as the master was to remain in tunes to which he had in consequence been Mysore, the money was intrusted to one of nubjected. administered the government of France to on its arrival at the Mauritius. This person enter into any project for giving annoyance to absconded with the amount thus obtained, and Great Britain—anxious as they were to vindi- his subsequent fate is unknown. cate the national glory in India, where the flag of France had so often been lowered in submission to the rival nation, the state of affairs in Europe long rendered it impracticable for the French to bestow much of attention personal restraint, on suspicion of being in and any portion of assistance upon a supplicant collusion with the defaulter. Considerable from a distant part of the world. Tippoo, however, was too ardently bent upon his mine what course to pursue; but ultimately object to abandon it in despair; though the it was resolved to restore the vessel to the apparent indifference of the great nation must master, on his giving bond for the amount have annoyed, it did not discourage him, and intrusted to his countryman, and to allow him some time in the year 1797 a circumstance to proceed to the Mauritius, conveying with occurred which reanimated his hopes. privateer from the Mauritius arrived at Mangalore dismasted, and the commander solicited from their sovereign. The suspicion with the means of repair. The officer exercising which the commander of the vessel had been the chief naval authority at Mangalore, post regarded probably generated a similar feeling sessing a slight acquaintance with the French in his mind; and, before he had been long at language, entered into conversation with the sea, he demanded to examine the letters in master of the disabled vessel, and reported, as charge of Tippeo's ambassadors, threatening the result, that this person represented him-that, if refused, he would proceed on a privasolfas tho second in command at the Mauritius, ready to be employed in the expulsion from India of the common enemy, the English. his distrust, a Nothing could be more gratifying to the tion to the M sultan than such an overture; the master of January, 1798. the privateer was promptly admitted to the To ambassadors were received by the royal presence, and honoured with long and French governor with distinguished honour; frequent conferences. The result was an but the publicity thus given to their arrival, arrangement, by which the master of the however flattering, was altogether inconsisvossel, though recognized in his high character tent with the secrecy which it was intended of an envoy, was, for the sake of concealment, to be estensibly received into the service of Tippoo; the vessel was to be purchased on the part of that prince, and to be laden with merchandise for the Mauritius; and confidential agents of the Sultan were to proceed in her tial agents of the Sultan were to proceed in her the purpose of concerting all that related to the proposed armament.

Well disposed as were those who his countrymen to make the required payment

His unexpected flight disconcerted in some degree the sultan's plans, and even shook his confidence in the representations of the pretended French envoy, who was placed under dulay took place before Tippee could deter-A him two servants of Tippoo, as ambassadors to the government of that island, with letters teering expedition, instead of making for the and stated that he had been specially instructed Maurilius. Some altercation took place, which touch at Mangalore for the purpose of was ended by the Frenchman adopting the ining the sultan's views regarding the short and effective course of forcibly seizing operation of a French force which was and opening the objects of his curiosity. The perusal of the letters seems to have removed his distrust, and he steered without hesita-tion to the Mauritius, where he arrrived in

To ambassadors were received by the to the proposed armament.

The answer was most courteous, but little
The servants of Tippoe were less credulous satisfactory. The French authorities declared than their master. They had conversed with that they had not at their disposal any adesome of the crow of the privateer, and dis- quate means of aiding the sultan's views, but that his proposals should be transmitted to the | "that if the French really entertained a design government of France, who, it was not doubted, would joyfully comply with his wishes. The licly declare that design, when no other appaletters of the sultan were accordingly transferred to France in duplicate; but as a long period would necessarily elapse before the determination of the government there could be known, the governor of the island, General Malartic, resolved to manifest his sympathy with the cause of Tippoo by issuing a proclamation, inviting citizens, both white and black, to enrol themselves under the Sultan's flag, assuring those who might be disposed to volunteer, of good pay, the amount of which was to be fixed with the ambassadors, and of being permitted to return to their own country whenever they might desire. The success of the experiment was commensurate with its wis-Tippoo's servants re-embarked with a mere handful of followers, and they for the most part the refuse of the island rabble. With this precious addition to the strength of the sultan, they landed at Mangalore in

One of the earliest measures of Tippoo's new friends, was to organize a Jacobin club on those principles of national equality and universal fraternization which formed the creed of their countrymen at home. This association was not merely tolerated by the sultanit was honoured by his special approbation, and he even condescended to become a member of it. Whether or not he submitted to the fraternal embrace is uncertain; but it is beyond a doubt that he was enrolled among its flattering reception, the previous absence of these assertors of liberty and equality, and added to the titles which he previously bore ties of aiding Tippoo in any manner, and the another, which, in the East, had at least the subsequent proceedings, down to the embarkacharm of novelty: the Sultan of Mysore tion of the motley band of volunteers, their became Citizen Tippoo. The tree of liberty landing at Mangalore, and their admission was planted, and the cap of equality elevated. The citizen adventurers met in primary assembly; "instructed each other," says Colonel Wilks, "in the enforcement of their new rights, and the abandonment of their old duties;" the emblems of royalty were publicly burnt, and an oath of hatred to that antiquated institution publicly administered and taken; and these ceremonies took place in a country where one man held at his disposal the lives, liberty, and property of all others—that man, moreover, though only a despot, but a tyrant, witnessing these republican rites with approving eyes, and ington meditated a series of bold and extended giving to them importance by his countenance and support.

The Earl of Mornington arrived at Madras in April, and at the seat of his government in Bengal, in May, 1798. Shortly afterwards, a copy of the proclamation issued at the Mauritius, announcing the designs of Tippoo, and inviting French citizens to join his standard, appeared in Calcutta. It necessarily attracted the equipment of an army, it was alleged, the attention of the governor-general, whose could not take place within such a period as first impression was to doubt its authenticity. would admit of its acting with effect; and "It seemed incredible," said the governor-some of the more influential of the servants of of furnishing aid to Tippoo, they would pubrent end could be answered by such a declaration, excepting that of exposing the project in its infancy to the observation of our goverments both at home and in India, and of preparing both for a timely and effectual resistance. did not appear more probable that Tippoo (whatever might be his secret design) would have risked so public and unguarded an avowal of his hostility." The governor-general, however, deemed it proper to guard against the dangers of rash and obstinate disbelief, no less than against the inconveniences that might result from over-hasty credence. He forthwith instituted such inquiries as might lead to the determination of the question whether or not such a proclamation had been issued; and to be prepared for whatever measures might become necessary, he directed the Governor of Madras, General Harris, to turn his attention to the collection of a force on the coast, to meet any emergency.

The authenticity of the proclamation was soon ascertained; but another doubt occurred -whether the step might not have been taken by M. Malartic without the concurrence of Tippoo, and for the promotion of some object of the French government unconnected with his interests and unauthorized by his consent. The investigation which followed developed all the facts that have been related as to the embassy despatched by Tippoo to the Mauritius, any view on the part of the French authoriinto the Sultan's service.

It was now for the governor-general to determine whether he would afford Tippoo further time to mature his plans, and to gain strength for carrying them into effect, or whether he would strike while the enemy was comparatively unprepared. He preferred the latter course, and resolved to obtain effectual security against the animosity of such an implacable foe by reducing his power so far as to establish a permanent restraint on his means not of offence.

With this object in view the Earl of Mornoperations against Mysore. It was in the south that the blow was to be struck, and it therefore became of importance to ascertain what probability existed of the speedy assemblage of a powerful army on the coast of Coro-The communications from Madras mandel. were discouraging. The resources of that presidency were represented as exhausted; general, in recording his views on the subject, the government even suggested the danger of making any preparation for war, lest Tippoo aggression on the government of Poonah, and should take alarm, and invade the Carnatic to acquiesce in the decisions of his British before the English were in a condition to resist ally. No correspondence on affairs of im-Before the receipt of these representations, the governor-general had been led to conclude that it would be necessary to postpone the execution of his plan for an immediate attack upon Tippoo. The advices from Madras confirmed this view; but as the attack was only to be deferred, not relinquished, and as moreover, under any circumstances, it would be necessary to place the British territory under the government of Fort St. George dred. In a few years it had increased to in a state of defence, directions were given to eleven thousand, and, at the period of the extricate the army of that presidency from the arrival of the Earl of Mornington in India, it wretched condition of inefficiency to which it consisted of thirteen regiments of two battahad been reduced by the enforcement of a lions each, amounting in the whole to upwards blind and undiscriminating frugality; and, in of fourteen thousand men. the mean time, the negotiations in progress at the courts of Hyderabad and Poonah were continued with reference to the great objects in view—the annihilation of French influence in India, and the increased security of the to the ordinary infantry of the native powers. British dominions in that country, by humbling Besides field-pieces to each regiment, there the chief enemy which the English had to was attached to the corps a park of forty pieces dread, Tippoo Sultan.

The nizam had long been anxious for a closer connection with the British government than that which subsisted between them; but peans. A design existed of raising a body of so far from any approach having been made to cavalry to act with the corps, and a commencegratify his wishes in this respect, opportunities | ment had been made. The national spirit for attaching him more intimately to English manifested by its officers, and the zeal and interests had been positively neglected, much activity which they displayed in advancing the to the detriment of those interests, and to the interests of their own country and undermining advancement of those of the French. To the those of the English have been already noticed. Earl of Mornington fell the task of correcting the errors of those who had preceded him. A new subsidiary treaty, consisting of ten period under consideration, did not appear articles, was concluded with the nizam. The materially to have diminished French influfirst five regulated the pay and duties of the subsidiary force, the number of which was fixed at six thousand. The sixth was a most important article. It pronounced that, imme-: tely upon the arrival of the force at Hyder-

1, the whole of the officers and sergeants of he French party were to be dismissed, and the troops under them "so dispersed and disorganized, that no trace of the former estab-lishment shall remain." It was further stipulated, that thenceforward no Frenchman should be entertained in the service of the nizam, or of any of his chiefs or dependants; that no Frenchman should be suffered to remain in any part of that prince's dominions, nor any European whatever be admitted into the service of the nizam, or permitted to reside within increase, and so long the source of annoyance his territories, without the knowledge and consent of the Company's government. articles, the British government pledged their talents of its officers, whether for war or inendeavours to obtain the insertion, in a new trigue, were unable to arrest its fate. The treaty contemplated between the Company, governor-general had directed the government the nizam, and the peishwa, of such a clause of Madras to make a detachment for the puras should place each of the two latter at ease pose of co-operating with the British troops with regard to the other. Should the peishwa already at Hyderabad against the French force refuse, the British government undertook to at that place. mediate in any differences that might arise. former occasions had operated so injuriously at The Nizam bound himself to refrain from Madras, had on this nearly paralyzed the arm portance was to be carried on with the Mahratta states, either by the nizam or the English, without the mutual consent and privity of both.

The French sepoy corps in the service of the nizam had been raised before the commencement of the war in which that prince was engaged, in conjunction with the English and the peishwa, against Tippoo Sultan, but its original strength did not exceed fifteen hunof fourteen thousand men. Its discipline, which had been regarded as very defective, had been greatly improved; and although deemed by military judges inferior in this respect to the English army, it was far superior of ordnance, chiefly brass, from twelve to thirty-six pounders, with a well-trained body of artillerymen, many of whom were Euro-The death of its commander, M. Raymond, which had occurred a short time before the ence. Raymond was an accomplished master of intrigue, and a successful practitioner of all the arts of crooked policy, but he enjoyed little reputation for military skill. His successor, M. Peron, was a more active and enterprising man than Raymond, his political feelings were more violent, and he was far better acquainted with the principles of the military art. The second in command, an officer named Baptiste, though inferior to Peron in military endowments, compensated for the deficiency by a burning hatred of the English, and a degree of cunning which rendered him a most useful instrument for carrying on the designs in which the French party had for years been engaged.

But this corps, so long in a constant state of and apprehension to the British government, By other was now sentenced to dispersion, and the The despondency which on of the British government, when raised to strike | general to conclude with the peishwa a treaty at a most formidable and most insidious source similar to that which had been entered into of danger. Objections were raised, and, but with the nizam; but the object was not atfor the firmness and public spirit of General tained. Harris, the governor, they would have been peishwa and the English government were prepared to take the responsibility of the Mahratta chief who would have viewed the humeasure upon himself; and that, if no public miliation, or even the destruction, of the British money could be had, he would furnish from his power without delight; and amid the compliprivate funds the sum necessary to put the cated intrigues of which a Mahratta durbar is troops in motion. The required detachment ever the scene, the attempts of the Earl of was accordingly made, and placed under the Mornington to restore the triple alliance to a command of Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts. state of efficiency were defeated. Some little delay occurred in its quitting the Company's territories; but it arrived at Hy-Tippoo proceeded. The objects of the goverderabad on the 10th of October, and joined the nor-general, as explained by himself, were, by British force previously at that place.

J. A. Kirkpatrick, the acting British resident, demanded the full execution of that article of clude him from all future communication by the treaty which related to the French corps. sea with his French allies—to compel him to But intrigue was at work to procure its post-defray the entire expenses of the war, thus ponement, and the nizam hesitated. minister, though well inclined to the English, necessary by his hostility, and, by crippling his recoiled from a measure so vigorous as that resources, increasing the probability of future called for by the British resident, and was security—to prevail on him to admit permadesirous that resort to extremities should be nent residents at his court from the English delayed, and, if possible, altogether avoided. and their allies, and to procure the expulsion The resident endeavoured to put an end to the of all the natives of France in his service, vacillation of the court of Hyderabad by a together with an engagement for the perpetual powerful remonstrance, concluding with an exclusion of all Frenchmen both from his army avowal of his intention to act without the and dominions. Before hostilities commenced, authority of the nizam, if that authority con- however, the sultan was allowed time to avert tinued to be withheld. The effect of this was them by timely concession. Some doubt had assisted by a movement of the British force to arisen whether or not the district of Wynaad the ground which commanded the French lines. There was now no longer any room for evasion the nizam and his minister were compelled abandoned. to make choice between the English and the Tippoo and the Rajah of Coorg, whom he cor-French; and, as was to be expected, they determined in favour of the former. A body of to the decision of commissioners. In Novemtwo thousand horse was sent to the support of ber, news arrived in India of the invasion of the British force, and a mutiny which broke Egypt by the French, and of the victory obout in the French camp aided the views of those tained over the fleet of that nation by Lord who sought its dispersion. speedily effected, and without the loss of a single life. themselves as prisoners, not reluctant thus to escape the fury of their men; and the sepoys, after some parleying, laid down their arms. The whole affair occupied but a few hours. The total number of men disarmed was about eleven thousand, part of the corps being absent on detachment. Means were taken for the arrest of the officers commanding the detached force; and the whole were ordered to be sent to Calcutta, from thence to be transported to England; the governor-general engaging that, on their arrival there, they should not be treated as prisoners of war, but be immediately restored to their own country, without suffering any detention for exchange. The property of the captured officers was carefully preserved for their use, and their pecuniary claims on the nizam duly settled, through the influence of the British resident.

It had been the desire of the governor- almost beyond the ordinary measure

Though the relations between the He met them by declaring that he was professedly friendly, there was perhaps not a

In the mean time the preparations against obtaining the whole maritime territory remain-On the arrival of the detachment, Captain ing in the possession of Tippoo Sultan below the Ghauts on the coast of Malabar, to pre-His securing reimbursement of the outlay rendered were included in the cessions made to the English at the peace, and their claim to it was abandoned. Disputes had arisen between dially hated, and these it was proposed to refer The object was Nelson. This intelligence was communicated to Tippoo, with such remarks as the subject The French officers surrendered and the known views of the Sultan naturally suggested. During the same month, another letter was addressed by the governor-general to Tippoo, adverting to the transactions between that prince and the French government of the Mauritius, and proposing to send an English officer to Tippoo for the purpose of communicating the views of the Company and their allies. Another letter was subsequently despatched, calling attention to the former; and to be prepared either to lend vigour to the operations of war, or to facilitate the progress of negotiation, the governor-general determined to proceed to Madras, where he arrived on the 31st of December. Here he received an answer from Tippoo to the two letters which he had last addressed to that prince. A ridiculous attempt was made to explain away the emission to the Mauritius, and its consequences. In all other respects the communication was tal deficiency of meaning. The proposal to functions of government during the absence of despatch a British officer to the court of the the Earl of Mornington. sultan might be regarded as declined, Tippoo saying, that he would inform the governorgeneral at what time and place it would be alarm on account of Zemaun Shah had been convenient to receive him, but neither time nor place being named. The answer of the Earl of Mornington contained an able and indignant exposure of the conduct of the sultan; but the door for negotiation was still kept open, and acceptance of the proposal previously made strenuously pressed upon Tippoo's considera-

A few days later another communication was made, repeating the proposal, and enclosing a letter from the Grand Seigneur to Tippoo, denouncing the conduct of the French in Egypt, and calling upon the Sultan to co-operate Throughout January, and a against them. considerable part of the succeeding month, the letters remained unanswered. Of the state of affairs in Egypt nothing satisfactory was known: the arrival of a French fleet in the Arabian Gulf was apprehended, and it was ascertained that while Tippoo either neglected to answer the communications of the British government, or answered them with studied evasion, an embassy from him to the executive Directory of France was about to take its departure from the Danish settlement of Tranquebar. Overtures for peaceful arrangements of differences were obviously wasted on such a man, and the governor-general properly determined "to suspend all negotiation with the sultan until the united force of the arms of the Company and of their allies" should "have from Periapatam. made such an impression on his territories" as 5th, an encampment was unexpectedly obmight "give full effect to the just representapatch, however, containing the report of this intention was closed, a letter was received from Tippoo, singularly brief and frivolous, but which conveyed the sultan's assent, so soften requested, to the mission of a British · flicer to his court. The decision of the Earl of Mornington on this occasion was marked by his usual judgment: -The "design," said he, "is evidently to gain time until a change of circumstances and of season shall enable him to avail himself of the assistance of France. rhall endeavour to frustrate this design; and although I shall not decline even this tardy and insidious acceptance of my repeated propositions for opening a negotiation, I shall accompany the negotiation by the movement of the army, for the purpose of enforcing such terms of peace as shall give effectual security to the Company's possessions against any hostile con-motion, but the thick jungle which covered requesces of the sultan's alliance with the country, and the haziness of the atmo-Prench."

The command of the army of the Carnatic La t been intended for Sir Alured Clarke, the removed soon after nine o'clock by an attack or manufer-in-chief of the forces of Bengal; on the British line. The front and rear were but the apprehension of an invasion of the assailed almost at the same moment, and the

The command thus vacated was bestowed on General Harris. who with singular disinterestedness, when the dispelled by the retrograde march of that sovereign, suggested the re-appointment of Sir Alured Clarke in supersession of himself. The command, however, was retained by General Harris at the express desire of the governorgeneral, and he accordingly joined the army, which consisted of two thousand six hundred cavalry (nearly a thousand of whom were Europeans), between five and six hundred European artillerymen, four thousand six hundred European infantry, eleven thousand native infantry, and two thousand seven hundred gunlascars and pioneers; forming altogether a force of about twenty-one thousand. The army was accompanied by sixty field-pieces, and was well supplied with stores. A corps, under Lieutenant-Colonel Read, was to collect, arrange, and eventually escort supplies of provisions to this army during its advance. A similar corps, under Lieutenant-Colonel Brown, was appointed to the discharge of similar service in Coimbatore.

Another army, consisting of six thousand men, assembled on the coast of Malabar, under the command of General Stuart, ascended into Coorg. It was against this army that the first effort of Tippoo was directed. On the 2nd of March, a brigade of three nativo battalions, under Lieutenant-colonel Montresor, took post at Sedasseer, distant a few miles On the morning of the served to be in progress of formation near the latter place. Before the evening, it had assumed a formidable appearance; several hundred tents were counted, and one of them being green seemed to mark the presence of the sultan, The most recent information, however, was opposed to the belief that the tent was designed to shelter Tippoo, it being represented that he had marched to meet the Madras army, and that a detachment, under Mahomed Reza, was the only force left in the neighbourhood of Seringapatam. this state of uncertainty, General Stuart re-solved to strengthen the brigade of Colonel Montresor by an additional battalion of sepoys, and wait for further intelligence to determine his future course. At break of day on the 6th, General Hartley, the second in command, advanced to reconnoitre. He could discern that the whole of the enemy's army was in sphere, rendered it impossible to ascertain the Uncertainty was object of the movement. right of India by Zomaun Shah suggested the advance of the enemy had been conducted necessity of retaining that officer at Calcutta, with such secrecy and expedition, that the same Le was appointed to exercise the chief junction of the lattalion destined to reinforce

Colonel Montresor was prevented. gade was completely surrounded, and for seve- to facilitate communication with the army of ral hours had to sustain the attack of the enemy under the disadvantage of great disparity of numbers. General Stuart, on receiving intelligence of the attack, marched with a strong body of Europeans, and encountering the division of the enemy which was acting on the rear of the English brigade, put them to flight after a smart engagement of about half an hour's duration. The attack in the front still continued, and on reaching it General Stuart found the men nearly exhausted with fatigue, and almost destitute of ammunition; but the fortune of the day was decided, and the enemy retreated in all directions. Notwithstanding the reports of the sultan having advanced to oppose General Harris, this attack was made under his personal command, and he was probably encouraged to it by the recollection of the success which some years before had followed an attempt not very The sultan, however, in this Colonel Baillie. instance gained neither honour nor advantage. His loss has been estimated as high as two thousand, while that of the English fell short of a hundred and fifty. The discovery thus made of the unexpected proximity of Tippoo induced General Stuart to change the disposition of his force, and to abandon the post occupied at Sedasseer. This circumstance enabled the sultan, with his usual veracity, to claim a victory. It was apprehended that he might hazard another attack, but, after rehad first occupied, he retired without attempting again to disturb the English force under General Stuart. His efforts were now directed to resist the advance of General Harris, who, having been joined by the contingent of Hyderabad and the troops of Nizam Ali, had crossed the Mysorean frontier, with an army about thirty-seven thousand strong, on the day on which Tippoo had encamped near Peria-His march was attended with many difficulties, but they were surmounted by care and perseverance, and on the 27th of March the army of the Carnatic had advanced to Mallavelly, within forty miles of Seringapatam. Here the enemy occupied some heights, from which they opened a cannonade upon the English force. A general action followed, in which Tippoo was defeated, with severe loss. taken by Lord Cornwallis. destroying all the forage. was disappointed of the success which he had Stuart. below Seringapatam. deviation from the usual route were various: Harris, the first that he had forw. ed to any

His bri- one object was to mislead the enemy, another, Malabarand with the corps under Colonel Brown and Colonel Read. Besides these inducements, the ford was said to be easy, the country was believed to have escaped the operation of the devastating policy of Tippoo, and the southern part of Seringapatam was regarded as the least defensible. The detour was effected so secretly. that the army, with its park and ordnance, had crossed the river and encamped near the fort of Soorilly before Tippoo was aware of the move-When, too late, he became apprized of it, he is said to have exclaimed, "We have arrived at the last stage," and to have so-lemnly demanded of his principal officers what was their determination. They answered by professing their readiness to die with him, and henceforward every act of resistance or defence was performed under the chilling influence of despondency.

The advance of the British army, after crossdissimilar, in the destruction of the force under | ing the Cauvery, to the position intended to be taken up before Seringapatam, was slow. The distance was only twenty-eight miles; but though undisturbed by the enemy, such was the exhausted state of the draught cattle. that five days were consumed in performing it. The deficiency of these animals had seriously impeded the progress of the army from its commencement. It had been a source of complaint from the time of Sir Eyre Coote, if not from an earlier period; but no measures had been taken to guard against the inconve-The neglect perhaps was encouraged, maining several days on the spot which he if it were not originated, by the sanguine belief which was so widely entertained, that every war in which the English happened to be engaged in India, was to be the last. At length the capital of Tippoo was within view, and the English general issued an order at once brief and inspiring. . It ran thus:-"The com-mander-in-chief takes this opportunity of expressing his deep sense of the general exer-tions of the troops throughout a long and tedious march in the enemy's country with the largest equipment ever known to move with any army in India. He congratulates officers and men on the sight of Seringapatam. continuance of the same exertions will shortly put an end to their labours, and place the British colours in triumph on its walls."

The operations of the British army were promptly commenced. On the night of its He retired, and his subsequent movement was arrival at its position, an attempt was made designed to place his army in the rear of that upon the enemy's advanced posts. It partially of General Harris, who he expected would failed; but the attack being renewed on the advance towards Seringapatam by the route following morning, was completely successful. On that route On that day, General Floyd was dispatched Tippoo had taken his usual precaution of with a considerable body of infantry and ca-But the sultan valry, and twenty field-pieces, to join General Tippoo made a large detachment to anticipated. At an early period of the march, intercept them; but all attempts failed, and General Harris had formed the design of the united bodies joined General Harris in crossing the Cauvery at a ford some distance safety at Seringapatam. Before their arrival, The motives to this Tippoo had addressed a letter to General

English authority for a considerable period. | character, that, instead of allowing him the Its purport was to declare that the writer had choice of retaining a diminished share of adhered firmly to treaties, and to demand the dominion and influence, or of losing all, the meaning of the advance of the English armies, British authorities would have been justified and the occasion of hostilities. The English in declaring, like the great powers of Europe commander answered by directing the sultan's at a later date, with regard to another enemy, attention to the letters of the governor-general that they "would no more treat with him, for explanation.

The preparations of the siege continued to be carried on, and much was effected of great importance, the relation of which would be the required hostages and the first crore of tedious. On the 17th of April an attempt rupees, under pain of extending his demand made by the enemy to establish a redoubt to the surrender of Seringapatam. No answer on the northern bank of the river, was defeated arrived, and the labours of the besiegers went by a force under Colonel Vaughan Hart, briskly on. They were only suspended when though exposed to a heavy cannonade from the an attack from the enemy required to be fort. The post thus gained by the English repelled; and in these conflicts success inwas connected with others previously estab-variably rested with the English. On the lished, with a view to the future operations of 26th of April it became necessary to dislodge

The 20th of April was marked by a tardy overture from Tippoo to negotiate. The governor-general had prepared General Harris to enter on this task by transmitting with his work open in the rear. The duty was enfinal instructions, on the opening of the camtured to Colonel Wellesley, who commanded paign, drafts of two treaties, either of which in the trenches. It was a service of difficulty; he was authorized to adopt under certain but, in the course of the night and of the specified circumstances. After consulting the following morning, was successfully performed, commissioners appointed to assist the general though not without considerable loss. This in political arrangements, he determined, in achievement seems to have been deeply felt by reply to the sultan's advance, to transmit a Tippoo; and, shaking off the lethargy or the draft of preliminaries embodying the conditions of the less favourable of the two replying to General Harris's proposals, he proposed treaties between which he had to despatched another letter, acknowledging choose. This, as it appeared from a despatch their transmission, but alleging that, as the addressed by the governor-general to General points in question were weighty, and without not aware of its having been made, was in two persons for the purpose of conference and perfect accordance with his views of the explanation. General Harris, in his answer, of circumstances which then existed. The the proposals formerly transmitted, without articles thus proposed to Tippoo provided for an addition to the demands therein made; but from each of the allies; for the immediate accompanied by the required hostages and dismissal of all foreigners being natives of specie, in recognition of the terms being two crores of sicca rupees, one-half imme-defended. diately, and the remainder within six months; for the release of prisoners; and for the batteries was opened for the important opera-

nor with any member of his family."

General Harris required an answer to be sent within forty-eight hours, together with the enemy from their last exterior entrenchment, distant something less than four hundred The yards from the fort, covered on the right by a redoubt, and on the left by a small circular disdain which had hitherto withheld him from Harris three days after the date of the over- the intervention of ambassadors could not be ture, and when, consequently, the former was brought to a conclusion, he was about to send course proper to be taken under the state offered Tippoo once more the advantage of the reception at his court of an ambassador declined to receive vakeels, unless they were countries at war with Great Britain; for the accepted. The sultan's determination was renunciation by the sultan of his connection demanded by three o'clock on the following with the French, and for the perpetual ex- day. No reply was forwarded by him; and clusion of that people from his service and from the moment in which he received this dominions; for the cession to the allies of one-communication from General Harris, he is half the dominions of which he stood possessed represented as passing rapidly through an at the commencement of war; for the relin- agony of grief into a silent stupor, from which quishment of the claims of Tippoo to any he seldom awoke except for the purpose of districts in dispute with the allies or the Rajah professing a confidence which he could not of Coorg; for the payment to the allies of feel, that his capital would be successfully

On the 30th of April the fire of the English delivery of hostages as security for the due tion of breaching; and on the evening of the fulfilment of the previous stipulations. These 3rd of May the breach was considered practiconditions were severe, but not more severe cable. Before daybreak on the 4th the troops than justice and necessity warranted. While destined for the assault were stationed in the Topoo retained the power of being mischie-trenches. They consisted of nearly two thouvous, it was certain he would never cease to sand four hundred European, and about afford cause for alarm. So intense was his eighteen hundred native infantry. The comhatred of the English, and so perfidious his mand was intrusted to Major-General Baird.

The instructions of the commander-in-chief to Itimes being brought to a stand, pushed forthis officer were, to make the capture of the ward, killing many of the enemy and driving rampart his first object. For this purpose the rest before them, till they reached a point General Baird divided the force under his where the approach of the right column was command into two columns; one commanded perceptible. Here the enemy were thrown by Lientenant-Colonel Dunlop, the other by into the utmost confusion, and the rlaughter Colonel Sherbrook. The assault was to take became dreadful. The operations of this place at one o'clock; and at a few minutes column were ably supported by a detachment past that hour, General Baird, having completed all his arrangements, stepped out of a passage over the ditch between the exterior the trench, and drawing his sword, exclaimed, and interior ramparts, took the enemy in flank "Now, my brave fellows, follow me, and prove and rear. yourselves worthy of the name of British attacks was, that when both divisions of the soldiers!" In an instant both columns rushed British force met on the eastern rampart, the from the trenches, and entered the led of the whole of the works were in their possession. river under cover of the fire from the batteries. The only remaining objects of anxiety were They were instantly discovered by the enemy, and assailed by a heavy fire of rockets and musketry. On the previous night the river had been examined by two officers named Tarquar and Lalor, and sticks had been set up to indicate the most convenient place for fording. Both the attacking parties ascended the glacis and the breaches in the fauste-braye together. On the slope of the breach the forforn hope was encountered by a body of the Allan, and Beatron, passing along the ramenemy, and the greater portion of those engaged fell in the struggle; but the assailants pressed on, and within seven minutes after their dress and other circumstances, appeared they had is ued from their trenches, the British persons of distinction; and one, upon examiflag was waving from the summit of the breach.

As soon as sufficient force was collected, the two parties filed off right and left, according to the plan proposed by General Baird. The party detached for the right marched rapidly forward on the southern rampart, under Colonel Sherbrook. The gallantry of Captain Molle, commanding the grenadiers of the Scotch brigade, was eminently conspicuous and serviceable. Running forward almost singly, he pursued the enemy till he reached n mud cavalier, where he planted a flag and braced his knees, but was unable to speak. displayed his hat on the point of his sword. His men soon collected around him, and being joined by the rest of the troops engaged in this attack, they advanced rapidly, the enemy retreating before their bayonets. The remaining cavaliers were carried in succession, and in less than an hour after ascending the breach, the party, after occupying the whole of the southern ramparts, arrived at that portion of them surmounting the eastern gatoway.

The progress of the column which had proceeded to the left was not quite so rapid. Colonel Dunlop, by whom it was commanded, had been wounded in the conflict at the summit of the breach; and just as the party began to advance from that point, the reristance in front was powerfully aided by the flanking musketry of the inner ramparts. All the leading officers being either killed or disabled, Lieutenant Farquar placed himself at the head of the party, but instantly fell General Baird, now assumed the command; by his wound, he fell into the inner ditch. and the column, though not without some-

The result of these combined

the palace and person of the sultan.

With regard to the sultan the greatest un-Whether or not he had certainty prevailed. perished in the conflict, and, if he still survived, whether he had effected his escape, or remained to fall with his capital into the hands of the victors, were questions to which no entisfactory answer could be obtained. Three officers of the general staff, Majors Dallas, parts, discovered three men desperately wounded and apparently dead. Two of these, from nation, manifesting signs of remaining life, was raised by the British officers. It was not the sultan, as had been conjectured, but one of his most distinguished officers, named Syed Saih. He was recognized by Major Dallas, who addressed him by his name. He had previously appeared excited and alarmed, but the kind bearing of the British officers, and the recognition of his person by one of them, seemed to divest him of fear, and he became instantly composed and tranquil. He raised Major Dallas's band to his forehead and em-On partaking of some water, his power of speech returned, and he inquired how Major Dallas came to know him. Being informed that he was the officer commanding the escort of the commissioners at Mangalore many years before, Syed Saib at once recollected him. surgeon, passing, was called by the officers to the assistance of the wounded man, but having with him neither instruments nor dressings, he was unable to afford any. The palanquin of Syed Saib was then sent for to convey him to camp, and the opportunity was taken to inquire if the sultan was in the fort. Syed answered that he was in the palace. tention of the British officers was now called off by a firing of musketry occasioned by a sally of the enemy, and they left Syed Saib in the charge of two sepoys. But their kindness was unavailing. Soon after the departure of those who had endeavoured to rescue him from death, the unfortunate man attempted to rise, Captain Lambton, brigade-major to but staggering from the weakness occasioned shown by the three officers to Syed Saib having and the killadar seemed not to know in what ceased, they proceeded to a spot where they manner to act. After a further repetition of could obtain a distinct view of part of the in- the assurances and the warnings which had terior of the palace. There they could per- been already given, the latter being enforced ceive a number of persons assembled as in by reference to the feelings of the troops before durtar, one or two being seated, and others the palace, which the killadar was apprized approaching them with great respect. They could not be restrained without difficulty, that then sought General Baird, to communicate to that officer what they had heard, and what officers who now began to feel their position they had observed. The general had previously critical. A number of persons continued to received information of similar import, and halted his troops for refreshment, before he the place, and of the object of these movements are consequent to the place. The men ments Major Allan and his colleagues were ments and the personner to the place. being somewhat recovered, and the necessary necessarily ignorant. He hesitated whether preparations made for attack, should the sum- he should not resume his sword; but, with mous be disregarded, Major Allan was des-more prudence than he had displayed in patched to offer protection to the sultan and divesting himself of the means of defence, he every person within the palace, on immediate resolved to abide by the choice which he had and unconditional surrender. Having fastened made, lest by an appearance of distrust he a white cloth on a sergeant's pike, he pro-should precipitate some dreadful act. ceeded with some European and native troops people on the terrace, however, appeared to to execute his mission. He found part of the beanxious for the success of the British mission, 33rd regiment drawn up before the palace, and and to feel great alarm at the possibility of its several of Tippoo's servants in the balcony, failure. They entreated that the flag might apparently in great consternation. Major be held in a conspicuous position, in order at Allan made the communication with which he once to give confidence to the inmates of the was charged, and desired that immediate intimation of it might be given to the sultan. In a short time the killadar and another officer of Major Allan became exhausted, and he sent came over the terrace of the front building a message to the sons of Tippoo, who were and descended by an unfinished part of the wall. They evidently laboured under great embarrassment, but not to such an extent as to prevent the exercise of their ingenuity in answered that they would receive him as soon endeavouring to procure delay, with a view, as a carpet could be spread for the purpose, as Major Allan thought, with great appeared and shortly afterwards the killadar reappeared ance of probability, of effecting their escape to conduct him to their presence. under cover of the night. To these functionaries Major Allan repeated the substance of one of whom he recollected from having withis message; pointed out the danger of nessed his delivery, with another brother, into neglecting it; urged the necessity of immediate determination; pledged himself for the the due performance of the treaty concluded due performance of the promise which he bore; by that nobleman with their father. and, finally, required to be admitted into the and humiliating as was that scene to the house palace, that he might repeat his assurances of of Tippoo, it was exceeded in bitterness of afety to the sultan himself. To this proposal calamity by the spectacle which Major Allan uppoo's servants manifested great dislike, but now witnessed. The sons of Tippoo were then Major Allan insisted, and called upon two to be temporary residents with the English till English officers, one of whom spoke the native the territorial cessions could be effected, and language with extraordinary fluency, to act he pecuniary payments made, by which their company him. The party ascended by the father had agreed to purchase the privilege of broken wall, and from thence lowered themrelves down on a terrace where a large body of armed men were assembled. It was forthwith explained to these persons, that the flag held possession of the capital of their country, borne by Major Allan was a pledge of security to them, provided no resistance was offered; and a singular step was taken in order to as its lord, and to whose humanity himself and a singular step was taken in order to as its lord, and to whose numently limited induce them to give credit to the assertion, and his family would owe their lives should With a degree of confidence which can only be they be spared. The feelings of despondency characterized as imprudent and rush, Major and fear resulting from these disastrous circultanteek off his sword, and placed it in cumstances were strongly depicted on the charge of Tippeo's officers. The situation of features and indicated by the manner of the thesultan was still unascertained. The killadar princes, notwithstanding their efforts to supard other persons affirmed that he was not in press their exhibition. Major Allan having the polyce, though his family were. The Oriental features for delay was still indulged, ferring to the objects of his mission, represented palace, and prevent the English troops from forcing the gates. At length the forbearance of Major Allan became exhausted, and he sent admitted to be in the palace, urging upon them once more the necessity of decision, and informing them that his time was limited. They

The firing which interrupted the attentions

He was introduced to two of the princes. the charge of Lord Cornwallis, as a hostage for retaining his place among sovereign princes. They had now before them nothing but unconditional submission to a foreign power which which could dispose at pleasure of every vestige of territory which yet owned Tippoo

the impossibility of their father's escape, and bution which could be inflicted, but if even he entreated them, as the only way of preserving his life, to discover the place of his conceal-have shared the safety promised to all beneath ment. They answered, that he was not in the lits roof, or the honour of the British nation palace. Major Allan then proposed that the would have been irreparably tarnished. gates should be opened to the English. renewed the alarm which the courteous hearing and pacific assurances of the British officer had, in some degree, calmed, and they expressed a disinclination to take so important a step without the authority of the sultan. The necessity of yielding being, however, again strongly pressed, and Major Allan having promised to post a guard of their own sepoys within the palace, and a party of Europeans without, to suffer no person to enter without his own special authority, and to return and remain with the princes till General Baird arrived, they consented, and the palace gates opened to admit as conquerors that people whose utter expulsion from India had been meditated by its master.

Before the gates was General Baird, and Major Allan was ordered to bring the princes to the general's presence. Alarmed and reluctant, they raised various objections to themselves to be led to the gate. The mobefore received information of Tippoo, in strict to distinguish either form or features. into his hands. His indignation was highly excited, and to a feeling natural and even harshness which, in one respect, he seems to have manifested towards the captive sons of Tippoo. He in the first instance hesitated to confirm the conditions made with them by Major Allan, unless they would inform him where their father was. The attempt to pro-It is not to be supposed that and safety. General Baird had any serious intention of violating a promise solemnly made by one of his officers under instructions from himself, and by virtue of which possession of the palace had been obtained; but it is to be lamented that the glory earned by the capture of Seringapatam should have been shaded by even the appearance of want of generosity or good faith. Apart, indeed, from all reference to the special obligation which the British authorities had incurred, the attempt to extort from the terror of the sons an exposure of the retreat of the father must be condemned, as at variance with some of the holier feelings of the human heart. There was no proof that the young men who were now the prisoners of the British general, had participated in the guilt arising from

had been found within the palace, he must

A minute search throughout the palace was ordered, with a view to securing the person of the sultan, who, notwithstanding the denial of his followers, was yet believed to be within its walls. The zenana was exempted from scrutiny, but a guard was placed round it sufficient to prevent the escape of Tippoo if he were concealed there. The search was unavailing, and information was next sought by acting on the fears of the killadar. officer, upon being threatened, placed his hands on the hilt of Major Allan's sword, and solemnly repeated his former protestation, that the sultan was not in the palace; adding, however, and as it seems for the first time. that he lay wounded at a distant part of the To the spot which he named he offered to conduct the British officers, and professed himself ready to submit to any punishment which the general might be pleased to inflict, if he were found to have deceived him. The quitting the palace, but at length they allowed place to which the killadar led was a gateway on the north side of the fort. Here hundreds ment was not the most favourable for their of dead bodies were piled one upon another, introduction, for General Baird had not long and the darkness rendered it almost impossible accordance with his character, having murdered were procured, and an examination of the a number of English prisoners who had fallen fallen victims of ambition was commenced. The discovery of the sultan's palanquin, and of a wounded person lying under it, seemed laudable in itself may perhaps be ascribed the to indicate that the object of the search was attained; but the man whose position in this scene of death and carnage appeared to mark him out as the sultan, was only one of his confidential servants who had attended him throughout the day. But the necessity for further search was at an end. The wounded cure the desired information failed, and the servant pointed to the spot where his master general finally assured the princes of protection | had fallen; and a body dragged from the accumulated mass above and around it was recognized by the killadar as that of the sultan. Being placed in a palanquin, it was conveyed to the palace, where multiplied testimonies to its identity removed all ground for doubt.

Tippoo had fallen, but his fall was scarcely known, and it certainly contributed nothing towards the result of the day. During the last fourteen days of the siege he had fixed his abode at a place formerly occupied by a watergate, which Tippoo had some years before closed. Here he erected a small stone choultry, enclosed by curtains, and four small tents were fixed for his servants and luggage. whelmed with despondency, he sought consolation in those miserable dogmas, half commonplace, half paradox, which have so often passed current as sound philosophy, and the murder of his soldiers; and they ought struggled to renovate hope by the delusions of not to have been subjected to moral torture judicial astrology. A rigid Mahometan, he for the purpose of discovering the retreat of did not in the hour of his distress disdain the the criminal, he being their father. The knowledge which the brahmins were reputed cruelty of Tippoo merited the severest retri- to possess, and their art was invoked for the stances of the siege, both Mahometan and same moment brought down. sultan endeavoured to ascertain the aspect of thus proposed to avert. trenches, and recommended that orders should body have been already detailed. be issued for the troops to be on the alert. attempt to assault would not be made by day; must be repelled. The next intelligence that reached him was calamitous. It announced the death, by a cannon-ball, of the man from whom he had received the last communication. and who was one of his chief officers. The sultan was agitated, but gave the orders necesary for the occasion, and sat down to his repast. It was yet unfinished when he received a report that the storm had commenced, and he hastened to the northern rampart.

He found that the English had surmounted the breach, and placing himself behind one of eight times on the assailants, and, as was the British party. He had received a slight wound, sultan's information. Either from the effect ward a few paces, when he received another of chance, or from observation of the circum-ball in his left breast, and his horse was at the The faithful Hindoo astrologers declared the 4th of May a servant who had accompanied him through the day of danger. To avert the threatened caladay, and who survived to point to his conmity, the brahmins recommended an oblation, querors the place where the tyrant had fallen, and the fears of the sultan induced him to urged him to discover himself to the English bestow the means of making it. On the morn-soldiers who were pressing forward, as the ing of the day on which peril was apprehended, most probable means of preserving his life. he proceeded to the palace, bathed, and, Mus. But the instinct of guilt forbade this course. sulman as he was, presented, through a brahmin Tippoo remembered that he had recently murof high reputation for sanctity, the required dered some of their commides with circumoblation with all the customary formalities. Stances of great barbarity, and he apprehended A jar of oil formed part of the offering; and, that by discovering who he was he should but in compliance with a Hindoo custom, the accelerate the fate which his zealous adherent He accordingly fate from the form of his face as reflected from checked the imprudent suggestion, as to him the surface of the oil. Whether the exhibition it appeared, by passionately exclaiming, "Are indicated good or evil is not known; but, as you mad?—be silent!" But silence, though it Colonel Wilks observes, the result depends concealed his rank, availed not to preserve his on mechanical causes, and "the reflection of life. Tippoo was placed by his follower in his any face may be formed to any fortune." palanquin under an arch on one side of the About noon the sultan had completed the gateway. A grenadier, entering, attempted to ceremonies which despair had led him to seize the sultan's sword-belt, which was very processes at the expression of the consistency are a light. Had be galaxieted to the learn right. practise at the expense of his consistency as a rich. Had he submitted to the loss without believer in Mahomet, and he repaired to the resistance, the man would probably have choultry to partake of his mid-day repast. On pushed on; but, though fainting with the loss his way he was informed by two spies that of blood, Tippoo seized, with a feeble grasp, a the besiegers were preparing to storm. He sword which was near him, and made a stroke remarked, that an assault by day was not at the soldier who had thus commenced the probable. An officer who commanded near work of plunder, by whom he was immediately the breach also apprized him that there ap-|shot through the temple. The circumstances peared to be an unusual number of men in the attending the discovery and recognition of his On the morning after the capture of Seringa-

Tippoo again expressed his belief that the patam, an English officer, having gone towards attempt to assault would not be made by day; the river with a party of sepoys, perceived on and coolly added, that if it should, the attack the opposite side a few horsemen, one of whom waved a white flag. The officer, advancing to the bank, was met by one of the horsemen, who informed him that Abdul Khalik was desirous of throwing himself on the protection of the English, provided his personal safety were secured, and his honour preserved. This candidate for British elemency was the second son of Tippoo, and the elder of the two princes who had formerly been received by the English governor-general as hostages for their father's good faith. The required promise of security and honourable treatment was immediately the traverses of the rampart, he fired seven or given, and the prince surrendered himself to In the evening the rebelieved by those who attended him, killed mains of the deceased sultan were deposited several Europeans. The flight of his troops in the mausoleum erected by Hyder Ali, with before the victorious besiegers compelled him all the pomp which could be bestowed. The to retire; though whenever an opportunity arrangements were under the superintendence offered for making a stand, he is stated to of the principal Mahometan authorities; the have embraced it. But no efforts which he chiefs of the nizam's army joined with the was able to make could turn the current of followers of the sultan in the solemn procession which followed his remains, and the military and the exertions which he was unavailingly honours with which it is the custom of Europe making rendered painful the lameness under to grace the soldier's obsequies aided the which he laboured. Finding a horse, he solemnity of the scene. The evening closed mounted and rode towards the gate of the with a dreadful storm, by which several perinterior work, with what object does not sons were killed and many more severely hurt. appear. Here he received a wound in the Seringapatam is subject to such visitations, right side from a musket-ball. He rode for and there was nothing remarkable in the storm which succeeded the funeral rites of attract the sultan's attention. Tippoo, except its extraordinary violence. Yet spondence," says Colonel Kirkpatrick, by whom the imagination cannot fail to be impressed by it was examined, "proves Tippoo to have been the fact, that the consignment of the body of extremely active in his endeavours to open and Tippoo to its resting-place was followed by a establish an interest even with princes whose achieved without a considerable sacrifice, but which in Asia were not determined even by the loss of the British army was less severe the limits of India. His correspondence was than might have been expected. The total enlarged to Persia, and to the petty sovereigns amount of killed, wounded, and missing, in the whole of the operations throughout the siege, fell short of fifteen hundred. The loss of the enemy cannot be ascertained with precision; but it has been estimated that, in the assault alone, eight thousand fell. Dreadful as it is to reflect on such slaughter, it is gratifying to know that scarcely any of the unarmed among those who can discern nothing of good inhabitants were injured. A few unavoidably suffered from random shot; but the assault being made by daylight, insured the power of recesses of the sultan's cabinet furnished proof discrimination, and it was exercised to the utmost practicable extent.

The capture of Seringapatam placed in possession of the victors guns, stores, and treasure to a large amount. Nine hundred and twentynine pieces of ordnance of various descriptions were found within the fort, two hundred and eighty-seven of them being mounted on the fortifications. Nearly a hundred thousand muskets and carbines were also found, a great number of swords and accoutrements, a considerable weight of shot and powder, and specie and jewels exceeding eleven hundred began to return, the exercise of the arts of in-thousand pounds in value. The library of the dustry revived, and the daily commerce incisultan was not the least remarkable portion of dental to a populous town recovered its wonted the property transferred by the result of the activity. "In a few days," says Major Beatthe private collection of state papers was of provisions and merchandise, for which there incalculable interest and importance, as they was a ready and advantageous sale. The contributed to render the evidence of Tippoo's main street of Seringapatam, three days after hatred of the English, and the extent of his intrigues against them, too strong to be denied to be almost impassable, and exhibited more or doubted by the most determined advocates of a policy undeviatingly pacific. The history of his negotiation with the government of Mauritius, and of its consequences, was illustrated by copies of all the correspondence which arose out of those proceedings. Other documents were found, relating to his missions to Turkey and France. Others, again, developed his intrigues at the court of the ringapatam with a message from Kummer-oonizam; and among these were copies of correspondence passing between Tippoo and certain chiefs of the nizam's army during the first Tippoo Sultan and transferred his power to campaign of Lord Cornwallis. The evidence of his endeavours to engage the Mahrattas admitted to a conference, and in the mean time against the English was in like manner con- he had sent Ali Reza to announce that tour firmed; and it was further shown, that it was thousand men under his command were at the not merely the greater powers of India that disposal of the British general, and ready to Tippoo sought to unite against the object of obey his orders. Within five days more, all his hatred—he had descended to solicit many the chiefs who continued to hold military who might have been thought too unimportant command, including Futteh Hyder, the eldest for their friendship to be desired or their in-|son of the deceased sultan, had personally difference deprecated, and had addressed others tendered their submission to General Harris, who might have been supposed too distant to and the example of the chiefs was promptly

"This corredesolating convulsion not incongruous with names might be supposed to have hardly his perturbed and mischievous life. reached him." The intensity of his hatred The intensity of his hatred The conquest of Seringapatam was not enlarged the boundaries of his observation, of Arabia; and its single and invariable object was the destruction of the British power in the East. England has had enemies more able and more formidable than Tippoo, but never one more bitter or more implacable. Yet even he, but for the discoveries made at Seringapatam, might have found apologists in the policy of their own country, and nothing of evil in the character of its enemies. which set at defiance all the arts of sophistry and misrepresentation; and which as amply vindicated the sagacity which had penetrated the views of Tippoo, as the result of the war attested the wisdom and energy by which those views had been counteracted.

The permanent command of Seringapatam was intrusted to Colonel Wellesley, who exerted himself vigorously, as General Baird had previously done, to restrain excess, and restore order, tranquillity, and confidence. The inhabitants who had quitted the city soon began to return, the exercise of the arts of in-The books were of small value; but son, "the bazars were stored with all sorts of the fort was taken, was so much crowded as the appearance of a fair than that of a town taken by assault." The same period of time was sufficient to convince the military chiefs that their best course was to bow to the authority which had succeeded that of their master. On the 7th of May, Ali Reza, one of the vakeels who had accompanied Tippoo's son to the camp of Lord Cornwallis, arrived at Se-Deen, the purport of which was, to acquaint General Harris that, as fate had disposed of the hands of the English, he begged to be in that province, and in other parts of Mysore, of the soil pursued their occupation as though no change had taken place, and a general disposition was manifested to submit to the good fortune of those whom Tippoo, in the insanity of unreasoning passion, had destined to dis-rity. graceful flight from the shores of India. an end to all exercise of authority in the name of the sultan of Mysore.

The occupation of the conquered country vernor-general had furnished General Harris treaty with Tippoo, under certain circumstances; but the infatuated obstinacy of the sultan and the extraordinary success which had thence resulted to the British army, had given rise to a state of things different from any which had been contemplated in framing those instructions. The governor-general, in consequence, reserved the final arrangements for the settlement of the country to himself. His first measure was to call for information on all points respecting the country of Mysore, and the possible candidates for its government, and for the views of the commissioners upon the subject. In conveying to them his orders on these points, the governor-general took occasion to state certain principles as fundamental, and requiring attention in any mode of settlement that might be adopted. These were, that the mode of settlement to be preferred was that which would unite the most speedy restoration of peace and order with the greatest practicable degree of security for the continuance of both; that with this view not only the interests of the Company, but those of the nizam, of the Mahrattas, and of the *leading chieftains in Mysore, were to be re-rded; that the military power of Mysore t be broken, or absolutely identified with at of the Company; that Seringapatam must be in effect a British garrison, under whatever nominal authority it might be placed, and that the Company must retain the whole of the sultan's territory in Malabar, as well as in Coimbatore and Daraporam, with the heads of all the passes on the table-land. Some of these points, it will be remembered, were propounded by the governor-general as indispensable conditions of peace at an earlier period.

followed by the whole of the troops. On the | the fullest right, in accordance with the re-13th of May, General Stuart, with the army ceived principles which regulate the conduct of of Bombay, marched from Seringapatam on nations towards each other, to divide between its return to Malabar by way of Coorg. A themselves the territory which their swords, detachment from that army was made for the drawn in a lawful cause, had won. Clemency occupation of Canara. The powerful fortresses or state policy might urge the abandonment of some portion of their claim, but their. surrendered to the conquerors; the cultivators right to reap the full advantage of their successes was evident. To the free and unchecked exercise of their right the state of the country offered no impediment. The people appeared to render willing obedience to the new autho-There was nothing to indicate the pro-The bability of any outbreak of popular feeling fall of his capital and his own death had put in favour of the former government, nor of any attempt by the military chiefs in favour of the house of Tippoo. It had been the policy of the deceased sultan to discourage and reduce being provided for, the next point calling for all power founded on hereditary right, esta-decision was its ultimate disposal. The go-blished office, or territorial possession, and to concentrate all authority, and as much as was with instructions for concluding a preliminary practicable of administrative function, in himself. Many of the military chiefs had fallen in the war, and those who survived had yielded to the victors. There was no reason, therefore, to apprehend that any disposition of the country which might be made by those who had conquered it would give rise to formidable opposition either from the people or the servants of the late sultan.

But there were reasons against the apportionment of the whole between the Company and the nizam, arising from the relative position of those powers towards each other and towards other states. Such a distribution would have excited the jealousy of the Mahrattas, and given them ground for discontent, however unreasonable. It would, at the same time, have increased the power of the nizam to a dangerous extent. It would have transferred to his hands many of the fortresses on the northern frontier of Mysore, while it would have left the British frontier in that quarter exposed. The increase of the strength of the British government would thus have borne no proportion to the extension of its dominions. The Mahrattas would have found fresh cause of enmity both towards the Company and the nizam. nizam, from a useful ally of the Company, might have been converted into a dangerous enemy. The partition of Mysore between the two powers who united their arms against Tippoo thus promised little for the permanent peace of India.

Still, as it was expedient to preserve as near an approach to a good understanding with the Mahrattas as the character of the people admitted, the governor-general, after much consideration, determined on adopting a plan tions of peace at an earlier period.

The views of the governor-general were dispensived not less here. The territories period not less here. tinguished not less by moderation than by of Tippoo, gave a larger to the Company wisdom. The justice of the war against Tippoo and to the nizam, the shares of the two could be denied by none but those who were latter powers being of equal value; while, deficient without in individual to the nizam. deficient either in intellect or candour; its to guard against some of the inconveniences Fuccess was as little open to dispute; and the which he perceived to be attached to the Company and the nizam consequently enjoyed complete dismemberment of Mysore, he rea separate state. It is to be observed that the same which former princes had occupied not to be given unconditionally, but was in-missioners, with the commander-in-chief at their

the Mahratta empire.

. This mode of distributing the conquered dominions having been resolved upon, the next question that presented itself for consideration was, who should b the ruler of the renovated state of Mysore. Sound policy seeming to forbid the restoration of the house of Tippoo, the governor general naturally turned to the family, and followed by a vast concourse of representative of the ancient royal family of Mysore, whose rights had been usurped by Hyder Ali. The heir was an infant only five Harris and Meer Allum, each of whom took The intentions of the governoryears of age. general were signified through Purneah, a brahmin, whose talents as an accountant had led to his retention in high office by Tippoo, but who was quite ready to transfer his services to the new prince. The communication was followed by a visit of ceremony to the infant rajah from the commissioners who had been appointed to conduct the arrangements for the settlement of the country. They found the family of Hyder Ali's master in a state of great poverty and humiliation. The ancient palace of Mysore, though suffered by the usurpers gradually to fall to decay, had for some years afforded a miserable shelter to those whom they had supplanted. The privilege of occupying even the ruins of the building which had once been the seat of their power was at length thought too great. The palace was converted into a store-house, and the Mysorean family provided with another residence of very humble pretensions. In a mean apartment of this house the commissioners were A portion of the room was secluded by a curtain, behind which were the rana and the female relations of the family. The males one of her attendants, acknowledged in strong terms of gratitude the generosity of the British nation in rescuing her family from the degradation and misery in which they had been so long enthralled, and raising the heir of the house to the rank and distinction of a sovereign. A few days afterwards, the infant prince was solemnly placed on the throne. The ceremony took place in the old town of Mysore. The palace was now incapable of affording accommodation to its master; and so complete had been the progress of ruin within young rajah that his title was solemnly recog- and for the general security on the foundations solved on forming a part of the country into | nized; and the musnud on which he sat was boon proposed for the peishwa was on similar occasions of state. The British comtended to form the basis of a new treaty with head, awaited the arrival of the rajah. Meer Allum, the chief officer of the nizam, and his son, Meer Dowra, accompanied them; and the presence of a large escort of horse and foot gave to the depopulated town an appearance of gaiety and splendour to which for many years it had been unaccustomed. The prince was attended by all the male part of his At the entrance of the building people. erected for the occasion he was met by General his hand. He was thus conducted to the musnud and placed upon it, under a royal salute from the fort, and three volleys of musketry from the troops present on the occasion.

While the family of the late sultan were thus excluded from political power, their welfare was consulted to the full extent that political prudence would permit. The governor-general resolved to assign to them a more ample maintenance than they had enjoyed under the rule of Tippoo, and if there were any error in his arrangements, it was in the disproportionate magnificence with which the relations of the fallen prince were provided for. The failing, however, had its origin in generous and noble feelings. Under the influence of similar feelings the necessary proceedings for the restoration of the ancient dynasty had been deferred until after the departure of Tippoo's sons from Mysore. It was thought a point of policy, not less than of generosity, to conciliate the principal chiefs and officers of the late government by a liberal provision, and to exercise similar consideration with regard to the families of those who had fallen in the This principle was extensively acted war. surrounded the person of the rajah. A formal upon, and in some instances its application communication of the design of the British drew from the persons in whose favour it was government was made; and the rana, through exercised expressions not only of gratitude but of wonder, at the beneficence manifested by the Company's government. Kummer-oo-Deen. received a jaghire from the nizam, and another from the Company.

The changes which have been noticed were effected under two treaties, the earlier of which, called the partition treaty of Mysore, was concluded between the Company and the nizam. The first article assigned to the Company a certain portion of the territories of Tippoo, out of which provision was to be made for his family and for that of his father. the city, that it contained no building in which the ceremony of enthronement could be performed. To supply the deficiency, a temporary determined the districts to be added to the shed was erected; and though architectural grandeur was necessarily wanting, there were from those adjacent to his former dominions, several circumstances calculated to gratify the and recognized the claim of Kummer-oo-Deen Mysorean family and their adherents. It was to a personal jaghire from the revenues of on the very spot which had been the seat of those districts. The third, after reciting that, the power exercised by the ancestors of the for the preservation of peace and tranquillity, was expedient that the fortress of Seringapa- him ample indemnification in the event of the tam should be subject to the Company, transferred that fortress, and the island on which lishment. The sixth reserved to the Company to the families of Hyder Ali and Tippoo on the death of any member of the families; and part of such stipulated payments. seventh article related to the reserve of terrialready explained. This addition to the domihis accession to the treaty within one month after it should be formally notified to him, and also upon his giving satisfaction to the Company and the nizam on such points of difference as existed between himself and either of those parties. By the eighth article, if the peishwa should refuse to accede to the treaty, and give satisfaction to the original parties to it, the territory intended for him was to revert to the joint disposal of the Company and the nizam. The ninth article provided for the reception of an English subsidiary force by the rajali of Mysore, under a separate treaty to be subsequently concluded between the Company and that prince. By the tenth article the negotiators undertook for the ratification of the treaty by their respective governments. There were two additional articles, by the first of which the two parties were exempted from accountability to each other in consequence of any diminution of the stipends payable to the families of Hyder Ali and Tippoo Sultan by the Company, or of the personal jaghire of Kummer-oo-Deen from the nizam. Its operation was thus reciprocal; but the object of introducing it was a prudent desire on the part of British government to exclude the nizam interfering in the arrangements cond with the maintenance of the exiled thes. The second additional article was a explanation of the eighth in the treaty, and was framed in contemplation of the possible refusal of the peishwa to avail himself of the advantages to be proffered for his acceptance. In that case, it was provided that two-thirds of the reserved territories should fall to the nizam, and the remaining one-third to the Company. The reason of this unequal distribution was, that if the peishwa should accede to the conditions annexed to his claim to the additional territory, one of these conditions being then established by the contracting parties, it | fit; and the design of the article was to afford

disappointment of his expectations at Poonah. Under the fourth and fifth articles of the it was situated, together with a smaller island | partition treaty, the new state of Mysore was lying to the westward, to the Company, "in established in the manner which has been seen. full right and sovereignty for ever." The In conformity with the provision of the ninth, fourth provided for the establishment of the a subsidiary treaty was concluded with the new government of Mysore; and the fifth pregovernment thus called into existence. For new government of Mysore; and the 11th pre- government thus called into existence. For scribed the cessions to be made for its estab- many reasons the governor-general deemed it more advisable to erect a new state on the the right to reduce the amount of its payments ruins of the old government of Mysore than to divide the entire country between the conquerors; but he had never contemplated this in the event of any hostile attempt against the state except as a barrier to the Company's Company, the nizam, or the rajah of Mysore, interests; in fact, it was to be British in all to suspend the issue of the whole or of any things but the name. This intention was never The concealed from those who were interested in being acquainted with it. A stipulation for tory made for the peishwa in accordance with the defence of Mysore by an English subsidiary the governor-general's views as they have been force, which virtually gave to the English the entire command of the country, was inserted nions of the peishwa was made dependent on in the treaty with the nizam, and the terms on which the infant rajah was to ascend the throne were at an early period indicated to his ad-The subsidiary treaty concluded on visers. his behalf consisted of sixteen articles. The first declared that the friends and enemies of either of the two contracting parties should be considered as the friends and enemies of both. By the second, the Company undertook to maintain, and the rajah agreed to receive, a military force for the defence and security of his dominions, in consideration of which he was to pay seven lacs of star pagodas, the disposal of which sum, together with the arrangement and employment of the troops, were to be left entirely to the Company. The third article was important. Towards the increased expense incurred by the prosecution of war for the defence of the territories of the two parties. or of either of them, or by necessary preparation for the commencement of hostilities, the rajah was to contribute in a just and reasonable proportion to his actual net revenues, the amount to be determined after attentive consideration by the governor-general in council. The fourth article was directed to making provision against any failure in the funds destined to defray either the expenses of the permanent military force in time of peace, or the extraordinary expenses incurred during war or in preparation for war. For this purpose the British government, whenever they might have reason to apprehend failure, were empowered to introduce such regulations as might be deemed expedient for the management and collection of the revenues, or for the better ordering of any other department of the government; or they might assume and bring under the management of the servants of the Company any part of the territory of Mysore. The fifth provided for the due execution of the fourth article. Whenever the the sati-factory settlement of certain points of governor-general in council should signify to difference between him and the nizam, the latter the rajah that it had become necessary to power would thereby derive considerable bene-bring that article into operation, the rajah was to issue orders either for giving effect to the | had been thought politic to conciliate; but prescribed regulations or for placing the re- he incurred no charge on account of the late quired territories under English management. sultan's family, who were to be supported by If such orders were delayed for ten days after the British government, nor of Kummer-oo-formal application for them, the governor-Deen, who was provided for by assignments of general in council might, of his own authority, jaghire. It was stipulated, that provisions take the necessary measures. But in all cases and other necessaries for the use of the garriwhere possession was taken of any part of the son of Seringapatam should be allowed to rajah's territories, an account was to be rendered, and the income of the rajah was in no dominions, free from duty, tax, or impedicase to fall short of one lac of star pagodas, increased by one-fifth of the net revenues of the whole of the territory ceded to him by the the rajah should at all times pay the utmost partition treaty, the payment of which sum the Company guaranteed. These comprehensive articles secured to the British government all the advantages that could be derived from the establishment of the new state. They carried out the avowed objects of the governorgeneral in a manner not less creditable to his character for manly and straightforward dealing than for political ability.

The articles of the treaty which succeeded the important ones already explained must now be briefly noticed. The rajah was bound to abstain from any interference in the affairs of the allies of the Company, or of any other state; and precluded from holding any communication or correspondence with any foreign state whatever, without the previous know-ledge and sanction of the Company. Like other allies of the British government, he was restricted from employing Europeans without the concurrence of the Company, or suffering them to reside in his dominions. This article was framed with unusual strength. The rajah engaged to apprehend and deliver to the Company's government all Europeans of whatever description who should be found within his territories without regular passports from the English government; "it being his highness's determined resolution not to suffer, even for a day, any European foreigner to remain within the territories now subject to his authority, unless by consent of the Company." Another point, which the governor-general had justly regarded as important, was provided for by an article giving to the Company the power of determining what fortresses and strong places should be placed in their charge, and thereupon of garrisoning such places in whatever manner they might think proper. The Company's government were to be the sole judges of the propriety of dismantling and destroying any forts, or of strengthening and repairing them; and the charges incurred by any such operations were to be borne in equal proportions by the two parties to the treaty. If the employment of the regular troops of the Company should become necessary to the maintenance of the rajah's authority, their aid, upon formal application being made, was to be afforded in such manner as the Company's government might see fit; but they were not to be employed in ordinary revenue transacpensioning the Mahometan officers whom it to gain time for securing it; but the hostile enter that place from any part of the rajah's ment; that a commercial treaty should be concluded between the two governments; that attention to such advice as the English government should judge it necessary to offer, "with a view to the economy of his finances, the better collection of his revenues, the administration of justice, the extension of commerce, the encouragement of trade, agriculture, and industry, or any other objects connected with the advancement of his highness's interests, the happiness of his people, and the mutual welfare of both states." With a view to the proper connection of the respective lines of frontier, provision was made for an exchange of territory between the Company and the rajah, or for an adjustment by such other means as should be suited to the occasion, in case it should be found that any districts assigned to either party by the partition treaty of Mysore were inconveniently situated. Such was the substance of the articles from the sixth to the fifteenth; the sixteenth and last providing for the ratification of the treaty by the governor-general.

Thus did the uncontrollable enmity of Tippoo Sultan to the English nation result in a vast acquisition of territory, power, and influence by the people whom he hated, and whom it had been the labour of his life to The means taken by him to circumvent. effect their destruction ended in his own; and, as if to render the retribution more striking, the officer who dealt the final blow, to which Tippoo owed his dethronement and death, had been one of the victims of his tyranny. General Baird had fallen into his hands after the fatal defeat of Colonel Baillie's detachment, and for several years had been subjected to the sufferings and horrors by which imprisonment under Tippoo Sultan was accompanied.

In the new settlement of Mysore, some difficulty was apprehended from the attempts of the poligars, who had been dispossessed by Hyder Ali and Tippoo, to re-establish their claims. It had been endeavoured to guard against this by the mode in which the change was effected. The investment of the rajah with the character of a sovereign was treated not as the restoration of the old government, but the creation of a new one, and the anticipated difficulty was scarcely felt. Some of the commandants of fortresses were anxious to sell their fidelity at a good price; and others, tions. The rajah was to provide the funds for who had collected plunder, delayed surrender only impediment of importance occurred in the province of Bednore, where an adventurer named Dhoondia gave some disturbance, requiring the dispatch of a force for its sup-Dhoondia was a patan, who had incurred the resentment of Tippoo by committing depredations on the sultan's territories. He was at length secured, and the pious zeal of the prince being gratified by the compulsory conversion of his prisoner to the Mahometan faith, Dhoondia made such progress in Tippoo's favour as to be trusted by him with military employment. But his good fortune was of short duration, and for some time before the commencement of the war, the convert had been confined in irons. On the fall of Seringapatam the humanity of the conquerors set him at liberty, and Dhoondia availed himself of his newly-gained freedom by an early flight from the place of his imprisonment, a movement to which his liberators would be likely to attach little importance. Resuming his old habits, Dhoondia, on the disbanding of Tippoo's army, collected a few cavalry, with whom he took the direction of Bednore. The state of the country was not unfavourable for gathering recruits, and he soon found his band of followers considerably increased by men anxious for service of some kind, and not troubled with any acute sensibility of conscience in relation to its character. By the influence of motives which it is not easy to explain, certain killadars were prevailed upon to betray their trusts to him, and in this manner some of the principal places in the province fell into his hands before it was in the power of General Harris to detach from the army a sufficient force to act against him with effect. In the mean while Dhoondia made the best use of the time thus afforded him; he levied heavy contributions on the rich country which lay at his mercy, enforced these exactions by the most unrelenting cruelty, and filled the province with acts of rapine and murder. To stop his career, a light corps of cavalry and native infantry. under the command of Colonel James Dalrymple, moved from Chittledroog as soon as their services could be spared. They soon fell with a party of the banditti, consisting of at two hundred and fifty horse and four Ared infantry, which they completely troyed. The capture by the English force a fort on the east bank of the river Tungbuddra followed, and not long afterwards another on the west bank was taken. While Colonel Dalrympie was thus engaged, Colonel Steven-on was advancing into Bednore, by another direction, at the head of a light force, composed also of cavalry and native infantry. Simoga was attacked by this force, and carried demonstrations thus rendered necessary were by assault. On the 17th of August Dhoondia not of sufficient interest to merit recital. The was attacked near Shikarpoor, and his cavalry, after sustaining considerable loss, were driven into a river which was situated in their rear. The fort of Shikarpoor at the same time fell into the hands of the English. Dhoondia escaped by crossing the river in a boat which had been procured for the occasion. He was closely pursued, and compelled to take refuge in the Mahratta territory, where he encamped with the remnant of his followers. would have been no difficulty in taking or destroying him, had the British force been at liberty to pass beyond the Mahratta boundary; but this the governor-general had forbidden, and Colonel Stevenson accordingly halted his detachment.

But Dhoondia was not in a position where he could calculate on either safety or repose. A robber and a murderer by profession, he had limited the exercise of his occupations to Wherever his foot had no particular districts. pressed he left records of his presence in acts of violence and blood. The Mahrattas, it appeared, had some accounts of this character against him, and they proceeded very summarily to administer a degree of punishment which, if inadequate to the crimes of Dhoondia, was quite in accordance with the temper and habits of the people among whom he sojourned. A chief, commanding a division of the peishwa's army, paid the wanderer a visit within a few hours after he had pitched his camp within the Mahratta borders, and relieved him of everything which was necessary either to the future exercise of his trade of plunder, or to the supply of the wants of the passing day. would be too much to ascribe this visitation to the operation of the moral sense in those who made it. Had the character of Dhoondia been as pure as it was depraved, his fate, under the circumstances of his situation, would have been It was his helplessness, not his the same. crimes, which invited the infliction to which he was subjected; and it would be an injustice to Mahratta ingenuity to suppose that if the peishwa's servants had been without experience of Dhoondia's acts they would have wanted a pretence for plundering him. But, whatever their motives, they rendered a useful service to the English which the latter power could not itself perform.

The great work which had brought the governor-general to Madras having been completed, the necessity for his presence there had ceased, and he returned to Bengal in September. At both presidencies enthusiastic congratulations flowed in upon him, which, as soon as the news of his success could be disseminated, were echoed from every part of the world where an Englishman or a friend of England was to be found.

CHAPTER XVI.

PROCEEDINGS IN TANJORE—ASSUMPTION BY THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT OF THE ADMINISTRA-TION OF SURAT—DHOONDIA DEFEATED AND SLAIN—GENERAL BAIRD'S EXPEDITION TO -Marquis wellesley assumes the government of the carnatio - title of egypt – NABOB CONFERRED ON AZIM-UL-DOWLAH-NEW TREATY WITH THE NIZAM.

THE remarkable promptitude and energy which | stand the Hindoo law better than its recogthe governor-general had displayed in counteracting the designs of Tippoo Sultan, might lead to the belief that the accomplishment of this object had occupied his undivided attention. But such was far from being the fact. Other affairs of weighty importance pressed on his consideration, and among these were the succession to the throne of Tanjore, and the necessary measures for settling the government of that country in a manner which should relieve the people from the oppression to which they had long been subjected.

Some years before the arrival of the earl of Mornington in India, the rajah of Tanjore, having been deprived by death of all his legitimate children, provided for the succession in a manner not unfrequent in the East, by The guardianship of the adopting a son. child and the care of the government during his minority were assigned by the rajah to his brother, Ameer Singh; but the views of that personage extended beyond the exercise of a delegated and temporary authority. death of the rajah, which occurred soon after the act of adoption, gave opportunity for the ambition of Ameer Singh to display itself: the title of the youthful successor was forthwith disputed, and the validity of the act under which he claimed denied. Various objections were raised, and the support of the British government being invoked on both sides, the questions at issue were referred by that authority to the decision of a council of pundits learned in Hindoo lore, specially summoned for the occasion. In taking this course, the Company's government had no object in view but to do justice. Nothing had occurred which could lead them to entertain any feeling of partiality or prejudice with regard to either of the candidates for the musnud, and the answer to the questions upon which the decision of the conflicting claims depended was awaited, both at Madras and Bengal, with perfect indifference. Unhappily the desire of the British authorities to do justice was not aided by the knowledge necessary for its guidance; and, in resorting to the advice of native expounders of the law, they had done little to guard themselves from The contest between a child and a man of mature age was an unequal one; and the decision of the learned pundits was in favour of the party who had the better means of maintaining his claim, and the readier opportunity of rewarding their services. The British government presumed not to under- carried into effect almost by force. It could nized expositors, and the brother of the deceased rajah was declared the lawful successor to the musnud, to the exclusion of the adopted child. The former was accordingly placed on the throne, but not without a distinct intimation of the expectation entertained by the British government, that the excluded infant would be protected and maintained in a mannor suitable to the hopes which he had been led to cherish. Nothing could be more easy, nothing more natural, than to promise compliance with the wishes of those who had the power of bestowing or withholding a kingdom; and, as far as professions were concerned, Ameer Singh gave to his patrons full satisfaction. But he went no further. Complaints of the treatment received by his infant rival soon became loud and frequent. He was subjected to rigorous confinement in a dark and unhealthy place, and his mind was left unimproved even by the narrow measure of instruction usually accorded to Oriental youth. The governor of Madras at length felt called upon to address to Ameer Singh a letter suggesting the necessity of taking proper care of the health and education of the boy. By this time Ameer Singh had become impressed with a full sense of his own dignity, and the receipt of the letter filled him with indignation. had promised, indeed, to comply with the wishes of the English government on the subject, but he now treated its mediation as an improper interference with his domestic ar-He alleged that, during the rangements. reign of his brother, his own situation had been worse than that of the person in whose behalf he was addressed, and that the British government had never interfered in his favour. Such, indeed, was the spirit in which the communication was received, that it was found necessary immediately to follow it up by another of more decisive tone. Ameer Singh was called upon, in terms somewhat peremptory, but sufficiently warranted by the circumstances of the case, to extend to the adopted son of his brother certain specified indulgences; and, with a view to some better security than Oriental promises for the fulfilment of the desire of the British government. it was intimated that a small guard of Company's sepoys had been directed to attend on his person. After various attempts on the part of the British resident to induce Ameer Singh to yield compliance to the wishes of the British government, they were ultimately became obviously necessary: and a wish mate. The right to the throne of Tanjore had Madras, was gratified. The widows of the ceased to be matter of doubt when the earl of Madras, was gratified. The widows of the ceased to be matter of doubt when the earl of deceased rajah, who had been grievously op- Mornington arrived in India. The Court of pressed by his successor, likewise found a Directors had resolved to uphold the claims of pressed by his successor, included a pressure of the company's territories. One object of their removal was to assist, by their influence, in forcing upon the British government a reconsideration of its decision in regard to the title of the reigning prince of Tanjore. It was represented, and with great appearance but had there been any, the reasons in favour for the title of the territories. of probability, that the pundits to whose opi- of the course resolved upon by the governornion he owed his elevation had been bribed; general were amply sufficient to justify its and the judgment which they had delivered adoption. The causes of the miserable conthereupon deemed it necessary to enter upon gation, and it was in contemplation to issue a formal examination of the title in dispute, a commission to examine and report. The The objections taken to the claim of the governor-general at once perceived that to adopted son of the former rajah were three:— take such a step while Ameer Singh remained First, that at the time the act of adoption was on the musnud, would be but a mockery of performed, the rajah was in such a state of inquiry. It could not be expected that he mental and bodily infirmity as rendered him would promote researches which, if successincapable of duly executing so important a ful, would have the effect of exposing his own function. The second and third related to misgovernment; and his continuance on the function. The second and third related to points of Hindoo law. It was represented that the boy being an only son, his adoption was on that ground invalid; and that his age exceeded that to which the law restricted the exercise of the privilege. The alleged incapacity of the rajah was amply disproved. On the remaining questions a number of brahminical opinions were obtained, all of them favourable to the claim of the vouth whom favourable to the claim of the youth whom governor-general experienced difficulties in-the deceased prince had destined to succeed calculable and almost insurmountable. These him. The adoption of an only son, though did not in any degree arise from the character admitted to be reprehensible, was declared of the new rajah, which was amiable and not to be invalid; it was an act which ought generous, but from the accumulation of abuses not to be done, but which when done could under former governments, which had gathered not lawfully be set aside. The question of strength proportioned to the time during which age was determined unequivocally and with they had existed and the numerous interests out reserve in favour of the rival of Ameer which were connected with their preservation. Singh. And these opinions were not confined The energy of the governor-general ultimately to the expounders of Hindoo law in the south triumphed over all the obstacles that stood in of India; they were confirmed by the judge the way of a settlement; and the result was, ment of their brethren in Bengal, and at the that, with the free consent of all parties increat depository of brahminical learning, Ben- terested, the British government assumed the

a had been passed by, thus became evident, for the rajah.

not be expected that the hatred borne by European feelings than that of a distant rela-Ameer Singh to his rival would thereby be tive capriciously invested with a stronger alaced; and he continued to manifest it by title; but Hindoo feeling is different: and in all the means in his power. Further measures this case, moreover, the claim of Ameer Singh for the protection of the persecuted youth was vitiated by the fact of his being illegiti-

. The ignorance or the corruption of the entire civil and military administration of wlits upon whose sentence the adopted Tanjore, a splendid provision being reserved This arrangement was unand it was but just to retract the false step doubtedly beneficial to the interests of Great which had formerly been made. These events Britain; but it is no exaggeration to say that and inquiries extended through several years, it was far more beneficial to the people of during which Lord Cornwallis and Lord Teign-Tanjore. It delivered them from the effects month exercised the powers of governor- of native oppression and European capidity. general, and a series of governors, commencing It gave them what they had never before with Sir Archibald Campbell, and ending with Jori Holari, presided at Madras. There ministration of justice. The rajah, who owed to from the Jori of the British authorities cipation from thraldom, insult, and personal in fever of Anser Singh, and against his danger, was now indebted to the same power to the free succession of a brother is unforted from the adaptive that the part of the British government his previous emanders of the free succession of a for his elevation to a degree of state and brother is unforted from the adaptive that the price of the same power to the price of the price of the same power to the first throughout to have succession of a splendour which must have fulfilled all his the 29th of November following.

A change, similar to that made at Tanjore, in India in point of commercial importance. the means of transport to the city which every gates of Mecca. The English at an early period had established a factory at Surat, and about the middle of the seventeenth century had bravely defended not only the Company's factory, but a large part of the town, against an attack of the Mahrattas under Sevajee. For this service they received the thanks of the Mogul commander. Nearly a century afterwards, the English were invited by the inhabitants to take possession of the eastle and the It proved insufficient, and it could not be exfleet. They hesitated, from an apprehension of incurring the resentment of the Mahrattas, who some years before had subjugated a large portion of the province of Surat, and, more recently, by taking advantage of disputes carried on for the government of the remainder, had established, with respect to the city and the districts attached to it, a claim for chout. Some outrages committed upon government that of the Company would have the English by those against whom they had possessed no right to interfere; but the intibeen invited to act finally induced the govern-inate connection which subsisted between the ment of Bombay to interfere. The govern- English and the nabob—the nature of that conment of the town had long been separated nection, which could be concealed from no one, from the command of the castle and of the and the circumstances under which the power fleet, and the person who exercised the first of the Company in Surat had been acquired, agreed to assist the English in obtaining pos-| rendered it an incumbent duty to exercise that session of the two latter, on condition of being power, not only for the advantage of those who protected in his authority. The government held it, but for the promotion, also, to the of Bombay had previously been in correspon- widest possible extent, of the prosperity and dence with a rival candidate for the civil happiness of the people. government, the reigning nabob being conperson to whom the musnud was to have towards the nabob. manager. Little difficulty was found in carry-ing this arrangement into effect. The English some addition to the payment secured to the their assumption of the command was aftercourt of Delhi. name and under the appointment of the Mogul effecting those changes which were indispens-

expectations. It was necessary for the pur-|Emperor. The firman of the emperor transposes of good government, that he should re-ferred the charge of the castle and the fleet to tain little of actual power; but in the enjoy-the English; the Mogul flag consequently ment of a splendid revenue and of a limited continued to float from the castle, and was degree of military authority, his situation was hoisted at the mast-head of the Company's brightly contracted with that in which his chief cruizer on the Surat station. The acquiearlier years were passed. The treaty was sition which the Company had made appears, concluded on the 25th of October, 1799, and indeed, to have wanted scarcely any conceiva-ratified by the governor-general in council on ble ground of justification. The movement ble ground of justification. The movement which they had headed was strictly a popular one; the people of Surat had sought the interwas effected with regard to the principality of ference of the government of Bombay, and The city of Surat was one of the first rejoiced in the change which had taken place. The Emperor of Delhi, who claimed the There also flocked in vast numbers the pious sovereignty, acquiesced, and appointed the votaries of the Arabian prophet, in search of Company his vicegerent. The nabob professed to be the servant of the emperor, and could good Mussulman is anxious to behold; and not consistently object to yield obedience to Surat thus came to be spoken of as one of the his commands; and he had, moreover, become voluntarily a party to the transfer of the military and naval power to the English. seems, therefore, that little exception can be taken to the step by which the English first obtained the public and recognized exercise of authority in Surat.

When the British government undertook the charge of the defence of Surat, revenue was assigned for defraying the expenses of the duty. pected that the Company's government should burden other portions of territory with the charge of preserving Surat from danger. gave rise to various disputes and negotiations. Other grounds of difference were furnished by the gross mismanagement of that portion of power which had been committed to the nabob. With the abuses existing under an independent

With regard both to its own claims and those nected with the party whom the English of the people of Surat, the British government desired to dispossess. But the view of the long entertained feelings of dissatisfaction The insufficiency of the been transferred not being favoured by the means placed at their disposal for the defence influential part of the inhabitants, a com- of the place, and the abuses of the civil ad-promise was effected, under which the nabob ministration, had alike furnished grounds of was to retain his office, and his rival was to protracted discontent before the arrival of the be invested with the character of naib or chief earl of Mornington in India. With much retook possession of the castle and the fleet, and Company for the defence of the place; but before the arrangement was concluded he died, wards solemnly confirmed by the imperial leaving an infant son, who survived but a short All who had ever exercised time, and whose death afforded an opening for any description of authority at Surat, except- the claim of an uncle to succeed to the office. ing the Mahrattas, had professed to act in the The opportunity was a favourable one for place. The British authorities had long ex- they, "of disposing of the office of nabob is ercised the power of disposing of the office of accompanied by an indispensable duty of pronabob at their discretion, as the Mogul Em- viding a just, wise, and efficient administration peror had formerly done; and though the for the affairs of Surat; the lapse of the powers claims of relationship had been respected, they had never been regarded as conferring a right to the succession. They were still respected, but not to the extent of subjecting the inhabitants of Surat to the evils which they had long endured under native rule. The candidate for the nabobship was unwilling to comply with the requisitions made of him, and the British government determined to assume the entire civil and military administration—a change in which the people of Surat had far greater reason to rejoice than even those by whom it it is their duty as well as their right to have was effected. The person whose claim to the recourse to that measure." exercise of power was thus set aside was indulged by being elevated to the rank to which he aspired. An ample provision was made for him and the family to which he belonged; and the only obstacle to improvement being thus removed, the reformation of the wretched institutions of Surat was commenced with Never had there promptitude and vigour. existed greater necessity for such a labour. It was truly stated that "the frauds, exactions, and mismanagement in the collection of the revenue, the avowed corruption in the administration of justice, and the entire inefficiency of the police, as manifested in the different tumults which" had "occurred in the city, particularly that excited in 1795," afforded "abundant evidence that the nabobs were as incompetent to conduct the internal government of the city as to provide for its external defence." The riot above adverted to was caused by the rival fanaticism of the Mahomedan and Hindoo inhabitants of the city, and was attended with the perpetration of many acts of atrocious barbarity. The Bombay government had given the nabob some good advice on this occasion, but had not felt at liberty to do more, although the British resident at Surat had strongly urged them to take some decisive measures for the preservation of good order in the city. The Hindoo inhabitants complained loudly of their want of security, This protection, however, they reiff .. of the office of naib. was maintained, the person holding it was especially intrusted with the charge of the police of the city, and he was accountable to the well as of all other powers with which he was him The abolition of the office had deof the city to those who were either unable or ably necessary to the good government of the Bengal to that of Bombay: The "right," say of government having left no other party, excepting the Company, in a state to protect the persons and property of the inhabitants of that city." And, after adverting to the objects to which the power of the nabobs ought to have been directed, but which they had signally failed to accomplish, the despatch continues: "It is obvious that these important objects can only be attained by the Company taking the entire civil and military government of the city into their own hands; and, consequently,

The Company accordingly now undertook the duties previously assigned to the nabob; . and, as far as the people were concerned, the only ground for regret was, that this step had not been sooner taken. One good effect, indeed, attended the delay: the moderation and forbearance of the Company's government were amply attested. The new arrangements at Surat were embodied in a treaty which was signed by the parties interested on the 13th of

May, 1800.

About the time of the settlement of the government of Surat, it became necessary to take measures for the preservation of the Mysore frontier from predatory attacks. The danger arose from Dhoondia Waugh, who had found means to repair the damage which he had sustained from the Mahrattas, and to place himself in a condition to resume the exercise of his occupation. The necessity of putting down this adventurer was urgent, with a view not only to the actual incon-venience occasioned by his ravages, but also to the possible consequences of allowing them to be perpetrated with impunity. Dhoondia was endeavouring to raise himself from the position of a vulgar robber to that of the head of a political confederacy. The discontented within the Company's territories and those of their allies were invited, by letters written in his name, to take advantage of the opportunity alleging that the trade and population of the afforded by his invasion of Mysore, and rise ty entirely depended on the protection of the simultaneously against the objects of their hate. Dhoondia, though in himself, as he was irked, had been only nominal since the about the office of the office of naib. While this office as maintained, the person holding it was estable one; and both his character and his attempt may be regarded as having gained something of dignity from the fact of the greatest general British government for the exercise of this as of modern times having taken the field against

Dhoondia having established himself in the prived the Company's government of all power | territories of the peishwa, where he had seized of efficient control, and committed the peace and garrisoned several forts, it became necessary to obtain the consent of the Mahratta unwilling to maintain it. The moral bearings chief to the passage of the British troops over of the question are exhibited forcibly and the boundaries, in search of the freebooter. terrely in two short passages of a despatch on This was at first refused, under pretence that this subject addressed by the government of orders had been given for his expulsion. Subof ject was accorded, energy; and after driving the enemy before a man whose views were directed to higher quantity of baggage, elophants, camels, horses, Ali, had his progress not received a timely army by such a route would have been ex-cruel and treacherous sultans," tremely inconvenient; it was deemed preferable to wait the construction of boats; but in highly unfavourable. The triumphs of the the mean time a detachment, lightly equipped, French there would, it was expected, leave was despatched to harass Dhoundia's rear, and) them at liberty to direct their arms to more endeavour to cut off part of his baggage. Aldistant quarters; and India or Egypt, it was brigade was also despatched to occupy the apprehended, would be among the points passes of the river most likely to be fordable, selected. To be prepared for danger, wher-and thus to guard against Dhoondia recrossing ever it might occur, the governor-general with any considerable number of followers, (now, by the well-merited favour of the This force in its progress gained possession of Crown, the Marquis Wellesley) proposed to several forts which were held by parties in the concentrate the strength of his majesty's interest of the adventurer. At one of these squadron in the Indian seas, together with places, named Sirhitty, an extraordinary insuch an amount of military force as India stance of cool and determined bravery occurred, could spare, at some point whence they might The outer gate of the fort was attacked and be able to proceed with promptitude and carried. gained, but the passage was found too narrow might be wanted. ever, was not suffered to check the progress a thousand Bengal volunteers, with details of of the assailants: the gun was instantly taken | European and native infantry, were despatched off the carriage, and, under a very heavy fire from the fort, transported by a body of artillerymen, led by Sir John Sinclair, to the to co-operate in the arrangement, by progate, which was very shortly burst open.

The precautions which had been taken to of the Nizam. Thither he was followed by requently an attempt was made to limit the covered by a village and a rock; but one imnumber of trasps to be employed against petuous charge put his troops to the rout, the Dhoandia, by a promise that a Mahratta force whole body dispersed, and were scattered in thould comperate with them. Finally, and small parties over the face of the country. with reluctance, the required permission for Many were killed, and among the number the entrance of any number of British troops was the author of the mischief, Dhoondla him-that might be necessary for the proposed self. Part of the enemy's baggage was taken in his camp, and another portion, with two Colonel Welledey entered upon the duty guns, all that remained to him, in the pursuit, which devolved on him with characteristic Thus terminated the career of Dhoondia Wangh, lim for some weeks, and capturing reveral fortunes than he was fated to attain. He places which had been occupied by Dhoondia, assumed the title of king of the two worlds, succeeded, on the 80th July, in surprising a and elevated some of his officers to the rank division of his army while encamped on the of azoffs and elevated some of his officers to the rank division of his army while encamped on the of azoffs and elevated some of his officers to the rank division of his army while encamped on the of azoffs and bloom tight bank of the Malpoorba. The attack more respectable, states and dynastics and Dhoondian arms of the Malpoorba. was crowned by the most complete success, previously spring up in India; and Dhoon-Not a man within the camp c-caped; and a dis Wangh might have been a second Hyder and bullocks, became the prey of the availants, check. Sir Thomas Munro, writing to Colonel After the destruction of this portion of his Wellesley, on his fall, said:--"A campaign of army. Dhoendia retired with the remainder to two months finished his empire, and one of the opposite vide of the Malpoorles. This the same duration has put an end to the earthly operation was not effected without much diffi-culty. Being without beats, he had made his worlds. Had you and your regiride army been way through jungles to the sources of the out of the way, Dhoondia would undoubtedly river, round which he had possed. The trans-have become an independent and powerful port of the guns and stores of the English prince, and the founder of a new dynasty of

The inner gate was next to be facility to any place where their services t the parage was found too narrow might be wanted. The point chosen was to admit a gun-carriage. This difficulty, how-Trincomalce; and three European regiments, thither; while Admiral Rainier, who commanded the squadron, was carnestly requested ceeding to Trincomalee without delay. employment of the force thus assembled was prevent Dhoondia crossing the river were to be determined by circumstances. It was rendered unavailing by its sudden fall, which to proceed either up the Red Sea, to coenabled the adventurer to enter the territories operate with any British force that might be employed in Egypt from the side of the Medi-Colonel Wellesley, with as much speed as was terranean; to advance to any point in India consistent with the difficulties attending the menaced by the French, should they despatch movement and the arrangements necessary for a force thither; or to be directed to the reeffecting the junction of the various portions duction of the Mauritius. This latter object of the army. The campaign was now ap- was one which the information of the governorproaching to a close. On the 10th of Sep- general led him to believe might be undertaken tember Colonel Wellesley encountered Dhoon- | with the best prospects of success, and it was one dia's army at a place called Conahgull. He of which the importance would fully instify was strongly posted, his rear and flank being the attempt. In every delicate state of the British interest in India rendered it a point of prudence to relinquish the design at that time. The object, however, was steadily kept in view by the Marquis Wellesley; and the Mauritius would most probably have been attacked but for the refusal of Admiral Rainier to co-operate. refusal appeared at first to be grounded on an opinion that it would be injudicious to employ any considerable portion of the land and sea forces on distant objects of enterprize; but ultimately another reason was permitted to transpire. The admiral held, or professed to hold, the extraordinary principle that the expedition could not be undertaken without the express command of the king, signified in the usual official form to the British government in India and to the commanders of his majesty's forces. Admiral Rainier, it seems, expected view; and the expectation was most just and That so monstrous a principle should bave been gravely maintained, is suffiform an opinion on such a subject, is utterly incredible. Admiral Rainier, however, professed so to regard it; and the governorgeneral therefore condescended to honour the "If." objection with an elaborate answer. said he, "the ground of your excellency's dissent from the proposed expedition to the Isle of France be admitted as a general rule to govern the conduct of the military and naval service in these distant possessions during the existence of war, I apprehend that the greatest advantage must result from thence to the cause the enemy. It is an established maxim of as well as an unqualified principle of blic duty, that in time of war all public ocers should employ their utmost endeavours to reduce the power and resources of the common enemy of the state, and should avail themselves of every advantage which circumstances may present for the advancement of the interests of their country by the vigorous prosecution of hostilities. In remote possessions the exigency of this duty increases in proportion to the distance from the parent

Britain and France, from the time when the tage can ever be taken of the temporary or two countries became rivals in the East, the accidental weakness of the enemy's possessions possessions of the latter in the Indian seas in India without express orders from England, had furnished abundant means for annoying signified through the usual official channels, the trade of the former. Numerous privateers, not only to the government of India but to fitted out at the islands of Mauritius and the commanders of his majesty's land and sea Bourbon, swept the ocean and enriched their forces, it is evident that opportunities of reowners, at the expense alike of the East-India ducing the enemy's power and resources must Company and of those engaged in the local frequently be lost, without the hope of retrade. While Lord Hobart administered the covery, by reference for formal commands to government of Madras, the despatch of an the source of sovereign authority at home. In expedition from that presidency for an attack the present instance, an extraordinary and on the Mauritius was contemplated; but the fortunate accident had disclosed to me the weak and almost defenceless state of the most important possessions remaining to France in this quarter of the globe. In my judgment, I should have failed in my duty towards my king and country if I had waited for his majesty's express commands, or for his orders signified through the official channels established by Parliament for the government of India, before I had proceeded to take the necessary steps for availing myself of the critical posture of the French interests within the reach of the force intrusted to my control." After some observations on the powers and responsibility of the governor-general in India, the marquis appeals to his own conduct under similar circumstances, and its results. "Of the rule," says he, "which I assert, I have furnished an example in my own practice; and if the principle which your excellency has that the governor-general would dissent from his adopted had governed my conduct, the conquest of Mysore would not have been achieved."

Some time before this dispute, the attention of the governor-general had been turned ciently startling; that it should have been re-ktowards Batavia. He had direct instructions garded as sound and true by any human being | from the king for bringing this settlement whose education and habits qualified him to under the protection of the British crown, on terms similar to those which had been granted to the Dutch colonies of Demerara, Berbice, and Surinam. It was proposed to effect this by negotiation, and Admiral Rainier was to undertake the task, aided by such an amount of sea and land force as would be sufficient to give weight to his representations. probability that the required force could be employed more advantageously elsewhere led to the postponement of the attempt; but when the project for attacking the Mauritius was defeated by the perverseness of Admiral Rainier, the views of the governor-general were again turned to Batavia. But the Dutch colony was to enjoy a further period of repose. Soon after the fall of Seringapatam, the Marquis Wellesley had suggested to the ministers at home the practicability of employing a force from India, to co-operate with any that might be despatched from Great Britain, against the French in Egypt; and it has been seen that the assemblage of troops at Trincomalee was made with reference to this among other objects. The suggestion was adopted; and state, and to the consequent difficulty of oh-thegovernor-general was instructed to despatch taining from home express and precise orders to Egypt, by way of the Red Sea, a force of applicable to the various emergencies that about a thousand Europeans and two thousand must arise in the course of war. If no advan- native infantry, under the command of an

A squadron of Company's cruisers, under inconvenient. Admiral Blankett, with a small body of troops, had sailed for Egypt some time before, the administration of the Carnatic territory General Baird and his army, after performing had been abandoned, an attempt was made to a march of extraordinary peril and difficulty adjust the claims of the Company and the across the desert, proceeded down the Nile to nabob by a treaty concluded by Sir Archibald Rhonda, from whence they advanced to Roupon Egypt had been previously decided; and the Indian reinforcement enjoyed no opportunity of gaining distinction, except by its Lord Cornwallis: one article of which treaty patient and cheerful submission to hardships gave to the Company, in the event of war and toils, and the ready surrender by the breaking out in the Carnatic or the contiguous native portion of the troops of their prejudices to their sense of military duty.

The expedition to Egypt was despatched early in the year 1801. In the month of July, in the same year, a change took place in the affairs of the Carnatic, which will require reference to a series of events of prior occurrence connected with that division of the south of the affairs of the Carnatic. With great of India. The death of Mahomet Ali during moderation he abstained from the immediate the administration of Sir John Shore, and the exercise of this undoubted right, and only dispute between the British authorities to took advantage of the occasion to endeavour which it gave rise, have been noticed. Maho-| to gain the nabob's assent to arrangements at met Ali was succeeded by his son, Omdut-ul- least as beneficial to himself as, to the Com-Omrah, who, from the commencement of his pany. The governor-general addressed to him reign, manifested a disposition to pursue the a despatch of considerable length, adverting same ruinous policy which had marked that to the dislike entertained by the nabob and of his father. The Marquis Wellesley, on his his father to the assumption of the administraarrival from England, occupied a considerable tion of the Carnatic by the Company, and to portion of the time which he spent at Madras the desire of the British government to show in vain attempts to obtain the prince's consent respect for their feelings to the utmost extent to the arrangements necessary for extricating himself and his subjects from the wretchedness in which both were involved. The nabob was obstinately bent on resisting all change, and the governor-general left Madras with a conviction that negotiation was useless. It was, however, obvious that, without the adoption of some new arrangements, it would be impossible to secure the Company from loss, to save the nabob from ruin, or to rescue the oppressed inhabitants of the country from the intensity of misery in which they were pledged, but in contravention of an express involved.

The war with Tippoo commenced, and with ments should be granted. it the necessity for all the aid which the nabob general referred to the moderation shown in could afford to his British ally. At this period relaxing the provisions of the treaty concluded the conduct of the nabob's officers, with regard by Sir Archibald Campbell, and placing to the collecting of supplies for the use of the the nabob in the more favourable position British army, indicated a total absence of secured to him by the later treaty, urging friendly feeling on the part of the prince, if that, as the Company's government then the acts of the servants were to be viewed as waived an undeniable right under a subfurnishing any evidence of the wishes of their sisting treaty, and consented to a new active and intelligent officer. These instruc- and he even agreed to advance a considerable tions were immediately acted upon. The force sum of money for the use of the army, on at Ceylon, strengthened by sixteen hundred specified conditions. The conditions were native infantry which had been assembled at assented to, but the money was not forth-Bombay for foreign service, was intrusted to coming, and but for the opportune arrival of the command of General Baird, and the whole treasure from Bengal, the consequences of the unbarked with all practicable expedition embarked with all practicable expedition. disappointment might have been seriously

After Lord Macartney's plan for exercising Campbell; but the execution of its provisions But the fate of the French attempt was soon found to be impracticable, and its securities worthless. A new treaty, more indulgent to the nabob, was concluded by countries, a right to the exercise of full authority within the nabob's dominions, except with respect to certain jaghires. This treaty was in force at the period under notice; and on commencing the war with Tippoo, the governor-general, by virtue of that article, might at once have assumed the entire control respect for their feelings to the utmost extent consistent with security; pointing out mildly, but distinctly and forcibly, the vices of the nabob's administration, and the general ruin that could not fail to follow; and complaining of the violation of the treaty of Lord Cornwallis, more especially by a practice which had notoriously prevailed, of granting assignments of recognic on the districts which formed ments of revenue on the districts which formed the security for the nabob's payments to the Company—a practice not only inconsistent with the purpose for which they had been provision of the treaty, that no such assign-The governormaster. They were for the most part inactive.

Those who made any exertions directed them to obstruct, not to facilitate, the supply of the wants of the British government. The nabob was not sparing in professions of friendship, and intentions should be judged with the same to every branch of the nabob's affairs connected with his relation to the Company, and by this by Lord Cornwallia. comprehensiveness to guard, as laras precaution a fluctuating or precarious authority.

casualty, a deficiency were to arise, the Company were to bear the loss, and the nabob to account. discussion.

The nabob positively refused to consent to any | in their exertions in the common cause. modification of the treaty of 1792. This might liberality which Lord Cornwallis exercised [Tippoo Sultan against that power. This evitowards those of Mahomet Ali. These points dence was contained in a voluminous correbeing sufficiently pressed, the governor-general spondence between Tipper and two of his proceeded to enumerate the principles of the pro- vakents, named Glodaum Ali Khan and Box posed arrangement. It was designed to extend Ali Khan, who accompanied the hostages to Madras at the close of the war undertaken

The rubject was taken up roon after the could effect such an object, against future misun- arrival of the vakeels at Madras. In an early derstanding; to provide to the utmost practi- letter they gave their master an account of an cable extent against the necessity for any further interview which had taken place between the change, and to relieve the Carnatic from the nabob, Mahomet Ali, the two princes, and inconveniences of a divided government or of themselves. On that occasion the nabeb was represented not only to have professed the An enumeration of details followed, and the warmest attachment to Tippes, which might points believed to be most interesting to the have been the effect of hollow courtesy, but to nabob were first noticed—the adjustment of have reproduced the war then just concluded. his dobt with the Company and of certain and to have declared that it had been undertaken claims on his part of a pecuniary nature, by the allied powers for the subversion of the arising from various sources. Modes of ar Mahometan religion. This charge was not ranging these having been suggested, the very probable, seeing that the nizem was a governor-general declared himself ready to party to the war; but while it could not fall relinquish the right of the Company to assume to be agreeable to Tippoo, by leading him to the entire government of the Carmatic during regard himself as a martyr in the cause of the the existing war, or any that might thereafter prophet, it also gratified the malignant feelings occur, on condition of a territory equal to which Mahomet Ali had long entertained securing the amount of the monthly payments towards his British protectors. The praise of securing the amount of the monthly payments towards he formed by contrasting with his liable, being placed in perpetuity under the exclusive management and authority of the Company. If the required territory should produce more than the amount of revenue anticipated from it, the surplus was to be paid anticipated from it, the surplus was to be paid to general expressions of sympathy with the same to the palsal, while on the other hand over to the nabob, while, on the other hand, sultan and his cause. At the first and the if, from an unfavourable season or any other last meetings he expressed the most carnest wishes for the establishment of relations of friendship and harmony between himself and be entirely exonerated from charge on this Tippeo, on the ground of community of re-The proposal included other points ligious belief, and with a view to the mainof detail relating to the defence of the country tenance of the faith of Mahomet. Tippoo, as and the satisfaction of the private debts of may be supposed, was pleased with these - the nabob, some of which were reserved for manifestations, and directed his vakeels to consideration at a more advanced period of give them all encouragement; and in two letters, which, some months later, he addressed The answer of the nabob was long, but little respectively to Mahomet Ali and Omdut-ulsatisfactory. Its tone was somewhat lofty. Omrah, he professed the most entire confidence

These discourses and communications would have been contemplated from his previous con- | he sufficient to establish the state of feeling duct; but his refusal was associated with an with which the nabob and his son regarded the application which certainly could not have various parties concerned in the war with Tippoo: been looked for. His letter was written after but they might have been considered nothing the fall of Seringapatam, and the consequent more than the purposeless overflowings of unof the dominions of Tippoo. The controllable hate, had not the acts of the two up a claim to share in the distribution of the Mahomet Ali maintained secret emissaries in conquered countries. But the reasonablenes Bengal, to collect information for his use. and decency of the request of the nabob at From these persons he learned that the British the time when it was preferred were emi-resident at Poonah had apprized his governnently illustrated by the fact, that within the mont that Tippoo was intriguing with the recesses of Seringapatam, opened to the view Mahrattas. This article of intelligence was of the conquerors by the success which attended duly communicated to one of the vakcels of their efforts, was found evidence most satisfactorily convicting the Nabob Omdut-ulof the impolicy of the course which his master perfidiously violated their engagements with the Baitish Garagements with the Baitish Garagement with the Baiti the British Government by intriguing with which was judged not to be far distant. Lord

Cornwallis, it was represented, would soon go was clear, that if the perfidy of Mahomet Ali to Europe, the hostage princes would return had been discovered during his life, the British to their father, and the payments of Tippoo Government would have been justified in would be completed. "After his lordship's inflicting punishment upon its treacherous departure, the liquidation of the kists and dependent, and providing for itself security. other points, whatever" might be "his high- Omdut-ul-Omrah had, on the part of his father, ness's pleasure," would, it was declared, "be negotiated the treaty with Lord Cornwallis: right and proper."

nabob gave the sultan intelligence and ad- British ally. Omdut-ul-Omrah was, indeed, march of British troops against Pondicherry, secured to him the right of succession under on the commencement of war between the the same conditions and obligations which English and the French, and warned the sul- attached to the right of his father. The treaty tan to be cautious as to the manner in which had been violated by Mahomet Ali—it had he carried on his intercourse with the latter been violated by Omdut-ul-Omrah both before people—not to discontinue it, but to avoid the death of his father and subsequently to written communications—there being no object that event. The governor-general therefore tion, as the nabob is reported to have stated, decided that the Company should assume the

these transactions suggested the propriety of revenues. He could not decide otherwise, endeavouring to elucidate them by an examination of some of the servants of Tippoo. sworn to protect. Among these were the two vakeels, whose temporary residence at Madras had afforded Wellesley to Lord Clive was accompanied by opportunity for opening a correspondence a letter to Omdut-ul-Omrah, which, after adbetween Tippoo and Mahomet Ali. duty of conducting the examination was in- nication on the part of the governor-general trusted to two experienced servants of the beyond the transmission of ordinary compli-Company, Mr. Webbe and Colonel Close. ments, explained the cause to be the discove-Gholaum Ali Khan endeavoured to evade the ries made at Seringapatam, and referred the objects of the inquiry, by affecting to have nabob to Lord Clive for information as to the fallen into a state of dotage and imbecility, steps about to be taken in consequence of those Ali Reza Khan was more candid and commu-discoveries. Motives of humanity prevented nicative, but little of importance was elicited. It was represented, however, that a marriage arrival at Madras the prince was labouring between the two houses had been one of the subjects of negotiation; and the vakeels endeavoured to show that all the secret communications which had taken place related to this subject. But they did not agree as to the party from whom the overture came; and if such an engagement really formed a subject of discussion, it was certainly not the only one, nor was it of such a nature as to require the protection of a secret cipher, which cipher, too, was obviously framed for application to pedient to despatch a party of the Company's political purposes. Further, if the overture, troops to take possession of the principal gateas one of the vakeels affirmed, came from Arcot, the desire there manifested to form an alliance with the bitter and implacable enemy of the English could only be regarded as an additional evidence of hostility to that people.

The investigation of the evidence of the nabob's treachery required time: and, when completed, it was obviously desirable, in a matter so delicate and so liable to misrepresentation, to avoid acting without due deliberation raised in the way of producing it. and a full consideration of consequences. There tish deputies, however, insisting on its being were also motives connected with a pending brought forward, it was at length exhibited. negotiation with the nizam for some delay. At length, on the 28th May, 1801, the Mar-Omrah had appointed a reputed son, known as quis Wellesley addressed to the governor of Ali Hussein, to succeed him in the possession Fort St. George, Lord Clive, a despatch, com-municating his determination as to the final cluding the government of the Carnatic. The adjustment of the affairs of the Carnatic. It British deputies then requested a private coz-

he had also been confederate with his father, Nor was this the only instance in which the in the machinations carried on against his He communicated to him the intended substantially a party to the treaty; for it to verbal communications in case of necessity. government of the Carnatic, and that the The discovery of the documents relating to nabob should become a stipendiary upon its without betraying the interests which he was

The despatch addressed by the Marquis The verting to the long suspension of all commuthis letter from reaching the nabob. On its under mortal disease; and from an apprehension that the communication might aggravate his complaint and accelerate its fatal termination, all knowledge of the intentions of the British government was withheld. being understood that some members of his family had introduced armed men into the palace, with the view of advancing their own objects on the occurrence of the death of the prince, if not before, Lord Clive deemed it exway. This was effected without resistance; and it being explained to Omdut-ul-Omrah that the object of the movement was the preservation of order, he was perfectly satisfied. On the 15th July he died. Mr. Webbe and Colonel Close immediately proceeded to the palace, where they were met by some of the deceased nabob's officers. It was stated that the nabobhad lefta will, but some difficulty was On being read, it appeared that Omdut-ul-

his behalf, and, in reply to a question from deputies. the deputies, declared that he considered the khans to have been appointed by his father for the purpose of assisting him, and that the object of his own councils was not separated from theirs. The deputies thereupon made a communication, which they had been instructed to deliver, of the intention of Lord Clive to hold a personal conference with Ali Hussein previously to carrying into effect the measures in contemplation. This took the khans by surprise, and appeared greatly to alarm them. Various modes of evading the proposed conference were resorted to; but the deputies insisting that the governor's orders admitted no excuse or delay, the khans retired to make preparations, and Ali Hussein took advantage of their absence to declare, in a low tone of voice, that he had been deceived by them. On their return, the whole party assembled proceeded to the tent of the officer commanding the Company's troops at the palace, where they were met by Lord Clive. The ceremonies of introduction being over, the attendants of Ali Hussein were required to withdraw, and the conference was conducted by him and the British governor. Before the latter had fully explained his views, he was interrupted by Ali Hussein, who, after expressing his sense of the governor's consideration, voluntarily proceeded to state that the conferences had been conducted by the khans without his participation, and that he disapproved of the result which had followed. In consequence of this avowal, the entire substance of the conferences was recapitulated to Ali Hussein, the proofs of the violation of the engagements of the late nabob with the British Government were distinctly enumerated, and the extent of the security required by the latter concisely explained. Ali Hussein then declared himself willing to agree to the terms proposed: and after some conversation his concurrence, but that the same views were on matters of secondary importance, he sug-gested that a treaty should be prepared, vesting the entire civil and military authority in the Company, which he observed he would be ready to execute, with or without the consent of the khans, at another separate conference which was appointed to be held on the following day within the British lines. On that day the deputies proceeded to the palace, to conduct the heir of Omdut-ul-Omrah to the place of meeting; but a change had passed over his mind, and he announced, that as the two khans had been appointed by his father's will to assist his councils, he could not adopt a line of conduct inconsistent with their advice, and that consequently no further interview with the governor was necessary. was urged, notwithstanding his new determi- without offering any observation on it. nation, to keep the appointment which had been made, and he consented. The conference legitimate offspring; and it had been deterwith Lord Clive, like the former, took place mined, should his testamentary heir reject the previous interview. The heir then entered, [Hussein maintained the same tone which had in conformity with the arrangement made on marked his previous communication to the Being requested to give some explanation, he said that he was aware that the sentiments which he now expressed differed entirely from those which he had avowed on the preceding day, but that the change was the result of reflection: that the whole family had been assembled to deliberate on his affairs that he had, in consequence, given the subject better consideration, and that he now considered it to be totally incompatible with his interest and his honour to accede to the proposal to which he had previously given his consent. He was reminded of his admission that the khans had practised deception on him the consequences of persisting in his new course were pointed out, and assurances were given of protection from any insult or danger that he might apprehend from an adherence to his former decision; but all these topics were urged in vain. A suspicion was then intimated to Ali Hussein that he had been encouraged by interested persons to adopt the fatal course on which he had entered-that their representations had induced him to disbelieve the existence of orders from the governor-general warranting the proposal which had been made to him, and the terms on which its acceptance had been urged. admitted that he had been spoken to on the subject, but denied that he was influenced by any distrust of the nature of the governorgeneral's orders.

Against the mischievous deceptions believed to be employed to mislead him, Ali Hussein was warned repeatedly though unavailingly. He was apprized that, if he entertained any hope that what might be done by the government of Fort St. George would be undone by a superior authority, he deceived himself. He was assured, not only that the orders of the governor-general were peremptory to carry into effect the plan which had been submitted for entertained by the government at home, and that consequently, all expectation of revision in that quarter must be vain. The conference concluded on the part of Lord Clive by representing to Ali Hussein that no pains had been spared to guard him against the consequences which he was about to incur; that the duties of humanity towards him, and of attention to the honour of the British name, had been satisfied; that his position in society had been determined by himself, and that his future situation would be that of a private person, regarded as hostile to the British interests, and dependent for support on the voluntary bounty of the Company. Ali Hussein listened ter to the governor's parting address with com-He posure, and retired from the place of audience

Omdut-ul-Omrah appears to have left no without the presence of the khans; but Ali|throne on the modified terms on which it was in future to be held, to tender it to the [inconveniences, and requested with great ear-The officer commanding the British detachment in charge of the palace gateway was ordered to take possession of the entire building, and to remove the guards of the late nabob, who had hitherto been suffered to measures for the settlement of the Carnatic continue at their posts. This being effected, were deferred partly with a view to the prethe difficulty of communicating with Azim- vious completion of some negotiations pending ul-Dowlah was removed; a party of the with the nizam. These ended in the conclu-Company's troops being substituted at the sion of a new treaty with that prince, under place which he inhabited for the guards of which provision was made for an increase of the late nabob who were previously stationed the subsidiary force maintained by the Comto him that the movement was intended for For this purpose the whole of the territory his more effectual protection, and he was acquired by the nizam under the treaties of satisfied. Although he could not be aware of Seringapatam and Mysore was, by an article the precise views of the British government, of the new treaty, transferred in perpetuity he could at least place confidence in its honour, to the English; but as some of the districts and must have felt certain that no change of lay inconveniently for their occupation, arguard could involve him in greater danger rangements were made by a subsequent article than that which previously surrounded him.

was visited by Colonel MacNeil, the officer in more favourably situated with regard to British command, who intimated that, if he felt any possession. desire of representing the state of his affairs to the British government, the means of doing country the full benefit of the conquest of so were now open to him without danger. Mysore, and this without invading the just The offer was embraced, and Azim was soon rights of the only ally who had taken part in admitted to an interview with Lord Clive. the conquest. A portion of the acquisitions He appeared to entertain no ambitious de- of that ally was, it is true, now surrendered signs, and he probably did not anticipate the to the English, and a further cession of terripossibility of his elevation to the dignity which tory was made in exchange for the remainder; Ali Hussein had renounced. He complained but for these advantages an ample equivalent of injuries and hardships, of poverty and its was offered, in relieving the nizam from the acceptance of Azim-ul-Dowlah. This prince nestness that, in any settlement that might be was the only legitimate son of Ameer-ul- made of the affairs of the Carnatic, his claims Omrah, the second son of Mahomet Ali. The might be considered; but he appeared to limit ordinary principles of succession would thus his expectation to the provision of more suit-be little violated; and except with reference able accommodation for his family. He was by Omdut-ul-Omrah, they would not be vio-lated at all. It was, however, in this case far tion that his expectations were likely to be more easy to determine than to carry the exceeded. Another interview took place on determination into effect. Azim-ul-Dowlah the following day, when the views of the was in the power of those who supported the British government were gradually unfolded, pretensions of his cousin. Opportunity was These being understood, there remained little sought for making a private communication to to impede the progress of negotiation. Azim him; but so strictly was he watched, that it acknowledged the right acquired by the Comwas found impracticable. A negotiation might pany by the perfidy of Mahomet Ali and have been commenced openly; but this, there Omdut-ul-Omrah, and expressed himself willwas reason to apprehend, might involve the ing to accept the office tendered him, with all prince in the fate which in the East so often the conditions attached to it by the British overtakes those who enjoy the dangerous government. Within a few days a treaty was distinction of royal birth without the means drawn up and signed, by which the respective of self-defence. Before the question of how rights of Azim and the Company were defined to communicate with Azim was solved, it and settled on the basis previously determined was ascertained with Azin was solved, it and section on the basis previously determined on; a proclamation was issued by the governor displaying much activity, and no inconsider-of Fort St. George, setting forth the grounds able share of audacity. The khans had priupon which the British government had acted, vately, but formally, placed Ali Hussein on the musnud of Arcot, and a public ceremony passed easily and tranquilly into the possessof the like nature was to take place without sion of the East-India Company. The statesdelay. As such an investiture would be the man under whose auspices this great and signal for civil war, Lord Clive felt it neces- happy change was effected was amply justified sary to resort to vigorous measures to prevent in declaring the settlement of the Carnatic to be "perhaps the most salutary and useful measure which has been adopted since the acquisition of the downnay of Bengal."

It has been mentioned that the necessary The prince was surprised by the pany for the defence of his dominions, and and his surprise appears to have been the payments accruing on account of the whole i unmixed with alarm. It was explained were commuted for assignments of territory. for the exchange of those districts for others, On the morning after the change the prince which, though of somewhat less value, were payment, but from the harassing vexations derable extension of territory. the ceded territory had still greater cause for rectly contributing to the peace and happiness congratulation in the change of rulers. To of others. the British government the new treaty gave subsidiary payments to which he must other-|security for the expense incurred on account wise have been liable. The nizam was thus of the nizam, an improved frontier, and all exempted not merely from the necessity of the power and respect resulting from a consi-All parties which Eastern princes never fail to experience | were thus benefited, and the governor-general when money is to be disbursed. His people | had the satisfaction of feeling that, while he had reason to rejoice that one excuse for ex- was raising the position of his own govern-tortion was removed, while the inhabitants of ment among the states of India, he was indi-

The Marquis Wellesley thus secured for his

CHAPTER XVII.

AFFAIRS OF OUDE-MURDER OF MR. CHERRY-COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL AND THE NABOB VIZIER-THE VIZIER'S CONTEMPLATED RESIGNATION-MALAD-MINISTRATION OF OUDE-MR. HENRY WELLESLEY NEGOTIATES THE CESSION OF TERRITORY IN DISCHARGE OF BRITISH CLAIMS-GOVERNOR-GENERAL VISITS THE NORTHERN PROVINCES -INTERVIEW WITH THE VIZIER-ARRANGEMENT WITH THE NABOB OF FURRUCKABAD.

commencement of the Marquis Wellesley's contingencies. was always in arrear, while the most frightful extortion was practised in the realization of the revenue. Justice was unknown; the army was a disorderly mass, formidable only to the power whom it professed to serve. These evils of native growth were aggravated by the presence of an extraordinary number of European adventurers, most of whom were as destitute of character and principle as they were of property. It is worthy of remark, that an ill-governed Indian state is precisely the place which a disreputable class of Europeans find the most suitable to the exercise of their talents. To all these points, as well as to the extraordinary degree of power, far too great for a subject, possessed by Almas, the attention of the governor-general was turned soon after his arrival, and his views were thus explained in a letter dated a few months after that event, and addressed to the resident at Lucknow. "The necessity of providing for the defence of the Carnatic, and for the early revival of our alliances in the peninsula, as well as for the seasonable reduction of the growing influence of France in India, has not admitted either of my visiting Oude, or of my turning my undivided attention to the reform There are, however, of the vizier's affairs. two or three leading considerations in the state of Oude to which I wish to direct your particular notice, intending at an early period to enter fully into the arrangements in which they must terminate. Whenever the death of Almas shall happen, an opportunity will offer of securing the benefits of Lord Teignmouth's ATTENTION must now be carried back to the the purpose of realizing the subsidy under all The Company ought to sucadministration, and diverted from the southern | ceed to the power of Almas, and the manageto the northern parts of India. In Oude the ment, if not the sovereignty, of that part of rightful sovereign had been placed on the musnud; but in other respects, all was emplaced in our hands, a proportionate reduction barrassment and disorder. The British subsidy being made from the subsidy. The effect of such an arrangement would not be confined to the improvement of our security for the subsidy; the strength of our north-western frontier would also be greatly increased. the other hand, in the event of Almas's death, we shall have to apprehend either the dangerous power of a successor equal to him in talents and activity, or the weakness of one inferior in both, or the division of the country among a variety of renters. In the first case we should risk internal commotion; in the two latter, the frontier of Oude would be considerably weakened against the attacks either of the Abdalli or any other invader. The only remedy for these evils will be the possession of the Doab, fixed in the hands of our government. The state of the vizier's own troops is another most pressing evil. To you I need not enlarge on their inefficiency and insub-ordination. My intention is to persuade his excellency at a proper season to disband the whole of his army, with the exception of such part of it as may be necessary for the purposes of state, or of the collection of the revenue. Some expedient must be devised for providing a maintenance for such leaders and officers as from their birth or habits cannot easily be divested of their military pretensions (I do not say military character, for I do not believe that any such description of men exist at Lucknow). In the place of the armed rabble which now alarms the vizier and invites his enemies, I propose to substitute an increased number of the Company's regiments of infantry and cavalry, to be relieved from time to time, treaty, by provisions which seem necessary for and to be paid by his excellency," In addition the country from the host of Europeans who changed. Vizier Ali then began to expatiate had fixed upon it as their prey. These he on his wrongs; and having pursued this sub-proposed to disperse by as summary a process ject for some time, he suddenly rose with his of ejection as should be consistent with attendants, and put to death Mr. Cherry and humanity.

Before these designs could be put in course of execution, a tragical occurrence, arising out of the disputed claim to the musnud of Oude, displayed without disguise the character of the victims. They thence proceeded to the house pretender, who had been dispossessed by Lord Teignmouth. reside at Benares, a place singularly ill-chosen with reference to his pretensions and character, and from which the new governor-general, with sufficient reason, determined to remove His numerous retinue had more than once disturbed the peace of the city; and the ordinary military force stationed there was not deemed sufficient to guard against the resistance of this intrepid man extended bedanger either of commotion or escape. It was youd his own family: the delay thereby occaalso understood that Vizier Ali had despatched a vakeel with presents to the Affghan prince, Zemaun Shah; and it was justly inferred that he would not fail to turn to his advantage any opportunity that might be afforded by the on learning what had occurred, despatched a approach of the shah, and the consequent party to the relief of Mr. Davis, and Vizier employment of the British troops at a distance. Saadut Ali had applied for his removal; and, independently of this, such a step was obviously called for by sound policy. Mr. Cherry, the British agent, was accordingly instructed to signify to Vizier Ali the governor-general's intention that he should transfer his residence to the vicinity of Calcutta; at the same time assuring him that no diminution of his allowances or appointments would be attempted, and that at his new abode he would neither be subjected to any additional restraint, nor denied any indulgence which he had been siomed to enjoy at Benares. When this mmunication was made, Vizier Ali expressed cut reluctance to the required change. This feelings appeared to have undergone great siderably increasing the number of his folalteration. He ceased to manifest any dislike lowers. The British government remonstrated to removal, and seemed perfectly satisfied with with the rajah of Nepaul against this conduct the assurances which he had received of continued attention and indulgence. The conduct remonstrance produced such demonstrations of Mr. Cherry towards Vizier Ali is represented on the part of the person to whom it was to have been kind, delicate, and conciliatory; and the latter, so far from affording any ground Bhotwul was no longer an eligible place of for suspicion, had uniformly professed to entertain towards the British agent feelings of quired enabled him to display a bold front, affectionate gratitude. But the part which and he advanced into Goruckpore, whither a Mr. Cherry's official duty had imposed on him, in relation to the deposition of Vizier Ali, had marched. With these a skirmish took place, fixed in the mind of that person the deepest to the disadvantage of Vizier Ali. His folhatred. Mr. Cherry was warned of this, but lowers then began to drop off, and he would unhappily the warning was disregarded. Pruprobably have been taken, but for the treachery dence and the orders of government alike of a body of the vizier's troops who had been counselled precaution, but none was taken. A visit which Vizier Ali made, accompanied by his suite, to the British agent, afforded the means of accomplishing the meditated reverge. but placed under restraint. It being suggested to be accomplishing the meditated reverges. He had engaged himself to breakfast with by Captain Collins, the British resident with to the measures noticed in the above extract, Mr. Cherry, and the parties met in apparent the governor-general meditated the relief of amity. The usual compliments were ex-Captain Conway, an English officer who happened to be present. The assassins then rushed out, and meeting another Englishman named Graham, they added him to the list of their of Mr. Davis, judge and magistrate, who had just Vizier Ali had been allowed to time to remove his family to an upper terrace, which could only be reached by a very narrow staircase. At the top of this staircase Mr. Davis, armed with a spear, took his post, and so successfully did he defend it, that the assailants, after several attempts to dislodge him, were compelled to retire without effecting The benefit derived from the their object. sioned afforded to the rest of the English inhabitants opportunity of escaping to the place where the troops stationed for the protection of the city were encamped. General Erskine, Ali thereupon retired to his own residence. This, after some resistance, was forced, but not until its master had made his escape, with most of his principal adherents. No further measures seem to have been taken till the following morning, when a party of cavalry was despatched after him; but the rapidity of his movements, and the advantage which he had gained by the delay of pursuit, rendered the attempt to overtake him ineffectual.

The miscreant found refuge in the territories of the rajah of Bhotwul, a chief tributary both to the vizier and the rajah of Nepaul at which latter place the rajah of Bhotwul was at the time in durance. By his representatives, however, Vizier Ali was hospitably I been expected; but in a short time his received, and allowed to take means for conof the rajah of Bhotwul's dependents, and the addressed, as led Vizier Ali to conclude that The strength which he had acresidence. detachment of the Company's troops had

Scindia, that the rajah of Jyneghur might be | ing the letter, declared his therough concurinduced, by the offer of a considerable reward, to surrender his visitor, that officer was instructed to open a negotiation for the purpose. The task was not unattended with difficulty. The law of honour, as understood at Jyneghur, stood in the way of giving up to his pursuers even a murderer. On the other pursuers even a murderer. On the other hand, the rajah's appetite for wealth was violently stimulated by the large sum offered by Colonel Collins as the price of the transfer of the person of Vizier Ali into his keeping. A compromise was at length effected. Ali was given up, on condition that his life should be spared, and that his limbs should not be disgraced by chains. Some of his accomplices had previously suffered the punishment due to their crimes. The great criminal escaped through the scruples of the rajah of Jyneghur. Those scruples, however, did not prevent his relieving his guest of the charge of a quantity of jewels. This acquisition, with the sum obtained from the English, probably consoled the mjah for the slight taint which his honour had incurred.

The views which the governor-general had previously propounded to the resident at Lucknow were subsequently directed to be pressed upon the attention of the vizier. was justly urged that the alarm created by the recent approach of Zemaun Shah ought to, operate as an inducement to employ the season of repose afforded by his retirement in providing such effectual means of resistance as might be sufficient to avert the apprehension of future The military establishment of the vizier was admitted, by himself, to be useless for the pupose of defence. It was worse than useless; for at the moment when the presence of the British force had been required to make a formidable demonstration on the frontier, it had been found necessary to retain a part of it able time, inasmuch as the governor-general's in the capital to protect the person and autho- presence at Lucknow could not be immediate, rity of the prince from the excesses of his own and it was not to be expected that he would disaffected and disorderly troops. The con-|delegate powers for the conclusion of an arclusion which this state of things suggested to rangement with the nature and object of which the governor-general was unanswerable. "The | he was totally unacquainted. But the vizier inference to be drawn from these events," said he, "is obviously that the defence of his excellency's dominions against foreign attack, as well as their internal tranquillity, can only be secured by a reduction of his own useless, if not dangerous, troops, and by a proportionate augmentation of the British force in his pay. "

A change which not long afterwards took place in the office of resident at Lucknow caused some delay in the communication of the governor-general's views to the vizier. Lumsden was succeeded by Lieutenant-Colonel Scott, who bore a letter from Sir Alured Clarke, then holding the office of vice-president in Bengal, calling attention to the necessity of military reform. A favourable opportunity for presenting the letter was offered by the vizier's rence in the sentiments which it contained. The resident thereupon pressed an early consideration of the subject, and requested that the result might be communicated to him as soon as possible. He, at the same time, suggested the propriety of preparing certain statements of the number and expense of the troops of every description employed by the vizier.

More than twenty days passed without any satisfactory notice of this communication. The resident then pressed for the appointment of a day for the discussion of the subject, and a day was fixed. On its arrival, however, nothing could be drawn from the vizier but the most vague and dark intimations of his views and feelings. He observed, that the measure proposed was not impracticable, but such as he hoped might be accomplished; but he added, that he had a proposal to make, connected with his own case, the prosperity of his government, and the happiness of his subjects, and which, in its operation, could be prejudicial to no one; but all intimation of its nature or character he deferred till an expected visit of the governor-general to Lucknow, or till the execution of the projected measure was committed to the resident. No representations could induce him to explain; but he promised to visit the resident on a future day, and dictate a memorandum. He came, but the matter dictated for report to the governor-general proved to be nothing more than a repetition of what he had stated on the former day. The resident entered into arguments to show the propriety of separating the two projects, as the reform of the military department must be greatly protracted if it were made dependent on the acceptance of the vizier's unexplained proposal. On that proposal it was urged no determination could be formed for a considerwas unmoved, and the conference terminated without any progress having been made in the negotiation.

From the mysterious deportment of the vizier nothing could be distinctly known of his wishes or intentions. All was left to conjec-The resident believed that he was anxious to annihilate the functions of the ministers, who were the ordinary organs of communication with the resident, and to become the sole executor of his own purposes. What those purposes were, and in what manner they were carried on, was manifest from the whole course of the government since is assumption by Sandut Ali. The appropriation of the profits of oppression had been in a degree changed, but no change had taken and complaints of the turbulent and disorderly for the benefit of the people. The state of some of his battalions. Of this Colonel and mismanigement, the same mismanigement, the same mismanigement, the same mismanigement it is which dispreced the revenue.

under the former government, continued to | ngain addressed a letter to him, representing provail undiminished in extent or atrocity, the obligation of the Company to defend the under that of Sandut Ali. The only difference prince's dominions; the insufficiency for the was, that the entire fruits went into the private purpose of the number of British troops or-treasury of the sovereign, and, as parsimony dinarily stationed within them; the danger was a striking feature in his character, were impending from the intentions of Zemaun carefully hoarded by him. Formerly, a large Shah, and possibly from other sources; the portion was appropriated by those who stood necessity of an augmentation of the British between the prince and the people, and the force, and the really means of providing for part which reached the royal coffers was quickly the cost by disbanding the disorderly lat-dissipated in wild and thoughtless profusion. talions, which were a source not of strength "I cannot but feel," said Colonel Scott, " that but of weakness. The letter concluded by in-the ruin of the country, commenced in a reign timating that the British troops in Oude would of profusion and indolence, will progressively be immediately reinforced by a portion of the proceed in a reign of parximony and diligence.

The governor-general's answer to the repro- to follow at a future period. sentations of the resident was to the effect, that the present condition of the government mined by the conditions of the treaty under appeared to preclude the acquisition of the which the relative claims of the vizier and the information necessary to the first step in the British government arose-its expediency, by proposed reforms; that it was to be hoped an the circumstances under which it was resorted application addressed to the vizier by the go- to. vernor-general, simultaneously with his communication to Colonel Scott, would remove all Teignmouth and Saadut Ali on placing that difficulty, and establish the resident in the prince upon the throne. This instrument for-degree of influence and consideration which it mally recognized the obligation incurred by was necessary he should enjoy; but if this ex- the East-India Company under former treaties, pectation should be disappointed, the resident of defending the dominions of the vizier against was to insist, in the name of his superior, on the vizier placing his government in such a cified amount of subsidy for an English force state as should afford the requisite means of to be continually stationed in his territories, information, as well as of carrying the neces, which force was never to be less than ten sary military reforms completely and speedily thousand strong; "and if at any time it should into effect. The nominal minister, Hussen become necessary to augment the troops of Reza Khan, was supposed to offer a bar to the Company of Oude beyond the number of the company of the company including Number of the Company of the company of the number of the these results. His master withheld from him confidence, consideration, and power. His talents were not such as to make it desirable to retain him in opposition to the wishes of the pay the actual difference occasioned by the vizier, and the governor-general was ready to assent to his removal, due provision being made for his support and safety, provided that his thousand is here clearly contemplated and successor should be a person unequivocally provided for. well disposed to cultivate and improve the judge of the necessity? and to this the treaty existing connection between the state of Oude gives no answer.

d the Company. Jlicitude. This point was to be pressed with unremitted carnestness, and the vizier's acquiescence in the necessary measures was expected to be totally unqualified by any conditions not necessarily connected with it.

In answer to this letter from the governorgeneral the vizier declared that the advantages, both immediate and future, of a reform in his military establishment were more strongly in- | it is to be remembered, were bound not merely pressed on his own mind than on that of his to assist the vizier with a specified amount of illustrious correspondent, and that he would, without a moment's delay, consult with Colonel Scott upon what was practicable, and com-municate the result of their joint deliberations. This promise was fulfilled in the manner usual with the vizier-it is unnecessary to explain that, in point of fact, it was not fulfilled at all. The promised communication of the vizier's force for the duty; if thirteen thousand men proposed augmentation; the remainder were

The justice of this measure must be deter-

The treaty was that concluded by Lord all enemies; it bound the vizier to pay a specified amount of subsidy for an English force thirteen thousand men, including Europeans, and natives, infantry, cavalry, and artillery, the Nawaub Saadut Ali Khan," agreed "to excess above that number." The possible augmentation of the force beyond thirteen A question arises, who was to If the vizier, it might The proposed military happen that a prince who, like Sandut Ali, ..., however, was declared to be the great was at once under the influence of an extreme d immediate object of the governor-general's love of money, and a headstrong will, might, with a view to the gratification of his passions, deny the necessity, when its existence was clear to every one else; and if his denial were to determine the question, the country might be overrun by enemics, whose subsequent expulsion might occasion to the Company an amount of trouble and of loss which better provision would have averted. The Company, force for the defence of his dominions—they were bound efficiently to defend them; and to require them to do this with a force inadequate to the exigencies of the case, would be altogether unreasonable and absurd. obligation to defend the territory of Oude involved the obligation of allotting a sufficient sentiments not arriving, the governor-general were insufficient, they were bound to employ more, for the country was to be defended his design into effect. absolutely and unreservedly. The obligation alarmed for the safety of his power at home, which the Company had undertaken was he had suddenly retreated; but his return at mining upon the necessity for an increase of Scindia, too, was believed to cherish designs party, the result would be, that the Com-Rohillas, always turbulent and discontented, pany might be lawfully called upon to perform were ready to embark in the occupation they an impossibility.

Some misapprehension may have arisen from the manner in which the operation of the seventh article of Lord Teignmouth's treaty is adverted to in the letter to the vizier. It is said: "The seventh article of the treaty concluded with your excellency by Sir John Shore, provides for the occasional augmentation of the Company's troops in your excel-lency's dominions." This is not strictly accurate; the words of the treaty are, "if at any time it should become necessary to augment the troops of the Company in Oude;" the provision is general—it refers not to the augmentation being either occasional or permanent. Indeed, the paragraph of the letter preceding that in which occurs the reference to the power of augmentation as only occasional must have satisfied the vizier that that which was proposed was designed to be permanent. might not be in the power of the British government," it is said, "on a sudden emergency to reinforce the troops in your excellency's counmanner fulfil effectually their engagement to linquish a government which he declared himdefend the dominions of your excellency against all enemies,' than by maintaining constantly in those dominions such a force as shall at all times be adequate to your effectual protection, independently of any reinforcement which the exigency might otherwise require, but which might not be disposable in proper season." The views of the governor-general were thus most clearly and distinctly explained.

Should it be said, that if the above construction of the treaty be correct, the vizier, as to the expense of supporting the British force was altogether at the mercy of the British government—this is quite true. He placed himself at their mercy by delegating to them the defence of his dominions. His weakness required support—he consented to receive it from a powerful neighbour. He had placed himself in a condition of dependence, and having agreed to purchase certain advanobject to those terms being enforced. The right of the English government was not indeed to be pressed to its full extent without certainly the fact; but he desired to stirring reason; but if reason existed, he could not for a due provision being made for Es justly question its exercise.

This leads to the second point of inquirywhether at the time it was expedient to call In reporting to the government upon the vizier to entertain an increased number of British troops? and this admits of ber of British troops? and this admits of a stance of several conversations very ready answer. Oude was menaced by on the subject, Colonel Scott Zemann Shah, who had not only threatened points for consideration. invasion, but advanced to Lahore to carry whether it would not be True it was, that, therefore accompanied by the right of deter- a convenient season was fairly to be expected. If the right rested with any other unfavourable to the peace of Oude. The loved, and every part of the vizier's dominions was overrun with disorder, crime, misery, and disaffection.

A new scene was now about to open at Lucknow. The vizier had for some time been in the habit of dwelling, in his conversations with the British resident, on the impossibility of his conducting the affairs of the country. So frequently had this occurred, that the resident stated he had been led to conjecture that the prince had it in contemplation to retire from the cares and fatigues of government. This surmise he had never communicated to the governor-general, and he imputes his silence to various causes-the apparent absurdity of the expectation, and the countenance afforded to a contrary belief by the conduct of the vizier, in meditating state regulations, projecting buildings, and making household arrangements, implying the intention permanently of residing at Lucknow. The time, however, arrived when Colonel Scott had something more than his own contry with sufficient expedition; my firm opinion | jectures to communicate. The vizier made a therefore is, that the Company can in no other formal avowal of his desire and resolution to reself unable to manage either with satisfaction to himself or—and in this respect the admission was certainly as literally true as it was apparently candid—with advantage to his subjects. Colonel Scott made some remarks tending to show that, by following his advice, the affairs of the country might be administered for the benefit of the people, and at the same time with ease and reputation to the prince. The vizier replied that this might be so, but it was impossible for one person to judge of the feelings of another; that his mind was not disposed to the cares and fatigues of government; that He he was firmly disposed to retire from them; and that, as one of his sons would be raised to the musnud, his name would remain. subsequent period of the conference, he added. that in relinquishing the government he re-nounced every thought of interfering in its concerns, or of residing within its limits; that tages upon certain terms, he had no right to the money he possessed was sufficient for his own support, and for the attainment of every gratification in a private station—which was and for the other branches of his family. he meant to leave at Lucknow.

vizier's consent could be obtained, that the [doned, the letter was presented. The proposed abdication, instead of being confined to his reinforcement also marched without further own person, should also extend to his posterity, | delay, and after multiplied subterfuges and In connection with this suggestion, it is right evasions on the part of the vizier, the process to state, that though the vizier had sons, none of dishanding his disorderly battalions comof them were legitimate. Another question menced. The accomplishment of this necessary raised by the resident related to the disposal measure required much care to avertdangerous of the treasure left by the former vizier. This consequences; but the requisite care was not had been removed by Saadut Ali from the wanting, and the British authorities taking an public treasury to the female apartments of interest in the inspection of the accounts, and his palace, and it was conjectured that this the due discharge of arrears, the business prostop might have been taken in contemplation ceeded with less difficulty than could have of the design of relinquishing the government. | been anticipated, and without any disturbance The debts of the vizier's brother, to whose of rerious character. place and treasure Sandut Ali had succeeded, were considerable, and no part of them had reforming the military affairs of Oude, its civil been paid. Salaries were due to public ser-[government remained in the same wretched vants, and a considerable amount of allowances circumstances by which it had ever been to pensioners. All these claims it was pro-characterized. The vizier took advantage of bable Saadut Ali meant to evade. Colonel Scott had recommended that the vizier should ing failure of his engagements with the British himself write to the governor-general. This he declined, on the ground that there was no one about him to whom he could confide so delicate an affair; and he desired the resident to draw up a paper in Persian, embodying the views of the prince as previously explained, for transmission to the governor-general, which was accordingly done. It is unnecessary to trace minutely the proceedings which folreference to the various communications which he had received, the governor-general trans-1 the frequent or occasional devastations of an mitted a series of instructions to the resident, a draft of a proposed treaty, and a paper seasons, or by other calamities which impair explanatory of the views of the British govern- the public prosperity, the rapid decline of the ment, specially intended for the perusal of the | vizier's revenues might be imputed to other rather to discourage the meditated step of no such calamitous visitations have afflicted abdication than otherwise. The governor-the province of Oude, while, in consequence general saw that many advantages would of the protection which it derives from the result from it, if the entire administration of presence of the British forces, it has been the government, civil and military, were insintained, together with all the Company's transferred to the Company; but he saw also possessions on this side of India, in the unin-bet the realization of those advantages would terrupted enjoyment of peace. A defective by which the country was afflicted would be excellency's dominions and that of the conti-continued under such an arrangement, and the guous territories of the Company. While the continued under such an arrangement, and the guous territories of the Company. While the possible inconveniences to Saadut Ali himself, territories of the Company have been advancwere pointed out, and the representation was ing progressively during the last ten years fatal to the vizier's resolution. He rejected in prosperity, population, and opulence, the the condition proposed to be attached to his dominions of the vizier, though enjoying equal retirement, and declared that, as the appoint- advantages of tranquillity and security, have ment of a successor was objected to, he was rapidly and progressively declined." A detail ready to abandon his design, and retain the of particulars would amply bear out the general charge of the government. Whether he had ever remarks above quoted. "I have repeatedly entertained any sincere intention of relinquish-represented to your excellency," said the ing it, is a question on which it is impossible governor-general, addressing the vizier, "the to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion.

announcing the march of a body of the Com-realizing them by force of arms—the annual Oude, had been deferred pending the proceed-ings arising out of the vizier's professed desire farmers hold their possessions—the misery of

While some progress was thus making in this to intimate the probability of an approachgovernment. This step accelerated a measure really necessary and important, but which the vizier was most especially anxious to postpone -an inquiry into the cause of that mivery and disorder which was universally spread over the fertile country subject to his administration. That cause, as pointed out by the governorgeneral, was the government. Adverting to the communication from the vizier, the gover-It will be sufficient to state that, in nor-general, in addressing Colonel Scott, says: "Had the territories of Onde been subject to enemy-had they been visited by unfavourable The tendency of these documents was causes than a defective administration. greatly impeded if the abdication of Sandut administration of the government is therefore was to be followed by the establishment the only cause which can have produced so f a successor. The certainty that the evils marked a difference between the state of his effects of the ruinous expedient of anticipating The delivery of the letter to the vizier, the collections—the destructive practice of pany's troops to augment the British force in diminution of the jumps of the country—the to abdicate. When that project was aban-the lower classes of the people, absolutely ment-and the utter insecurity of life and property throughout the province of Oude." The vizier, impugned had it been possible. indeed, had admitted the miserable condition of his revenue administration; and all authorities concur in exhibiting the state of his dominions as little removed from complete anarchy. Under these circumstances the continued payment of the British subsidy could not reasonably be relied upon; and the vizier himself had, by his own suggestions, lent encouragement to those apprehensions which, on other grounds, there was abundant reason the British arms.

to entertain. his administration, the Marquis Wellesley had Mahometan festival, delayed for some time territorial security for a part, at least, of the vizier's pecuniary engagements with the British government. The desire of abdication, which at one time the vizier entertained or affected to entertain, suggested another mode of arrangement, which the governor-general now instructed the resident at Lucknow to press upon the consideration of the prince. Colonel Scott on the subject as This was the entire transfer of the government should have fully considered it. maintenance of the vizier and his family. Colonel Scott was directed to prepare the draft of a treaty for this purpose, on the model of the treaty concluded with the rajah of Tanjore and that proposed to the vizier at the period of his meditated abdication. framing such a treaty, the resident was in-structed to keep in view its primary objects the abolition of abuses, and the substitution of "a wise and benevolent plan of govern-ment, calculated to inspire the people with confidence in the security of property and of life; to encourage industry; to protect the fruits of honest labour, and to establish order and submission to the just authority of the state, on the solid foundations of gratitude for benefits received and expectation of continued security:" but he was, at the same time, to defer to the inclinations and prejudices of the vizier, as far as might be compatible with the attainment of the main objects of the treaty. The draft, when prepared, was to be submitted to the vizier. If on receiving it he might manifest any disposition to accede to its general principles, but should desire some particular modifications, his suggestions were to be reserved for the decision of the governorgeneral. But as it was obviously more probable that he would reject the proposal altogether, this result was provided for. In that case the resident was to fall back on the plan which

excluded from the protection of the govern | The vizier was to be informed that the funds for the regular payment of the subsidy must be placed without delay beyond the hazard of These positions are illustrated by reference to failure, and for this purpose the cession of facts then of recent occurrence; and the representation being addressed to the vizier, the quired. The doab, including the tribute from truth of the alleged facts would have been Furruckabad, was to form part of the territory to be thus demanded, and Rohilcund was pointed out as an eligible addition. The possession of these provinces by the English would tend to remove the vizier from foreign connections and foreign sources of danger; and it was suggested that their transfer would be less mortifying to him than that of any other portions of his dominions, inasmuch as they were not part of the more ancient possessions of his house, but had been acquired for it by

The absence of the vizier on a hunting It has been seen that, at an early period of excursion, and the subsequent celebration of a been impressed with the necessity of obtaining the execution of the orders of the governorgeneral. When the draft of the proposed treaty was at length submitted to the vizier, his deportment was such as afforded no clue to his probable decision. He received the draft, with a letter addressed to him by the governor-general, without any manifestation of emotion, and engaged to communicate with Colonel Scott on the subject as soon as he Two days of the country, civil as well as military, to the lafterwards a second conference took place, Company, under suitable provisions for the when the vizier, though he did not positively reject the first proposal—that of the total relinquishment of the government of Oude to the Company—displayed a strong repugnance to it. Colonel Scott endeavoured to reconcile him to the arrangement by an appeal to his patriotic feelings, but the attempt was a failure. The resident having suggested that the sacrifice of feeling on the part of the vizier would be compensated by the satisfaction which he would derive from witnessing the increasing prosperity of the country and the happiness of the people under the management of the British government, the prince answered with great candour, that, under the circumstances in which he should be placed, the contemplation of these things would not afford him the smallest gratification. He referred to a letter of advice addressed to his predecessor by Lord Cornwallis, which though it contained strong recommendations for the introduction of various reforms in the different branches of government, left the execution of the proposed measures to the hands of the vizier and his ministers. To this there was an obvious answer. Lord Cornwallis quitted India in August, 1793: the conversation in which his advice was thus referred to took place on the 26th February, 1801. The interval was little less than eight years, and not one step had been taken, either by the reigning vizier or his predecessor, towards carrying the governor-general had entertained from the into effect any portion of the salutary sug-moment of his entering on the duties of his gestions offered to them. This, as the resioffice, and probably from an earlier period. den argued, showed either that the advice upon it was wanting, the latter supposition prehensive policy, and enforced by all the being countenanced by the desire which the power and energy of the English government." vizier had some time before professed to abdi- After illustrating some of the advantages of cate. The vizier further represented that his this plan, he added, "but whatever may be own payments of subsidy had been punctual, your excellency's sentiments with regard to. while those of his predecessor had been irre- the first proposition, the right of the Company gular; and he urged that it would be time to demand a cession of territory adequate to enough to demand security when failure actually took place. To this it was answered, that if that period were waited for, it would then not be within the reach of human wisdom or power to retrieve the affairs of an exhausted apprehension of its approach.

1

After making some remarks on the proposed establishment of courts of justice, to which the prince seemed to entertain great dislike, he requested to be furnished, on a future day, with some account of the second tions of the vizier were justly met by an proposal—that which was confined to the demand of territory as a security for the claims of the British government, which was afforded. Being now in possession of the entire views of Company in the province of Oude on a founthe governor-general, the vizier formally and distinctly rejected both branches of the alternative submitted to him. He could not, he said, with his own hands, exclude himself from his patrimonial dominions, "for," he naively asked, "what advantage should I derive from so doing ?"-nor could be consent to any positive territorial cession by way of security for the British subsidy; and the reason assigned for this refusal is truly wonderful, when considered in relation to the character and conduct of the vizier. "I expect," said he, "to reply addressed a letter to the vizier, tendering again the two proposals for acceptance,

ing into a flourishing condition this country,

the abolition of the mass of abuses by which the country was overrun but in its transfer to the British government; and whether this desirable event should take place or not, exhibiting the right of that government to demand adequate security that its interests should not be involved in the general ruin. "It would be vain and fruitless," said the governor-general, "to attempt this arduous task"—that of thorough and effectual reformation—"by partial interference, or by imperfect modifications of a system of which every principle is founded in error and impolicy, and every instrument tainted with injustice and corruption. After long and mature deli-beration, he continued, "I offer to your excellency a renewal of my former declaration, that the province of Oude cannot otherwise les preserved than by the gradual and regular be intended to recognize the right of the vizier operation of a system of administration founded to appropriate the property of the Bho Begum, was disregarded, or that the power of acting on principles of substantial justice and of comthe security of the funds necessary for defraying the expense of our defensive engagements with your excellency is indisputable. right was rested principally upon the notorious fact, that the evils and abuses of the existing and depopulated country. The vizier might system of administration had greatly impaired have been reminded of his own expressed the resources of the state, and the wellgrounded inference that the causes of decay would continue to operate with increased and accelerated effect, until ultimately the prince should become unable to fulfil his engagements with the Company. The pretended expectainquiry, whether he could reasonably hope to induce the governor-general, by this unsupported assertion, to rest the interests of the dation so precarious and insecure as the expec-tation of an improvement obstructed by the whole system of the vizier's government, and by every relative circumstance in the state of his affairs.

The vizier continued to withhold his assent to either proposal, and to endeavour, by a resort to all possible arts of evasion and delay, to defer the final settlement of the questions at issue between the British government and himself. At last he determined on a list of conditions or stipulations, to which he desired derive the most substantial profits from bring-the assent of the governor-general before agreeing to the required cession of territory. which has so long been in a state of waste They were in number eighteen, and related to and ruin; by a separation of territory my a great variety of subjects. The first was a hopes of these substantial profits would be very characteristic one. It referred to the entirely cut off." The governor-general in payment of the debts of Azoff-al-Dowlah, for which the vizier congratulated himself he was not accountable, and, moreover, avowed that and answering at great length the objections he was unable to provide; and, referring to the prince, showing that there was no hope the non-responsibility of the Company, seemed to infer that their government would confirm the exemption which he claimed for himself. Other of the vizier's demands pointed in the same direction. The fourth would appear, on a cursory reading, to be little more than idle verbiage; but it had a deep and important meaning. It ran thus:-"Whatever hereditary rights of this state descended to the late Nawaub Azoff-al-Dowlah now devolve upon me his successor; let me enjoy such rights exclusively, and let all the inheritances of my ancestors and the whole of the rights attached to my family centre in me, and let no person interfere in or assume them." Colonel Scott was sufficiently acquainted with native diplomacy, and with the character of the vizier, to be induced to suspect that more was meant than met the eye. He imagined that it might the vizier to be the correct one.

This was, therefore, an indication of a design on the part of the prince to resort to the same than some of those which had preceded it. means of enriching his treasury which had commenced with this recital :—"Some arrangebeen practised by his predecessor under the ment among the servants of the circar (state) patronage of Warren Hastings. It was believed that, in addition to the strong appetite indispensable; and to obviate disturbances, it for accumulation which the vizier manifested will become necessary to return such numbers at all times and under all circumstances, there only as can be paid monthly and regularly." was a peculiar reason for the attention which These premises were followed by a very perhe thus bestowed on the reputed wealth of the emptory conclusion and a very sweeping begum. With the view, probably, of securing, demand :- "This arrangement can only be during her own life, the enjoyment of that effected by dismission, and I desire that no wealth, she had proposed to the British govern-|intercession be made for any person whatever." ment to make the Company her heir. The Who were the persons destined for dismission, imprudence of the begun, or of some of her and thus excluded from the benefit of intercesdependants, had, it was supposed, suffered the sion? sceret to reach the ears of the vizier, and the brothers—the begum—the family of the demysterious article by which he sought to ceased vizier—the public servants of the state, fortify his claims to succeed to all that was and all persons holding jaghires or enjoying enjoyed or inherited by his predecessor was pensions. These provisions were intended to apprehended to have been the result. The afford the vizier a field for plunder. There resident very fairly took occasion to contrast were others, designed to secure to him the this article with the first, in which he disclaimed the debts of the prince whom he suc-ceeded. He claimed all the property which his predecessor possessed, or to which he was entitled, but he would have nothing to do with that prince's liabilities. Colonel Scott inquired by what rule of equity the debtor and creditor sides of the account were to be thus separated, but it does not appear that he received any trust or other means, possession of specie or property belonging to this circur, let no one obstruct my taking back such property or specie." Ostensibly this was not open to objection. No one could properly desire to protect the possession of property fraudulently portion of their treasure. During the con-fusion that succeeded the death of Azoff-al-Dowlah, and continued through the short reign of Vizier Ali, it was suspected that much valuable property had been carried away from the private treasury, jewel-office, and wardrobe; and the suspicion was probably well founded. The British authorities did not wish to give impunity to these thefts, nor to screen and, with some hesitation, this construction | pointed out, but he condemned the design of was acknowledged by a moulary retained by involving every person about the court in vexatious accusations. The thirteenth of the required stipulations was not less mysterious calculated to diminish my expenses will become Whomsoever the vizier pleased-his privilege of misgoverning his dominions without let or molestation. It was required that all correspondence should in future be carried on directly between the governor-general or the resident on the one part, and the vizier on the other, to the exclusion of the ministers of the latter-"since the present practice," said the prince, "is apt to render such people con-tumacious." The resident was to shut his ears The fifth article was not dissimilar to everything but what the vizier chose should ject from that by which it was pre-enter them: "Let the resident," he said, in its object from that by which is the property which is ceded. It was wide and sweeping in its "cordially and with sincerity unitary range:—"Should any person," it ran, "have me, pay no sort of attention to the representations, or hereafter obtain, by breach of tions of event-searching, self-interested persons." Further it was demanded, that the British troops to be paid by the vizier should remain permanently in the ceded countries, and that no interference, except in the way of advice, should take place in "any one" of the affairs—such were the vizier's words—of his obtained; but the effect of the provision would government. Some of the proposed conditions have been to secure to the vizier the power of would seem almost to have been framed with subjecting whom he pleased to those means of the intention of offering personal offence to the pressure by which Oriental potentates are governor-general. The imputations conveyed accustomed to relieve wealthy subjects of a in the following passages could not be misportion of their treasure. During the con-understood:—"When the matters now under discussion shall have been finally adjusted, according to what his lordship has written, let no fresh claims, of whatever sort, be advanced —let no increase be demanded." And again -"Let the engagements entered into between his lordship and this circar be firm and permanent, and let such a treaty be now drawn up, that no governor-general, who shall herefrom punishment those by whom it was after be appointed to the charge of the Commerited; but neither did they wish to let pany's affairs, may have it in his power to loose on every person whom the vizier might alter, change, or infringe the said treaty." Of think a fit subject for experiment, the processes the affronts thus offered to himself the governorby which are tested the possession of property, general took no notice; but he rejected the and the degree in which the possessor is endued whole of the proposed conditions, partly on the general took no notice; but he rejected the with the power of tenacity. Colonel Scott ground that the demand made on behalf of the desired that the suspected persons might be Company being a matter of right, compliance even though they should be unobjectionable, and partly because the conditions proposed, so far from being of this character, were calculated to bring disgrace on the British name, and ruin to the honour of the vizier, the dignity and security of his relations, and the happiness of his subjects. dislike of British interference, the governorgeneral said: "From these articles it appears that the nawaub vizier has already forgotten of his government have been maintained exclusively by the British power, and by the presence of British troops. His excellency now seems disposed to gratify his unwarrantable suspicious at the hazard of the continuance of his authority over his subjects, and designed to gratify the vizier's avarice, the actually due. munificence, or charity of preceding govern-that the British government falte ments, and to spread over the whole country determination, refused to give it. ment."

The negotiation continued to drag on for several months without apparently making any poor to the proposed stipulations, declared that without their concession on the part of ring to the determination of the governorsubmitted to him; but while thus refusing to warning him that no change in the British be a party to the separation of his dominions, he affected a spirit of meek and patient resignation, declared that he had neither inclination India, and that no relaxation would take nor strength to resist, and expressed a desire place in pursuing the measures previously to proceed on a pilgrimage. During his ab- deemed necessary for the peace and prosperity sence he proposed that one of his sons should of Oude and the security of the Company's be invested with the office of deputy, and be dominions. The memorial concluded by callcession, as well as to complete the yet imperfect measure of reducing the vizier's military knowledge of the governor-general, he had declining, as on previous occasions, to agree

ought to be unshackled with any conditions, determined to despatch his brother, Mr. Henry Wellesley, a gentleman endowed with singular talents for diplomacy, to co-operate with Colonel Scott in endeavouring to bring the British relations with the vizier into a more eatisfactory state. One motive to this step was the belief that the presence of one so nearly allied to the Adverting to the articles governor-general would have the effect of which manifested more especially the vizier's accelerating the vizier's determination, and it was further intended to put an end to a hope which the vizier was believed to entertain of procrastinating his decision till the arrival of that the safety of his person and the existence the Marquis Wellesley on a visit, which he had long meditated, to the northern parts of India. To put an end to this hope, it was distinctly intimated that the governor-general was resolved not to hold any personal intercourse with the vizier while the points in dispute remained undecided. Before Mr. Wellesley even of his personal safety, by removing the arrived, a premature intimation given by the British forces from his territories, and by con- resident to certain aumils as to the payment in fiding his government and his life to those the coming year of the revenues for which whose treason had repeatedly endangered they were responsible, gave the vizier a pre-Passing on to the articles which were tence for withholding payment of the kists I to gratify the vizier's avarice, the actually due. There appears in this case governor-general thus expressed his opinion something to blame on both sides. The vizier with regard to them: "The object of those ought not to have withheld payments actually articles appears to be, under the shelter of the secured by treaty, unless he proposed to put British name to cancel all the public debts of an end to the treaty and was able to maintain the state of Oude; to defraud and plunder the his intention by force. At the same time, as ancient and venerable remains of the family there was no immediate necessity for the inti-and household of Shoojah-ad-Dowlah, together mation given by Colonel Scott, it was an out-with whatever is respectable among the sur-rage upon the feelings of the vizier which viving relations and friends of the late Nawaub might well have been spared. The vizier Azoff-al-Dowlah; to involve the whole nobility required that, as some reparation, the resident and gentry of Oude in vexatious accusations should call upon the aumils to pay their and extensive proscriptions; to deprive the respects at the prince's durbar as usual. This, established dependants and pensioners of the it appeared, they had never ceased to do, state of the means of subsistence; to frusteen the prince's durbar as usual. This, it appeared, they had never ceased to do, state of the means of subsistence; to frusteen the prince's durbar as usual. trate every institution founded in the piety, mation from him would seem to indicate that the British government faltered in its a general system of rapacious confiscation, ally the vizier made the necessary payments, arbitrary imprisonment, and cruel banish to prevent, as he said, the Company's affairs from being embarrassed by his withholding them.

Mr. Wellesley arrived at Lucknow on the gress. The vizier, on being apprized of 3rd of September. On the 5th he presented determination of the governor-general in to the vizier a memorial, recounting the motives which had led to his mission, and referthe British government he would not yield his general to avoid a personal interview with the assent to either of the plans which had been vizier under the existing state of circumstances; councils at home would affect the general tenor of the policy of the British government in empowered to carry into effect the territorial ing the vizier's attention to the first of the two proposals which had been submitted to him, and inviting a discussion of its terms. Before this scheme was brought to the and after several days delivered his answer, to any arrangement which might involve the by the advice of the officers of the Comsacrifice of his sovereignty. The British negos | pany. tiators rought to shake this determination, but in vain. The vicier was peremptory in avow-ing his rejection of the plan, and declared it to be unqualified. The discussion of the second view of informing himself of their state more be unqualified. The discussion of the second proposal made to the vizier by the governor-general was then resumed; and after reveral days had been consumed in profitless disputation, the prince signified his readiness to assent to it on certain conditions. These conditions were, that he should be permitted to depart on a pilgrimage; that his authority during his absence should be exercised by one of his sons, the right of resuming the government on his return being reserved to the vizier, in the event of his long disposed to avail himself of it. The British negotiators fail to be see, from the effects of the long felt some doubt as to the course which it sion of the treaty, the governor-general judifelt some doubt as to the course which it course of attrition which preceded the conclusionally they determined to accept the vizier's ciously revolved to defer all reference to the consent thus qualified. But a new difficulty course of his visit till by the interchange of perwas immediately interposed, by a demand from the prince for the introduction of an article, providing that as the territories to be coded were to be entirely under the management and control of the Company, so those to entirely under the management and control of the Company, so those to confidence. The attention of the governor-be retained by him should be exclusively general was assiduously directed to this purunder his own, or that of his heirs and ruccessors. This was to directly at variance with those qualities which are calculated with the views around on the part of the to win for their possessor the esteem and affecwith the views avowed on the part of the to win for their possessor the esteem and affec-British authorities throughout the negotiations, tion of those towards whom they are exercised, and with one main of ject of the proposed new his hope of succeeding was reasonable. Soon arrangement, that the vizier must have known it could not be entertained. The presumption is, that the attempt to revive discussion upon a question long is force set at rest was only made for the purpose of delay. Other expedicits for procrastination were found with the facility usual with Oriental diplomaticts on such occasions; but at length a treaty was concluded, which on the 14th of November received the ratification of the governorgeneral. By this engagement the vizier bound himself to cede territory yielding a revenue of one crore thirty-five thousand lacs, including expenses of collection, in commutation of all claims on the part of the British government, and he in return was released from all future demands on account of the protection of Oude or its dependencies. The engagement on the part of the Company to defend the vizier from panied these admissions by mysterious companied to the conference with the general had a private conference with the wizier, in which the attention of the prince was directed to various points of considerable importance both to the English government and that of the vizier. One of these was the necessity of immediately taking measures for introducing an improved system of administration into the vizier's reserved dominions, in conformity with the treaty. This was further pressed at a subsequent interview, when the vizier returned to that system of evasion which was labitual to him, and which was never relinquished but under the pressure of necessity, and then only for a very brief period. He admitted the existence of the abuses and evils pointed out, and acknowledged the propriety of the remedial measures proposed, but accompany to defend the vizier from arrangement, that the vizier must have known after arriving at Lucknow, the governorpart of the Company to defend the vizier from panied these admissions by mysterious comforcing and domestic enemies was repeated plaints of his want of sufficient authority to and confirmed, and the prince was restricted check the evils or enforce the remedies. All to the retention of a limited number of troops for purposes of state and revenue. A detachment of British troops, accompanied by a proportion of artillery, was to be at all times attached to the vizier's person; the remainder were to be stationed in such parts of his dominions as might seem fit to the British government. The territories not ceded to the resident. It would be idle to expect that the English were formally guaranteed to the vizier, existence of such a check could ever be renthe guarantee being accompanied by one of dered agreeable or even tolerable to a prince those provisions which the prince had been who loves the exercise of power. Sandut Ali most anxious to avert—that in the exercise of loved power; but still more did he love that

÷.,

When the treaty with the vizier was ratified. the nature of the impediments thus darkly alluded to were vain; but a paper which he soon afterwards delivered showed the point towards which his objections were directed. The master grievance was the check interposed by the presence and counsel of the British his authority he was in all cases to be guided which power enabled him to obtain. He had contracted an unconquerable aversion to Colo- tection from the British government. This was nel Scott, but he stated his views in general given, and the manager entered upon his office terms, and without any apparent reference to under the joint protection of that government It has been seen that the vizier and the vizier. that officer. was much disposed to be his own minister; and he demanded that whatever advice the Khan had required, the British government resident might have to give should be com- was, on various occasions, called on to fulfil. municated to him, in the first instance, without the presence of any other person; and further, that the resident should not hold any communication with the vizier's subjects, except through his intervention. This second demand was most properly rejected. In answering it, the governor-general laid down a principle which ought ever to be borne in mind under similar circumstances. "It appears," said he, "to be indispensably necessary for the resident's correct information, as well as for the maintenance of his authority, that he should maintain the most free and unrestrained intercourse and correspondence with all ranks tively pressed upon the British government. and descriptions of people." The first point was conceded, on the understanding that the vizier would not act in any important matter without the consent of the resident, whose judgment was to be final. The rejection of part of his demands gave great dissatisfaction to the prince. He resumed his proposal of proceeding on a pilgrimage, which had for some time slept; but finally he appears to have become reconciled to the circumstances in which he was placed, which he had no power of modifying, and which could not have been modified in any mode satisfactory to himself without inflicting gross injustice on his people. One object of the governor-general's visit to Lucknow was to arrange an exchange of territory, for the convenience of both parties interested, and this was effected without difficulty. Among the cessions made by the vizier to paid to the former by the Nabob of Furruck-lies against the parties accused. abad. The arrangement between these two princes was not unlike those between the the government of Furruckabad should in British government and its subsidiary depend-The Nabob of Furruckabad was rericted from maintaining more troops than ere requisite for purposes of state, and the was charged with the defence of the province both from internal and external The nabob with whom the engagement was concluded, Muzuffer Jung, was murdered by his eldest son. The parricide escaped the severity of punishment which he well merited. His life was spared; but he was carried to Lucknow and there confined by order of the vizier. Consequent upon the conviction of the elder son, the inheritance was administration of affairs should be continued transferred to the second son of the murdered in the same hands by which it had been carried prince; but he being a minor, it was necessary on during the nabob's minority; that the nato appoint a manager. A person named Khibob, on the attainment of the proper age, should be allowed to assume the government; but having powerful enemies, who hoped to transferred to the British for themselves, he refused to undertake it without the fullest assurance of support and probe the most agreeable to the manager: the

The promise of support which Khirudmund The enemies of the manager succeeded in establishing an unbounded influence over the mind of the young nabob, and about the time of the changes at Oude, the nabob, whose minority was nearly at an end, laid claim to the privilege of taking into his own hands the administration of affairs. Khirudmund Khan was equally anxious, or affected to be equally anxious, to be relieved from his charge, and to retire upon a provision which had been secured to him on the occurrence of such an event. The making some arrangement for conducting the affairs of Furruckabad was thus impera-

There was some difficulty in determining what that arrangement should be. According . to Khirudmund Khan, the disposition of the young nabob was bad, and his natural propensities to evil had been aggravated by the advice and example of his associates. representation, indeed, was to be received with caution, for the nabob bore no good-will to the man by whom it was made, and the associates whom he charged with encouraging and multiplying the nabob's vices were his own enemies, and had been competitors for the power which he exercised. He, too, was accused by the nabob of abusing his office. On neither side do the accusations seem to have been substantiated; but on neither side were they destitute of probability. It is not incredible that an Oriental guardian should endeavour to profit unduly by his office—it is not incredible that an Oriental prince should find evil advisers and the British government was that of the tribute listen to them. In both cases the presumption

The solution of the question in what manner future he administered was intrusted by the governor-general to his brother, Mr. Henry Wellesley, who had been placed at the head of a commission for the settlement of the ceded provinces with the title of lieutenant-governor. Mr. Wellesley commenced his task by calling upon Khirudmund Khan to communicate his views with regard to the future government of the province. The manager displayed a truly Eastern reluctance to any direct avowal of opinion; but with some difficulty he was brought to state that three different modes suggested themselves to his mind:-that the administration of affairs should be continued able to his auditor; but the wary officer contented himself with suggestion, and presumed not to say which of the suggested plans was the best. Mr. Wellesley did not conceal his own leaning in favour of the transfer of all power to the government which he represented, and Khirudmund Khan professed himself ready to promote his views; but it is worthy of remark, that he never took a single step in furtherance of them. A proposal for the entire transfer of the nabob's dominions to the Company was, however, made by Mr. Wellesley to the nabob. The latter was very unwilling to relinquish the power to the enjoyment of which his hopes had so long been directed: but he reluctantly yielded. The province of Furruckabad was added to the The dominions of the Company, and the nabob was reputation of an able public servant.

last, he might expect, would be the most accept- | endowed with a splendid provision, the security of which was some satisfaction for the loss of the dependent sovereignty of which it was the price.

The duty of settling the provinces acquired from the vizier was performed by Mr. Henry Wellesley in a manner which secured for him the approbation of all to whom he was respon-Some overgrown zemindars, who were disaffected to the new government because it tended to restrain the power which they had been long accustomed to abuse, offered resistance, which in a few instances was formidable; but they were ultimately subdued, and the entire country submitted peaceably to the British authority. Mr. Wellesley, on the close of his duties in the ceded provinces, departed for Europe, having established the

CHAPTER XVIII.

-NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE PEISHWA. MARQUIS WELLESLEY MISUNDERSTOOD AT HOME. -SCINDIA AND THE PEISHWA DEFEATED BY HOLKAR.—RESTORATION OF THE PEISHWA. GENERAL WELLESLEY TAKES THE FIELD.—FALL OF AHMEDNUGGUR AND BROACH.—NOTICES OF PERRON AND DE BOIGNE.-PERRON DEFEATED BY LORD LAKE.-CAPTURE OF COEL AND ALLYGHUR.—RESTORATION OF THE EMPEROR.—BATTLE OF ASSYE.—FALL OF AGRA.—BATTLE OF LASWAREE. - NEGOTIATIONS WITH SCINDIA. - BATTLE OF ARGAUM. - CAPTURE OF GAWIL-GHUR .-- PEACE WITH THE RAJAH OF BERAR AND SCINDIA .-- OCCUPATION OF BUNDLECUND. -A FRENCH SQUADRON REPULSED BY A FLEET OF INDIAMEN.-- VARIOUS TREATIES.

On the 1st of January, 1802, at a time when | spirit of personal hostility; but it was prohis policy was everywhere throughout India crowned with the most brilliant success, the Marquis Wellesley addressed to the Court of Directors a despatch, intimating his desire to resign his office at the close of that year or the commencement of the succeeding one. The desire of the governor-general to be thus early relieved from an office in which he had rendered to his country such splendid service, and acquired for himself so much honour, would be inexplicable without reference to the feelings with which he was regarded at In his official despatch he did not enter into the reasons which led to the tender of his resignation, but other documents supply the deficiency. He had not the confidence of the Court of Directors, and he felt it. had, on various occasions, issued orders which the governor-general felt as offensive to himself, and others which he viewed as dangerous to the public service.

Among these was a peremptory order to reduce the army, especially in the peninsula. This arrived at a time when it could not be obeyed without putting in hazard not only recent conquests, but the entire fabric of the British empire in India. The governor-general suspended its execution, and, as will hereafter be seen, subsequent events amply justified the exercise of this discretion. As the increase of the army had been the act of the bably only the offspring of a blind economy. Some other instances of frugality would seem to be more open to the suspicion of personal Colonel Wellesley, who held the chief command in Mysore, was, by the nature of his duties, subjected to heavy expenses; his allowances were consequently fixed by the government of Madras on a liberal scale. The home authorities thought them too great. On this subject his lordship expressed himself in the language of indignant remonstrance. After stating that, though the duty of fixing the allowances of Colonel Wellesley was part of the ordinary detail of the government of Madras, with which the governor-general did not interfere except in cases of exigency, it must yet be reasonably supposed that he was cognizant of the subject, and had exercised his judgment with regard to it, although no record of such judgment might exist, the marquis demands, "Can the Court of Directors suppose that I am capable of permitting the government of Fort St. George to grant an extravagant allowance to my brother, and that my brother is capable of accepting such an allowance? If such be the opinion of the Court, it ought to remove Colonel Wellesley from his command and me from my government." He continues: "The fact is, that the allowance is scarcely equal to the unavoidable expenses of Colonel Wellesley's governor-general, he considered the order situation, which is known to be of a very pecu-for its reduction to have been framed in a liar nature, involving the n establishment and of other charges requisite feeling had been manifested with regard to for the maintenance of our interest in that Indian princes, though the exercise of the recently-conquered kingdom." After dwelling right of self-defence has been almost proupon the affect of this brother, and its scribed in their favour, little sympathy has possible effect, the governor-general adds; ever been displayed towards the people at "It cannot be denied that the Court, by restance. Subjected to British rule, they had during the established allowances of Colonel been treated as aliens, and dealed rights en-Wellesley, has offered me the most direct, floyed by every other class of British subjects, marked, and disjusting personal indignity The Lembon ship aithers there to emidder which could be devised. The effect of this the extension of justice to In his as an art of order must be, to inculcate an opinion that I injustice to them. Some time before the dehave suffered my brother to derive enough parture of the Marquis Wellesby they recommends beyond the limits of justice and properties of the Marquis Wellesby they recommends beyond the limits of justice and properties of the Marquis Wellesby they recommends beyond the limits of justice and product it, and though it was obsored that the unphayment of India, his permitted to my nearest connection. I have already stated that the ground of the order is justice attending this demand is accurately as unjust and unwarranted in point of fact, as and forcibly depicted in a communication its operation is calculated to be injurious and from Mr. Durels, then provided of the humiliating to my reputation and honour. If the Court of Directors scally was of opinion that Colonel Welledey's allowances were too high, the respectful and decorous course would sation, "say by they transfer of the appropriate of have referred the question to my great description of the subjects of first the Court would have omitted to indispensable them. The British territories in India are a precaution of delicacy and justice, unless the under the avereignty of Great Britain, as I order must be, to inculcate an opinion that I injustice to them. Some time 1-fore the dea precaution of delicacy and justice, unless the under the specificity of Great Britain, as I Court noted under astrong sense of displeasure, the rhips built there are equally entitled to and discontent at the general tenor of my admis all the privileges of British built shipping as nistration, and under the influence of an uncon- those built in the West Indies, or Carada, or querable jealousy of my intentions."

parsimony were not the only sources of the in Great Britain have set up a claim to pro-hostility directed against the Marquis Wel-hibit any of the shipping in these quarters lesley. A body of men, who at that time from bringing home the produce of these exercised a very powerful interest in the territories in ships of their own building, if councils of the Company, conceived that their they found it convenient to do so; and yet measures adopted by the governor-general and supposed injury would equally apply." with regard to trade. The Company's monopoly had a few years before been relaxed by India to be regarded as British subjects, the an enactment requiring them to provide a writer proceeded to show that the view taken certain amount of tomage annually for the but there whom he was addressing, of their use of private merchants. As far as the ex- own interests and these of the British nation, port trade from Great Britain was concerned, were erroncous, observing:—"They (the ship-

throughout Europe a considerable demand for It would have no such effect. It would have various articles which India could furnish; and no other effect than that which it has always the supply of this opened a convenient mode had, of driving those ships, with their cargoes, of remittance to persons who had acquired into foreign ports, and thereby establishing fortunes in that country, which they proposed in foreign countries an Asiatic commerce, to invest and enjoy at home. From this state founded on British capital, which, by a conof things a large portion of the exports of trary policy, ought, in the first place, to India found their way to Europe in foreign centre in the river Thames, and be from shipping, though the trade was supported and thence re-exported for the supply of other carried on by British capital—the accumulated European nations." Sound as were these light of the printing in the result of the printing in the supply of t tions of the servants of the East-India Com- views, they failed to satisfy the shipping inpany. For this state of things there was no terest, which continued to employ its vast remedy but the employment of India-built influence in the courts of the East-India Comshipping to an extent which might supply the pany to withhold from the shipping of India all deficiency in the Company's tonnago; thus participation in the trade carried on between diverting a valuable and increasing depart-that country and Great Britain.

ment of trade from foreign to British ships. The necessity, however, of providing some Though in England extraordinary delicacy of extent of extra tonnage was so apparent, that terable jealousy of my intentions."

But darkness of political vision and under and I have never heard that the rhip ludders the extent of the provision was probably suffi-lent, as at that time there was little demand India-built ships coming to Great Britain India for British manufactures; but it was would make a proportionate degree of room sufficient for the return trade. There was for the shipping of the East-India Company.

it was impossible to resist it. Accordingly, another active ingredient to the elements of authority was given to the government of opposition which were fermenting at home. Bengal to take up a limited amount of tonnage ley, on his arrival at that place, had been had, in other instances, animadverted on assailed by representations from the mercan-measures of policy in a manner which the tile community in favour of the employment governor-general regarded as offensive. the orders from home, he made some changes to India-built ships a year had intervened, during which it had not been resorted to; and than they now seem calculated to excite. the experience of that year was stated by the governor-general to have attested the expediency of restoring it. "Goods to a large would be wrong to pause for the purpose of amount," he said, "originally intended for the discussing the merits of the servants of the "Goods to a large port of London, were sold to foreigners in the port of Calcutta, and thus diverted to the channel of the foreign trade." This result appeared to the governor-general to justify a return to the position of the preceding year. "The rapid growth," said he, "of the foreign trade during the last season urgently demanded the immediate interference of your govern-ment on the spot. The number of foreign ships actually in the port of Calcutta, the alacrity, enterprise, and skill of the foreign agents now assiduously employed in providing office. cargoes, and the necessary inaction and languor of the British private trade, embarrassed by the restraints of the existing law, created a serious apprehension in my mind, that any further delay in the decision of this momentous question might occasion evils of which the remedy might hereafter become considerably difficult, if not absolutely impracticable. unrestrained progress of the foreign trade in the present season, added to its great increase during the last, might have established its predominance over the private trade of British subjects, to an extent which no future regulation might have proved sufficient to limit or restrain. The difficulty of diverting this lucrative commerce from the channel into or rather such was the necessity, under which the governor-general acted. It is a case in which it is impossible to assign to his conduct any motive but a sense of public duty. while thus suspending for a season the operation of measures which he felt to be just, wise, and necessary,—while seeking to be relieved approved from home—yet discouragement, sentment of those who supposed themselves whom it had been carried into effect.

The orders to reduce the army have been on account of the Company, and relet it to the mentioned, as well as those relating to the merchants of Calcutta. The Marquis Welles- allowances of Colonel Wellesley. The Court of India-built ships; and in carrying into effect some of these points he appears to have felt a degree of indignation which, at this distance calculated to divest the authorized measure of some incumbrances which tended to impede sion. But high genius is ever associated with its beneficial operation. He took the same course at a subsequent period, and thus at once earned the gratitude of the mercantial feelings with which he was regarded at home; interest of India and the sales of the same strong sensibility. The Marquis Wellesley knew his own purity; he knew also the feelings with which he was regarded at home; interest of India and the sales of India and India an interest of India, and the relentless enmity of and it need excite no surprise, if, irritated by the shipbuilders of the port of London. Be-annoyances which he thought an ungracious tween the two periods of granting indulgence return for his eminent services, he should have alluded to some of them with more impatience

Amidst the great events which mark the administration of the Marquis Wellesley, it would be wrong to pause for the purpose of government, except so far as they were connected with those important facts which it is more especially the province of history to record. A very brief notice of the acts of the Court, in displacing certain servants from office, and appointing others, must therefore suffice. The governor-general had appointed Colonel Kirkpatrick secretary in the political department. The Court ordered the appointment to be rescinded, on the ground that his military commission disqualified him for civil office. This was a new construction of the law, and certainly had the appearance of having been specially devised for the occasion. The Marquis Wellesley was not the first governor-general who had nominated military men to political or civil duties. He found the practice to a certain extent existing; and it rably is not inapplicable to remark, that it has never The been entirely discontinued. The general rule, undoubtedly, should be to distribute civil appointments among the members of the civil service; but, with reference to the peculiar delicacy and difficulty of the political offices under the governor-general, it may sometimes become necessary to dispense with the rule. Where a military officer possesses a pre-eminent degree of fitness for such an appointment, which it had been forced would naturally be it is obviously not for the benefit of the public aggravated, in proportion to the length of service to pass him by. On the same principle time during which the trade should continue which was applied to Colonel Kirkpatrick, to flow in that course." Such were the views, orders were given to revise the appointment orders were given to revise the appointment of Colonel Scott at Lucknow, with a view to rescind it. This was certainly an ungracious step towards both the governor-general and Colonel Scott. A most important negotiation had been brought to a successful conclusionthat which had been done was formally from the painful duty of upholding them on and, indirectly, blame, were cast both on him his own responsibility,—he incurred the re- who had devised the plan and on him by injured by those measures, and thus added Marquis Wellesley believed that the extraordinary interference from home was intended interests of Great Britain in Asia. to give personal aunoyance to himself and should be regularly instructed in the princi-Lord Clive. The latter nobleman entertained ples and system which constitute the founda-the same impression. He had entered cortion of that wise code of regulations and laws dially and zealously into the policy of the enacted by the governor-general in council, Marquis Wellesley, and the hostility displayed for the purpose of securing to the people of towards the governor-general was believed for this empire the benefit of the ancient and this reason to be extended to the governor of accustomed laws of the country, administered Fort St. George.

There was one further ground of difference between the Court of Directors and their governor-general, which, although it had not been fully developed, it will be convenient to notice here, to avoid interrupting the progress of the narrative hereafter. The altered situation of the Company had not at this time produced any alteration in the mode of selecting their servants, or of preparing them for their duties. The Marquis Wellesley saw the evil, and determined on providing a remedy. In a minute of great length and ability, he adverted to the vast changes which had taken place since Great Britain first obtained a settlement in India, to the extent of the Company's dominions, the important duties devolving on their servants, and to the qualifications which they ought to possess. After dwelling upon these points in detail, he thus summed up his views:-"The civil servants of the English East-India Company, therefore, can no longer be considered as the agents of a commercial concern. They are, in fact, the ministers and officers of a powerful sovereign; they must now be viewed in that capacity, with reference not to their nominal but to their real occupations. They are required to discharge the functions of magistrates, judges, ambassadors, and governors of provinces, in all the complicated and extensive relations of those sacred trusts and exalted stations, and under peculiar circumstances, which greatly enhance the solemnity of every public obligation, and aggravate the difficulty of every public charge. Their duties are those of statesmen in every other part of the world, with no other characteristic differences than the obstacles opposed by an unfavourable

f its inhabitants. Their studies, the discipline of their education, their habits of life, their manners and morals, should therefore be ments in the East, so far from admitting any so ordered and regulated as to establish a just relaxation of those wise and salutary rules and conformity between their personal considera- restraints, demands that they should be ention and the dignity and importance of their forced with a degree of additional vigilance public stations, and to maintain a sufficient and care, proportioned to the aggravated difcorrespondence between their qualifications ficulties of civil service, and to the numerous and their duties. founded in a general knowledge of those life in India." branches of literature and science which form the basis of the education of persons destined | Marquis Wellesley as to the importance of due to similar occupations in Europe. To this preparation for the discharge of the important foundation should be added an intimate ac-duties of the civil service of India. He proquaintance with the history, languages, cus-ceeded to show that the minds of the young toms, and manners of the people of India, with men annually arriving at the presidencies in the Mahometan and Hindoo codes of law and the capacity of writers had rarely undergone religion, and with the political and commercial any adequate preparation—that from some,

in the spirit of the British constitution. They should be well informed of the true and sound principles of the British constitution, and sufficiently grounded in the general principles of ethics, civil jurisprudence, the law of nations, and general history, in order that they may be enabled to discriminate the characteristic differences of the several codes of law administered within the British empire in India, and practically to combine the spirit of each in the dispensation of justice and in the maintenance of order and good government. Finally, their early habits should be so formed as to establish in their minds such solid foundations of industry, prudence, integrity, and religion, as should effectually guard them against those temptations and corruptions with which the nature of this climate and the peculiar depravity of the people of India will surround and assail them in every station, especially on their first arrival in India. early discipline of the service should be calculated to counteract the defects of the climate and the vices of the people, and to form a natural barrier against habitual indolence, dissipation, and licentious indulgence; the spirit of emulation in honourable and useful pursuits should be kindled and kept alive, by the continual prospect of distinction and reward, of profit and honour; nor should any precaution be relaxed in India which is deemed necessary in England, to furnish a sufficient supply of men qualified to fill the high offices of the state with credit to themselves and with advantage to the public. Without such a constant succession of men in the several branches and departments of this government, the wisdom and benevolence of the law must prove vain and inefficient. Whatever course ic, by a foreign language, by the peculiar and system of study may be deemed requisite ges and laws of India, and by the manners in England to secure an abundant and pure source for the efficient supply of the public service, the peculiar nature of our establish-Their education should be hazards surrounding the entrance to public

Such were the views entertained by the

all instruction in liberal learning had been William was a favourite object with the withheld, while in others, the course of study had been interrupted precisely at the period when it might have been pursued with in-creased advantage—that in India they had no opportunities of acquiring even the technical knowledge requisite to fit them for civil office-knowledge of the languages and customs of the natives; of the regulations and laws: or of the details of the established system of revenue—that the well-disposed and industrious were bewildered for want of a guide, while others, devoting themselves wholly to luxury and sensual enjoyment, remained sunk in indolence, until their standing in the service rendered them eligible to some office of trust, for which, however, they were incapable, from want of preparation, and from the difficulty of suddenly breaking long-indulged habits of idleness and dissipation. There were not wanting, indeed, instances of application to study and habitual propriety of conduct; but all the merits of the civil servants, it was urged, were to be ascribed to themselves, while their defects were to be attributed to the constitution and practice of the service, which had not been accommodated to the progressive changes of our situation in India—had not kept pace with the growth of the empire, or with the increasing extent and importance of the functions and duties of the Company's servants. To remedy the existing evils, the governor-general proposed to establish a college in Calcutta, for the reception of writers for the three presidencies, who were there, for a limited period, to be subjected to the restraints of academic discipline, and trained in such studies as might fit them for their future duties. These were to be pursued under the superintendence of two clergymen, chaplains in the Company's service; for the native languages moonshees were to be pro-The expense of the institution was to be provided for in a manner which should not in the first justance subject the Company to any additional charge; but the governor-general expressed a hope that the liberality of the Court of Directors would in due time be extended to it. It was established without previous reference home, and the following grounds were assigned for the omission: a conviction of the great immediate benefit to be derived from the early commencement even of the partial operation of the plan—the experience of the advantages which had already in some instances been derived from the systematic study of the native languages—the anxiety felt by the governor-general to impart to the young men arrived from Europe within the three preceding years a share of the anticipated benefits of the institution, and a solicitude, perfectly natural in its projector, to superintend the foundation of the college, and to accelerate and witness its first effects.

It will be judged, from the rapidity with which the design was carried into execution,

Marquis Wellesley. It was not so fortunate as to meet equal favour in Great Britain. The Court of Directors, prepared to look with suspicion on any proposal originating with the governor-general, feeling perhaps some displeasure, not altogether unwarranted, that the plan had been actually carried into effect without their concurrence, and anticipating a charge upon their finances, of heavy and undefinable extent, withheld their approval of the magnificent establishment which had been devised, but voluntarily sanctioned the formation of an institution of more humble pretensions, at each of the presidencies, for instruction in the vernacular languages. The abolition of the college followed.

The suppression of the college added one further mortification to those which the governor-general had already experienced; but his design to return home at the expiration of a year from the time when he announced it was not carried into effect. The Court of Directors requested him to prolong his stay for another year, acknowledging that, though they had differed from him in some material points, it was impossible not to be impressed by the zeal and ability which he had displayed in the general management of their affairs, and intimating a conviction that the interests of the Company would be essentially promoted by his yielding to their request. Whether or not he would have complied, had India re-mained at peace, cannot be known; but a state of affairs had arisen which deprived him of the opportunity of returning with honour. He consequently remained to enter upon a new course of arduous and important service, which must now be followed.

The governor-general had been desirous of drawing more closely the connection between the British government and the peishwa. had invited that prince to co-operate in the war against Tippoo Sultan, and though the appeal was disregarded, he had proposed to bestow on the peishwa a portion of the territory which the British arms had conquered. He had been anxious to conclude a subsidiary treaty with the head of the Mahratta confederacy, but the measure, though unremittingly pursued for a long period, had failed. Throughout these negotiations the peishwa did not discredit the established character of his countrymen for proficiency in all the arts of evasive and dishonest policy. While seeking to amuse the British agents by a series of illusory representations, he was employed in endeavouring to detach the nizam from his British ally, and to engage him in a confederacy against that power to which he was indebted for protection. At length, late in the year 1801, the peishwa, being surrounded with difficulties from which he knew not how to extricate himself, signified his willingness to subsidize six battalions of British troops, on the condition that they should not be stationed that the establishment of the College of Fort within his own dominions, but be prepared at ceived mature consideration. The peishwa the Company territory in Guzerat or in the was obviously and not unnaturally anxious to surrender as small a portion of power as posestablishment of a British force at Poona would ment, gave the British resident the fullest be fatal to his independence; he therefore sought to keep it at a distance, except in cases of emergency. In the opinion of the governorgeneral, he probably calculated that the know-ledge of his ability to command so powerful a body of troops as that which he proposed to subsidize would be sufficient to support his authority and overawe those who might be bay the necessity of preparing a body of troops disposed to subvert it. As to the portion of at each presidency, for the eventual support of the territory to be assigned for the payment the peishwa's government. He made a similar of the required force, it was simply stated to application to the resident at Hyderabad, with be in Hindostan. From this intimation it was a view to the service of a considerable detachinferred that it was to be north of the Nerbudda. There, however, the peishwa possessed These preparations were not needless. only a nominal authority, and the assignment battle, which had commenced at half-past nine of territory, under such circumstances, was in the morning, ended about mid-day, when very different to transferring its possession. It was suspected, also, that the territory might attributed in agreat degree to his own desperate be selected with a view to the reduction of the efforts. The peishwa fied with a body of cavalry power of Scindia or of Holkar, or of relieving to the fort of Singurh. The Company's resithe peishwa from the control exercised over dent, Colonel Close, remained at Poona, and the him by the former chief, which he had long British flag, which waved conspicuously at his felt a sore burden, and that the mode by which quarters, commanded the respect of all parties. this object was to be effected was by involving Scindia in a contest with the British govern-transmitted without delay to the governor-Scindia in a contest with the British government. There were some other proposed conditions of inferior importance, to which it is orders were at the same time issued to the not necessary to advert. The governor-general, on a review of the relative positions of the peishwa, his nominal dependents, and the peishwa, his nominal dependents, and the British government, deemed the proposal inadmissible without considerable modification; proceeded to Mhar, whence he despatched but there were indications in the political horizon which disposed him to acquiesce in the required limitation as to the portion of the subsidiary force, provided a less objectionable the advance of some of Holkar's troops. subsidiary force, provided a less objectionable arrangement for the discharge of the subsidy could be effected. In July, 1802, the British president at Poona was instructed to intimate the was prepared to make a communication.

The subsidiary force, provided a less objectionable the advance of some of Holkar's troops, he arrangement for the discharge of the subsidy soon after fied to Severndroog, where he resided for some time under protection of the fort. A British ship finally conveyed him to Bassein, where he arrived on the 16th of December, and the subsidiary force, provided a less objectionable the advance of some of Holkar's troops, he arrangement for the discharge of the subsidiary force, provided a less objectionable the advance of some of Holkar's troops, he arrangement for the discharge of the subsidiary force, provided a less objectionable the advance of some of Holkar's troops, he arrangement for the discharge of the subsidiary force, provided a less objectionable arrangement for the discharge of the subsidiary force, provided and the subsidiary force, provided a less objectionable arrangement for the discharge of the subsidiary force, provided a less objectionable arrangement for the discharge of the subsidiary force, provided and the subsidiary force, provided and the subsidiary force, provided and the subsidiary force of the subsidiary force, provided and the subsidiary force of the subsidiary force. the was prepared to make a communication the subject of the peishwa's proposal. The difference, and manifested a remarkable absence

w. received the intimation with great inof curiosity as to the governor-general's determination. At last the affair was opened and the proposed arrangement discussed, but with friendly character with Holkar. The object little apparent probability of an early conclusion. The approach of Holkar, who was in arms against Scindia and his nominal head, the peishwa, brought the negotiation to a crisis. On the 23rd of October, Holkar encamped within a short distance of Poona. 25th an action took place between his army invited the resident to undertake the task of and the combined force of the peishwa and effecting an accommodation for him with the Scindia. The peishwa, to be prepared for the event, whatever it might be, moved out of the event, whatever it might be, moved out of the governor-general; and with some difficulty city attended by the standard of the empire, and at the same time despatched his minister. Bombay on the 3rd of December. On the 6th

all times to act on his requisition; and for the under the prince's seal, declaring his consent payment he proposed to assign territory in to subsidize the proposed number of troops, Hindostan. The proposal required and resouthern quarters of his dominions, yielding an annual revenue of twenty-six lacs. The He was aware that the permanent minister, at the time of presenting this instruassurance that it was the peishwa's intention and meaning, that a general defensive alliance should be concluded between himself and the Company, on the basis of the treaty of Hyderabad. The resident deemed it expedient, under the circumstances, immediately to suggest to the governments of Madras and Bomment from the subsidiary force stationed there. victory rested with Holkar, a result to be

The engagement of the peishwa had been attended by a small escort of about a hundred and thirty followers.

The British resident remained at Poona for some time after the departure of the peishwa, and had several conferences of an apparently of that chief was to obtain possession of the person of the peishwa, and use the name and authority of the prince, as Scindia had previously done, for his own purposes. To this end he was desirous of having the On the support of the British government, and he to the British resident with an instrument he received a communication from the goverthe peishwa at Bassein, Colonel Close waited on the prince, and the necessary steps were commenced for the conclusion of a definitive Some difference existed as to the territories to be assigned for the pay of the subsidiary force, but it was terminated by the peishwa suddenly and unexpectedly signifying his assent to the surrender of those on which the British resident had insisted. On the last day of the year 1802 the treaty was signed and sealed; and the counterpart, duly ratified by the governor-general, was shortly afterwards transmitted to the peishwa. This document was of great length, comprising no fewer than nineteen articles. declared the friends and enemies of either of the contracting parties, friends and enemies of both, and confirmed all former treaties and agreements between the two states not contrary to the tenor of the new one. It provided for the joint exertions of both to defend the rights or redress the wrongs of either, or of their respective dependents or allies; and this provision was followed by an explanatory addition, declaring that the British government would never permit any power or state whatever to commit with impunity any act of unprovoked hostility or aggression against the rights and territories of the peishwa, but would at all times maintain and defend them, in the the Company. The subsidiary force was to consist of six thousand regular native infantry, with the usual proportion of field-pieces and equipment of warlike stores and ammunition, and it was to be permanently stationed within the peishwa's dominions. This last point was by the peishwa, and to which the governorgeneral was prepared, if necessary, to consent: force of circumstances, it had been yielded by A succeeding article provided for the cession of territory described in a schedule attached to the treaty, for the payment of the exchange of territory should it at a future period appear desirable. The total annual expense of the force was estimated at twentywill be denied by none who have had opportunity of observing the wide difference which, in matters of Indian revenue, ordinarily nor-general, approving of the arrangements be signified that they were prepared to take into which he had entered. On the arrival of it; that all collections made by the peishwa's officers between the date of the treaty and the period of the Company's taking possession should be carried to the credit of the latter; and all claims to balance on account of antecedent periods be considered void. All forts within the ceded districts were to be given up without injury or damage, and with their equipment of ordnance, stores, and provisions. Grain, and all articles of consumption, and provisions, and all sorts of materials for wearing apparel, together with the necessary numbers of cattle, horses, and camels, required for the subsidiary force, were to be entirely exempted from duties; the commanding officer and the officers of the force were to be treated "in all respects in a manner suited to the dignity and greatness of both states." The force was to be at all times ready to execute services of importance, such as the protection of the peishwa's person, the overawing and chastisement of rebels, or suppression of disturbances in his dominions, and due correction of his subjects and dependents who might withhold payment of the just claims of the state; but it was not to be employed on trifling occasions, nor in a variety of ways which were enume-The negotiation of this treaty afforded opportunity for relieving Surat from certain Mahratta claims which had been a source of much vexation and dispute, and it was not same manner as the rights and territories of neglected. These claims were to be abandoned on consideration of the surrender, on the part of the Company, of land, the revenue of which should be equal to the annual estimated value European artillerymen attached, and the proper of the Mahratta tribute. Some similar claims in other places were to be extinguished in the same manner. The article with regard to the employment of Europeans by the peishwa was an important departure from the plan proposed far less stringent than that inserted in other engagements of like character between the British government and its allies. but the concession was not extorted by the of stipulating for the entire exclusion of Europeans and Americans from the service of the peishwa at Poona, and before his fortune the peishwa, the treaty, after reciting that it had taken the unfavourable turn which led to had been usual for that prince to enlist and retain in his service Europeans of different countries, provided that, in the event of war breaking out between the English and any subsidiary force, and another provided for European nation, and of discovery being made that any Europeans in the peishwa's service belonging to such nation at war with the English should have meditated injury towards five lacs—the estimated value of the lands their government, or have entered into ceded was twenty-six lacs, the additional lac intrigues hostile to their interests, such perbeing intended to meet possible deficiencies sons were to be discharged, and not suffered an arrangement the expediency of which to reside within the peishwa's dominions. The following article restrained the peishwa from committing any act of aggression against the Company's allies or dependents, or against exists between estimates and realizations. any of the principal branches of the Mahratta By the next article, designed to avert a empire, or against any power whatever; and collision of authorities and claims, it was bound him to abide by the Company's award, stipulated that orders should be given for should differences arise. Two other articles, admitting the Company's officers to the charge which referred to existing disputes with of the ceded districts as soon as it should various parties (the Mahrattas were never without a standing array of disputes with paign against Dhoondia Waugh, had established every Indian power), gave to the Company among the Mahratta chieftains a high degree the right of arbitration, and pledged the of reputation and influence. The detachment peishwa to obedience. In the event of war, made by General Stuart consisted of one regithe peishwa engaged, in addition to four ment of European and three regiments of battalions of the subsidiary force, to aid the native cavalry, two regiments of European Company immediately with six thousand and six battalions of native infantry, with a intantry and ten thousand horse from his own due proportion of artillery. It amounted to troops, and, with as little delay as possible, nearly ten thousand men, and to this force he might be able to supply from his dominions. The Company, on the other hand, engaged to employ against the common enemy the largest force which they might be able to furnish, over and above the number of the subsidiary troops. When war might appear probable, the peishwa was to provide stores and other aids in his frontier garrisons. He was neither to commence nor power and resources of Mysore brought to the pursue negotiation with any power whatever assistance of the Company's government. without giving notice and entering into consultation with the Company's government. While his external relations were thus restrained, the rights preserved to him in his a valuable accession of strength. own dominions were most ample. The Company disclaimed all concern with the peishwa's from Hurryhur, on the frontier of Mysore, on children, relations, subjects, or servants, with the 9th of March, and crossed the Toombudrespect to whom his highness was declared to dra river on the 12th. be absolute. employed, if necessary, in suppressing disturbancesin the ceded districts; and if disturbances restoring a degree of peace which the country should arise in the peishwa's territories, the rarely experienced. The chieftains and jng-British government, on his requisition, were hiredars, whose petty differences had previto direct such of the Company's troops as should be most conveniently stationed for the purpose to assist in quelling them. The concluding article, in oriental fashion, declared that the treaty should last as long as the sun terror on all disturbers of the peace. Most and the moon should endure.

In conformity with the suggestions of Colonel Close, confirmed by the governorgeneral, the whole of the subsidiary force stationed in the territories of the nizam, amounting to something more than eight in acknowledgment of their services, might be thousand three hundred men, marched from sufficient to restore them to favour. On the Hyderabad at the close of the month of February, and on the 25th of March reached the town of Paraindah, situate on the western. tier of the nizam's dominions, about a dred and sixteen miles from Poona. y force was accompanied by six thou-

d of the nizam's disciplined infantry, and bout nine thousand cavalry. At Madras Lord Clive prepared for carrying out the views of the governor-general. On the 27th of February he instructed General Stuart, then present with the army on the frontier of Mysore, to adopt the necessary measures for the march of the British troops into the Mahratta territory, leaving it to the judgment of the general to determine the amount of force necessary to be detached for the purpose. The choice of a commander Lord Clive did not delegate to another. He selected for the command Major-General Wellesley, who, in addition to his military claims, had acquired in Mysore much local knowledge that could not inions, all that prince's troops, and to place fail to be emineally useful, and by his cam-himself with the British subsidiary force, in to bring into the field the whole force which were added two thousand five hundred of the rajah of Mysore's horse. It is impossible to advert to this without referring to one advantage of the conquest of Seringapatam, and the subsequent treaty which the movement of the troops under General Wellesley brings to-notice. For the first time in the wars of Great Britain with the native states, were the Hitherto that state had been a source of unceasing danger and alarm. The policy of the Marquis Wellesley had converted it into

> General Wellesley commenced his march The march of the The subsidiary force were to be British troops through the southern division of the peishwa's territories had the effect of ously kept the districts oppressed by them in a state of constant warfare and outrage, suspended their contests for a time, awed by the presence of a commander whose name imposed of them joined the British army in support of the cause of the peishwa. Among the number were several who had incurred that prince's displeasure, and who hoped that the influence of the British government, exercised 15th of April General Wellesley effected a junction with the force from Hyderabad. he proceeded, the advanced detachments of Holkar retreated before him, and on his approach to Poona, the chieftain himself retired from that place to Chandoor, a town about a hundred and thirty miles distant, leaving at Poona a garrison of fifteen hundred men. Under these circumstances, it was not deemed necessary to advance to Poona all the troops at his disposal, and as the country was much exhausted and a great deficiency of forage prevailed, it was not advisable. General Wellesley therefore determined so to distri-bute his troops that the whole might procure forage and subsistence, but at the same time to reserve the power of readily forming a junction, should such a step be desirable. Colonel Stevenson, with the Hyderabad force, was ordered to march to Gardoor, to leave near that place, and within the nizam's domi

a position on the Beemah river, towards Poona, of the English. near its junction with the Mota Mola river.

General Wellesley continued his own march towards Poona by the road of Baramooty. the approach of the British troops. would have been an exploit perfectly in accordance with the Mahratta character, the prevalent belief was by no means improbable. The peishwa, alarmed for the safety of his capital and his family, urgently solicited that some of his own troops might be despatched for their protection; but the British commander knew too well the character of those troops to act upon the suggestion. On the 18th of April, it was ascertained that the peishwa's family had been removed to the fortress of Saoghur, a measure supposed to be preparatory to the destruction of the city. When this intelligence was received, General Wellesley was advancing to the relief of Poona with the British cavalry. At night, on the 19th of April, he commenced a march of forty miles over a very rugged country and through a difficult pass. The next day saw him at the head of his cavalry before Poona, the whole distance travelled in the preceding thirty-two hours being sixty The commander of Holkar's force in Poona, on hearing of General Wellesley's approach, precipitately quitted the place with his garrison, leaving to the English the easy duty of taking possession. A great part of the inhabitants had quitted their homes and fled to the hills during the occupation of Holkar. The few that remained manifested great pleasure at the arrival of the English troops, and those who had fled bore evidence to the confidence to which the change gave birth by returning to their homes and resuming the exercise of their usual occupations. While General Wellesley was on his march, preparations had been making at Bombay for the return of the peishwa to his capital. the time when he took up his residence at Bassein, he had, at his own request, been attended by a British guard. This force was now considerably augmented, and, being placed under the command of Colonel Murray, formed the prince's escort on his march back to the capital whence he had so recently made an ignominious flight. On the 27th of April he left Bassein, attended by the British resident, Colonel Close; on the 13th of May he took his seat on the musnud in his palace at Poona, amidst the roar of cannon from the British camp, echoed from all the posts and forts in the vicinity.

The accession of the principal Mahratta states to the great confederation of which the British government in India was the head, had been an object which the governor-general had long and strenuously laboured to effect. His efforts, so long and so often frustrated, had at length succeeded with regard to the quarter, to the end that, with my concurrence

To conciliate Scindia, the resources of diplomacy had been tried, almost as perseveringly as they had been used to win the peishwa, but with no better success than He had received repeated intimations that it had attended their exercise with the latter was intended to plunder and burn the city on chief, before the impending loss of every ves-As this tige of power led him to seek, in a British alliance, the means of deliverance from the ambitious dependents who were anxious to take charge of his person and authority. had met the overtures of the British resident civilly, but evasively. The turn which affairs had taken seemed to warrant the hope of a different issue—a hope corroborated by a letter which Scindia addressed to the governorgeneral, after the flight of the peishwa from his capital. In this communication Scindia announced his march from Oujein towards the Deccan, for the declared purpose of restoring order and tranquillity in that quarter, and expressed a desire that, in consideration of the friendship subsisting between the British government and the peishwa, and of the relation in which Scindia stood to both, as guarantee to the treaty of Salbye, the former would, in "concert and concurrence with him, render the corroboration of the foundations of attachment and union, and the maintenance of the obligations of friendship and regard, with respect to his highness the peishwa, as heretofore, and conformably to existing engage-ments, the objects of its attention." This was sufficiently vague; but it was not more vague than the generality of Mahratta communications. If it could be regarded as bearing any meaning, it was to be understood as a call upon the British government to aid in the restoration of the peishwa to the musnud at Poona.

A few days after the conclusion of the treaty of Bassein, Colonel Close addressed a letter to Scindia, announcing that engagements of a defensive nature had been formed between the British government and the peishwa; and that, agreeably to the tenor of those engagements, a British force would be stationed within the peishwa's dominions. making this communication, Colonel Close expressed his hope that Scindia would co-operate with the British government in endeavouring to arrange the affairs of the peishwa, and restore the prince to the exercise of his authority at Poona. The answer of Scindia was satisfactory, as far as any Mahratta answer could be satisfactory. It was in the following terms:-"I have been favoured with your acceptable letter, intimating that, as the relations of friendship had long subsisted between the Peishwa Saib Bahaudur and the English Company Bahaudur, engagements of a defensive kind were concluded between the two states; and that accordingly, with a view to the occurrences that had taken place at Poona, the Nabob Governor-General Bahaudur had determined to forward a British force to that chief authority in the Mahratta confederacy, and co-operation, the refractory may be and the peishwa was now the subsidiary ally brought to punishment. My friend, in truth, the ancient relations of friendship and union | relations of friendship subsisting between the which hold between the different circurs required such a design and such a co-operation. My army, which has also marched from Oujoin towards the Deccan, with a view to lay the heretofore differences had arisen between them. dust of commotion and chastise the disre- but that these differences had always been spectful, crossed the Norbudda, under happy adjusted by themselves." To the third of nuspices, on the 8th of February, and will Colonel Collins's proposals the answer was, shortly reach Boorhampore. My friend Co-that Scindin, being guarantee to the treaty of lonel Collins, who, agreeably to the orders of Salbye, had been surprised at the conclusion his excellency the most noble the governorgeneral, has left Furruckabad for this quarter, may be expected to join me in a few days. Inasmuch as the concerns of the different circars are one, and admit of no distinction, on the arrival of my forces at Boorhampere, I shall without reserve make you acquainted with the measures which shall be resolved on for the arrangement and adjustment of affairs." The letter concluded with some expressions of picty, very edifying from a Mahratta, but not necessary to be quoted.

The mission of Colonel Collins, referred to in the above letter, had its origin in instructions forwarded by the governor-general to that officer soon after the poishwa had con-sented to enter into a subsidiary alliance with knowledge, it is to be remembered that he had Colonel Collins accordingly the Company. proceeded to the camp of Scindia at Boorhampore. On his way he received a letter from Colonel Close, apprising him of the conclusion of the treaty of Bassein, and of the fact that Scindin had been informed of it. communication made by Colonel Collins after ancient relations of friendship and union which his arrival in Scindia's camp, therefore, an-hold between the different circars required nounced the British officer's knowledge of such a design and such a co-operation." This these events, and his authority to enter into language does not necessarily imply his apengagements with Soindia similar to those proval of the treaty. It is, according to which had been concluded with the poishwa. Scindin, in reply, referred the discussion of any interpretation which it might be convethe important points of this communication to pursonal conference; but the opportunity approbation, it cortainly indicates no surprise; for thus discussing them was long in arriving. At length a meeting took place, when the British resident stated the objects of his mission to be threefold: to concert with Sciudia instantaneous result of some unexpected distanceous results of some unexpected the most effectual means of restoring and securing tranquillity in the Docean; to offer that chief the mediation of the British goment for the purpose of effecting a recon-liation between him and Holkar; and to . make to him a tender of admission to the general defensive alliance on terms similar to those which had been accepted by the peishwa. It was answered, on the part of of guarantee, so long as it continued, bound Scindia, that the important nature of these him to enforce its observance upon both the proposals called for mature deliberation, and parties for whose benefit the engagement was that time was necessary for the purpose. The contracted; but it certainly gave him no conference here terminated. Five days after-authority to prevent their making any addiwards, one of Scindia's ministers attended the tional engagements, or even abrogating the resident to convey to him the results of the original trenty by mutual consent. The only consideration which had been bestowed on his offect of such measures with regard to him proposals. To the first it was answered, with would be to release him from the obligation of true Mahratta ambiguity, that for the British onforcing, in his capacity of guarantee, the government to concert with Scindia the most stipulations of the treaty which had been effectual means of restoring and securing tran-

two states. To the second : "That the affairs of the families of Scindia and Holkar had been one and the same from father to son; that To the third of of the defensive alliance between the peishwa and the British government without his knowlodge; that, after a personal conference with the peishwa, he should be apprised of the real state of circumstances, and should then act in such a manner as might be suitable and proper. It will be unnecessary to waste time on the answers to the first and second of Colonel Collins's suggestions; they are more ordinary specimens of the Eastern art of putting together words for the car alone, not for the understanding. The third may justify some examination. Although Soindia now declared that he had been surprised at the conclusion of the defensive alliance between the British expressed no surprise when, some time before, the same fact had been communicated to him by Colonel Close. Adverting, in his answer to this arrangement, to the consequent move-ment of a British force, and to the request The first for his co-operation, he had said that "the Mahratta custom, adapted to receive almost covery, in the Mahratta chief it required a considerable space of time to mature and bring it forth. His complaint that a treaty to which he was guarantee had been set aside without his knowledge, was as frivolous as his affectation of surprise was unwarranted. Scindia had no interest in the treaty; at least he had estensibly no interest in it. His office quillity in the Decean was conformable to the of the relation subsisting between the prishwa

and those chiefs who acknowledged him as position of a British force. At the period their head would be idle, because no satisfac when this reasonable request was made, no tory conclusion could be attained; but if any orders could have been issued in time to point connected with it be clear, it is the right prevent the march of General Wellesley to of the peishwa to bind himself by treaty with- Poona—it is needless to add that, even had out consulting the inferior chiefs. Scindin time permitted, no such orders would have was not a party to the treaty of Salbye, and been issued. he had no claim to be a party to any new treaty. If, however, he were auxious to form from the conduct of Scindia and his ministers, an alliance with the British government, the other grounds for suspecting their intentions thought that the new treaty was injurious to joined the chieftain's camp, he received inhis interest, and so it was, by taking the telligence that a confederacy between Scindia peishwa out of his power. But the power and other Mahratta chiefs, for purposes hostile which he had exercised was a usurpation unto the British interests, was in course of sanctioned by the avowed principles of the arrangement. Scindia's prime minister had Mahratta confederacy. that confederacy was usurpation; but the Berar. whole question may be reduced to very simple despatched to the peishwa, to remonstrate, as elements: if the theory of the Mahratta it was believed, against the treaty of Bassein, clements: if the theory of the Mahratta association were to be upheld, Scindia was a dependent of the peishwa, and his attempts to establish his own authority on the ruin of that of his superior were little, if at all, short of treason; if the theory were to be discarded, and Scindia to be viewed as an independent prince, seeking to advance his own ends by subjugating another to his will, the right of the latter to seek the means of escape, and taken the field with a large the latter to seek the means of escape, and the right of a neighbouring state to afford the British resident should follow him, with those means, are indisputably clear. The which Colonel Collins complied. those means, are indisputably clear. course of events was unfavourable to the views of Scindia, but he had not the slightest ground istence of the alleged confederacy against the for reasonable complaint. His intimation of British government, and the grounds of doubt the necessity of a personal conference with were not unreasonable. That Scindia and the the peishwa implied either a doubt of the rajah of Berar should be disposed to reduce truth of the representations made by the the peishwa to a state of subserviency to their agents of the British government, or an views, might readily be believed; but that intention to obstruct the progress of the new they should venture, in carrying out such a arrangements. To indicate such a doubt was plan, to provoke the hostility of the British offensive to the British government—to enter- government, was scarcely credible. Happily, tain such an intention was the preliminary to the governor-general did not suffer his doubts a state of hostility. Some of these points to overcome his caution. He was struck by were pressed on the notice of Scindia and his comparing the apathy of Scindia, while Holkar ministers by Colonel Collins, and he succeeded, after a time, in drawing from the chief a declaration unexampled perhaps in the annals of that capital was about to be rescued by a Mahratta diplomacy for explicitness. Scindin British force. He wisely, therefore, deemed now stated that he could not give a decided it necessary to instruct Colonel Collins to answer to the proposals of the British government till after a conference which he proposed to hold, not with the peishwa himself, but with an agent of that prince, whose arrival he expected; but he added, that he had no intention whatever to obstruct the completion of the arrangements lately concluded between the arrangements livery constitued between imputation of being engaged in a consideracy the peishwa and the British government; with Holkar and the rajah of Berar against that, on the contrary, it was his wish to improve the friendship at present subsisting dressed to the rajah of Berar, which was between the peishwa, the British government, followed by a second communication of like and his own state. Notwithstanding these character, on the governor-general receiving favourable feelings, Scindia manifested a strong dislike to the march of the British in motion for the purpose of meeting Scindia. troops to Poona, and he requested that orders

In addition to the inferences to be drawn opportunity was afforded him. He, indeed, existed. On the day on which Colonel Collins All, indeed, within been deputed on a mission to the rajah of Another confidential servant was

The which Colonel Collins complied.

The governor-general had doubted the exwas in undisturbed possession of the peishwa's capital, with his renewed activity when remonstrate with Scindia, and to require from him unequivocal evidence of friendly intentions; it being pointed out that the only satisfactory evidence would be his retirement to his dominions north of the Nerbudda. Scindia was further required to disavow the imputation of being engaged in a confederacy intelligence that the rajah had put his army troops to Poona, and he requested that orders Colonel Collins, on receiving his instructions, proceeded without delay to act upon that the city should remain in possession of Holkar rather than be delivered by the interledgment. Colonel Collins then claimed to be delay of a decided answer. treaty of Bassein, it was answered that Scindia could afford no satisfaction on that point until he had conferred with the rajah of Berar. The resident continued to press the points suggested by his instructions, representing that the refusal of Scindia to afford satisfactory addressed, remained unmoved by it. prounds of exception to the treaty of Bassein, and an exhauston of an energy countries that treaty was, notwithstanding, to be In conformity with instructions from the the cause of involving the Mahratta countries governor-general, General Wellesley, about all the calamities of war, if the rajah of the middle of July, addressed a letter to reheald stand firm. The insult offered Sciencia, requesting him to separate his army e British state by Sciencia's declaration, from that of the rajah of Berar, and retire anything at variance with Scindia's rights. | subject being more formally pressed upon him One of the ministers answered that it did not, three days afterwards, the necessity of another and Scindia himself confirmed the acknow-conference was assigned as a reason for the The raish of informed of the nature and objects of the Berar, in answer to representations made to recent negotiations among the Mahratta chiefs. him by the British resident, referred in like He was answered that Scindia had no inten-manner to an intended conference, in which tion to invade the dominions of either the not only Scindia and himself were to engage, nizam or the peishwa; but, on the resident but also Holkar, whose name was now, for urging the necessity of a disavowal on the part | the first time, introduced as a party necessary of Scindia of any intention to disturb the to be consulted in deciding the question of war or peace with the English. This suggestion seemed to postpone the decision indefinitely, as Holkar was at a great distance from Mulkapore. Scindia subsequently intimated a wish that the resident should pay a visit to the rajah of Berar, and Colonel Collins, explanation, combined with the unremitted in consequence, requested the rajah to appoint prosecution of his military arrangements, a day for receiving him. The rajah declined would compel the British government to adopt to appoint any day, and appeared anxious to precautionary measures upon every part of dispense with the proposed visit. As it could Scindia's frontier, and that the confirmation of not be doubted that Scindia was acquainted the report of his accession to a confederacy with the rajah's feelings, and that when he against the British power would lead to the made the suggestion he well knew what reimmediate commencement of active hostilities. | ception awaited the proposal, Colonel Collins The chief, to whom the representation was justly concluded that he had been wantonly He exposed to insult, and intimated his intention adhered to the silence which he had resolved to retire from Scindia's camp. He was ento maintain as to his future intentions, and treated to postpone his departure for six days, terminated the conference with this remark-and he consented. He was further admitted able declaration :- "After my interview with to an audience of the rajah of Berar, but the the rajah of Berar, you shall know whether it rajah simply acknowledged that he had rewill be peace or war." Suspense was thus ceived a letter from the governor-general, deconverted into certainty. Scindia was pre- clining to enter into any discussion upon it. converted into certainty. Scindia was pre-pared to embark in a war with the British covernment if the rajah of Berar would join him. On the decision of that prince it rested whether it should be "peace or war." Scindia had acknowledged that he had no just preparations for carrying on hostilities with out, and the British commander took posvigour and effect. A vast plan of military session. The effect of this capture was to and political operations, embracing within its place at the command of the English all compass the entire territory of India, had been | Scindia's territories south of the Godavery. framed, and all its details, with a due regard to contingencies, had been arranged with General Wellesley had the satisfaction to hear minute care. It consisted of two grand divi- that his orders for the attack of Baroach had sions, the management of which was assigned respectively to the commander-in-chief, General Lake, and to General Wellesley. To the former officer were committed the affairs of Hindostan; to the latter those of the Deccan.

In this plan, the views of the Marquis Wellesley were directed not merely to the temporary adjustment of the disputes which had rendered it necessary to put large armies in motion, but to such a settlement as should afford a reasonable prospect of continued peace and security to the British government and its hands of the English without much either of allies.

General Wellesley had marched from Poona, with the main body of the forces under his offered, the attack was eventually successful. command, on the 4th of June. The peishwa The loss of the British was small; that of the was to have provided a contingent to accom- enemy dreadfully heavy. pany him, but a very small portion of the stipulated force was furnished. Under the 29th of August. On the same day on which authority conferred on him by the governorgeneral, General Wellesley exercised a general superintendence over the diplomatic inter- the army of Bengal, under General Lake, course of Colonel Collins with Scindia and the struck the first important blow against the rajah of Berar. On this coming to an end, he gave immediate orders for the attack of Scindia's fort of Baroach, and issued a proclamation explaining the grounds upon which it had become necessary for him to commence named De Boigne, had acquired great celebrity hostilities against the combined Mahratta in India. De Boigne is said to have been a The force under his immediate command at this time consisted of three hundred and eighty-four European, and one thousand three hundred and forty-seven regular native cavalry; one thousand three hundred found his way to Madras, where he became an and sixty-eight European and five thousand ensign in the army of the East-India Comsix hundred and thirty-one native infantry. In addition to these numbers were a few artil- distant prospect of promotion in that service lerymen, between six and seven hundred pio- discouraged him; according to others, he took neers, two thousand four hundred horse, offence at some act of the governor; but, belonging to the rajah of Mysore, and three whatever the cause, he quitted Madras and thousand Mahratta horse. Nearly eighteen proceeded to Calcutta, being provided with hundred men, European and native, with some letters of introduction to Mr. Hastings. From Rombay lascars, and a small park of artillery, Calcutta he proposed to proceed overland to had been left at Poona for the protection of Russia, and the design, it has been alleged, the capital and person of the peishwa. The was not then first formed. It is said that at weather prevented General Wellesley from St. Petersburg De Boigne had laid before the marching as early as he wished. On the 8th of Empress Catherine a project for exploring the the British. On the following day preparathe project. Hastings, who was always zealous tions were made for attacking the fort. On for the extension of the boundaries of geograsurrender upon terms. On the 12th, he with on him a dress of honour, in addition to other

The governor-general had made extensive this garrison of fourteen hundred men marched

A few days after the fall of Ahmednuggur, been successfully carried into effect. This duty was performed by Colonel Woodington. had expected assistance from a schooner with two eighteen-pounders, which was to have been brought to anchor within a short distance of the fort. It was found impracticable to bring her up, and in consequence Colonel Woodington was compelled to make an arrangement for bringing up the eighteen-pounders and stores in boats. The pettah, though defended by the enemy in great force, fell into the difficulty or loss. The fort was subsequently stormed, and though a vigorous resistance was

The capture of Baroach was effected on the victory thus graced the British arms at the western extremity of the peninsula of India, enemy on the frontier of Oude. Its object was a French corps in the service of Scindia, under the command of an officer named Perron. This corps, which was originally raised by an officer native of Savoy, who, after serving successively in the armies of France and Russia, and having, whilst in the service of the latter power, been made prisoner by the Turks, pany. According to some authorities, the August it cleared, and early in the morning of countries between India and Russia; that, in that day he despatched a message to the killadar the exercise of its usual policy, the Russian of Ahmednuggur, to require him to surrender court had offered encouragement to the plan; He refused, and the pettah was im- and that at Calcutta De Boigne submitted it mediately attacked at three points. The con- to Hastings, concealing from him the fact that test was severe, but it terminated in favour of the government of Russia was interested in the 10th a battery of four guns was opened; phical knowledge with regard to India and the fire of which soon had the effect of inducing the killadar to make an overture of mendatory letter to the vizier, who bestowed difficulties of his projected journey to Russia Scindia's local authority in Hindostan had for a continued residence in India, and Hast-declined, and that of Perron had increased. ings soon learned that De Boigne had entered The districts subject to the latter yielded a the service of the rajah of Jeypoor. governor-general thereupon recalled him to regarded him as their immediate chief, while Calcutta, and, though he had no power of the allegiance of the troops at his command enforcing the call, De Boigne thought fit to was naturally and necessarily yielded rather to obey it. He succeeded in making his peace the man from whom they received orders, subwith Hastings, and obtained his permission to return. In the interval the rajah of Jeypoor which they knew little, and which was never had resolved to dispense with his services, but which they knew little, and which was never had made him a liberal present; and, according been aided by a variety of circumstances. to some, De Boigne further improved his fortune by successful speculations in trade. But ferior to him in cunning and activity. De Boigne was not at ease—he longed to almost exclusive direction of that chief's atresume his military habits and occupations, tention to the Deccan—the anxiety with which and opportunity was not wanting. Scindia he had sought to promote his interests at was actively engaged in promoting his own Poona, had greatly weakened his influence in aggrandizement at the expense of his neigh- the northern parts of India. In states conbours, and De Boigne deemed that his own stituted like those of the Mahratta coninterests would be best advanced by uniting federacy, the authority of the prince is always them with those of Scindia. In his eyes all endangered by absence or inactivity; and in services were alike, if they offered hope of the case of Scindia, the causes of decline pre-promotion or of gain. Whether he sought viously at work had been powerfully aided by Scindia, or Scindia him, seems doubtful; but he the success of Holkar. The result was, in the entered the service of that chief, and soon secured such a measure of his confidence as led independent French state on the most vulnerto the rapid increase of his own power and in-fluence. De Boigne at first commanded two was it to be overlooked that Perron's influence battalions. In process of time the number extended considerably beyond the dominions was augmented to eight, and subsequently to of which he possessed the actual administrasixteen, with a train of eighty pieces of cannon. At later periods still further additions were of a superior to the petty states around him, made, and the whole were formed into three and even to some at a distance; and having brigades; the first and third commanded by fore the period immediately under notice, of his overgrown power might lead to some attempt to reduce it, partly because his constitution was broken and debilitated, and partly because one object to which his exertions had been assiduously directed was attained, in the tribute his forces and regulate his operations accumulation of a fortune supposed to amount in such a manner as to effect it without delay. to four hundred thousand pounds. The retirement of De Boigne led to a struggle for the marched from Cawnpore with the infantry on honour of succeeding him in the chief com- that station under the command of Majormand. Sutherland aspired to it, but Perron, having the advantage of seniority, and the St. Leger, followed on the 8th. On the 13th still greater advantage of being present with Scindia at the time the vacancy occurred, secured to himself the desired post.

The origin of Perron was very humble: he had arrived in India as a common sailor. Having entered the service of De Boigne, he entered the Mahratta territory. manifested an aptitude for rising not inferior was lost in moving to the attack of Perron's to that of his commander. On succeeding to force, which was strongly posted at a short the chief command, he sedulously improved distance from the fortress of Allyghur. At all opportunities for increasing his own power. seven o'clock the British cavalry advanced De Boigne had received certain lands for the upon them in two lines, supported by the inmaintenance of his troops. Perron, succeed- fantry and guns; but the rapid retreat of the gifts better suited to the necessities of a predecessor, sought both to extend his possestraveller. Circumstances, which are differently sions and to render himself independent of the related, led him to relinquish the dangers and chief from whom they had been obtained. The revenue of vast amount. The inhabitants Though a Mahratta, Scindia was greatly inwords of the governor-general, "to found an tion. He sought to dictate with the authority at his disposal a military force, which neither with reference to numbers or discipline could nd by an Englishman of the name of be despised, his attempts were not unattended therland. De Boigne retired some years with success. The governor-general saw the necessity of crushing without delay this new and formidable enemy. General Lake was instructed to regard "the effectual demolition of the French state erected by M. Perron on the banks of the Jumna, as the primary object of the campaign," and the general was to dis-

On the 7th of August Lord Lake had The cavalry, under Colonel General St. John. the whole army encamped near Kanouge. It was subsequently joined by Major-General Ware with a detachment from Futtyghur. On the 28th it encamped on the frontier, and at four o'clock on the morning of the 29th, No time ing to this as well as to the authority of his enemy put an end to the action almost as soon as it had commenced. Attempts were made flank companies of the 76th regiment to enter as it had commenced. Attempts were made mank companies of the four regiment to enter to charge some considerable bodies of cavalry the fort with the retreating guard, but the who made protence of standing, but in vain. gate was shut, and the approach exposed to a All fled, and with such hearty vigour as left destructive fire of grape. Two ladders were to their pursuers little chance of overtaking the brought to the walls, and Major M'Leod or doing them any considerable mischief. The with the grenadiers, attempted to mount; English took possession of the town of Coel, they were opposed by a formidable row of the proposed of the proposed of the proposed. It was then proposed and made preparations for attacking Allyghur, pikemen, and desisted. It was then proposed which place Perron had left in charge of to blow open the gate, and a six-pounder was Colonel Pedrons; but the attack was delayed placed for the purpose, but failed. for a few days to try the effect of negotiation, pounder was brought up, but a difficulty arose It has too often been the practice of Europeans in placing it; and in these attempts full twenty in Indian warfare to have recourse to means of minutes were consumed, during which the attaining their objects, which, however com-lassailants were exposed to a destructive fire. mon in native contests, are highly discreditable. The enemy behaved with great bravery, to nations professing to be governed by higher descending the scaling-ladders which had been standards of morality and honour. It was left against the walls, to contend with the thought that corruption might prove an effi- party seeking to force an entrance. The first cient substitute for arms; and it was not till the hope of success from this source had failed, that it was resolved to try more honourable means of obtaining possession of Allyghur.

After weighing the comparative advantages regular siege or by an immediate assault, the ever, kept on its way to the second gate, September was fixed for the attack. thus waiting, an officer, who had been reconimmediately detached in the hope of taking hundred and eighty-one pieces of cannon. them by surprise, and to endeavour, amidst The terror inspired by the fall of Allyghur the confusion which it was expected would caused the immediate evacuation of some ensue, to enter the fort with them and secure minor forts, the governors being unwilling to the gate till the main body should arrive. The await the arrival of the victors. The event the gate till the main body should arrive. The latter object was not attained. The surprise was so complete, and the ardour of the British party so great, that all opportunity of retreat for the enemy was cut off. Not one of them escaped to relate the particulars of the surprise; and though the sentinels on the ramparts gave fire on hearing the disturbance, no extraordinary alarm was excited, the affair being taken to be the result only of a near approach of the videttes of the British force.

The morning gun was the signal for the movement of the storming party, which, covered by a heavy fire from the two batteries, advanced till they came within a hundred yards of the gate. Here a traverse had been recently thrown up, and mounted with three six-pounders; but the enemy were dislodged the French adventurer immediately on enter-before they had time to discharge them. ing the Mahratta territory. His rapid flight

A twelvegate at length yielded, and the attacking party advanced along a narrow way defended by a tower pierced with loopholes, from which a constant and deadly fire was kept up by matchlock men, while showers of grape poured of seeking the reduction of the place by a from the batteries. The British party, howlatter course was resolved upon. The 4th of which was forced without much difficulty. At The the third the assailants passed in with the reforce destined for it was composed of four treating enemy, but a fourth still remained to companies of the king's 76th regiment and be carried. Here the progress of the assailants detachments from two regiments of native was again stopped. The attempt to blow open It was led by Colonel Monson, an the gate failed, but Major M'Leod succeeded officer of distinguished bravery. During the in forcing his way through the wicket and preceding night two batteries of four eighteen-ascending the ramparts. Resistance now pounders each had been erected to cover the became feeble, and the fortress of Allyghur approach of the storming party, which left the passed into the hands of the British, the camp at three o'clock in the morning, and reward of about an hour's vigorous efforts. advanced in a curved direction towards the The loss of the English was severe, and among gateway. On arriving within four hundred the wounded were Colonel Monson and Major yards of it, they halted till break of day. While M. Leod. The loss of the enemy was, however, much greater; and as the fort had been made noitring, reported that sixty or seventy of the by the French their principal depôt for the enemy were seated round a fire smoking in Doab, a vast quantity of military stores was front of the gateway. A British party was transferred with it to the British, besides two

The terror inspired by the fall of Allyghur was also followed by another, scarcely less important and desirable. This was the surrender of Perron to the British general. The step was not occasioned, perhaps it was scarcely accelerated, by the success of the British arms Some time before the actual at Allyghur. commencement of hostilities, Perron had announced to the governor-general his wish to quit the service of Scindia, and obtain permission to pass through the British territories on his way to Europe. A favourable answer had been returned, but Perron did not follow out his proposed plan. He subsequently made overtures to General Lake, and some negotiation took place which ended in nothing; and the British army, as has been seen, attacked Colonel Mouson pushed forward with the two on that occasion seemed to indicate little determination to resist, and soon after the ber, about six miles from the imperial city of capture of Allyghur he renewed his applica- Delhi. The British had performed a march of tion for permission to enter the British terri- eighteen miles, and had just taken up their tories. It was promptly complied with, and ground for encampment, when the enemy apone great object of the war was thus achieved peared in such force as to oblige the grand almost without an effort.

appear extraordinary. It was not the effect up on rising ground in great force and in com-of moderation nor of satiety, but of necessity. Plete order of battle. Their position was well of moderation nor of satiety, but of necessity. | plete order of battle. Their position was well Perron continued to love power, and all that defended, each flank being covered by a swamp, power can command, as well as he had ever loved them; but a combination of circumstances had rendered his tenure of power insecure, and he thought it better to preserve his movable property, which was considerable, movable property, which was considerable, and accommanded to love power, and an unit described the protection from a line of intrenchments. The English commander resolved, however, and an unit described the protection from a line of intrenchments. The English commander resolved, however, and an unit described to give them battle. The whole of his cavalry to give them battle. The whole of his cavalry had accommanded to love power, and an unit described to give them battle. cure, and he thought it better to preserve movable property, which was considerable, than risk it in a contest for dominion which might probably be unsuccessful. The English and that being completed, he sent orders for the infantry and artillery to join. This could be determined on the destruction of the content of the infantry and artillery to join. government had determined on the destruc-tion of his power if practicable. But, besides this cause for alarm, he had ounces another of the circumstances of the Mahratta state, of miles in advance, were exposed to a most year of the circumstances of the Mahratta state, of miles in advance, were exposed to a most year which he was a dependent. Perron's conduct from the enemy, which brought down many men. During this interval the horse of General men. A chief, named Ambagee Inglia, took advantage of it to advance his own interests and undermine those of Perron. His views are said to have been aided by a supply of money to meet the wants of Scindia, and the authority of the French chief was transferred to his native rival. To render the transfer effective, Ambagee Inglia intrigued with Perron's offiers. Had they been faithful, their com-der might not have been compelled to seek cty in flight; but where personal interest the sole motive of action, fidelity is never be relied upon; and some officers, who had ceived signal marks of Perron's favour, went over to his enemy. He had consequently no choice but to withdraw: to remain was to devote himself to plunder and perhaps to death. The retreat of Perron was the virtual dissolution of the French state which he had formed on the Jumna. This did not necessarily involve the reduction of the force which he had commanded; but the loss of its chief, preceded as it had been by a course of conduct on his part, which was at the least undecided, if not pusillanimous, shook greatly the strength of native confidence in French officers, and impressed those officers with a strong feeling of around them; but the British troops, unmoved the necessity of providing for their own safety.

An officer named Fleury had attacked a body of troops under Colonel Cunningham, who, after vigorously resisting and temporarily beating off a force greatly superior to his own, had been compelled to accept for himself and his chief, pushed on their bayonets with resistless men permission to retire with their arms, on condition of not again serving against Scindia when the troops halted after the charge, the condition of not again serving against Scindia during the war. A detachment was sent against enemy were flying in all directions. The victoriantly accompanied his chief to the British camp. Another officer named Louis Bourquin, who commanded a division of Perron's force, tesolved to make a stand against the main body of the English under General Lake. The hostile armies met on the 11th September 12 when the troops matted after the charge, the charge in all directions. The victorious infantry immediately broke into columns of companies, by which movement the whole of the cavalry, both European and native, were enabled to charge through the intervals with their galloper guns, pursuing the enemy to the Jumna, where great numbers perished. All the artillery and stores of guard and advanced pickets to turn out. The retirement of Perron, after raising him-numbers continued to increase, and General self to the rank of a petty sovereign, cannot but Lake on reconnoitring, found them drawn

Although the British commander had determined on hazarding an action, he felt that to attack the enemy in the position which had been taken up would be attended with but a feeble chance of success. He therefore ordered his cavalry to fall back, partly to cover the advance of the infantry, but principally with a view to allure the enemy from their advantageous post by the appearance of a retreat. The feint had the desired effect. No sooner were the British cavalry in motion than the enemy rushed forward with wild manifestations of triumph and delight, the vivacity of the French leaders having communicated itself to those whom they commanded. But their The cavalry exultation was soon checked. continued their retrograde movement till the infantry came up; the former then opened from its centre, and allowed the latter to pass to the front. Preparations having been made for guarding the flanks of the British force, one of which was threatened by some native cavalry, the whole line moved forward. A tremendous fire from nearly a hundred pieces of cannon, some of them of large calibre, fell force. The fate of the day was decided, and when the troops halted after the charge, the an object of much interest. There, at the ancient seat of the power which Baber had reared-where Akbar had placed on record the length and breadth of the provinces which owned its sway-where Annugrobe had asrembled mighty armies to chack a his enemics and reduce to subjection tributary kingsthere dwelt the living representative of the house of Timour in the person of a miscrable man, old, blind, and decrepit-without power, without pemp, or state, or retinue-almost without the means of commanding the common necessaries of life. This was Shah Allum, once life. It must suffice to say that theocoforward it was an almost unbroken series of calamity, description, he conceived the most violent sus-temperar and his family were often in want. picious of the loyalty of his eldert son. Such ental monarchies, and are frequently not unwarranted. In this in-tance there reems to policy which then prevailed. The shazada died | pendants, waiting in mute and watchful attenlong afterwards the calamitics of his wretched and ready to give it effect as soon as uttered; parent were consummated. A ruffian chief, while vassals from distant countries, or their of Robilla origin, named Gholaum Kaudir representatives, tendered respectful homage Khan, having obtained possession of the city to the lord of the faithful throughout India, in declaring to be "almost without parallel in attendants, the annals of the world." The apartments canopy, the

the enemy fell into the hands of the English, which malice and insolence could devise, was and three days after the battle. Louis Bour-deprived of sight by the dagger of the wretch quin, with four other French officers, surren- who had previously heaped on him every other dered themselves. The arms of Scindis rescued the un-In the city of Delhi, which was forthwith happy monarch from the power of Gholaum executed by the French, the battle had been Kaudir, and the crimes of that miscreant met a fearful retribution. The authority of Shah Allum was once more recognized, but the recognition was only formal. All substantial power was exercised by the Mahratta authorities. The office of vakeel ool-moolk, or executive prime minister of the Mogul empire, was bestowed on the peishwa, but Scindia had no intention to burden his highness with the duties of the office. The discharge of these he per-onally undertook as the pei-hwa's deputy, and the function, with all its power and influence, passed to his successors. Perron, in the courre of his restless intrigues, obtained the the gallant chazada, whose military energy appointment of commandant of the fortress of had alarmed and annoyed the British govern- Delhi, and thus the person and power of ment, but for many years the suffering captive of these who recured his person for the take rattes to the French. From neither under the dahming his name to purposes of reliable the emperor meet with either kindness or aggrandizement. He had allied himself with generosity. He was not merely deprived of the Mahrattas, and through their assistance power—of this he could scarcely complain, having by his own net transferred his right and misfortunes commanded no sympathy, and even the means of subsistence were tardily and scantily dealt out The territories nominally subject to the cm-lto him. A considerable cum had been properor were the constant scene of disorder and fessedly allotted to the support of the royal rebellion. Surrounded by troubles of every [household, but so hadly was it paid, that the

The triumph of the British arms under suspicions are of common occurrence in ori- General Lake opened a new reene. Immediately after the battle the emperor had despatched a message to the victorious comhave been no ground for them. Alienated mander, offering the monarch's congratulations from the affections of his father by those who and coliciting protection. An appropriate had an interest in fomenting discussions, the answer was returned; and on the 16th of shazada passed a great part of his life at a dis-September, the heir of Timour, so long the tance from the city which was the witness of victim of adverce fortune, scated in the capital the former glory and present degradation of of his ancestors, gave audience to the English his house. He made repeated efforts to obtain general. In that place his predecessors, the aid of the British government for the described in the most gargeous productions of liverance of his father from thraldom, but in the loom, had rat upon thrones formed of vain. Hastings was not indisposed to afford gold, and made radiant by a dazzling profusion it, but was restrained by orders from home of the most costly jewels. Around them had dictated in the spirit of the non-intervention stood hundreds of obsequious guards and dein the British dominions, of fever, and not ition the expression of the sovereign's will, of Delhi, and with it of the person of the em- and wooed his favour by presents worthy of peror, committed the most dreadful excesses— his rank. Far different was the scene which excesses which an historian has felt justified met the eye of the British general and his Beneath a small and ragged The apartments canopy, the appearance of which seemed a of the women, which in the East usually mockery of regal state, sat one whose age command some respect even from the most exceeded that usually attained by man, but in abandoned, were rendered by Gholaum Kaudir whose appearance the operation of time was the scene of crimes of which violent and indiscriminate plunder was the lightest; and the emperor, after being exposed to every insult his head, and they had been filled with and sorrow. reverence throughout India, his life had been within six miles of the enemy, instead of the passed amid poverty, danger, and suffering, distance which he had expected. To add to and all around him at this moment indicated the surprise which the discovery of the enemy's the most amount of the passed destination. But there position was calculated to meeting and to the most wretched destitution. But there position was calculated to produce, and to was one element of misery greater than all. increase the difficulty of deciding how to deal The light of heaven, the common source of with the unexpected state of circumstances, enjoyment to the prosperous and the wretched, General Wellesley received intelligence that shone not for him—the face of nature was to the confederates were about to retire. him a blank. contrasting the appearance of all things around arrival of Colonel Stevenson on the following him then with former scenes was denied day, the opportunity might be lost, by the stood before him—in their hands was his fate probable that they might have heard of his -they addressed to him words of sympathy, and kindness, and comfort, but he could not to accelerate their removal. Should this not read in their countenances a confirmation of be the case, there was another danger of a the friendly language which fell on his ear. Poor, dependent, aged, infirm, and sightless, the head of the empire illustrated in his person the wide-spread ruin which had overwhelmed the empire itself.

Shah Allum regarded the English as his deliverers, and he bestowed on General Lake a host of titles, in testimonial of his bravery and military skill-the sword of the state, the hero of the land, the lord of the age, and the victorious in war. Such were the terms in which, in the spirit of Oriental exaggeration, the services of the British commander were acknowledged.

Colonel Ochterlony was left at Delhi, in a capacity similar to that of resident, and Lord Lake resumed his march. But before adverting to the subsequent events of his career, attention must be directed to the progress of he British arms under General Wellesley in a fferent part of India.

Scindia and the rajah of Berar had entered the territories of the nizam, and it was sup-larmies flowed the river Kaitna. This was posed would cross the Godavery, which was crossed by the British force at a ford which fordable, and attack Hyderabad. General happily the enemy had neglected to occupy. Wellesley moved to counteract them, and the The infantry were immediately formed into confederates retired towards the point by two lines, and the British cavalry, as a reserve, which they had entered. They were soon into a third. The native horse were employed after joined by a considerable detachment of in keeping in check a large body of the or regular infantry under two French officers.
On the 21st of September, General Wellesley of the British force.

was so near the corps of Colonel Stovenson, who commanded the Hyderabad subsidiary force and the nizam's horse, as to be able to hold a conference with that officer, when a though two affected not the fortune of the law was converted for attacking the nearly to the last of the Earlich plan was concerted for attacking the enemy on the 24th, it being understood that their army was collected at a place named Bokerdun.

General Wellesley was to attack their left, and Colonel Stevenson their right. The former directed his march with the view of observing the directed the officer commandmer arrected his march with the view of observing this, directed the officer commandaritying on the 23rd within twelve or fourteen miles of the enemy; but it turned out that the information upon which the plan had been prehending the order, led directly upon it. arranged had deceived the commander. The tenent's camp, instead of being at Bokerdun, that its right at that place, and extended severely. The mistake rendered necessary the reveral unites to Assye. There was a district, the period than was desirable. Various evila

While his name was held in General Wellesley on the 23rd found himself The miserable satisfaction of therefore, he postponed the attack till the Strangers from a far distant country departure of the enemy in the night. It was approach, and the intelligence would be likely different character: General Wellesley could not hope to withdraw unobserved, and retreat would have exposed him to harassing attacks from the enemy's cavalry, attended, in all probability, with the loss of part of his baggage. These were reasons against retreat. On the other hand was the alarming fact, that in his front was a hostile army comprising a body of infantry three or four times as many as his own, a numerous cavalry, and a vast quantity of cannon; the whole occupying a formidable position. In emergencies like this, the bolder course is not unfrequently the safest. General Wellesley preferred it, and resolved to attack.

The enemy's right consisted entirely of cavalry, and it was in front of this that the British commander found himself. He determined, however, to direct his attack to their left, as the defeat of the infantry was the more likely to be effectual. Between the hostile as well as a village, called Bokerdun: the period than was desirable. Various evils camp was entirely within the district, and attended this step. The cavalry suffered much bence arese the mistake. Its result was, that from the cannonade; they were incapacitated for purruit when the period for thus employ- | the approaches being made under cover of the ing their services arrived, and when they were ravines which had been won from the enemy. brought forward there was no reserve. One of the 14th a communication was received consequence of this deficiency was, that strag- from the fort, demanding a cessation of hosglers left in the rear of the British force, who tilities, on the ground that terms were about had pretended to be dead, were suddenly re- to be proposed. General Lake, in consequence, stored to animation and turned their group directed the firing to come for a few hours. stored to animation, and turned their guns directed the firing to cease for a few hours, upon the backs of the conquerors. But the and requested that a confidential person might victory, though bought by the excrifice of be sent without delay with the proposed terms. many valuable lives, was complete. The re- Terms were sent, and General Lake despatched sistless bayonets of the British troops drove one of his own officers with letters, giving his the enemy before them in repeated charges, assent to them. The fort had been for some and when their last-formed body of infantry time the scene of mutiny; but in the commu-English masters of the field, and of nearly a ill-feeling was at an end, and that officers and hundred pieces of cannon abandoned by the men were alike ready to abide by whatever fugitives. General Wellesley shared largely agreement might be made between their comin the labours and the dangers of the conflict. mandant, Colonel Hessing, and the English Two horses were killed under him, and every general. But this unanity, if it ever existed, Two horses were killed under him, and every The loss on the part of the English amounted to nearly four hundred killed. The number of great diversity of opinion among the native wounded was fearfully large -between fifteen chiefs, and a great desire to raise objections. and sixteen hundred. The enemy left twelve While he was endeavouring to remove these, hundred killed, and a vast number were the firing from the fort was recommenced withwounded; but many of the latter being out any apparent cause. On this the English scattered over the country, not even an esti-officer returned. The belief of General Lake mate could be formed of the amount. Among was, that the overture was but an expedient the mortally wounded was Scindia's principal to gain time, and this opinion seems highly minister, who survived but a short time.

light the cool determination of the general, and the admirable qualities of the troops at his disposal. Entangled in difficulties from which there was no escape but through danger, he chose the mode which to the superficial or the timid would have appeared the most dan-gerous. He was justified by the character of his troops, and the result was alike honourable to his own judgment and to the intrepid spirit of those l on whom he relied. Misinformation brought the battle prematurely on—mistake added to its dangers and difficulties; but all untoward circumstances were successfully overcome by the admirable judgment of the leader and the devoted earnestness of his followers.

So rapid and so numerous were the successes of the British arms, and so much were all these operations parts of one consistent whole, the reader for any length of time to one series, without neglecting and throwing out of place tion of the British force. The fort contained other transactions of great interest and importance. The proceedings of General Lake twenty-six captured beyond the walls, made a must now for a brief interval supersede the total of two hundred and two. record of those of his coadjutor in the south. On quitting Delhi, General Lake had marched towards Agra, at which place he arrived on the 4th of October. The fort was summoned; but no answer being returned, preparations some relation to each other, and all conducted were made for dislodging seven battalions who with vigour and success. held possession of the town, of an encampment with a large number of guns on the the occupation of Cuttack, which was comglacis, and of the ravines on the south and pleted during the month of October, may prosouthwest face of the fort. This being effected perly be adverted to in this place. This service with success, though not without considerable was effected by Colonel Harcourt, who, having loss, the operations of the siege commenced, occupied that great seat of Hindoo superstition, was of short duration. The British officer despatched to make the final arrangements found probable. Throughout his career, the humanity The battle of Assyc places in a conspicuous of the commander-in-chief was eminently conspicuous, and it is to this feeling that his consent to a cessation of firing is to be ascribed. It may, however, be doubted whether, under the circumstances, he was justified in consenting to discontinue his fire, with a view to obtaining a surrender on terms. He had obtaining a surrender on terms. He had expressed his belief that the place would not stand ten hours' breaching, and any appearance of hesitation was calculated to give confidence to the enemy, and diminish that feeling among his own troops.

On the 17th of October, the grand battery of the besiegers being completed, they were enabled to open a destructive fire on the point of the fort which appeared least capable of resistance. A practicable breach would soon have been made, but in the evening the garrison sent an offer to capitulate, and on the that it is impossible to restrict the attention of following day, at noon, marched out, when the place was immediately occupied by a porone hundred and seventy-six guns, which, with

In addition to the great plans which General Lake and General Wellesley were successfully working out, there were various detached operations at this time in progress, all bearing The notice of some of these must be deferred to a later period, but duggernanth, proceeded to reduce the fort of effecting this object. he resolved to attack Barabuttee, situate about a mile from the them at once, instead of acting upon the plan town of Cuttack. The fort was built of atone, which he had proposed, of keeping them in and was surrounded by a ditch twenty feet check till the infantry arrived. The official deep, and varying in breadth, according to the details of the early proceedings of this day are situation of the bastions, from thirty-five to a singularly obscure; but this much is certain, hundred and thirty-five feet. A battery was that the attempt to make any permanent incompleted on the night of the 13th of October, preceion on the Mahratta line by eavalry alone and on the morning of the 14th opened its fire. Was unsuccessful. The enemy sartiflery moved By eleven o'clock most of the defences in that down mennal horses in masses, and the sacrifice part of the fort against which the fire was was vain. The valour displayed by the British directed were taken off, the enemy's guns were casalry in this fruitless struggle, commands insilenced, and Colonel Harcourt judged that deed the most unbounded admiration, mixed the time for attempting to gain possession had with a deep feeling of regret that it should arrived. Over the ditch was a narrow bridge have been so utterly wasted. Nothing could leading to the gate, and by this communication excuse the premature conflict provoked by the assailants were to endeavour to effect an General Lake, but the mistake under which entrance. The party, which consisted of both he laboured in believing the enemy to be in Europeans and sepays, was led by Lieutenant-Colonel Clayton. They advanced under a fire of musketry from the fort, ill-directed but heavy, to which they were exposed for forty infantry, which had marched at three, arrived minutes. The gate was to be blown open, but no impression could be made except on the wicket, the remainder being fortified by The wicket having large masses of stone. yielded, the nasailants entered, but could only pass singly. Notwithstanding this disadvantage, and a very determined resistance offered at the outer and two succeeding gates, the British party gained possession of all, and the victory was the more gratifying from its having been attained with comparatively little loss. The capture of Barabuttee was followed by the entire submission of the province of Cutck, and the greater part of the troops by ... y to enter Berar, to co-operate with the any under General Wellesley.

The month of November opened with a brilliant addition to the splendid success which in overy quarter had crowned the arms of England. General Lake marched from Agra on the 27th of October, in pursuit of a Mahratta force composed of some brigades despatched from the Deccan in the early part of the campaign, and of a few battalions which had effected their escape from Delhi. Great anxi- from this overture, and, whatever the measure ety was felt to destroy or disperse this corps, on account of its being provided with a numerous artillery. The march of the English parations for renewing the attack under more army having been seriously impeded by un-advantageous circumstances. favourable weather, it was resolved to leave was formed into two columns on the left. The the heavy artillery at Futtypore, and pursue first, composed of the right wing, was destined the enemy by forced marches. On the 31st, to turn the right flank of the enemy, and to at-the British force encamped at a short distance tack the village of Laswaree; the second from the ground which the enemy had quitted column was to support the first. There were on the same morning, and General Lake determined to push forward with his cavalry, in the hope of overtaking and delaying them by a light engagement till the infantry should be able to come up. At midnight the cavalry any confusion that might occur, and fall upon was accordingly put in motion, and, after a march of twenty-five miles, came up with the brigade—the first, which was formed between retreat, and the laudable desire which he felt to prevent the ercape of a force which was regarded with considerable apprehension. The at eleven, having occupied in their march only two hours more than the cavalry. At this time a mestage was received from the enemy, offering to surrender their guns upon terms. This was remarkable, because up to this period the Mahrattas had no cause to be disantisfied with the fortune of the day. The probability is, that it was an expedient to gain time for some desired object, and the result seems to countenance such a belief. General Lake ac-cepted the offer, "auxious," as he says, "to prevent the further effusion of blood." He might have adduced another reason also: his infantry, after a long march, performed very rapidly, under a burning sun, needed rest and refreshment. Whatever might be the motive of the Mahrattas for seeking delay, this circumstance made delay not the less desirable for the English. General Lake allowed the Mahattas an hour to determine whether they would agree to his acceptance of their own proposals,-a mode of proceeding more easily reconcilable with the ordinary course of Indian negotiations than with common sense. English general seems to have expected little of his expectation, he acted wisely in employing the interval of suspense in making pre-The infantry three brigades of cavalry. One of these, the third, was instructed to support the infantry; the second was detached to the right to watch the motions of the enemy, take advantage of any confusion that might occur, and fall upon enemy soon after daybreak. On descrying the third and second, composed the reserve. them, the English commander supposed that As many field-pieces as could be brought up they were in retreat, and, to prevent their with the gallopers attached to the cavalry formed four distinct batteries for the support character of a soldier were desplayed, in an at-

of the operations of the infantry.

The hour of expectation passed, and nothing further being heard from the enemy, the infantry were ordered to advance. Their march lay along the bank of a rivulet, and for a time they pursued it under cover of high grass and amidst broken ground concealed from the enemy. As soon, however, as they were discovered and their object ascertained, the enemy threw back their right wing under cover of heavy discharges of artillery. Showers of grape, poured forth from large mortars as well as from guns of heavy calibre, did fearful execution on the British infantry, whose batteries returned the fire with promptitude and vigour indeed, but, from their inferiority in numbers and weight of metal, with very inferior effect. The King's 76th was at the head of the advancing column, and so dreadful were the ravages made in its ranks by the storm of fire to which it was exposed, that, on its arriving at the point from which the charge was to be made, General Lake resolved rather to proceed to the attack with that regiment and some native infantry who had closed to the front, than to wait for the remainder of the column, whose advance had been from some cause delayed. The conduct of the men nobly justified the confidence reposed in them by their commander. They advanced with as much regularity as was practicable, under a tremendous shower of canister-shot, which further thinned their previously weakened ranks. This was immediately succeeded by a charge from the enemy's cavalry; but they were received in a manner which sent them They rallied at a short back in confusion. distance, and there being reason to apprehend further mischief, the King's 29th dragoons were ordered to attack them. They formed on the outward flank of the 76th, by whom they were received with cheers, which were echoed back by the cavalry with no diminution of vigour. From this time the details of the battle became too involved to be narrated with perspicuity. A general charge of horse and foot was made, in which the desperate valour of the assailants set at naught every obstacle and defied every danger. At the moment when the commander-in-chief was about to place himselt at the head of the infantry, his horse was shot under him. While in the act of mounting that of his son, Major Lake, that officer was wounded by his side; but this was no time for the indulgence of even the deepest sympathies of nature. The notes of the cavalry trumpets sounding to the charge—which caught the ear when the thunder of the guns from the enemy's lines for a moment subsided—told that those lines were to be won, and those guns made prize; and such was the result. enemy fought with a determination far exceedwas not till they had been dispossessed of all their guns that they relinquished the contest.

character of a soldier were desplayed, in an attempt made by their left wing to effect an orderly retreat. In this, however, as in every other point, they were defeated; a regiment of British dragoons and another of native cavalry breaking in upon them, cutting many to pieces, and making prisoners of the rest, with the whole of their baggage.

The loss of the English, in killed and wounded, amounted to more than eight hundred; but this, though heavy, was not to be compared with that of the enemy. About two thousand of the latter were taken prisoners, and with the exception of these, and of a few whom the possession of good horses and local knowledge might enable to escape to a distance, the whole of the seventeen battalions were destroyed. It has been conjectured that the number of slain could hardly be less than seven thousand. The destruction of this force was scarcely less important with regard to that strength which is based on opinion, than on account of its actual and immediate effect in crippling the resources of the enemy. The battalions which fell at Laswaree constituted the flower of Scindia's army, and had been distinguished by the imposing name of the Deccan Invincibles. The charm was now broken; not only had the invincible battalions been vanquished, but so entire had been their defeat that they had ceased to exist. The completeness of their destruction was indeed in one sense honourable to them, for it attested the vigour of their resistance; but how proud was the distinction earned by those who had dispelled the illusion which had raised this corps above the reach of the chances of war and claimed for it a charter of perpetual success!

The victory was gained entirely by hard fighting. The course taken by General Lake in various instances was bold even to the verge of rashness. So nearly did it approach the line which separates courage from temerity, that had the result been unfavourable, it would probably have been impugned by that numerous class whose judgment, if not altogether governed by the event, is greatly modified by it. His venturing to attack the enemy with his cavalry alone, cannot be defended without reference to the belief under which his resolution was taken. He found the enemy were about to elude him altogether. The subsequent advance to charge with only part of his infantry, is more easily defensible. Exposed as they were to a fire which was rapidly consuming them, it was scarcely possible that they could be placed in more unfavourable circumstances, while an indication of fearless determination was calculated at once to keep up their spirit and to abate that of the enemy. But whatever opinion may be formed of the conduct of the battle of Laswaree, it is impossible to trace its progress and results without a deep impression of reverence for that ing all that had been expected of them, and it indomitable courage and perseverance by which victory was secured to the English. The sanguine and imaginative will, from a perusal of Even then some of the best qualities of the its history, catch some portion of the spirit which burned in the breasts of those by whom | corps, according to our situation and that of it was won; and if a casual recollection of it the enemy." should ever flit over the mind of one engaged nerve the arms and brace the sinews of the soldier, so long as their deeds are remembered.

Again does it become necessary to direct attention to the army in the south for the purpose of noticing in their proper place its contributions towards the safety and honour of the British government. General Wellesley had apprized Colonel Stevenson of the necessity imposed on him of attacking the enemy at and apparently unauthorized overtures for Assye without waiting for his junction. The latter immediately marched with part of his Scindia to General Wellesley. Early in Notroops; and the enemy, on hearing of his adventure arrived in the English camp, troops; and the enemy, on hearing of his advance, departed suddenly from the spot where on a mission from Scindia, a Mahratta chief of they had passed the night after the battle, considerable rank, named Jeswant Rao Ghothey had passed the night after the battle, and proceeded towards the Adjuntee Ghaut. Colonel Stevenson, having met with considerable difficulties on his march, was unable to duce their credentials, had none to show. pursue them; and he was further detained, that the wounded in the battle of Assye camp till measures could be taken for remedymight have the assistance of his surgeons, great inconvenience and suffering having been occasioned by the want of a sufficient number of medical officers. When Colonel Stevenson advanced, the enemy's infantry, or rather the wreck of it, retired towards the Nerbudda. This division of the British force met with no interruption in the field, and Colonel Stevenson obtained possession of several important fortresses with little difficulty. General Wellesley in the mean time made some rapid and rassing marches, all of them intended to mote important objects. His situation canbe better painted than in his own words. Since the battle of Assye," says he, "I have been like a man who fights with one hand and defends himself with the other. With Colonel Stevenson's corps I have acted offensively, and have taken Asseerghur; and with my own I have covered his operations, and defended the territories of the nizam and the peishwa. doing this, I have made some terrible marches; but I have been remarkably fortunate—first, in stopping the enemy when they intended to pass to the southward through the Casserbarry Ghaut; and, afterwards, by a rapid march to the northward, in stopping Scindia when he was moving to interrupt Colonel Stevenson's operations against Asseerghur, in which he would otherwise have undoubtedly succeeded. I moved up the Ghaut as soon as Colonel Stevenson got possession of Asseerghur; and I Bhoonslah, who has passed through to the southward. At all events, I am in time to prevent him doing any mischief. I think that acting on the offensive or defensive with either rule," said General Wellesley, "not to cease

In pursuit of the rajah of Berar. General amid equal dangers in maintaining the cause Wellesley arrived at Aurungabad on the 29th of England in distant lands, the lapse of years of October. The rajah was so little anxious will detract nothing from the force of the for a meeting, that in the two days succeeding example: the dauntless heroism of those who the arrival of the British force at that place fought and conquered at Laswaree will aid to be moved his camp five times. He, however, gathered sufficient confidence by the 31st to venture, with a body of four or five thousand horse, to attack a small force engaged in protecting a convoy of fourteen thousand bullocks; but was compelled to retire without any advantage beyond the capture of a few of the beasts.

Several weeks before this transaction, vague repuray, and a Brahmin named Naroo Punt; but these persons, when called upon to pro-They were permitted to remain in the English ing this defect; but before any answer could be received to their application for the purpose, a letter was received by General Wellesley from Scindia, disavowing Jeswant Rao Ghorepuray and his colleague, and intimating an intention of sending another person to negotiate with the British general. The latter was persuaded, notwithstanding, that Scindia had really despatched the mission which he now disavowed, and, notwithstanding the letter of Scindia, it was not dismissed. General Wellesley was not unacquainted with the characteristics of Mahratta diplomacy. portion," said he, "as I gain experience of the Mahrattas, I have more reason to be astonished at the low and unaccountable tricks which even the highest classes of them practise, with a view, however remote, to forward their own interest." An addition to his experience was now about to be made, perfectly in accordance with that which he had previously gained. Shortly after the receipt of Scindia's letter, disavowing Jeswant Rao Ghorepuray and his Brahmin associate, those parties produced a letter from their master, conveying to them certain powers sufficient to corroborate their claims to be received as the representatives of Scindia, but insufficient to justify the British commander in even opening a negotiation. Unable to treat for a peace, the vakeels proposed a temporary suspension of arms, and this was acceded to on condition that Scindia think that in a day or two I shall turn Ragojee with his army should enter Berar twenty coss (about forty miles) to the eastward of Ellichpore, and keep at all times at that distance from the British troops. On the part of we are in great style to be able to act on the Scindia, it was demanded that the cessation of offensive at all in this quarter; but it is only done by the celerity of our movements, and by General Wellesley refused to consent. "The hostilities till peace be concluded, is a good one ratta engagements may, for the most part, be in general." His chief reason for concluding considered—an idle and useless piece of that a deviation from it would, in this case, be beneficial, was, that if hostilities continued General Wellesley accompanied his notice of uninterruptedly, Scindia would probably emberrars the contemplated operations of Colonel tion that he should attack the enemies of the Staveness while the English would be unable. Stevenson, while the English would be unable Company wherever he should find them, and to do anything effectually against Scindia, the Scindia was undoubtedly to be accounted not army with him in the field being composed merely as an enemy, but as one engaged in entirely of horse, to follow which would draw active hostilities. the English force too far from its sources of the rajah of Berar. to treat for the rajah of Berar, and consequently he could not be bound by any stipulations which they might make on his behalf. nary principles of reason and justice, and without any necessity for resorting to the convenient resources of Mahratta morality.

Colonel Stevenson having equipped his force of Pindaries and other light troops. cover his operations, General Wellesloy deseended the ghants by Rajoora on the 25th of November. At Parterly was a force belong-it was formed into two lines, the infantry in ing to the rajah of Berar, and commanded by the first, the eavalry in the second, supporting his brother, Manoo Bappoo: it comprised, the right, which was rather advanced, to press together with a body of cavalry, a great part, on the enemy's left. The left of the British if not the whole, of the rajah's infantry, and alway supported by the Mogul and Mysers

At Parterly General Wellesley was joined supply, and prevent its being directed against | by the division under Colonel Stevenson. Colonel Stevenson was Shortly after their arrival parties of the preparing to attack Gawilghur, within the enemy's horse appeared, with which the territories of the last-named chief, and the fall Mysorean cavalry skirmished during part of of that place was regarded as of great im-portance. An irruption of the enemy into Guzerat, which was but weakly provided with the means of defence, was also apprehended, long line of infantry, cavalry, and artillery, and to avert this was one of the objects of regularly drawn up on the plains of Argaum, the British great line application to the plains of Argaum and the provided with the provided with the provided with the plains of Argaum. the British general in concluding the truce; about six miles from the place where he had another was, to effect a division between intended to encamp. It was late, the day Scindia and the rajah of Berar, who was not had been intensely hot, and the British had included in it. The agents had proposed that marched a long distance; but, notwithstanding it should extend to the forces of that chief; but these circumstances, General Wellesley rethe proposal, independently of its interfering solved not to lose the opportunity which prewith one main object of the British com-|sented itself, and he accordingly marched mander, that of separating the interests of the forward to attack. The advance was made confederates, could not have failed to be red in a single column, in a direction nearly jected. The agents of Scindia had no powers parallel to that of the enemy's line, the British cavalry leading. The rear and left were covered by native cavalry.

The enemy's infantry and guns were on the He might have regulared them on the ordi- left of their centre, and on the left of these was a body of cavalry. Scindia's army, consisting of one very heavy body of cavalry, was on the right, and to its right was a body at Asserghur for the siege of Gawilghur, enemy's line extended about five miles, having marched to Ballapoor, where he was joined by in its rear the village of Argaum, with exthe convoy which the rajah of Berar had in tensive gardens and inclosures. In its front vain attempted to cut off. To support and was a plain, but considerably intersected by water-courses.

As the British army approached the enemy

temporary confusion in part of the British solved to adopt it, on the ground that it was line was dispelled, the result was not for an the least objectionable of the three, and the instant doubtful. The King's 76th and 78th requisite measures were immediately taken. regiments were fiercely attacked by a large Two detachments were made—one to drive body of Persian troops, and the latter were the enemy from the ground which they occument; but being repulsed with great slaughter, | covering the entrance to the mountains which victors thirty-eight pieces of cannon and all the services on which they were respectively their ammunition. They were pursued, and despatched. great numbers of the fugitives destroyed. The close of the day gave some advantage to the flying, but the light of the moon was sufficient to enable the pursuers to add to their previous captures many elephants and camels, and a considerable quantity of baggage. The loss of the English in killed and wounded amounted to three hundred and forty-six. The enemy suffered dreadfully, and General Wellesley declared his belief that, with one hour more of daylight, not a man would have escaped.

After this signal victory, General Wellesley determined to proceed to the siege of Gawil-Both divisions of the army accordingly marched on the 5th of December, and arrived at Ellichpore on the same day: here they

the wounded.

Wellesley :- "The fort of Gawilghur is situ- to breach the outer fort and third wall; the ated on a range of mountains between the other, composed of two brass twelve-pounders sources of the rivers Poona and Taptee. It and two five-inch howitzers, to clear and stands on a lofty mountain in this range, and destroy the defences on the point of attack. fronts to the south, where the rock is most Wellesley's division constructed a battery on steep; and an outer fort, which covers the a mountain towards the southern gate.

it from the north by the village of Labada. these walls are strongly built, and fortified ...mparts and towers. The communications the south with the inner fort; one to the the breaches in the walls of the outer fort north-west with the outer fort; and one to the were practicable. The party destined for the north with the third wall. The ascent to the main attack from the north was led by Lieufirst is very long and steep, and is practicable tenant-Colonel Kenny; and, to divert the only for men: that to the second is by a road enemy's attention, two attacks were made used for the common communications of the from the southward by troops from General garrison with the countries to the southward; but the road passes round the west side of the nant-Colonel Wallace and Lieutenaut-Colonel fort, and is exposed for a great distance to its Chalmers. About ten in the morning the fire; it is so narrow as to make it impractitude parties advanced, and nearly simultances. ticable to approach regularly by it, and the tancously. rock is scarped on each side. This road also Chalmers arrived at the north-west gate at the leads no further than the gate. The com- moment when the enemy were endeavouring to munication with the northern gate is direct escape through it from the bayonets of the from the village of Labada, and here the assailants under Colonel Kenny. ground is level with that of the fort; but the therefore, the attack had entirely succeeded; read to Labeda leads through the mountains but the wall of the inner fort, in which no for about thirty miles from Ellichpore, and it breach had been made, was yet to be carried. var obvious that the difficulty and labour of After some attempts upon the gate of commoving ordinance and stores to Labada would munication between the inner and outer fort entirely destroyed. Scindia's cavalry made a pied to the southward of the fort; the other to charge on the first battalion of the 6th regi- seize the fortified village of Damergaum, the whole line of the enemy gave way, and were to be passed in the way to Labada. fled in the utmost disorder, abandoning to the These detachments succeeded in performing the army marched from Ellichpore; Colonel Stevenson into the mountains by Damergaum, and General Wellesley towards the southern face of the fort of Gawilghur. From that day till the 12th, when Colonel Stevenson broke ground near Labada, the troops in his division went through a series of exhausting labours not unprecedented in Indian warfare, but rarely paralleled elsewhere. The heavy ordnance and stores were dragged by hand over mountains and through ravines for nearly the whole distance which had to be passed, and this by roads which it was previously necessary for the troops to construct for themselves. At night, on the 12th, Colonel Stevenson halted on the 6th, to provide an hospital for erected two batteries in front of the north face of the fort: one, consisting of two iron eigh-Gawilghur is thus described by General teen pounders and three iron twelve-pounders, consists of one complete inner fort, which On the same night the troops of General inner to the north-west and north. The outer brass twelve-pounders were here mounted; fort has a third wall, which covers the approach | two iron ones were to have been added, but no exertions of the troops could get them into their places.

All the batteries opened their fire on the th the fort are through three gates: one to morning of the 13th, and on the 14th, at night, Wellesley's division, commanded by Lieute-The detachment under Colonel Notwith-tanding the objections existing practicable to escalade. Ladders were brought, results the last-mentioned route, it was re-by which Captain Campbell and the light infantry of the King's 94th ascended: by them [confidence in the simple promise of the head fantry of the King's 19th ascended; by them the gates were opened to the storming party, and the fort was in the British postession. This acquisition was made with comparatively solemn securities of any native sovereign This acquisition was made with comparatively within the country. The general terms in which the cessions were made were thus total amount was one hundred and twenty-six accounted for by General Wellesley; "The killed and wounded. The garrison was numerous and well armed; wast numbers of them were killed, particularly at the different gates. Much ordunate and many stands of English arms were found within the fort. The killedar posing of them hereafter, in such manner as was a Baipoot of eminent brayery, but whose you may think proper." Besides the cessions arms were found within the loft. The killadar posing of them hereafter, in such manner as was a Rajpoot of eminent bravery, but whose judgment seems to have been so greatly inferior to his courage that he had been unable quished all claims on certain old possessions of to frame any regular plan for defending the inner wall. He was aided by another Rajpoot, Beni Singh, bold and intropid as himself; but various proportions. At first the rajah received the bravery of the leaders does not seem to only a fifth: the encroaching spirit of Mahratta have about the proposition of the leaders does not seem to only a fifth: the encroaching spirit of Mahratta bear charged by those whem they come collected by the control of the leaders does not seem to only a fifth: the encroaching spirit of Mahratta have been shared by those whom they compolicy soon increased his share to a fourth. It manded. Little of their spirit was displayed then became half, by treaty, and latterly four-by the garrison. The two Rajpoot commanders fifths, by exaction and violence. By the treaty appear to have considered the fall of the place this partition, with all its tendency to throw as inevitable, and to have resolved not to sur-the whole into the hands of the Mahratta vive the event. Their bodies were found prince, came to an end, and the frontier of the among a heap of clain; a more fearful evidence hizam was carried forward to the Wurda river. of the determined spirit in which they had The ministers of the rajah were desirous of the acted was afforded by the discovery, that, in invertion of an article confirming all grants and conformity with the feeling of their country, that, in the conformity with the feeling of their country, treaties made heretofore by the nizam and they had doomed their wives and daughters to become sharers in the fate which they scorned that he could not consent to confirm that of been imperfectly performed. A few of the confirmation, he proposed the mediation and women only were dead; the rest, some of arbitration of the British, and a claim upon its whom had received several wounds, survived justice, as the best security that the rajah to afford exercise to the humane feelings of could have for his demands upon the other the canonicros. It is scarcely necessary to powers; and the proposal being accented, an the conquerors. It is scarcely necessary to powers; and the proposal being accepted, an add, that General Wellesley directed all at- article was framed, binding the Company's tention and respect to be shown them.

The lattle of Argaum and the capture of duties. The comment of General Wellesley Gawilghur impressed the confederate chiefupon this part of the negotiation is full of tains with a sense of the necessity of quickeninstruction. "It appears to me," says he,

3 oved, and the confederacy against the British government was deprived of an im- Scindia agreed to give up, in perpetual reveportant limb. The treaty was duly ratified reignty, the forts of Baroach and Abmedaug-by the rajah of Berar, and also by the governor-gur, and the territories depending upon them.

general. The secession of the rajah of Berar probably determined Scindia to seek peace with perty; but into the land thus reserved to him, more carnestness and sincerity than he had be was never to introduce any troops to collect heretofore displayed. Jeswant Rao Ghoreputrevenue, or under any pretence whatever, my and Naroo Punt had remained in the Further, Scindia renounced for ever all claims British camp, and on the 23rd of December of every description upon the British govern-they were joined there by two of Scindia's ment and their allies, the nizam, the peishwa, ministers, named Eitul Punt and Havel Nyn, and the guicowar; he agreed to confirm the with the declared object of concluding a peace. The ordinary course of Mahratta diplomacy with the rajahs and others previously his might, however, have been pursued, but for the extraordinary decision of General Welley. the extraordinary decision of General Welles- to certain lands in Malwa as formerly exist-

Besides the districts already described, gur, and the territories depending upon them, except to much of the territory dependent on the latter as formed part of his family proloy; and the result of his firmness was, that on the 30th a trenty was signed, which, like the arbitration of the Company; to relinquish that with the rajah of Berar, was declared to be with the Company and its allies, the latter not being named, and the cessions to be made to the allied powers generally. Those cessions Frenchmen and other foreigners, was the same be admitted, if he chose, to the general defensive alliance subsisting between the Company and its allies; and in the event of his consenting within two months to become a party to it, the Company engaged to furnish a force, for the defence of his territories, of six battalions of infantry, with their complement of ordnance and artillery, and usual equipments; but no pecuniary payment or further territorial cession was to be made on this account; the expense of the force was to be defrayed out of the revenue of the lands ceded by other articles of the treaty. If Scindia should decline to become a party to the general defensive alliance and receive a British force, the refusal was not to affect any other stipulations of the treaty. The exemption of Scindiafrom any additional charge on account of the British, should he consent to receive such a protection, was one of the most extraordinary, but, at the same time, one of the most judicious points of arrangement exhibited in the treaty. The reasons operating on the mind of the British negotiator, and tending to its adoption, are thus stated by himself in addressing the governor-general:— "In the course of this war, Scindia's power, reputation, and military resources have been greatly diminished, while his rival, Holkar, after having recovered the possessions of his family by his treaty of peace with Scindia, remains with undiminished power and increased reputation. Comparatively with those are much greater than they were previous to the war; and I have but little doubt that the hiredars there. contest between those chiefs will be revived. This would be a matter of but little consesequence to the British government, if the parties were so equal in point of strength, not think probable, his government will, by soveral of his officers—if officers they may be degrees, become dependent upon that of his rival. Under these circumstances, and particularly as I was aware of your excellency's determination to support the peace, and the relative situation in which it should leave the different powers in the manner in which that had been established by the exercise of the force of the British government, I thought it expedient to hold forth to Scindia an option of becoming a party of the general defensive allistic ance; and, as a further inducement to him to ance; and, as a further inducement to him to no further diminution of his revenue. I sion no further diminution of his revenue. I the conviction that Scindia would not agree to that treaty, to engage that the assistment by was induced to make this last engagement by was induced to make this last engagement by the treaty of general defensive alliance, although the death of Dhoondia Wangh, a preceding adventurer, whose carer transfers and truely abridged by General Welleder, Although the death of Dhoondia Wangh, a turely abridged by General Welleder, Although the death of Dhoondia Wangh, a turely abridged by General Welleder, Although the death of Dhoondia Wangh, a devotee, and exhibited the new adventurer found from eastern creditive statistics of a devotee, and exhibited the conviction that Scindia would not agree to which the death of Dhoondia Wangh, a preceding adventurer, whose carer transfers and turely abridged by General Welleder, Although the death of Dhoondia Wangh, a devotee, and exhibited the new adventurer found from eastern creditive statistics of a devotee, and exhibited the careful of the preceding adventurer, whose carer transfers are transfers. the treaty of general defensive allience, although which, however extraording desired; is as that in the treaty with the rajah of Berar. his ministers proposed that he should unite Accredited ministers from the two states were himself more closely with the Company, if he to be reciprocally received. Scindia was to were to be obliged to pay for the assistance which he should receive, and that if he does agree to that treaty, the peace of India is secured as far as it can be by human means. I have every reason to believe also, that when Scindia shall wind up his affairs at the end of the war, he will not have a disposable clear revenue such as the British government would require to pay the expenses of the force which might be given to him."

It thus appears that there was reason to suspect that Scindia could not have paid for a subsidiary force had he been disposed, and that, if he had possessed the power of paying, he would have been unwilling to pay. important to uphold him against Holkar, and to attach him, if possible, to the British confederacy--so important, that with reference to the fact that the Euglish acquired by the treaty large territorial cessions, and in consideration of this advantage, it was worth while to afford to Scindia the assistance of the British force without demanding more. Such were the views of General Wellesley, and they were justified by the circumstances under which they were formed.

The day on which the negotiations with Scindia were brought to a termination was distinguished by an event of a different character, but one calculated to promote the interests of peace and order. General Campbell, with a force previously employed in defence of the nizam's territories, had been despatched of Scindia, his power and his military resources into the south Mahratta country to check some suspicious indications on the part of the jag-On the 27th of December he received at Woodasoory information that a party of Mahratta plunderers, amounting to about ten thousand horse, with some pindaries on foot, had passed the Kistna at the Dharoor resources, and abilities, as to render the event of Ghaut, and were proceeding towards Moodiathe contest doubtful. But Holkar is certainly, noor. General Campbell marched on the folat this moment, superior to Scindia in every lowing morning with his cavalry and flank point of view, and the consequence of leaving companies lightly equipped, and on the 29th the latter to his own means must be that he will reached Jallyhall, when a party of marauding fall an easy prey to Holkar; or if he should horse sent to watch his motions were surprised. endeavour to avoid the contest, which I do and their chief, a notorious plunderer, with not think probable, his government will, by several of his officers—if officers they may be overy outward net which men can paramal, say that it differed little from that of other At Jallyhall General Campbell heard that this parts of India under native government or native robber had pitched his camp between Doodyhall and Moodianoor, with the intention tury we find the province overrun by two of intercepting the British convoys and carrying his depredations beyond the Toombuddra. had collected around him, and to disperse the tribute, rest. Two thousand of the enemy were killed, had led to the work of plunder and devastation. His banner, on the day of his defeat, was folpressed with few scruples as to its character when tested by the principles of morality, or the degree of estimation in which it must be regarded by men trained in European modes appointments seemed to indicate him to be a person above the common rank, was killed; the remaining three escaped by the help of peishwa, and the conclusion of the treaty of good horses and their own discretion, which Bassein, by changing the position of the British prompted them to depart at an early period of government, effected a change in its deter-engagement. The whole of the free mination. The occupation of Bundlecund, in y thousand bullocks, were taken. Only reen wounded. The flank companies of the ing's 83rd, after marching thirty miles, came up with the cavalry, and had their full share in the attack upon this horde of plunderers.

Among the objects embraced by the governor-general's comprehensive plan of warfare was the occupation of Bundlecund. This design was prosecuted during the progress of the important operations which have been narrated, but was not entirely completed until after the conclusion of peace with the rajah of Berar The peishwa had certain claims and Scindia. on Bundlecund, and it was as his ally that the English, in the first instance, appeared there. More than seventy years before the occurrence of the transactions under review, a Hindoo prince of Bundlecund, named Chitoor Sal, being hard pressed by a Rajpoot enemy, solicited the aid of the peishwa. It was promptly human desire, he had yet something to ask for granted, and so highly was the service apprehimself. It was not a cell, where he might ciated by Chitoor Sal, that he adopted the pass his days in solitary meditation, nor a sum peishwa as a son, and on his death left him an of money to be disbursed in charitable giftsequal share of his dominions with two sons, it was a jaghire in the Doah, suitable, not to whose claims to the title were founded in his profession, but to "his rank and station," not regarded as remarkable in countries where nature. This was the origin of the peishwa's religion, though extending its control to almost right. It is unnecessary to pursue the history overy outward act which men can perform, of Bundlecund minutely-it will be enough to chiefs, named Ali Bahaudur and Himmut Bahaudur, the former an illegitimate scion of the The British commander thereupon marched on house of the peishwa, the latter a soldier of the enemy on the evening of the 20th of De- fortune, little scrupulous as to modes of obcomber, and at four o'clock on the morning of taining its favour, though distinguished for his the 30th learned that he was within six miles religious attainments, and holding high rank of those whom he sought, and that they were in one of those associations which open to entirely ignorant of his approach. At dawn fanaticism means for gratifying spiritual pride, of day he came upon them, and pushed his and to imposture opportunity for profitable cavalry into the centre of their camp with little deception. He was a gossain. Ali Bahaudur opposition. An hour sufficed to destroy part acknowledged the paramount authority of the of the band which the sham Dhoondia Waugh | peishwa, and owned his own liability to render but which, according to Oriental fashion, he never paid. His death left the and upwards of one thousand wounded or made authority of Himmut Bahaudur predominant; prisoners; the remainder threw down their but that pious person not feeling quite secure arms and fled. Among the prisoners was the in his authority, and thinking that a jaghire venerable facquir, who, underborrowed plumes, under a power able to protect its dependants was preferable to the possession of nominal sovereignty without the means of maintaining lowed by four Frenchmen, who, it seems, in it, made a tender of the province of Bundle-the search for military employment, were opwas made to Mr. Henry Wellesley while holding the office of lieutenant-governor of the ceded provinces. It was declined on the obvious and honourable ground that it could not of thought. One of these, whose dress and be accepted without violating the rights of the peishwa.

The capture of Poona, the flight of the ies baggage and bazaars, and upwards of the name and on the behalf of the peishwa, was consistent with justice, while, at the same men in the English force were killed and time, it was undoubtedly expedient, with a view to prevent its falling into the hands of the confederated chiefs. Mr. Mercer, a medical officer, who had been secretary to Mr. Henry Wellesley, was accordingly despatched to Illalabad, to confer with an agent of Himmut Bahaudur, and terms for the co-operation of that personage were arranged. The gossain, it appeared, had a relative who had been engaged in the conspiracy of Vizier Ali, and on that account was kept prisoner at Lucknow. His liberation was demanded by Himmut Bahaudur, and the British government undertook to solicit the vizier to grant it, on condition of the party thus favoured giving security for his future good conduct. Thus much did the holy man stipulate for his relation; but, albeit his vows should have weaned him from any aspirations after the ordinary objects of of twenty lacs of rupees for the support of a amounting to five thousand, should, during the body of troops which this despiser of carthly war, be maintained by the British government good proposed to keep at his command. In for the service of the state of Poona, two consideration of this arrangement, the troops thousand of whom were to serve with the were to be always prepared to obey the orders peishwa, and three thousand with the British of the British government. These terms were army in the field. The sixth related to the granted, the progress of the negotiation being cessions to be made in consideration of the facilitated by another carried on with the countries relinquished by the Company under peishwa for the cession to the British govern- the first and second articles, and of the addiment of territory in Bundlecund in place of tional expense incurred by them under others. other cessions made by the treaty of Bassein.

formed near Illalabad, under Lieutenant namely, nineteen lacs sixteen thousand rupees, Colonel Powell, shortly afterwards entered was to be transferred to the Company; a the country, and was joined at Teroa by further tract of country, yielding fifty thousand Himmut Bahaudur, at the head of eight rupees, was to be bestowed, in consideration thousand irregular infantry, about four thought of the high value of the country restored in sand horse, three regular battalions commanded by a European officer, and twenty-five pieces sums of seven lacs and a half, five lacs, and of ordnance. On arriving at the river Cane, which flows through Bundlecund and falls into the Jumna a little below the town of Corah, they found posted on the opposite side the army of Shumsheer Bahaudur, son of Ali Bahaudur, who, like those by whom he was confronted, professed to act in the name of the the cessions in Bundlecund was thus thirty-six peishwa. Having reduced several forts in the lacs sixteen thousand rupees. By the seventh vicinity, and established the British authority between the Jumna and the Cane, Colonel Powell crossed the latter river. A series of contiguous to the British possessions, and desultory warfare and indecisive negotiation followed. The British authority continued, in | the mean time, to be extended. Shumsheer Bahaudur found great difficulty in prevailing on himself to submit, although submission was obviously inevitable; but an offer to settle on him and his family an annual sum of four lacs of rupees brought him to the English camp. His submission was speedily followed by the surrender of all the forts in Bundlecund held by his adherents,

Mention has been made of a negotiation with the peishwa, having for its object an exchange of a portion of the cessions made under the treaty of Bassein. It ended in the formation of eight supplemental articles to that treaty, by the first of which certain territories in the Carnatic, yielding a revenue of sixteen lacs, were restored to the peishwa. By the second, the Company's government renounced a portion of territory in Guzerat, yielding three lacs sixteen thousand rupees. The third provided for the addition to the Poona subsidiary force of a regiment of native cavalry, of the same strength and complement as the cavalry regiment belonging to the Hyderabad subsidiary force. The fourth Hyderabad subsidiary force. The fourth annulled the fifteenth article of the treaty, which regulated the amount of force to be brought into the field by the peishwa in case six thousand infantry. The fifth article pro- conduct is invariably governed on the land.

and an assignment of revenue in Bundleound vided that a corps of Mahratta cavalry, Territory in Bundlecund producing a revenue A British detachment which had been equal to that ceded in the Carnatic and Guzerat, Guzerat, and cessions to the amount of separate four lacs, to meet the expense of the cavalry regiment added to the subsidiary force, that of maintaining the Mahratta corps of horse, and the extraordinary expenses of putting down resistance in Bundlecund and establishing the British authority there. The total value of article, the whole of these cessions were to be taken from those parts of Bundlecund most most convenient for the Company's occupation. The eighth article related to the territory restored in Guzerat, and, after reciting that such territory was particularly valuable to the Company, by reason of its proximity to the city of Surat, in the prosperity of which the British government entertained an auxious concern, it provided that the territories referred to should be so managed and governed at all times by the Mahratta authorities, as to conduce to the convenience of Surat, by attention to the rules of good neighbourhood, and the promotion of amicable and commercial intercourse between the inhabitants on both sides. It was further provided, that as the sovereignty of the river Taptee belonged to the British government, the Mahratta authority in the restored territory should have no right or concern whatever in the wreck of any vessel that might be cast upon any part of the country bordering on the river, but should be bound, in the event of any wreck taking place, to render the vessel all practicable aid, for which the parties assisting were to be entitled to receive, from the owners of the wreck, just and reasonable compensation. This last article was not unnecessary. Even in countries where higher principles of action than prevail among the Mahrattas are professed, the frag-ments of property that have survived the of war, and fixed it at four thousand cavalry destruction occasioned by tempest or accident and three thousand infantry, with a due pro-portion of ordnance and military stores; this was a considerable reduction from the former amount, which was ten thousand cavalry and

On the remainder of the supplemental articles that before the remaining ships could be little observation is necessary. The exchanges brought up they stood away to the castward of territory were convenient to both parties under all the sail they could set. The English interested in them. The British government commander made signal for a general chase, obtained territory in a quarter where it was and the enemy was pursued for two hours, very desirable to possess it. The poishwa when Commodoro Danco fearing that he might received back a country from which he would be carried too far out of his course, and with realize a revenue, in exchange for one from reference to the great value of the ships and which he had never derived any; while Bundle- cargoes (estimated at eight millions), deemed ound, by being placed under the authority of it prudent to discontinue further attempts the Company, was relieved from the anarchical to overtake the frighted foe. Had circumstate which had long prevailed, and placed in stances permitted, there can be no doubt that circumstances to partake of the good order those who had so bravely commenced would and prosperity which characterize the British have brought the affair to a worthy concludominions in India, as compared with those sion.

under native governments. events in India must now be permitted, for the purpose of noticing a naval action of extraordinary brilliancy, in which the Company's ships, unnided by any vessels of war, signally sustained the honour of Great Britain in the Indian seas. A fleet from Canton had been British army by land. The opening afforded despatched from that place on the 31st for Scindia's accession to the general defensive January, 1804, under the care of Captain alliance was improved by the despatch of Cap-Dance, who commanded one of the ships tain Malcolm to the camp of that chieftain, named the Earl Camden, and who was selected for the charge assigned to him as being the senior commander. On the morning of the object. After encountering the usual amount of difficulty interposed by Mahratta habits of 14th of February four strange sail were delay and dissimulation, he succeeded, and on discerned. It was subsequently ascertained that they consisted of a ship of eighty-four signed. It consisted of sixteen articles. The guns, two heavy frigates, and a corvette of first contained an ordinary declaration of twenty-eight guns. At daybreak on the 15th, ships which were discorned on the prothe ships which were discorned on the preceding day were observed lying to, about three miles to windward of the English fleet, The merchantmen hoisted their colours and offered battle if the strangers chose to come The four ships immediately hoisted oisted Batavian colours. They formed a squadron which had been despatched under Company. By the third, Scindia was to re-Admiral Linois to the Indian seas on the ceive a subsidiary force of not less than six recommendement of hostilities between the thousand infantry, duly provided with artillery English and Evench after the brief passes of and proposly equipped and by the fourth English and French after the brief peace of Amiens. The enemy evincing no alacrity in accepting the invitation of the British commander, the latter formed in order of sailing and stoored his course. The enemy then of supplies for the forces of the Company or filled their sails and edged down towards the of Scindia when in the territories of each English, with the obvious intention of cutting off their rear. As soon as this was perceived, Commodore Dance made the signal to tack and bear down. The manœuvre was performed with great precision, and the gallant merchant-stated generally to be "services of importmen stood towards the enemy under a press anco"—a description illustrated by enumeratof sail, and forthwith opened their fire on the headmost ships. The Royal George, commanded by Captain Timins, was the leading The seventh article extended and rendered ship of the English line, and was carried into more stringent the provision of the former action in admirable style. The Ganges, Captain Moffatt, was the next, and this was The change was made on the suggestion of the followed by the commodore's ship. The fire of governor-general.

An event so honourable to the maritime A brief digression from the progress of service of the East-India Company could not be passed in silence without injustice to that service, and to the country to which it was an ornament and a safeguard. The narrative must now return to the course of negotiation consequent on the splendid success of the parties bound themselves to concert and prosecute measures of defence in case of either being attacked, the expression of this mutual obligation being accompanied by a long explanation declaring that the British government would never permit any power or state to comoclours, and the larger was observed mit any act of unprovoked hostility or aggresy a rear-admiral's flag. In addition to sion against Scindia, but, on his requisition, ships already mentioned was a brig, which would maintain and defend his rights and territories in like manner with those of the and properly equipped; and by the fourth, that prince was exonerated from all additional expense on this account. The fifth article provided for the mutual exemption from duties, other, and for securing to the officers of the two states due respect and consideration. The sixth declared the purposes for which the subsidiary force was to be employed, which were ing a few instances of similar character to those referred to in other subsidiary treaties. treaty against the employment of foreigners. By the former treaty, these three had such an effect on the enemy, Scindia was restrained from taking into his service or retaining therein any Frenchman, ment to use its endeavours to prevent any acts or the subject of any European or American power the government of which might be at war with Great Britain. The amended article introduced into the new treaty contained no reference to the contingency of war; Scindia was never to employ in his service or permit to remain in his dominions any European or American whatever, without the consent of the British government. In return, the British government undertook never to employ or sanction the residence within its dominions of any person guilty of crimes or hostility against Scindia. The eighth article restrained Scindia from negotiating with any principal states or powers without giving notice to the Company's government and entering into consultation with them. On the other hand, the Company's government declared on their part that they would "have with regard to Scindia. For this reason, the no manner of concern with any of the Maharajah's relations, dependants, military chiefs, or servants, with respect to whom the Maha-lother purposes, would be unnecessary. rajah" was admitted to be "absolute." British government was never to afford "encouragement, support, or protection to " any of the parties above enumerated "who might eventually act in opposition to the Maharajah's authority, but, on the contrary," on being required, were "to aid and assist to punish and reduce all such offenders to obedience," and no officer of the Company was to interfere in the internal affairs of Scindia's government.

The ninth article bound Scindia to refrain from entering into hostilities with any state in alliance with the Company, and to submit all disputes with any such states to its arbitration. The tenth and eleventh regulated the amount of force to be furnished by each party in the event of their being engaged in war with any other power, and provided for the accumulation of stores. The twelfth provided for the equal partition of conquests made in any such war, on condition that each party should have fulfilled the stipulations of the treaty. The thirteenth related to points of detail connected with the employment of the subsidiary force, and of other forces of the Company, in the event of disturbances. The fourteenth restricted both parties from interfering with the Company agreed to exert their influence to latter to all the possessions which he held formed with the chief last mentioned. either by written or unwritten authority, bajee Inglia was a powerful servant of Scindia, provided the written authority, if any, who had been appointed to supersede the possessions held done by Scindia or his ancestors, under the authority of the peishwa, from being sub-verted; provided, however, the maintenance of such acts should be consistent with the honour and dignity of the peishwa and the stipulations of the treaty of peace. of such an engagement, so qualified, is very easily appreciated. The sixteenth article related to the negotiation and ratification of the treaty, and to the delivery of the ratified

From causes which will hereafter appear, the provisions of this treaty became practically of no importance; but a just estimate of the policy then pursued in India could not have been formed without a full exposition of the views entertained and the measures adopted principal parts of the treaty have been exhibited with a degree of care which, for

Allusion has been made to treaties concluded with certain minor chiefs. These were the rajahs of Bhurtpore, Jodepore, Jeypoor, Machery, and Bhoondee, the rana of Gohud, and Ambajee Inglia. The territories of the whole lay in the region of the Jumna; all the treaties were concluded by General Lake; and, in most instances, the friendly desires of the native princes received an impulse from the result of the battle of Laswaree. The first to tender his adherence was the rajah of Bhurtpore, with whom a treaty was, in consequence, concluded, stipulating perpetual friendship and alliance, binding the British government not to interfere in the concerns of the rajah, nor to exact tribute of him, and engaging each party to co-operate in defending the territories of the other. By the treaty with the rajah of Machery, that chief agreed to refer his disputes for settlement to the Company's government, and to defray the charge of aid afforded him for the defence of his dominions at the same rate as other chiefs of Hindostan. The rajah of Jeypoor made similar engagements, and further agreed to act, in time of war, "though in reality master of his own army," agreeably to the advice of tributaries of the other. By the fifteenth the the British commander employed with his He also engaged not to entertain in troops. maintain the observance of such ceremonies his service, or in any manner give admission and customs as should appear to be fixed in to any European without the consent of the communicating between the peishwa and Company's government. The treaty with the Scindia, and to recognize the right of the rajah of Jodepore corresponded with that who had been appointed to supersede the should not contravene the provisions of the authority of Perron, and whose appointment treaty, and that all disputes relating to led to the precipitate departure of that person by unwritten authority from the spot where he had contemplated the should be referred to the arbitration of formation of an independent state. Part of the British government. In this case, there- the territories which Ambajee had been authofore, the Company only agreed to recog-rized to administer formed the ancient possesnize that which themselves should determine sions of the house of Gohud, which had been to be right. The article concluded with an conquered by Scindia some years before. Amengagement on the part of the British govern-bajee made overtures to the British government, offering to detach himself from the service of Scindia and become a tributary to them. It was desirable to afford him encouragement, and the difficulty of reconciling his claims with those of the rana of Gohud was got over by dividing the country, and assigning the independent possession of part to Ambajee, in consideration of his surrendering the right of administering the whole. negotiation with this view was opened, and, after much evasion, a treaty concluded by which Ambajee agreed to surrender all the territory north of Gwalior, together with the fortress of that name, the British government guaranteeing to Ambajce the remainder of the territory which had been under his management. A force was despatched to take possession of the fortress, and Ambajee readily gave an order for its delivery. The commandant, however, refused to obey the instructions of his master, and measures were taken for the reduction of the place by force. When a breach had been effected the garrison offered to surrender in consideration of the sum of fifty thousand rupees. This being refused, they demanded the value of certain stores as the price of submission, which being granted, possession of the fort was obtained by the English.

By the treaty with the rana of Gohud, Gwalior was ceded to the Company, by whom the territories restored to her under the arrangement with Ambajee were guaranteed. The rana was to subsidize a British force of three battalions of infantry, and the payment was fixed at seventy-five thousand rupees per month.

For the emperor, whose person the success of the campaign had transferred into English keeping, a munificent provision was made, an adequate degree of state provided. He attained.

was not invested with any actual power, and indeed no human agency could have restored the Mahometan empire to respectability. It belonged to an age which had passed, and it was better for the peace and happiness of India that no attempt should be made to revive it.

The conclusion of peace with Scindia and the rajah of Berar suggests the inquiry how far the objects proposed by the governorgeneral at the commencement of hostilities had been effected? A more convenient opportunity will be found for inquiring whether the pursuit of these objects was consistent with wisdom and justice—all that will be attempted here will be a very brief notice of what was proposed as compared with what was performed. We are not left to conjecture what were the objects proposed by the governor-general, nor whether he had accurately defined them to himself. He placed them on record in a letter of instruction addressed to the commander-inchief several weeks before a blow was struck. They were, first, the destruction of the French state on the banks of the Jumna, with all its military resources; secondly, the extension of the Company's frontier to the Jumna, with the possession of Agra, Delhi, and a sufficient chain of forts on its banks; thirdly, the possession of the nominal authority of the Mogul; fourthly, the establishment of alliances with petty chiefs southward and westward of the Jumna, from Jyenaghur to Bundlecund: fifthly, the annexation of Bundlecund to the Company's dominions. Such were the objects, the attainment of which, in the estimation of the governor-general, would constitute "the most prosperous issue of a war with Scindia and the rajah of Berar on the northwestern frontier of Hindostan"—and they were

CHAPTER XIX.

CEYLON PLACED UNDER THE DIRECT GOVERNMENT OF THE CROWN.—WAR WITH THE CAN-DIANS.—SURRENDER OF AN ENGLISH DETACHMENT, AND MASSACRE OF THE PRISONERS.— SUBSEQUENT EVENTS.—REMARKS BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

THE Dutch settlements on the island of Ceylon had fallen into the hands of the English during the time that Lord Hobart exercised the government of Madras. For a short period they formed an appendage to that presidency; but as soon as the ministry at home found leisure to reflect on the subject, it was deemed inexpedient that Ceylon should continue under the administration of the East-India Company. It was accordingly placed under the direct administration of the Crown, and a governor appointed, who was to be altogether independent of the authority which was paramount over all the British possessions on the Indian continent. It would be idle to waste time in conjecturing the causes of this mistaken. All parties when in opposition declaim against the increase of ministerial patronage—all parties when in office labour to add to its extent, till checked by some strong intimation that they have reached the verge of parliamentary forbearance. It is rare indeed that such check is interposed, as those from whom it should come are often too much interested, either for themselves or their friends, to impose any limit on a privilege from which they hope to benefit.

and a governor appointed, who was to be altogether independent of the authority which was paramount over all the British possessions on the Indian continent. It would be idle to waste time in conjecturing the causes of this change. The motives are too obvious to be of which was to transfer the patronage of India | Colombo with Trincomalec. to that ministry. Mr. Dundas was then in an unqualified denial, the king expressing his opposition—when the Ceylon question was to decided aversion to any intercourse between be disposed of he was a cabinet minister.

dom of Candy-a state of some extent and patched at vast expense, General M Dowall power. Previously to the acquisition of the being attended to the frontier by a large force, Dutch settlements in Ceylon, more than one and bearing magnificent presents.

Attempt had been made by the English to establish amicable relations with the sovereign which, as they were marked by no circumof this state, but without success. An over- stances of interest and led to no results, may be ture from the government of Madras, after passed over. The hostile designs of the court the conquest, was not more fortunate in its of Candy were, however, placed beyond doubt by results; and on the arrival of Mr. North, the the warlike preparations reported to be in profirst governor appointed by the crown, not gress in the country, and by repeated acts of only were the relations of Caudy to the British aggression upon British subjects. One of these government entirely unsettled, but the country | called forth a remonstrance from the English itself was in a state of confusion, originating governor. A number of bullocks, laden with in the death of the king, and the elevation of areka-nuts, belonging to persons who were a usurper in his place, to the exclusion of the peaceably pursuing an ordinary branch of traffic, rightful claimant of the throne. This had were seized and confiscated. The answer to the been effected through the intrigues of a man representations of the British government pronamed Pelime Talauve, who held the office of mised restitution; but the fulfilment of the prochief adigur, or first minister. The person misewas constantly evaded under some frivolous whom he had placed on the throne was of low pretence, and no redress was obtained. The extraction, and destitute of talents. These governor now determined on war, and on the circumstances probably constituted his chief 31st of January, 1803, General M Dowall qualifications in the eyes of the ambitious marched from Colombo with a force about two adigur, who intended, in eastern fashion, to thousand strong. A few days later Colonel exercise the power without assuming the title Barbutt marched with a large force from Trinof sovereign. He succeeded in attaining his comalce, and on the 20th of February the two The second adigur retained his allegiance to Mootto Sawmy, the lawful inheritor capital of the country. General M'Dowall's of the throne, and paid the price of his fidelity division had performed a march of a hundred in the forfeiture of his head. The queen and and three miles; that of Colonel Barbutt all the relations of the deceased king were thrown into prison; but, after a time, several, and among them Mootto Sawmy, found means to escape. They claimed protection from the British government, which was granted, but under restrictions which deprived them of all power to disturb the existing government of Candy.

Pelime Talauve was apparently not less dis-posed to seek the aid of the British government, and he is stated to have made some very atrocious proposals for his own aggrandizement, accompanied by conditions which he believed would be acceptable to the English. These were rejected with becoming expressions of indignation; but soon afterwards, from motives which do not very clearly appear, Major-general M'Dowall was dispatched on a mission to the court of Candy. The instructions given to General M'Dowall seem to indicate a desire, on the part of the governor, to establish the British authority in Candy, and to connect it with his government by the tie of a subsidiary alliance. But the first intereffecting any of the objects of the mission, subjects of the king of Candy than for the con-

The answer was his subjects and Europeans. Such was the In the interior of the island was the king- fruit of this mission, which had been des-> thousand strong. A few days later Colonel divisions met before the city of Candy, the had traversed a hundred and forty-two; and though the progress of the invaders was not altogether unopposed, the resistance which they experienced was too inconsiderable to call for notice. On the 21st of February a strong detachment marched into Candy, which they found completely evacuated, and in several places on fire. The great arsenal had been blown up, but a considerable quantity of ammunition, brass cannon, and small arms, was found in various places.

Mootto Sawmy, the lawful claimant of the throne of Candy had been placed under the care of Colonel Barbutt. In consequence of representations from that officer of the disposition of the inhabitants of those parts of Candy with which he was acquainted to receive Mootto Sawmy as their sovereign, it was determined to recognize his title and proclaim him king. On the 4th of March he arrived in the city of Candy, and a convention was concluded, by which the British government agreed to deliver over to him view of business put an end to all hope of that place, and all the possessions belonging to it which were at that time in their occuwhatever they were. General M Dowall's first pation, with certain exceptions, among which request was moderate; that which he asked was included a strip of ground across the Canwas calculated not less for the benefit of the dian territories, of sufficient breadth to form a road from Colombo to Trincomalee. venience of the people under the British go- prince engaged to cede this and the other exvernment—it was for permission to construct cepted portions of territory, and to permit all a road through the king's territories, to connect Malays resident in his kingdom to proceed with their families to the British settlements, | ther trepanned, and returned without delay to from which he was to receive an auxiliary force | head-quarters. In the meantime jungle fover in case he should require it to maintain his had made its appearance in the British force, authority. The deposed king was to have rafe and committed frightful ravages. conduct to Colombo, and a sufficient provision for his maintenance; a general amnesty was with the government, expressing his surprise to be granted, and the English were to be that the governor should incur so much trouble secured certain privileges with regard to the and expense, and proposing an arrangement in trade in cinnamon, the cutting of wood in the which himself, as might be expected, waste be Caudian forests, and the surveying of rivers the party chiefly benefited. These exertures and water-courses with a view to rendering received a favourable answer, and they were them navigable for the purposes of trade and followed by the appearance at Candy of the the mutual advantage of both countries, which person holding the effice of eccoud adigur, or object the king was to promote by his assist-ininister, carrying a firelock and match wrapance, "In this matter," says a narrator of ped in white muslin—"as an emblem of peace," these proceedings, "arrangements were made says the historian—perhaps also as an emblem with the most sincere cordiality between the of purity. This personage was forthwith ad-British government and Mootto Sawmy." But mitted to a conference with General M'Dowall, neither the sincerity nor the cordiality withheld and the rights, which a few days before had the British government from concluding, within a few days afterwards, other arrangements utterly at variance with the former, recent views of convenience. The retvants of and depriving Mootto Sawmy of nearly all Mootto Sawmy's rival were not less ready to that had been professedly secured to him. is said that this prince, although well received by the inhabitants of the frontier, met with by the inhabitants of the frontier, more than it was agreed that from a final and that he remained in his palace at Candy pageant king should be given up to the English, and that he remained in his palace at Candy pageant king should be given up to the English, and the adjour himself invested with supreme and the adjour himself invested with supreme that he should pay ansurrounded only by his own domestics, and supported by no other power but that of the British army. If this be true, it shows the extreme imprudence with which the engagement had been formed; but as it does not appear that Mootto Sawmy himself had misled the British government, as to the extent of his own popularity, it is difficult to see upon what grounds of justice or good faith he could be sacrificed, to repair an error arising out of the credulity and precipitancy of others. Pelimo Talauvo had never ceased to pursue his trade of intrigue: he "had the effrontery," ays Mr. Cordiner, "to carry on a decoifful sick, whose removal was impracticable, orrespondence, under the mask of friendship, Pelime Talauve now expressed a demail the companies of the British forces "he admitted to an audience of the British forces" with the commander of the British forces," and that commander, he might have added, had the weakness to be deceived by him. "No art," says the historian, "was left untried which might either dupe or cajole our government"-and Polime Talauve had no reason to complain of want of success. He promised to betray his puppet master to the lenglish, and requested the despatch of two strong detachments by different routes to the place where the prince was to be seized. The required detachments marched, and had proceeded only a few miles before both were subjected to a heavy fire from every direction: they continued, however, to move on. Their route lay over took to negotiate with that prince, but was roads of the worst possible description, and provented by an attack of fever, which in a was pursued under the annoyances of which few days terminated his life. Pelime Talauve they had received so early a specimen. They expressed great uneasiness at this, lest it might at length arrived at the place where the king protract the execution of the articles of the was to have been found, but he had not treaty; to ever which inconvenience he carthought fit to await their approach. The independent requested that General M'Dowall might fatigable Pelime Talauve wished to draw them be sent to Candy to perform the task which

Pelimo Talauvo continued to correspond been rolemnly recured to Mootto Sawmy, were summarily cut down, in conformity with more recent views of convenience. The retvants of sacrifice the claims of their master than were the English to surrender there of their ally. authority in Candy; that he should pay annually a sum of thirty thousand rupees to Mootto Sawmy, who was to hold the semblance of a court at Jaffnapatam; that certain certions should be made to the English, differing little from those stipulated in the agreement with Mootto Sawmy, and that a constion of arms should immediately take place. Soon after this arrangement General M'Dowall departed for Colombo, leaving in the city of Candy a garrison of seven hundred Malays and three hundred Europeans, besides a great number of

Pelimo Talauvo now expressed a desire to be admitted to an audience of the British governor, for the purpose of arranging a defini-tive treaty of peace. It was about the same time suggested to the governor that his pre-sence in the province of the seven corles, which was to be one of the cessions, might be desirable; he proceeded thither, and there, on the 3rd of May, received Pelime Talauve. The terms which had been agreed upon by General M'Dowall were confirmed by the governor, and apparently little remained to be done but for the English to extricate themselves from the difficulties of their provious engagement with Meette Sawmy. Colonel Barbutt undertook to negotiate with that prince, but was provented by an attack of fover, which in a few days terminated his life. Pelime Talauve forward into fresh snares, but the officer in land been designed for Colonel Barbutt. In command, Colonel Baillie, declined to be fur-accordance with the adigur's wishes, General

M'Dowall marched from Colombo on the 11th dian chiefs was, that he could not part with of May, and arrived at Candy on the 23rd; Mootto Sawmy without orders from Colombo. but being soon seized with fever, he was compelled, on the 1st of June, to quit it for a declaring that if Mootto Sawmy were not given situation more favourable to the restoration of health.

The garrison at Candy was left under the command of Major Davie. At this time the intentions of Pelime Talauve became evident even to the British authorities, who had so long given him credit for sincerity. He made another attempt to entrap the British commander into the despatch of a force to take the person of the fugitive king, but he was not so weak as to fall into the snare. All around was war, notwithstanding the engagements which had been made for its suspension; and the Candians succeeded in dispossessing the English of several strong posts. On the 24th of June they attacked the capital before daybreak. They were repulsed, but soon resumed the attack, and a fire was kept up from both sides till two o'clock, when the British displayed a white flag, and the firing ceased. Articles of capitulation were with little difficulty agreed By them Candy was to be delivered up, with all the stores and ammunition within it; the British troops were to march out with their arms, on the road leading to Trincomalee; Mootto Sawmy was to be permitted to accompany them, and the adigur engaged to protect such sick and wounded as should be unavoidably left, and provide them with provisions and medicines till they could be removed to Colombo or Trincomalee.

At five in the afternoon the British troops, consisting of fourteen European officers, twenty European non-commissioned officers and privates, two hundred and fifty Malays, and a hundred and forty gun-lascars, marched out of Candy, on the road leading to Trincomalee, accompanied by Mootto Sawmy. After advancing a mile and a half, they were compelled to halt for the night: a river was to be crossed which was not fordable, and the party had neither boats nor rafts. In the morning, while endeavouring to provide the means of transit, armed bodies of Candians were observed to gather around them. A party of chiefs, after a time, approached, and informed Major Davie that the king was greatly incensed against the adigur for allowing the garrison to leave Candy; but that if they would deliver up Mootto Sawmy, they should be supplied with boats to cross the river, and receive every assistance on their march. Major Davie, in the proper spirit of a British officer, refused. The offer spirit of a British officer, refused. The offer was repeated some hours afterwards by another party, accompanied by assurances of safety and protection for Mootto Sawmy. Major Davie, on this occasion, is represented to have consulted his officers-as if the question of surrendering the unhappy prince to his enemies were one of doubt. It is to be presumed that were one of doubt. It is to be presumed that the advice which he received was such as became those to whom the British commander him and to prevent the British troops from crossing the river. Major Davie then had recourse to another consultation. How he was advised cannot be known—how he acted is but too certain. He informed Mootto Sawmy that he had no longer power to protect him; and the unfortunate prince, with his relatives and servants, was delivered up to the agents of the king of Candy, or rather of the man who ruled the king. It is said that Mootto Sawmy, on learning his fate, indignantly exclaimed—"Is it possible that the triumphant arms of England can be so humbled as to be awed by the menaces of such cowards as the Candians?"but this appeal to national feeling was vain. Mootto Sawmy was marched to Candy, and there put to death. Two of his relatives shared his fate. Six weeks after his being surrendered, eight of his servants appeared at Trincomalee, who, after being deprived of their noses and ears, had been suffered to depart.

The day of dishonour, on which Mootto Sawmy was abandoned to destruction, passed without the English having been able to effect the passage of the river and without their receiving any assistance for the purpose. On that which followed, a body of Candians having taken post within a hundred yards of the British party, their leader advanced to Major Davie, and intimated that it was the pleasure of the king that the garrison should return to Candy unarmed, and that instant death was the penalty of refusal. The requisition was complied with; and after proceeding a short distance towards Candy, the whole of the British officers and soldiers were murdered, excepting Major Davie and two other officers, who were spared, and a corporal named George Barnsley, who, after being left for dead, recovered and Native officers and men, made his escape. who refused to enter the service of the king of Candy, were despatched in various modes, some of them of extreme barbarity. The sick left in Candy, consisting of a hundred and twenty men belonging to the King's 19th regiment of foot, were all murdered in cold blood as they lay incapable of resistance in the hospital.

Sawmy, they should be supplied with boats to cross the river, and receive every assistance on their march. Major Davie, in the proper spirit of a British officer, refused. The offer was repeated some hours afterwards by another party, accompanied by assurances of safety and protection for Mootto Sawmy. Major Davie, on this occasion, is represented to have consulted his officers—as if the question of surrendering the unhappy prince to his enemies were one of doubt. It is to be presumed that the advice which he received was such as became those to whom the British commander applied for counsel, for his answer to the Can-

propriety of his abandonment of Candy be solemn promises of honourable treatment, open to doubt, that of his subsequent abandon- which would doubtlessly have been observed ment of the unhappy prince, Mootto Sawmy, as strictly as at Candy. Ensign Grant was so is liable to none. Mootto Sawmy had been enfectled by sickness as to be scarcely capable invited from Trincomalco, where he was in of ordinary motion; but his spirit was subdued safety, to Candy, where the English either neither by disease nor the apparently desperate wanted the power to place him on the throne, nature of his situation. He strengthened his or were induced by the arts of Pelime Talauve shelter by bags of rice and such other materials to abstain from using it. They then, with as could be obtained, and resolved to peran extraordinary degree of levity, degraded severe. A tensonable reinforcement, after a Mootto Sawmy from the rank of a king to time, reduced the fearful dispraportion of that of a stipendiary upon the bounty of the force against which he had to contend; and man who hated him, and had already violently another enabled him to bring away in safety deprived him of his rights. This was a great stain upon the honour of the British nation, but one far darker followed in the surrender and provisions in the place. of Mootto Sawmy to certain death. For the Along series of hostilities on a minute scale safety of that prince the faith of the British followed. The King of Candy, emboldened government was pledged, and it was the duty by the success which had attended him, of every man in its service to shed his last surrounded the British pos-essions, and threatdrop of blood in defending him from harm. ened even their capital, Colombo. But his Honour was sacrificed to fear, and the reward army being totally defeated at Hangwell, was worthy of the act. Those who devoted about eighteen miles from that city, by Cap-Mootto Sawmy to destruction thought by the tain Pollock, of the King's 51st regiment, the dishonourable deed to insure safety to them. Candian prince made a precipitate retreat, weakness and perfidy were rewarded by a off the heads of two of his chiefs, who had the miserable death or a more miserable captivity. indiscretion to follow his majesty's example Painful as are the feelings excited by the nar- with so much zeal as to overtake him before rative of the surrender of Candy and the his indignation had found opportunity for subsequent events, the story presents a lesson | vent. not to be forgotten.

comrades under Major Davie, succeeded in Ceylon government were increased by assistmaking his way to a British post called Fort ance from Bengal and Madras. The Candiaus, M Dowall, which was defended by a small driven from the British possessions, continued garrison under Captain Madge. That officer, for some time to harass the frontiers. In the on hearing the corporal's intelligence, deter-spring of 1804 they meditated a general inmined to evacuate the fort and retreat towards vasion of the British dominions, but were Trincomalee. He departed in the night, and anticipated by an attack on their own.

to the relief of Candy, and the enemy thereupon dispersed.

Dumbadenia, demands notice, not from its importance nor the magnitude of the operations carried on before or within it, but from was thus unsatisfactorily terminated. the gallant spirit displayed by a small body of victims of the massacre of Candy remained men, not one of whom was in a condition for unaverged, and the honour of the British name active service. Dumbadenia was a small redoubt, slightly constructed of fascines and earth; its garrison consisted of only fourteen general received of the war was from the on their way to Colombo for the restoration of their health, and twenty-two invalid Malays. It was commanded by an ensign named Grant. The Candians, headed by the second adigur, mustered before it in several thousands, and

But they were disappointed—their and revenged his disappointment by cutting

It would be uninteresting to pursue the The corporal, Barnsley, who had happily history of this war further in detail. The escaped the death which had overtaken his imperfect means of defence possessed by the ing a march of four days was exposed to a the following year the enemy resumed their instant fire from large bodies of Candians. attempts, but were ropulsed. From that time a then fell in with a detachment proceeding there was a suspension of active hostilities, but the relations of the two states were not determined by any treaty or engagement. This The defence of another English post, named state of things has been characterized as "a umbadenia, demands notice, not from its tacit suspension of hostilities." The war, indiscreetly begun and imprudently conducted, unvindicated.

convalescents of the 19th regiment, who were Ceylon Gazette, containing the proclamation of the governor of the island announcing its commencement. A heavy pecuniary demand for the necessary outlay was immediately afterwards made upon Bengal, but it was intimated mustered before it in several thousands, and kept up an incessant fire for several days, the garrison lying sheltered behind a breastwork, and only discharging an occasional shot when the enemy ventured to approach sufficiently but the request being rested principally on the surrender were sent daily accompanied by France and being accompanied by france and the probable and th surrender were sent daily, accompanied by France, and being accompanied by favourable

Ceylon, and the means at the governor's disposal for carrying it on, there was no reason to believe that the want was urgent; and the application was moreover made at a season impracticable for the voyage.

The announcement of the fatal events in Candy opened the real state of affairs in the island. At this time, all the resources of India were required for the efficient prosecution of the Mahratta war. But Ceylon could not be left to ruin; and between the 29th of July, when the danger first became known, and the succeding November, the island was reinforced from India by two detachments of the king's troops, amounting respectively to two hundred and eight-two and one hundred and eighty-seven, by five hundred Bengal volunteers, and three hundred Madras sepoys.

The effects of the separation of Ceylon from the government of India were thus not left for any long period to be conjectured. Almost as soon as the separation was effected the fruits began to appear. The consequences had been foreseen and foretold by the governor-general, but his warnings experienced the fate that usually awaits advice which runs counter to men's prejudices and interests. Prediction "Under the new had now become fact. constitution," said the Marquis Wellesley, "treaties have been concluded and a war has been undertaken by the government of Ceylon without the previous knowledge of the governor-general; the expenses of that war have, however, been supplied in the first instance by the government-general, and the calamities which have attended the progress of the war have occasioned demands for troops from the furnishing them." government-general. Whether the war in Ceyrepresentations of the progress of the war in lon could have been altogether avoided; whether its commencement could have been postponed to a more convenient season; or whether its conduct could have been improved, and an early and honourable peace established upon permanent foundations, are questions which it is neither my present duty nor intention to examine; but it is evident that every arrangement connected with these questions might have been formed with greater advantage under the direct authority of the power which must ultimately furnish the supplies for war and provide the securities of peace. Had the government of Ceylon remained sub-ordinate to this government, the war in that island, if deemed necessary, would have been undertaken after a deliberate preparation of sufficient resources, and after a full consideration of the most effectual means of supplying them. This government could not have been taken by surprise with respect to the actual commencement of the war, or to its result; and an opportunity would have been afforded of apportioning, at an early period of time, to the service in Ceylon such aid as might have appeared, on a just comparison of objects and means, to be compatible with due attention to other branches of the service in India, or to be indispensably necessary for the safety of Ceylon. The independence of Ceylon has placed all these considerations beyond the reach of the governor-general in council, who was unapprized of the approach of war in Ceylon until it had actually commenced, and of the probable demand for considerable reinforcements in Ceylon, until a war on the continent of India had limited the means of proceedings of holkar — colonel monson's disastrous retreat — colonel burn's DEFENCE OF DELHI-BATTLE OF DEEG-SUCCESSES IN THE DECCAN-SIEGE OF BHURTPORE TREATY WITH THE BAJAH—CONDUCT OF SCINDIA—ATTACK ON THE BRITISH RESIDENCY -Holkar's letter to the governor-general—sir arthur wellesley returns to ENGLAND-AMBAJEE INGLIA-WABLIKE PREPARATIONS SUSPENDED-ARRIVAL OF THE MAR-QUIS CORNWALLIS AS GOVERNOR-GENERAL-CHARACTER OF THE MARQUIS WELLESLEY.

CHAPTER XX.

the rajah of Berar did not relieve the British government from all apprehensions of danger from Mahratta enemies, nor allow of the immediate recall of its armies from the Holkar was to have aided those two chiefs against the English, and actually despatched for the purpose a body of troops under a military adventurer known as Ameer Khan; but the commander, hearing of the glorious battle of Assye, became too much alarmed to proceed, and returned to his employer. Holkar participated in the fright of his servant to an extent sufficient to restrain him

THE conclusion of peace with Scindia and | English; but he endeavoured by correspondence to rouse the spirit of the native princes against them. He also plundered the territories of some of the allies and dependents of the British government; and though this was by no means an unequivocal demonstration of enmity, seeing that it is the Mahratta custom to plunder friends and foes with the greatest impartiality, it was justly deemed proper to warn him against a repetition of such acts, and to take measures for defending the territories of the Company and their allies from attacks which there was some reason to apprehend. General Lake accordingly took up a position from taking any decisive steps against the which enabled him to restrain Holkar's predatory operations in the quarter where they General Lake and General Wellesley to comwere most to be apprehended; and also, under | mence hostile operations against Holkar both instructions from the governor-general, ad- in Hindostan and the Deccan. These orders dressed a letter to that chief, expressing the were dated the 16th of April, 1804. General disposition of the British government to leave | Wellesley had some time before received a him in the unmolested exercise of his autho- menacing letter from Holkar, demanding the rity, provided he would abstain from acts of cession of certain provinces in the Deccan as aggression against that government and its the condition of peace; and adding that, in the was required to withdraw his army from the menacing position which it had taken up, to retire within his own territories, and to abstain from exacting tribute from the allies of the Company. Holkar was also invited to send vakeels to the British camp, to make known his wishes and form arrangements for the establishment of relations of friendship. After a considerable time, during which Holkar occupied himself in addressing friendly letters to General Lake, and letters to the surrounding princes filled with denunciations of the nation and government which General Lake represented. vakeels were despatched by him to the British They were, as usual with Mahratta negotiators, unfurnished with powers to conclude any engagement; their function was simply to communicate the demands of their These demands were, that he should be permitted to collect chout according to the custom of his ancestors-a custom which Holkar regarded as too laudable (to say nothing of its profitableness) to be relinquished: that certain possessions formerly held by his family, including twelve pergunnals in the Doab, and a pergunnah in Bundlecund, should be given to him; that the country of Hurriana should be transferred to him; the country then in his possession guaranteed, and a treaty concluded with him on the same terms as with Scindia. As these terms were not proposed with the expectation of their being accepted, it is unnecesgary to discuss their reasonableness or the pro-

iety of putting them forward. They were of they should have been submitted. With reference to a promise formerly given by Holkar, the returned through the territories of the rajah vakeels were asked whether their chief would of Jyenaghur, where he remained for some withdraw his troops from their offensive posiordinary measure of Mahratta candour; it was, that Holkar would not consider the promise Ajmeer had sanctified. To protect the city binding unless the demands which they had of Jyenaghur, General Lake made a detach-made on his behalf should be complied with. ment of three battalions of native infantry, After the conclusion of this conference, the which were placed under the command of vakcels intimated that some relaxation of the Colonel Monson, of the King's 76th regiment. terms might be made. The British commander Their approach disturbed Holkar in the exerreplied by referring to former connections cise of his vocation, and caused him to retiro with Holkar; and requiring, as an indispensa- with some precipitancy to the southward. He ble preliminary to negotiation, the immediate was followed by General Lake, the detachreturn of the chief to his own possessions. It ment under Colonel Monson continuing in would be useless to follow in detail the pro- advance. On the 10th of May, a detachment Free of a negotiation distinguished in nothing was made from the main body for the purpose from others in which Mahrattas are parties; of attacking Tonk Rampoora, a Rajpoot town the regotiation came to an end, as it was eviabout sixty miles from the capital of Jycdent that it must, without any arrangement naghur, in the occupation of Holkar. The being effected; and orders were issued to detachment, consisting of three battalions of

In proof of his amicable intentions, he event of war, though Holkar might be unable to oppose the British artillery in the field, "countries of many coss should be overrun, and plundered and burnt;" that General Lake "should not have leisure to breathe for a moment; and that calamities would fall on lacs of human beings in continued war, by the attacks of" Holkar's "army, which overwhelm like the waves of the sea." One of those admirable military qualities which preeminently distinguished the great commander to whom this letter was addressed, and which has greatly contributed to his brilliant success, was, the habit of leaving nothing to chance, or to a hasty and unpremeditated arrangement, when the opportunity existed of making previous provision to meet coming events. the exercise of this comprehensive prudence, General Wellesley forthwith proceeded to place the troops under his immediate command in a state of equipment for active service, and to reinforce the corps in Guzerat. On receiving orders for the commencement of hostile operations, General Wellesley directed Colonel Murray, commanding the force in that province, to march with the greater part of it for the purpose of co-operating with the commander-in-chief in such manner as circumstances might require. He likewise addressed the resident at Scindia's court, calling for the aid of that chieftain's army in support of the common cause of the allies. Scindia promised to comply, and to adopt the measures suggested by General Wellesley.

Holkar had been at Ajmeer, within the unre rejected, with a natural expression of territories of Scindia-ostensibly for purposes stonishment on the part of General Lake that of devotion, for Hindoo robbers are remarkably devout. His devotions being completed, he time with a considerable body of horse, The answer was explicit far beyond the engaged in a series of predatory occupations, which it may be presumed his recent visit to it had been joined by two bodies of irregular | front and flanks of Colonel Monson's corps. horse, one (already mentioned) under the command of Lieutonaut Lucan, the other commanded by Bappoojee Scindia.

Colonel Murray, after advancing a certain distance towards Onjein, became suddenly alarmed; resolved to retire behind the Mahie river, and actually fell back for the purpose. This retrograde movement gave confidence to Holkar, who, after his retreat, had taken post in Malwa, with the Chumbul river between him and Colonel Monson. This post he now force on this occasion, is but a brilliant speck quitted, and recrossed the river with his whole in the train of disaster and suffering. Colonel Monson to attack Holkar, but under the influence, as it is represented, of motives arising from various causes-a deficiency of grain in his camp, the absence of a detachment employed to bring up a supply, and of another part of obtain supplies-adverting, moreover, to the his force that was on its march to join him from Hinglaisghur, but above all, the retreat of Colonel Murray-he determined to retire to the Mokundra pass-a determination induced, it is said, by the treacherous advice of to Kotah; and so great was his anxiety to Bappoojee Scindia. Accordingly, at four in avoid an engagement, that he left his camp the morning, on the 8th of July, he sent off standing to deceive the enemy. His march to the whole of his baggage and stores to Soonarah, Kotah was performed under inclement skies the troops remaining on the ground of encamp-ment, in order of battle, till half-past nine. In arrived, fresh difficulties awaited him. The infantry then moved off, the cavalry being the rajah declined to admit the British troops left on the ground with orders to follow in the town, and declared that he could half an hour, and to send Colonel Monson the furnish no provisions, of which they began to earliest intelligence of Holkar's motions. The | be greatly in want. infantry met with no interruption; but after therefore, compelled to pursue his march marching about twelve miles, a report reached amidst nearly all the privation and suffering them, that at a considerable distance in their which can attend the movement of an army. rear Lieutenant Lucan's cavalry had been on the 15th July the guns became so firmly attacked by the whole of that of Holkar. embedded in the mud which formed the basis that they were no longer in a situation to ive support. They had been nearly cut to tended.

so large a portion of his force, Colonel Monson resumed his march towards the Mokundra pass, which he reached on the following day without molestation.

On the morning of the 10th of July a large body of the enemy's cavalry made their Monson, demanding the surrender of the guns and small arms of the British force. receiving a refusal-for it need scarcely be to render it impossible to cross. stated that the insolent demand was refused-

The assailants were bravely repulsed; but, not dismayed by their first failure, they repeatedly returned to the attack, and were as often driven back with severe loss. Finding that he could make no impression on the men whose arms he had coolly demanded, Holkar drew off his troops to the distance of about four miles, where he was joined by his infantry and guns.

The brave resistance offered by the British It had been the intention of Colonel Monson had intended to make a stand at Mokundra, but fearful that the enemy might get to his rear and cut off his communication with the pass and with the town of Kotah, which was the only place from whence he could circumscribed nature of his position, to the reputed strength of Holkar's force, and the supposed weight and number of that chieftain's guns, he resolved to continue his retreat Colonel Monson was, Colonel Monson immediately formed his troops of the road by which they had to be transin order of battle, and was proceeding to the ported, as to defy all the efforts made to support of the party attacked, when Bappoojee extricate them. They were consequently Scindia arrived with the fearful intelligence spiked and abandoned. The march was then continued through a country completely under water. The Chumbulee rivulet was crossed, , and their gallant commander, dread-y wounded, had fallen into the hands of the y. It is said that this catastrophe was trifling conflicts took place, in all of which occasioned by the cavalry having remained the character of the British troops was main-longer on the field than Colonel Monson in-

As soon as the situation of Colonel Monson On receiving the news of the destruction of at Mokundra had become known to the commander-in-chief, a reinforcement of two battalions of sepoys, with four six-pounders and two howitzers, and a body of Hindostance cavalry, had been despatched from Agra to his relief, as well as a supply of grain. reinforcement joined Colonel Monson at Tonk appearance, and their numbers continued Rampoora, where he remained for several gradually to increase till noon on the 11th, days, as if with the intention of making a when Holkar, with a degree of modesty bestand. He, however, finally resumed his when Holkar, with a degree of modesty be stand. He, however, finally resumed his coming his character, sent a letter to Colonel retreat, but not until the enemy were close upon him. On the 22nd of August he arrived On at the Banas river, which was so swollen as A halt was thus unavoidable, and opportunity was Holkar divided his force into three bodies, afforded for the assemblage of the whole force which at the same point of time attacked the of the enemy in the neighbourhood of the detachment. fordable, was crossed in the face of the enemy. battalion of native infantry not only resisted an attack of the enemy, but charged and drove them from several of their guns, which, however, they were unable to retain. So far from carrying off the enemy's guns, the British commander was unable to secure his own baggage, the whole of which was abandoned to facilitate the retreat of the corps to Kooshailghur, which he reached on the night of the 28th.

At Kooshailghur Colonel Monson found a party consisting of six companies of sepoys, which he had sent forward under Captain Nicholl, with the treasure of the detachment. the day preceding the action at the Banas river. This party, on the night of its arrival, had been attacked by a body of troops belonging to Scindia, but succeeded in maintaining their post till the morning, when the whole of the detachment, with a company of native infantry previously stationed at Kooshailghur, entered the fort, having learned that it was the intention of Scindia's commander to levy a contribution on the town, though it belonged to the rajah of Jeypore, an ally of the British Here a formal demand was government. made by the Mahratta leader, of the surrender of all the elephants, treasures, and arms of the detachment; on compliance with which, Captain Nicholl was graciously assured he should be permitted to depart without molestation, while refusal was to be visited by a cannonade. This was not an empty threat, for a battery of ten guns was opened on the fort; and a few hours afterwards a body of Scindia's infantry entered the town, from which position they were immediately driven by a party of sepoys, not exceeding, if it amounted to, one-sixth of the number of the enemy, led by Lieutenant Harriott. Captain storming the battery, but the Scindians pruguus to their camp.

At Kooshailghur Colonel Monson's difficulties thickened. He had expected to find there five battalions, and twenty pieces of cannon belonging to the rajah of Jeypore, but they had been withdrawn before his arrival. whole of Holkar's cavalry were gathering and encamping around him; and at this moment, when the fidelity and bravery of every single man were of the utmost importance, he discovered a correspondence between some native commissioned officers and Holkar, having for its object the transfer of certain battalions to the enemy. The danger being known, measures of precaution were taken; but the greater part of two companies of infantry deserted, with about four hundred of the irregular horse. Colonel Monson left Kooirregular horse. Colonel Monson left Koo-been guarded against; it will also evince that shailghur on the day after his arrival; and the blame attached to it extends to more than having formed his detachment into an oblong square, resumed his march. The enemy fol- Colonel Monson, his orders were .

On the 24th the river, being lowed; harassing them by repeated attempts to charge, which were met with exemplary A sharp action took place, in which a single coolness and spirit. At sunset, on the 28th of August, the detachment was at the Biana pass, where it was intended to halt for the night, the march having been continued from one o'clock in the morning, and the troops having been called upon not long before to repel a desperate charge from the enemy's cavalry. The reception given to the enemy deterred them from immediately renewing the attempt, but their guns arrived at the Biana pass simultaneously with the British force, and the halt of the latter was the signal for the commencement of a powerful cannonade. This compelled Colonel Monson to proceed; and from this period the order and regularity which had previously been maintained appears to have been lost. Separate portions of the detachment made their way, in their own manner, to Agra, and by the 31st all who escaped the enemy had arrived there. The retreat of Colonel Monson must be placed among the most lamentable transactions which the history of British India presents to notice. The sufferings of so many brave men as were involved in the calamity, the loss of so many valuable lives as were unavoidably sacrificed to purchase the safety of the remainder, appeals strongly to those feelings of sympathy which are awakened when, ceasing to regard an army as a wholeceasing to view it as a vast machine framed to effect great objects-we contemplate its members as individual men, influenced by good and evil circumstances, like those for whom their swords are drawn, and on whom the history of an eventful campaign acts but as an exciting romance. The fate of those who fell, and of those who survived to undergo renewed trials and privations, was the more bitter, because, with regard to them, the conqueror's triumph secured not the conqueror's reward. Nicholl intended to follow up this success by In all their conflicts with the enemy the English were successful; but the ear of the dently disappointed him by moving off the dying soldier was not solaced by the shout of victory, which told him that the field had been won and would be held by his countrymen and comrades; nor could he who had escaped the dangers by which he had been surrounded exult in the reflection that the only remaining duty was to pursue those whom he had aided in discomfiting. When the enemy were repelled, the only hope afforded by success was that time might be gained for pursuing the movement which was to carry the victors farther from the enemy-the only prospect before the soldier was a repetition of similar conflicts, under circumstances of equal or greater discouragement.

An inquiry into the sources of the disaster will tend to show that it was not a misfortune resulting from causes which could not have one person. When General Lake deta the main army as might enable him to receive Holkar which the resources of that chief warsupport from it. Yet General Lake, not long afterwards, retired with his army to cantonments, leaving Colonel Monson without the power of obtaining that support which he had previously thought it necessary to pre-

Colonel Monson, however, increased the danger by advancing beyond the position which he had been instructed to take. This was in the vicinity of the passes of Bhoondee and Lakery, in the chain of mountains to the southward of Tonk Rampoora. He thought that ardent temperament and his reliance on the advantage would arise from advancing to Mokundra, which he represented as a place equally defensible. Subsequently he extended his advance even far beyond Mokundra, thus greatly adding to the distance between his detachment and the army which had receded from it. He did not, however, calculate on being attacked the return of Holkar was a step for which the English commander was quite unprepared. He believed the freebooting chief to be destitute of the means of offering any serious annoyance, and this belief was shared by General Lake. The last-named officer, addressing the governor-general, says:—"At this period" the period when, having resolved to leave Colonel Monson's detachment in the field, he withdrew his own army into cantonments-"At this period I was informed from all quarters that Holkar's pecuniary resources were reduced to the lowest cbb; that his army was filled with terror and dismay; and that his troops, who before had been mutinous and discontented, were now deserting from him in great numbers. These representations were rendered more probable from the consideration that a successful war is necessary to retain together an army, and to support the confidence of troops whose chief bond of union is plunder.

therefore gave them considerable credit, alin I found it impossible to obtain accurate ormation, and was aware of the exaggeraon which the natives of this country give to all their relations. The reduced state of the enemy's power and resources, and the great distance to which he had prosecuted his flight, appearing to me in a great measure to have released those states with which we were in alliance from all hazard of future depredations, and to have deprived Jeswunt Rao Holkar of all hopes of success in any future attempt to invade the British territories in Hindostan, I determined without further delay to withdraw the main army to their respective cantonments within the Company's provinces." Such was the source of the errors of both General Lake and Colonel Monson, and instances of similar delusions are not unfrequent. A large portion of the reverses which have been sustained by the British nation in the East are to be traced to an absurd confidence either in the good faith of an enemy, or in his weakness, or in his want of disposition to attack.

But while Colonel Monson did not entertain merely defensive; and his judgment on this latter should remain at such a distance from [that degree of apprehension with regard to ranted, it is but just to remember that he did not anticipate that complete destitution of anpport which it was his fate to experience. He confided in the advance of Colonel Murray from Guzerat; and to the extraordinary conduct of that officer in falling back, the ruin which overtook Colonel Monson's corps may Sent forward by the combo attributed, mander-in-chief to a distance at which no aid could be furnished within a reasonable period -led on to a still greater distance by his own advance of Colonel Murray-Colonel Monson seems to have felt no alarm till Holkar's sudden change from retreat to advance roused him to even more than a just sense of his danger. From this moment he appears to have lost all confidence in himself, and to have possessed no settled plan of proceeding. His first impression was to engage the enemy; and whatever might have been the event, its effects could scarcely have been worse than these of the tamer course which he preferred, and in which he persevered till he reached Agra. generally avoided the enemy when practicable, although when forced into action he was successful. Adverting to Holkar having been permitted to cross the Chumbul unmolested, General Lake says:-"Perhaps the omission should have been repaired by an attack under the most favourable circumstances that could afterwards be obtained. His numbers were certainly inferior to those of the enemy; but he had on his side discipline, approved valour, and the choice of position. A bold effort was likewise evidently necessary to extricate him from his situation, and to avoid the disgrace and misfortunes inseparable from a rapid retreat." A bolder man than Colonel Monson never drew a sword; and yet his retreat before Holkar was characterized by a degree of timidity and vacillation of which the military history of Great Britain presents few examples. He meditated a stand at Mokundra, but sudden alarm induced him to abandon his camp and quit that place with singular precipitation. At Tonk Rampoora he lingered till the enemy was close on his rear, distracted, as it appears, between the orders of the commander-in-chief forbidding his further retreat, and his own conviction that retreat was inevitable. The fatal detention at this place led to all the calamities that followed in rapid succession, till discipline gave way before them, and retreat became flight.

To erase the scandal brought on the British name by the unfortunate result of Colonel Monson's movement, every resource of the government was immediately employed. Measures were taken for the speedy equipment of several distinct armies, destined to act in different quarters, and to act offensively. governor-general avowed his decided preference for such a plan, as compared with any plans tinguished brother.

Among the first and most important measures of preparation was the establishment of an army in Hindostan, equipped for light movements, and of sufficient strength to encounter, with a prospect of success, the main body of Holkar's force. This army, it was proposed, should be commanded by General Lake, and joined by a body of irregular horse to be furnished by the allies. All reliance on merely two corps of irregular horse, and the same defensive operations was to be abandoned. Holkar was to be pressed, if possible, to an The compursued to the last extremity. mander-in-chief accordingly marched on the 3rd of September from Campore, with the whole of the European cavalry and infantry at that place, and arrived on the 22nd at Agra. There another portion of the intended army of Hindostan had been assembled, and was at attacked and driven into the town. this time encamped at Secundra, about six enemy then brought up a hundred and thirty miles distant from Agraforce consisted of three regiments of European light dragoons, five regiments of native Lieutenant-Colonel Burn, who, with his corps, cavalry and the horse artillery, the king's had been called in from Saharunpore; and a 76th regiment of foot, the flank companies soldier better calculated to contend with the of the king's 22nd foot, ten battalions of difficulties of his situation could not have been native infantry, and the usual proportion of found. Amidst all the disheartening circumartillery.

British force there having abandoned it on the chief, under the belief that it was impossible 3rd September, leaving behind them a large for so small a force to defend both the city and quantity of grain and baggage, which, together the person of the emperor, had ordered that with the town, fell into the hands of the enemy. The former should be abandoned, and that the On the approach of the British army, which exertions of the garrison should be devoted marched from Secundra on the 1st of October, | solely to the defence of the citadel. Holkar drew off to the north-west, along the tical resident forwarded this order to Colonel bank of the Jumna. by a force under Colonel Don, and three suc-subsequently went in person to require comcessive attempts were made by the commander- pliance; but in the mean time Colonel Burn, in-chief, on the 2nd, 7th, and 10th of October, in addition to the suggestions of his own excelto bring the enemy's cavalry to action, but in lent judgment and noble spirit, had fortified vain. In the mean time his infantry and guns himself with the opinion of some of his officers had been moving in the direction of Delhi, and in whom he placed confidence, and had deter-

The British resident, Colonel Ochterlony, had anticipated the visit, and provided, as far as lay in his power, for the consequences, by calling in various portions of troops, regular and irregular, and making other proparations for the defence of the city. To place it in a defensible state was, however, no easy task. The city is of great extent; it was unprotected, except by a wall badly constructed, in many places without a parapet, and so far from being capable of resisting the guns of the enemy, unable to bear the shock of those that might Redoubts were be discharged in its defence. constructed at two of the gates, and some partial repairs of the old defences performed. But, after all had been effected, the means of resistance were contemptible; while a great part of the troops within the city were of such a description that no reliance could be placed point entirely coincided with that of his dis-1 the general population was of the worst character.

Holkar's army amounted to about seventy thousand men. The force which was to defend Delhi against this overwhelming host consisted of two battalions of native infantry and four companies of another; but a large proportion of these were obliged to be devoted to the protection of the palace and person of the emperor. Besides the regular troops, there were about number of irregular infantry, and a corps of matchlock-men. But all the irregular horse action, and if the attempt should fail, to be described on the approach of Holkar-some of them to join him-and the matchlock-men broke into mutiny. The mutiny was subdued by severe punishment, but most of the corps subsequently deserted.

> The British force was at this time encamped under the walls; they were soon afterwards The assembled guns and commenced a tremendous cannonade.

The officer in command of the garrison was stances of that situation was one which yet Holkar had taken possession of Muttra, the remains to be noticed. The commander-in-The poli-Muttra was reoccupied Burn, with instructions to act upon it. on the 8th of October they arrived before that mined not to abandon the city. He was reminded of the peril which he incurred; but he was prepared to encounter it.

> The cannonade commenced by Holkar was continued, without intermission, day and It was evident that a practicable breach would soon be effected, and Colonel Burn resolved to interrupt the progress of the besiegers by a sortic. This was made on the evening of the 10th of October, when a party, consisting of two hundred men of the battalion under Colonel Burn, and one hundred and fifty irregulars commanded by Lieutenant Rose, proceeded to storm the enemy's battery. They succeeded with little difficulty in gaining possession of it, spiked the guns, and retreated with small loss.

On the 13th there appeared indications of an approaching attack of a formidable character; unusual vigilance was therefore exercised by the garrison, and supporting parties were either upon their fidelity or their courage, and directed to be in readiness. The expectation of a serious attack was not vain. At daybreak [recond in command, in search of Holkar's on the 14th the enemy's guns opened in every infantry and guns, General Lake resolved to direction, and, under cover of the cannonade, proceed in person with the whole of the a large body of infantry, with ladders, made European dragoons, three regiments of native a large body of infantry, with ladders, made an assault on the Lahore gate. This was the real object of attack, but to divert the army, concisting of two companies of attention of the besieged, guns were pointed against the Ajmeer gate, and a British officer was there mortally wounded. The attack on the Lahore gate, which the enemy confidently expected to carry, signally failed. The areailmust were driven back in confusion, and with considerable loss, leaving behind them the besiegers, Colonel Burn had quitted Delhi to ladders by which they were to have gained entrance. This defeat seems to have completely dispirited the enemy. In the evening long, to defend the imperial capital. The pletely dispirited the enemy. In the evening long, to defend the imperial capital. The a show was made of drawing some guns enemy's horse fell in with his party near towards the Cashmere gate, which subjected Candlah, and completely surrounded them; the garrison to the labour of making some but Colonel Burn, clearing a road with grape-preparations for defence there; but none were shot, made good his way to Shamlee, where, needed. The disappointed for retired in the getting into a small mud fort, he prepared for night; and at daybreak all that was visible a desperate defence. The fort was about a of the besiegers of Delhi was the rear-guard of hundred yards square. The party, ill supplied their cavalry, at a considerable distance. The with provisions, were unable to obtain any successful defence of a place of no strength, from the adjacent town of Shamlee, the with a force numerically insufficient to afford inhabitants of which place manifested a strong the requisite reliefs, was admirably calculated feeling of hostility, and joined Holkar's disto revive impressions of respect for the British mounted horsemen in firing from the town arms, and to dissipate the unfavourable feel-wall with matchlocks on those who had taken ings engendered by the unfortunate retreat of refuge in the fort. About a hundred British Colonel Monson. The noble determination sepoys thus lost their lives. In this extremity evinced at this critical period by Colonel Burn the Mahometan part of Colonel Burn's force was invaluable to his country; and justly did were subsisted by sacrificing the draught bulthe political resident estimate the effects of locks to the necessity of providing food. The the gallant exertions made by that officer and Hindoos, precluded by their prejudices from his troops. "The fatigue," said he, "suffered this mode of sustaining life, had been without by both officers and men could be exceeded by food for some time, when the approach of nothing but the cheerfulness and patience General Lake relieved them from the presence reflect the greatest honour on the discipline, fit to await the arrival of the British comcourage, and fortitude of British troops, in the mander-in-chief, nor even to take any steps in circumference, and which had ever the English column perceptible than the been given up at the first appearance of enemy disappeared.

٠.,

enemy at its gates." This eulogy from one A few days after General Lake had left

imagine.

with which it was endured; and it cannot but of the enemy. Holkar's troops did not think eyes of all Hindostan, to observe, that with a towards ascertaining the extent and nature small force they sustained a siege of nine days, of his force. No sooner were the clouds willed an assault, and defended a city ten of dust which announced the movement of ho had recommended a different course Delhi, the division under General Fraser requires neither addition nor comment. What marched in pursuit of Holkar's infantry and might have followed had Colonel Burn acquiguns. On the 12th of November he arrived esced in the views of the commander-in-chief at Goburdun, where from the heights the and the resident, and had the loss of Delhi enemy were visible, encamped between a deep been added to previous disasters, it is fearful to tank and an extensive morass—their right covered by a fortified village, and their left Foiled in his attempt upon Delhi, Holkar extending to the fort of Deeg. No time was crossed the Jumna at the ford of Panniput, lost in preparing for attacking them. At three threatening to desolate the British territories o'clock in the morning of the 13th four in the Doab with fire and sword. General Lake battalions of sepoys and two European regiarrived at Delhi on the 18th of October. He did ments marched for the purpose. A detour of not, however, enter on the pursuit of the enemy considerable extent was necessary to avoid till the 31st, although his presence at Delhi the morass, but at daybreak the British column could answer no purpose. The delay appears arrived at the fortified village, situate on a to have been partly occasioned by a deficiency hill which covered the enemy's right; the of provisions and beasts of draught. The news of Holkar's irruption into the British provinces in the Doab roused him to exertion; and first line, and the remainder a second. The detaching a force under General Fraser, the 76th led the way, with its wonted alacrity and

than, running down the hill, they charged and days. carried the first range of the enemy's guns, under a tremendous shower of round, grape, The second line had now and chain shot. reached the village, and, on discovering the 76th far in advance surrounded by the enemy, rapidly pushed forward to their supportthe Company's first European regiment being foremost, and the two sepoy battalions fol-lowing. The two remaining battalions were employed, under Major Hammond, in watching the enemy's brigades and guns near the moraes, and keeping them in check. When the first range of guns had been carried, the victors were opposed by a most destructive fire from the second range; and General Fraser losing a leg by a cannon-shot, the fifty-eight miles. Their fatigues were, how-command devolved upon Colonel Monson, over, forgotten, for the enemy whom they Nothing daunted by the unhappy accident had so perseveringly pursued was now before which had befallen their commander, the them; and on the preceding evening fresh British troops advanced, captured the second vigour had been given to their hopes by the range of guns, and then continued to charge receipt of the news of the glorious battle of battery after lattery for a space of two miles, when, being close under the walls of Deeg, While they were fited upon from the fort. thus pursuing their successes, the first range of guns had been retaken by a body of the enemy's horse, and turned against the English. But the advantage was enjoyed for a very short time. Captain Norford, with only twenty-eight men, retrieved the guns, the life of the gallant officer being unhappily sacrificed. in the exploit.

The troops who had been engaged in carrying the batteries, having pursued their success as far as was practicable towards Deeg, returned to attack the body which, during their advance, had been kept in check by the battalions under Major Hammond. That officer, with the aid of three six-pounders, had steadily maintained his position in the face of a heavy fire from artillery far superior to his own. Colonel Monson, having ordered up several more six-pounders, moved round under cover of their fire upon the left flank of the enemy, who forthwith made a precipitate retreat into the morars, where great numbers perished. Two battalions of sepoys had been left with the haggage, and some native cavalry had been employed in watching the enemy's horse. These now came up to assist in securing the guns and removing the wounded; and the British encamped on the field which they had so gallantly won.

The loss of the enemy, on the field and in the morass, has been estimated at nearly two thousand, and eighty-seven pieces of cannon fell into the hands of the English, including some which Colonel Monson had lost on his retreat. The victory was brilliant and com- about twenty wounded. plete, but it was not purchased without heavy The English return of killed and officer who had planned and commanded the this place to deposit the wounded at the battle determination, by taking possession of the attack: the wound of General Fraser proved village; which was no sooner accomplished mortal, and he survived the victory only a few

> Holkar was destined soon to sustain another reverse. Himself and his cavalry had been for several days flying with great rapidity before General Lake, pursued with even greater rapidity by that commander. The distance between them kept gradually diminishing until, on the 17th of November, after a night march, the head of the British column reached the skirts of the freebooter's camp. horses were at picket, and beside them lay their riders, wrapt in their blankets, sleeping. For many days the English had been subjected to most harassing marches; and within the twenty-four hours immediately preceding their arrival at Holkar's camp they had marched Deeg. The first intimation which the slumbering camp of Holkar received of the presence of the English was a discharge of grape from their horse-artillery. "It awakened some," says Major Thorn; "but scaled many in an everlasting sleep." Before the surprise caused by this fearful warning could be shaken off, the British cavalry dashed into the camp at full gallop, and charging in all directions, the place which had so lately been the seat of repose and silence resounded with the clash of swords, the shouts of an excited soldiery, and the groans of the dying.

> Holkar was slow to believe that the disturbance in his camp could be occasioned by General Lake, whom he supposed to be at a considerable distance. When convinced of it, instead of taking any measures for the safety of his army, he mounted his horse, and, with the troops immediately about him, rode off at full speed. The fate of an army thus abandoned need scarcely be related. Dispersing in every direction, some mounted, others on foot, their horses being too much jaded to carry them, they were followed and cut down in vast numbers so long as the British were able to continue the pursuit, which extended for about ten miles. The loss of the enemy in killed was computed at three thousand, but this formed but a small portion of the amount by which Holkar's army was weakened. the number of descrtions which followed—by the dropping off of masses of fugitives, who never rejoined the ranks of their master, it was believed that his cavalry force had been diminished to the extent of one-half. On the part of the English, only two men were killed and Holkar fled across the Jumna, followed by General Lake, who, on the 28th November, wounded amounted to upwards of six hundred arrived at Muttra. Here he found the division and forty, and among them was the brave under Colonel Monson, which had retired to step of which had been taken in vain-had battering-train could be procured from Agra. struck a fatal blow at the force on which conduct the war to a satisfactory conclusion.

to punish the perfidy of the rajah of Bhurt- and presenting four commanding bastions at been among the earliest of the Mahratta tri-this place, and nearly in the centre of the town, butaries to seek the friendship of the British was the citadel, strongly built, in good presergovernment after the first brilliant successes vation, and well stored with guns. The ramof General Lake, and great reliance seems to parts were high and thick, furnished with have been placed upon his fidelity. He had bastions, and surrounded by a deep ditch furnished a body of horse to act with the faced with masonry. Massive gateways and British army, and which was thus employed towers of considerable height defended the till the conclusion of the campaign. About near and distant approaches. the period of Colonel Monson's retreat some circumstances occurred to excite suspicion of train having arrived, General Lake took up the rajah's sincerity; and in consequence of the position before Deeg which he meant to information which reached the commander-inchief, a person named Nerungin Lall was occupied by the enemy, it was necessary to disseized in the town of Muttra, who, on examilodge them: but this service was performed nation, confessed that he had been employed without difficulty, and without the occurfor a considerable time in carrying on commu-fications between Holkar on the one hand, night the pioneers broke ground, and on the and, on the other, several chiefs and zemindars, evening of the 16th of December a breaching-including the rajah of Bhurtpore. Colonel battery was completed within seven hundred Monten also forwarded from Tonk Rampoora and fifty yards of a high outwork at the angle of Deeg, and to disencumber itself of the vast | the allied forces, had endeavoured to excite quantity of ordnance which formed part of disaffection within the British possessions, the spoil in that memorable action. The guns and to prevail on the zemindars in the had been forwarded to Agra, and Colonel Doab to intercept the supplies forwarding Monson, it is stated, intended to fall back to the English army. At the battle of Deeg beyond Muttra but for the arrival of the all reserve was thrown aside; the rajah's commander-in-chief. There, however, after a cavalry openly joined that of Holkar, and the separation of a month, the two branches of English were fired upon from the walls of the rajah and was the army met under circumstances which gave Deeg, which belonged to the rajah, and was just ground for mutual congratulations. The garrisoned by his troops. It could be no one had routed Holkar's infantry and divested longer a question whether the rajah was to be him of most of his ordnance: the other had treated as a friend or an enemy, and it was marched about five hundred miles, not a resolved to lay siege to Deeg as soon as a

Deeg was defended by a strong mud wall, Holkar mainly depended, and was now ready with bastions, and a deep ditch passing ento co-operate in any service that might tend to tirely round, excepting at an angle, where stood a high rocky mount, almost a fortress in The first duty to which they were called was itself, having an area of about fifty yards square, That prince, it will be recollected, had the four cardinal points. About a mile from reme intercepted letters, addressed to Holkar of the town intended to be attacked. On by the raight of Ilhurtpore, his eldest con, his the next morning its fire opened from six afidential servants, and Nerungin Lall, which eighteen-pounders, four twelve-pounders, and y corrolomated the testimony of the last four mortars; but the effect being very small, and person.

some batteries which those of the English had been unable to touch: these were carried at the point of the bayonet. The British were now in possession of the town and of the batteries without it. Preparations were made for assailing the innerfort, but on the night of the 24th it was evacuated. A hundred guns were captured at Deeg, with a considerable quantity of ammunition and military stores. The year 1804 thus closed in Hindostan with a signal triumph to the British cause. quarter, it will be proper to advert to the operations carried on against Holkar in the which he exercised in the Deccan; but before withdrawing from the scene where he had won so much renown, he suggested to the residents to be carried on against Chandore, and the other provinces of Holkar and his partisans, in the Deccan, at the proper season. troops for this service were to consist of detachments from the subsidiary forces serving with the peishwa and the nizam, with the contingents to be furnished respectively by those two powers. A battering-train had been prepared at Poona, which, as soon as the weather should permit, was to be sent to Aurungabad, whither Lieutenant-Colonel Haliburton, who commanded the portion of the Hyderabad subsidiary force destined for this service, was to proceed with his troops as soon as he was advised of the movement of the train. On its becoming known at Poona that Colonel Haliburton had commenced his march, Colonel Wallace was to move with the detachment from the peishwa's subsidiary force, and the whole were to join in the neighbourhood of Aurungabad. In conformity with his usual prudential habits, General Wellesley made admirable arrangements for securing supplies of money and provisions for the use of the detachments. The exhausted state of the country through which Colonel Haliburton had to march, rendered it necessary that large convoys of grain should be advanced to him from Hyderabad; and it being understood that on their receipt that officer would immedidately commence his march, Colonel Wallace moved from Poona, crossed the Godavery about the middle of September, and at the end of that month was joined by Colonel Haliburton; the advance of both having been greatly impeded by the weather. Early in October the peishwa's contingent arrived. On the 8th of that month, Colonel Wallace detached a party to take possession of a small fort belonging to Holkar, called Lasselgong, situated about twelve miles from Chandore. They succeeded in occupying the pettah, but | The proceedings of General Dane Bucket | They succeeded in occupying the failed. The quently to the fall of Deeg now call for notice. on a second attempt, the fort was carried, camp, with the highest anticipations of future enemy under the walls, where they had erected | though not without a loss which, with reference to the object, must be considered severe.

The town of Chandore was occupied by Colonel Wallace without opposition. parations were made for attacking the fort, and a battery was nearly ready to open, when an offer was made to surrender on terms which Colonel Wallace accepted. The conditions were, the safety of private property and permission to the garrison to depart wherever they pleased. A number of small forts yielded within a few days after the surrender of Chan-Before pursuing further its history in that | dore, and Colonel Wallace, marching from that place on the 17th of October, arrived before Galna on the 21st, and immediately took possouth. In June, General Wellesley, being session of the pettah. Batteries were formed about to proceed to Bengal on public service, for the reduction of the fort, and after their resigned the political and military powers fire had effected two practicable breaches, the garrison surrendered on the same conditions which had been granted at Chandore. command of these forts deprived Holkar of all at Poona and Hyderabad a plan of operations his possessions to the southward of the Taptee; and, after making the necessary arrangements for their defence and administration, Colonel Wallace proceeded to take up a position at Borenaire, from which he might be able to move in any direction where the assistance of his detachment might be required.

The advance of Colonel Murray, with the force under his command, towards Oujein-his subsequent retreat and resumed advance—have already been noticed in narrating the retreat of Colonel Monson. Colonel Murray arrived at Oujein without encountering any opposition, and took possession of the whole of Holkar's territories in that quarter, including the chieftain's capital, Indore. On the 18th of October he advanced from Oujein, and on the 11th of November arrived at Mundasere, having occupied the pergunnahs of Burrowda and Jowra, through which he had directed his march; afterwards advancing from Mundasere, he took possession of various forts of greater or less importance, and by these operations completed the conquest of the whole of Holkar's possessions west of the Chumbul. Continuing to advance, he arrived at the Mokundra pass on the 30th of November, and at Shahabad, about forty miles west of Narwar, on the 25th of December, where he resigned his command to Major-General Jones, who had arrived from Bombay to assume it.

In Cuttack some annoyances, created by the rajah of Khoordah and the zemindar of Kunka, were suppressed by a force under Colonel Harcourt. After some minor successes, the pettah and fort of Khoordah were carried with great gallantry, by a detachment under Major Fletcher, of the Madras European regiment. The Kunka chief, alarmed by the rapid annihilation of the power of the rajah of Khoordah. read in his fate the necessity of prompt submission to the British authority.

strength of the detachment was increased, and, A few days after that event he broke up his success, and marched to Muttra, where he was tof the top; but their number was too small to joined by Major-General Dowdswell, with the admit of their attempting to storm the enemy's 75th regiment and a supply of stores. On the guns. In the mean time Major Hawkes, with 1st of January, 1805, the army thus reinforced the right column, had succeeded in driving the moved towards the capital of the rajah of enemy from their advanced guns, and, after Ehurtpore, which was to be the next object of spiking them, was on his return to support Ehurtpore, which was to be the next object of spiking them, was on his course to carried attack; on the 2nd it took up its position the centre; while Colonel Ryan, with the left, before the place, and on the 3rd preparations for the siege were commenced. A grove, or garden, considerably in advance of the camp vention of a deep drain from pursuing his was occupied. On the 5th a breaching-battery was occupied. On the 5th a breaching-battery success. Colonel Maitland, whatever might for six eighteen-pounders was commenced; on have been his errors or misfortunes, nobly supthe 7th it opened its fire. Another battery, of ported the character of the British soldier, and four eight-inch and four five-and-a-half-inch never relaxed in his exertions to bring his men mortars, being completed by noon on that day, forward till he fell mortally wounded. The commenced throwing shells into the town. Cannonading on both sides continued with little interruption till the afternoon of the 9th, when the breach in the wall being reported ascended the breach, being unsupported, were practicable, it was resolved on that evening to attempt to storm.

About seven o'clock the party destined for the duty moved in three columns. Lieutenant-Colonel Ryan, with one hundred and fifty of the Company's Europeans and a battalion of sepoys, was ordered to attempt a gateway to the left of the principal battery. Major Major Hawker, with two companies of the 75th regiment and another battalion of sepoys, was to carry the advanced guns of the enemy on the right of the battery. Both columns were to endeavour to make their way into the town with the fugitives; but if that were impracticable, they were to turn and support the centre column in endeavouring to get in at the breach. That column, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Maitland, consisted of the flank companies of the king's 22nd, 75th, and 76th regiments, and the c of the Company's European regiment, amounting in the whole to about five a hole was made completely through the work; bundred men, with a battalion of sepoys, but on the 18th the breach was again stockaded. Colonel Maitland's orders were to take the On that day the British army was reinforced by greater part of the troops either stopped or went back to the battery as soon as they got to the water. The few devoted men who had compelled to retire; and this ill-judged and unfortunate attempt against Bhurtpore ended in exposing the British arms to the contempt of the enemy. The loss of the English was heavy, and among the killed and wounded was an unusual proportion of officers.

On the day succeeding this disastrous failure the enemy began to repair the breach through which the English had hoped to pass to conquest. The next effort against the place it was resolved should be directed towards a part of the wall a little to the right of the former point of attack. Batteries were accordingly erected, and two twenty-four-pounders, ten eighteen-pounders, seven twelve-pounders, and eight mortars, opened a destructive fire on the 16th of January. Part of the rampart of the curtain was beaten down, but the next morning the breach was found stockaded; the firing being continued, the piles gave way, and enemy by surprise; but in this he altogether the arrival of Major-General Smith with three iled. The ground being broken by swamps battalions of sepoys and some convalescent ad prod, the orderly advance of the party Europeans, with a few field-pieces. The batcommitted to a havildar and two privates of its way from Muttra. the native cavalry, who reported that the charge, it was attacked by Ameer Khan with ditch was not very broad, nor did it appear a vast body of his predatory horse. very deep, and that the breach was easy of Welsh took possession of a village on a lofty ascent. Upon this vague statement, the result site, and succeeded in keeping off the assailants of an inspection made under circumstances till the arrival of a party of cavalry under which almost precluded the possibility of any approach to accuracy, it was resolved once more to risk an attempt to storm. Noon, on the 21st of January, was the time fixed on for The troops by whom it was to the assault. be made were brought into the trenches before daylight, and the interval was to be employed in destroying the impediments with which the enemy, in the course of the night, might have encumbered the breach. This, however, occupied a period somewhat longer than had been anticipated. At break of day the breach was perceived to be again stockaded, and it was not until three o'clock in the afternoon that it was cleared. The troops then moved out of the trenches, and advanced towards the ditch. Here it was for the first time discovered that, by damming up the water at certain points, a sheet of great depth and breadth had been accumulated in front of the breach. A portable to bring an immense convoy from Agra, an bridge had been constructed for the purpose object which was successfully effected, the atof crossing the ditch, but it was too short to be of any use; a scaling-ladder was brought to lengthen it, but this got entangled with ments made for its safety. Soon after this, the bridge, and, instead of connecting it with Ameer Khan, becoming dissatisfied with his the escarp, fell over on one side, carrying with associates, Holkar and the rajah of Bhurtit the bridge, from which it could not be disengaged. No systematic attempt was therefore made to pass the storming party over the ditch; but Lieutenant Morris, of the Com-pany's European regiment, and several men, gallantly swam across and ascended the breach. Prore. During their absence the position of Lieutenant Morris got on the rampart, and the camp had been shifted, a measure absothere received a severe wound in the leg; in lutely necessary to the health of its occupants, swimming back, when the attempt to storm and which moreover was called for by a change had been abandoned, he was again wounded of purpose as to the future point of attack. The confusion; but another column of the British of the division under General Jones, originally force making its appearance from a jungle, commanded by Colonel Murray, and further round which it had been moving with a view attempts had been made for the reduction of to an attack upon a different point, the Bhurtpore. Batteries had been erected and retiring party thereupon rallied. The medibrought into operation on a new point, and tated attack of the advancing column, however, being found impracticable, the whole fell rant a third attempt to storm. The Stith leading to the concept the bridge and Table 2012. back, leaving to the enemy the bridge and February was appointed for the purpose and scaling-ladders, and, which was far worse, a the storming party was ordered to the trencies large number of wounded. Throughout the at an early hour, to be in readiness for attack advance of the British force during the delimination. advance of the British force, during the delay as soon as the batteries should have beaten at the bridge (which occupied at least half an down the defences and stockades which hour), and on the retreat, the enemy kept up have been raised in the night. At treat conductive fire of grand and the night of the nigh a destructive fire of grape, round-shot, and day the enemy made a sally on the frame musketry. The effect was attested by a melantrenches, and for a time appear to the choly return of eighteen officers and five hundred and wounded. During the length driven back; but the contract that the British cavalry were encapsed in land the length driven back; but the contract the length driven back; but the length attack the British cavalry were engaged in keeping off Holkar and Ameer Khan, a task readily effected by the ralloner grant All lish troops, fatigued by their

a detachment under Captain Welsh was destrong fortress from which the spatched to bring in a convoy of provisions and strong fortress from which spatched to bring in a convoy of provisions on twice repulsed.

On returning with its Colonel Need, who had been despatched on the sound of the firing being heard at the British camp. The British sepoys, on perceiving the advance of the reinforcement, raised a loud shout of exultation, and, rushing on the enemy's guns, carried them at the point of the bayonet just at the moment when the cavalry arrived: the latter dashing in, completed the victory. The commander-in-chief, with the remainder of his mounted force, followed Captain Need, but found that nothing was left for them to perform. Four guns, and nearly forty stand of colours, with Ameer Khan's palanquin, fell into the hands of the victors; but, on the other hand, they lost a great portion of the convoy which they were escorting, and of which the army was greatly in want. Their necessity was supplied by despatching Colonel Don with a detachment tempts of the enemy to intercept this supply being rendered vain by the judicious arrangepore, departed into Rohilcund, followed by a British detachment under General Smith, which, after pursuing him for several hundred miles, and compelling him to repass the Ganges, returned to the British camp before Bhurtpore. During their absence the position of The retreat commenced in great army had also been strengthened by the arrival readily effected by the galloper guns. About dispirited by the long residence in the state of the enemy were killed. On the day after these unfortunate attempts detachment under Captain Welsh was deserted to bring in a captain with the day of the da partity of Europeans and partly of sopoys, was sprang several mines in the breach and counte advance to storm; a second column, simi-terscarp, but there being no assailants near larly composed, under Captain Grant, was to these points, the explosions were harmless, carry the enemy's trenches and guns outside except to those by whom they were caused, the town; and a third, composed in like man-in adding to the damage which the English ner of European and native troops, under batteries had inflicted on the works. The loss Lieutenant-Colonel Taylor, was to attack a of the British army on this disastrous day gate called Beem Nurram gate, which was amounted to eight hundred and ninety-four rejorted to be easily accessible. Captain killed and wounded. Grant, with the second column, carried the intrenchments and batteries against which his peared on parade, and addressed in appropriate efforts were directed, and pursuing the fugitives terms the troops whose unhappy defection on to the walls of the town, nearly succeeded in the preceding day had brought dishonour on obtaining entrance, the enemy not being able the service to which they belonged. The to close the gate till the head of the column effect was, that on those who chose to volunthe close upon it. Eleven guns were taken, all of which were safely brought into camp. out, the whole answered to the call. The The third column was less fortunate. Having assault, it was determined, should take place lost its scaling-ladders, and one of its guns being dismounted by a shot from the town, moved to the attack. The party was community attempts on the gate was deemed impractically and the place attempt on the gate was deemed impractically and the place attempts on the gate was deemed impractically and the place attempts of the party was community to the place attempts of the party was community to the place attempts of the party was community to th ticable, and the column retired.

to le the signal for the advance of that of Colonel the previous day been planted. A vast gap Don to storm. The Europeans forming the had been made in the lower part of it, which head of the column were accordingly ordered afforded shelter to those who could avail themto advance, and the native infantry to follow. selves of its protection, but, as before, there Fifty men carrying fascines were to precede were no means of getting the men from this the former, who, after throwing the fascines point to the summit in sufficient numbers. into the ditch, were to wheel outwards and All that could be done, however, was resorted keep up a fire of musketry on the breach while to, and enough was achieved to redeem the the rest of the party advanced to the assault. bonour of those who, on the previous day, But a lesitation occurred: the assailants were had shrunk from the dangers which are but expect to an enfillading fire-an apprehension the ordinary incidents of a soldier's life. prevailed that the enemy during their occupa- Several of the soldiers drove their bayonets tion of the extremity of the trench had esta-into the wall, so as to form a series of steps, blished a mine-the effect of these discouraging by which they hoped to reach the top; but in circum tances was abled by the sight of the the attempt to ascend they were knocked wornded in the conflict of the morning lying down by logs of wood, shot, and various misaround, and the greans drawn forth by their siles from above. Others attempted to effect sufferings; and Colonel Don strove in vain to their object by means of the shot-holes caused court ract the impressions thus created. The by the English fire, but they generally failed, Energy and in front would not move. A better and the fall of one man brought down those finely reach the king's Land regiment and by the next bastion kept up a sweeping and de-ti-15th tative infantry. These followed their structive fire; but amongst all these dangers

A column under Colonel Don, composed whole party. Soon after the assault the enemy

On the morrow the commander-in-chief apwith perfect regularity to the bastion on which The movement of Captain Grant's column was | the colours of the 12th native infantry had on if it was manifested by the remains of the beneath him. All this time, the enemy from grillant commander, and two six-pounders were and difficulties, Lieutenant Templeton, a galbustibles, which exploded with fearful effect, of siego materials is as contrary to economy Thus raged the conflict for a space of two as it is fatal to humanity, and serve to inculhours, when Colonel Monson, finding it hope-cate Colonel Jones's maxim, that 'no policy less, ordered a return to the trenches. Such at a siege can be worse than beginning operawas the result of the fourth attempt to carry tions with a small quantity of materials, and Bhurtpore by assault. It was attended with making the attack keep pace with the supply. a loss of nearly a thousand in killed and In India, where success is the criterion of wounded.

the English had lost about three thousand of our military prowess entertained by the men; and they were not now in a condition natives, our safety may be considered intito renew hostile operations. On the night of mately connected with the result of every the 22nd of February the ordnance was with- siege. drawn from the batteries and the troops from gleeted, no efforts spared, to insure success in the trenches. The battering train with the such operations." army was declared unfit for service; not one eighteen-pounder shot remained for use; very war. The ill-success of the British comlittle powder was left, and few other stores. Provisions also were scarce. On the 23rd the confidence with which he had undertaken the enemy burned the British batteries, and on the 24th the British army changed groundan operation in which they were considerably had reason to rejoice in the good fortune harassed by Holkar's cavalry. Its new position which had attended his efforts for the defence was about six miles north-east of Bhurtpore, of his capital, he was not without some appreand covered the road leading to the depots at hension for the future; more particularly as it Agra, Muttra, and Deeg.

Much argument has been expended on the causes of the failure of the British arms before Bhurtpore; but the inquiry does not appear very difficult or perplexing. might be committed in the conduct of the by the reverses which befell the English; the siege, but the failure was undoubtedly attri-[dark prospects of Holkar now separated the butable to the want of sufficient strength. General Lake, confident in the bravery of his adhering to the side which success seemed troops, appears to have considered that it was most disposed to favour, the rajah condesufficient to effect anything. The strength of scended to make the first overture to the his artillery, considered with reference to the English for peace. On the 10th of March duty which it had to perform, was contemptible, and the insufficient number of men may lish camp, and negotiations immediately combe inferred from the incessant and harassing menced. While these were in progress, the labours which they were called on to sustain, British cavalry marched out to beat up the as recorded in the following extract from a quarters of Holkar. But Holkar had received journal of the siege:—"The cavalry brigades information of their approach, and, not liking and horse artillery troop, detached every third the visitation, was prepared for flight—an day on foraging parties, were often out of operation which he performed with his usual camp from daybreak till dark, and always celerity and success. He retired to a consicalled for on occasions of convoy and escort derable distance south-west of Bhurtpore, long pursuit of Ameer Khan and in the notwithstanding, he was surprised by the several attacks upon Holkar, besides doing British cavalry at daybreak on the 3rd of much duty in protecting the camp. The in-April. About a thousand of his followers fantry had to carry on the principal duties of fell on this occasion; but the victory failed of all foraging parties and convoy escorts, and and his troops contended for priority in flight, exclusively hore the brunt of the several and all that was left to the English was to assaults. The artillery and pioneers remained, pursue as fast and as far as the speed and day after day and night after night, constantly strength of their horses would allow. While the other branches of the army had some occasional relief, and the in-recollected in connection with the unhappy fantry in the trenches were relieved daily, the retreat of Colonel Monson, had now openly artillery and pioneers, from the extreme low- joined the enemy, and his cavalry were staness of their number both in officers and men, | tioned near Dolepore to support the remains of were harassed far beyond their strength, and Holkar's infantry, commanded by Hernaut had a prodigious share of exposure and fatigue. Singh. To dislodge this force, a detachment, The details of the Bhurtpore siege," the writer composed of sixteen companies of newly adds, "will, it is hoped, evince that deficiency sepoys, a battalion of regular infant superiority, and where the tranquillity of our In the various attempts against Phurtpore | empire depends solely upon the high opinion No means, therefore, should be ne-

Both parties had now become weary of the mander against Bhurtpore had diminished the siege, while it had for a time annihilated his means of pursuing it; and though the rajah became evident that Holkar could not hope to maintain war successfully against the English, and, single-handed, the rajah of Bhurtpore could not but feel his own cause to be des-Many errors perate. The rajah had been led to join Holkar rajah from that chief. Pursuing the policy of vakeels from him were received into the Eng-They endured great fatigue in the where he thought himself secure, but where, the camp and trenches. With scarcely a relief completeness from the same cause which had from some daily duty, they had a share in so often produced similar results. The chief party of irregular horse, was despatched from whose conduct since the conclusion of peace Agra under the command of Captain Royle, with him had never ceased to be suspicious. He marched from Agra on the 26th of March; During the negotiations for the treaty under on the 31st he fell in with the cavalry of which Scindia had agreed to receive a British Bappoojee Scindia, and totally routed it. the 5th of April he attacked the powerful force under Hernaut Singh, consisting of between three and four thousand men, infantry and cavalry, and occupying a strong position under the fortified town of Adowlutnaghur, having the town in its rear, and its front and flanks covered by deep ravines filled with troops. Captain Royle made his dispositions for attack with equal spirit and judgment. The enemy's infantry kept up a heavy and well-directed fire, aided by three guns; but Captain Royle's party, rushing in with charged bayonets, took possession of the guns and put the whole body to flight. Captain Pohlman, with the irregular horse, pursued and killed great numbers of the fugitives. Besides the three guns, all the enemy's baggage was taken, more than twenty stand of colours, and, in addition to a quantity of matchlocks and pikes, a great number of muskets of European manufacture.

Bappoojee Scindia, whose name will be

On the day distinguished by this brilliant stroke the army before Bhurtpore again changed its ground, taking up nearly the same position which it had previously occupied. This movement appears to have given some uncasiness to the rajah, and probably accelerated the conclusion of the treaty. On the 10th of April preliminaries were agreed upon: on the following day the third son of the rajah arrived in the British camp as a hostage; and on the 17th a definitive treaty was signed, under in reply, promised to send an officer to the which the fortress of Deeg was to be restored camp of Colonel Murray as desired; but he by the British government, when assured of took various objections to other parts of the the fidelity of the rajah, who pledged himself proposed plan. He alleged that, from acting to aid that government against its enemies, and never to hold any correspondence or have any connection with them, nor to entertain, without the sanction of the English, any Euro-can in his service. He further agreed to pay wenty lacs of rupees in compensation of the expenses of the war, three of which were to be advanced immediately; but the payment of the last instalment of five lacs to be remitted on proof of the rajah's continued attachment; and as a security for the due execution of this part of the treaty, one of the rajah's sons was to reside constantly with the commanding officer of the British forces in the soubahs of Delhi or Agra.

These terms were not dishonoumble to the British; yet the precedent of submitting in patience to repulse, and suffering negotiation to wait upon defeat, was a had one. The British commander in chief, however, was not torry to be relieved on any terms from the necessity of making further attempts against Education. Not only was he discouraged by The renewal of Scindia's claim to the resti-Listed trated filture, but he was apprehensive, and justly 20, of the effect which they might the objections made to the course pointed out lare upon the hellow allies of the British by the British authorities for the conduct of government; and more especially upon Scindia, the war, gave rise to considerable discussion between Scindia's ministers and the British Mahratta diplomacy. In addition to these resident. At length, however, all points of topics, the mode in which Scindia was to co-dispute appeared to be amicably adjusted. operate with the English was debated; and Scindia engaged to lend all the aid in his among other plans submitted for the considerapower towards prosecuting with vigour the tion of the British resident was one, by which war against Holkar, to dismiss that chieftan's Sciendia was to take the field in person, with a vakeel, to renounce all pretensions to Gohud large body of horse and a proportion of infantry and Gwalior, and to confirm the treaties re- and artillery, at a monthly expense of about ferred to in the ninth article of that between a quarter of a million sterling. Together with the British government and himself. But he this plan, three others less costly were sugmade heavy complaints of pecuniary distress, gested; but on the resident inquiring by what and represented an advance from his British means the expense of any of them was to be ally as necessary to enable him to carry his provided for, he was given to understand that good intentions into effect. While Dowlut Scindia relied in this respect on the British Rao Scindia was thus professing friendship for government. the English, and soliciting pecuniary assistance discussion which had already consumed so much from them, Bappoojee Scindia had employed time, and which continued to occupy the resi-himself in desolating the territories of Bhoondi, dent and the Mahratta ministers till the arrival from which Colonel Monson drew part of his in camp of a personage whose presence augured supplies, had seized eighty camels belonging ill for the British cause. This was Scindia's to that officer's army, and had stopped the transit of the British post.

On force for his protection, a vakeel from Holkar had arrived in the camp of his brother chief; and he continued to reside there, not only after the conclusion of the treaty, but after Holkar had placed himself in a position of unequivocal hostility with regard to the English govern-On being apprised of the intention of ment. that government to reduce the power of Holkar, Scindia expressed himself ready to assist, and he actually despatched a force under Bappoojee Scindia (already mentioned), professedly to cooperate with the British commander-in-chief; but he did not dismiss Holkar's vakeel. His dismissal was at length formally demanded by the British resident; who, at the same time, submitted a plan formed by General Wellesley, which contained various suggestions for the effective co-operation of Scindia in the hostile proceedings which were about to take place. By this plan it was proposed that Scindia should send an officer to join the army under Colonel Murray, for the purpose of securing the application of the resources of that chieftain's territories to the exigencies of the British force, and of taking charge of such portions of Holkar's possessions in Malwa as Colonel Murray might subdue and think proper to intrust to that officer's care; that Scindia should provide at Oujein battering guns for the use of Colonel Murray, and that he should employ his horse without delay in reducing the principal possessions of Holkar. Scindia, upon it, danger would arise to his own possessions, and that he had no ordnance of the description required to be provided at Oujein; but it was added, that if the guns taken from him in the late war by the British army were restored, they should be applied in aid of the operations of Colonel Murray's force. Holkar's vakeel, it was represented, was on bad terms with his master, and transacted no business for him; his continued residence in Scindia's camp was therefore justified, on the ground that his knowledge of Holkar's affairs might be made useful. These representations were followed by the expression of an expectation that, as the governor-general had declared an intention of assigning to Scindia a portion of the territory which might be taken from Holkar, he would restore to Scindia the forts of Gohud and Gwalior, and further make com-pensation to him for the loss sustained by the temporary alienation of that portion of his possessions.

Notwithstanding these suspicious indications, which Colonel Murray complained, the resihim pecuniary assistance, provided some reasonable security could be obtained that the inveterate hatred of the English. that the chief should himself assume the command of the army under Bappoojee Scindia, and that he should proceed from Borhampore, resident should supply funds to defray the ex- Rao to be appointed Scindia's dewan. The resident replied, that whenever Scindia might be desirous of having the disposal of a British force he might apply for the subsidiary force, in conformity with the provisions of the treaty of defensive alliance; but that the proposal to subject a British army to his command, or to that of his officers, was utterly inadmissible. The application for funds to undertake the march to the capital was answered by intimating that the British govern-

This renewed the interminable father-in-law, Shirzee Rao Ghatgay by name, a man profligate, intriguing, rapacious, and cruel, beyond even the ordinary measure of and others of a similar character in Malwa, of Mahratta profligacy, intrigue, rapacity, and cruelty, and not more distinguished by his predent at Scindia's camp was authorized to afford eminence in all the evil propensities which deform the Mahratta character than by his object for which the advance was made would appointed, under extraordinary circumstances, With this view, it was suggested Scindia's dewan. The appointment originated in the following manner. Before the marriage of Scindia with the daughter of Shirzee Rao, a compact had been made between the latter where his camp then was, to his capital, Onjein. personage and the peishwa, by virtue of which, These suggestions drew from Scindia's ministers in consideration of equivalent services, the a declaration, that to their adoption two con-ditions were indispensable: the first might mise on his part to Scindia of two crores of readily have been expected—it was, that the rupees; he also engaged to procure Shirzee pense of Scindia's march to his capital. The expenses of Scindia's marriage exhausted his second could scarcely have been anticipated, treasury, and he was left without the means of even by those best acquainted with Mahratta providing for the charges of his military estabmodesty, and best qualified to judge of its ex-lishment. In this emergency he pressed the tent—it was, that in the event of a junction of peishwa for payment of the two crores of rupees Scindia's army with a British force, the Mah. which had been promised. The prince deratta leader should exercise command over clared himself unable to raise them; but suggested that Shirzee Rao should be nominated Scindia's dewan, and in this character levy for the amount upon the rich inhabitants of Poona. The plan was adopted, and Scindia's treasury replenished by the perpetration of a series of atrocities rarely equalled even in countries where such modes of obtaining money are in ordinary practice. All who possessed wealth, or were supposed to possess it, were subjected to the most frightful tortures, under though it could not undertake to provide for appointment, says, "Such were thesecret means the permanent disbursements of the state. by which Shirzee Rao Ghatgav became it is a pointment of the pecuniary assistance to be a provided for appointment, says, "Such were these cret means the amount of the pecuniary assistance to be a pointment of the pecuniary assistance to be a pecuniary assistance to afforded, the conditions on which it was to be Rugonath let loose upon his subjects the viogiven, and the period to be appointed for re-lence and extortion of a monster whose name payment, continued for a lengthened period to will be remembered, while Poona exists, with furnish grounds for discussion, which was conducted by Scindia's servants in a manner which dewan was worthy of its commencement; but did not discredit the established character of at length he fell under the displeasure of

Scindia, and was not only dismissed from his ceived with marks of distinction. employment, but arrested, and for a time subjected to imprisonment. When set at liberty, he commenced a new career of intrigue and crime. In releasing Shirzee Rao, Scindia had been influenced by the advice of a minister named Balloba Tattyha; and the first use which Shirzee Rao made of his freedom was to compass the destruction of his benefactor, to the enemy. This defection being brought together with his adherents. Balloba was at to the notice of Scindia's minister, he, with his instigation thrown into prison, where a natural death released him from further persecution; but his relatives and associates felt the full force of Shirzee's vengeance. For one of them Shirzee invented a new mode of execution: a number of rockets were fastened on him, which being fired, carried the wretched man onward, mangling his body in a horrible manner, to the amusement of the brutal contriver of this new mode of frightful punish-When Scindia departed to the northward, Shirzee Rao remained in the Deccan to manage the chieftain's affairs in that quarter. Left there estensibly to suppress the troubles and disorders which prevailed, his presence tended but to increase them. After pursuing his vocation of plunder to the southward, he repaired with a small party to Poona, where he became importunate in his demands for money, and sat in dhurna at the door of the peishwa's favourite minister. This experiment had nearly cost him his liberty, if not his life. The minister, under pretence of giving him hills on certain bankers, invited him into the house, received him there with extraordinary courtesy, and, after a due interchange of civilities, rose apparently to fetch the promised bills. But the favour which he intended to bestow was of a different kind. His departure was to be the signal for seizing and perhaps nurdering his unwelcome visitor. Shirzee Rao, either apprised of the intention or. which is more probable, suspecting it from some indication on the part of his host, drew this sword, sprang at the throat of the minister, nd in this manner dragged him into the street, where, vaulting upon his horse, he with his party made the best of their way to the army which he commanded; the whole of which he forthwith brought to Poons, resolving to plunder and burn the city. The interference of the British resident became necessary to prevent mi-chief; and it was only Scindia's want of the services of this turbulent and audacious man in another place which relieved the peishwa from the fear and danger resulting from his proximity. This was the man who now appeared at Scindia's durbar to inflame the illfeeling already prevailing therein against the Eurlish. His influence over Scindia appeared to be at great as it had ever been, and he was admitted to frequent secret conferences. His character and feelings were too well known to with a military force, to be employed in re-lease any doubt of the normale of these oppor-ducing. Hosheingabad once more under his tenities. Had his views required illustration, authority; and in consequence, the nabol of it would have been found in the fact that he Bhopal had made application to the British

The arrival of Shirzee Rao, the attention which he secured, and the continued presence of Holkar's vakcel, called forth fresh remonstrances from the British resident, which were met by fresh assurances of good faith and good disposition towards the English. In the mean time Bappoojee Scindia, with his army, had fallen off to the enemy. This defection being brought that impudent reliance upon European credulity which Mahratta negotiators so often manifest, and for the indulgence of which, it must be admitted, European diplomatists have not unfrequently afforded ample encouragement, stated the substance of some letters, or pretended letters, from Bappoojee Scindia, representing his submission to Holkar as a measure of necessity, but expressing his resolution to return immediately to his duty. somewhat more than the resident was prepared to credit; and after expressing some surprise at his want of faith, Scindia's ministers promised inquiry and explanation. afterwards, Bappoo Wittul, the minister who was believed the best affected to a British alliance, was attacked by disease, which terminated in his death. His illness transferred Scindia entirely into the hands of Shirzee Rao, whose intriguing spirit found fit occupation in moulding the mind of his weak, vacillating son-inlaw to his will. Scindia now marched from Borhampore. He was attended, not only by his ministers and servants, but also by Holkar's vakeel. This was one indication of his feeling towards his British ally. He did not march direct to Oujcin, as suggested by the British resident, and as the state of affairs imperiously required-and this was another. It was officially intimated to the resident that Scindia would proceed in the first instance to Jellode, a place within his own dominions, and there settle the future direction of his march. On the morning of the day, however, fixed on for the commencement of the march, and after both Scindia and the resident were actually in motion, the former, without any announcement of his intention, suddenly changed his course, and proceeded in the direction of Bhopal. Bhopal was at this time an object of some interest. The fort and territory of Hosheingabad, belonging to the nabob of Bhopal, had long been coveted by the rajah of Berar, who ultimately attained his object by corrupting the persons in charge of the fort. When the rajah of Berar was engaged in hostilities with the British government, the nabob of Bhopal took advantage of the circumstance to endeavour to regain Hosheingahad, and succeeded. It had been rumoured that Scindia, in consideration of a sum of money to be paid by the rajah of Berar, was to assist that chief was risted by Holkar's valued, whom he re-freedent with Scindia to be placed under the states with which it was at amity.

Cheonee. Immediately on reaching the camp, the British representative despatched Mr. Jenkins, the secretary to the residency, to remonstrate. That gentleman accordingly reout the inconsistency of Scindia's conduct with the British resident's repeated applications, had declared that he was unable to march | ment. which maintained relations of peace both with Scindia and the British Government, and was thus a violation of the principles of the defensive alliance, which were opposed to aggresthe provisions of the subsidiary treaty, which peace with their former chief. increase the number of their enemics.

his conduct. ciently with the British force; arguing, that any implicit reliance on his friendship.

protection of the British government. Ho | march being, as the British functionary alleged, had some claim, on the ground of former ser- unconnected with the objects of the war, it vices, to the protection which he sought, his was undertaken with especial reference to predecessor in the government having some them; Scindia's design being, as he stated, to years before rendered valuable service to a levy contributions on the nabob of Bhopal, British force under General Goddard, when for the purpose of placing his army in a conthat commander was surrounded by hostility dition to act against the enemy. On part and perfidy. The overture, however, was met of this explanation the British resident, Mr. by general expressions of courtesy, accompanied by a statement that the policy of the British government precluded its interposition not a tributary to Scindia, so considered, to influence the results of any contest between although it is true that he has been subjected to such exactions as the superior force of Serious illness had prevented the British Scindia has occasionally rendered it convenient resident from keeping up with the march of for him to enforce; but the true object of Scindia, and he did not overtake him until he Scindia's march to this place was founded on had arrived within the territories of Bhopal, a plan concerted between him and the rajah of where his troops were employed under Shirzee Nagpore, for the purpose of assisting Ruggojee Rao in attacking a small fortified village named | Bhonsla in wresting the fort and territory of Hosheingabad from the nabob of Bhopal." The designs of the rajah of Berar with respect to Hosheingabad have been already mentioned. It was believed that his views extended further paired to the durkar, and after adverting to than the recovery of the fort and territory the existing state of facts, proceeded to point known by that name. There was some reason to apprehend that he meditated the resumpthe obligations of the defensive alliance. He tion, by force of arms, of the territory which represented that, although Scindia, in reply to had been surrendered by the treaty so lately concluded by him with the British govern-The existence of such views was atunless pecuniary aid were afforded by the tested by a series of correspondence which fell British government, he had marched, notwith-linto the hands of the British resident at Nagstanding he had received no such aid, and to a pore; and was further corroborated by the distance which, in the direction recommended efforts made by the rajah to raise funds, and by the resident, would have enabled him to by the extraordinary activity which appeared form a junction with the British force under to pervade the various departments of his go-Colonel Murray; that the late movement of vernment. For some time previously to these Scindia's army was unconnected with any discoveries, it had been observed that no cordial single chiest of the context with Talkan declines of friendship spirited on the part of single object of the contest with Holkar; feelings of friendship existed on the part of that it was directed to the injury of a state the rajah towards the British government. That government felt bound to adhere to certain engagements made with parties previously dependents upon the rajah of Berar, and to continue to extend to them its prosive war and the spirit of conquest; and that tection, although in some instances the date of the attack upon Bhopal was at variance with the treaties was subsequent to that of the treaty, on the other hand, was again violated was offered to the rajah; but though he by the withdrawal of Scindia's forces from the sullenly accepted the list tendered to him of war with Holkar, and the employment of them his alienated dependents, he refused to accept on objects in which the allied powers had no of the reparation, or to enter into any adjust interest, and in a manner calculated to ditional engagements, though attended with advantage to himself. The rainh, indeed, After many attempts to evade discussion eventually expressed himself satisfied that the altogether, Scindia made an effort to justify British government had acted correctly; but He still maintained that he was it was evident that he had experienced a degree destitute of the means of co-operating effi- of disappointment which must long preclude as Holkar's force consisted principally of length a military force was put in motion, cavalry, thirty thousand horse would be neces- which marched nearly five miles from Nagsary to oppose him, and that Colonel Murray pore, in the direction of Hosheingabad; while had no horse. His march to Bhopal, Scindia military preparations were in progress in justified by alleging that the nabob was his Ruttenpore, for the alleged purpose of retributary; that the step which he had taken ducing some refractory zemindars, but the encouraged officers to join him who would extent of which seem disproportioned to the otherwise have been deterred by the want of object. In other quarters similar preparations pecuniary resources; and that so far from his were made under similar pretences. In the mean time a very suspicious correspondence agent in Bundleound intercepted a letter adwas carried on between the rajah of Berar dressed by Ambajee Inglia, to a petty rajah and Ameer Khan. According to the rajah's ministers, the objects of the latter were to deter the rajah from proceeding against the nabob of Bhopal, and to obtain a sum of money. The British resident was of opinion that his purpose was to prevail on the rajah to join in a combination against the English. The intercourse of native princes is surrounded with so much mystery, that it is almost always difficult to ascertain its precise There was undoubtedly sufficient cause for the distrust felt by the British authorities in this case, but the course of circumstances seemed to countenance the statement of the rajah, as Ameer Khan actually invaded his territories and committed various OXCOSSOS.

While the intentions of the rajah of Berar were thus doubtful, the state of affairs at Scindia's camp continued to indicate the hostile feelings of that chieftain. The British resident, Mr. Webbo, died soon after the advance from Borhampore. Colonel Close was instructed to proceed from Poons, to assume the charge vacated by the death of Mr. Webbe, the duties of which were in the interval performed by Mr. Jonkins. Scindia, leaving Hosheingabad in his rear, had now advanced into the territories of the rajah of Berar, and Mr. Jonkins felt bound to demand an explanation of this movement, as well as of the intercourse known to have taken place between Scindia and the rajah. After various expedients for procrastination, Scindia appointed a day to receive the acting resident, when, in answer to the latter point of inquiry, doclared that the rajah of Berar had applied to him to assist him in recovering Hosheingabad and another fortress from the mabob of Bhopal, but that he had not answered the application, and did not intend to interfere in the prosecution of an object in which he nd no interest. To the former inquiry, and others, as to the fact of his having ordered troops in Malwa to quit that possession and join the army under his personal command, as to his having required his Pindarries also to join him, and as to the destination of his march, he answered that he had chosen the route which he was pursuing because of the scarcity of grain in the direct route to Oujein; that he was marching through the territories of the rajah of Berar for the purpose of crossing the Nerbudda at a ford which would onable him to proceed to Saugur, and that he had withdrawn his troops from Malwa for the purpose of assembling his army in a plentiful country. Having given this explanation of his conduct, Scindia concluded, as usual with Mahratta princes under such cir-cumstances, by assurances of his faithful adwith the British government.

dependent on the poishwa, stating that Scindia and the rainh of Borar had combined against the British power; that the former with his army was on his march to join Ameer Khan; that when the junction should be effected, Scindia was to direct his course towards Calpee, on the Jumna, while the rajah of Berar should invade Bengal; and that Ambajec had despatched a force into the territory of the rana of Gohud for the purpose of recovering possession of it. The immediate object of the letter was to induce the person to whom it was addressed to unite his force with the troops sent by Ambajee into Gohud. It was soon ascertained that one portion at least of the intelligence transmitted by Ambajee was true. A considerable body of troops belonging to that personage had actually invaded Gohud, and laid siege to a fort at a short distance from Gwalior. This was followed by the attack and defeat of a body of ' the rana of Gohud's troops. Thus was furnished new ground of remonstrance with Scindin, and the acting resident at his camp received instructions adapted to the occasion.

Before their arrival, Soindia, who had been pursuing his march along the north bank of the Norbudda, intimated that he held from the poishwa an unliquidated assignment upon Saugur, and expressed an intention of realiz-Mr. Jenkins stronuously ing the amount. opposed the execution of this project, which he declared would be regarded as an act of hostility against the poishwa. He demanded that the design should be abandoned, and that Scindin's profligato minister, Shirzee Rao, should be dismissed; and, on failure of compliance with these demands, intimated that his departure from Scindin's camp would become necessary. Scindia affected to comply in both instances; but Shirzee Rao was not dismissed, and his master continued to march towards the town of Saugur. The depredations committed by Scindia's troops in the country bearing that name again called forth remonstrance from Mr. Jenkins, and a renewal of his domand for permission to depart. In consequence he received a visit from a servant of Scindia, who alleged, in extenuation of the offensive conduct of his chief, that disappointment at not receiving the pecuniary aid expected from the English had led him to Saugur. Mr. Jenkins, in reply, insisted on the point previously urged, that the plunder of the country by Scindia's Pindaries constituted an act of direct hostility against an ally of the British government; and recapitulated the grounds of his repeated remonstrances, showing that, instead of going to Oujoin, as was necessary for the benefit of the cause of the allies, Scindin had sacrificed the interests of herence to the obligation of his orgagoments that cause by proceeding in an opposite direction; and that, although the want of funds About the time when these explanations for the pay of his troops was the constant suband these assurances were afforded, the British ject of complaint, the numbers of his troops respects regulate his conduct according to his put in motion. Their spirits were not broken professions, he would continue to attend his nor their efficiency impaired by a march of court. The meeting at which the above communication was made, took place on the 1st of January, 1805. On the 6th Scindia advanced to Saugur, where he was joined by nine battalintent in this of his those which were he was joined by nine battalintent in this of his those was informed to his wife put in motion. Their spirits were not broken nor their efficiency impaired by a march of court. The meeting at which the above communication was made, took place on the 1st of put in motion. Their spirits were not broken nor their efficiency impaired by a march of court. The meeting at which the above communication was made, took place on the 1st of put in motion. Their spirits were not broken nor their efficiency impaired by a march of harassing length. They received orders to pitch their tents at the end of three miles; January, 1805. On the 6th Scindia advanced to the court of the single matter than the spirits were not broken nor their efficiency impaired by a march of harassing length. They received orders to pitch their tents at the end of three miles; January, 1805. march on the following morning, and required within thirteen days after the death of a memshould go to Oujein or the British representa- arrangement. This message retive receive his dismission. sembled a former communication from Scindia Mr. Jenkins became officially acquainted with to a British agent, that the result of an the incursion of Ambajee Inglia into Gohud. approaching interview would decide whether He thereupon, in conformity with instructions it should be peace or war; and evinced that from the governor-general, addressed a memothe lesson which Scindia had received had not rial to Scindia, setting forth the fact of the sufficed to cradicate the arrogance which had hostile incursion, with a copy of Ambajee's then led him to defy the power of the Englisher to the peishwa's tributary; calling for lish government. On receiving it, Mr. Jenproof that Ambajee's assertion that Scindia, kins immediately struck his tents and prepared the rajah of Berar, Ameer Khan, and himself for departure. Scindia then thought that he had gone too far, and representations were made to the resident which induced him to cern in the proceedings of Ambajee; and postpone his march. He was solemnly as-demanding the immediate issue of an order sured that on the 16th Scindia would march directing that person to withdraw his troops for Oujcin, and would thenceforward act in from Gohud, together with a formal declaraevery respect in accordance with the advice of tion of Scindin's entire concurrence in the the British functionaries. The delay of six measures that might be necessary for his days was required in consequence of the death | punishment. The memorial, which was accomof a member of the chieftain's family; and the panied by a verbal message suggesting the imconsent of the acting resident was secured by mediate transmission of proper communica-information conveyed to him, to the effect that tions to the governor-general and to Ambajee, the arrival of Ambajee would probably lead to not producing any satisfactory result, strong the expulsion of Shirzee Rao. Mr. Jenkins remonstrance followed, accompanied by an hostilities with the British government.

the march, in conformity with the last arrange- intimation of this act of forbearance was accom-

continued to be augmented. The acting resi-[with the guns, continued to occupy their dent concluded his representation by promising position in the vicinity of Saugur. Not less that, if Scindia would immediately proceed in observable was the care which his highness the direction of Oujein, and would in other manifested for those of his troops who were ons of his infantry and sixty-five guns. From to halt on the spot for four days. The British the 7th to the 9th the army of Scindia was officer had recourse to a duty which repetition The British employed in investing the fort of Saugur, for must have rendered familiar. He remonthe purpose of realizing the amount of his strated; and was answered that, in conformity pretended claim; and in consequence he was with the pledge that had been given, Scindia informed that the British representative would had marched at the time specified; but that, To this intimation and demand it ber of his family, it was inconsistent with was answered that an agent from Scindia established custom to quit the spot where the should wait upon the resident, and that all calamity had taken place. He declared, how-points should be satisfactorily arranged. But ever, that at the end of the four days which the resident having repeated his application, remained to complete the required period of remained to complete the required period of the conciliatory tone was exchanged for that mourning he would positively proceed to of arrogance and defiance. It was signified Oujein. What degree of credit the British that Ambajee Inglia was expected to arrive resident gave to this promise may readily be in the space of eight days, and that on his conceived; but not being desirous to precipiarrival it would be determined whether Scindia tate war, he acquiesced in the proposed

Before the expiration of the period of halting, were combined against the British government was unfounded, and that Scindia had no conwas not then aware of the invasion of Gohud intimation that, in the event of Scindia by Ambajee; and according to general opinion, marching on the following morning in the that personage was adverse to the renewal of direction of Oujein, the resident might be induced to remain in the camp, according to On the evening preceding the day on which the orders of the governor-general; but the ment, was to commence, Scindia applied for a panied by very significant warnings as to the further delay of two days, accompanying the consequences to be apprehended from the hos-application with a solemn promise of then tile and treacherous courses pursued by the prosecuting the march to Oujein without a chief and his dependents. Fresh attempts to halt. With some reluctance the resident lull the suspicions of the resident, and to inassented; and on the 18th of January the duce him to consent to further delay, followed; chief actually commenced his march. It was but no satisfactory steps being taken, the resi-observable, however, that only a small part of dent again demanded passports. His demand his army accompanied him; the larger portion, received an insolent answer; and on the 23rd January he departed without them, and to resume them-that the letters, when commarched fourteen miles. This was a proceeding for which Scindia was not prepared, and it excited some dismay. Two persons were immediately despatched to overtake the British officer, and, if possible, prevail upon him to forego his intention. Mr. Jenkins refused to listen to their entreaties until assured by them that they were authorized to pledge Scindia's name for the performance of any conditions which might be necessary to procure the rcsident's return. He then proposed the following: that on the day after his return to and plundered of every article of value. the camp. Scindia should seriously enter upon his long-promised and long-deferred march and among the wounded were the lieutenant to Oujein, and proceed thither without any in command and the surgeon attached to the further halts, except at the necessary and usual intervals; that he should without delay act in conformity with the resident's advice in regard to Ambajee, and also disavow in a letter to the governor-general the acts of that person, and of another who had appeared in the character of Scindia's agent at Hyderabad, where, by exaggerating the successes of Holkar, and had been perpetrated. announcing an extended alliance against the the residency deprived it of all outward claims British government, to which Scindia and the to respect, and the spirit prevailing in Scindia's rajah of Berar were to be parties, he had endeavoured to promote the objects which such an alliance would be intended to advance. The recall of this person was required to be his office could no longer command even decent effected through a letter from Scindia to be regard, and he requested permission to retire delivered to Mr. Jenkins, and by him forwarded to the British resident at Hyderabad. The messengers agreed in the most formal manner to the prescribed conditions, and Mr. in reply expressed great concern at what had Jenkins returned to Scindia's camp on the happened, but declined to comply with the morning of the day after he had quitted it.

Mr. Jenkins's return, he learned that Scindia scribed by himself :- "Under the operation of intended to halt on the following day. This the late events, the British residency is become being a direct violation of one of the con- a degraded spectacle to a camp by which it ditions of the resident's return, he had only was formerly held in the utmost veneration to choose between again quitting the camp or and respect. Our equipage is reduced to a ad not hesitate in taking the former course, out had proceeded only a short distance, when he was again called back by a message from Scindia, expressing a desire to receive a visit of which they presume to insult us with the from him. He accordingly directed his bagfrom him. He accordingly directed his bag-proffer for sale of our plundered enects. Exgage to remain at a grove in the vicinity of posed to these insults and to the entire neglect Scindia's regular brigade, and proceeded with of the government, which does not think it Lieutenant Stuart, the officer commanding his necessary even to profess regret for what has escort, to the tent of the vacillating and treacherous chief. Some idle attempts were its arms and accoutrements, and disabled by made by Scindia to excuse his conduct, and the loss of about fifty men killed and wounded, these being disposed of, he expressed himself while so far from being protected we have ready to comply immediately with the resi- been openly attacked by Scindia's army, you dent's request as to Ambajee, and to recom- will in some measure conceive the irksomeness mence his march on the following morning. Mr. Jenkins was requested to retire to another pleted, should be sent for the resident's inspection, and that if their terms should not entirely accord with his wishes, he could return to the chieftain's tent in the evening and suggest the required alterations. On the faith of this arrangement Mr. Jenkins despatched orders recalling his baggage. The baggage, however, before the arrival of the orders, had passed out of the hands of those left in charge of it. The British camp had been attacked by the entire body of Pindarries retained by Scindia, escort, in defending it, had suffered severely, residency. An attempt to plunder the British camp had been made some weeks before, with partial success. In this second instance the success was complete. The loss of property, though productive of the most serious inconvenience to the resident and his attendants, was not the worst result of the outrage which had been perpetrated. The circumstances of camp was not such as to supply the want of them. Mr. Jenkins was naturally and justly anxious to withdraw from a situation where to some place of safety, where he might avail himself of the first opportunity that should offer of proceeding to a British camp. Scindia wish of the resident to quit the camp. He The experience of a few hours sufficed to accordingly remained, and the consequent test Scindia's sincerity. On the evening of position of the British residency is thus demaining a monument of the degradation single tent, which occupies a small corner of the government which he represented. He Scindia's encampment; and in this situation we are exposed to the derision of the plunderers, who triumph in the protection of a nefarious government, under the countenance proffer for sale of our plundered effects. Expassed, the excort of the residency, deprived of of our situation."

In this miserable condition did the British tent with rome Mahratta officers, to prepare residency accompany the march of Scindia, the letters; and some progress and been made, who left the vicinity of Saugur on the 24th when it was announced that Scindia's devo- of February, leaving there, however, some tions had been interrupted by the arrival of battalions under an officer named Baptiste, of the British resident—that he was now anxious French origin but native birth, to realize the induced the resident to consent to receive a visit from him. sion, which he most justly concluded must deputed, and who, it could not be doubted, find place there, that the outrage perpetrated was ready faithfully to discharge this trust. on the British camp had not been committed would not interrupt the friendship subsisting assistance. The next subject was one which between the two states. The resident made would perhaps have been avoided by negolittle answer, conceiving this course the most tintors of any other race than that of the dignity of his office and government. Of the presented a curious version of the circummotives which actuate a Mahratta it is at all stances under which Bappoojee Scindia passed success of the British arms. The weakness of sum. Bappoojee, however, it was represented, Scindia's character, combined with his intense being, for want of the required assistance, liatred of the English and his participation in unable to sustain his troops, was obliged to the duplicity which is always an element in despatch an officer named Suddasheo Rao, great fluctuations in his feelings and deport- provisions; himself, with three thousand men, vernor-general above noticed is remarkable. situation, according to Scindia's statement, The letter bore the date of the 18th of October. they exerted themselves most meritoriously. It was forwarded by two messengers on foot The succeeding part of the narrative was a vakeel was to proceed with the letter to Cal- resident. After the enumeration of his pecucutta, in order to deliver it in person; but he niary grievances, Scindia proceeded to the did not report his arrival in that city till the statement of other grounds of complaint. 18th of February, exactly four months after The first related to a question which had the date of the letter. It has been questioned been settled professedly to the satisfaction, contribution which it had been the pleasure of difficulty is to be found in the supposition the Mabratta chief to exact. Mr. Jenkins, that the letter was written under the influence feeling that under its present circumstances of the feelings excited by the successes of the British residency could command no Holkar and the disasters of Colonel Monson; respect, and desirous of receiving the instruc- that subsequent events gave rise to different tions of the governor-general for the guidance feelings and expectations, which suggested of his future conduct, wished to decline any political intercourse with Scindia or his the ultimate determination to revert to the servants; but the earnest request of the chief original intention of the writer, by causing it to be delivered at its destination, was prompted On that occasion Scindia by the reverses of the English before Bhurtdisplayed a combination of hypocrisy and pore. Another extraordinary fact connected audacity worthy of the race to which he with this proceeding is, that it was transmitted belonged. He endeavoured to justify the without the knowledge of the British resident general conduct of his government in regard with Scindia, whose duty it was to forward to to his engagements with the English, and to his government any representation which he remove from the resident's mind the impres- might receive from that to which he was ted The letter, after an ordinary compliment, It adverted to the relations subsisting between without his approbation or cognizance. It adverted to the relations subsisting between was, he alleged, to be attributed entirely to Scindia and the Company's government, and the Pindarries, over whom he had no control. thence proceeded to complain of the neglect He expressed, too, a hope that the misfortune of the latter to afford to the chief pecuniary accordant with the due maintenance of the Mahrattas. It arose out of the former, and times difficult to judge; but as Scindia had over to the enemy; a result which was attri-before this period held language widely dif-buted to the want of funds. It was alleged ferent in its character, and had addressed to that on an application being made by Bapthe governor-general a letter framed in a tone poojee to Colonel Monson for money to pay far from conciliatory, the expression of a his troops, the British commander answered desire for the preservation of amity with a that he could advance none, and referred the state whose representative had so recently applicant to General Lake. This was some-been exposed to insult and violence, must be thing more than mere misrepresentation—it regarded as the effect of some temporary was a positive falsehood; for Colonel Monson cause, probably of a belief in the eventual had advanced to Bappoojee a considerable the moral constitution of a Mahratta, produced with a body of horse and foot, in search of The history of the letter to the go- remaining with Colonel Monson; in which to a person residing at Benares, who for many tissue of untruths and misrepresentations, years had held the nominal appointment of ending with a statement of the reasons which vakeel, first to the predecessor of Dowlut Rao led Bappoojce to join Holkar, differing but Scindia, and subsequently to himself. The little from that which was given to the British whether Scindia knew anything of this letter, and whether its preparation and transmission were not altogether the acts of his ministers. Scindia's ministers—the transfer of Gohud whomsoever it might be framed, by whomsoever forwarded, it is extraordinary that it should have been four months on its journey to Calcutta. The only possible solution of the

take charge of them. added that, with reference to the operations of ment, of reviving the efficiency of your declinthe war with Holkar, it had become inexpedient at that period to give them up; but that they would be surrendered at the termination of hostilities with the last-named chief, or rented by the English, as Scindia might choose. Payment of the collections from those pergunnas, Scindia was informed, would be regularly made to his officers until the delivery of the With regard to other collections which Scindia claimed, the governor-general professed never before to have heard of the claim; but intimated that an investigation should take place, and that when the accounts were adjusted, payment should be made of whatever might be found due. To the charge of the British having abandoned to devastation part of Scindia's territories, the governorgeneral replied, that the British were not bound to suppress internal disturbances, or to protect the country against robbers; but that, notwithstanding, directions should be given for the preservation of order. The relinquishment of the jaghires in Hindostan, it was stated, would take place forthwith, on a proper application to the commander-in-chief; and the jaghiredars would receive from the British government whatever that government had received on account of the jaghire lands since the treaty of peace. In reply to the last head of charge, that the British had not protected Scindia's territory from invasion, but had permitted Holkar and Ameer Khan to ravage and plunder within it, it was observed, that the obligation of a defensive alliance was mutual, and that the British might with equal justice complain of Scindia for not preventing the incursions of the enemy into the Company's territories. "An appeal to the evidence of facts, however," continued the governorgeneral, "will manifest the degree in which either state has fulfilled the obligations of the defensive alliance. By the valour, activity, and skill of the British armies, Jeswunt Rao Holkar has been deprived of nearly all his over to your highness's officers. The whole of his force has been repeatedly defeated and artillery; and he has been deprived of every resource but that which he derives from the by which those victories have been achieved,

It was very properly | purpose of restoring the vigour of your governing resources, and of co-operating with the British troops in the prosecution of the war, your highness uniformly asserted your inability to proceed, for want of funds to pay your troops; and in your highness's letter you have ascribed your detention at Borhampore to the same cause. Your highness, however, stated in the same letter, that you had been enabled by loans to provide necessaries for your march, and for collecting your troops; that you had accordingly marched from Borhampore; that you had written to all the officers of your troops to join you from every quarter; and that it was your intention to raise new troops." On the foundation of the facts referred to in this passage, the governor-general raises the following conclusion, and addresses the exhortation which succeeds:-"It is evident. therefore, that your highness never intended to comply with the suggestion of the resident on the subject of your return to Oujein; for your highness assigned the deficiency of your funds as the only cause which prevented your return to Oujein in conformity with the resident's advice; and when your highness, according to your own declaration, had obtained funds, you marched in a different direction, and afforded to the resident no explanation of the nature of your designs. Under these circumstances, it is evident that your highness never entertained the design of proceeding to Oujein, or of co-operating with the British troops in the prosecution of the war. what degree of justice, therefore, can your highness complain of the conduct of the British government in withholding the pecuniary aid which you solicited, until adequate security had been obtained for the due application of those funds to the common cause of the allies, instead of perverting the aid furnished by the allies to the cause of the enemy? Your highness," the governor-general continues, "has stated in your letter, that it was your determined resolution, after having collected a territorial possessions; a part of which, includ-ing the capital city of Indore, was delivered and new levies, to proceed to chastise the enemy; and your highness adds, 'How can I be content to see a territory which for a long nearly destroyed, with the loss of all his time has been in my possession, and in the conquest of which crores of rupees have been expended, and great battles have been fought, feeble and precarious aid of the rajah of in the possession of another?'—and that 'it Bhurtpore. Has your highness," it was then is no difficult matter to wrest the territory properly asked, "according to the provisions from the hands of the enemy.' I am unable of the treaty, contributed in any degree to to comprehend your highness's meaning in the these victories? On the contrary, has not the passage above quoted. The enemy has not at conduct of your highness and of your officers any stage of the war been able to effect the aided the cause of the enemy against the power conquest of a single district, and wherever the British troops have approached, the enemy has and with which your highness was pledged to sought his safety in a precipitate flight; and co-operate?" After some remarks on various although, subsequently to the date of your parts of the conduct of Scindia during the war, highness's letter, you have received constant his more recent proceedings were thus noticed. reports of the repeated defeats of the enemy "On every occasion when the resident urged by the British troops, your highness has conyour highness to proceed to Oujein for the tinued to augment your forces and to advance but it was not, as the culprit might reasonably and were in no respect under the resident's have apprehended, the prelude to a declaration authority. He added, with becoming spirit, that the day of repentance was past, and that the perfidy of the transgressor was about to be visited with condign punishment. Not-withstanding all that had occurred, Scindia was assured that the British government were solicitous to maintain with him the relations of amity, and to respect the provisions of the treaties of peace and defensive alliance, provided he should adopt a course of proceeding accordant with those engagements.

So strong indeed was the desire entertained by the British government for the preservation of peace, and so carnest the wish that Scindia should be satisfied on this point, that, in contemplation of the possibility of the British representative being compelled to withdraw by the refusal of Scindia to afford any satisfaction for the attack on the British camp, he was instructed to state that his departure, though rendered necessary by the conduct of Scindia, had no connection with any hostile designs towards that chief on the part of the British government, which would continue disposed to peace so long as Scindia should abstain from any act of direct aggression against the Company or their allies.

But Scindia was actuated by very different feelings. His court had for some time appeared to be occupied by some matter of importance. At length the ladies of his family and his heavy baggage were sent out of camp, to be conveyed to some place of safety; and it was obvious that some extraordinary movement was about to take place. In an interview afforded by the acting British resident to one of Scindia's ministers, on the 23rd of March, the his folly. secret was revealed. Scindia's agent stated that his master had viewed with sorrow and Scindia's minister, Shirzee Rao, had entertained regret the continued length of the war between the most inveterate feelings of hatred towards Holkar and the English, and (being a person of the British government, and had anxiously singular sensibility) the consequent effusion of watched the arrival of a fitting opportunity for blood. His humanity was of too active a nature to be contented with merely lamenting these calamities; he had a plan for putting an Scindia and his servants to the British authoend to them—this was by marching directly rities. These avowed friendship, while the to Bhurtpore, for the purpose of offering his actions of those who made them spoke only mediation to restore the blessings of peace. hostility. The change which it was alleged The purport of the minister's visit, it was ex- had passed over Shirzee Rao was as sudden as plained, was, therefore, to request that the it was marvellous, and a most extraordinary British resident would write to the different manifestation of its effect was the projected officers in command of British detachments march to Bhurtpore. in the neighbourhood of Gwalior, and other places in the direction of Scindia's proposed Scindia's intention to Mr. Jenkins, one of march, to inform them of that chieftain's Scindia's servants had been admitted to an pacific intentions, and to prevent his being interview with Colonel Close at Nagpore. molested by the troops stationed at the ghauts | He had nothing to show that he was accredited on his route. Mr. Jenkins, replied, that he by the Mahratta chief, but he was a person of was entirely unacquainted with the arrange-high rank and claimed to be accredited. ments made by the governor-general and the person did not affect to conceal the alienation commander-in-chief for the protection of the of Scindia's feelings from the English, nor the countries to which allusion had been made, and views under which he had moved in opposition that it was impossible for him to comply with to the recommendation of the British resident. the request made on behalf of Scindia, as the He asked whether it was not perceived that officers in command of the British troops re- Scindia was offended when he marched to the ceived their orders from the commander-iu-chief, | northward; and on Colonel Close ans. -----ing with reference to the proposed mediation, that so long as Scindia continued in alliance with the British power, the utmost attention would be paid to his interests as well as to those of all other allies, but that the British government neither required nor admitted the arbitration of any state whatever. Scindia, it will be recollected, had professed to regard Holkar as an enemy—had denied that the vakeel of that chief remained with his consent or knowledge within his camp-had complained of the British government for not adequately protecting his dominions against Holkar, and of their withholding the pecuniary assistance which was required to enable him to take the field effectually against the common enemy. answer of Scindia's minister to Mr. Jenkins's denial of the maharajah's right to arbitrate between the British government and Holkar was, that his master had received repeated solicitations to undertake the office both from Holkar and the rajah of Bhurtpore; thus, with genuine Mahratta audacity, avowing a correspondence which had been repeatedly disclaimed. On the following day Mr. Jenkins received another visit from Scindia's agent, when further illustrations of the duplicity of Scindia's court were afforded. The minister denied that the family of Scindia had departed, or that the heavy baggage had been sent away with any view to rapidity of march, but he admitted (why, is not very apparent) that Scindia's minister had till a very recent period been inimical to the British government, though now it was asserted he had become sensible of There was, indeed, no doubt that the first part of this statement was true-that gratifying those feelings; but of widely different character were the professions made by

Four days before the communication of

to the effect that it could not be supposed that abundant, to his eminent services. Soldiers Scindia would act in opposition to justice and and civilians, Europeans and natives, vied in good faith, an attendant upon Scindia's alleged | rendering him honour. agent asked if it were not supposed that Scindia moved to the northward in consequence of being offended, to what motive was that army in the Deccan. In furtherance of the step ascribed? These avowals that Scindia's movements were influenced by designs which he concealed from the British resident, contrast strikingly with his often-repeated expressions of a desire to comply with the advice of that functionary, his declarations of continued attachment to the British cause, and his professions of anxiety to fulfil his engagements and maintain unimpaired his alliance with the British government.

The governor-general was no sooner apprised of the communications made to Mr. Jenkins and Colonel Close, than, with his characteristic energy, he took measures for frustrating the meditated designs of Scindia. Instructions were forwarded to the commander-in-chief, directing him to reject peremptorily all demands on the part of Scindia which might be at variance with the treaty of peace; to repel any act of hostility from Scindia with promptitude and effect; and to provide, in the event of war, for the safety of Mr. Jenkins and the British residency. Other parts of the instructions referred to the contingency of war being followed by negotiation; and it was distinctly laid down, that Scindia was not to be permitted to treat for Holkar, nor Holkar for Scindia. These orders were explained and enforced by others forwarded a few days afterwards. While provision was thus made for frustrating the hostile designs of Scindia in the north, the south was not neglected. Impressed with a sense of the advantages resulting from the system adopted in the previous war with the confederated Mahratta chieftains, of intrusting very general and extensive powers, both political and military, to the hands of a single local authority, the governoreneral resolved to invest Colonel Close with the same powers which had formerly been exercised by General Wellesley in the Deccan, with the exception of the control of the military commander in Guzerat. On the return of General Wellesley from Calcutta to Madras, it appears to have been for some time doubtful whether he would resume his station in the Deccan or not. It was ultimately determined in the negative; General, now, by the well-merited grace of his sovereign, Sir Arthur Wellesley, being of opinion that his services were no longer necessary; being anxious, with regard to the state of his health, as well as to his professional prospects, to proceed to Europe; thinking also that his presence there might enable him to dispel some misapprehensions with regard to the policy lately pursued in India, and being moreover dissatisfied with the authorities at home. It is satisfactory to relate that the greatest commander of modern times was not permitted to quit the scene of his early glories without testimonies, warm and ministers waited on Mr. Jenkins to announce

Colonel Close, under the powers assigned to him, was to take the command of the main views of the governor-general, Colonel Wallace, commanding the subsidiary force at Poona, and Colonel Haliburton, commanding that at Hyderabad, were ordered to occupy with their troops the positions most favourable for the seizure, if necessary, of Scindia's possessions south of the Nerbudda; but these officers were not to commence operations against Scindia without express orders, except in the event of intelligence reaching them of the actual commencement of hostilities in Hindostan. In Guzerat it was necessary to provide considerable reinforcements, the number of troops in that province having been greatly reduced by the detachment of the force which originally marched under Colonel Murray to Oujein, and subsequently, under General Jones, joined the army of Hindostan. To supply the deficiency thus occasioned, the government of Bombay were instructed to despatch to Guzerat as soon as practicable, and by the safest and most expeditious route, a corps consisting of at least four companies of European infantry, a company of European artillery, and one battalion of sepoys, with a due proportion of camp equipage, artillery, pioneers, lascars, and every necessary equip-ment to enable the corps to be employed on field service the moment it should reach Gu-Colonel Woodington, the officer commanding in the province, was to be instructed to place the corps under him in an efficient state of equipment, and to lay up, at convenient places on the frontier, supplies of grain and Thus reinforced, it was expected that Colonel Woodington would be able, not only to defend Guzerat from invasion, but to attack with success the forts and possessions of Scindia in that province, should war ensue.

Soon after the issue of these several instructions, a letter was received from the acting resident at Scindia's camp, which seemed to indicate more pacific feelings on the part of Scindia than had been contemplated. The resident had held communications with the chief and his ministers, which had produced a satisfactory letter to the governor-general in reply to the demand for reparation on account of the outrage upon the residency, a multiplicity of assurances of friendly intentions, and a promise that Scindia should halt upon the Chumbul until the arrival of Colonel Close. The promise was kept with Mahratta strict-Scindia retired to Subdulghur; but on the 7th of April Ameer Khan left Bhurtpore with the avowed intention of joining Scindia; and on the same day Shirzee Rao, with a large body of Pindarries and a considerable part of Scindia's cavalry, marched towards Bhurtpore. Previously to his departure one of Scindia's had reference to the proposed mediation. by strong professions of fidelity and friendship, and by a repetition of a request formerly made, that Mr. Jenkins would write to the commander-in-chief to desire that hostilities with Holkar might be suspended. The object of undoubtedly to prevent the rajah from entering into a pacific arrangement with the British government; but the design was defeated. the 11th the conditions of a treaty were finally determined upon; and on the 17th, as has been already related, the treaty was signed.

On arriving at Weir, a place about fifteen miles from Bhurtpore, Shirzee Rao addressed a letter to the commander-in-chief, intimating that, at the request of the British resident, Scindia had consented to wait at Subdulghur his camp. Mr. Jenkins answered by expressin expectation of Colonel Close's arrival. was true; but it would be inconsistent with Mahratta custom to offer truth unmixed with some alloy of falsebood; and the announcement of Scindia's position, and the cause of his occupying it, was associated with a representation that the British resident had expressed a desire that Scindia should interpose his mediation for obtaining peace; in consequence of which desire his highness had despatched Shirzee Rao to Bhurtpore to negotiate. The commander-in-chief, in reply, stated that peace having been established between the British government and the rajah of Bhurtpore, the presence of Shirzee Rao at Bhurtpore was unnecessary; that he must not think of advancing, as such a proceeding might subvert the union subsisting between the Company and Scindia. On the following day, however, Shirzee Rao did, with a small party of horse, advance within a short distance of Bhurtpore, and transmitted to the rajah a message soliciting a personal conference. The rajah declined granting the application, and Shirzee Rao returned to Weir without gaining any thing by his movement. At Weir he was joined by Holkar, with three or four thousand horse, and both pro-ceeded towards the camp of Scindia at Subdul-Scindia had for some time maintained, through an agent of his own, a correspondence with the court of Holkar. Some of the letters of this agent to his employer, which fell into the hands of the English, fully confirmed all that was suspected of the views of Scindia, and of the degree of credit to be given to his expressions of fidelity and attachment. It is wearisome to find occasion for recurring so frequently to the task of exhibiting Mahratta chicanery and dissimulation, but it is necessary to the just understanding of the relative circumstances and position of the British government and the Mahratta chiefs. While Scindia

the intended movement, and to explain that it ment, while the former chief was advancing The towards Dhurtpore in the hopes of striking resident demanded an audience of Scindia him- a blow at the interests of his English ally, he self, which was granted, and the chief gave the was profuse in declarations of sincerity and same explanation which had been offered by good faith. Never were his professions more his minister. The statement was accompanied strong than at this period; and it may be added that never were they either more or less honest. In consequence of the movement of Scindia to the northward, Colonel Martindell, who had been stationed in a position to enable him to secure the tranquillity of Bundlecund and to despatching Shirzee Rao to Bhurtpore was protect Gohud from invasion, advanced in the same direction, under orders from the com-mander-in-chief, carefully avoiding any violation of the possessions of either Scindin or his dependents; and on the 8th of April he reached Hingorah, a position on the southern bank of the Chumbul, at a short distance from Dholeporc. His proximity was distasteful to Scindia; and on the 11th that chief requested that the British resident would prevent the approach of Colonel Martindell within twenty coss of ing surprise that Scindia should feel any uneasiness in the presence of the British troops, under the continued assurances given that he considered himself standing in the closest relations of alliance with the British government. He remarked, that under the terms of the treaty the British troops were to act in concert' with those of the maharajah; and he reminded the chieftain that when Colonel Murray was stationed at Oujein no apprehension was expressed, but, on the contrary, Scindia was continually urgent for the assistance of the British troops for the protection of his country. Scindia had no other view than that of maintaining his relation with the British government, what, the resident asked, was there to apprehend from the neighbourhood of the troops of his ally? He added, that Colonel Martindell was within the Company's territories, and that his advance had been rendered necessary by circumstances, more especially by the movement of the notorious Bappoojee Scindia in the direction of Scindia's camp, and the vicinity of considerable bodies of the troops of Holkar. and Ameer Khan, in charge of the baggage of those chiefs. The pointed question put by the resident it was not easy for Mahratta ingenuity to answer; but Scindia urged, that if the Pindarries of his camp should happen to commit any excesses, or should enter into disputes with any of the inferior people of the British camp, the blame of such conduct might attach to the government. Mr. Jenkins answered that the known and exemplary discipline of the British troops should preclude any uneasiness respecting their conduct, and that Scindia's distrust of the inferior part of his own army only afforded a further proof of the necessity of Colonel Martindell's advance to the frontier; though nothing short of actual aggression would produce any hostile proceedings on the part of that officer. Scindia renewing his request that was intriguing with Holkar, who was in a state an application should be made to Colonel Marof avowed war with the Company's govern-tindell to keep at a distance of twenty coss from the Mahratta's camp, the resident shrewdly | Scindia's intended visit was utterly inconsistent suggested, that if the maharajah desired to maintain this distance between the two camps, it would be better that his highness should himself make a movement for the purpose. To this Scindia expressed himself averse, and (according to his own declaration) his aversion had a most creditable origin, being founded on his promise to Mr. Jenkins to wait in the position which he now occupied for the arrival of Colonel Close—so sacred did Scindia deem a promise, even though the person to whom it was made was willing to relieve him from the obligation to an extent which would enable him to effect a purpose which he professed to think important. Scindia at length expressed himself satisfied, and adverting to the presence of Bappoojee Scindia in the neighbourhood, intimated an intention of visiting him. resident was silent till his opinion of the meditated visit was asked. He then referred to the maharajah's sense of propriety, to determine whether or not it was advisable to visit a man whose traitorous conduct had placed him in the position of an enemy to the British government. Scindia manifested his respect for that government, and his regard for the opinion of its representative, by paying his promised visit to Bappoojee Scindia on the same evening.

On the 14th of April the arrival of Ameer Khan was announced to the British representative, as a preparative to the public reception of the respectable freebooter and temporary associate of Holkar; and as it was necessary to devise a plausible pretext for receiving him, it was stated that Scindia supposed that Ameer Khan had been dispatched by Holkar with views corresponding with those which had led to the mission of Shirzee Rao from the camp of Scindia to Bhurtpore. Two days afterwards Scindia sent to congratulate the resident on the conclusion of peace between the British overnment and Bhurtpore. The person who on this occasion the organ of Scindia's politeness took occasion to intimate that Holkar had resolved to renew his attack on the Company's territories, but had abandoned his intention at the persuasion of Shirzee Rao; that Holkar had consented to accept the mediation of Scindia, and, in company with Shirzee Rao, was on his way to Scindia's camp. the following day he arrived with all his remaining force, and was immediately visited by Scindia and his principal officers. This ceremony was preceded by a very characteristic specimen of Mahratta duplicity and insolence. Scindia dispatched a message to Mr. Jenkins, intimating that he was suprised by the sudden arrival of Holkar; that he had desired that chief not to cross the Chumbul, but that the request having been disregarded, Scindia was compelled to visit him; and that it was his particular wish that the British representative should be present at the meeting. The resident answered by pointing out the extreme with the relations subsisting between him and the British government.

The resident, in regard to the duty which he owed to the government represented by bim, did not, therefore, attend the auspicious interview between the two Mahratta chiefs, whose hereditary and personal quarrels were now suspended to enable them to combine against a common object of hatred. But he was soon summoned to an interview, at which various attempts were made to prevail on him to believe that all that had occurred was occasioned by a sincere regard to promote the peace of India. The servants of Scindia descanted on this theme with their habitual fluency, till disconcerted by a remark thrown out by Mr. Jenkins, that since the approach of the troops of an ally within twenty coss had lately created so much uneasiness in the mind of Scindia, it could not fail to excite surprise to find the army of his highness encamped in union with that of the common enemy.

Holkar had not long occupied his proximate position to Scindia before he manifested his power by seizing the person of Ambajee Inglia. This act was intended to extort a contribution, and it appears to have succeeded to the extent of obtaining a promise from Ambajee of the payment of fifty lacs. Ambajee was at this time in the service of Scindia, and apparently in his confidence; yet the chief did not interfere to protect his servant from plunder. conduct in this respect seems to have decided, in the mind of the commander-in-chief, the question in what relation Scindia stood towards the British government; and he suggested that the British resident should take the earliest practicable opportunity of quitting Scindia's camp. On the 21st of April, the commanderin-chief, being now relieved from anxiety with regard to Bhurtpore, quitted that place with the whole of the army under his personal command, and marched in the direction where it was evident his services were about to be His previous success had been required. rewarded by a peerage, and he now bore the title of Lord Lake.

On his march Lord Lake received a letter from Scindia, referring to the treaty of peace concluded with him, and stating that ever since its conclusion the friendship between the two states had been progressively increasing. "The object of the treaty," said Scindia, "was to object of the treaty," said Scindia, give peace to the country and quiet to its inhabitants; and with a view to this object, friendship was established between all the different chiefs and the British government. Jeswunt Rao Holkar alone remains to be settled with; and for the purpose of settling disputes between Holkar and the British government, and concluding a peace between them, I have marched from the city of Borhampore, and have arrived at Subdulghur;" he having formerly professed to be actuated by very dif-ferent views. The letter then adverted to the impropriety of the request, and observing that war between the Company's government and the rajah of Bhurtpore, and to the steps taken advisable to assemble a considerable force in by him in regard to it-omitting, however, all the ceded districts. A call was made upon notice of Scindia's endeavours to induce the the dewan of Mysore to take the field with a rajah to re-engage in war. But the alleged body of the rajah's troops, to which call he services of Scindia in restraining Holkar from promptly responded; and a body of Silladar ravaging the Company's territories were not horse in the service of the rajah was to join forgotten; and the remainder of the letter was employed in commending its bearer to the British commander, as "a man of sense," and one enjoying Scindia's "confidence;" with recommendations to negotiate with Holkar, and to abstain from molesting him. The answer of Lord Lake was such as became a British It exposed the flimsy pretences under which Scindia sought to veil his enmity; apprized him that Mr. Jenkins had been instructed to withdraw from his camp; and intimated that the British government would consider Scindia responsible in his own person, in his family, his ministers, and his servants, for the safe and unmolested journey of its representative, with his attendants and property, to the nearest British camp.

Between the dispatch of Scindia's letter and the receipt of Lord Lake's answer Mr. Jenkins had, in compliance with previous instructions from the commander-in-chief, requested an audience of Scindia, for the purpose of formally demanding the retirement of the chieftain from the position which he occupied, and his separation from Holkar. Scindia appointed a time for receiving the British resident; and the latter, with a view to placing Scindia in a situation to afford a satisfactory answer, transmitted a memorial, embodying the principal facts which he intended to urge at the approaching At the time appointed, however, Scindia neither afforded the promised interview, nor answered the memorial. Great confusion and no inconsiderable portion of alarm was now felt in Scindia's camp, from a report which prevailed that the British troops were in the vicinity; and on the morning of the 28th April the armies both of Scindia and Holkar retreated with the utmost precipitation in the direction of Sheopore, a town situate a short distance south of the Chumbul, on the road to Kotah, and about fifty miles north-east of that They marched on that day twenty miles, on the following day fourteen, and on the third day arrived at Sheopore. Their route lay along the banks of the Chumbul, over deep ravines; the difficulties and fatigue of the march were aggravated by excessive numbers of the troops of both chiefs perished.

It will be recollected that, on the approach of Scindia towards Bhurtpore, vigorous measures had been adopted for placing the British carrying on the operations of war with effect. Under the orders issued for this purpose, Colonel Close had directed Colonel Haliburton, commanding the Hyderabad subsidiary force, to advance to Moolapore, there to be joined far as the prescribed reductions would admit, by the Poons subsidiary force under Colonel provided for. Wallace. At Fort St. George it was deemed the British troops to be assembled at Bellary, in the ceded districts. At Bombay equal activity was displayed in complying with the orders of the governor-general for reinforcing Colonel Woodington in Guzerat. But the retreat of Scindia and his Mahratta colleague from Subdulghur was assigned as a reason for modifying the instructions under which these arrangements had been made. The government of Fort St. George was directed to suspend its preparations, to distribute the army of the presidency in its usual stations, and to proceed immediately to withdraw from the Deccan all corps and establishments which might be extra to the field establishment of the subsidiary forces serving with the peishwa and the nizam. The extra battalions on the establishment of the presidency were also to be reduced, and every practicable diminution of expense effected. Colonel Close had commenced his return to Moolapore, to take the command of the army to be assembled there. On his way he received a copy of the instructions forwarded to Fort St. George, with orders to carry into effect such parts of them as might depend upon the exercise of his authority. The extraordinary military and political powers vested in him were at the same time withdrawn; and he was directed to return to Poona, to resume his duties as resident at the court of the peishwa. Instructions similar in character were forwarded to Bombay, and on the authorities of this presidency the necessity of economy was urgently enforced. The troops in Guzerat were to be cantoned, in order to avoid the expense of field allowances; and no field expenses were to be incurred without the special sanction of the government of Bengal, except under circumstances of urgent and uncontrollable necessity.

The pacific and economical policy now adopted was extended to the army of Lord Lake. Scindia and Holkar were to fly without disturbance and without alarm. The commander-in-chief was instructed not to pursue the retreating forces of the chiefs confederated against the British government, and who held in durance a considerable number of its subheat and the want of water, and considerable jects, but to direct his attention to the necessary arrangements for cantoning his troops. The Bombay army, under General Jones, was to proceed to Rampoorah, on its return to Guzerat; and all the irregular corps in the forces throughout India in a condition for British service were to be reduced. At the time, however, when these orders were issued permanent tranquillity was not expected; for the probability of a renewal of hostilities at no distant period was distinctly noticed, and, as

Scindia had fled with his companion Holkar.

The British territories were not menaced; and though chastisoment was deferred, it did not necessarily follow that it was altogether abandoned. But the flying confederates had carried with them the British residency deputed to one of them; and the safety of the resident and his attendants was an object of interest. On transmitting to Scindia Lord Lake's reply to the chieftain's letter, Mr. Jenkins adverted to the instructions which he had received to withdraw, and requested to be informed of the arrangements which the maharajah might be pleased to make for the purpose of facilitating his departure. Scindia replied that, as his minister, Shirzee Rao, was absent, he could not return a decided answer, but that in the course of two or three days a reply to Lord Lake's letter would be prepared. The resident shortly afterwards renewed the application, expressing his dissatisfaction at being prevented from complying with the orders of the commander-in-chief, and intimating that the cause assigned for delay was inapplicable to the case, inasmuch as Lord Lake did not expect any answer to his letter, but would be justly surprised if the British representative at Scindia's court were not permitted to obey the orders of his own government. Mr. Jenkins further pointed out the propriety of his departure taking place with the sanction and under the protection of Scindia; that established usage, as well as the principles of justice and public faith, required that a person in his situation should be entirely free from restraint; and that a communication of Scindia's intentions was necessary to enable the resident to exculpate ally; and Scindia submitted. mself from the charge of a voluntary devia-

.. from orders which he was bound to obey. thing satisfactory followed this representaon, but Mr. Jenkins was informed that a copy of the commander-in-chief's letter, together on'the subject of his departure, had been communicated to the minister, Shirzee Rao. abate the resident's solicitude to withdraw, the Mahratta officers expatiated with much power on the dangers to which he would be exposed from the state of the country between Scindia's camp and the head-quarters of the British army. To these representations Mr. Jenkins had a ready answer—that whenever a day should be fixed for his departure, the commander-in-chief would dispatch a force to meet him, and that he should require a convoy of Scindia's cavalry merely to show that he had the maharajah's protection, and not to repel any danger. This produced a representation that the advance of a British force was unnecessary, for that whenever the departure should take place, exclusively of about a thousand horse to be furnished in equal proportions by responsible.

On the 10th of May the confederates recommenced their march in the direction of Kotah, without dismissing the British residency. Jenkins had previously suggested, with referonce to the systematic evasion and delay which characterize the proceedings of a Mahratta court, that the commander-in-chief should address a separate letter to Scindia, the object of which should be limited to the demand of safe conduct for the resident and the gentlemen of the residency to the British camp. Lord Lake acted on the suggestion—the letter was transmitted, and the application met with the same success which had attended former demands of the same description.

The confederated chiefs continued to move in a westerly direction towards Ajmeer. progress was marked by some extraordinary events: the first to be noticed demonstrates the power of Holkar in a manner not less decided than the seizure by that chief of Ambajee Inglia. Baptiste, already mentioned as in the service of Scindia, had made himself obnoxious to the wrath of Holkar, and, it was said, meditated the seizure of that chieftain's person. The spirit of vengeance thus roused in Holkar's breast found gratification in the apprehension of his enemy, who was immediately subjected to one of those barbarous inflictions of which native annals afford so many instances. The unhappy prisoner was deprived of sight. He did not long endure the misery of the privation, the outrage leading to his death. did Holkar, the enemy of the British state, act towards a servant of Scindia, its pretended

A still more remarkable event followed, if any thing can be regarded as remarkable in a Mahratta court. Ambajce Inglia having been subjected to the process of plunder, and the plunder having been secured, was released from with the substance of Mr. Jenkins's messages the restraint imposed upon him for the purpose of drawing forth a contribution. This was not very remarkable. The object being attained, the means by which it was to be procured were discontinued as no longer necessary. But the liberation of Ambajee Inglia was followed by extraordinary honour. He was received by Scindia with the highest degree of respect and attention, and the ceremony of his reception was regarded as an indication of his intended appointment to the charge of the executive authority in place of Shirzee Rao. Such instances of capricious change are, indeed, but ordinary events among the Mahrattas.

In the mean time the British residency remained virtually, though not apparently, in a state of imprisonment. The commander-inchief again domanded their release; and ultimately the governor-general addressed a letter to Scindin, requiring their dismission within Scindia and Holkar, the British resident should fourteen days from the receipt of the letter. receive the protection of any force of infantry It was dated the 25th July. On the 30th the and guns that he might desire, and that for Marquis Wellesley signed his last despatch to his safe conduct to the head-quarters of the the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors; British army the maharajah would be fully and at six o'clock on the evening of that day a salute from the battery announced that he was of the Marquis Cornwallis.

The unrivalled brilliancy of the Marquis Wellesley's administration has perhaps tended to obscure the rare qualities which led to its rarely associated with genius; but the unsuccess. The first of those qualities was his happy example of some of his predecessors extraordinary sagacity. position of the British government in India a vision withheld not only from his predecessors, but from his contemporaries. It is common to say of the great minds whose genius might incur. He on one extraordinary occastands out in bold relief amid universal tameness, that they are beyond their age; and if ever this were true of living man, it is of the Marquis Wellesley. His mind was not led captive by words—it was not to be trammelled by conventional opinions. He neither gave credence to the prevailing cant of his time on the subject of India, nor affected to give credence to it; and this leads to the notice of a hundred thousand pounds from the fruits of another striking point of his character—the the capture of Seringapatam; but the royal manly boldness with which he avowed and favour was declined, because he for whose maintained opinions not lightly formed, and which he therefore felt were not lightly to be abandoned.

The vigour with which he carried into action the great plans which his genius suggested is scarcely less remarkable than his sagacity. When resolved to strike a blow at Mysore, he was met by difficulties which ordinary minds would have deemed insuperable. He determined that they should be overcome, and they were overcome. The same determination of purpose-the same unshrinking energy, are manifested in his transactions with Arcot, with Oude, with the peishwa, and indeed in all the principal acts of his government. Like all truly great men, he was not the slave of circumstances—he made circumstances promote his purposes.

Eminent talents are a blessing or a curse alike to their possessor and to the world, according to the use made of them. Those of the Marquis Wellesley were invariably directed to the highest and best ends—the promotion of peace, of the interests of the two countries with which he was connected, with one by birth, and with both by office-and to the He laid in India the happiness of mankind. foundations of peace and increasing prosperity, and if the superstructure was not completed in accordance with the original design, the crime rests on the heads of others. It is not less remarkable than laudable that a mind so vigorous and determined should, in the exercise of almost boundless power, have been kept in constant subjection to the dicsuperseded in his high functions by the arrival possession of moral strength proportioned to his intellectual ability.

To his disinterestedness it is perhaps less necessary to advert, as the sordid vices are He saw the true justifies some notice of his purity in this respect. They grasped at wealth, with little regard to the means by which it was to be acquired, or to the imputations which they sion recoiled from the acceptance of a large sum tendered to him under circumstances which would, to most minds, have appeared to justify its receipt, but which were not such as could satisfy the sensitive honour which ever governed him. The king, in the exercise of his prerogative of disposing of prize, had determined to allot to the governor-general benefit it was intended would not enrich himself at the expense of the brave men whose swords had won for his and their country so noble a conquest.

The same delicacy which led him to decline his sovereign's bounty was manifested, after his return to England, in his steady refusal to accept office, though repeatedly pressed upon him, so long as the malignant charges made against him were suspended over his head. He held that a man against whom such imputations were affoat ought not to have place in his majesty's councils. When they fell to the ground, he readily returned to the service of his country.

In describing the characters of great men, the speck of human infirmity, which is to be found in all, should not be passed over. Marquis Wellesley was ambitious; but his ambition sought gratification not in mere personal aggrandizement, but in connecting his own fame with that of the land to which he belonged, and of the government which he administered—in the diffusion of sound and liberal knowledge, and the extension of the means of happiness among millions of men who knew not his person, and some of them scarcely his name. That name is, however. stamped for ever on their history. British government in India may pass away: its duration, as far as human means are concerned, will depend on the degree in which the policy of the Marquis Wellesley is maintained or abandoned—but whatever its fate. or the length of its existence, the name and tates of justice. That he thus withstood the memory of the greatest statesman by whom it temptations of his position is a proof of the was ever administered are imperishable.

CHAPTER NNL

POLICY OF THE MARQUIA COMMUNICAL PROPOSED RESTORATION OF CONCEPTO SYNCHULIA GOVERNOR-GENERAL -- HIM NOW-INTERPRETENT CO. POLICY -- FORD TAKES LEAD SETTING --TREATH WITH THE THE CHARLES TA FRITTH SALDING HEALTH MICHEN HILL HEALTH QUENCES-REMOVAL OF LORD WILLIAM PERTISCE AND RIS JOHN CALLERY.

arbiter of the destinies of India, to the rank of governor-general ought to have Ind him to one among many equals. His great agoseoms repudiate with contempt.

A month after the date of the Maryela and he entered upon the task before him with Cornwallie's first letter to the Scoret Coopers. an alacrity and energy worthy of a better ob- tee, he addressed to them a second, dated on ject. On the Int of August, 1805, he announced the river near Raj Mahal, in which he avowed to the Court of Directors his arrival and as his dissatisfaction with the existing state of numption of the functions of governor-general, affairs at the courts of the psishwa and the policy which, under instructions from home, the governor-general proposed to pursue. letter, in which he declares that the continu- lordship decidedly rejected distinct proposition ance of "the contest" must involve the state conveyed through the channel of Hurry Po-"in pecuniary difficulties which" it would Phurkiah for a more intimate alliance a "hardly be able to surmount." The war had that which was concluded by the convent-

Tur Marquis Cornwallis arrived in India, presidended with escaldendia temperary addition pared to abandon, on far as might be privile to the reservat expenses, and some Casarial cable, all the advantages galard for the British deficulties had been the result; but to regard government by the wisdom, energy, and per-ithe necessary violiests norther all indicates as accorance of his preference; to relax the and the defence of the extinual interests as bunds by which the Marquis Wellesley had likely to lead to such a degree of evalueran-connected the greater portion of the states of ment as should be nearly, if not altogether, India with the British government; and to insurmountable, was a view of the subject reduce that government from the position of which the judgment as I experience of the

On the same day (two days only after his land, I nizam. His views were stated more at large ing) he addressed the Secret Committee, ex- In communications addressed by his order to pressing great concern at finding that the the residents at those courts. Calcael Clare, government of which he was the head was the resident at Poons, had been compelled to "atill at war with Holkar," and could "hardly animalyert on some of the grees above sef-ba said to be at peace with Scindia." With fored to prevail under the poishwa's governreference to this state of things, the governor-Iment, as in these of all other Oriental pogeneral intimated that he had determined to tentates; and he had reported to his own ed immediately to the upper provinces, government the representations which he had order to avail himself of the covertion of made, and the results. It is unnecessary to tary operations caused by the rainy season, ladvert to the precise points of discussion, or to endeavour to terminate by negotiation a to offer an opinion on them. The affair is re-untest in which," the Marquis Cornwallis was ferred to only for the purpose of showing the pleased to observe, "the most brilliant success | deliberately expressed judgment of the Marcan afford us no solid benefit." It is not ne- quis Cornwallis on an important part of the cessary to pause in order to inquire what was policy of his predecessor. That opinion was the precise meaning attached by the writer to condemnatory. The Marquis Cornwallis had the words last quoted, or whether in any renee arrived at an age which entitled him to respect. they were true with regard to the existing A large part of his long life had been passed in position of the British interests. The passage the discharge of important military and polimarks sufficiently the spirit in which the letter | tical functions, and a portion of his experience from which it is extracted was written; and had been gained in India. Yet he could refer not less strongly indicates the nature of the to the alliance with the prishwa in the following terms:-"It must be in your recallection It that during Marquis Cornwallis's former adis true that the expression of his desire to ter- ministration, his lordship, foreweing the evils minate the contest by negotiation was qualified of mixing in the labyrinth of Mahratta politics by the conditional words, "if it can be done and Mahratta contentions, sedulously avoided without a sacrifice of our honour;" but little that sort of connection with the peishwa's importance could be attached to this saving government which was calculated to involve clause, when placed in juxtaposition with the the Company in the difficulties and embarrageconcluding words of the governor-general's ments of our actual situation; and that his undoubtedly, as in all similar cases, been at of 1702. The evils, however, which his less ship then anticipated from such an alliance former and our connection appear to his lordship to have been exceeded by those which have actually occurred under the operation of the treaty of Bassein, combined with the distracted condition of the peishwa's dominions, and with the weakness and inefficiency of his highness's administration." These remarks vividly illustrate the spirit in which the Marquis Cornwallis's second Indian administration was to be conducted.

The manner in which the Marquis Cornwallis proposed to bring the war to an end, "without sacrifice of honour," was expounded by himself in a letter to Lord Lake. principal obstacles, he observed, with regard to Scindia, were the detention of the British resident by that chief, and the refusal of the British government to deliver up Gwalior and The governor-general had a ready mode of getting rid of these difficulties. was to surrender both points to Scindia-to give him everything in dispute, to restore to him territory which the British government had solemuly guaranteed to another, and to allow his right to exercise the discretion of choosing his own time for the release of the British residency—to dismiss his prisoners when he pleased, and not a moment sooner. "I am aware," said the governor-general, "of the disadvantages of immediately relinquishing or even of compromising the demand which has been so repeatedly and so urgently made for the release of the British residency"strange would it have been had he not been aware of them, and strange it was that an English nobleman, and an English soldier, should have perceived only the "disadvantages" of such a course, and have been been disadvantages. to the disgrace which it involved. The governor-general continues, "but I deem it proper to apprise your lordship that, as a mere point of honour"—although the "sacrifice" "honour" was to be avoided—"I am disposed to compromise, or even to abandon, that demand, if it should ultimately prove to be the only obstacle to a satisfactory adjustment of affairs with Dowlut Rao Scindia; and that I have hitherto been induced to support it (the demand), by the apprehension that the motives of such a concession might be misinterpreted. and that it might lead to demands on the part of Scindia with which we could not comply without a sacrifice of dignity and interest incompatible with our security, and thereby render still more difficult of attainment the desirable object of a general pacification." In should have been the affixing his signature to this extraordinary passage "a mere point of a letter so injurious to his character as a honour" is disposed of as summarily as though it were a claim to a fraction of a rupee, and tof political morality. He was at an advanced the promise that no sacrifice in this respect age; his health, which was not good when he should take place might be supposed to be for- left England, had gradually become worse gotten.

Gwalior and Gohud, in my decided opinion, it near Benares. is desirable to abandon our possession of the dependently of any refer of differences with Dowl declaring such a course "desn. nor-general must have meant desira... government which he administered. this assumption he thus proceeds: "I have therefore no hesitation in resolving to transfer to Dowlut Rao Scindia the possession of that fortress and territory; securing, however, suitable provision for the rana-an arrangement which, under actual circumstances, I am satisfied is entirely consistent with our public faith." The word "therefore" is important it displays fully and nakedly the morality of the proposed transaction. The governor-general first asserts that it is desirable-desirable to himself and his government—to dissolve the connection subsisting between that government and a native prince—"therefore" he "has no hesitation"—such are his words—in resolving to give away to an enemy the territory of that prince, territory which he enjoys under the protection of the British government, and which is secured to him (as far as a written instrument can be a security) by a solemn treaty. "Under actual circumstances" -that is, with reference to the supposed convenience of the arrangement, the governorgeneral is satisfied that such a transfer is entirely consistent with public faith! **

Equally impolitic and dishonourable was the course which the Marquis Cornwallis proposed to adopt towards the native princes beyond the Jumna with whom the British government had recently formed engagements. Those engagements he intended summarily to annul. There was a portion of territory lying to the southward and westward of Delhi, which the governor-general calculated would afford him the means of carrying his views into effect with some semblance of regard to the claims of those who were to be deprived of the protection of the British government. A portion was to be assigned in jaghires to the inferior chiefs who had joined the British cause; the remainder to be divided in unequal proportions between the rajahs of Machery and Bhurtpore, on those chieftains relinquishing their alliance with the British government -a connection which, it is clear, they could not maintain, if the party contracting with them chose to withdraw from it.

It is to be lamented that nearly the last official act of the Marquis Cornwallis's life under the influence of an enervating climate For the surrender of Gwalior and Golud and of the bodily and mental fatigue imposed the governor-general had a better apology. by the duties of his office, and on the 5th of "With regard," says he, "to the cession of October he drew his last breath at Ghazeepore,

Little remark will be necessary on the evited, his policy denounced by authority the popular voice, and impeachment attened as the reward of his service; the requise Wellesley lived to ree his enumies silenced, his policy vindicated, his person honoured by marks of public respect and gratitude, and his fame, like a mighty river, representations on the length likely to result continually increasing in volume and strength as the distance from its source was extended.

On the death of the Marquis Cornwallis, the office of governor-general devolved provisionally on the first member of council, Sir George Barlow. The rapidly sinking state of the Marquis Cornwallis had for several days previously to his death indicated that the fatal event could not be far distant, and nommunication to that effect reaching Calcutta, Sir George Barlow had determined to proceed to Benares, either to assist the Marquis Cornwallis in the conduct of the negotiations, if he should still survive, or undertake their entire charge in the event of his death. He was consequently on the spot where his services were required within a few days after power and life had departed from the late governor-general.

importance of maintaining the British authority with a view to the suppression of the evils date the 6th of October, the day following which the Mahratias had aggravated, and the that on which the Marquis Cornwallis died probability that in the course of time both The task of deciding on its arguments and princes and subjects would become sensible suggestions consequently devolved on Sir of the advantages of the peaceful habits imposed George Barlow, whose answer to the repreupon them. "that would immediately take place among the same month. It avowed his resolution the raighs and chiefs when they were declared free of all control of the British government. and at liberty to pursue the dictates of their proper to accomplish a general plan of arrangeown interests or ambition, would, I conceive, ment with respect to the chieftains and the be attended with the worst consequences to territories on the west of the Jumna." It might the British government. These petty states have been doubted whether the course of the would first quarrel with each other, and then new governor-general were not the result of call in the different native powers in their regard for the views of his predecessor, or for vicinity to their respective aid; and large the judgment of some higher authority; but armies of irregulars would be contending upon he was careful to divest his motives of all the frontier of our most fertile provinces, ambiguity, and to vindicate his claim to a against whose eventual excesses there would portion of the glory which was to result from be no well-grounded security but a military a persevering disregard to the obligations of force in a state of constant preparation." In treaties. "This resolution," said he—the resoforce in a state of constant preparation." In treaties. "This resolution," said he—the reso-the minds of the inferior rajahs, Lord Lake lution just quoted—"is founded, not only declared that the mere proposal of withdraw-upon my knowledge of the entire conformity ing the British protection would produce the of those general principles to the provisions of utmost alarm. They would regard it, he the legislature and to the orders of the honoursaid, as a prelude to their being sacrificed to able Court of Directors, but also upon my the object of obtaining peace with the Mah-conviction of their expediency with a view to rattas. On one point Lord Lake appears to the permanent establishment of the British have concurred with the governor-general: he interests in India." From the enunciation thought that the weakness of the rana of of his own views, Sir George Barlow pro-Gohud warranted the abrogation of the treaty ceeded, through some intermediate discussion, with him. It is remarkable that one who to impugn those of Lord Lake, which apthought and felt so justly on other points of peared to him "to involve the necessity of a similar description, should on this have failed maintaining the principal part of our territo reach a conclusion consistent with that at torial possessions on the west of the Jumna, which he arrived in other cases. He was and of establishing our control over the several satisfied, he affirmed, that nothing less than states of Hindostan with a view to preclude "the direct operation of British authority" the occurrence of those disorders and contenwould ever place Gohud in a situation "to tions which" the commander-in-chief "conmeet those expectations which were formed at the conclusion of the treaty with its prequility and security of" the British territory sent ruler." This language is so vague, "in the Doab. Such a system of control," that it is impossible to determine whether argued Sir George Barlow, "must in its nature instance to defend a violation of faith or not. system of universal dominion. I am of The treaty itself was the standard of the rana's opinion," he continued, "that we must deobligations, only one reason can be suggested terests among the states whose independence for its refusal—that irreconcilable prejudice will admit of the prosecution of their indisingle error relating to the rana of Gohud, the contemplated by this government." held by his countrymen in grateful and honourable remembrance.

The letter of the commander-in-chief bore "The very contests," said he, sentations of Lord Lake is dated the 20th of "to maintain the general principles of policy by which the late governor-general deemed it the commander-in-chief was prepared in this be progressive, and must ultimately tend to a obligations, not any expectations that might rive our security either from the establishhave been formed at the time of its conclusion. ment of a controlling power and influence over If the direct operation of British authority all the states of India, or from the certain were necessary to compel the rana to fulfil his operation of contending and irreconcilable inwhich dictated that nothing within India vidual views of rapine, encroachment, and amshould be done by British authority which it bition, combined with a systematic plan of were possible to avoid. Independently of this internal defence, such as has been uniformly letter of Lord Lake is alike sound in its tematic plan for securing the British frontier, political views and admirable for the high and Sir George afterwards explains to be the estabhonourable feeling by which it is pervaded. lishment of a connected chain of forts along Putting out of view the brilliant military the Jumna. He then returns to the favourite services of Lord Lake, and calling to mind feature of his system, and expresses a hope only his endeavours to save the British that Lord Lake will probably concur with him character in India from the shame which was in thinking that, with such a barrier, "the about to fall upon it, his name should ever be British possessions in the Doab will derive additional security from the contests of the neighbouring states."

ples of his policy, Sir George Barlow enters sions previously granted to different officers of upon a discussion of the claims of the parties his court, from the 31st of December, up to to the west of the Jumua, whom it was which period the Company undertook to pay intended to abandon. engagements which your lordship has stated as subsisting between the British government and the several descriptions of persons enumerated in your lordship's despatch of the 6th of October, it appears to me that the obligation of a considerable proportion of those engagements necessarily depends upon the supposition that it was the intention of the British government to maintain its authority and control over the bulk of the territories on the west of the Jumna, ceded by Dowlut Rao Scindia. If the British government is at liberty to surrender its possessions to the west of the Jumna, the obligation to protect the zemindars and jaghiredars established within those possessions, or immediately dependent upon them, can be considered to exist no longer than while the British government deems it expedient to maintain its authority over those territories. As arrange as they pleased the claims of Holkar far, therefore, as regards that description of to tribute or territory north of the Taptee and persons, the true question appears to be. whether we are compelled by the nature of our engagements to maintain possession of the territories in question." Such is the casuistry by which Sir George Barlow arrived at the conclusion which it was his object to reach. He admitted, however, that he did not intend it to apply to chiefs to whom the British government was pledged to make pecuniary or territorial assignments; and these persons he proposed to provide for by jaghires in a portion of the territory on the west of the Jumna which was to be retained. But the true question was not, as Sir George Barlow nted, whether the British government compelled to maintain possession of territories in question; but whether, by of formally abandon to ruin those who, under a reliance on its power and character, had committed themselves to its protection.

It is no agreeable task to pursue the sophistry of expediency through its entangled courseit is not more grateful to record the acts which presumed convenience dictated at the expense of justice and honour. The British government being prepared to indulge Scindia to the utmost extent of his demands, no impediment could exist to the establishment of what was declaratory articles to Scindia, and remonto be called peace. Colonel Malcolm was intrusted with the duty of negotiating a treaty with Scindia, and on the 23rd of November long experience of Lord Lake, and evinced his his labours were successfully brought to a The defensive alliance was not renewed the Marquis Cornwallis, in conformity with the general tenor of his policy, had expressed his determination to be rid of it-but every part of the former treaty of peace, with the exception of such parts as might be altered by the new treaty, was to remain in force. Gwalior and Gohud were transferred to Scindia out of "considerations of friendship." Scindia, government for peace worked most opportunely

Having thus laid down the general princi- on his part, relinquished all claims to the pen-"With regard to the them, subject to deduction on various grounds, and among them the plunder of the British residency. The Company also agreed to pay to Scindia a personal allowance of four lacs annually, and to assign, within their territories in Hindostan, a jaghire of two lacs per annum to the chieftain's wife, and another of one lac to his daughter. The Chumbul was to be the general boundary between the territories of the contracting parties; and the Company engaged to form no treaties with the rajahs of Oudepore and Joudpore, and other chiefs tributary to Scindia in Malwa, Mewar, or Merwar, and in no instance to interfere with the settlement which Scindia might make with those chiefs. The Company were not to return to Holkar any of his family possessions in the province of Malwa which might have been taken by Scindia. The two chiefs were to south of the Chumbul, and the British government was not to interfere. The most extraordinary article of the treaty was one by which Scindia agreed never to admit Shirzee Rao to his councils, or to any public employment under his government. The British constitution regards the sovereign as irresponsible, and visits all delinquency in the conduct of public affairs upon the minister; but the application of such a principle between states was probably made for the first time in this instance. By a formal article in a treaty, to proscribe the employment of any particular individual might be thought unworthy of any government-it was especially unworthy such a government as that of Great Britain in India. At this time, however, all the acts of that government were characterized by pettiness. With all its concessions, the treaty did not go quite far enough to please Sir George Barlow, and, in transmitting its ratification, he annexed certain declaratory articles, intended to carry out his favourite object of releasing the British government from the obligation of keeping faith with its weak allies, some of whom might have been saved by the operation of the boundary article without explanation. Lord Lake deferred the transmission of the strated, but in vain. The governor-general replied, that great attention was due to the respect for it by immediately forwarding to Scindia the articles against which Lord Lake had appealed.

While the negotiation with Scindia was inprogress, Lord Lake had been engaged in following the flight of Holkar into the Punjab; where, disappointed in the hope of obtaining assistance from the Sikhs, and reduced to the last extremity, the eager desire of the British was concluded, by which Holkar renounced all and pressingly urged the claims of the rajah was concluded, by which Holkar renounced all right to the districts of Tonk Rampoora, Thoondee, and places north of the Chumbul. It is clear, thought that political affairs are The Company agreed not to interfere south of excepted from the obligations of ordinary that river, and to restore at the end of a specified term certain forts and districts belonging a feeling as regard to past services, and the to Holkar in the Decean. Holkar was not to rajah of Bhoondee received sentence accordentertain any Europeans in his service, and he ingly. The case of the rajah of Deceans are the rajah to protection. But the governor-general, who, it is clear, thought that political affairs are excepted from the obligations of ordinary morality, was not to be moved by so visionary a feeling as regard to past services, and the rajah of Bhoondee received sentence accordentertain any Europeans in his service, and he ingly. The case of the rajah to protection. But the governor-general, who, it is is clear, thought that political affairs are excepted from the obligations of ordinary morality, was not to be moved by so visionary a feeling as regard to past services, and the ordinary morality, was not to be moved by so visionary as feeling as regard to past services, and the ordinary morality, was not to be moved by so visionary as feeling as regard to past services, and the ordinary morality, was not to be moved by so visionary as feeling as regard to past services, and the ordinary morality, was not to be moved by so visionary as feeling as regard to past services, and the ordinary morality, was not to be moved by so visionary as feeling as regard to past services, and the ordinary morality, was not to be moved by so visionary as feeling as regard to past services, and the ordinary morality, was not to be moved by so visionary as feeling as regard to past services, and the ordinary morality as feeling as regard to past services, and the ordinary morality as feeling as regard to past services and the ordinary morality as feeling as re stant source of terror to the British govern- he had swerved from fidelity; but he had ment of that period. Here, again, the policy returned to his duty, had rendered good ser-of Sir George Barlow received additional illus-vice to the army of General Jones, and had tration. He had been desirous of transferring received the most solemn assurances that his the districts of Tonk Rampoora to Scindia, in failure would be forgotten, and the protection place of the pension of four lass secured to of the British government continued. In that chieftain by the late treaty. One motive favour of this prince Lord Lake laboured to the intended cession originated in the cirwith the zeal which he invariably displayed cumstance of the district having belonged to in endeavouring to save the British government from the disgrace which a timid and governor-general that an additional cause of unprincipled policy was bringing upon it. dispute between the two chieftains would thus But Sir George Barlow resolved, not only that be furnished, tending to promote his favourite the alliance with the rajah of Jeypore should hended, would take them as a free gift without excess in passing them. If the alliance conaguarantee from the British government, and tinued, the British government would be there appeared no choice but to give such a obliged to take notice of any outrage; if it guarantee or to keep them. Neither of these were proviously dissolved, the obligation accourses suited the policy of Sir George Barlow; at an end. Well might an agent of the rajah, tion in return. This was effected by a decla- venience. ratory article, reciting-not that Sir George Barlow had in vain sought to transfer the dis- all that had been contemplated by his pretricts to Scindin, and that no one else would decessor and himself, in the way of diminishtake them without a guarantee, but that it ing the power and influence of the British was understood that the maharajah attached government in India. The defensive alliances great value to them, and that the relations of with Bhurtpore and Machery remained to be amity being happily restored, the British go- dealt with, and Lord Lake was instructed to vernment was desirous of gratifying the wishes open a negotiation for the purpose of detaching of the maharajah to the greatest practicable them from their British ally. In conformity extent consistent with equity—a word most with the plan of the Marquis Cornwallis, these intelicitously chosen with reference to the policy then pursued. Lord Lake again remonstrated, and with the same success that had attended his former representations.

Among the persons sacrificed by the "equity" nection with the British government, had been undeviatingly friendly and faithful. His fidelity had been tested during the retreat of Colonel Monson, and he had on that unfortunate occasion rendered aid that was both timely and valuable. By this conduct he had spirit he did not admit that the representa-to his rescue from entire destruction. A treaty (was disposed to give them, and he repeatedly object of keeping native states at war for the be dissolved, but that the dissolution should benefit of the English government. But the be immediate; and for this characteristic hope of obtaining Scindia's consent failed, and reason—the territories of the rajah of Joypore the governor-general was in a state of pitiable lay on Holkar's returning route; the governorauxiety as to the disposal of the troublesome general thought, with much reason, that the acquisitions. No state or chief, he appre-freebooter might be tempted to commit some and not knowing what to do with the surrendin a conference with Lord Lake, indignantly dered districts, he determined to give them exclaim, that the English government, in this back to Holkar without any kind of considera- instance, made its faith subservient to its con-

Sir George Barlow had now effected nearly princes were to be tempted to renounce their British connection by the offer of a considerable accession of territory. Lord Lake, not dispirited by former repulses, once more resorted to expostulations, and for the first time of Sir George Barlow were the rajahs of his remonstrances produced some effect. The Bhoondee and Jeypore. The conduct of the former, from the commencement of his con-Marquis Cornwallis, had displayed great aptitude for transition; but in adhering to the views which he professed at any particular moment, he invariably manifested a degree of doggedness not less remarkable. incurred the implacable hatred of Holkar. Lions of the commander-in-chief had changed Lord Lake justly considered that the services his opinion, but he consented to postpone and the dangers of this faithful ally merited acting upon it till a future period. The more consideration than Sir George Barlow motives to this step are not easily discover-assigned for the great delicacy shown to the the compass of a very brief period, have, as if claims of the rajahs of Bhurtpore and Machery by enchantment, become masters of an empire in comparison with those of the rajahs of splendid beyond comparison with any other Bhoondee and Jeypore. Why were the en-ever held in a condition of dependency by a gazements of the British with the latter two foreign state. Yet, with all the allowances gazements of the British with the latter two loveign state. Let, with all the allowances princes dissolved without ceremony, while the that must be made on the grounds of selfishabrogation of similar engagements with the ness, habit, admiration, and fear, it must not former two were to be the subject of nego be supposed that natives always look on the tiation? Only one solution presents itself: existing state of things with entire satisfaction, the rajahs of Bhoondee and Jeypore were It is not easy for the Mahometan to forget weak; those of Bhurtpore and Machery com-that, very recently, men of his own race and paratively strong. completing the negotiations with which he estrangement from political power consequent had been intrusted, and in making various upon the previous subjugation of his country, necessary military arrangements. Early in may generally be sufficient to preclude him the following year he quitted India, leaving from meditating schemes of conquest and behind him a reputation for adventurous reprisal, he is under the influence of other behind him a reputation for adventurous reprisal, he is under the influence of other valour and high feeling which will not be feelings little calculated to promote military forgotten. It would not be proper to anticipate results by any observations in this place subordination or to secure military fidelity. The pride of caste, and the bigoted attachment with which the Hindoo clings to an unsocial superstition which interieres with part, so unsuccessfully opposed: this will be almost every action of daily life, have a direct tendency to foster habits which in Europe under review is sufficiently dark to need no aggravation from a premature view of the future. Under the Madras presidency events army composed of Hindoos and Mahometans, cocurred soon after Sir George Barlow's pacification, which, though unimportant if regarded with reference merely to their extent, derived consequence from the alarm which they have not even the bond of a they were calculated to create in relation to plexion, they have not even the bond of a the instrument by which Great Britain had common tongue; the European officers genesubjected a great part of India to its sway, rally possessing but a slender knowledge of and by which its conquests were to be main- the languages of the men under their com-

all judicious commanders are well aware of committed to its care. they may happen to possess, must operate to are recorded in characters of blood. the prejudice of their rulers. The men who In the spring of 1896, symptoms of insub-govern India are not natives of India, ordination were manifested by a part of the strangers to the soil command the obedience troops under the presidency. They seem of its sons; and if national pride entered scarcely to have excited the degree of attenof its sons; and if national pride entered scarcely to have excited the degree of attendargely into the character of the natives, that itin which they called for; and at the very obedience, if yielded at all, would be yielded moment when the authorities were congratureluctantly. Generally, in India, this feeling lating themselves upon their entire suppressis anything but strong; and its place is supince to the fortress of Vellore became a scene of plied by a sense of the benefits derived by the individual from the maintenance of the European supremacy, and by a powerful instinct a partial change in the dress of the troops of chedience combined with a somewhat in. The old turken had been thought inconvenient.

able; nor, indeed, can any valid reason be feeling of respect for the people who, within creed wielded the sceptre which is now trans-Thus did Sir George Barlow tranquillize ferred to Christian hands; and though the Lord Lake spent the year 1895 in passive character of the Hindoo, and the mand, and the men no knowledge at all of The extraordinary fact, that England main- the language of their officers. The elements of tains her empire in the East principally by discontent are, therefore, sufficiently powerful, cans of a native army, renders the connect while the means of allaying it are small; and between the ruling powers and the mili- it is obvious that, in an army so constituted, , one of extreme delicacy. One great vigilance must never for a moment be per-Jime of reliance, which is afforded by almost mitted to slumber. This important truth can every other army, is wanting in that of India. | never be lost sight of without endangering the The pride of country offers one of the best safety of the British dominion in India, and, securities for the fidelity of the soldier, and by consequence, the well-being of the people the importance of preserving it unimpaired. These reflections are suggested by the facts In India the case is different. The national which it is now necessary to relate, facts feeling of the troops can afford no ground of which at the time excited no inconsiderable confidence; whatever portion of this quality alarm both in India and at home, and which of obedience, combined with a somewhat in- The old turban had been thought inconvenient, definite, and perhaps almost superstitions; and it was proposed to replace it by one lighter, and better adapted to the military slaughter. The attack was totally unexpected, especial command. The use of this turban, of the men, or was seized upon by designing assailants. agitators as affording the means of exciting disaffection to the European authorities. Acts of insubordination occurred, connected with an alleged reluctance to the adoption of the new turban. They were confined principally to two nition had been entirely exhausted. battalions of different regiments—one of them stationed at Vellore, the other at Wallajahbad. The irregularities were more general, as well as more marked, in the battalion stationed in the former place; and when they attracted attention, it was deemed inexpedient to suffer the battalion to remain there. It was accordingly ordered to proceed to the presidency, where a court-martial was assembled for the four hundred and fifty men. Putting himself trial of two men, whose conduct had been at the head of one squadron of dragoons and a They were conespecially reprehensible. victed, and sentenced to corporal punishment. At Wallajahbad, a native soubahdar, who had been guilty of apparent connivance at the disorderly proceedings which had taken place, was summarily dismissed from the service, and, on the recommendation of the commander at that station, three companies of European troops were marched thither from Poona-The intimations of disorder now mallee. appeared to subside at both places. The commanding officer of the battalion stationed at Vellore reported it to be in as perfect a state of discipline as any other native corps on the establishment. At Wallajahbad subordination appeared to be entirely restored. A general order had been prepared, for the purpose of removing any apprehensions which the native troops might entertain as to future interference with their religious prejudices; but the apparent calm lulled the authorities into a persuasion of security, and it was deemed judicious to suspend the publication of the order.

assurance of the re-establisment of discipline restoration of the first to the legislant at Vellore, conveyed from that station to the commander-in-chief, and by him forwarded to mutilize the government, reached the presidency on the laminer and it was much prisoners. 10th of July, and, on the same day, the investment of England to make the smouldering embers of sedition and muting. The imminer of England to that day, the native troops rose against the investment of the garrison, consising of the garrison two companies of his Majesty's 69th regiment only standard the companies of his Majesty's 69th regiment on the companies of his Majesty's 69th r

The alteration was recommended and consequently no preparations had been by two officers of long experience in the made for resisting it. The hour chosen by the Company's service, was sanctioned by the conspirators, two o'clock in the morning, was commander-in-chief, Sir John Cradock, and well adapted to their murderous intentions, finally was submitted to the governor, Lord the execution of them being aided by darkness, William Bentinck—that nobleman having suc- and by the fact of a considerable portion of ceeded Lord Clive, who had retired under their destined victims being asleep. But, feelings of disgust. The governor not only notwithstanding all these unfavourable cirapproved, but ordered the new turban to be cumstances, the British troops did not disadopted by a corps of fencibles under his own honour their country. For a considerable time they maintained possession of the barhowever, either actually violated the prejudices racks, exposed to a heavy fire from their When this position became no longer tenable, a part of the garrison effected their escape to the ramparts of the fortress, where they established themselves, and of which they retained possession for several Neglected for a time, it at hours after all the officers of the corps had length became impossible to avoid noticing been killed or disabled, and after their ammu-

About four hours after the commencement of the attack, intelligence of it was received by Colonel Gillespie, at the cantonment of Arcot, a distance of about sixteen miles, and that officer immediately put in motion the greater part of the troops at his disposal, consisting of the 19th regiment of dragoons and some native cavalry, of the strength of about troop of native cavalry, he proceeded with the greatest celerity to Vellore, leaving the re-mainder of the troops to follow with the guns under Lieutenant-Colonel Kennedy. arrival, Colonel Gillespie effected a junction with the gallant residue of the 69th; but it was found impracticable to obtain any decisive advantage over the insurgents until the arrival of the remainder of the detachment, which reached Vellore about ten o'clock. The main object then was to reduce the int. The mutineers directed their powerful firms to the defence of the interior gate, and on the arrival of the guns, it was resolved that they should be directed to blowing it come preparatory to a charge of the cavalry, to be stilled by a charge of the remnant of the Contact the personal command of Colonel Garage These command were executed with great precision and heaven The seeming tranquillity was deceitful. The complete dispersion of the franciscopies and in their reach, they doomed to indistribute at Vallagation, Egyptimise

were by seasonable and salutary precautions ously displayed symptoms of insanity seems to suppressed. In some instances the murderous have been afforded, or even required. proceedings at Vellore impressed the com-manding officers at other stations with such distempered mind, and thus success was inan undue degree of apprehension, as to lead sured to the atrocious design, which a reasonthem to disarm their native troops without able caution might have frustrated. sufficient cause—an unreasonable suspicion degree of information possessed by Mustapha thus succeeding to an unreasonable confidence. Beg has been the subject of question. It has Indeed, the European officers seem generally been said that he knew much more than he to have taken but small pains to inform them-[avowed; that he was, in fact, acquainted with selves of the feelings and dispositions of the the entire plans and objects of the conspirators, native troops. Looking at the events which and studiously concealed a part of them. This preceded the unhappy affair at Vellore, it may be true, inasmuch as, in most cases, it is seems impossible to avoid feeling surprise at nearly impossible for any degree of labour or the unconsciousness and security displayed by the European authorities up to the moment of the frightful explosion. No apprehension appears to have been entertained, although the massacre was preceded by circumstances abundantly sufficient to justify the feeling, and though the approaching danger was not left to be inferred from circumstances. Positive testimony as to the treacherons intentions of the native troops was tendered, but, unfortunately, treated with disregard and contempt.

Amidst the disgusting exhibition of almost universal treachery, a solitary instance of fidelity to the ruling powers occurred, and the name of Mustapha Beg deserves on this account to be recorded. This man, who had become acquainted with a part, if not the whole, of the designs of the conspirators, proceeded on the night of the 16th of June to the house of one of the officers of the garrison, and there stated that the Mussulmans of the battalion had united to attack the barracks, and kill all the Europeans, on account of the turban. The course taken upon this occasion by the officer to whom the communication was made, was certainly, under the circumstances, an ex-. traordinary one: he referred the matter to the · tive officers, and they reported that no

Liion existed to the use of the turban. of the parties implicated admitted having d certain expressions attributed to him, but ave them an interpretation which rendered them harmless; and the evidence of the informant was alleged to be unworthy of credit -first, on the ground of general bad character ; and secondly, because he laboured under the infirmity of madness. The charge of habitual drunkenness, which was brought against Mustapha Beg, was certainly not sufficient to warrant the rejection of his evidence without further inquiry; and the imputation of madness appears never to have been thought of before, but to have been fabricated at the moment for the especial purpose of destroying the force of his testimony. That it should have obtained the implicit belief and acquiescence of the European officer in command is inexplicable upon any reasonable grounds. The men who made the charge had a direct interest in establishing it-something more, therefore, than mere assertion was requisite evidence that Mustapha Beg had ever previ-the feelings and prejudices of the native troops ingenuity to draw from a native witness "the whole truth;" but it must be remembered that this charge rests upon testimony in no way preferable to that of Mustapha Beg himself; and, if well founded, the fact of the informer concealing a part of what he knew, cannot justify the unaccountable inattention displayed towards that which he revealed.

The communication made by Mustapha Beg was disregarded, and the massacre of Vellore followed. This event, in connection with the insubordination displayed at other stations, demanded careful and minute inquiry as to The greatest confidence had been the cause. reposed in the native troops; that confidence had been continued even after much had occurred which ought to have shaken it; but the disaffection of a part of the troops was no longer matter of mere report or mere suspicion -it had been manifested too plainly and too terribly to admit of denial or of doubt. The government, therefore, now commenced the business of inquiry in earnest.

From the national characteristics of the native troops, it must be always a work of some difficulty to trace their actions and impressions to their genuine origin. The obnoxious turban was put forward as the main ground of dissatisfaction, combined with some orders which had been recently issued, by which the men, when on duty, were forbidden to wear on their faces certain marks of caste, and were required to trim their beards in a uniform manner. It appears that the latter regulations were not altogether new: they had been enforced in certain regiments and neglected in others, and the orders only required a general conformity to practices which had for some time been partially adopted. The objection to the new turban (as far as any sincere objection was felt at all) lay principally with the Mahometans, who thought themselves degraded by being required to wear anything approaching in appearance to a European hat. The restrictions in regard to marks of caste were applicable to the Hindoos; but the regulations relating to the beard seem to have been obnoxious to both classes. As the two officers by whose recommendation the regulations were adopted had been long in the Company's service, it may seem that they before it could reasonably be credited; yet no ought to have been better acquainted with a change of dress. As far, however, as the turban. turban is concerned, it is but justice to those officers to state, that they appear to have had little reason to apprehend any opposition to its introduction, and still less to anticipate the criminal excesses for which it afforded a pretext. The proposed change was long a matter of publicity. In the first instance, three turbans were made, and three men—one of them a Mahometan—wore them at the presidency for inspection. These men declared that they blance to that which had been long worn by one of the battalions of native infantry; in another regiment, one of the battalions wore a turban little differing from a Scottish bonnet, would have been offered to an innovation cal-ling from their situation. the men. On the other points, it is not perbeen familiar to officers of so much experience as those who proposed the offensive orders; and better purpose than to render their appeartaste, was ill-advised and imprudent. Yet, though this gave considerable offence-and, joined in it except by the instigation of the The latter class were every-Mahometans. were actuated.

The Mahometans objected to the new turban, and this led the Hindoos to dwell upon their own grievances; but the turban itself was but content and rebellion. The native officers, both before and after the occurrences at Vellore, declared that there was nothing in the new turban inconsistent with the laws and usages of their religion, or in any way degrading to those who were required to wear it; and the chief conspirator at Vellore, a few days previously to the insurrection, being questioned by advantages they abundant his commanding officer as to the existence of consequence was, dissatisfaction, offered, in the presence of the son of Vellore, the

than to have risked the affections of the army, other native officers, to place the Koran on his and the consequent safety of the British head and swear that there was none, and that dominion, upon a point so perfectly trifling as the whole corps were prepared to wear the The feeling against it was certainly far from universal; for, in many instances, much alacrity was shown in adopting it; and, after the mutiny, some corps requested per-mission to wear it as a testimony of their unshaken fidelity. Something, indeed, must be allowed for the habitual dissimulation which is one of the national characteristics; but all the evidence tends to show that, had no political causes intervened, the change would have been effected as quietly as others had been which preferred them to the old ones. The pattern in themselves were more likely to give offence. turbans were afterwards publicly exhibited at | But Vellore was, at that time, the seat of deep the adjutant-general's office, where they were and dark intrigues, directed to the destruction seen by officers and men of all ranks and of the British government and the elevation classes. The new turban bore a near resem- of a Mahometan sovereignty upon its ruins. The fortress of Vellore was the residence of the sons of Tippoo Sultan, and the whole neighbourhood swarmed with the creatures of the deposed family. The choice of this place and turbans not very dissimilar were in use in for their abode was an injudicious one, and the various regiments. With such precedents, it circumstances under which they were permitmight have been presumed that no resistance ted to reside there enhanced the dangers aris-An extravagant culated materially to promote the comfort of revenue had been placed at their disposal, which enabled them to purchase the services haps easy to acquit the framers of the regu- of a host of retainers—an advantage which lation of having somewhat rashly impaired the they did not neglect. Many were to be found real efficiency of the army, from an over-who, from old associations, possessed a feeling anxious desire to improve its appearance. The of attachment to the family of Tippoo; many Hindoos are, of all people upon the earth, the more who, from religious higotry, were willing most alive to any interference with their to engage in any scheme having for its object superstitious observances. This fact must have the destruction of a European and Christian power; and a still greater number ready to sell themselves to the best bidder, and to lend to outrage the feelings of the troops for no their assistance to any cause in the prosperity of which they hoped to participate... The Maance more agreeable to the eye of military hometan power had declined with extraordinary rapidity, and the number of those whose fortunes had declined with it was considerable. if the prejudices of the Hindoos are to be re- Many of these persons had entered the army spected, the feeling of offence was not unwar- of the conquerors; and our own ranks thus ranted—it was not the main cause of the comprehended a body of men whose feelings mutiny; for it appears that few of the Hindoos and whose interests were arrayed against us. Over every class of those who cherished sentiments of discontent, or hopes of advantage where the promoters of the disturbances, and from change, the sons of Tippoo were impruit remains to be seen by what motives they dently allowed the means of establishing and retaining unbounded influence. chosen for their residence was in the immediate neighbourhood of their former grandeur-the restraint under which they were placed of the a pretext, artfully used by the emissaries of mildest character—the accommodation pro-those hostile to the British sway, to excite dis-vided for them of the most splendid description -their allowances on a scale of oriental magnificence. The imprudent bounty of the British government thus furnished them with an almost unlimited command of the means oi corruption, and enabled them to add to the stimulus of hope the more powerful temptation of immediate benefit. These · ities and advantages they abundantly 🗽 ∵ ithe held them in captivity. sand Mysoreans settled in Vellore and its which it required a sacrifice of human heads vicinity subsequently to its becoming the abode to sanctify; and that they designed to masof the princes; that the number of their ser-sacre all the natives except these who should of the princes; that the number of their ser-sair the natives except those who should vants and adherents in the pettah amounted to about one thousand eight hundred; that the general population of the place had astonishingly increased, and that some hundreds of persons were destitute of any visible means of sedition and revolt, and astrology was called subsistence. These were circumstances which in to predict the downfall of the Christian and ought to have excited suspicion—which ought these called each property and the ascendency of Mussulman power. to have called forth vigour: unfortunately they Such means could not fail to operate power-were regarded with apathy. Instead of the fully upon the minds of an ignorant and bigoted strict and vigilant superintendence which people, accessible to the belief of any reports, ought to have been exercised over such a pollowever improbable or absurd, if addressed pulation, in such a place, there is the strongest to their religious prejudices: and the effects of ground for concluding that the utmost laxity the poison attested the skill with which it had prevailed. It is clear that, for the purposes been prepared. To a European, the very pulous in availing themselves of the opportultimes complained of the indifference of the nities which fortune had thrown in their way; ruling powers to the cause of Christianity; but and that, at least, two of them were implicated never has there been a shadow of reason for in the atrocities of Vellore, is beyond question. ascribing to them an indiscreet zoal to accele-The connection of those events with simultaneous disturbances at Hyderabad and other places was not distinctly traced; but there can uniformly manifested, and the strictness of be little doubt of their having originated in the matter of the connection of these events with simultaneous connection of those events with simultaneous connection of the connection of ing them all as ramifications of the same con-vailing superstitions. The European servants spiracy. The means resorted to of exciting of the Company have rigidly pursued the course disaffection were invariably the same. The prescribed by the supreme authority. Their changes of dress, which, but for the sinister own religious observances, when attended to, arts employed to pervert them, would have have been unmarked by ostentation, and unattracted no more attention than matters so mixed with any spirit of proselytism. At the trivial demanded, were declared to be part of time of the unfortunate disturbances, no misan organized plan for forcing Christianity on sionary of the English nation had exercised his the troops and the people. The turban was office in that part of India where they occurred. held up to their hatred as a Christian hat, as In the interior there was no provision whatthe turnscrew attached to the fore part of the ever for Christian worship; and the comuniform was converted into a cross, the symbol mander-in-chief stated it to be a melancholy of the Christian faith. Even the practice of truth, that so unfrequent were the religious vaccination, which had been for some time in- observances of the officers doing duty with troduced, was represented as intended to ad-battalions, that the sepoys had but recently vance the cause of Christianity. The reports discovered the nature of the religion professed circulated for the purpose of inflaming the by the English. These circumstances did not, minds of the people, differed only in the however, secure the government from a susgreater or less extent of their demands upon picion of intending to force the profession of popular credulity. At Hyderabad the most Christianity upon the natives; for, though the outrageous rumours were propagated and be-lieved. Among other extravagances, it was knew the falsehood of the imputation, it was, currently reported that the Europeans were no doubt, believed by many who were induced greater than that of the government which of a native; that a hundred bodies without heads were lying along the banks of the Moose It appears that no fewer than three thou- river; that the Europeans had built a church, prevailed. It is clear that, for the purposes of security, the military power ought to have been paramount; but authority was at Vellore pose, all energy, and nearly all responsibility. The commanding officer, of course, controlled the troops; the collector was charged with the care of the police; and the paymaster of stipends with the custody of the princes. This was a departure from the original plan, by which the whole of those duties had been intrusted to the military commander; and the change was far from judicious. change was far from judicious.

With so many chances in their favour, the sons of Tippoo were not likely to be very scruoriginated. Impartial observers have someabout to make a human sacrifice, in the person to unite with them. The undeviating policy of the government aught to have exempted it anything but salutary. from such suspicion—the absurdity of the means by which it was alleged to be intended to effect the object was sufficient to discredit the charge, had it been sanctioned by probability; but fanaticism does not reason; any report that falls in with its prejudices is eagerly received and implicitly credited. order was re-established in the fortress. the difficulties of government did not end with the suppression of the external indications of place. Sir John Cradock advised that the dissatisfaction. furnished a pretext for the perpetration of so should be expunged from the list of the much crime and mischief were still in force, army; Lord William Bentinck took a different and it was a matter of some delicacy to determine how to deal with them. Every course that could be suggested was open to serious objections, and great calmness and great saga-Τo city were required in making a selection. discuss at length the wisdom of the chosen line of policy would occupy too much space. may suffice to say, that conciliation being incredible that a question regarding no higher thought expedient, the regulations were abandor more momentous matter than the retention doned: and though it may be urged that this was almost a matter of necessity, under the circumstances which existed, still it was not unattended with danger, from the evil precedent which it afforded of a concession extorted by mutiny and massacre. Mutiny is a crime which, by the severity of military law, is deemed deserving of death; but the insurrection of Vellore was not an ordinary case of mutiny, grave as is that offence in itself. baseness, treachery, and murderous cruelty with which it was marked, gives it a frightful pre-eminence over the generality of military revolts, and it is painful to think that so detestable a project should have been so far attended with success as to procure the abolition of the orders which had been made the pretext for it. The fatal regulations being disposed of, another question arose as to the manner of disposing of the culprits-and conciliation again triumphed.

On this subject great difference of opinion existed, and much discussion took place. The governor, Lord William Bentinek, advised a The other members of what more severe. council coincided in opinion with the governor; while the governor general in council, who interfered on the occasion, adopted the views of Sir John Cradock. Ultimately, the greater merit very severe reprehension. He seems, part of the disaffected troops escaped with in the commencement of the disturbances, to be said to have been rewarded for their crimes. A few only of the most culpable suffered the self. of the officers, whose guilt was thought to encouragement he was led to persevere. be attended by circumstances of extenuation, disastrous results, however, which followed, received small pensions. The propriety of showed but too plainly the impolicy of doing

By the people at large, whom this act of liberality was doubtless meant to conciliate, it was in danger of being misunderstood, and was quite as likely to be attributed to the operation of fear as to the spirit of magnanimous forgiveness. It was a proceeding which can on no ground be justified, and which, it is to be hoped, will never The mutineers were quickly overcome, and furnish a rule for the guidance of any future government.

On another point a collision of opinion took The regulations which had regiments which were implicated in the mutiny view: but on this question the other members in council agreed with the commander-in-chief. The former, however, attached so much importance to his own view of the question, as to determine to act on his own judgment and responsibility, in opposition to the opinion of It would appear the majority in council. of the names of two regiments upon the army list, or their expulsion from it, could have been regarded as justifying the exercise of that extraordinary power vested in the governor for extraordinary occasions, and for extraordinary occasions only, were not the fact authenticated beyond the possibility of On his own responsibility Lord doubt. William Bentinck set aside the decision of the majority of the council, and determined that the regiments in which the mutiny had occurred should remain on the list. In turn, the act by which the governor of Fort St. George had set aside the opinion of his council was as unceremoniously annulled by the supreme government, who directed that the names of the guilty regiments should be struck out. The conduct of the governor, in thus indiscreetly exercising the extraordinary power vested in him, was also disapproved at On some former occasion his policy had not commanded the entire approbation of the Court of Directors, and this act was followed by his lordship's recall. It was at very mild course; Sir John Cradock, the the same time deemed no longer advisable commander-in-chief, recommended one somethat Sir John Cradock should retain the command of the army, and he was accordingly removed from it. A calm inquiry into the course pursued by Sir John Cradock will perhaps lead to the conclusion that he did not very slight punishment, and some may almost have been guided by the opinions of others whom he thought better informed than him-On finding that the line of conduct punishment of death; the remainder were which he had been advised to pursue was increly dismissed the service, and declared fomenting discontent among the troops, he incapable of being readmitted to it; and some stated the fact to the governor, by whose received small pensions. The propriety of showed but too plainly the impolicy of doing this last favour is something more than questionable. To the army, the example was doubtedly, be held responsible for the conduct of the army; but the errors into which Sir | was nothing in the turban inconsistent with John Cradock was led admit of the extenu- the dietates of their religious belief, and that ation arising from the fact of his being nearly a the reports of the designs of the British to stranger at the presidency. It was thought, make a forcible change in the religion of the however, and perhaps justly, that, after what people were ridiculous and unfounded. The had occurred, there was little hope of his conduct of the native officers at Vellore needs being able to exercise his authority beneficially neither illustration nor remark. to the army or the British government. Still, places they were found not exem the case of Sir John Cradock appears to have been attended with some hardship; and it is to be lamented that a course could not have been devised which might have spared the feelings of the gallant officer, without compromising the interests of his country, or the nation. spirit and efficiency of the army of Madras, the serv The adjutant-general and deputy adjutant- No doubt was entertained as to the existence general were ordered to return to Europe, but the former officer was subsequently could not be established by legal evidence. restored. These two officers were better At Palmacotta, where a body of Mussulman acquainted with India than the commander-troops had been disarmed somewhat abruptly in-chief, but there was much to extenuate by the commanding officer, it was deemed expetheir error; and few men, perhaps, in their dient, on re-arming them, to except some of circumstances would have acted with more the native commissioned officers, and after an discretion.

to Bengal, and thus separated from the spot established against several persons at Wallawhere they could most effectually intrigue jabad, and some dismissals took place there, against British power and influence. The At Bellary, a soubablar was convicted on the extravagant allowances, also, which they had clearest evidence of having, in company with previously enjoyed, were subjected to judicious two sepoys, aided two religious mendicants in retrenchment.

circumstances brought to light by the transac- missed. So striking and conspicuous was this tions which have been narrated was, the want unworthy conduct in the native officers, and of cordiality and confidence between the so alarming their abuse of the influence which British and native officers. A spirit of they naturally possessed over the minds of the estrangement seems to have existed between men, that it was deemed necessary to publish

t of one class was calculated to give Company's service, and warning them of the console cause of offence to the other, it consequences which would attend a departure that it is, that the interests of the government imperatively require that courtesy and affords abundant materials for speculation as urbanity should invariably mark the habits to futurity. The safety of the empire de-and demeanour of the British towards the mands that the bond of connection between native officers and troops. These virtues the native army and their British officers must not, indeed, be carried to such an excess should be confirmed and strengthened. as to lead to the sacrifice of any moral printhis purpose, the more the means of interciple, or to the surrender of one tittle of the course between the several classes are faciligreat duty of military obedience; but, short tated the better. A common language is of these, it is impossible they can be carried a great instrument for avoiding misunder-too far, and a systematic neglect of them by standing and promoting good-will; and it is any British officer is in fact a breach of his to be feared that the native tongues have not duty to his country.

The clamour raised against the new turban emissaries, assuming the guise of religious study seem requisite, as the mastering of them devotees, and who thus were enabled to so materially tends to promote that harmony exercise a powerful influence over a bigoted and superstitious people. But the mischievous so important to establish. A more smattering labours of these persons were by no means of a language may be sufficient for conveying distasteful to the native officers thoughts.

At other places they were found not exempt from the taint of sedition which had affected the privates. At Nundedroog an inquiry was instituted, and it was proved that very offensive expressions had been uttered, and various attempts had been made to excite insubordi-Seventeen persons were dismirred the service, and among them several officers. of a similar spirit at Bangalore, but the fact inquiry, several were dismissed. There, as One change, consequent upon the mutiny at Nundedroog, language had been used of Vellore, was a very proper and necessary sufficiently significant and highly reprehense: the family of Tippoo Sultan was removed sible. Criminality of a similar character was trenchment. propagating doctrines of the most atrocious One of the most remarkable and lamentable description, and he was in consequence disthem, altogether inconsistent with the inter-ests of the service to which both belonged. Calling to their recollection the principles Whether anything in the conduct or deport-upon which they had been employed in the always received that degree of attention from British officers to which they are entitled. was instigated in a great degree by political Some additional encouragements to their distasteful to the native officers, though a and understanding the dry details of regi-majority of them were convinced that there mental duty, but is not sufficient for establishing and maintaining that degree of influence the security of our own dominion in the East; over the natives which every well-wisher to by degrading it, or suffering it to sink-nay, the permanence of the British dominion must by permitting it to remain stationary, we are be desirous should exist.

Another point of vital importance will be to raise the character of the native troops, and especially of the native officers, as far as may be, to a British standard; to imbue them with a portion of those noble principles which the European world derives from the age of chivalry, and to give them the habits and the feeling of gentlemen. The principle of honour, which feels "a stain like a wound," should be redulously inculcated and encouraged. By advancing the character of the native soldiery in the scale of moral dignity, we are adding to l co-operating with the designs of our enemies, and undermining the safety of our government. Where the soldier is actuated exclusively by the lower and more selfish motives, his services will always be at the command of him who can hold out the strongest temptations to his ambition or cupidity. many affecting instances of fidelity which the native troops have shown, prove that they are open to the influence of higher and better feelings, and no pains should be spared to cherish and encourage them.

CHAPTER XXII.

DISPUTES DETWEEN MINISTERS AND THE COURT OF DIRECTORS-LORD MINTO APPOINTED GOVERNOR-GENERAL - AFFAIRS OF TRAVANCORE - MILITARY PROCEEDINGS - EXPEDITION AGAINST MACAO-TREATY WITH RUNJERT SINGH-MUTINOUS PROCEEDINGS OF THE MADRAS OFFICERS-OCCUPATION OF BOURBON-CAPTURE OF BRITISH SHIPPING-CAPITULATION OF THE ISLAND OF MAURITIUS—SURRENDER OF AMBOYNA—EXPEDITION AGAINST BATAVIA— CONQUEST OF JAVA-TREATIES WITH SCINDE, CAUBUL, AND PERSIA-LORD MINTO RESIGNS.

In the course of more than half a century, [during which India has been governed through the instrumentality of two independent bodies, collision has very rarely taken place; it has been generally averted by discretion and mutual forbearance. Still, it has sometimes arisen, and the vacancy caused by the death of the Marquis Cornwallis gave occasion for an instance. The ministry who had signified the approbation of the Crown to the appointment of that nobleman was no longer in being. It had been dispersed by the death of its The Whigs, having formed chief, Mr. Pitt. a coalition with the party of which Lord Grenville was the head, had returned to office after a long exclusion from it—an exclusion originating in the plan which they had proposed and endeavoured to carry through parliament, for the administration of the affairs Intelligence of the death of India, in 1784. of the Marquis Cornwallis arrived in England almost simultaneously with the accession of the new ministers to office. It was deemed expedient to make immediate provision for the exercise of the full powers of the governorgeneral, and Sir George Barlow, at that time possessing the entire confidence of the Court of Directors, was appointed, with the approbation of the new President of the Board of Commissioners Lord Minto. That functionary, indeed, stated that the appointment must be regarded as temporary; but he added, that no immediate change was in contemplation.

After such an announcement, it must have been concluded that the new governor-general The new ministers, in consequence, felt strong would be permitted to enjoy his appointment in the weakness of their opponents. for a period of some moderate duration; and It was at that period almost universally few speculators upon political probabilities held to be impossible to form any other ad-would have assigned to Sir George Barlow's tenure of office a shorter existence than that of a few months. No one, at least, could have expected that the acquiescence of his Majesty's ministers was to expire in ten days, and that, at the end of that period, a communication would be made of their desire that the appointment which they had so recently sanctioned should be superseded, and another governor-general named-yet such was the

The person selected for this high office by the servants of the Crown was the Earl of Lauderdale; but it being found that the claims of this nobleman were very unfavourably regarded by the Court, the proposal was with-drawn; not, however, without an intimation that it would be revived at a future period. The first correspondence on the subject took place in March. In May the subject was again brought forward by ministers, but without success. The Court of Directors refused to revoke the appointment of Sir George Barlow, and, of course, unless their resolution could be changed or their authority overcome, the case of the nominee of ministers was hopeless. But the cabinet was not prepared to yield. The death of Mr. Pitt had shattered the administration of which he was the head into fragments which no one appeared to have either the capacity or the confidence to reunite. The coadjutors of the deceased statesman had, in the language of Mr. Tierney, "stultified themselves" by the tender of their resignations on the death of their leader.

ministration than that which, under Lord inconsistent with the spirit in which it was Grenville, swayed the councils of the state; framed and passed: it could not be supposed and though a very few months dissipated this that it intended to enable his Majesty's minisillusion, the ministry of 1806 claimed posters, at any future time, by exercising at session of "all the talents" of the country, pleasure the power of recall, to appropriate and on this ground placed opposition at de- to themselves the patronage of India. The fiance. Flushed with confidence in their own design of the clause was obvious. It was instrength, the ministers were not inclined to be tended as a check upon the Court of Directors, very delicate as to the means by which they in the event of their being led by partiality accomplished their object; and, finding their to make an improper appointment: it also recommendation without weight, they resolved enabled government to interfere in differences to call into exercise an extraordinary power vested in the Crown by the act of 1784, but which had never been exerted. That act enabled the sovereign, by an instrument under his sign manual, to vacate any appointment in British India without the consent of the Court of Directors. The right was unquestionable; so is the right to withhold the assent of the Crown from bills which have passed both Houses of Parliament—and the exercise of the latter prerogative was almost as much to be expected as that of the former, after it had been allowed for so many years to sleep. But, unprecedented as was its exercise, ministers did not shrink from advising it; and the commission by which Sir George Barlow had been appointed governor-general was vacated by the royal authority.

So remarkable an exercise of prerogative did not, of course, pass without notice. On the 8th of July, the subject was brought before the upper house of Parliament by Lord Melville, formerly Mr. Henry Dundas, and during many years President of the Board of Commissioners. After adverting to the principal facts connected with the transac-House to the act of 1784, by which the power of recall was given to the Crown; and contended that the clause in question, if construed so as to warrant the proceedings of his Ma-

's ministers with regard to Sir George low, would be altogether at variance with spirit and intent of the act of which it med part. Referring to the period when e act was passed, he said that the whole opinions on the best mode of governing India, and that the two principal plans were emnames of the leaders of the two parties by between the Court of Directors and the Court of Proprietors-a case, not merely hypothetical, a remarkable instance having occurred not long before the passing of the act, where the Court of Proprietors refused to acquiesce in the recall of Mr. Hastings, when proposed by the Court of Directors. He urged that the power thus intrusted to the Crown would be grossly abused if applied to any other purposes than those contemplated by the law-if exercised merely with a view to enforce the appointment of a particular individual whom his Majesty's ministers wished to see governorgeneral. This was the first instance in which the power had been exercised, and those who advised its exercise were bound to show good cause for it. Lord Melville pronounced a high panegyric upon the character and public services of Sir George Barlow, and animadverted with great severity upon the conduct of the ministers, which, he said, if the result of mere caprice, was highly blamable, but if originating in an intention to seize the patronage of India, was a direct violation of the spirit and the meaning of an act of parliament. After dwelling upon the inconveniences likely tion, his lordship called the attention of the to arise to the public service from the extraordinary course pursued by ministers, Lord Melville concluded by moving for certain papers connected with the removal of Sir George Barlow, and for others relating to the financial affairs of the Company.

The exercise of the royal prerogative was defended by the premier, Lord Grenville, who contended that the law must be taken in its plain meaning, not according to any fanciful country was then convulsed with conflicting interpretation, and that the act of 1784 clearly gave a power of recall. That power had been objected to, at the time of passing the act, on bodied in two bills, which were known by the one of the grounds now taken by Lord Melville, namely, that it might virtually give to whom they were respectively introduced; one ministers the patronage of India; but it was being called Mr. Fox's bill—the other, Mr. answered then, as it might be answered now, Pitt's. He reminded the house that these that because the Crown had the power of two bills were universally understood to be negativing an act of parliament, it could not framed in accordance with the different views be said that it had the power of directing the of the two parties in the great struggle upon legislature; and, by parity of argument, it the question, whether the patronage of India could not reasonably be contended that, beshould be vested in the hands of the Crown or cause a particular appointment in India was of the Company. The bill of Mr. Pitt, which reversed, the whole of the appointments must passed into a law, disclaimed the patronage fall under the control of his Majesty's minison the part of the Crown, and was based on ters. He admitted, however, that if it could the assumption that it might be more bene-ficially exercised by the Company; it could merely for the purpose of procuring the apnot be supposed, therefore, that the legislature pointment of a particular person, it would be intended that the bill should convey a power a violation of the law; but he called upon

Sir George Barlow had been appointed to succeed the Marquis Wellesley, and had almost immediately been superseded in favour of the Marquis Cornwallis. In connection with the latter appointment, Lord Grenville passed a censure upon the late administration for a neglect which had placed their successors in Possessed, he admitted, of some difficulty. every other qualification for the high office to which he was called, the Marquis Cornwallis wanted youth and health. It was generally supposed in London that he would be unable to bear the voyage, and that if he arrived in India he would survive only a short time; yet his Majesty's late advisers made no provision for an event which must have been expected, and from their criminal neglect, his Majesty's present ministers were called upon, within twenty-four hours of their acceptance of office, to provide for the government of India, in consequence of the com-munication of the death of the Marquis Cornwallis. In this emergency, they approved of the appointment of Sir George Barlow; but they never regarded this appointment as being anything more than temporary. these reasons, and on the grounds of the inconvenience that would result from acceding to the motion, he opposed the production of the correspondence.

Several other peers took part in the dis-cussion: among them Lord Hawkesbury, who, as a member of the late government, denied that it was necessary to take more than ordinary precaution against the decease of the Marquis Cornwallis. Considering the advanced age of the marquis, he had never known a man more likely to live; and such was the opinion of his friends who had last seen him at Portsmouth. The arguments used by the other speakers were little more than repetitions of those brought forward by Lords Melville and Grenville, and, on the question being put, both motions were lost without a division.

Two days afterwards, the subject underwent some discussion in the House of Com-In a committee of the whole house on the India budget, Mr. Johnstone, after taking a review of the conduct of Sir George Barlow, and passing on it a high eulogy, condemned the conduct of ministers in nullifying their original appointment. He said he had heard whose administrations the British interests in reins of power.

Lord Melville to recollect, that, from the pas-1the former as the head of one of the other sing of the act in 1784 to 1801, there had not presidencies)—he believed that those noble been a single governor appointed who had not persons possessed little of the confidence of been recommended by that nobleman himself; those who, during the period of their reand as the same system had prevailed from spective administrations, held the reins of 1801 downward, there did not appear much to government in England. Lord Castlereagh justify the surprise expressed on this occasion. Joined in reprehending the conduct of ministrations that ters; the chancellor of the exchequer, Lord Henry Petty, defended it: and Mr. Francis, who disclaimed offering an opinion of his own, alleged that, on former occasions, Sir George Barlow had incurred the displeasure of the Court of Directors, who now supported him. On the 15th of July, when the committee sat again, Mr. Grant, an influential director of the East-India Company, and the chairman of the preceding year, defended the conduct of Sir George Barlow throughout the negotiations for peace. Mr. Paul justified the re-moval of Sir George Barlow; he maintained that, to secure the respect of the native courts, the governor-general should be a man of high rank; and that, though Sir George Barlow was an excellent revenue officer, he had none of the qualities necessary for a governor-general.

The ministerial speakers in the House of Commons seem rather to have evaded discussion, either because no specific motion was made on the subject, or from a conviction that the course which they had advised was an unpopular one. The ministry had, however, one advantage, which, probably, most cabinets value more than any powers of reason or eloquence,—they had majorities in parliament, and these enabled them to submit with philosophic calmness to charges which it might have been troublesome to answer. The knowledge that the ministry had the means of triumphing in the division, though they might be vanquished in the argument, probably withheld most of the members of the House of Commons who especially represented East-Indian interests, from the steps which might have been expected from them. novelty of their situation might also have some effect in diminishing the vigour of their efforts. The Company had enjoyed the countenance and protection of the late ministers (to whom they regarded themselves as mainly indebted for the preservation of their chartered rights) during a period of twentytwo years, with the exception of the short administration of Lord Sidmouth; and the policy of his administration differed, indeed, little from that of Mr. Pitt, whom he had succeeded, and by whom he was supplanted. Accustomed for so long a time to act in concert with the ministers of the Crown, those directors who had seats in parliament seem to have felt as though there would be something that Sir George Barlow was recalled because indecorous in any very decided public oppo-he did not possess the confidence of ministers; sition, even when the former enemies of the but he believed that two noble lords, under privileges of the Company had obtained the This feeling, combined with India had flourished in an extraordinary a conviction of the hopelessness of struggling degree—he meant Lord Macartney and Lord in a contest where the victory was already Cornwallis (the latter as governor-general and adjudged, may account for the

the efforts made within the walls of parliament for the amount was liquidated, but a very large to justify the conduct of the Court of Direct-portion still remained undischarged, ore in opposition to that of the ministers of The resident having to perform a most unora in opposition to that of the ministers of the resident having to perform a most unthe Grown. But, though apparently declining any public appeal against the dictation to government, became an object of aversion to which it was sought to subject them, they steadily persevered in resisting it; and it suffered the whole power of the state to fall, being ultimately found impossible to overcome the objections of the Court of Directors to the Earl of Lauderdale, that nobleman withdraw his claim to the office of governor-general; conduct had long been exacter and uncatistic consented to nominate the President factory, and towards the close of the year of the Board of Control, Lord Minto, and 1895, it became suspected that he entertained thus the differences between the Court of views of direct hostility. It had been asset Directors and his Majesty's government were tained that communications had taken place Directors and his Majesty's government were tained that communications had taken place terminated.

his seat in Council on the 31st of July, 1507, of these communications was kept recret, but He found the country in that state of torpor they were followed by overtures from an agent which Sir George Barlow and his friends regof the dewan to the rajah of Cochin, forentergarded as tranquillity, and during reveralling into joint measures in opposition to the months of the earlier period of the new go- British power. It was reported that a French vernor-general's administration little occurred force would land on the coast of Malabar in of sufficient importance to demand an historical the course of January, and in anticipation of a scene in Travancore which fearfully disturbed Cochin to prepare to unite himself with the the preceding calm, and the circumstances of Travancorians and French, for the purpose of this extraordinary outbreak will now require expelling the linglish from the country, detail.

The deway was not one of those who con-

East-India Company has been of considerable he enforced his recommendation by example. duration, and the government of the latter Extensive military preparations were entered had, on various occasions, rendered good ser-vice to the former. It will be recollected creises, and large supplies of arms were ob-that, in 1790, Tippoo Saib attacked Travan-tained. The object of these proceedings was core, and penetrated to Virapelly; and that all but avowed, and it was currently reported Lord Cornwallis promptly interposed to rescue that emissaries had been sent to the Isle of the country from an invader who threatened France to solicit a reinforcement of artillery. in a very brief period to overrun it. In 1795, These circumstances attracted the attention a subsidiary treaty was concluded between the of the government of Fort St. George, then i iii. Government and the rajah of Travan- administered under the presidency of Sir ability. By a clause in the latter, this aid necessary. Troops were ordered to march from was commuted for an annual tribute.

misgoverned of Indian states. Retrenchment were suddenly countermanded, and a deterand reform were indispensably necessary, and mination taken to try further the effects of a the treaty provided for their being commenced conciliatory policy. and conducted under the auspices of the British necessary changes, the payment of half the conciliation under such circumstances. additional subsidy stipulated for by the second down professed great alarm at the military treaty was remitted for two years, but the end preparations which had been made by the of that period found the rajah no better dis-British government, and intreated permission posed to pay the entire amount of subsidy to throw himself upon the generosity of the than the beginning. One heavy source of his power which he had provoked. A succession expense was a military body, called the Car- of messages followed, and this portion of the natic Brigade, which, though unnecessary as drama ended in the dewan, on the ground well as burthensome, the rajah insisted upon that his person was not safe in Travancore, retaining, in spite of the remonstrances of the expressing a desire to resign his office and British representative at his court. This gave retire within the territories of the Company-rise to much angry feeling. The resident, The resident agreed to indulge him, and on Colonel Macaulay, pressed for the required the 28th of December, everything was prepayment of subsidy, and after a while a part pared for his journey from Aleppi to Calicut; between the deman and some Americans, who Lord Minto arrived at Calcutta and took had recently arrived from Persia. The nature The close of the year 1509 opened this event, the dewan urged the raish of

The connection between Travancore and the tent themselves with merely giving advice-; and ten years after, in 1805, a second George Barlow, he having been thus consoled . By the former treaty, the might for his disappointment in regard to the office I to assist the East-India Company in of governor-general. By that government ne of war with troops to the extent of his immediate and active measures were deemed Trichinopoly, and others were embarked from Travancore was among the most scandalously Malabar for Quilon; but these movements

> The experiment met with that species of To afford time for effecting the success which usually attends attempts at a sum of money was advanced for his expenses, | degradation its people transcend every nation and as the alleged fears of the dewan led him to demand a large escort of troops, the force the purpose of affording it.

A little after midnight the sleep of the resident was broken by a loud noise in the vicinity of his house. He arose and proceeded to the window, whence he perceived that the building was apparently surrounded by armed men. Hearing his own name mentioned, he opened the lattice and demanded who was there; upon which several voices exclaimed at once that it was the colonel, and several pieces were simultaneously discharged at the window, but happily without producing the intended effect. The object of the assailants being now manifest, the resident seized his sword, and was rushing down stairs to oppose the entrance of the assassins, when he was interrupted by a clerk in his service, who, pointing out the hopelessness of contending with a numerous body of armed men, suggested that his master and himself should conceal themselves in a recess in a lower apartment, the door of which was scarcely discernible from the wainscot in which it was This retreat Colonel Macaulay was reluctantly induced to enter just at the moment when the assailants, having disarmed the guard, were forcing their way into the house. Having succeeded, every part of it, except the concealed recess, was carefully searched for the intended victim. Disappointed of finding him, they spent the night in plundering the house. At daybreak a vessel, with British troops traversing the deck, appeared in sight, and the ruffians becoming alarmed, made a pre-This afforded the resident cipitate retreat. the opportunity of escape; a boat was procured, and he was shortly on board a British

The vessel that had appeared in sight so opportunely for the resident was one of several which were conveying reinforcements to the British strength in Travancore. All of these arrived in safety except one, having on board a surgeon and thirty-three privates of his Majesty's 12th regiment. This vessel, being detained by some accidents, put into Aleppi for a supply of water and for other necessaries. Two or three of the soldiers, landing immediately on the vessel arriving at her anchorage, were told by some servants of the rajah, that a large body of British troops were in the neighbourhood, and that if they were disposed to join them every requisite aid would be afforded for the purpose. The whole party were thus induced to disembark, when they

upon the face of the earth.

Two days after the outrage on the resident's attached to the residency was weakened for house, the officer commanding the subsidiary force at Quilon received intelligence, that a large body of armed men had assembled in the inclosure round the dewan's abode. being an unusual occurrence, Colonel Chalmers ordered his men to rest that night on their arms. Immediately afterwards he was informed that a body of armed nairs had been collected at Parcor, a few miles to the southward of the cantonment, for the purpose of advancing upon To avert an attack of two bodies of his force. troops at the same time, a party, under Captain Clapham, was despatched with a gun, to take post on a height commanding the dewan's house, so as to keep the troops collected there in check. The detachment had scarcely arrived at the point assigned for it, when it was discovered that a small hill, immediately on the flank of the post, was occupied by the Travancore troops, whose numbers appeared to be rapidly augmenting. The eminence on which Captain Clapham's party was posted was evidently a military object to the enemy, and it became necessary to prepare to defend it. A column of nairs was soon seen advancing, which was challenged and requested to halt. The challenge and request were disregarded, and the column continued to advance, obviously for the purpose of charging the British detach-When within ten paces, Captain ment. Clapham gave orders to fire. The fire was returned, but it was followed up, on the part of the British force, with so much quickness and precision, that after several ineffectual attempts to gain the height, the enemy was obliged to retire.

On the following morning, Major Hamilton proceeded, at the head of a body of British troops, to take possession of the battery at the dewan's house, a service which was effected without loss, and the guns conveyed within the British lines. These guns had been ordinarily used for firing salutes, but on examination, after they came into the hands of Colonel Chalmers, they were all found loaded and double-shotted; and it is also worthy of remark, that they were taken, not in the situation where they were usually placed, but on a spot having the command of the only road leading to the dewan's house.

Before Major Hamilton could return to his position he was required to push on with his party to Anjuvicha, to intercept the enemy, who in great numbers were crossing the river in that direction. He arrived just as a numerous body were crossing in boats, while another were surrounded and overpowered, tied in party was drawn up on shore to cover their couples back to back, and in that state, with landing. The British commander immediately a heavy stone fastened to their necks, thrown attacked the party on shore, who were disinto the back-water of the port. The ferocity persed forthwith, pursued to the bar, and of this deed would almost seem to justify the driven into the water. A battalion, on the opinion avowed by some Europeans who have opposite side, witnessed the defeat and destrucenjoyed the best means of judging of the state tion of their countrymen, without attempting of Travancore, that in turpitude and moral to assist them further than by a few discharges and an attempt was made to surround Major hension, was issued with similar views. Hamilton's force, but prevented by his retiring within the lines of the cantonment.

the news of these events at Fort St. George, the government of that presidency received operations on the eastern side; Lieutenantfrom the collector in Malabar the translation colonel Cuppage, with another body of troops, of a letter, addressed by the downn of Travancore to the zamorin rajah in Malabar, and Colonel Wilkinson commanded a detachment, which had been confidentially communicated assembled in the south country, for the proby the zamorin's minister. It was an extra-servation of tranquillity in that quarter, and ordinary composition, appealing to the attach- for the purpose of reinforcing the army in ment felt by the natives to their ancient Travancore, if found necessary. The troops superstitions, and expressing violent appre-lassombled at Quilon remained under the comhension of the extension of the Christian faith. I mand of Lieutenant-colonel Chalmers. To resist this, the zamorin was exhorted to rice against the British, who were to be forth- employ the force at his disposal. with expelled, and no amity thenceforward o'clock on the morning of the 16th January, maintained with them. informed that hostilities had begun, and that advancing in different directions. On reconwithin eight days the Company's battalions noitring, in front of the British lines to the should be compelled to evacuate Quilon.

fidential agent, whom the dewan deputed to advance in two columns to receive the enemy, bold a conference with him, and it was not The action that ensued lasted five hours, and umleserving of notice. On the zamorin's ended in the flight of the downn's troops and minister suggesting the imprudence of a small the capture of several of their guns by the state rising in hestility against so vast a power British force. The less of the enemy in killed as the British, the dewar's agent, after advert- and wounded was great, that of the British ing to the application made to the Isle of very trifling. Ten days afterwards, an attack of small arms at a distance from which they have been carried into complete effect. A could do no execution. On the dispersion of letter was addressed to the rajah of Travanthe enemy on the nearer side of the river, | core, explaining the circumstances under which Major Hamilton directed his artillery to open the advance of troops into his country had beon the battalion on the opposite shore, and come necessary; and a proclamation addressed almost the first shot put them to flight. They to the inhabitants, assuring thom that the peacesubsequently returned with reinforcements, able and well-affected had no cause for appro-

The troops destined for service in Travancore were to advance in various directions. Almost simultaneously with the arrival of Lieutenant-colonel Arthur St. Leger, of the Madras cavalry, was appointed to conduct the was to enter by the northern frontier; while

The last-named officer was soon required to

The zamorin was he was informed that the dewan's troops were left, a large body of infantry drawn up with Some further communication with the guns was perceived, on which Colonel ramorin's minister took place, through a con-Chalmers, without delay, ordered his line to France for assistance, said that it was well made by three columns of the enomy on three known that the greater portion of the Comdifferent points of a detachment in Cochin, pany's forces would soon be engaged in a commanded by Major Howitt, was repulsed before a ratta war, and in the defence of their with the most decisive success, although the

with a declaration that a change in the leading members of the committee had thereby become necessary—which change was immediately commenced by the appointment of a new president.

In this year the British government first became connected by treaty with the sovereign of Lahore, Runjeet Singh. This extraordinary hension; but a negotiation, conducted by Mr., afterwardsLord Metcalfe, assisted by a military force, ended in the conclusion of a treaty, by which the British government engaged not to interfere with the territories or subjects of the Seik chief north of the Sutlej, he on his part binding himself not to maintain within his territories on the left bank of that river more troops than might be necessary for carrying on the ordinary functions of government, and to abstain from encroaching on the rights of the chiefs in the vicinity.

The untoward result of the expedition to Macao was not the only misfortune of the period immediately under notice. Circumstances occurred in the army of Madras calculated to excite far more regret and far greater apprehension for the interests of Great Britain in the East.

From a variety of causes, the army of India was slow in attaining that perfect system of subordination which is alike required by military duty and essential to military efficiency. The fact of its officers living, in so many instances, apart from all society but their own, while it tended to cherish habits of exclusiveness and assumption, afforded opportunity also for the excitement and encouragement of dis-Where men have no employment for their leisure but the discussion of their grievances, real grievances will not fail to be magnified and imaginary ones to be invented. The anxiety felt by most officers to obtain the means of returning home, tended to make them eculiarly sensitive in regard to pecuniary irs; and the inequalities existing at the erent presidencies with respect to allow-, afforded to portions of the army specious reasons for dissatisfaction. Insubordination had also been cherished by the undue indulgence shown by the authorities at home to persons whose offences called for severe interests which it was his duty to uphold, it is punishment, more especially in the case of Sir equally impossible to discern the wisdom or Robert Fletcher, who, after having, as commander of a brigade, fomented and abetted mutiny in the army of Bengal, was appointed commander-in-chief of the army at Madras. From these and other causes the Indian army remained long in a state of unhealthy irritability, capable of being thrown into confusion this instance, the penalty of exclusion fell was a by the occurrence of the slightest circumstance man reckless of his own honour and of that of his calculated to afford ground for discontent. Such exciting cause could never be long wanting, and the effect of any that might occur could not fail to derive additional strength parison with those of the Company.

In the Madras army discontent had for some time been gradually increasing in extent and gaining in intensity. Those who should have checked it—officers of high standing and long experience—unfortunately lent their aid to increase the feeling. Among them Colonel Arthur St. Leger, a brave officer, but an person had afforded some ground for appre-intemperate man, stood conspicuous. So early as March, 1807, the government of Madras, in addressing the Court of Directors, felt called upon thus to advert to his conduct, and to the feeling provailing in the army :-- "We have already stated that a very dangerous spirit of cabal has shown itself among several officers in your army. The feeling has been greatly influenced by the impunity with which the Honourable Lieutenant-colonel St. Leger has been hitherto enabled to brave and insult the authority of this government; for it is with concern that we observe, in addition to the explanations which we have already given regarding the conduct of that officer, that every means of the most public nature have been taken at most of the principal military stations to hold up Lieutenant-colonel St. Leger as the champion of the rights of the Company's army, and as one whose example calls for imitation.

Colonel St. Leger was far from being the only officer of high rank who engaged in this unworthy course. On the removal of Sir John Cradock, General McDowall, of his Majesty's service, had been appointed to the office of commander-in-chief. That officer had a grievance of his own which he threw into the common stock, and forthwith applied himself vigorously to aggravate and extend the illfeeling which he found existing. The Court of Directors had departed from established precedent by not appointing the new commander-in-chief to a seat in council. This was not intended as a personal slight to General McDowall, the Court having adopted on general grounds the principle of excluding provincial commanders - in - chief from council. While, however, it is impossible to excuse the conduct of General McDowall in perverting the influence of his authority to uses most disgraceful to himself and most dangerous to the propriety of the course taken by the Court. It is not easy to discover even a plausible reason for excluding the commander-in-chief from council, while the convenience and advantage of admitting him to a place there are Unhappily the person on whom, in obvious. country in pursuit of revenge. He assumed the command a short time before the arrival of Sir George Barlow, who thus found the army arrayed in opposition to the government by the from the appearance—perhaps in some cases man whose duty it was to hold it in subordina-more than the mere appearance—of undue tion. Sir George Barlow had other difficulties. favour towards the king's officers in com- Mr. Petrie, a member of council, had held the government provisionally from the supersession of Lord William Bentinck, and judg-| whom the offensive order had been published ing from his subsequent conduct, he appears and his principal. to have been dissatisfied with the brief tenure of his authority. From the time of Sir George ment seem to have produced little effect upon Barlow's arrival he was found in unceasing the officers of the army, a portion of whom opposition to the governor, even to the extent manifested their sympathy with the parties of the abandonment of his own recorded thus visited with punishment, by preparing opinions. The new and the old governor thus and circulating for signatures a memorial to became engaged in disputes, in the course of the governor-general, and an address to the which it must in candour be admitted that displaced deputy adjutant-general. These prothere were times when neither of them ap-|ceedings being regarded as inconsistent with peared to much advantage.

the functions of government, and Sir John verting on the conduct of the officers most Cradock retained the command of the army, active in the circulation of the offensive papers, it had been determined to abolish a system of suspending several officers, including Colonel tent contract of no long standing, the con-St. Leger, from the service, and removing tinuance of which was believed to be injurious others from particular commands. to the public interests. On Sir George Barlow devolved the duty of giving effect to the towards the government had hitherto been exdetermination, and as the measure was offen-hibited by that portion of the army serving in sive to the commanding officers of corps, fresh Travancore. The publication of the order of ground for dissatisfaction with the government | the 1st of May led to acts of insubordination, generally, and with Sir George Barlow especially, was afforded.

The officers of the Madras army were preparing an address to the governor-general on other places, discontent, previously ill suppres-their grievances. The commander-in-chief, in sed, burst into open mutiny; in one lament-accordance with his duty, issued a circular able instance blood was shed, in consequence letter discountenancing the measure; but he of the resistance offered to the passage of a destroyed its effect by encouraging, in his revolted battalion from Chittledroog to join personal and private intercourse with his the disaffected in Seringapatam. officers, the proceedings which he officially limits of private communication. ing an European regiment in the northern could not fail to suggest. circars.

opinion that no legal matter of charge existed arrived. against Colonel Munro, and thereupon the now embarked for Europe, leaving behind him an offensive and inflammatory general order, which was published after his departure by the deputy adjutant-general. Upon its ap-

These expressions of the opinion of governmilitary subordination, an order of government While Lord William Bentinck had exercised appeared on the 1st of May, severely animad-

The more marked indications of ill-feeling not only more violent than any which had previously taken place, but more general. Hyderabad, Masulipatam, Seringapatam, and

Widely, however, as the seeds of discontent He did not, indeed, confine were spread, and rapidly as they had sprung his attempts to excite discontent within the into life, there was no principle of permanence Some of in the resistance to authority thus suddenly them were made publicly; and one remark-[called forth. That which had been done under able instance was furnished in an address the influence of excited feeling was not of a made by the commander-in-chief on review- nature to bear the calm reflection which time The dissatisfied could not but perceive that, while they were Having scattered widely and abundantly placing the interests of their country in peril, the seeds of disaffection, General McDowall they were in all human probability involving determined to leave it to time and circum-themselves in ruin, while the inconsistency and stance to bring them to maturity. He resolved dishonour of the course into which they had to quit the country, an intention indeed which been seduced were not less evident than its he appears to have entertained long before, but folly. The first manifestation of a returning which he probably postponed in the hope, too sense of duty was at Hyderabad; the example well grounded, of preparing the elements of was speedily followed at other places: and extensive mischief. His conduct now became thus ended a movement which in its commore violent and more open. He placed under mencement and progress seemed to threaten arrest the quarter-master-general, Colonel the very existence of the British government Munro, upon a charge of casting imputations in the part of India in which it occurred. on the character of the army in an official Lord Minto, on learning the nature and extent report drawn up many months previously. of the disaffection, had proceeded without delay The judge-advocate-general had given his to Madras; but the crisis had passed before he

Few remarks are requisite on such a subject government released him. General McDowall as the conduct of the Madras army. It cannot be necessary to inquire whether mutiny be in any case justifiable or not; but the judgments of popular opinion, not less than those of law, should be framed with due regard to circumpearance the government formally removed stances. Many of those concerned in the un-General McDowall from the office of com-happy proceedings under notice were young mander-in-chief, and gave further evidence of men, led to take part in them by the criminal displeasure by suspending both the officer by advice and criminal example of those to whom,

with respect and deference. This extranating left a valuable branch of counterer at the circumstance was permitted to have its just mercy of the enemy. The Marquis Wellesley effect; and though the number of those who had been well aware of the crit, and meditated had participated, in a greater or less degree, imeasures for the reduction of the settlements in the outbreak was large, the punishments which gave the enemy the power of inflicting were few. The great criminal—he for whom it; but circumstances presented his carrying no punishment that it becomes a civilized his views into effect, government to inflict could be regarded as too. The entermous extent of less at length rowed source—lived not to receive retribution. The the British cablest to some exertions. Admiral ship in which General McDowall took his pare | Bertie, who commanded on the Cape of Good sage to Europe was lost, and in the waste of Hope station, was ordered to refere a rigorous waters he found that impunity which he could blockade. The service was intrusted to Capscarcely have expected had be survived.

violently attacked at home, but a majority in of his Majesty's 18th foot, was, in 1809, decthe Court of Directors approved it. His patched from India, with a small force, to condiutor, Mr. Petrie, who had differed from occupy the Island of Reslriquez, about one the governor on almost every point on which hundred miles distant from the Mauritins, difference was possible, was less fortunate. On his arrival he found only two families He was removed from council, and the Court the island, and of course took possession of it repaired their former error by appointing the without difficulty. After some time spent in

muty, to the vacant reat.

marked by brighter incidents than the mis-the I-le of Bourton, and for this purpose reconduct of the army of Madran : to some of quested the co-operation of Colonel Reating. these it is entisfactory to turn.

Revolution, the injuries sustained by our commerce, from the enemy's settlements in the Indian seas, were severely felt. The principal the force destined for the attack stood for the seats of annoyance were the Mascarenha Isles, Isle of Bourbon, and, on the following morn-comprising the Isle of Bourbon, or Mascarenha, ing. disembarked to the southward of Point de properly so called; Mauritius, or the Isle of Gallotte, seven miles from St. Paul's. The France; the small Island of Rodriguez; and landing was effected with great dexterity, and others of inferior note. Such a group, lying the troops immediately commenced a forced on the very highway of the commerce between march, in order, if possible, to cross the cause-India and England, could not be left in the ways extending over the lake or poul of St. hands of an active and insidious foe with impunity, and the actual results fully realized all barkation. In this they succeeded; and they that might have been anticipated. From the had the further good fortune of parsing the Mauritius especially, French cruizers issued strongest position of the enemy before the in vast numbers to prowl over the Indian seas, French had time to form in sufficient force, and the consequent loss was immense. It has By seven o'clock, the assailants were in posbeen said that, previously to the fall of this session of the first two batteries, Lambousière island, the insurance offices of Bengal alone and La Centière, and the guns were forthwith were losers to the amount of three millions turned against the enemy's shipping, whose sterling from captures. The amount may be well-directed fire of grape, from within pistolexaggerated, but there can be no doubt of its shot of the shore, and greatly annoyed the having been very great.

That such a course of things should have argues little either for the wisdom or the infantry, was now despatched to take possesactivity of the British government; but its sion of the third battery, La Neuve, which toleration was in perfect harmony with the indifference usually manifested on such occasions.

A persuasion had indeed long prevailed, that strongly posted within stone walls, with eight French naturally used their best endeavours their position. Captain Harvey, with the third to encourage. A plausible error, once estable column, then moved to support Captain Indack, as their senior and superior officers, they looked ! must account for the supineness which so bug tain Rowley; and, to assist the contemplated The conduct of Sir George Barlow was operations, Lieutenant-colonel H. S. Kesting,

On his arrival he found only two families on new commander-in-chief, Sir Samuel Auch acquiring a perfect knowledge of the coast, Commodore Rowley resolved to make an attack The administration of Lord Minto was upon the town of St. Paul's, the chief part of A detachment was forthwith emlarked from During the wars which followed the French Redriguez to join Commodore Rowley off Port Louis, the capital of the Mauritius.

On the evening of the 19th of September, British force.

A detachment, consisting of the recond the Mauritius could not be successfully assailed six-pounders on its flanks. They were charged by a hostile force, and this persuasion the in gallant style, but without driving them from lished, is hard to be shaken, and the currency of a belief that the island was impregnable, guns. The action now became warm and combined with the imperturbable apathy with general. The French were reinforced from which British statesmen have generally rethe hills and from the ships in the harbour garded the interests of our Indian possessions, the British by the advance of the reserve,

The guns of the first and second batteries were servants, and effects. spiked, and the third was occupied by seamen under the command of Captain Willoughby, who soon opened its fire upon the shipping. The enemy now gave way, the fourth and fifth batteries were won without resistance, and at to its extent; but it was quite unequal to half-past eight the town of St. Paul's was in undertake the conquest of the island; and the possession of the British.

Till this period the naval force had been compelled to remain inactive, as they could not venture to attack the enemy's ships, lest they should annoy the British troops, who were within range. They now stood in, Captain Pym taking the lead, and opened their fire As much public property as could be carried upon the enemy's ships, all of which cut their away was embarked, the remainder was des-The seamen, cables and drifted on shore. however, succeeded in heaving them off without any material injury.

The force by which this brilliant exploit was achieved was inconsiderable. The detachment embarked from Rodriguez consisted of only three hundred and sixty-eight officers and It was strengthened by one hundred seamen and one hundred and thirty-six marines from the blockading squadron; thus making The victory a total of six hundred and four. was gained with the comparatively trifling loss of fifteen killed, fifty-eight wounded, and three missing.

The success which attended the attempt seems to have paralyzed the enemy. General Des Brusles, the commander of the island, marched from the capital, St. Denis, to repel the invaders, and on the evening of the 22nd of September appeared with considerable force on the hills above St. Paul's; but, either from overrating the numbers of the British, or from some other cause, at which it were vain to guess, he retreated, and terminated his career and their commanding officer, who was made by shooting himself. He left behind him a paper, which sufficiently illustrates the state of his feelings, though it but imperfectly and stronger battery, to gain which they had accounts for his despair of success. It was to to pass the river Le Goulet, swollen and this effect:—"I will not be a traitor to my greatly increased in rapidity by heavy rains. country. I will not, in consequence of what I foresee from the hatred and ambition of some individuals, who are attached to a revolutionary sect, sacrifice the inhabitants in the useless defence of an open colony. Death awaits me on the scaffold. I prefer giving it myself: and I recommend my wife and children to Providence, and to those who can feel for

. Judging from the temper with which Buonaparte was accustomed to regard unsuccessful commanders, the apprehensions of General Des Brusles cannot be considered unreasonable. It is gratifying to know that his wishes with regard to his family were not disap-pointed; they found in the British commander those humane and generous feelings which their deceased protector had invoked on their behalf. The widow of the general having expressed a wish to go to her own his men except one, who was killed. family at the Mauritius, Commodore Rowley immediately appointed a vessel, with a cartel the French islands was not acted upon until

which had previously covered the batteries. | flag, to convey her thither, with her children.

The career of the small British force had been highly brilliant, and, in addition to its actual achievements, it had obviously inspired a degree of terror altogether disproportioned this result formed no part of the plan of those who projected the attack. In the destruction of the batteries and the capture of the shipping in the harbour, a part of which were prizes which had been recently taken by the enemy, all that was sought for was attained. troyed, and the island for a while abandoned; the squadron resuming its usual occupation, and Colonel Keating, with his troops, returning to Rodriguez.

In the following year, preparations were made for a serious attempt to annihilate the French power in the Indian seas; an attempt encouraged by the success of a desultory but brilliant exploit achieved by Captain Willoughby, who, at the head of about a hundred of the crew of the Nereide, which he commanded, landed at Jacolet in the Mauritius. The landing was effected under the fire of two batteries, and, as the assailants formed on the beach, they became exposed to a heavy discharge of musketry; but in ten minutes the first battery was in their possession, and having spiked the guns, they marched to the guard-house, which was protected by ten fieldpieces, some regular troops, and a strong detachment of artillery. They were charged by prisoner in the act of spiking them. The British then pushed on to the second conquered, the battery was immediately carried, and the commander taken. Here, as before, the guns were spiked, and the party were about to return to their first ship, when the troops which had fled from the battery again appeared, strongly reinforced by militia and irregulars. Captain Willoughby advanced towards them, and on hiscoming within musket-shot they opened their fire. Suspecting that they would again have recourse to flight, the British commander made an oblique movement, with the intention of getting into their rear; but the moment this was discovered by the militia they fled, followed by the regulars, with a celerity that defied pursuit. Finally, Captain Willoughby burnt the signal-house and flag-staff, and, carrying with him some field-pieces and stores, re-embarked with all

Captain Willoughby and his little band, and immediately gave way, abandoning their guns

The organized system of operations against

later in the year. the attempt against the Isle of Bourbon, with troops, in the Estafette, prize schooner. about one-half were Europeans. his troops, at Rodriguez, to the service to which they were destined, accustoming them ceeding until the 3rd of July. commanders of brigades the information he ammunition was damaged. had acquired as to the enemy's strength and position, and his own determination as to the communicate with the detachment on shore, mode of operations. This, in his own words, was "to strike the first blow at the heart of the enemy," to gain possession of the capital, and let further proceedings be guided by circumstances. Every thing during the night, or before daylight, was to be carried by the bayonet, Colonel Keating judiciously concluding that the French island force, trained in a system of firing from behind walls and houses, and from the opposite side of impassable ravines, would never be brought to stand against English bayonets.

On the 6th of July, the whole of the expedition came to a rendezvous about fifty miles to the windward of the Isle of Bourbon, when part of the troops were removed from the transports on board his Majesty's squadron, consisting of the Boadicea, the Sirius, the Iphigenia, the Magicienne, and the Nereide, under the command of Commodore Rowley, which immediately stood for the different in sof debarkation. On the afternoon of h 7th, most of the ships had arrived at their destined stations off the island, and preparations were made for landing the troops. This was effected to some extent. Captain Pym landed the whole of the troops on board his frigate, the Sirius, at Grande Chaloupe, a part of the beach about six miles to the westward of St. Denis, the capital of the island; and Lieutenant Watling, of that frigate, with his men, took possession of a neighbouring height, thereby preventing reinforcements being sent to St. Denis from the neighbouring town of St. Paul's.

The other point of descent was the Rivière de Pluies, about three miles to the eastward of St. Denis. The beach on that side of the found the enemy drawn up on the plain in island is composed of large shingle, steep and two columns, each with a field-piece at its difficult of access, and the wind, which is very head, supported by some heavy cannon on the uncertain in these latitudes, suddenly and redoubt. violently increasing, the surf rose to an unex- musketry was opened upon the British force, pected height.

The first step was to renew with a party of seamen and a detachment of sufficient strength to take and retain possession few boats followed, and the men were landed of that colony. For this purpose, the force with the loss of only four; but the schooner at Rodriguez, under command of Colonel and several of the boats were dashed to pieces Keating, was augmented from the three presi- in the surf. Another small body of troops dencies to the number of three thousand six effected a landing somewhat more to the right, hundred and fifty rank and file, of whom under Lieutenant-colonel William Macleod, Colonel of his Majesty's 69th Foot. A small transport Keating had been long occupied in training was placed upon the beach to act as a breakwater, in the hope that the men might be enabled to land over her stern or under her to a country intersected with ravines and lee: this was ably performed by Lieutenant precipices, like that in which they were about Lloyd, of the Boadicea; but the violence of to act. The transports, which conveyed the the weather, and the natural difficulties of reinforcements, arrived off Rodriguez on the the situation, frustrated the success of the 20th of June; but the unfavourable state of attempt, and it was found impossible to land the weather detained the expedition from pro- any more troops that evening. Those who Before it had succeeded in landing had lost a consailed, Colonel Keating communicated to the siderable part of their arms, and all their

It now became an object of importance to but all hope of doing so seemed cut off by the circumstances which suspended the landing of the troops. In this emergency the desired means of communication were furnished by that unconquerable spirit which our countrymen have so often displayed under circumstances which almost justify despair. Lieutenant Foulstone, of the 69th regiment, volunteered to swim to shore: his offer was accepted; he made the attempt, and succeeded, by diving under the surf, from whence he was dragged by a boat-hook. By the gallantry of this high-spirited officer, orders were conveyed to Colonel Macleod, the senior officer of the detachment on shore, to take possession of St. Marie for the night. That officer immediately marched with his slender force, and carried the fort at the point of the bayonet.

The impracticability of disembarking any more troops to the windward, during the existing state of the weather, being apparent, it was resolved to despatch the remainder to Grande Chaloupe, where the landing was successfully effected.

In the meantime, the brigade under Lieutenant-colonel Hastings Fraser, 86th Foot, which had previously landed at Grande Chaloupe, had pushed forward a party, the commanding officer leading the way, to dislodge a body of riflemen who occupied the heights and kept up a harassing fire. This was soon accomplished, and the brigade moved rapidly over the mountains towards St. Denis. They the mountains towards St. halted there during the night, then began to descend at four o'clock on the following morning, having in the interval been joined by sepoys, pioneers, and artillery. A severe fire of ordnance and Captain Willoughby, ever who, however, advanced in admirable order. the first at the post of danger, pushed off, On reaching the plain, orders were given to their guns until the British grenadiers came very considerable, in contact with them, when finding that the The capture of thunder of their ordnance was to be met with the silent but deadly thrust of the bayonet, they retired and attempted to form behind the parapet of the redoubt. From this they were speedily driven by the weapon they so much dreaded; the British colours were hoisted on the top of the redoubt, two guns which had been spiked were rendered serviceable and turned against the enemy, and the batteries to the west of the river St. Denis were stormed and demolished. Thus the main force of the island was totally defeated by a body of troops not amounting to six hundred men. The commandant, Colonel St. Susanne, escaped with difficulty, and the officer second in command was wounded and made prisoner.

About two o'clock in the afternoon, a brigade under Lieutenant-colonel Edward Drummond, of the king's 86th, which had been landed that morning at Grande Chaloupe, arrived in sight of St. Denis, after a severe march over the mountains, harassed by the enemy's chasseurs, who hung upon their killed and several wounded, but, nothing As they approached, they were exposed to a heavy fire of cannon, grape, shells, and musketry from the town, without a possibility of either returning or avoiding it. Colonel Fraser, however, kept up a brisk fire upon the town from the redoubt. About four o'clock, he was joined by Colonel Drummond's brigade; and Colonel Keating, who had landed at noon with the rest of the troops, appeared on the heights. Preparations were now made for a simultaneous attack upon the place, when, at the very moment of advance, a flag of truce arrived to treat for the surrender of negotiate on any other terms.

The articles of capitulation stipulated for the immediate evacuation of all the military posts and the surrender of all public stores; the troops of the line and Garde Nationale to march out with the honours of war; the former to surrender as prisoners, the officers being allowed to retain their swords and military decorations, and embarked, as well as the troops, either for England or the Cape, with the exception of the commandant, St. Susanne, who was to be allowed to depart prisoners. The guns were spiked, the careither to France or the Mauritius on his riages burnt, and the magazine blown up; parole of honour. To these a provision was after which Captain Willoughby moved on to added, that funeral honours should be paid to the French officers who had fallen, accord-remained on the island until sunset, and a The laws, ing to their respective rank. customs, and religion of the inhabitants, as well as their private property, were to be men. On another occasion he destroyed the

The ordnance found at St. Paul's and St. Denis amounted to one hundred and forty- and retired without molestation. five pieces of heavy artillery. The loss

The French remained steadily at was never precisely ascertained, but it was

The capture of the Island of Bourbon was principally desired as a preliminary to that of the still more important settlement of the Mauritius; and in anticipation of our attempts upon that island, Mr. Farquhar, the English governor of the Isle of Bourbon, published an address to the inhabitants of the Mauritius, the distribution of which he found means of effecting from the Ile du Passe, which had been taken possession of by a party from his Majesty's cruizers. This acquisition was made in a very brilliant manner. Five boats from the Sirius and the Iphigenia proceeded on the night of the 13th of August to the landingplace on the north-west side of the island which was defended by a chevaux-de-frise and two howitzers. To gain this spot, it was necessary to pass a battery of several guns, and fortunately the attempt was favoured by a heavy cloud suddenly obscuring the moon, which had previously been shining with great brightness. Before, however, the boats reached the landing-place, the enemy discovered and commenced firing upon them: two men were daunted, the assailants advanced and landed. Lieutenant Norman, in attempting to scale the works, was shot through the heart by a sentinel above: he was immediately shot by one of the seamen, who, headed by Lieutenant Watling, speedily ascended the walls. A brief but warm encounter followed, in which the British had seven men killed and eighteen wounded; but they succeeded in obtaining possession of the walls. Lieutenant Watling then proceeded to attack the batteries on the south-east side, where he was met by Lieutenant Chads, who had landed at another the island, Colonel Fraser having refused to point and stormed and carried the works there without the loss of a man. The two parties being united, the French commandant offered no further resistance, but surrendered at discretion.

The island was intrusted to the charge of Captain Willoughby, who availed himself of its proximity to the Mauritius to pay visits to the coasts of the latter. His first attack was upon Point du Diable, which was stormed and carried; the French commander and three of his men killed, and three gunners made Grand Port, a distance of twelve miles. He strong party of the enemy, which attacked him, were put to the rout with the loss of six signal-house and staff at Grand Rivière, blew up the remaining works at Point du Diable,

The British arms had hitherto been emisustained in making the conquest was slight; nently successful, but the flattering hopes eighteen killed, seventy-nine wounded, and which their success had called forth now four drowned in landing. That of the enemy sustained a severe check by a series of dis-

night. The French account of this transac- render. tion was marked with that bad faith which has too often characterized the official state- was achieved; its disastrous issue was comments of our neighbours, and which was plete: all the vessels engaged in it were either almost universal during the reign of Buona-parte: it asserted that the Astell had struck But though, as it subsequently appeared, the her colours previously to her escape—an undertaking was ill-judged, the conduct of accusation which the captain and his officers those engaged in it was such as to enable their publicly refuted.

to encounters with merchant ships. man was turned and recaptured by the Sirius, | plotely sustained. Captain Pym. Having despatched his prize to Bourbon, that officer formed the design of close, is not yet entirely complete. attacking the French squadron in the harbour; Africaine frigate was taken by the enemy, but, not being sufficiently aware of the diffi-after a severe action, in which her commander culties of the navigation, the attempt termi- [fell; and another frigate, the Ceylon, shared nated in defeat and serious loss. Three of the the same fate. This vessel, having on board ships took the ground, and the fourth was General Abercrombie, appointed by the goprevented from closing with the enemy. These vernor-general to take the command of the unfortunate occurrences enabled the fee to troops destined for the reduction of the of all their guns upon a single vessel, the Mauritius, fell in with some French cruizers off Nercicle, commanded by Captain Willoughby. The fortitude and courage displayed by this which was gallantly maintained for five hours, asters, which for a time gave the enemy the and Magicienne, were so situated that their deminion of the Indian seas. Among other abandonneut became necessary, and after set-prizes they succeeded in capturing the Wind-ting fire to them, their respective crews were ham and Crylon, East-Indiamen. These ships, landed on the Ile du Passe; the fourth, the with another Company's ship, the Astell, were railing for Madras, when they were attacked up to that anchorage, the enemy making no by a French squadron under Commodore attempt to prevent her. In this situation she Duperre. The Indiamen maintained a very lay, without the power of removing from it, gallant and hard-fought contest with a very while the state of the little garrison at the superior force for several hours; when the isle became every day more forlorn; their Windham and the Ceylon, having sustained stock, both of provisions and water, was low, serious loss in killed and wounded, and much and they had no prospect of receiving succour. injury in their hulls, masts, and rigging, were To complete their distress, they were blockcompelled to strike. The Astell, after taking aded by a French force; and as their means of its share in the unequal struggle, effected its subsistence were almost at an end, and escape escape under cover of the darkness of the was impossible, they were compelled to sur-

No one object of this unfortunate attempt countrymen to call up the recollection, even of The success of the enemy was not restricted discomfiture, without a blush. Heroism like The that displayed by Captain Willoughby and his French squadron, with the two Indiamen, intrepid comrades sheds over defeat the lustre their prizes, ran for Port Sud-Est, in the of victory. Amid scenes of blood and suffer-Mauritius, at the entrance of which lay the ing far surpassing the ordinary horrors of war-He du Paese, which the English had occupied fare, these gallant spirits were insensible to and garrisoned. Four British frigates were everything but their own duty and their counalso cruizing off the station, and in the attempt try's honour. Never was duty more devotedly to make the port, the Windham East-India-performed, never was honour more com-

The record of disaster, though drawing to a officer and his crew were beyond all praise, when the Ceylon, being dismasted and rendered

crombic, to reconnoitre the situation of the traders are said to have been driven out of French colony, and concert the necessary mea- the island by the swarms of rats with which sures for its reduction. He arrived off Port it was infested, and it is certain that they Louis on the 19th, where he found the whole abandoned it about the year 1710. of the enemy's naval force at anchor in the the French had less dread of the disagreeable apparent readiness for sea. Having left a sufficient force to watch the enemy's movements and blockade the port, he proceeded to Rodriguez, where the different divisions destined for the attack on the Mauritius were appointed to assemble. He found that the troops from Bombay had already reached their destination. They were soon followed by those from Madras; but the nonarrival of the divisions from Bengal and the Cape at the expected time, was a source of great disappointment and anxiety, as the stormy season was approaching, and in the event of unfavourable weather the danger to the fleet would be extreme. He therefore suggested to the general the propriety of standing out to sea with the troops already assembled, and cruizing to the windward of the French island, to await the junction of one additional means of defence were resorted to, or both of the divisions so anxiously looked for. To this suggestion the general assented, and the 22nd November was fixed for the departure of the fleet from Rodriguez. Everything was in readiness on the previous evening, when the welcome intelligence was received that the Bengal division was seen in the offing.

That not a moment might be lost, it was resolved that the convoys just arrived should be supplied with the requisite provisions from the beach and shipping, and, without drop-it impossible for a fleet of transports to find ping anchor, be ordered to accompany the anchorage. These impressions were not unficet then getting under weigh; and soon known to the British commanders; but, inafter, the fleet, consisting of nearly seventy

The coasts of the Mauritius are beset by dangerous reefs, and the island has only two That called Port Sud-est, which was principally used by the Dutch, is the more capacious, and being on the windward side of the island, it is the easier of entrance, as well as the more healthy; but the wind almost perpetually blowing in, the difficulty of getting ships out counterbalances the advantage offered by the facility with which they can enter. For this reason, Port Nord-ouest was preferred by the French when the Mauritius came into their possession, and there, during the administration of Mahé de la Bourdonnais, who was governor from 1734 to 1766, the only town in the island was erected, in a narrow valley at the head of the harbour. This henceforward was the seat of government, and the port and town were denominated Port Louis.

Dutch, in the seventeenth century, who gave barkation commenced, and in three hours, ten

Paul's, to resume the blockade of the Mauri- it the name of Mauritius, in honour of Prince tius, taking with him Major-general Aber- Maurice of Nassau. These indefatigable port, two only of the ships being in a state of quadrupeds which had conquered their predecessors, or possessed better means of contending with them, is not recorded; but they took possession of the island after it was forsaken by the Dutch, and aways attached great importance to it. Raynal dwells enthusiastically upon its political and commercial advantages, and especially on its value as the means of upholding French dominion in the East. The statesmen of France had participated in this feeling, and much labour had been employed to place Port Louis in a posture of defence. They seem, however, to have relied too implicitly upon the reef which surrounds the island, and to have concluded too hastily, that the town would only be attacked by sea. guard against such an attack, works of considerable strength were constructed. As the approach of the English was not unexpected, and the fortifications on the sea side placed in such a state as to render an attack an act of extreme temerity; but the means of defence on the land side seem to have been, in a great degree, neglected.

The advantages of superior knowledge of the coast were now manifest. The French had supposed that the reefs which surround the island rendered it impregnable, and that the depth of water without the reef rendered stead of supinely acquiescing in the popular sail, stood from the auchorage of Rodriguez to belief, they took measures for ascertaining its the selected point of debarkation.

Every part of the leeward side was examined, and sounded with the most minute and scrupulous attention. This service was performed by Captain Paterson, of his Majesty's ship Hesper, and Lieutenant Street, commanding the government armed ship Emma. soundings were taken in the night, to avoid observation, and it was by these means discovered that a fleet might safely anchor in a narrow strait between an islet called the Gunner's Coin and the main land, and that there were also openings in the reef there, through which several boats might enter abreast. The only objection to this place of debarkation was its distance from Port Louis; but this was not to be placed in competition with its manifold advantages.

On the morning of the 29th, the English fleet came to anchor in the strait. Two brigs, which drew but little water, anchored on the reef, within a hundred yards of the beach, to The Portuguese, by whom the island was discovered, do not appear ever to have taken intrusted to Captain Philip Beaver, of the possession of it. It was first occupied by the Visus frigate. Soon after one o'clock the de-thousand men, with their guns, stores, ammu-|strong position, very favourable for making an nition, and three days' provisions, were landed, without the slightest loss, or even a single accident. The enemy appear to have been astonished by the boldness and novelty of the attempt. On the first appearance of the British fleet they abandoned a fort called Malastrie, the only fortified place in the vicinity. The landing baving been thus happile of football and the same last in fall of the same last in th pily effected, no time was lost in following up the success which had attended it. The troops were instantly put in motion, to prevent the enemy from gaining possession of a thick wood which lay on the road, and using the means which it afforded of harassing the flanks of the invading army. On reaching it, the advanced guard fell in with a picquet of the retreating corps, which, after a feeble attempt to dispute the passage, was driven from its position. This was the only opposition encountered till the columns reached the more open country. About midnight they halted, and before daybreak resumed their march. It was the intention of General Abercrombie not to halt again till he was before Port Louis, but the march of the preceding day, though short, had been so ex-tremely harassing, that his intention could not be persevered in. The men were greatly exhausted by their previous exertions, their way having lain for four miles among thick brushwood, through which the artillery and stores had to be dragged, with a degree of labour almost intolerable.

2 B

The inconvenience arising from the heat of the weather was increased by a deficiency of water. Several men and two officers had sunk under their exertions, and were left dead on the march. It was fortunate that these harassing circumstances were not aggravated by any operations of the enemy; but the condition of the troops rendered it obviously imprudent to attempt to reach Port Louis mining the events of the following day. without rest. About noon, therefore, a posi-

on was taken up at Moulin-à-Poudre, on a : c elevation, a wood stretching along its front and extending with some intervals to Port Louis, five miles distant. In the afternoon, the French general, de Caen, with a party of cavalry and riflemen, approached the British lines to reconnoitre, and surprised a small picquet. They were driven back and pursued by some light companies. A few men were killed, and the general himself received a French emperor, and such articles restored to contusion from a ball.

Before daylight on the following day, a brigade, under the command of Lieutenant- tion of the shipping and the property of the colonel William Macleod, was detached to French emperor were rejected; that which attack some batteries, the possession of which claimed for the enemy's troops and seamen was necessary to enable the troops to draw immunity from the ordinary fate of the their supplies from the fleet. Some of the vanquished, was assented to—a fact which batteries had already yielded to our seamen; could not fail to create surprise in all the remainder were evacuated as the troops acquainted with the relative situations of the approached. At five o'clock, the main body invading and defending forces; while it was of the troops was put in motion. It shortly equally calculated to excite regret, not afterwards encountered a corps of the enemy, unmixed with indignation, in all who valued who, with several field-pieces, had taken up a the honour of the British arms.

attack on the head of the column. The march of the British troops lay along a narrow road with a thick wood on each flank. On meeting the enemy, the European flank battalion, which composed the advance guard, formed with as much regularity as the bad and broken ground would admit, and charged the enemy with such spirit as compelled them to retire with the loss of their guns, and many killed and wounded; but this advantage was obtained by the fall of Colonel John Campbell, of the king's 33rd, and Major O'Keefe, of the royals, two officers of distinguished ability. There was a signal-post on a hill, called the Vivebot, from whence every movement of the enemy could be discerned. The French being driven from their position, a corps ascended this eminence, removed the enemy's flag, and hoisted the British ensign in its place; which was then, for the first time, planted in the Mauritius.

The weather still continued oppressive, and the troops were greatly exhausted. These circumstances, combined with the lateness of the day, rendered desirable a suspension of active operations until the morning, when a general attack was determined upon. During the night a mistake occurred which was productive of unfortunate results. A party of marines arrived to join the British force; they were dressed, as customary in India, in white and blue, and in the darkness were unhappily mistaken for French soldiers. An alarm was given, several corps stood to their arms, some gave fire, and the consequence was, that many were wounded, and a few killed. But misapprehension was not confined to the British: the enemy were likewise disturbed by a false alarm, during which, it has been said, the National Guards betrayed such a degree of irresolution as had considerable effect in deter-

On the approach of morning, preparations were made for the intended attack; but they were interrupted by the arrival of a flag of truce from General de Caen, offering to capitulate upon conditions. Three of the conditions were, that the troops and seamen should be sent to France; that the four frigates and two corvettes in the harbour should be retained by the French; and that inventories should be taken of all the articles belonging to the him at the conclusion of peace.

The articles which stipulated for the restora-

small cost. Our loss amounted to only from Bombay. The first object of attack was twenty-nine killed, ninety-nine wounded, and forty-five missing. The conquest placed in our possession a large quantity of ordnance and shipping—some of the latter of great to restrain the predatory propensities of those value the island having loss than the danger than the predatory propensities of those value the island having loss than the danger than the predatory propensities of those value, the island having long been the depot for the prizes made by the French privateers in the Indian seas. At home, the island was justly regarded as a most valuable acquisition, but the terms upon which it was obtained other instances, the charm was broken by the excited general disgust, and became the subject success of a small English force, who, after both of private and public reprobation.

The Mauritius is still ours, but the island of Bourbon was, at the peace of 1814, restored flight of the enemy. Subsequently, Rus-ul-to the French. This has been the usual course kima, the port and arsenal of the pirates, was of events - what we have gained by our arms, we have lost by our diplomacy; our and kept out of possession for a sufficient soldiers and seamen having poured out their period to allow the assailants to spike the blood in the purchase of conquests to be guns, blow up the magazines, and set fire to calmly yielded up by the liberality or the the vessels in the harbour, great and small, incompetence of our statesmen. The island amounting to about seventy in number. of Bourbon is, from its position, of less After visiting some of the inferior stations importance than the Mauritius, but the of the pirates, the British, in conjunction possession of both is necessary to the security with a force despatched by the Imaum of of our eastern possessions and commerce; and, Muscat, attacked the fort of Scheenaas, by surrendering one, we have compromised and, after overcoming a desperate resistance, our power of retaining the other. In the carried it by storm. The labours of the expeevent of a war, it will be a question whether dition were now at an end, for at the remaining the French shall recover the Mauritius, or the stations the pirates saved their chastisers all English the isle of Bourbon. The dominion trouble by burning their craft and taking of the Indian seas we ought never to have flight. surrendered; it is an essential appendage to our commercial greatness and to the safety of our Asiatic empire. Never was a more mistaken policy, than to settle a probable enemy further occasion for the services of this advenupon the road to our most valuable possessions, and in the immediate neighbourhood of the colony which is the key, as itwere, to them.

It is creditable to Lord Minto that, while he held the office of governor-general, his attention was directed, with laudable perseverance, to the reduction of the power of the enemy in the east. He understood the value of our Indian possessions, and he felt the necessity of securing them. But before recording other instances of his wise and vigorous policy with regard to the territorial possessions of the European enemics of Great Britain, it will be necessary to make brief reference to some minor incidents of his administration.

The pirates in the Persian Gulf had, from time immemorial, pursued their avocations greatly to the injury of the country trade. An outrage committed on the crew and passengers of an English ship, named the Minerva, at length roused the attention of the British government to the evil, and called forth measures for its suppression. In the case of the Mincrva, the piratical captors, not content with plundering the ship and crew, had compelled their male prisoners to submit to be initiated into the Mahometan religion, while some females who were on board were subjected to the last extremity of brutal outrage. sessions of the Dutch in the hands of England's To chastise the ruffianly perpetrators of these most inveterate foe. Among the more impor-

The prize was gained at a comparatively enormities a small expedition was despatched who found refuge and protection within its Mallia, in common with a multiplicity walls. of forts in India, enjoyed the reputation of being impregnable. Here, as in numerous carrying the outer fort by storm, were admitted to possession of the inner fort by the attacked, the enemy driven from the town,

> In the interior of India some alarm was excited by the movements of Ameer Khan. After the conclusion of peace, Holkar had no turer; but the desire for separation was not reciprocal. Ameer Khan, whether employed or not, required the means of subsisting his troops, and, to relieve himself from the burthen, Holkar permitted the Patan chief to levy contributions in his name upon such states as were too weak to resist the demand. Holkar became insane, and this increased the power and audacity of Ameer Khan, who advanced to the frontier of the rajah of Berar, under pretence of an old claim to jewels, alleged to have been taken by the rajah from Holkar. The British government deemed it necessary to despatch troops, under Colonel Close and Colonel Martindell, to repel probable danger, and Ameer Khan retreated. movements of the British forces were marked by much military judgment, but no striking incident; and the retreat of the enemy against whom they had marched deprived them of the opportunity of action. Notwithstanding the course which events had taken, it was, however deemed advisable to station a force permanently on the Nerbudda.

> We now turn to affairs of greater dignity than the suppression of pirates or the holding freebooters in check. The subjection of the republic of the United Provinces to the dominion of France had placed the colonial pos-

> > 2 B 2

tant of these were the Molucea Islands and jing line of march. the settlements in Java. The British cabinet ascended and descended successively, for five suggested the blockading of those places; the hours, and it was frequently necessary for the more vigorous policy of Lord Minto planned men to use their hands to assist their progress, and directed their conquest. They were in and to trust for safety to the hold which they succession attacked with the same spirit that were able to gain upon the slight and thinly was displayed in the movements against the scattered shrubs. These difficulties being sur-French islands, and with similar results.

The first attack was on the island of Amboyna, a place which has attained an infamous celebrity, from the atrocities of which it was to have struck the garrison with panic, for once the scene. The island had been taken by the British during the first war with revo-Intionary France, but was restored at the peace of Amiens: .ince that period, it was understood that the means of defence had been greatly augmented, and that several additional works had been raised at considerable labour and cost. The principal fortress had, however, the radical defect of being overlooked and commanded by eminences of superior height. The naval part of the expedition designed for the reduction of Amboyan consisted of the Dorer, Captain Tucker, the Cornwallis, Captain Montague, and a sloop commanded by Captain Spencer: the chief command was entrusted to the first-named officer. The military force, composed of a part of the Company's Madras European regiment and a small body of artillery, was placed under the command of Captain Court.

On the morning of the 16th February, 1810, the plan of attack was arranged by the commanders, and on the afternoon of that day the expedition was in motion. By a series of very skilful and well-executed manœuvres the attack was kept concealed from the enemy till it was too late to offer any successful resistance to the landing of the British force. When the vessels got under weigh, they stood across the bay, as if intending to work out to sea; but, by a dexterous management of the sails, they were kept drifting towards the landing-place:

boats in the mean time were all out, with : men in them, but were kept on that side of the ships which was out of the enemy's On approaching within a short distance of the shore, the ships, according to signal, bore up together; and when within about a cable's length of the landing-place, the boats were all slipped at the same moment: the ships immediately opened their fire upon the batteries, and the party in the boats proceeded to land without opposition. The entire force of the British did not much exceed four hundred men. It was immediately on its landing formed into two divisions; the first, under Captain Phillips, proceeded to attack one of the batteries, which, though defended with obstinate bravery, was finally carried, and three of the guns brought to bear upon the enemy in his retreat.

With the other division of the British force, Captain Court had advanced to dislodge the onemy from the principal fort. It being inexpedient to make the attack in front, it was

Vast steeps had to be mounted, the British reached an eminence which commanded the enemy's position. persoverance which had been displayed seems they immediately spiked their guns and retreated. On the following day the island was surrendered to the British force, the number of which has already been mentioned. of the enemy amounted to about thirteen hundred men, and was supported by two hundred and thirty pieces of ordance. The surrender of Amboyan was followed by that of the subordinate islands, five in number.

Another brilliant exploit was the capture of Banda Neira, the principal of the spice islands: this took place in August of the same year. The service was performed by Captain Cole, who had been despatched from India with the Caroline, Picalmontaise, and Baracouta, to the support of the division off Amboyna. Captain Cole had requested from Admiral Drury permission to attack some of the enemy's settlements which lay in his way, and it was granted; but not without a cautionary intimation of the disproportionate strength of Banda Neira to the means at his disposal. Not dismayed by this warning, Captain Cole departed on his course, and, having obtained from the government of Penang twenty artillery-men, two field-pieces, and some scaling-ladders, he proceeded into the Java sea, against the southeast monsoon. During the passage, which occupied six weeks, the ship's company were daily exercised in the use of the pike, sword, and small arms, and in mounting the scalingladders placed against the masts, as a preparatory exercise for any attempt at escalade. the evening of the 8th of August the Banda Islands became visible, and preparations were made for an attack. It was intended to run the ships into the harbour before daylight in the morning, but, about ten o'clock, they were suddenly fired upon from the island of Rosigen; an occurrence perfectly unexpected, as the British commander was not aware that the island was fortified. The attempt to take Banda Neira by surprise was thus for the time frustrated; but, on the following night, it was renewed with signal courage and good fortune.

The party destined for the service was about three hundred and ninety strong, but those actually engaged did not exceed two hundred. While the ships were standing towards the land, the men rested with their arms by their sides. At eleven o'clock they were ordered into their boats, and directed to rendezvous close under the lee of the point of Great Banda. The night, however, was dark and stormy, and at three o'clock only a few boats had reached necessary to take a circuitous and most fatigu- the place appointed, the rest having been driven to becamed. As the success of the at-ther people; for though, soon after its foundatack depended upon its taking place under tion, this settlement had been pronounced as cover of darkness. Captain Cole determined healthy as any part of the Indies, experience not to wait for the arrival of the remainder of has shown that it is, beyond all places in the the leads, but to make the attempt without world, destructive to the lives of Europeans. delay. They accordingly pulled for the shore, This circumstance was regarded by the Dutch but within a short distance of it the bods as an advantage, the terror of the climate afgrounded on a coral reef; and, after labouring fording, as they supposed, a sufficient defence through a boi-terous night, the men had to against any hostile attempt. But such a dewade up to their waists in water. The landing fence was no longer relied on when its sovewas effected close to a battery of ten guns, | reignty was transferred from the Dutch to the

Though success had crowned their daring, the situation of the British force was now most critical. Daylight was approaching, and the and his lordship was induced, by the informabugles of the enemy were spreading alarm tion brought to his notice, to determine on the throughout the island. A rapid movement attempt upon his own responsibility. was made towards Fort Belgica, and in twenty was previous to the capture of the French minutes the scaling-ladders were placed against lislands. the walls. So silent was the march of the general received from home a qualified approval British, that the garrison were not aware of of his meditated operations against Batavia. their approach till they were within a hundred The views of the home authorities, however, yards of them. The outworks were specifically extended no further than to the expulsion of carried, and the ladders hauled up, under a the Dutch, the destruction of their fortifications fire from the garrison; but they were tions, and the distribution of their arms and found too rhort for the escalade of the inner stores; after which it was proposed that we walls. A rush was then made for the gate-should evacuate the island, resigning posses-way, which, at that instant, was opened to adsist on to the natives. Such a termination of mit the colonel-commandant and three other the expedition would have been singularly ill-officers, who lived in houses at the foot of the judged and mischievous. There is not, perhill. The enemy fired a few guns and kept haps, a more dissolute place in the world than up a discharge of musketry for about ten or Batavia, nor one which contains a larger profifteen minutes; they then fled in all directorion of the elements of crime and disorder, tions. A few were killed, and among them The Malays are sufficiently notorious for perthe colonel-commandant, who refused to re- flidy and cruelty. The Chinese, forming ancaive quarter, and fell in the gateway, sword other large proportion of the population, less in band; some threw themselves from the ferocious and blood-thirsty, are generally diswalls, but the greater part escaped.

Fort Nassau, demanding its surrender. was answered by the verbal submission of the men by the Dutch, in 1740. The number of governor; but the Dutch colours continuing slaves, too, was enormous; many of them hoisted, Captain Cole despatched a second flag, having been reduced to captivity by violence announcing his determination to lay the place and fraud, and almost all treated with great in ashes if they were not immediately struck. cruelty. These, maddened by their wrongs This threat, aided by a well-placed shot from and sufferings, would eagerly have embraced Fort Belgien, produced the desired effect, and any opportunity that might have offered for the handful of Englishmen who had been en- revenge. To withdraw from such a populagaged in this gallant enterprise were then un-tion the European control by which they had disputed masters of the island, with its two been so long cocreed, without substituting in forts and various batteries, mounting nearly its place any other, would have been to abanone hundred and twenty pieces of cannon, and don the colony to all the horrors of insurrecwhich had been defended by seven hundred tion and massacre; to invite, in another quarter disciplined troops, besides the militia.

enemy, in the east, were the Island of Java something still more frightful and appalling. and its dependencies. An extraordinary value Lord Minto, therefore, declined acting upon had been placed upon these settlements by the these instructions, and determined, in the Dutch, who used to call Java the most precious event of success, upon establishing such a goiewel in the diadem of the Company, and its vernment as should be sufficient for the precapital, Batavia, the queen of the cast. Un-servation of public order. fortunately, like most other eastern poten-

made prisoners, without the firing of a single called into operation at Batavia; and a conshiot, although the enemy were at their guns siderable body of French transengineers, was sent out for its defence.

The reduction of the Dutch settlements was first suggested to Lord Minto by Mr. Raffles, In the mean time the governortinguished by dishonesty and want of prin-A flag of truce was forthwith despatched to ciple, and could scarcely be expected to have It forgotten the atrocious murder of their countryof the world, a repetition of the scenes which The only possessions now remaining to the had been acted at St. Domingo, or, if possible,

The preparations for the reduction of this tates. Batavia was regardless of the lives of last relic of the colonial dominion of the Holallotted to them, as they landed, on which to answer the troops were electly entiritiens, and the night, a patrol of the enemy's cavalry, city, with the intention of charging the soull-accompanied by an aide-de-camp of General ants in flank. The firit g immediately coased, Jamssons, the governor, galloped into the ad-land no more was seen or heard of the enemy vanced posts on the Batavia road, where they during the night. It appears that they had received the fire of two six-pounders, and that calculated upon the British force in the city loss of an officer and two or three men.

of boats was constructed, by which a passage trated, and the British force was preserved was effected late at night; but, as the troops from surprise and destruction. could only pass over in single file, considerable | Early on the morning of the 10th of August,

The different corps had ground after the recept of the Preach governor's form, and as roon as the principal part of each endered to be on their arm in the great square battalion was on shore it proceeded to the in front of the town-house. They had correly position which it was to occupy. The advanced reached it when the head of the enemy's column posts were pushed on, and the troops were appeared and opened a fire of muskery, and in two lines, one fronting Batavia, and Columb tillespie aslied out at the head of a least the Meanter Charles. he other Meester Correlis. In the course of party, from a gateway on the west ride of the of a picquet of infantry, and retired with the being less numerous than it really was, and they had also relied on the expectation of On the following day, the 6th August, the disabling our men by means not recognized horso-artillery and cavalry were landed, and among the ordinary instruments of warfare. the position of the army was advanced towards A large quantity of deleterious spirit was Batavin. On the 6th, the reads to the city, stored up in the town, and this the Chinese, in and the country all along the coast, were recon- compliance, it was understood, with instrucnoitered. From some symptoms manifested in | tions from the enemy, pressed upon our soldiers Batavia, the general judged it to be the inten- instead of water, which was extremely scarce tion of the enemy to evacuate the city. On |- a proclamation having been issued by the the 7th the infantry attached to the advance French general, forbidding any family to pospushed forward, the only serious impediment sees more than one jar of water for their own to their progress arising from the destruction use. By the judicious and decisive measures of the bridge over the river Anjol. A bridge of Colonel Gillespie their designs were frus-

of the adulterated beverage had been taken to produce the intended effect. In the hurry of the moment, it is to be lamented that the nuthor of this abominable act escaped.

On the 10th, Colonel Gillespie advanced with his corps towards the enemy's cantonment at Weltevreden, supported by two flank battalions of infantry. They found the cantonment abandoned, but the enemy was in force pletely put to flight; a vigorous pursuit folat a short distance beyond. Their position lowed, and the whole of the flying army was was strongly defended by an abatis, occupied by three thousand of their best troops and was the combat, that in the course of the day four guns, horse artillery. It was promptly attacked by Colonel Gillespie, and, after an obstinate resistance, carried at the point of generals and a colonel, and another colonel fell the bayonet, the enemy's force driven to the by his hand. General Janssens succeeded with shelter of their batteries, and their guns taken.

not entirely subdued. They were greatly superior in numbers to the invading force, and they entrenched themselves in a strong posi-tion between a large river and a broad and deep canal, neither of which was fordable. Their position was further defended by a deep trench strongly palisadoed, seven redoubts, The fort of Meester and many batteries. Corselis was in the centre, and the whole of the works were defended by a numerous and reasons, combined with the insufficient number of the British troops, determined the general to decline attempting the reduction of the position by regular approaches, and to endeavour to carry the works by assault. Some batteries were erected, with a view of disabling the principal redoubts: from these a heavy fire was kept up for two days with great effect; and, though answered by a far more numerous artillery, it succeeded in silencing the nearer batteries of the enemy, and considerably disturbing their entire position.

At dawn of day, on the 26th, the assault as made. It was proposed to surprise one of the redoubts constructed by the enemy beyond the canal, to endeavour to cross the bridge over that water with the fugitives, and lafter the flag of truce had been despatched, then to assault the redoubts within the lines. Captain Beaver stood in with the frigate The enemy was under arms, and prepared for towards the fort. The result was, that the the combat, and General Janssens was in the terms were submitted to, the French colours advanced redoubt when the attack commenced. hauled down, the British marines landed, and the troops, together with the inhabitants, had a close and intricate country, came on their narrow escape. A Malay was discovered with advance, which he routed almost instantly, a firebrand in his hand, in the act of setting and with extraordinary rapidity proceeded, light to some wooden magazines containing a considerable quantity of gunpowder. He was the advanced redoubt, of which he was soon taken, and, on the following day, in a spirit of summary justice, hanged. These were not the the proposed plan, passed the bridge, and, only acts of similar character which occurred. After an obstinate resistance, carried with the proposed region. The commanding officer's quarters were kept | bayonet a second redoubt. The operations by a Frenchman; and, as an honourable way of of other columns were directed with equal serving his country, this man poisoned the success against different parts of the works; coffee prepared for the breakfast of Colonel but the explosion, either by accident or design, Gillespie and his staff; the atrocious attempt of the magazine of one of the redoubts, dewas unsuccessful, the effects of the poison stroyed a number of brave officers and men, having manifested themselves before sufficient who were crowded on its ramparts, which the enemy had just abandoned. The park of artillery was attacked and carried in a masterly manner, and a body of cavalry, which had formed to defend it, speedily put to flight. strong body of the enemy, which had taken their position in the lines in front of Fort Corselis, were attacked and driven from them, and the fort taken. The enemy was now comeither killed, taken, or dispersed. So close almost every officer was engaged hand to hand. Colonel Gillespie, in person, took prisoners two some difficulty in reaching Buitenzorg, a dis-But, though vanquished, the enemy were tance of thirty miles, with a few cavalry, the sole remains of an army of ten thousand

. Colonel Gillespie, after a long detour through placed in possession of the fort.

The loss on the part of the British was severe; that of the enemy still more so. About a thousand bodies were buried in the works, many perished in the river, and many in the flight. Nearly five thousand were made prisoners, among whom were three general officers, thirty-four field officers, seventy captains, and one hundred and fifty subalterns. well-organized artillery. The season was far In the British army, about one hundred and advanced and the heat violent; and these fifty men, European and native, were killed or missing, and upwards of seven hundred wounded.

The conquest of the island might now be considered as achieved: but as General Janssens showed no intention of giving up the contest, Sir Samuel Auchmuty prepared to push his success with vigour. Captain Beaver, of the Nisus frigate, was despatched with a detachment to Cheribon, and, on arriving there, proceeded in the exercise of his duty with great spirit, by summoning the French commander to surrender, allowing him five minutes for decision. The terms he proposed were, that the garrison should be prisoners of war, all public property surrendered, but all private property respected. Immediately had chosen at Scroudel, three miles from hundred armed with pike and pikel, as the country, where he was completing batteries had four field pieces planted on a bridge, country of entrenchments, and where he had suc- invading a straight road of a quarter of a mile reeded, with the assistance of the native in length, along which the British must pass princes, in drawing together a large force. before they could reach the bridge. Captain The British commander, having waited in Harris, however, determined to attack them. vain for reinforcements, determined upon Leaving about fifty men in the fort, he led a hazarding an attack, which he entrusted to body of ninety to turn the left fluck of the lazarding an attack, which he entrusted to Colonel Gibbs. In the course of the night enemy, and to make a diversion in farour of one ship arrived, which enabled the European garrison from the fort to join the field force, which was further strengthened by a company of sepoys. But with these additions it only amounted to about eleven hundred infantry, were sharpfiring took place while the British columns were advancing, but as soon as they were near enough to charge, the contest was at an end. The governor was made prisoner, and after advancing about six miles, discovered the enemy's force. They were advanced the conquerors, and offered four thousand men to assist in attacking Sourands they took to flight in the utmost disorder, sequence of the surrender of the whole island. and they took to flight in the utmost disorder, sequence of the surrender of the whole island.

James ens land retired to the position which [markets, sixty artillerymen, and about if from

The appointment of lieutenant-governor was was soon followed by that of ambassadors from conferred by Lord Minto upon Mr. Raffles, who had preceded the expedition for the purpose of collecting information, and to whose known, and vigorous measures were deterjudicious advice its success may in a great mined on, to assert the rights of the British degree be attributed.

The fall of Batavia was followed by an event cruelties of the sultan.

so remarkable as to deserve notice.

The sultan of Palimbang, a chief in the south-eastern part of Sumatra, no sooner received intelligence of the success of the British arms, than he formed the atrocious resolution of destroying the Dutch resident, and every trary winds and currents. On the 3rd of male person belonging to the factory at Palimbang, not excepting even children, and of continued a week at anchor. Tents were razing the fort to the ground. This horrible pitched on shore, and a number of artificers scheme he executed, in spite of the remonstrances of some Malay agents of the British tended for the passage of the Palimbang river, government, who represented that the destruc- in constructing platforms for the field-pieces, tion of the fort would be an act of hostility and in providing shelter for the troops from against those to whom the Dutch establishments had been transferred by right of conquest. The number of persons thus wantonly massacred was nearly a hundred, thirty of the 15th, opposite the west channel of the whom were European-born.

regarded throughout the Malay states with with expressions of the most profound respect inveterate hatred, and the feeling is not alto- and the warmest attachment to the English gether without cause. rejoiced in an opportunity of taking signal well known to allow of any one being deceived revenge upon a people towards whom the by such professions. Colonel Gillespie refused feeling of hostility was universal and long to treat except with the sultan in person at cherished. He might further think that the Palimbang. The expedition accordingly adcircumstances which had occurred presented vanced and took possession of the works at a favourable opportunity for dissolving all con- Borang; on learning which the sultan fled, nections with European powers. The entire leaving the fort, palace, and city in a state of proceeding appears to have been marked by inconceivable disorder. He had previously rethat sinister policy unfortunately so common moved his treasures and his women into the among the chieftains of the East. The Malay interior. agents alleged that, in the first instance, the sultan compelled them to sign a false report the troops had been re-embarked; but, on of the transactions, and afterwards, with a learning the state of the capital, Colonel view of preventing a disclosure of the real Gillespie determined to push on with the facts, endeavoured to add them to the number light boats, and endeavour to stop the scenes of his victims.

despatched for the purpose of taking charge miles, presented to the view of the British an of the factory at Palimbang, and of making awful scene of murder and pillage. The most arrangements for the preservation to the dreadful shrieks and yells were heard in all British of a monopoly of tin produced in the directions, and conflagrations appeared in island of Banca, but on terms far more advantageous to the sultan than those existing "romance never described anything half so under the Dutch government. The mission hideous, nor has the invention of the imagiwas received in the most contemptuous mannation ever given representations equally ap-ner; the claims of the English to succeed to palling." Amid these horrors, Colonel Gillesthe rights and privileges of the Dutch were pie stepped on shore, accompanied by only denied, and the sultan even ventured to assert seven grenadiers, and proceeded into the city, that he had completed his hostile proceedings surrounded by the glittering weapons of against the Dutch before the conquest of Java ferocious Arabs and treacherous Malays. had been achieved. The real character of One of the latter nation pressed through the

the sultan, who repeated the statements of their master; but by this time the truth was government and punish the faithlessness and

For this purpose, a force, consisting of nearly a thousand men, was put in motion, under the command of Colonel Gillespie: it sailed from Batavia on the 20th March, 1812, but its progress was considerably retarded by con-April the fleet reached Hawk's Island, and employed in the completion of the boats inthe oppressive heat of the day and the noxious air of the night. On the 10th of April the fleet got under weigh, and came to anchor on Palimbang river. On the arrival of the British The motives which led to this barbarous force the sultan attempted to negotiate, transpolicy were probably twofold. The Dutch are mitting messages to the commander, filled The sultan perhaps nation; but his treacherous character was too

After the occupation of the works at Borang, of confusion and carnage which were taking Previously to these facts becoming known place there. The city, which stretched along to the government of Java, a mission had been the banks of the river for upwards of seven various places. An eye-witness declares, that "romance never described anything half so those proceedings he did not avow; but represented them to be confined to the destruction of the fort and the expulsion of the garrison. This mission, therefore, returned without accomplishing its object. Its arrival ment, and was in the act of concealing it in

🛊 g 🕏 in in Engling gregor and you gright on offers of the school of contract of the 🖒 forth for a great for fire for a few many or comments and other trees to all the first of the contract The first of the f

ASSET TO EAST DON'T FOR TORREST OF THE

The first own to be not

Mille de le come de la marche de la come de simils has been been sond and a second R. Etherrane of the Service of the spirit of him. menten de fint a ser in a fin ag 3 ga fant en ace. grant trade of the trade of at de la terraga de conseta de la composició de la compos ministrativa para procesa de la compansión de la constancia de la constancia de la constancia de la constancia Appendix to the following the first of the section to the section of morate and mother of citizen have dates of formatic days, the day more suited and the great dared the real countries with a specific of their endance. merchant a day of the first as dear a conservation that Balla de Barra Americane al estre bie biener Some a straff refreien gover beiter grant bergeber. with they write got each I may all a his line BORTER OF AMERICA AND BOLD HERRING OF of ten comes and and and the same Berlind Congress and the forest the second of the second Borran Canal Control Brain Brain Brain Control Part Box 4. Car Ris princers for the risk of most on A land broader it cars? I con-Richler & Louis & State States States States States at the same of the second section of the only Boundard of the Blancata with more made may no divergence that the surface to the street and the survey and appears Storeth we wat this direct in at remaind versity is but in the fire example. They have be $20 grade but the figure of the first but a major with a defined for the major and a second and a contraction glamel in the greatence of the lance of the lance of the Berlin Berlin greater. The commission was next Body, I of and buttoning elicanted to his few of of and he linguit has been been been been to at and the error two openings of a common

ရှိသည်။ မြေသည် ရှိသည်။ ရှိသည်။ ရှိသည်။ ရှိသည်။ ရှိသည်။ ရှိသည်။ ရှိသည်။ ရှိသည်။ ရေးသည် ရေးအာက်ချော်ရေး ရေးကို ဦးရေးခဲ့ စုတေနေး ကန်းရှိသည်။ ရေးအာက်ချိန်သည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးကို အောင်း အေ စုတေနေး ကန်းရှိသည်။ ရေးအာက်ချိန်သည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးသည်။ ရေးရေးသည်။ အောင်း By any enging arm of the transfer as the real to be an in the west to be recent in one and the alternation कर्ता । इसकेल्ड्राल ट्रेड ट्रेडिट राज्ये पर्यक्राणाच्या राज्ये पर्यक्ति के द्वारा समाने समाने देश कर पूर्व देश देश है ર્ષ્કુ લાવા નાર્યક કરાતમાં હતું. જે તે જેટ જારત તું કરતા હોઇ હતું, આ કર્ય નાર્યક સ્થાપ થઈ કરે કે ફોર્ડ ત્રેમ, કરતા કરતા તું. તું તું તું જે જે જે જે જે કે લોકો હું જો હતું જો તું જો હતું હતું હતું હતું જો આ જ આ કે તકાર્યોન ત્રેમ્તાએટ જાહેરતા જ શાળ તું કે જે જે કે હતું તું કરતા હતું તું હતું તે હોય, ત્રેલ્લ એ હતા હતું જો તામને હતું આ કર્ય the Literary to be a time the confiner of the other of the street the confiner of the order that high the highest the e bland, milled of the following for each of the first of the first of the factions of the fact of the factions

this problem to the second property of the state of the second of the way to prevent one or and many material to the second property of t $ $1 mark, make not only a street a man or arteant by all has been by a contraction from the contraction of the where the try the form the form of the form of the state the trans there necessaries the destrict of the constant of th ter stit givern e und bie relieus renied in mineral justy of the finitely except except about the me to be it will be used former but the dans was actnominated by the action, and pale of the long of four control his walls and the linguist livetile to the therefore were even for the tentre of the lead of the west of the linguist. firmed in all the principles absences, as i. The 19.6.5. Let writed a first client to the propositives which had been presented by plane and the was new companily the the Dutch and French presentate. To the finite. If the some as and, extremel of Company also were transferred then be rugs at the case being but the large terminatives which was warned to Company also were transferred then be rugs as the case being day but was the second of the first which was warned to the company also were transferred then be rugs as the case being days for a state was the first of the contribution. lation of the duties and the collection of incomplex accordingly intropility. They tribute within the close labors of the unitary, as freshwith commen where freat freshlip to 1984.

Control of process of the control of the first process and control of galveat to the end of province of the long off carries and the end of the article for the end of the contract of and the said of the first term of the said and the said the said and the said the sa alan a gerra con esta gatago dos Menos a acido pera note en en esta por el como a escola en encarregação ment or being marker in state of the the control of the state of the we so f a property and the first first for the first the contract of a life we satisfied The state of the state of the state of the state of The continues of the continues graves. The material of the following the material materials of the second of th Same appearance by Acres & Care a process of greaters. more was it has now great things to be were moved order att the diam Philippine ! The a contract of the state of the Mary a constitute of the and reconsider was a facilities of a contract of the factions. green to being price in the new court for Salt with a great to be a considerable to the Common to be begin to being about a comment Control of the state of the sta Markey Court to the page 12 places page the firm or more and applicable than the m martin of he public, but, but by alterities To the chatter had they be a grown and the Source of the grown on the chart have been been any in the book

athy $2 - for $30 or $ $4 $ 0 com $ a fix you had been all on the first or the action of an interesting of the with a rule new cart that is in begind and beth Et com eta co 3ta grand granden kalego et abetent A treaty was constitute by miles at class or one and an about promission of miles well as the general administration of judden the fre was inequalisticly evices ed, and in the fort, and this measure fully persuaded the the results of his personal experience. sultan that he had struck the British commander with terror.

an unconditional surrender.

He was mistaken. No symptom of con-Two hours before day the leaders of columns British force quickly occupied the ramparts, and turned the guns of the enemy upon them-The sultan was taken in his stronghereditary prince raised to the throne. the terms proposed to them. The conquest of Java was thus complete, and the British he laboured assiduously to preserve it. power was paramount throughout the island.

evening the sultan sent a message demanding endeavouring to establish their influence with great probability of success. Almost simul-In the course of the night, Major Dalton, tancously with the arrival of the governorwho, with a party of the Bengal light infantry, general's envoy, Sir Harford Jones reached occupied part of the Dutch town, between the Persia, in the character of a plenipotentiary fort and the palace, was attacked four times of the British crown. By him a treaty was in succession, but on every occasion repulsed concluded binding the sovereign of Persia to the enemy with great steadiness. Various resist the passage of any European force skirmishing took place between parties of the through his country towards India, and his enemy and others of our dragoons, in which Britannic majesty to furnish aid in case Persia the latter displayed remarkable gallantry, should be invaded from Europe. In conse-The day after, a detachment under Colonel quence of this arrangement, the emissaries of Alexander M'Leod, whose arrival had been the French in Persia were dismissed. With anxiously expected, reached head-quarters, some minor states engagements were conbut their long march and exposure to a cluded by Lord Minto, greatly at variance burning sun rendered some repose necessary. with the then fashionable doctrine of non-In the evening, Colonel Gillespie ordered all interference, but the expediency of which was the troops, both cavalry and infantry, into the forced on the mind of the governor-general by Having concluded the usual period of residence, Lord Minto resigned his office, and late in the year 1813 proceeded to England. But cession having been evinced by the enemy, he was not destined to a long enjoyment of Colonel Gillespie had determined on an assault. that repose to which men look as the termination and reward of public services, his death received their orders, and instantly proceeded having taken place within a few weeks after to execute them. The assault was made by his arrival in this country. Before his deparescalade, and was completely successful. The ture from India, his services had been honourably acknowledged by his elevation to an earl-

The administration of the earl of Minto was He was subsequently deposed, and the distinguished by great moderation, but it was The marked also by very considerable ability and other confederated princes readily acceded to energy. The line of policy incessantly pressed upon him from home was that of peace, and he was not insensible to the peculiarities of The establishment of the British power in our situation in India, surrounded by those the East without a European rival, was the who regarded us as hostile intruders: he percrowning act of Lord Minto's administration, | ceived that adherence to neutrality might be and it was one of which he had reason to be carried too far for national interest, no less To the incidents which have been than for national honour; and his views on already related little need be added, beyond a subjects which, soon after his retirement, bevery brief notice of some of the various diplo-|came of vital importance, were apparently not matic affairs in which Lord Minto engaged. very dissimilar from those of his successor. In His attention, as far as his situation would England he had been deeply impressed with admit, was zealously directed towards the the views and principles of those who trembled wise policy of keeping all enemies at a dis-lest their country should be too powerful in tance. He effected the conclusion of a treaty the East, and its beneficial influence be too with the ameers of Scinde, by which those widely extended there. The solid good sense, chiefs bound themselves not to "allow the of which he possessed so large a portion, enestablishment of the tribe of the French in" abled him subsequently to perceive the imabled him subsequently to perceive the imtheir country. He opened a communication practicability of maintaining these views and with Caubul; and Mr. Elphinstone, on the at the same time maintaining the integrity of part of the government of India, concluded a the British empire. He became fully contrenty with the reigning sovereign, by which scious of the inapplicability to our situation in the latter undertook to resist any attempt of India of that timid and indecisive policy which the French and Persians to pass through his was prevalent in England; he had the candour dominions into those of the British govern- to avow his convictions, and the expression of ment, which government engaged, in return, his opinion was not without effect in the most to provide, to the extent of its ability, for the influential quarters. His mistakes and failures expense of such resistance. The king of Cau- may fairly be attributed less to himself than bul was also restrained from permitting any to public opinion in England, which overawed Frenchman to enter his territories. With the and controlled him. The outrages of the Pinsame object which suggested the mission to darries, the encroachments of the Ghoorkas, Caubul, Lord Minto despatched Sir John and the insolence of the Burmese, attracted Malcolm to Persia, where the French were his attention; but he waited for encouragement from home to determine him to grapple victions with vigour and decision. Upon the This, the most exceptionable part of his policy, must be attributed to constitutional caution. The most brilliant, as well as valuable, acts of his government were | liant and dazzling, that of the earl of Minto the well planned and successful expeditions | rests on a basis of substantial service, and he against the enemy's possessions in the East. well deserves to be held in remembrance as He here showed that he understood his one of the eminent statesmen of India. country's interests, and he acted upon his con-whole, though one or two of those who have occupied the same high station with himself have left behind them a reputation more bril-

CHAPTER XXIII.

ACTS RELATING TO THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY -- MINISTERS DETERMINE TO THROW OPEN THE INDIA TRADE—COMMITTEE OF HOUSE OF COMMONS ON THE AFFAIRS OF THE COMPANY-EVIDENCE CALLED-DISCUSSION IN HOUSE OF LORDS-DEBATES IN THE COMMONS-RESO-LUTIONS MOVED BY LORD CASTLEREAGH-BILL EVENTUALLY PASSED.

It has been seen that, from a feeble and ob- tion. scure association of traders, the East-India Company had, in the eighteenth century, become the lords of a vast territory, and the dominant power in the field of Indian politics. They had attained this high position under the license of the British Crown; but beyond this their obligations to the government of their country were few. It was to the talents and intrepidity of their own servants that they were indebted for the commanding situation which they held; and the extraordinary ability displayed by men educated upon ordinary principles and taken from the ordinary walks of life may be received as evidence, that the native vigour of the English character will manifest itself under any circumstances which afford room for its display.

The struggles of the Company in Parliament and by private negotiation, to preserve a por-tion of the power and influence which they had achieved, and to counteract the growing appetite of the ministers of the Crown to approriate them, have been detailed with some

1.3 of minuteness to the year 1784, when peculiar form of carrying on the governnt of India, which has ever since prevailed, as first established. In 1798 the approaching expiration of the term fixed for the duration of the Company's government and exclusive trade rendered necessary some legislative provision to meet the event; and an act was accordingly passed, continuing both the government and trade to the Company for a further term of twenty years, commencing from the 1st of March, 1794. The plan of government adopted in 1784 was substantially reenacted; but the ministry, which nine years before had ostentatiously professed to renounce patronage in connection with the government of India, now evinced an inclination to abate somewhat of the sternness of their resolve. The members of the Board of Commissioners

Some additional restraint was laid on the power of the Court of Directors to make pecuniary grants, and the Company were required to reserve a specified amount of tonrange, at regulated rates of freight, for the uso of private merchants, to whom the right of trading with India was now for the first time conceded; the amount to be increased, if necessary, under the orders of the Board of Com-missioners. The trade with China was continued to the Company without invasion. This state of things continued undisturbed till the session of 1813, when the battle for the retention of the government of India and of exclusive privileges of trade had again to be fought.

On every occasion when the East-India Company had sought a renewal of their privileges, their claims had been resisted; but the grounds of resistance were not always the same with those taken in 1813. Men will always be anxious to participate in a trade which they believe to be profitable, and they will never be unable to suggest plausible reasons for acceding to their wishes. But the principles of which Adam Smith, though not the author, was the great disseminator, furnished new weapons for combating all exclusive privileges of trade, and afforded the means of concealing the interested motives of the opponents under the guise of science.

The terms upon which the government and trade of India were to be continued in the Company gave rise to inquiry and discussion for several years before the expiration of the old act. In 1808 some correspondence took place on the subject between the Board of Control and the Court of Directors; and very early in the following year it was intimated that his Majesty's ministers were not prepared to concur in an application to Parliament for a renewal of those restrictions by which the trade with India had been hitherto limited. had previously been unsalaried. A portion of them, on whom it may be presumed the main weight of business was to devolve, were no longer to remain in so unsatisfactory a posi-innovation; and it was alleged, that "the loss of the Indian monopoly, such as it was left by such distinguished actors. the act of 1793, would lead, by no slow pro- and liberality of commercial competition, as cess, to the entire subversion of the Company manifested in the slave-trade, deluged Africa both in their commercial and political capacity, with blood and covered Europe with guilt, and of that system which the legislature had And the generosity and liberality of commer-

During these discussions, a parliamentary committee was engaged in an elaborate investigation of all the great branches of the Company's out to the wretched victims, during their brief affairs; and upon the ground that it was career of life, being, in fact, not the reward of desirable that the reports of the committee labour, but the price of blood. Such are a few should be submitted to Parliament before the of the triumphs of a generous and liberal comquestion of renewal was brought forward, the correspondence on the subject was suspended At the close of the for a considerable period. year 1811 it was resumed. The opening of the trade with India, generally, to British merchants and British ships, was again laid down by ministers, as the only ground upon which the negotiation for continuing to the Company any portion of its powers could be conducted. The clamour from without excused, in the judgment of trading politicians, the pertinacity of ministers; a large proportion of the mercantile and manufacturing world appeared to look upon the East in the measured wealth. Though the sober habits relinquished. are more open to the influence of such delu-lits authority in India.

principal ground of attack upon the commer-las an instrument for exercising their functions cial privileges of the Company; and on this of government, was the result of a conviction point no defence was offered. Monopolies long cherished, though proved by the test of generally were given up; but some attempts were made to show that they might be tolerated under certain circumstances, and for definite periods of time; and further, that, as the trade with India was then carried on, the monopoly of the Company was not a very close one. On the part of the assailants, the principle that all monopolics are injurious was fortified by allegations of particular evils, supposed to result from that of the East-India Company. Manufacturers of various articles declared themselves, as well as the country wronged, by being restrained from pouring an unlimited supply of their various commodities into India; and such restraint being pronounced "humiliating to individuals, and degrading to the national character," there could be no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion, that it was "a national grievance."

But one of the most remarkable, not to say one of the most amusing, charges against the monopoly was, that "it cooled the ardour of generous and liberal competition." The gene-

The generosity appointed for the government of India: of cial competition are now strikingly set forth which system the Company formed an integral in the factory system of England, under which and essential part." through time and eternity, is sacrificed to the Moloch of manufactures; the wages doled mercial competition.

The Company replied by affirming, that the paramount object of any new arrangement for India ought not to be commercial, but political; and that the commercial monopoly was to be regarded as an instrument in the hands of the Company for the government of India; that the Company's territorial rights could only be enjoyed through the medium of commercial privileges; and that no provision made for securing them could be compatible with the entire opening of the Eastern trade. These assertions were clearly erroneous: the territorial claims of the Company were quite light in which it had been represented by the distinct from their commercial privileges; and writers of fable, and to regard an introduction there could be nothing to prevent the retento it as a passport to the possession of un-tion of the one after the other had been Experience, too, has shown. of men of business would lead us to a different that the commercial privileges of the Company belief, experience shows that no class of men are not indispensable to the maintenance of

The earnestness with which the Company The denunciation of monopoly formed the pressed the necessity of retaining their trade experiment to be unwarranted. The trade of the Company was regarded by them as indispensable to the support of the financial operations required by the relative circumstances of Great Britain and India. They viewed it not only as the best, but the only practicable channel of remittance, and without it they apprehended that the means of conveying from India the funds required to be provided in this country would fail.

They were more fortunate in referring to their own exertions to effect the introduction and consumption of European commodities exertions made through a long series of years, with great perseverance and extraordinary zeal; to their labours in upholding the interests of Great Britain in India, against European rivalship and native jealousy; to the magnificent empire which they had added to the British dominions; and to the great wealth which flowed into this country, in consequence of their spirited and judicious policy. After enumerating some of these advantages in one of their official papers, they emphatically rosity and liberality of commercial competition and justly added, with reference to the charges gave rise to those sanguinary scenes in the of their opponents—"Such are the injuries, East in which the Portuguese and Dutch were the grievances, the evils—such the degradation, which the East-India Company have that the existing system gave advantages to brought on the country.

The debts and embarrassments of the Company afforded a ground of accusation peculiarly calculated to render them unpopular, and of course they were not forgotten. The answer of the Company was to the effect, that they had never had eccation to apply to Parliament for aid to support their own establishments; pany anamend, that the connection of the but that their applications had been in conrequence of levies made by government, an the score of a right to participate in the territorial revenues; or for the purpose of obtaining reinburrement of immense sums disburred for the state in military expeditions-sums very tardily acknowledged, and not then fully poid; or to enable the Company to meet the tracefer to this country of Indian territorial dobt, the increase of which was not to be attributed to the Company, but to his Majesty's government and to Parliament. There was much in these statements that deserved consideration; but there is no novelty in the truth, that when cither individuals or societies expend their funds for the public benefit, they farely meet with much gratitude in return.

Political economy did not furnish the whole of the arguments by which the privileges of the Company were assailed: the higher reience of natural law was invoked to the rame and, be derived from it must be very distant; and A full and free right to trade with all count that, though it might be very easy to send out tries and people in amity with the British to India large quantities of goods, it might crown was asserted to be "the natural birthright and inheritance of the people of this empire, of every subject of it, and of every port in it." What may be "the natural birthright and inheritance" of a "port," it would not be very easy to determine; and if the assertion be taken in the sense in which it was probably meant, it may reasonably be doubted whether a position so wild merited any answer at all. If it did, the Company gave it a very proper one by observing, that tending the trade to the outports, that at

... legislature, the public interest demands it: that the Indian monopoly was established because it was thought beneficial; that it had been continued on the same principle, and that respectively, supported their opinions. But its abolition, or further retention, must be a question purely prudential. In urging their plea of natural right, some of the opponents of the Company endeavoured to make a special ters to venture to resist them without exerstrengthened by its application to countries quired or retained amid the haunts of office. acquired and maintained by the efforts and valour of the forces of his Majesty. countries, however, with which they wished to trade, had been, for the most part, acquired and maintained by the efforts of the Company and the valour of their servants, and altogether under the exclusive powers and privileges Lord Castlereagh proceeded to expound the which it was now desired to abrogate.

A plausible, and not altogether an unreason-foreigners which were denied to British merchants, and that the Americans especially bal availed themselves of these selectages to scrute the markets of Europe, South America, and the West Indies. From this latter circumstance, also, an inference was drawn in favour of general freedom of trade. The Com-Americans with the Indian seas was formed under peculiar circumstances, and that their success in the market of Europe was to be membed to the political state of that part of the world. The necessity for the claimants finding now channels of enterprise; the misery of the manufacturers, secasioned by their exclusion from the continent of Europe; the certainty of finding a remedy in the unlounded field which the trade to the East would open to manufacturing and mercantile industry-these, and similar topics, furnished another clust of arguments, which were present with extraordinary pertinacity by those who conceived they had interests hostile to those of the Company. It was answered, with much calmnest and moderation, that any great extension of the trade with India must take place very gradually; that, consequently, the benefits to not be equally easy to obtain returns.

Experience has shown that these opinions were, in a great measure, correct. The trade which succeeded the act of 1813 has been little beneficial to England, while to India it has, to a certain extent, been positively injurious. The petitioners for an open trade had, however, made up their minds to its advantages. and, further, that they were destined to enjoy them; for it was urged, as a reason for exmen living in society must submit to the laws Bristol and Liverpool the docks had been en-"society, and to restraints upon what is called larged in anticipation of the concession. This cir natural liberty, when, in the opinion of specimen of commercial confidence is perhaps without parallel.

Such were the principal arguments by which the advocates of free and of regulated trade, the question was virtually decided before the discussion commenced. The principles of free trade had made too great progress for minis-Their principle, it was alleged, became cising a degree of magnanimity reldom ac-

On the 22nd of March, 1813, the House of Commons resolved itself into a committee of the whole house, to consider of the affairs of the East-India Company; and the various petitions which had been presented having been ordered to be referred to the committee, plan which he had to propose on the part of the ministers of the Crown. The term for able, objection to the continuance of the which the charter was to be renewed was Company's privileges was founded on the fact, twenty years. The Company were to retain for that term the exclusive trade to China, but strongly in favour of hearing evidence, and the trade with India was to be thrown open the ministers acquiesced, fearing that they on certain conditions. It was to be confined were unable successfully to oppose. to ships of a certain amount of tonnage; the trade outward was to be open to all the ports of resumed and evidence called. The first witthe empire, but the homeward-bound trade to ness was a man rendered eminent by his career be restricted to certain ports, to be hereafter in India, and no less so by the long and named. The Company were to be left in full harassing judicial proceedings which awaited possession of the power of deportation, to him at home. It was Warren Hastings, then enable them to remove from India individuals in the eightieth year of his age. His examinawhose conduct or intentions they might find tion was of some length, and related to various or suspect to be dangerous; and this power subjects—the settlement of Europeans, the his lordship held to be sufficient to calm any demand for British commodities, and the proapprehension that might be excited by the pagation of the Christian religion. To the facility of commercial intercourse about to be first he expressed himself strongly opposed: established. It was also proposed to continue he apprehended great injury and oppression to them the command of the native army, as, after mature consideration, ministers were of opinion, that to separate the command of the army from the civil administration of India would be to sap the foundations of the government. The question, it might have been thought, could scarcely require mature consideration, or, indeed, any consideration

At every successive arrangement, the Company had been called upon to sacrifice some portion of their authority to the ministers of the Crown, and of course the present could not be suffered to form an exception. The Crown previously possessed the power of recall; but, under the pretence that this was an invidious inserted in the act, permitting strangers to exercise of prerogative, it was proposed to reside by license, he addressed a second letter render the sign manual of the Crown necessary to the chairs, remonstrating against it, as to the validity of certain appointments. One likely to produce greater mischiefs than even of the most important and most beneficial the permission of indiscriminate residence; of the contemplated changes applied to the because the favoured parties would appear to defects of the ecclesiastical establishment. have the sanction of the Company, and would The members of the Church of England in thereby possess an influence which no man India had hitherto been deprived of those would dare to resist; while a body of advenrites of the church, the administration of turers without privilege would be under the which appertains exclusively to the opiscopal jealous eye of government, and naturally exfunction, and the clergy had been left without cite its attention. In a still more recent letter, superintendence or control. To remedy these he had repeated these opinions. evils, it was proposed to appoint a bishop for India, and three archdeacons to superintend for British commodities, Mr. Hastings was the chaplains of the different settlements. less decided, but he thought it would be incon-Lord Castlereagh embodied the principal points siderable. It was his opinion, that the trade of his speech in a series of resolutions, and between India and England, as then regulated, concluded by moving them. selves strong, was disposed to carry the ques- written some years before, he had said, "that tion with a high hand. Some members sug-gested that, in so important a matter, it might be desirable to hear the evidence of persons whose opinions, on the grounds of acknow-ledged ability and intimate acquaintance with India, were entitled to attention. Lord Cashing was a fixed and incontrotlerengh objected, and Mr. Canning, whose vertible principle, that commerce could only zeal for the success of the ministerial measure flourish when free and equal, he professed not was quickened by the fact of his holding a to recollect the words alluded to, but to have brief for the great commercial town of Livernoon, which he represented, was surprised that any one should think it necessary to hear evidence, when the question was one of free expressed such opinions he then abjured them trade. The sense of the House, however was that his present sentiments were widdly dif-

On the 30th of March, the committee was to the natives, and regarded the indiscriminate admission of Europeans as fraught with danger to the peace of the country and the safety of the Company. This opinion, he averred, he had long maintained, and he expressed himself auxious to vindicate himself from the suspicion of being biassed by his obligations to the Company. With this view, he stated that, twenty years before, when the privileges of the East-India Company were under discussion, he spontaneously addressed a letter to the chairman of the Court of Directors, in which he strongly urged the necessity of providing against the irruption of British adventurers into India. A clause having been

On the question as to the probable demand was far more beneficial to both countries than The ministry, in accordance with the prac-if perfectly free. Being reminded that, in a tice of all ministries who feel or think them-review of the state of Bengal, which he had trade. The sense of the House, however, was -that his present sentiments were widely dif-

.r. Robert Thornton opposed the motion, on panegyric on the Company. schalf of the Company, as did also Mr. Grant and Mr. Astell, the last-named gentleman de-lin defence of the conduct of ministers, Lord nouncing the proposal as an attempt to smother the remainder of the Company's case. Mr. length. He considered all former arrange-canning, the representative of one of the ments relating to the government and company's privileges, supported the motion. It was resisted by Mr. Tierney and Mr. Ponsonby, leading members of the opposition; even meant for permanence. He wished not the former of whom insimuted a charge of the perpetuate these anomalous and imperfect to perpetuate these anomalous and imperfect arrangements but he believed the time had unfairness against the ministry. On a division, arrangements, but he believed the time had the motion was carried, and the select com- not arrived when any final regulation could mittee met on the 15th, and continued to sit, be safely established. Whatever was now notwithstanding the House adjourned for the Easter holidays.

In the mean time, the question of an arrangeposed that the arrangements now entered into ment with the Company had been introduced into the Upper House. On the 30th of March, the earl of Buckinghamsbire, president of the Board of Commissioners, announced, that though a different course had formerly been alleged, that the time of the House was too state of tranquillity in which these countries much occupied, or the affair was taking a had been placed—the Deceau, for instance, tendency opposed to that which they desired, and the provinces north of Mysore—which, On the 13th of April, Lord Castlereagh, after in all previous times, had been constantly complaining of delay and inconvenience, and exposed to war and devantation. This testireferring to a precedent to authorize the course many was important, because it could not be he was about to recommend, moved for the but the result of cool and deliberate convicappointment of a select committee to examine tion. Personally, the marquis of Wellesley itnesses, and report the minutes to the House, had at that time little cause for bestowing

> After Lord Buckinghamshire had spoken done should be temporary, and he objected to the part of the ministerial plan which pro-colled upon to legislate. Next to this object (division); and it seems, indeed, only to have in importance was the interest of our own them made for the purpose of enabling the esenting, which was deeply implicated in the Peers to deliver their opinions on the principal deriving. Taking his around upon the e-prins, question.

ciples, he considered both the plan of the: The speech of Lord Grenville was, undoubtMarquis Wellesley for reinverting the Committedly, the most remarkable that was made, pany with all their privileges, and that of The aweeping doctrines which he avowed to instead for directing them of a partion, as were, perhaps, at that time, little to be exlicitly questionable. He was friendly to a peeted from any member of the House of free trade, but he could not bege that a committee of but, of all men, they were least to be actually in a blick than he be influence of the control from the noble haron who gaves them iranye ita adentita v.s.

condensed by all experience. He would not to be worn with either case or grace. It was winds that the improved condition of Indivian incongruous covering for a man who had was to be attributed to the Company, but become grey in habits of official intrigue, and the public cancels of the vision and justice whose political life and liberal doctrines were of the public cancels of the state. For litter ratios on each other, twenty years after the Company sequired the dewanner, India, he said, was so contantly were some particular incidents in Lord Grendl posterned as to compile the foreible intersall posterior of Parliament; and post government; weight to his advocacy of the destruction of the foreign and the light Company. He had a har here compared only in the year 17%, when the the Extendia Company. power of controlling the Company was verted already been mentioned, been one of the most in commissioners appearts I by the Crown. It active and scalous of that party which, with is observable, that this was the precise period. Mr. Pitt at their head, had succeeded, in 1784, at which Lord Grenville and the party with in deplacing the Coalition ministry, solely on out thought so in 1754, when he opposed and, both his mind and body were enfeeded by age, with his colleagues, succeeded in throwing out the far-famed India Bill of the Coalition which must attend a man who, after passing a ministry, because it deprived the Company of long life in office, finds himself doomed to its patronage. The plan of which his loadship was the advocate went to put up the civil atmosphere of the opposition benches. appointments for competition among certain Lord Grenville, adverting to the China trade, condemned the intention of ministers to continue the monopoly to the Company. He apprehended that when the India trade was thrown open it would be, in fact, impracticable to preserve the Chinese monopoly, as the productions of China would be brought down in country vessels to any of the ports of the Eastern Archipelago that our merchants might choose.

Lad Grenville made some observations on minor topics connected with the renewal of the charter, and the debate was closed by Lord Company, entered into a long and laboured Liverpool, who briefly defended the line taken review of its progress from its incorporation hyministers. The motion for papers not being by Elizabeth, and condemned any de. registed was, of course, carried without a from the existing system as replete with petition, in which the whole influence of the expected from the noble baron who gave them government, territory, and revenue of India the weight of his authority. Lord Grenville would be arrayed against the unprotected had been long on the political stage, and his enterprise of individual adventurers, could conduct on this occasion must alike have ase their deserves the name of free trade or tonished his friends and his foes. His political course had bitherto been guided by expediency, His lead-Lip reproduted the union of the not by abstract principle. No one had ever claracters of merchant and evereign, which surpreted him of being a theorist, and the robo he alleged to be exposed to all authority and of the philosopher was assumed too late in life

He had, as has which he then acts be namenced a long official, the ground of their contemplate I violation of the charter I rights of the Ext-India Com-His londship proceeds I to say, that he was pany. Some years afterwards he had, as a for transferrica the government to the Crown cubinet minister, given his convent to an act altopether. He thought that arrangements which continued to the Company that monomight easily be made with regard to the poly and that power which he now professed pate mage, by which all danger of unduly in to regard as so dangerous. It was unfortunate creasing the influence of munisters might be that political philosophy should have deferred avoided; but he did not elate that he had ther sisk to this state-man until a period when

In the House of Commons, the select compublic schools, and to appropriate the military mittee continued the examination of witnesses appointments to the rope of deceased officers, which had been commenced in the committee of the whole house. This labour lasted much longer than had been expected; but, having been at length concluded, the Commons, on the 31st of May, once more resolved themrelves into a committee of the whole house, in which Lord Castlerengh proceeded to submit an amended series of resolutions. declaring that the privileges of the East-India Company should continue for a limited period, with the exception of such as might be subsequently modified or repealed, having been moved, Mr. Bruce, historiographer of the

Grenville in the Upper House, and argued theory be bad-that the system of the Eastthat the improvement, which was admitted on India Company is an example of such a mixall hands to have taken place in India, was ture, and therefore is a pernicious systemattributable to the Company. He denied that such a mode of arguing was assuming the very the year 1784 constituted the epoch of the point to be ascertained. "Political science," commencement of a new order of things. The said Mr. Grant, "depends upon an induction foundations of improvement were laid earlier; of facts. In no case, therefore, can it be aland it was not until much had been done that lowed to close the series of experiments, and the legislature interfered. The king's government had, indeed, subsequently co-operated with the Company; but it did not follow, that, because certain results were produced by the operation of a complex system, the same results would follow if one part of the system were is at war with the doctrine." Mr. Grant's opinion of Lord Grenville's plan for the distribution of the patronage merce, flowing from an unrestrained interof India was delivered with much freedom. He viewed it as altogether inefficient; and delusion—a delusion, however, which the evicontended that, if adopted, it would ultimately be the means of effecting that which it professed to guard against, by placing the patronage at the disposal of the minister of the Crown. He maintained, that the efficiency of the existing system for the government of India consisted, in a great degree, in its publicity—every man engaged in it acted on a of India Mr. Grant apprehended great danger conspicuous theatre. He could hardly hope from the influx of Europeans. With the solitate the rules of the service would survive the tary exception of Asia, British adventure had existence of the Company; and if they did, not been favourable to the happiness of the existence of the Company; and if they did, their vigour and efficiency might be entirely superseded. He objected, further, to the course with the native tribes of North America, suggested plan of patronage, on the ground of and especially to the effects of free trade in its exclusiveness; and thought it remarkable that a plan professing to proceed upon hostility to all exclusion, should in itself involve a system of exclusion the most cruel and unjust. confine the civil services of India to the highest classes of the public schools, and the military service to the sons of officers who had fallen in battle, was cutting off the larger portion of the British community from a wide and honourable field of exertion.

Proceeding to the question of the union of the political and commercial functions, Mr. Grant said, the objection to the union rested upon the authority of a great master of political economy, Adam Smith. But it was curious to observe how the charge had shifted its ground since it was first made. Dr. Smith disposal and imploring your commiseration. objected to the union, because he thought the interests of the Company, as merchants, would tion to compassionate their condition; to pay interfere with their duty as sovereigns; his due regard to their situation and your own; disciples took precisely the opposite ground. to remember what contingencies are suspended. The merits of the Company, as rulers, were on the issue of your vote. They conjure you admitted; but it was alleged that they sacrinot to make them the objects of perilous speficed their interests, as merchants, to their culation, nor to barter away their happiness duties, as sovereigns. After all, the charge for the sake of some insignificant local interests. rested upon assumption. It pronounced the It is a noble position in which this House is junction of the sovereign and mercantile capanow placed. There is something irresistibly cities to be ruinous; but the only instance imposing in the idea, that, at so vast a distance, upon record of such a junction was that of the and across a waste of ocean, we are assembled Fast-India Company, and it seemed like beg-ging the question to begin with laying down a human beings; that we are to them as another

He was followed, on the same side, by a far theory, and then to reason from this theory, more brilliant speaker—Mr. Charles Grant, and pronounce à priori upon the only fact in junior, afterwards created Lord Glenelg. history to which it could be applied. To argue That gentleman glanced at the speech of Lord that such a mixture of functions must upon to declare definitively that for the future no practical results whatever shall shake an established doctrine. Least of all is this allowable when the doctrine can by possibility refer only to a single fact, and when that single fact

The expectation of a great increase of comcourse with India, Mr. Grant considered a dence that had been heard ought to be sufficient to dissipate. The manufacturers had been duped by misrepresentations which had been industriously circulated among them, in some degree, he believed, from ignorance, but in some degree also, he feared, from motives less excusable. To the happiness of the people countries visited. He appealed to our inter-Africa. In speaking to this part of the subject, Mr. Grant expressed himself with great severity respecting those who, having participated largely in the slave trade as long as it existed, were now the advocates of free trade in India. These remarks were especially directed against Liverpool.

The peroration of Mr. Grant's speech was remarkably bold and striking. Having announced himself the advocate of the natives of India, he thus continued:-"On their behalf, in their name, I venture to intrude myself upon the House. Through me they give utterance to their prayers. It is not my voice which you hear, it is the voice of sixty millions of your fellow-creatures, abandoned to your They conjure you by every sacred considera-

Proxidence; that our septence is to stamp the 1. On the following day the proceedings in colour of their future years, and spread over committee were continued, and the speakers the face of ages to come either misery or hap were numerous; but the arguments were for piness. This is, in less, a pleasure destiny for the most part the same that had been prethis country; but it is one of overwhelming viously urged. The House then resumed, and responsibility. I trust that the question will the chairman reported the resolutions. On be decided, act upon party principles, not upon the 11th of June they were taken into consitrust, not upon vague the ries, but upon cound deration. On this occasion Sir John Newport practical policy, and with a view to the prote-recommended delay, for the purpose of framperity and preservation of our Indian empire." ing a more comprehensive measure of freedom, After some remarks on the danger of a system and he therefore moved that the consideration After some remarks on the danger of a system and the therefore moved that the consideration of speculation and experiment, and the important of the report be postponed to that day three policy of breaking down ramperts which could mently. The amendment was lost by a never be reconstructed. Mr. Grant concluded majority of above eight to one, and the report with the following sentence:—"In maintaining the system which has been the parent of two many blessings to In lis, we shall find our resolution, asserting the sovereignty of the recomposes in the gratitule of the peoplet Crown, and affirming that the first duty of and if that recomposes should be denied us. Parliament in legislating for India was to project, when we lo k on the moral cultivation mote its happiness, was proposed and lost, and progressive felicity of these regions, and and progressive felicity of these regions, and The next point of discussion was mised with when we reflect that there are the feuits of our regard to the term for which the arrangement wice and dislaterested policy, we shall enjoy a with the Company should be renewed. Lord triumph still more plations and elevated, a Castlereagh proposed twenty years; Mr. Pondelight infinitely surpossing the polden dreams poorly moved, as an amendment, that the term of commercial profit, or the wildert clyrium should be only ten. Two divisions followedever struck out by the ravings of distempered one on the amendment, and a second on the avarice." Such were the views of free trade, original resolution, which gave a vast majority of experimental legislation, and of the interests in favour of the longer term. Another amend-of India, then avowed by this elequent chamment was proposed, limiting the China mono-

very natural principle for merchants and manu- without a division. the resolutions.

or main, then arosed by this elequent champion of the East-India Company,

On the East-India Company,

On the East-India Company,

Poly to ten years; on this also a divirion took place, when it was lost. On the 16th, the returned in committee. The third resolution Home having again resumed the committee, was in favour of free trade to India, subject to India, subject to gertain regulations. This provoked a discussion, in which various members took part; London for a limited period. This motion was among them Mr. Therepy, some of whose objects of these vertices are equalitative with parts. It was supported by Mr. Grant and the Objects of these verticing the abolition of the Company's privileges. He had not heard, same side, remarked with much acuteness. the Company's privileges. He had not heard, same side, remarked with much acuteness, he said, that the persons who talked so much that, however those who apposed the Company of the happiness of India had ever proposed to might exclaim against monopoly, the question allow its manufactures to be freely imported was only as to the extent to which monopoly into this country. The general principle was should be carried. The plan supported by to be, that England was to force all her manu- ministers recognized the principle of monofactures upon India, and not to take a single poly, as the trade was to be thrown open only manufacture of India in return. It was true, to a few favoured ports. On a division, the ther would allow cotton to be brought; but amendment shared the fate of previous ones, then, having found out that they could weave, being lost by a large majority. Another by means of machinery, cheaper than the amendment, moved by Sir John Newport, to people of India, they would say, "Leave off the effect that the outports to be hereafter wearing—supply us with the raw material, admitted to the privileges of the trade should and we will weave for you." This might be a be determined by Parliament, was negatived Lord Castlercagh then facturers to go upon; but it was rather too proposed that, with respect to places not much to talk of the philosophy of it, or to rank immediately within the Company's charter, the supporters of it as in a peculiar degree the applications should be made for licenses only friends of India. If, instead of calling them to the Board of Control, who might consult selves the friends of India, they had professed the Court of Directors if they thought proper. themselves its enemies, what more could they This motion, after some discussion and a divido than advise the destruction of all Indian sion, was carried. An amendment proposed manufactures? It appeared that these alterations had been proposed for no other purpose trol the power of obliging the Company to but to appeare the clamour of the merchants; grant licenses to persons going to India, was and no man could point out anything like the negatived without a division; and, after a degood of India as being the object of any of sultory conversation, the whole of the resolutions were agreed to, except one, asserting the 2 c 2 duty of this country to extend to India modal and ordered to be taken into further considera-knowledge, and moral and religious improved tion on the let of July. On that day serieus ment, and recommending facilities to be given [smeadow attweers proposed and lost. Althoug to persons desirous of going to or remaining them was one against the clause respecting in India for the purpose of accomplishing the propagation of Christianity in It les. Mr. auch objects. This it was determined to post. Match made a violent apose against the raise pone, and transmit the other resolutions to clonaries, and was answered by Mr. Willierthe Lords.

On the 18th of June some conversation took place on the resolutions; and on the 21st their list proceeded languidly. A nextice for an lord languidly are not committee on them. They is tablishment of the Frottish church in Irdia were agreed to almost manimously; the early establishment of the Frottish church in Irdia was lost. On the 12th the report was lost, On the 12th the report was lost. On the 12th the report was lost, On the 12th the report was lost. On the 12th the report was lost, On the 12th the report was lost. On the 12th the report was lost, On the 12th the report was lost. On the 12th the report was lost, On the 12th the report of the first the control of the manipular of the monopoly of the Company was originally greated them for the public benefit, and it is lost fair to ask whether it has produced it. Through all the axiest vicination of the comment gave rice to some debate. Lord Melville doubtedly, monopolists; nobely was fund to annuorted the views of ministers. The earl claim a participation with them in the dreather supported the views of ministers. The earl claim a participation with them in the dreathof Lauderdale made a violent speech on the lings at Ambeyan; they were left in undis-Court of Directors in the reverest terms, and jentla; they had the exclusive privilege of declared them unfit for the civil and military lighting, single-handed, against all the powers control of India. He alleged, that to say that of Europe who had got a feeting on the penjathe Court of Directors afforded the best form puls of India. But now that they have, with of government for India was to give the lie to a valour alm of nnexampled, driven every have all experience. If the position were just, the tile European from the continent of India; British constitution of King, Lords, and Com-Inow that they have acquired an extent of termons ought to give way to a similarly consti-tuted body; for if twenty-four directors re-brought under the government and control of siding in England formed the best government this country a population of sixty millions; for India, twenty-four directors residing in realized a revenue of sixteen millions; raised India would be the best government for Great an army of a hundred and fifty thousand men; Britain. This position of the noble lord's it erected fortresses; catablished factories; swept is, perhaps, unnecessary to discuss; but it is the Indian seas of every hostile flag, and posremarkable that Lord Landordale was, a few rested themselves of a sea-coast of three thousyears earlier, very desirous of becoming the rand miles in extent, with all the facilities of instrument through which the twenty-four commerce; now it is that the liberality of the directors, whom he now denounced, were to British merchant claims an unqualified partici-exercise the powers of government. Lord pation of a free trade to India; now the wis-Grenville repeated some of his former arguments as reasons for delay; and two or three inefficient that instrument by which these of the ministerial peers having spoken on acquisitions have been attained; and its equity

tion.

solution which had been postponed. Lord dominions." Castlerengh delivered a guarded speech in favour of a regulated teleration of mission- it was of little avail to press the former ser-Sir Henry Montgomery opary exertions. posed it. He was answered by Mr. Wilber- numbers, urged on by an impetuous desire force, in a speech which was throughout able, to participate in the presumed advantages eloquent, and convincing. It must be hoped of Oriental commerce, and fortified, as they that a large portion of it would, in the pre- now were, by the dectrines of modern political sent day, be unnecessary. The resolution was economy. carried.

itself into a committee upon the bill. An ex- In the House of Lords it passed almost sub tended discussion took place, but little ad-silentio, it being opposed only by the earl of ditional light was thrown upon the various Lauderdale, because it did not go far enough; questions. Finally, the report was received, and the hostility of that disappointed aspirant force. On the following day the committee On the 18th of June some conversation took [was resumed, and rome dispersion took place, He condemned the conduct of the furthed passession of the Black Hole in Calto opposite side, the amendment was lost is now about to refuse to secure even the divia division, by a majority of thirty-five, dends of that capital stock which has been Ino bringing up the report, on the follow-sunk in the public service. Now it is dising day, gave rise to scarcely any observa- covered that twenty-four merchants are very unfit persons-not to manage the government, On the 22nd of June an important discuss for that they are admitted to be eminently qualision took place in the Commons on the re-fiel—but to manage the commerce of their

> There was certainly much truth in this; but vices of the Company against the claims of

On the 13th of July the bill was read a third On the 28th of June the House resolved time in the House of Commons, and passed.

in an angry protest.

Thus was inserted the narrow end of the hundred years. wedge which was to shatter the fabric of comto the office of governor-general evaporated imercial grandeur reared by the East-India Company by the labours of more than two

CHAPTER XXIV.

LORD MOIRA APPOINTED GOVERNOR-GENERAL—DISPUTES WITH NEPAUL—MILITARY OPERATIONS -repulse at kalunga, and at jyetuok-successes of colonel ochterlony---ill SUCCESS OF THE BRITISH FORCES-REDUCTION OF ALMORAH-ABSURD TREATY-RENEWAL OF HOSTILITIES—PEACE—AFFAIRS IN JAVA AND CEYLON—DISTURBANCES AT BAREILLY.

THE person selected as the successor of the earl | fested, rendered them dangerous neighbours of Minto was the earl of Moira. This nobleman possessed considerable military reputation, in addition to which he had acquired the character of an accomplished statesman. He was a man of mature age and great experience: he moreover enjoyed the personal friendship of the prince regent, and was universally regarded as under the guidance of the best and most honourable feelings. A wise and highminded course of policy was, therefore, expected from him, and India was esteemed fortunate in having received from Britain such a ruler. He arrived at Calcutta in October, 1814.

According to his own statement, the prospect of affairs, on Lord Moira's arrival in Calcutta, was far from gratifying. He represented the finances as in a dilapidated condition, and the military force inefficient and discontented, in consequence of the severe and unremitting duty, rendered necessary by the reductions which financial embarrassment had pressed upon the government. He found also the external relations of the country in an unsettled and precarious condition. The new governor-general succeeded to not less than six hostile discussions with different native powers, and to the necessity of devising measures for curbing the Pindarees, who had long committed the most horrible ravages with Among the more important and impunity. urgent of the disputes on hand was that with the state of Nepaul, where the Goorkha tribe had, in a comparatively short period, established a very formidable power.

The origin and early history of this tribe does not full within the province of this history: it will be sufficient to say that, for a series of years, the Goorkhas had pursued an aggressive course of policy, and with no inconsiderable success. The dissensions of the rajahs afforded ample opportunities for its prosecution, and there was no deficiency of promptitude in embracing them. In every quarrel, the Goorkha prince appeared as umpire and mediator, and these functions representative of the rajah of Palpa: he invariably rendered subsidiary to the aggrandizement of the house of which he was proclaimed, and his pretensions chief. The Goorkhas thus acquired an extent ported by the assemblage of a coof dominion and a degree of power which, body of troops on the frontier. combined with the disposition they had mani- mode of noticing these acts with

to the British government, whose frontier

they bordered for about eight hundred miles. Some attempts had been made to establish relations of amity with Nepaul; but the overtures for this purpose were not met, by the ruling party in that state, in the spirit which had led the British authorities to make them. A treaty was indeed concluded, but the conduct of the Nepaulese government, after a very short period, compelled the governorgeneral in council to declare the treaty dis-This occurred during the adminstration of the Marquis Wellesley; and, from that period, no intercourse took place between the two governments, until the encroachments of the Nepaulese compelled the British to renew it.

These encroachments were extended into almost every district of the Company's dominions which abutted on the frontier, as well as into the territories of native rulers under the protection of the British govern-ment. Among their victims was Perthee Saul Sing, the hereditary rajah of Palpa and zemindar of Bootwul. Driven from the hills, he retained possession of the zemindary, for which he engaged to pay to the British the same annual assessment he had formerly paid to the Oude government, to whom they had succeeded. He had thus become entitled to the special protection of the Company: this arrangement, however, conduced nothing to his safety; for the Goorkhas, shortly afterwards, found means to entice him to Katmandoo, where they first imprisoned, and finally put him to death. The family of the murdered rajah, despairing of preserving their remaining possessions from the grasp of the enemy, surrendered the lands to the Company, and retired into Goruckpore, where they subsisted on a provision allowed them by the British government. But this did not deter the Nepaulese sovereign from prosecuting his course of aggression. He subsequenting claimed the management of Bootwul, as the establishment of his authority was farmed compel the retirement of the invaders; but action, but to threats, qualified, as usual, by negotiation was preferred to arms, and the the display of a spirit of concession. It was result of the preference was, that the Goorkhas intimated that the rajah's proposal of an succeeded in occupying two-thirds of the district of Bootwul, west of the Terraie, the revenues of which they collected and approprinted.

On the accession of Sir George Barlow to the government, he deemed it necessary to missioner to inquire into rights which were rescue the question from the oblivion into perfectly clear cannot be regarded as either which it had fallen; but the temporizing a wise or a dignified proceeding. Lord Minto, course which he adopted was little calculated indeed, seems to have felt that to such a to sustain either the honour or interests of the course of policy it was necessary to fix a limit; British, in a dispute with antagonists, bold, and although he had previously been willing to acute, and enterprising as the Goorkhas. He adhere to the proposal of Sir George Barlow, required them, indeed, to evacuate Bootwul; and sacrifice Sheoraj to gain possession of but the demand was coupled with an offer of Bootwul, he determined, on the appointment relinquishing, on the part of the British of the commissioner, to insist on the resti-authorities, all claims to the sovereignty of tution of both, if the right to them should Sheoraj. Sheoraj was included in the territory ceded by Oude to the Company, but it had previously to the cession been subjugated by the Goorkhas. This was assumed as the turned their minds to the discovery of expejustification of the concession, but very unreasonably so. The right set up, on the part promise was made, and referred by Colonel of Nepaul, was founded in usurpation, and, though exercised for a somewhat longer period it was very properly rejected, and the rajah of time, was in no respect better than that of Nepaul was called upon to surrender that which they asserted to Bootwul. The proposed surrender was, however, without effect. The Goorkha prince rejected the offer, and refused any concession beyond that of farming Bootwul as a zemindary. Sir George Barlow shortly afterwards went to Madras, and, after his departure, the matter for a time rested in such perfect tranquillity as might almost warrant a suspicion that it was forgotten.

At length Lord Minto directed the magistrate of Goruckpore to report on the Nepaulese encroachments; and, soon afterwards, he addressed a letter to the rajah, wards, no nearessed a tetter to the lajan, plantered, and ourne some vinages. At the requiring him to withdraw from Bootwul, and acquiesce in the re-establishment of the action was pending, under the sanction of iritish authority. So far from complying, both governments, the Nepaulese took poserajah asserted his right to a further extension of the remaining villages of the toppon of territory, and alleged his respect for tuppah; the total number seized being twentyiritish authority. So far from complying, the British government as the cause of his forbearing to take possession of it. He proposed, however, an investigation by officers appointed by the two governments, with a view to the settlement of the differences between them. Here the negotiation again rested for a considerable period, till the rajah's respect for the British became so weakened, as to prove insufficient to restrain him any longer from the occupation of the districts on which he had previously set his desire. The Nepaulese crossed the Termic, which had hitherto been their limit, into the districts of Pales, and at the same time. Palce, and at the same time extended their inreads from Sheoraj into the adjoining tuppal of Debrooch.

There new aggressions it was impossible to is ar with the philosophical indifference which the British authorities had hitherto displayed gation the British government declined to with regard to the encroachments of the proceed. They would have been perfectly by the despatch of a British force sufficient to Nepaulese. They were roused, not indeed to inquiry by commissioners would be accepted; Colonel Bradshaw was accordingly appointed by the British government, and proceeded to Bootwul, where he was met by the Nepaulese commissioners. The appointment of a combe established by the investigation. It was established; and then, as might have been anticipated, the Nepaulese commissioners dients for procrastination. An offer of com-Bradshaw to the governor-general, by whom which he had clearly no right to retain. This was the state of things when the earl of Minto resigned the government to the earl of Moira.

The encroachments already related, though they may be regarded as the more important, were by no means the only acts of aggression perpetrated by the Nepaulese against the British and the chiefs under their protection. In Sarun, some serious disturbances had taken place from the same cause. A Nepaulese soubahdar, having passed the frontier, seized, plundered, and burnt some villages. At the two. These villages had been in the possession of the British for thirty years, and the attack was made without any previous demand or notice. When Colonel Bradshaw had concluded the Bootwul investigation, he was instructed to proceed to the Sarun frontier, for the purpose of adjusting the differences existing there. This appears to have been both unnecessary and injudicious: the Nepaulese had not the shadow of right, and there was consequently nothing to discuss.

The government appears to have subsequently found itself embarrassed by the character in which it had permitted Colonel Bradshaw to proceed to the Sarun frontier. The villages had been restored, subject to the result of the investigation: with this investijustified in this had they taken the determina-|ordered to take possession of them. tion earlier; but, having permitted the Ne-period having expired without any intimation, paulese diplomatists to lead them thus far, it on the part of the Nepaulese, of a disposition is not easy to defend their sudden departure to comply with the dictates of justice, the from a course to which the other party must magistrate directed his police officers to adfrom a course to which the other party must have considered them pledged. It is true that the proceedings at Bootwul were not calculated to inspire the British with much confidence in the good faith of their opponents: this, it may be presumed, was the impression of the government; and Colonel Bradshaw was accordingly instructed to invite the Nepaulese commissioners to meet him, for the approach of the sickly season, it was deemed purpose of reviewing the proceedings already taken, and, nothing appearing to give a dif-ferent complexion to the transactions, to demand a renunciation of all pretensions to the twenty-two villages, and a surrender of the lands on the Sarun frontier which were still withheld.

In pursuance of these instructions Colonel Bradshaw addressed a note to the commissioners, proposing a meeting. To this the of Chilwan, who, after having surrendered commissioners replied by a very long letter, declaring that they would not meet Colonel Bradshaw, nor hold any communication with him, revoking the conditional transfer of the twenty-two villages, and requiring the British commissioner instantly to quit the frontier. It is to be lamented that any pretext was afforded to the Nepaulese for thus abruptly terminating the negotiations; but it is admitted that the communications of Colonel Bradshaw with the commissioners had countenanced the belief that an investigation similar to that in Bootwul was to be instituted in Sarun. It has been alleged, that Colonel Bradshaw was not authorized to give any positive assurances to that effect. A faithless government may always avail itself of this excuse to disavow the acts of its agents; and it is unfortunate when an upright and honourable one is compelled to have recourse to it. But while the position in which the British government was thus placed was somewhat embarrassing, and its decision, perhaps, rather hasty, two points are perfectly clear—that its claims were founded on substantial justice, and that the objects of the Nepaulese were only evasion and delay.

the British were conceded; and, not resting on idle threats, Colonel Bradshaw was inon the part of the rajah, to resume postook immediate measures for commercing it session of the usurped lands. The answer with activity and vigour; and a plan we kill of the rajah being unsatisfactory, Colonel down for invading the Nepaulese territy at Bradshaw proceeded to execute the orders four different points. For this purper, the which he had received, and the resumption of separate divisions of troops were available the disputed lands was effected without opposite to act directly against the ensurprise the disputed lands was effected without opposite to return the commercial tended to resume the unampore; a second is stion.

A similar course was adopted with recard tended to resume the unamporter to Bootwul and Sheoraj. Their restingtion and Sheoraj, and afterwards constituted to Bootwul and Sheoraj. Their restingtion was renetrating the passes of the first line. structed, in the event of refusal or evasion on the part of the rajah, to resume postion took immediate measures for commercing its netwity and vigour; and continuous in the same postion in the part of the rajah, to resume postions are received and vigour; and continuous its network and vigour; and continuous its network are received as the rajah are received as the received and vigour; and vigou vance and establish stations at certain fixed places. Being resisted by the Nepaulese officers, they retired, when a body of troops marched in, and occupied the disputed lands without impediment.

But the course of events was not to continue thus smooth. In consequence of the necessary to withdraw the troops from the Terraie, and their departure was the signal for the revival of aggression on the part of the Nepaulese, attended, too, by circumstances of peculiar atrocity. On the morning of the 29th of May, 1814, three of the police stations in Bootwul were attacked by a large force, the officers driven out, and eighteen of them Among the slain was the tannahdar killed. himself prisoner, was murdered, in cold blood, by the Nepaulese commander. The whole of the lands at Bootwul were forthwith reoccupied by the usurping power; and Sheoraj, from the want of regular troops to defend it, was abandoned. The insalubrity of the season, which had dictated the withdrawal of the troops, precluded their return, except at great The government, therefore, confined its measures to the defence of the existing frontier, and the probibition of all commercial intercourse between the British provinces and Nepaul.

The last outrage committed by the Nepaulese government might have been expected to put an end to negotiation; but the earl of Moira made one further attempt to effect a settlement of the existing differences without an appeal to the sword. A letter addressed by him to the rajah of Nepaul, complaining especially of the treacherous attack upon Bootwul and the murder of the police officers, was answered by one in which no notice whatever was taken of those subjects, but which was filled with reiterations of refuted claims, groundless accusations of the agents of British government, and menaces of hostility if evasion and delay.

The earl of Moira now addressed a letter to the rajah of Nepaul, threatening immediate resort to hostile measures, unless the rights of communication came to an end, the government, and necessary. With the events should render it necessary. With the receipt of this letter the system of finities resort to hostile measures, unless the rights of With the general very properly suffering it to partie.

out reply.

War being inevitable, the earl of More diate measures for occupying that valley and other positions in Attached to this division were between six Gurhwal, and seizing the passes of the Jumna and seven thousand irregulars, of various and the Ganges; and a fourth, to act against descriptions, raised by Mr. William Fraser. the western provinces and the western army first assistant to the resident at Delhi, and, of the Goorkhas, which was understood to be when embodied, placed under the command of composed of the flower of their troops. The Lieutenant Frederick Young, to whose peculast division, which was placed under the liar fitness for the charge the governor-general command of Colonel Ochterlony, consisted afforded his personal testimony. To Major originally of about six thousand men, with Stevenson was allotted the duty of obtaining sixteen pieces of ordnance. Its strength was intelligence and guides. The force under the subsequently increased to seven thousand command of Major-General Gillespie was men, and the number of pieces of ordnance assembled at Scharunpore by the middle of to twenty-two. Attached to this division was October, and marched towards the Dhoon a body of irregular troops, which, in the course shortly after. The movements of this division, of the campaign, amounted to about four as well as those of the last, were intended to thousand five hundred men. were auxiliaries furnished by the Seikh chiefs were intrusted to Mr. Fraser, above menand the expelled rajah of Hindore. In the tioned, and the Honourable Edward Gardner. progress of the operations a corps was also formed of deserters from the Goorkha army.

The earl of Moira proposed, in aid of his. military operations, a series of political arrangements, the object of which was to engage irregulars amounting to nine hundred. Twelve in the British cause the chieftains of the driven out by the Goorkhas; and through them to draw over their former subjects, who were represented as retaining a strong attachment to the families of their exiled rulers, and holding their conquerors in the greatest detestation. The expediency of this plan seems to have been doubted by Colonel Ochterlony, who urged that embarrassment, inconvenience, and expense were likely to result from the restoration of the hill chieftains under the protection and guarantee of the British government, and especially pointed out the necessity which would constantly arise for its interposition to settle the differences which, it might be foreseen, would occur among them. This obligation, however, Lord Moira did not appear to contemplate as necessarily falling within the province of the protecting power, and his opinion of the military and political advantages of the plan remained unshaken. I Ochterlony was, therefore, furnished with aft of a proclamation, declaring the intenof the British government to expel the Bradshaw. orkhas and restore the ancient chiefs; disclaiming all pecuniary indemnification, and requiring only a zealous and cordial co-operawas to commence his march into the hills.

was placed under the command of Majorgovernor of that settlement. strength, of three thousand five hundred men and fourteen pieces of ordnance, was after- the Nepaulese continued to repeat those mock wards augmented to about ten thousand five overtures for an amicable adjustment of the Part of these be assisted by a course of negotiations, which

The second division, which was destined to clear the Terraie and re-establish the British authority in the usurped lands, consisted of nearly five thousand troops, with a body of pieces of ordnance were originally allotted to ancient hill principalities, who had been it, but, by after-arrangements, some of them were replaced by others of superior power, and the number was increased to fifteen. division was placed under the command of Major-General John Sulivan Wood, to whom was also committed the management of the political negotiations that were to be combined with the operations of his division. Hearrived at Goruckpore on the 15th of November, the climate of the Terraie, antecedently to that period, being regarded as unfavourable to the health of the troops.

The division which was intended to advance directly against Katmandoo remains to be noticed. Of the operations of this division the highest expectations were formed, and the commander-in-chief was anxious to place it in the very highest state of efficiency. It comprehended eight thousand troops and twentysix pieces of ordnance, which were placed under Colo- the command of Major-General Marley. political arrangements connected with this division were intrusted to Lieutenant-Colonel

Subsidiary, in some degree, to the duties assigned to this division of the invading army, was a force placed under the command of tion against the Goorkhas, then, or at any Captain Barre Latter, designed to act princifuture period when it might again be neces-pally, though not exclusively, on the defensive sary. The time for issuing this proclamation To that officer was intrusted the defence of the was left to the discretion of Colonel Ochter-British frontier, from the river Koosi, eastward, lony; and that officer, having completed his to Juggigobath, on the Burhampooter; and preparations, proceeded to Roopoor, where he his attention was more especially called to that part comprehended between the Koosi and The third division, destined for Gurhwal, the Seistah, which latter river formed the eastern limit to the Nepaulese territories. The General Gillespie, who had quitted Java in force, regular and irregular, placed at the disconsequence of disputes with the lieutenant- posal of Captain Barré Latter, amounted to Its original about two thousand seven hundred men.

While these preparations were in progress, hundred men and twenty pieces of ordnance. | pending differences in which they had so long persevered. made to Colonel Ochterlony by Ummer Sing ascribed to motives less honourable to that officer than those which he avowed. Some information which had reached the British government induced a belief that Ummer Sing Thappa, notwithstanding his apparent attachment to the Goorkha cause, was secretly disaffected to the Nepaulese government, and might be induced to betray the army he commanded and the country he occupied into the hands of the English, in consideration of his personal interests being adequately provided Acting upon this information, the British government gave secret instructions to Colonel Ochterlony and to the resident at Delhi to meet with encouragement any advance which Ummer Sing Thappa might make towards effecting such a bargain.

Before the result of these instructions could be known, the governor-general's agent at Benares announced that a brahmin, who declared himself authorized by Runjore Sing Thappa, son of Ummer Sing Thappa, had proposed, on behalf of that functionary and his father, to put the British troops in possession of Nepaul, on conditions, the objects of which were to confirm the rajah in the government, and secure to the negotiators certain advantages as the reward of their services. favourable answer was returned, and Runjore Sing Thappa was recommended to put himself in communication with Colonel Bradshaw, to whom, as well as to Colonel Ochterlony, notice of the proposal, and instructions as to their own course, were forthwith transmitted. brahmin returned to Katmandoo, avowedly to communicate to his employers the result of his mission, and not long afterwards reappeared at Benares, with another person of the same order with himself. But the new mission professed different objects from the old one. two brahmins were the bearers of letters from the rajah and his ministers, intimating a desire to open a negotiation for peace; and the prospect of overcoming the Nepaulese by intrigue, instead of force, was in this quarter at an end.

It seems not improbable that the overture was only a piece of that tortuous policy which characterizes all the proceedings of Eastern That policy appears, on this occasion, to have attracted the favour and excited the imitation of their rivals, who were determined, if possible, to shake the integrity of Ummer Sing Thappa. But the coyness of the Nepaulese general surprised and disappointed them, and Colonel Ochterlony was instructed to spare him the confusion of an unsolicited confession of attachment, by hinting that his advances would be entirely agreeable. The British commander accordingly took advantage of some partial successes on his own part to address a letter to Ummer Sing Thappa, intimating that he had received under Colonel Carpenter and Major

Frequent communications were the authority of the governor-general to communicate with him on any proposal that he Thappa, who commanded the western force of might have to offer. But though thus assiduthe Goorkhas; but these appear to have been ously wooed, the Goorkha chief was not won. His answer was a decided and somewhat scornful rejection of the suit. This, however, did not prevent its renewal. Fresh communications with Ummer Sing were subsequently opened, and kept on foot through his son, in the hope that the private interests of the minister and the general might be made the instruments of overcoming their public duty; but they ended like the former. Either the honesty of these officers was impregnable, or their expectations of the ultimate success of the British arms were not high. The progress of events has been somewhat anticipated, in order to throw together all the incidents connected with this process of Machiavellian policy. It will now be necessary to take up the detail of the military operations. The campaign commenced by the seizure of the Tinley pass, in the Deyra Dhoon, on the 20th of October, by Lieutenant-Colonel George Carpenter, of the 17th native infantry, who had been detached for that purpose by Major-The latter officer entered General Gillespie. the Dhoon on the 24th, by the Kerree pass, and immediately marched upon Kalunga, while detachments occupied the passes and ferries of the Jumna. On the 29th, preparations were made for an attack upon Kalunga; the army under General Gillespie being formed into four columns, commanded respectively by Lieutenant-Colonel Carpenter, Captain J. W. Fast, of the 17th native infantry, Major Bartlet Kelly, of the light infantry battalion, and Captain William Campbell, of the 6th native infantry, with a column of reserve under Major John Ludlow, of the 6th. At half-past three o'clock on the afternoon of the 30th, the columns under Colonel Carpenter and Major Ludlow marched from their encampment, without any resistance from the enemy, and took possession of the table-land, where they established themselves so as to cover the working party which was to be em-ployed during the night in constructing batteries. The three remaining columns moved at an early hour the next morning, to be in readiness to attack simultaneously with that from the table-land; Major Kelly, on Kursulle, by the Jagherkeena road; Captain Fast, towards the stockade, by the village of Luckhound; and Captain Campbell, by the village of Ustall. Shortly after daylight the batteries opened on the fort with ten pieces of ordnance. The signal for the columns moving to the assault was to be given from the batteries two hours previously to the moment of attack, and repeated from the camp below; but the arrangements appear to have been ill concerted; at all events they were inefficient. The signal was fired about eight o'clock, but it was not heard by Major Kelly, Captain Fast, or Captain Campbell; and, consequently, only the

moved. These advanced and carried the stock-| deep and rapid that the most daring of the asade thrown across the road leading to the fort; sailants would not venture to leap down; and they then pushed on close under the walls, it is added, that, had they done so, the attempt which were stockaded all round. Here their would have involved the certain destruction of progress was stopped. The fire of the bat-those who made it, from a number of pointed teries had been ineffective; a small opening stakes and bamboos which had been placed at only was visible, and that was defended by the bottom, and which it would have been stockades within stockades. The British force impossible to avoid. Such was the representwas consequently obliged to retire, after sustaining a frightful loss in officers and men.

Soon after the columns moved, three additional companies had been ordered from the camp; but, by the time they arrived on the table-land, the columns in advance had been forced to fall back. An attack by so small a ditch, and defended by a garrison whose only force had obviously little chance of success; means of resistance consisted in their personal but General Gillespie was, no doubt, appre- gallantry." While some weight must be hensive of the unhappy effects likely to follow allowed to the circumstances enumerated by a repulse at so early a period of the war, and Lord Moira, candour must attribute a portion this, in addition to the impulses of his personal of his implied censure to the feeling of disapbravery, probably induced him to head an pointment at the repeated reverses which thus assault made by this little band, assisted by marked the commencement of a campaign on two six-pounders. The assault was made and the plan of which he had bestowed so much failed; a second met with no better success; thought, and in the success of which his own a third was still more unfortunate in its results, | reputation was essentially committed for, when within thirty yards of the gateway, the gallant general was mortally wounded though unsuccessful when made, were not while in the act of cheering on his men. Thus without effect. Though retaining possession terminated the proceedings of this ill-fated day, of the fort, the garrison had suffered dreadwith the loss of an officer who had rendered fully from the fire of the British artillery; good service to his country in the East, and and, greatly reduced in numbers, deprived of whose career had been marked by a courage their officers, in want of provisions and water, which deserves the epithet of heroic. The and in danger of pestilence from the accumumemory of General Gillespie received from the lation of the dead, they, on the morning of public authorities the honours which it so well the 30th of November, evacuated the place, deserved.

Kalunga was yet to be the scene of fresh misfortune and discomfiture to the British suggested the necessity of procuring a batter- | had animated its defenders. Their fortune ing-train. It arrived, and was forthwith without the walls was not happier than it had brought into operation. At one o'clock in the been within, their flight being intercepted by afternoon of the 24th of November, the breach detachments of the British force, and the was reported to be completely practicable, and greater part of the fugitives either killed, the command liaving, by the death of General wounded, or made prisoners. In this service Gillespie, devolved on Colonel Sebright Maw- Major Ludlow greatly distinguished himself, ordered a storming party to advance. But very advantageous position a force composed this renewed attempt to gain possession of the of the few followers who had accompanied fort was not more fortunate than the preceding the killadar, Bulbudder Sing, in his escape, desperate valour, and, after a contest of two Ghoorkas who had been despatched to reinhours, Colonel Mawbey withdrew his troops force the garrison of Kalunga, but had vainly with severe loss. succeeded in gaining the top of the breach, tunity to enter the place. when a momentary hesitation proved fatal to ordered to be destroyed. them, and a large proportion was swept away. The failure was ascribed by Colonel Mawbey other advantages, which, though triffing in partly to the hold resistance of the enemy, themselves, were necessary to the success of who, in spite of repeated discharges from all the general plan of operations. A strongly the guns, mortars, and howitzers of the bat stockaded position which the enemy occupied tery covering the advance, persisted in manuing on the heights above the town of Calsie was the breach and hidding defiance to the assail abandoned after a feeble resistance; and the ants; and partly to the difficulties of the strong fort of Baraut, situated in the mounservice which the British troops were called tains forming the north-eastern boundary of upon to perform. The descent from the top the valley of Deyra, was evacuated by the ation of the officer in command. explanation was by no means satisfactory to the earl of Moira, who expressed some discontent and surprise at this second failure to carry a place (to use his own words) "certainly of no great strength or extent, destitute of a

But the repeated assaults upon Kalunga, which was immediately taken possession of by Colonel Mawbey. The scene within the fort was of the most appalling description, and bore The failure of the former attack had ample testimony to the desperate spirit which ...y, of his Majesty's 53rd foot, that officer especially by attacking and dislodging from a The enemy defended the place with strengthened by a body of about three hundred The storming party had hovered about the hills, waiting an oppor-The fort was

The fall of Kalunga was followed by some of the breach is represented as having been go garrison and forthwith occupied by the BritishThe precipitate abandonment of this place was ineffectual. The column under Major Richards small gratuity. In addition to these acquisi-low's defeat, were enabled to turn their whole tions, the post of Luckergaut, on the Ganges, force against them. where it forms the eastern limit of the Dhoon, remained in the possession of the enemy; and this tract included several strong and commanding positions.

Runjore Sing. of the fort, and on the morning of the 27th out confusion and serious less, of December was put into execution. One The unfortunate result of the column, a thousand strong, was commanded to have been produced by the operation of by Major Ludlow, who was directed to proceed to the left of the fort of Jumpta, while Major William Richards, with another column comprising about seven hundred men, was to make a détour to the right, and take up a position on the other side. It was calculated that both columns would reach the respective have been produced by the operation of various errors on the part of the British, all combining to insure the success of the enemy.

The delay, which deprived Major Ludlow five infliction division of the advantage of approaching the enemy under ever of darkness, and the unate impetrosity of a part of the British, all
combining to insure the success of the enemy
division of the advantage of approaching the tunate impetrosity of a part of the British, all
combining to insure the success of the enemy
division of the advantage of approaching the
tunate impetrosity of a part of the British, all
combining to insure the success of the enemy
division of the advantage of approaching the
tunate impetrosity of a part of the British, all
combining to insure the success of the enemy
division of the advantage of approaching the
tunate impetrosity of a part of the British, all
combining to insure the success of the enemy
the deprived Major Ludlow and division of the advantage of approaching the tunate impetrosity of a part of the British, all
combining to insure the success of the enemy
the deprived Major Ludlow and division of the advantage of approaching the tunate impetrosity of a part of the British, all
combining to insure the success of the enemy
the deprived Major tunate success of the enemy that both columns would reach the respective have been produced to the part of the British, all combining to insure the success of the enemy that deprived Major tunate success of the enemy that a success of the ene long after. He was of course perceived, and on attaining the summit of the bill a fin ship the anticipated advantage was lost. Notwith- and shells into the stockade, millimited surstanding this unfavourable circumstance, the coeded in driving the coerrors in mila a first encounter was encouraging to the hope lodgment there; but he was measured with of the assilants, the enemy being driven from the means of acting upon the incuminant, his advanced position, and compelled to retire the gune having been let reinto his stockade. But here the tide of suc, and it appears that neither the mental cess turned. A gallant, but, under the circlaminunition were ready to a very more and constances, an inconsiderate and impredent pointed hour. Of this circumstances, an inconsiderate and impredent pointed hour. Of this circumstances constances, and inconsiderate and impredent pointed hour. Of this circumstances can be at the solid charge, made by a part of the king's 53rd, in Martindell was not neglect with all would copposition to the judgment of the commander, quently alleged that his wings all would was repulsed, and the availants were drived have bed him to running the manner of the lock in costs ion. The ground, thus railly the troops. It seems to the lead there became a recovered, report of so southern the land the rest of the detachment performed its encourse of his plant to be a familiar duty; but the native infantry appeared parts and there must under the analysis of the struck, and all efforts to form their provider.

occasioned by the defection of the chief zemin-displayed a better spirit and met with better dars and inhabitants, whose zeal for the Bri- fortune. They carried the position which tish cause appears, however, to have been they had been despatched to occupy, and They carried the position which stimulated by the promise of a native officer, imaintained it against repeated and vigorous that their services should be requited by a assaults of the enemy, who, after Major Lud-

Their mode of attack was peculiarly harasswas in the possession of a British detachment; ling: intrenching themselves behind jutting thus completing the occupation of the valley points of rock and other situations affording and of the principal passes leading to it. But shelter, they kept up an irregular fire, charg-Gurhwal, to the east of the Bageruttee, still ing occasionally and then retiring to their coverts. From the nature of the ground, it was almost impossible to dislodge them from their retreats, and the British troops were. A force deemed sufficient for the occupation therefore, compelled to sustain their attacks of the Dhoon having been left under the com- without the advantage of shelter enjoyed by mand of Colonel Carpenter, the rest of the their opponents; they, however, nobly maindivision marched for Nahun; and, during its tained their post through the whole day, and General Martindell, who had been appointed from their arduous duty by orders from to succeed General Gillesnie. Nahun fell General Martindell to return to camp. These without an effort, the enemy abandoning it orders did not arrive until the whole of the on the approach of the invading force, and ammunition was expended, and the troops withdrawing to Jyctuck, a fort creeted on the had been compelled to employ stones in their summit of a mountain of great elevation, bearing the same name. Upon this point a force than the conflict. It was effected under cover was concentrated, amounting to about two of a very gallant charge made by Lieutenant thousand two hundred men, commanded by Thackeray, with the light company of the 2nd battalion of the 26th native infantry, in which The operations for the reduction of Jyctuck that officer and nearly his whole company fell. were multiform and long-protracted, and their The sacrifice of these brave men probably commencement was marked by misfortune and saved the entire detachment from destruction. defeat. With the double view of disposses-ing Still a retreat by night through a country the enemy of a strong position and cutting off beset by difficulties, and in the possession of the supply of water, a combined attack was an enemy, active by nature and liabit, 222 planned upon a stockade, about a mile west elated by success, was not to be effected with-

The unfortunate result of this attack stems

The continued ill-success of the operations. It will now be proper to advert to the moveof this division was a source of great disapments of the other divisions of the army
pointment to the governor-general, and he destined for the invasion of the Nepaulregarded the conduct of the officer in comterritories. mand with much dissatisfaction. Approving the project of seizing two points, each im-the hills, in the direction of Nalagurh, within portant to the conduct of a niege, he condemned a few days after General Gille-pie entered the the withdrawal of Major Richards, who had Dhoon; and the commencement of its operasucceeded, for no better reason than because itions was not inaupicious. Exteries were the attack under Major Ludlow had failed Jopened against Nalagurh, and, on the 5th of He argued that the unfavourable issue of the November, 1814, the fort surrendered. The enterprise in the one quarter furnished addiscripture of Taragurh, a small kill-fort in the tional cause for improving our success in the mighbourhood, followed. The two places other; and that the despatch of a reinforce-| were garrieoned by small parties of troop's, and ment, with due supplier of provisions and a depot was established at Nalagurh, which ammunition, would have been a far more judi- thus afforded the means of an undistuded cious proceeding than that which was adopted, [communication with the plains. of ordering the detachment to retreat, without knowing the extent of peril to which such an in certain quarters, of a design, on the part of operation might expose it. The opinion of the Ummer Sing, to retreat with his army to the governor-general appears round; but General leastward, and the necessity of presantishary Martindell must not be blamed with too great measures for frustrating such an attempt was soverity, for his situation was far from being impressed upon the commanders within the field easy or enviable. The necessity of caution of whose operations the movement, if made, had been impressed upon him from the highest would have fallen. Colonel Ochterlony mainquarter, and the commander-in-chief had ex-[tained that the expectation was utterly unpressed an especial desire, upon the general warranted by probability, and, further, that if assuming the command, that, while the spirit Ummer Sing did retreat, as he would with-of the troops was depressed by their recent out a contest relinquish the country he had misfortunes, an assault upon Nahun should be occupied to the protection of the British goavoided, and more patient measures adopted vernment, that alone would be an honourable for its reduction. Nahun fell into our hands issue of the war in one quarter, while his without an effort; as far, therefore, as that great distance from the eastern districts, com-place was concerned, the advice was not pared with that of our attacking forces, ren-needed, and the different circumstances of dered the chance but small of his coming in Jyetuck rendered it there in a great degree sufficient time to have much influence there. inapplicable. This was felt by Major-General The result proved that the judgment of Martindell, and he consequently resorted to a Colonel Ochterlony was correct; and it furmore daring course than that which had been ther attested the soundness of the opinions prescribed to him at Nahun. The partial entertained and expressed by that officer, at a failure of his attempt led him, somewhat too very early period after the commencement of hastily, to despair of it altogether, and to hostilities, as to the nature and character of abandon the success which was within his the war in which the British had become ingrasp. The fatal consequences which before volved. He predicted that the Goorkhas Talunga had resulted from indiscreet daring would defend to the utmost every place which to the opposite extreme of overmuch caution. nis effect would be aided by the instructions which he had received, and the consequentapprehension that unsuccessful enterprise sufficient estimate appears to have been formed would be regarded as a violation of them. It of the courage and determination of the troops is possible also that, looking at the unhappy by whom the British force was to be opposed, and unexpected failure of a part of the native Their warlike qualities were greatly undertroops in Major Ludlow's division, he might rated, and the victory was anticipated upon have been apprehensive of similar occurrences in that of Major Richards. It is true that nothing of the kind took place, the whole of activity. The stockades of the Goorkhas had that division having manifested the most per-fect steadiness and intrepidity; but of this Colonel Ochterlony viewed them with very General Martindell could not have been aware different feelings. He pronounced them exwhen he despatched the orders for retreating, nor perhaps was he very accurately informed tish troops on several occasions afforded but too of all the circumstances under which the failure convincing evidence that he was right. had occurred. injudicious; but sufficient allowance seems with an enemy who was not to be despised; scarcely to have been made for the difficulties but the lesson was not acquired without severe under which they were dictated.

That under Colonel Ochterlony penetrated

An apprehension appears to have existed, ably occurred to his mind, and led him they thought defensible, and resist as long as possible in those they thought the weakest. This opinion, however, was not that which prevailed at head-quarters, where a very interms as easy as those on which it had been attained over tribes of less hardihood and tremely formidable, and the experience of Bri-The orders were certainly learned, at length, that we were contending suffering and loss.

Instead of retiring on the Eastern Provinces, too great to admit of its producing any mate-Ummer Sing, leaving garrisons in Irkee, Sub-rial effect. The firing was in consequence batoo, and other forts in the interior, concen-discontinued, and Lieutenant Lawtie was intrated his force on the heights of Ramgurh, structed to reconnoitre the ground, with a to the number of three thousand. The ridge view to the choice of a more favourable posion which he was posted was defended by tion. While in the performance of this duty, several forts of considerable strength. the rear of it, and running in a direction nearly tacked by a party of the enemy, whom, how-parallel, was another range of lofty and rugged ever, they drove back towards his stockade, hills, defended, like the former, by forts. Be- and, pushing their advantage, took up a post tween the two ridges flowed the river Gumber, within three hundred yards of the work. As in its progress to the Sutlej. Here Ummer Sing was enabled to draw supplies from the battery, the whole of the men there were disrajah of Belaspore, a prince devotedly attached to him, who had lands on both sides threw out from the different stockades and rajah of Belaspore, a prince devotedly attached to him, who had lands on both sides of the Sutlej; and this advantage was peculiarly valuable at a time when his communication with other quarters was cut off.

Colonel Ochterlony, having established his depôts in Nalagurh, advanced on the enemy, and from the heights of Golah gained a full view of his stockade. The position which Ummer Sing had taken up was of extraordinary strength. His right was covered and commanded by the fort of Ramgurh, his left by a high and nearly inaccessible hill, called Kote, on which a strong party was posted. On a first view, however, the left stockade appeared to Colonel Ochterlony to be assailable, and in the hope of being able to turn it, and take the enemy in flank, he made prepa-Better information rations for an attack. induced him to hesitate, and it was deemed necessary to reconnoitre more particularly. This duty was committed to Lieutenant Peter Lawtie, of the Bengal Engineers, by whom it was performed with extraordinary zeal and ability; and the result was a conviction that a successful attack on the enemy's front was almost impossible, and that the attempt would involve a loss of men both certain and severe. The reports of the country people induced a belief that the hills were more accessible in the rear of the enemy, and these were confirmed by the observations of Lieutenant Lawtie; but the road, by which alone the rear could be gained, was declared impassable for under discussion, the force of the enemy far the guns. This difficulty was overcome by exceeded that of the whole detachment opefforts to which no warfare but that carried posed to them. The intelligence of the dison by Europeans in the East can furnish a astrous result of the second attack upon Karelied upon for effecting a passage impracticable by other means, and six of these animals became the bearers of as many pieces of ordnance, while seven hundred coolies or porters were put in requisition to carry the In fact, the force at the disposal of Colonel necessary ammunition and equipments. In this manner a road characterized by Colonel Ochterlony as "indescribably bad" was successfully traversed, the wild and rugged hills risk the efficiency and safety of the army at began to play at an early hour in the mornof the work against which it was directed was bestowed upon an officer who had numbered

In the officer and his escort were suddenly atsoon as their situation was perceived at the from Ramgurh such numbers, that the party was compelled to relinquish the ground they had gained before the reinforcement could arrive. The affair was altogether a trifling one, but it was injurious to the British cause, by sustaining the hope of the Goorkhas and dispiriting those who were opposed to them. No blame can be attached to any party in the transaction; but it cast over the commencement of operations by this division of the army a portion of the gloom in which the unfortunate events before Kalunga had involved those intrusted to General Gillespie.

The establishment of a battery at a more advanced point was still the object to which the commander of the division directed his attention. One position only presented itself where the artillery could be used with any prospect of success; and to gain this a considerable space of ground was to be traversed by the column of attack, exposed to the fire of the enemy from the other stockades, as well as from that against which their operations were directed. On the expediency of risking this, Colonel Ochterlony consulted the field-officers with the detachment. neral impression appeared to be unfavourable, and it was observed, that it was an acknowledged principle, that all attacks of such a nature should be sustained by great superiority of numbers; whereas, in the instance The decility of the elephant was lunga seems to have determined Colonel Ochterlony not to make an attempt attended by so many chances of failure; and he forthwith avowed his conviction that the enemy's rear was unassailable with his present means. Ochterlony was inadequate to the purpose for which it was destined; he therefore determined to wait for reinforcements, and not to passed in safety, and a descent effected into his disposal by precipitate and ill-judged movements. This determination could scarcely A battery was immediately erected, and be acceptable to his superiors, but it incurred no reproach. The experience and ing of the 26th November; but it was character of Colonel Ochterlony probably found to be too distant, and that the elevation averted the censure which would have been fower years, and whose reputation was less mountains, leaving Lieute and-Colonel George firmly established. Conscious that he did all Cooper, of the 1st native infantry, with a that he ought. Colonel Ochterlony appears at | battalion and the battering guns, at the former the same time to have been aware that he position at Nehr, strongly stockeded. It had did not attempt all that was expected from been anticipated that this movement would him. In a letter to the adjutant-general, cause Unimer Sing to quit his position and dated the 2nd December, he wrote that he move in a direction to cover his supplies, and "did not blush to acknowledge that he felt the result corresponded with the expectation. his mind inadequate to a command requiring Ummer Sing marched to Malown, leaving great powers of genius, and so novel in its small garrisons in Rangurh and the other nature and in all its circumstances."

It was about this period that the large irregular force in aid of Colonel Ochterlony's occupied by Lieutenaut-Colonel John Arnold, division was raised and embedied. The divi- of the 19th native infantry, who was ordered, sion was also strengthened by the according after performing this duty, to follow the march of an additional battalion of native infantry of the enemy, and take up a position in the and some artillery. These arrived on the vicinity of Belaspore. This was not effected 27th December; and on the evening of that without rome delay and considerable difficulty, day, as soon as it was dark, the reserve, under occasioned by the inclemency of the weather Lieutenant Colonel W. A. Thompson, of the and the mountainous nature of the country. 3rd native infantry, moved to attack a chosen It was, however, at length successfully accompoint of the enemy, with the view of cutting plished. Colonel Arnold took up a very off his communication with Belaspore, the advantageous position at Ruttengurh, directly principal source of his supplies. The march between Malown and Belaspore, and comwas one of great fatigue and difficulty; but manch the principal line of communication. Colonel Thompson succeeded in reaching the previously gained possession of the heights pieces were forthwith brought into operation above Belaspore, after defeating a considerable against the enemy's position, and continued firing through the day, but with little effect. A very bold and spirited attack upon the British position, made on the following morns took up a position on the right bank of the previously gained possession who attempted to maintain them. These movements being completed, Colonel Ochterlony, with the reserve, took up a position on the right bank of the ing, was repulsed with great gallantry, and Gumrora, which at once afforded means for the enemy driven to a distance. Perceiving watching the movements of the enemy and the purpose with which the movements of the facilities for cutting off his communications. reserve had been made, the enemy now sud-Ramgurh, and took up a new one on the opposite side of the fort, which, by a change of his front, he still kept on his right. The object of the movement was thus defeated, yet the attempt was not unattended by beneficial consequences. The enemy was compelled to contract his limits. By the establishment of the

on the ridge, some advantage was cured for further operations; and what was, of not less importance, the repulse of the enemy was calculated alike to diminish the confidence of the Goorkha troops, and to remove the despondency which repeated reverses had diffused among our own.

Disappointed in the immediate attainment of his object, Colonel Ochterlony continued to pursue it with exemplary perseverance, and a series of operations followed, distinguished alike for the judgment with which they were planned and the energy and precision with which they were executed. Their object was to compel Ummer Sing either to quit his territory had been left entirely at our mercy position or to risk an engagement. A considerable body of irregulars, under Lieutenant ended in the transfer of the rajah's allegiance Ross, was despatched by a circuitous route to from the Goorkha to the British government; take up a position on the heights above Releas. take up a position on the heights above Belasand on this condition his possessions on the pore; and on the 16th of January, 1815, left bank of the Sutlej were guaranteed to Colonel Ochterlony passed the river Gumber him without tribute or pecuniary payment of to a position on the road to Irkee, near the any kind.

southern extremity of the Malown range of The proceedings of the division of the insouthern extremity of the Malown range of forts in that range. The principal stockades evacuated by the enemy were immediately

The progress of the British arms in this dealy abandoned all his positions on the left of quarter was now steady and satisfactory. On the 11th of Febuary the heights of Ramgurh were taken possession of without opposition. The surrender of the fort of Ramgurh followed, after a resistance rendered brief by the opening upon the place of some eighteen-pounders, which had been carried up to the ridge with almost incredible labour. The garrison of Jhoo-jooroo surrendered to a detachment of irregulars. Taragurh was evacuated by the enemy on the 11th of March. The fort of Chumbull subsequently surrendered, and the garrison were made prisoners of war. services were performed by Colonel Cooper and the force left at Nehr. They occupied a period of about six weeks of unremitted exertion. When completed, Ramgurh was converted into a principal depôt, and Colonel Cooper's detachment became at liberty to aid to be noticed. Its march was, in the first open plain, as was expected, General Wood, instance, retarded by the want of means for with his staff and the foremost of the advanced transporting the stores and supplies. difficulty was removed by obtaining bearers themselves, greatly to their astonishment, from Lucknow, as well as a number of elephants furnished by the nabob vizier; but, in consequence of the delay thus occasioned, General Wood was not prepared to move till the middle of December. He at length advanced, and occupied the Terraie; but his operations were still impeded by delays in the commissariat department. As the obstacles arising from this cause were removed, the of his Majesty's 17th foot, driving the enemy hesitation of the general in the choice of a before them up a hill on the right of the route interposed fresh ones. His information redoubt, succeeded in gaining its summit. as to the country, the force of the enemy, and The post seemed now in the power of the every other point by which his determination was to be influenced, appears to have been miserably defective; and, harassed by a multiplicity of discordant reports, the movements of tention of Jeetgurh, General Wood refrained

The first intention appears to have been to leave Bootwul on the right, and attack Nyacote, a fort situated on the hills to the west of Various plans of operation were in the town. succession adopted and abandoned. At last, the general was led by the advice of a brahmin, named Knuckunuddee Sewarce, into a course singularly imprudent and unfortunate. This man was a native of the hills, but for many years resident in Goruckpore, attached to the rajah. Having obtained the confidence of General Wood, he proceeded to insist upon the difficulties presented by the Mahapore hills, which it had been proposed to pass, and suggested that the detachment should cross the Tenavee, occupy Bussuntpore, about ten miles from Simla, and leaving there the supplies and baggage, push on to Palpa, where an abundance of provisions might be secured, and from whence Nyacote might be attacked on the side where the well that supplied the garrison was situated; but, preparatory to this movement, he recommended that a redoubt at Jeetgurh, which had been thrown up across the foot of the hill of Mujcote, one mile west of Bootwul, should be carried, and the deserted town of Bootwul burnt. The success of this scheme was represented as certain, and the advantages of possessing the fort to be first attacked, as of the highest importance. The brahmin professed to be well acquainted with the country: in recommending the proposed plan of operations, he felt, or counterfeited, the greatest enthusiasm - a feeling which he succeeded in communicating to the general, who, at once captivated by its apparent practicability and advantage, resolved to carry it into effect without delay.

The morning of January the 3rd was fixed which, according to the brahmin's report, was dangerous have rarely occurred in any course an open plain. The morning came, and the of warfare. movement to attack took place. Between the vading army under General Wood now require forest; but, instead of debouching upon an This guard, on approaching to reconnoitre, found within fifty paces of the work. A heavy fire was immediately commenced from the redoubt, which for some time could be returned only by the few men who had accompanied the general and his staff. On the arrival of the troops forming the head of the column, they advanced, under Colonel Hardyman, to attack the work, while a party led by Captain Croker, British troops; but, deterred by the apparent force of the enemy on the hill behind it, the possession of which was necessary to the rethis division were, from the first, characterized from pushing his advantage, and ordered a by feebleness and indecision. both sides, but that of the enemy was the more severe. The brahmin who was the cause of the mischief disappeared as soon as the fort was in sight. General Wood closed his despatch, giving an account of this affair, by observing with great naïvete of his deceitful guide, "If he is with the enemy, I can have no doubt of his treachery:" a conclusion from which few will be found to dissent.

The proceedings before Jeetgurh seem to have been marked throughout by no inconsiderable degree of levity,-to have been undertaken and abandoned alike inconsiderately. The information upon which the general acted was not merely imperfect, but false, and it is strange that no attempt was made to test the correctness of the brahmin's report before Undertaken, as circumstances advancing. showed, in perfect ignorance of the ground, the attack was yet, to a certain extent, successful, and it was the apprehensions alone of the commander that kept the fort out of his hands. But his astonishment and distrust at finding the height covered with troops was a clear indication that he was not better informed as to the force of the enemy than he had been as to the nature of their position. He advanced upon the foe, ignorant whither he was going—this was a great error; but his good fortune saved him from its probable consequence, and he was on the point of achieving the very object so imprudently sought. then first began to doubt his power of retaining that for which he had incurred such risk, and, deterred by circumstances which he ought previously to have known and weighed, he retired, consigning the men under his command to the dispiriting consequences of defeat, after paying, in killed and wounded, the price for the attack upon Jeetgurh, in front of of victory. Measures more ill-judged and

Little more was attempted by this division, British camp and the redoubt lay the Sal and nothing important effected. After dis-

The positions, however, were not yielded with-tating between his instructions and the conman under his command was either killed or wounded.

But, though relieved by this and other instances of individual bravery, the tendency of these events was to cast a gloom over the prospects of the campaign. They occasioned ceeding, however, was altogether new in Ingreat anxiety in the highest quarters, and dian warfare. It was adopted by Colonel drew from the earl of Moira expressions of Ochterlony, much to the credit of his sagacity marked displeasure. The governor-general and discrimination. That able commander condemned the disposition of these posts; but saw that the war with Nepaul was altothe disposition was that of Colonel Bradshaw, gether different from any in which the British not of General Marley. A charge, bearing more directly against the latter officer, was grounded on the fact that, although reports of the intended attacks had been prevalent, no effectual means had been taken to strengthen the posts against which they were directed. These reports do not, indeed, appear to have and to condemn him, not for absolute deficalled forth all the vigilance that was to be ciency, but because he manifested less skill expected; but a party of two hundred men had been despatched to Pursah, and might have arrived in time to change the fortune of the day at that post; unfortunately, they halted at a distance of several miles. It must be acknowledged, however, that they were not aware of the urgent necessity for their advance, and so little was this felt by Captain Sibley, who commanded at Pursah, that, though informed, the day before, of the approach of the party, he took no steps Pursah, and encamped about a mile and a half to hasten their movement, and did not even think it requisite to reply to the communication. These circumstances show that the feeling of security was not confined to General Marley, but extended to other officers of his by a part of the native troops. The dissatisdivision.

was persuaded that he was not in a condition to advance with safety, and in this belief a concentration of his force would undoubtedly have been more judicious than the continuance of the arrangement adopted by his predecessor. But he was placed in circumstances where a man must possess extrapected to advance, and he felt that this expectadistinguished projector of the campaign, and draw down no ordinary degree of censure upon himself. A lover of reckless enterprise gut Singh, withheld him, however, from would have executed his orders, or at least attacking it; but his caution did not find would have tried to execute them; a man of high confidence in his own judgment would have shaped his course according to its suggestion. General Marley did neither; hesi-

out hard fighting. At Pursah, Lieutenant clusions of his own mind, he followed neither Matheson, of the artillery, remained at his completely or vigorously, and his proceedings post, and continued to work a gun after every exhibited the usual characteristic of middle courses-uniting the disadvantages and excluding the probable benefits of both extremes.

With regard to the advanced posts, further blame was cast upon General Marley for not protecting them by stockades. Such a prohad previously engaged, and that the peculiarities of the country and the character of the enemy called for important changes in our modes of operation. But it would be unfair to pass sentence of reprehension upon any commander upon grounds merely comparative, than another officer.

But whether attributable, according to the view of General Marley, to the inadequacy of the force at his disposal, or, according to that of the governor-general, to the incompetence of the commander, it is certain that the course of events was productive of the most lamentable consequences to the interests of the British government. General Marley, on the 6th of January, made a forward movement towards to the south of that place. But this position he almost immediately abandoned, alarmed by the reports of the designs of the enemy, and by some very unpleasant symptoms manifested faction displayed itself only in words and in a It was, indeed, as urged by the governorgeneral, an obvious and indispensable precaution, not to continue the posts advanced and exposed during a period of inactivity, which allowed the enemy ample leisure to contrive for the purpose of covering the depôt at and mature plans of attack. General Marley Betteah, and favouring the junction of the long-expected battering-train. This being accomplished, some other movements were made, but without effecting anything for the British cause.

In the meantime the enemy ravaged the Terraie, the whole of which, with the exception of the country immediately protected by our posts, again fell into their hands; their ordinary firmness to act resolutely upon his our posts, again fell into their hands; their own convictions. He knew that he was exincursions were extended even beyond it. Their confidence attained a most extravagant tion could not be fulfilled; he knew also, that, height, and they threatened to attack Barra by withdrawing the parties in advance, he should occasion great disappointment to the garrison. They actually threw up a stockade distinguished projector of the campaign, and at Sooffre, a short distance from that post. The worse. He was not only recalled, but dis-|detachment was cut to pieces, and so great graced by being publicly exhibited in woman's was the terror inspired by this encounter, that attire, as one unworthy to wear the habili-the Goorkhas hastily retreated into the hills, ments of man.

2 D

Some attempts were made, by hasty levies of irregulars, to provide for the protection of the frontier, and restrain the aggressions of the Goorkhas; but they were attended with little success. The despondency of General Marley appeared to increase, as did also the dissatisfaction of the commander-in-chief at his inactivity. The conviction of the general, that his means were inadequate to the fulfilment of his instructions, not only remained undiminished, but seemed to gather strength, and that conviction was sanctioned by the judgment of Lieutenant-colonel George Dick, of the 9th native infantry, and Lieutenantcolonel William Chamberlain, of his Majesty's The opinions of those officers, together with his own, having been transmitted by General Marley to the commander-in-chief, the representation was answered by his recall. and the appointment of Major-general George Wood to succeed him.

The embarrassments of his situation, acting upon a mind perhaps little adapted to encounter them, led at length to a most extraordinary proceeding on the part of the general. On the 10th of February (his successor not having arrived) he quitted the camp, before daylight in the morning, without any previous intimation of his intention, and without making any provision for the command after highly desirable, but, owing to the unprohis departure. Such a step is of a nature to forbid comment. It indicates the existence of a state of nervous excitement under which the ill-fated officer was not master of his own actions, and which consequently shields them from remark.

The interval that elapsed between the departure of General Marley and the arrival of his successor was distinguished by an affair of brilliancy, which tended, in no incontenant Pickersgill, while reconnoitring, discovered, at no great distance from the camp, a party of the enemy about five hundred strong. The discovery was immediately communicated to Colonel Dick, who, as the officer next in seniority, had, on the departure of General Marley, assumed the command. A party of irregular horse was, in consequence, despatched to strengthen Lieutenant Pickersgill, and Colonel Dick followed with all the picquets. The Goorkhas, encouraged by the small number of Lieutenant Pickersgill's force, resolved to attack him; but, on emerging from a hollow where they were posted, they perceived the force that was advancing to his struck them with panic, and they made an Gardner, to whom also was intrusted its abandoning every position which they had established in the forest and Terraic.

Major-general George Wood joined the division to the command of which he had been appointed, on the 20th of February, ten days after the departure of his predecessor. The force at his disposal had been greatly augmented, and he found himself at the head of upwards of thirteen thousand regular troops. He had, in every respect, the advantage of his predecessor in the command: his force was not only considerably larger, but the tone of their spirits was greatly raised by the successful affair which took place only the day before his arrival. Nevertheless, the new commander determined that he could do nothing to redeem the alleged errors of General Marley: he apprehended that the efficiency of his army might be impaired by sickness, if he attempted to penetrate into the forest, and, after a long march eastward to Goruckpore and back again, which was performed without seing an enemy, and the object of which is not very clear, all operations were suspended for the season. The change of generals thus failed of accomplishing the object which the commander-inchief most ardently desired. The division did not march to Katmandoo, nor make an attempt to do so.

The occupation of Kumaon was an object pitious progress of the campaign, apparently little likely to be attained by any portion of the regular force. A correspondence had, however, been opened with the leading men of the country, and their wishes were ascer-tained to be decidedly favourable to the British, whose success they promised to promote by all the means in their power, if they would invade the territory and rescue it from the rule of the Goorkhas; but they expressly able degree, to abate the presumptuous stipulated, that their ancient rajahs should not be restored, and desired that the country us all hopes of the British force. Lieushould be placed under the direct government of the Company. The way was thus prepared for a successful irruption into Kumaon, but the means of effecting it were wanting. The the means of effecting it were wanting. The army under General Martindell remained before Jyetuck, and no portion of it could be spared for any other service. The season of operation was rapidly passing away, and the British party in Kumaon becoming alarmed lest their correspondence should be discovered, were pressing in their representations of the necessity of immediate action. In this emergency it was determined to try what could be effected by a body of irregulars, accompanied by a few guns and aided by the co-operation of the inhabitants. The duty of raising this This discovery appears to have force was assigned to Lieutenant-colonel immediate and precipitate retreat, pursued by subsequent command. It amounted, in the Lieutenant Pickersgill, who had waited only first instance, to about three thousand men for the junction of the cavalry. The entire it was increased by a corps raised and formed by Captain Hearsey. Four six-pounders were town stands. and he was ordered to act under the direc-enemy had deserted. tion of his relative, the Honourable Edward political character.

The levying of this force was, however, a work of time, and after it was ready, a succession of bad weather prevented its being put in motion. By these causes its advance into the hill country was delayed until the 17th of capital of Kali Kumaon, and laid siege to a February. Having occupied the Chilkeeah strong fortress near it called Kutoolgurh. pass, Colonel Gardner proceeded by a route While thus engaged, a Goorkha force crossed lying chiefly along the bed of the Cosillas the Sardah and attacked one of his posts, but river. This route, not the most direct one to it was forced to recross the river with some impediments to an invading force, as being another. of the enemy. an energy and rapidity which suffered no be collected, leaving his adjutant to prosecute advantage to be lost. Having anticipated the the siege of Kutoolgurh. The issue was dis-Goorkhas in the occupation of an important astrous. The troops under Captain Hearsey post, he availed himself of it to collect his shrunk from their duty, and he was wounded force and bring up his guns and baggage, which, by the rapidity of his progress, had been left in the rear. He then pursued his march, and took up a commanding position on a hill called Kompore, in front of which the enemy's force, reinforced by a large proportion of the garrison from Almorah, was strongly In the course of the march stockaded. several skirmishes took place, the results of which were invariably favourable to the

The success which had marked the progress of Colonel Gardner was most encouraging, but it did not seduce him into attempts which might not only have thrown away the advantages already gained, but have frustrated the objects of the enterprise The enemy were too strongly altogether. posted to justify an attack in front by a force composed entirely of hastily-levied and irregular troops, and Colonel Gardner, therefore, judiciously determined to turn his position, and by the sudden movement of a part of his corps, combined with a demonstration of therefore, his fidelity was not to be shaken, and attack, either to place himself between the it was deemed imprudent to rely entirely upon enemy and his capital, or compel him to retire an irregular force, a detachment of regular to prevent it. But even for the performance of this manœuvre Colonel Gardner felt that the operations in Kumaon, and the entire he was not yet sufficiently strong. He, ac- force was placed under the command of cordingly, waited the junction of an additional Colonel Nicolls. That officer arrived at body of irregulars, amounting to one thousand, Kattar Mull on the 8th of April, and as soon which had been raised in the Dooab, and were as his regular force was assembled, sent a deproceeding to Kumaon. On the arrival of tachment, under Major Robert Patton, of the this reinforcement he executed his intention 5th native infantry, to a position to the almost without opposition. The enemy with- north-west of Almorah, in which direction a drew with so much precipitation as to leave body of the enemy had proceeded. part of his arms and baggage behind him, were attacked by Major Patton and com-and, being closely followed by the force under pletely routed. The Goorkha commander was Colonel Gardner, he abandoned the position killed, as were also the second in command, in front of Almorah, to which he had retired and several other officers. This success was

On the 28th of March the placed at the disposal of Colonel Gardner, British force occupied the position which the

While Colonel Gardner was thus triumph-Gardner, who was to proceed to Kumaon in a antly advancing, Captain Hearsey with his followers was endeavouring to create a diversion in another quarter, but with very different success. Having secured the Timley pass and the forts which commanded it, he had advanced and occupied Chumpawut, the Almorah, was chosen as offering the fewest loss. The attack was speedily succeeded by On this occasion the enemy apin a great degree unguarded, and likely to peared with increased strength, and crossed afford opportunities for turning the positions the river at a point somewhat above Captain The Goorkhas withdrew as Hearsey's division. On learning this movethe British force approached, and Colonel ment the British commander advanced to Gardner's movements were characterized by attack the enemy, with all the force that could and taken prisoner. The Goorkha commander then attacked the party left before Kutool-gurh, which he quickly dispersed. The remainder of Captain Hearsey's battalion unceremoniously abandoned their posts and fled into the plains.

Though Colonel Gardner's success was very flattering, it was a matter of great doubt whether, with a force altogether irregular, he would be able to reduce Almorah. Some attempts had been made to tamper with the Nepaulese commander who held possession of it, by suggesting to him that an arrangement might be made for his benefit if he would retire with his troops across the Kali. mode of crippling an enemy, by corrupting his officers, appears, from its frequent recurrence, to have been a favourite engine in the policy of Lord Moira. On this occasion, as on others, however, it failed; the Nepaulese commander giving no encouragement to a proposal which implied a belief that he was a miscreant of the lowest description. As, troops, two thousand strong, was devoted to and posted himself on the ridge on which the gained on the 23rd of April. On the 25th,

Colonel Nicolla proceeded to attack the 77th, attained the heights of the record Deonheights and town of Almorah with a ruccess thul almost at the same moment, and were more rapid, if not more decisive, than he had proceeding along the ridge to poses a thematicipated. Two of the enemy's breastworks selves of an advanced post, when the head of on the Sittoleo ridge were carried by a part of the column, consisting of light infantry, retho regular infantry, led by Captain W. C. ceived a check by a charge from the enemy Faithful, of the 4th native infantry, while the award in hand, which compelled them to fall irregular troops, ever the devout worshippers back on the main body, by this time posted in of fortune, were worked upon, by the number of papers, and the greens approach by their operants. From the correct transitions approach by their operants. picious appearance of events and the energy annoyed by their opponents, from the cover of Colonel Gardner, to attack and carry afforded by the jungle and the rocks. In the the remaining three. The enemy retreated course of the night they were further harmed by five reads, on each of which they were by false alarms; and at the first dawn of day pursued; some important positions were taken, a daring attack was made by nearly two and the British gained possession of about thousand of the enemy, who almost surrounded one-third of the town.

dispossess the victors of their advantage; but ese fought with a courage at once steady and it was not with judgment and gallantry, and impetuous; but they were encountered with defeated. In the morning measures were at least equal courage and with better fortune, taken for attacking the fort, and at nine They were finally repulsed and totally devictions in the evening a flag of true arrived, feated with very severe loss, Rughtee Thappa, bearing a suspension of arms, preparatory to a termination of hostilities in the province. Another letter to the same effect was written bravery, as well as by the intrepidity disbravery, as well as by the intrepidity disbravery. by Captain Hearsey, then a prisoner in the played generally by the troops engaged. The fort. On the following day a convention was result was, that the enemy's continuous chain framed, by virtue of which all the forts were of posts was broken, and the Nepaulere comto be surrondered to the British, and the mander was compelled to withdraw, concention to the Control of the control of the traing his force in Malown and its immediate forces. favour, the Goorkhas being permitted to retire outworks; and from this time General Ochunmolested across the Kali with their public terlony pushed his success vigorously, seeing and private property and arms. A procla- now that the time had arrived when it could mation was forthwith issued, declaring the be pursued with effect. A series of positions province to be permanently annexed to the were taken up for the purpose of completely British dominions.

Major-General Ochterlony was prosecuting a career of success at once substantial and brilliant. His operations against Ummer desertions, both of individuals and of small Sing sustained, indeed, a momentary interprise, were of daily occurrence, and these ption in the result of a sally made by the were facilitated by the fondaces which seems

y upon a party of irregulars occupying ckaded post. This party, being taken is guard, suffered severely, but no per-

The wary progress of General Ochterlony had enabled him, by the middle of April, to obtain an accurate knowledge of the ground occupied by the enemy, and to ascertain the points at which their positions could be more easily penetrated. Of this information he availed himself, by forming and carrying into effect a plan of combined attack, distinguished not less by its masterly contrivance than by its fortunate results.

The movements of the British force com-A detachmenced on the night of the 14th. ment, destined to occupy a post between Dooab and the first Deonthul, gained it without opposition. Columns, under Lieutenant a little hesitation, the movement recommended colonel W. A. Thompson, of the 3rd native by the English commander was performed; infantry, and Major Thomas Lawrie, of the other parties of the enemy followed this exam-

the post. A desperate conflict ensued, and During the night an attempt was made to continued for above two hours. The Negaulinvesting the enemy, and a battery was crected During the progress of events in Kumaon against one of his redoubts. The spirits of the enemy fell with their fortunes; their distress for want of provisions became extreme; to have prevailed throughout the Indian army for advancing the operations of war by the refinements of diplomatic intrigue. It is no advantage was secured, or apparently pleasing task to relate the adoption of such a sought, by the enemy, as, after destroying mode of warfare by British officers, but the the stockade, they returned to their posi-first duty of an historical writer is to speak the truth, regardless of consequences. tenant Ross, who had taken up a post with special reference to this amongst other objects, made proposals to three sirdars commanding in and near the battered redoubt. communications followed, and when Lieutenant Ross determined to ascend the heights, it was in the conviction that he should meet with no resistance. The event justified his confidence; he attained the summit without opposition, the enemy retiring and remaining on a spot to their rearward. The redoubt being occupied, Lieutenant Ross invited the enemy's troops to pass into his rear, intimating that they would be unmolested. After a little hesitation, the movement recommended as little difficulty as the first.

It appears that the sirdars in a body had waited upon the Goorkha commander, insisting | much reason to feel proud. The Goorkhas that he should either give them and their men | made great sacrifices, and they received great food from the fort, or adopt come decisive indulgence. General Ochterlony spoke of the line of conduct. It is said that he refused terms granted with the modesty which usually either, but urged them to endure a short time marked his official communications; regarding longer and wait the progress of events. Such the arrangement not as positively good, but advice was calculated to have little effect upon as the best that could be made under the cirmen not influenced by any rigid principles of cumstances existing. The rainy season was duty or any refined sense of honour, and who, approaching, and the campaign could not have pressed by famine on the one hand, and allured been protracted much longer. During the by promises on the other, were already more period of inaction it would have been neces-than wavering in their fidelity. The result sary to maintain expensive establishments, a was, that the whole of the outworks were burden which was averted by the convention; abandoned to the British troops, and those of and this circumstance, combined with the posthe enemy came over almost universally to session of the strongholds of the enemy, suf-General Ochterlony's camp, leaving Ummer fixed to attest its expediency. In concluding Sing shut up in the body of the fort with a it, as well as in all his military operations, carrison reduced to about two hundred men. General Ochterlony displayed sound judgment. Escape and the receipt of succour were alike. It will now be necessary to return to the impossible, and on the 5th of May the Goorkha division under General Martindell. After the commander wrote to General Ochterlony, de-unfortunate termination of the double attack siring to be informed of his wishes. The upon Tyetuck, that officer determined to general's reply was, that, agreeably to usage, attempt nothing farther until the arrival of proposals must come from the other side. Up reinforcements. These were not granted in to the 10th no farther communication was the most gracious manner, and the communi-British commander in forming batteries Martindell, from the department of the comand making other preparations for attack; mander-in-chief, were couched in the language there being completed, firing commenced, of blame and reproach. On General Martin-and continued during the greater part of dell instituting a comparison between his force the 10th. On the morning of the 11th and that of the enemy, he was told that Ram Dos, son of the Goorkha general, came out and intimated his father's desire to negotiate: the firing was conrequently discontinued, but the blockade was rigidly kept up.

From the 11th to the 15th was occupied in Jumna and the Sutlej should be delivered up liberty to enter the British service, and that those not employed should be maintained by the British government, on a specific allowance, till the conclusion of peace: that Gurhwal should be forthwith evacuated, the garrison having permission to return to Nepaul by the Kumaon route, carrying with them all public and private property, including warlike stores; Ummer Sing was to be permitted to retire ple, and the record redoubt was gained with Ummer Sing, were to retain their arms and accoutrements.

Of these arrangements neither party had

The interval was employed by the cations addressed at this period to General "hitherto it had not been the habit of the Company's officers to calculate whether they had a numerical superiority to the enemy, and the introduction of such a principle was pronounced to be "novel, and infallibly de-structive to our empire." This lofty language negotiations, which were protracted in consequence of their being extended to other of an enemy's force is, after all, an element objects, as well as the surrender of Malown. that cannot be excluded from the calculations A convention was finally signed, by which it of a prudent general, and the war with the way agreed that all the forts between the Nepaulese certainly did not form an exception of a prudent general, and the war with the Nepaulese certainly did not form an exception to the general rule. It may be admitted that to the British; that all the troops, except General Martindell was somewhat over anxious those granted to the personal honour of Umwith regard to numbers, and it is undeniable mer Sing and Runjore Sing, should be at that British officers had been accustomed to gain casy victories over vastly superior numbers of the feeble troops by whom they had heretofore been opposed; but in the Goorkhas they had an onemy surpassing in energy, as well as in military skill, any with whom they had previously contended in India, and a corresponding degree of caution was called for; the want of it had been severely felt in more instances than one. The irregular troops, to Ummer Sing was to be permitted to retire instances than one. The irregular troops, to across the Kali with the remaining garrison of Malown, retaining their arms, accountements, baggage, and waggons; Runjore Sing, the commander of Jyetuck, in the same manner, with two hundred men of that garrison, three hundred unarmed followers, and one gun. All private property was to be respected, and eighty-three persons in the various garrisons, who were related by blood or marriage to marched with one thousand four hundred irregulars to intercept them. He was joined finesse, he availed himself of its arrival to by several hundreds more, forming altogether insert an article stating that he had sura very considerable force; it is stated, in one rendered at the instance of Bum Sah and the report, to have amounted to nearly three other chiefs of Kumaon; thus throwing on thousand men, and it certainly very consider them the odium and the danger which he ably exceeded two thousand. A party of apprehended to himself. these being attacked and put to flight, by the enemy, the whole body fell under the opposite factions, and the operation of panic, and were completely routed transmitted his recomm by a force which did not exceed five hundred fighting men. Such was the value of the irregular troops, though commanded by an excellent officer, whose personal exertions were strenuously but vainly used to induce them to keep their ground against an enemy greatly inferior in numbers.

The defeat materially abated the taste of the irregulars for a military life. Many deserted; many applied for their discharge; and the strength of the corps was reduced from between two and three thousand to about twelve hundred, exclusive of those on detached duty. This defection increased the difficulties of General Martindell. He had to contend, also, with weather of extreme inclemency, which his troops were ill calculated to sup-He complained heavily of the want of correct intelligence, and, oppressed by all these difficulties, he signified a wish to be relieved from a command which he could no longer exercise with pleasure to himself or satisfaction to his superiors. This need excite little surprise; General Marley had been unable to contend with the difficulties of his situation, and General Ochterlony had expressed a diffidence of the adequacy of his own powers to meet the exigencies of the mountain warfare. But the commander-in-chief was impressed with a belief that Jyetuck might be reduced, and with the force under General Martindell's command. After a long-continued and somewhat angry communication of opinion, General Ochterlony was ordered, immediately on the and an astrologer having been consulted, a forfall of Malown, to take the command of the tunate day was chosen for crossing the river.

instrument surrendered to the British. On the reduction of Almorah the Goorkha commander, Bum Sah, expressed a wish to peace and good understanding than those of become an agent for the restoration of peace, their opponents; their hopes of escaping the and proposed to address letters to Ummer probable consequences of their recent conduct Sing Thappa and Runjore Sing, recommending depended upon their obtaining an ascendancy them to withdraw their troops across the in the state; that ascendancy, again, being Kali, preparatory to the commencement of dependent upon their pursuing a course of negotiations. The proposal was assented to policy different from that of the party by by Colonel Nicholls and Mr. Gardner; the which they were opposed. letters were written and forwarded; the success of General Ochterlony had, however, pre-cluded their necessity. That addressed to placed in the hands of Bum Sah; but as an Ummer Sing Thappa was received by him as indiscreet publication of such a wish would he was on the point of executing the capitu- have frustrated its fulfilment, and probably lation; and though too late to have any effect have involved Bum Sah and his partisans in on his decision, it was in time to afford him an serious difficulties, the expression of it was apology for the course which he had previously confided to him alone, accompanied by an determined to pursue. With true Oriental intimation, that he might use it in any man-

Bum Sah and Ummer Sing belonged to opposite factions, and the former had no sooner transmitted his recommendation of retreat than he became alarmed at the probable consequences of what he had done. Though nearly related to the rajah, who was also much attached to him, the influence of his enemies preponderated at court. The situation of Bum Sah was, therefore, extremely critical; his character was timid and vacillating, and being apprehensive that his head would pay the forfeit of the discretion which he had exercised, he solicited from Colonel Gardner, who had accompanied him on his march homeward, permission to remain in Kumaon till the arrival of the communication from Nepaul. This could not be permitted; but Bum Sah throwing himself upon the confidence of the British officer, declaring that his sole dependence was upon the government to which that gentleman belonged, and imploring at his hands counsel and instruction, Colonel Gardner, after apprizing him that, as a servant of the British government, his authority extended no further than to see the terms of the convention fulfilled, suggested, as a private individual, that he should forthwith take possession of the province of Dootee, garrison the forts and places of strength with troops upon whom he could rely, dismissing all the rest, and, having established himself there in independence, assume a high tone, and insist upon the adoption of the measures which he thought necessary for the good of his country.

After some deliberation Bum Sah acquiesced, vision before Jyetuck; but this arrange-It was clearly for the interest of Bum Sah to ent was rendered unnecessary by the con-procure, if possible, the power of negotiating tion concluded with Ummer Sing, Jyetuck with the British government, and it was being one of the fortresses which were by that equally to be desired by the latter. general views of Bum Sah and his party were far more favourable to the maintenance of The governorner likely to promote the object sought in this ground, he was informed by Gujraj Misser common by himself and the British governthat he had no authority to make such sacriment. With regard to the seizure of Dootee, fices, and that they were not contemplated Bum Sah was assured of the support of the by any party at Katmandoo. British government, if, on mature considera- to treat was consequently suspended; but tion, he would be satisfied that such a proceeding Gujraj Misser remained in Colonel Bradshaw's would tend to the promotion of his interest.

The earl of Moira, in his narrative of the negotiations, seems to have argued the questions of the justice and policy of this arrangement somewhat unnecessarily; there can be no doubt as to either with relation to the existing state of the circumstances. As the course of the negotiations took another turn, the perseverance of Bum Sah in the project of occupying Dootee might, however, have occasioned some inconvenience, which Lord Moira very properly avowed himself ready to incur rather than commit a breach of faith. The difficulty, however, was removed by Bum Sah subsequently declining the occupation of Dootee, from apprehensions for the safety of his family in Nepaul.

Whilst these matters were in progress, an attempt was made to open a negotiation through Gooroo Gujraj Misser. This person had already been concerned in negotiations with the British government. He had resided some time at Benares, and was believed to be friendly to the British interests; he was also understood to entertain a strong personal attachment to the rajah of Nepaul, and to be anxious to save him from the evils which might be apprehended from the protraction of the war. Having solicited permission to go to the frontier, he placed himself in communication with the rajah; and the result was an earnest invitation to proceed to Katmandoo. On the point of his departure the overtures of Bum Sah became known to the governorgeneral; but it not being deemed advisable, on that account, to discourage this mission of Gujraj Misser, he was permitted to proceed the miscarriage of this attempt appears to without interruption.

He returned with a paper under the rajah's red seal, empowering him to bring to an adjustment all matters in difference between the two states, and declaring that whatever he engaged for should be confirmed; he brought, also, letters from the rajah to the governorgeneral and to Colonel Bradshaw. The powers with which Gujraj Misser was invested appeared sufficiently ample, but his language, as well as that of the letters, was vague and indefinite. He declared that he had no instructions to propose anything, but that the rajah relied on the generosity of the British government. The wisdom of negotiating with a person whose commission appeared thus unsatisfactory may, perhaps, be doubted; but the governor-general determined upon the attempt, and instructions were forwarded to Colonel Bradshaw for his guidance. On

The attempt camp.

Negotiations were now resumed with Bum Sah and his brother, Roodber Beer Sah, but with the same success which had attended the proceedings with Gujraj Misser. The result of these endeavours was little calculated to invite a perseverance in them. In every instance the conduct of the enemy was marked by that evasion and duplicity which so eminently distinguish Nepaulese diplomacy. The governor-general, however, was weary of the war, and not without cause; another effort to restore the relations of peace was, therefore, resolved on. Availing himself of the opportunity afforded of communicating with the rajah, by addressing a letter in reply to that transmitted from him to the governor-general by Gujraj Misser, the earl of Moira deter-mined to honour it with an answer. This communication differed little in substance from those made to the rajah at an earlier Its transmission to Katmandoo was period. întrusted to Gujraj Misser, who was apprized of its contents, and upon whose mind Colonel Bradshaw was instructed to impress the fearful consequences which must ensue to the Goorkha state if the communication were disregarded. The result was an enlargement of the Gooroo's powers and a renewal of the negotiation with him; which, after several fruitless conferences, ended, like the former, in an avowal, on the part of the Goorkha agent, that he had no authority to make such sacrifices of territory as the British minister required.

The governor-general's disappointment at have been extreme, and to have rendered him inaccessible to every other feeling. ascribed the failure, in a great degree, to a deficiency of address on the part of the British agent, and an inattention to the spirit and principles of his instructions. There seems. however, little ground for such an imputation. The universal character of Goorkha diplomacy is quite sufficient to account for the miscarriage of the negotiation, and may supersede the necessity of seeking for any other cause; nor is the failure of Colonel Bradshaw more remarkable than that of others, who also failed under similar circumstances.

His lordship was, in truth, at this time ffering great mortification. On arriving in suffering great mortification. India, he appears to have pictured to himself a career of extraordinary brilliancy. Its commencement was shadowed by clouds which he had not anticipated. Disappointed, in agreat receiving them, Colonel Bradshaw proceeded degree, in the result of the Nepaulese camto open the subject of compensation for the paign, fresh disappointment awaited him in expenses of the war; and having intimated in the failure of the negotiations; and this seems general terms the extent of the demand on to have given rise to challitions of ill-temper not warranted by any thing that had occurred. Colonel Bradshaw convented to wait a few Lord Moira, however, having convinced himbelf that a want of frankness was the great but it was neither favourable nor explicit: the impediment to peace, determined to remove Goorkha negotiators were not empowered to it by a distinct and explicit communication sign a treaty on the terms proposed. A of the terms to which he was ready to agree. A project of a treaty was prepared, and by the British agent, and the Goorkha diplotransmitted to Colonel Bradshaw, together matiests then departed, expressing a belief with the departed of a rate to be signed by the that they departed, expressing a belief with the draft of a note, to be signed by the that they should return in a few days autho-British agent, and delivered, with the former rived to execute the treaty, document, to Gujraj Misser. To aid the effect. The anxiety for peace fell to these proceedings, Lord Moirs, who appears general amounted almost to weakness, and to have thought extremely well of his own permission was conveyed to Colonel Bradshaw powers of persuasion and conciliation, additional make still further relaxations in his terms, dressed another letter to the Rajah of Nepaul. If the Goorkha negotiators should return. The tone of the letter was somewhat subdued. But the permission was unnecessary; at the from that of former ones, and the conditions expiration of a month Gujraj Misser result the proposed treaty somewhat relaxed in appeared, alleging that he had been detained arour of the Nepaulese. Altogether, the at Katmandoo by illness. This might be true; confidence of the governor-general seems to but a far more probable cause for his detendance been greatly shaken; and the experience tion may be found in the struggles of confidence and the strugg

lated were widely different from those which entirely with the project delivered on the part might have been expected, and indicate a re- of the British government. markable change of purpose in the course of n few weeks. On the 5th of August, the Rajah of Neprul should renounce all claim to governor-general, in a despatch addressed to the lands which had been the subject of disthe Secret Committee of the Court of Directors, pute, and should further cede the whole of declared his intention not to make any attempt the low-lands between the rivers Kali and to renow negotiations, and his determination Rapti, those between the Rapti and the that any fresh overtures for that purpose Gunduck, with the exception of Bootwal should come from the enemy. On the 23rd Khass, those between the Gunduck and the of September we find him instructing his Roosi, in which the authority of the British agent to re-open a negotiation, which was government had been introduced or was in suspended, though not absolutely terminated; the course of introduction, and those between for Gujraj Misser had proposed to refer the the Mitchie and the Teistah, together with question of territorial cession to Katmandoo, all the territories within the hills eastward and promised an answer in twenty-one days; of the Mitchie, including the fort and lands but so impatient had the governor-general at Naggree, the Pass of Naggarcote, leading become for a conclusion of hostilities, that he from Morang into the hills, and the territory could not prevail upon himself to wait the lying between that pass and Naggree. The result of the reference to Katmandoo, but chieftains whose interests would suffer by voluntarily made an offer of concessions, which these cessions were to be remunerated by

was bound not to interfere with the countries was bound not to interfere with the countries. again made their favourite offer of a reference award; and not to take into his service any to their court, promising, on this occasion, subject of any European or American state an answer in fifteen days, and apologizing for without the consent of the British governthe delay in answering the former reference. ment. To secure and improve the relations Before the expiration of the fifteen days an of amity, accredited ministers from each state answer to the first reference arrived, couched were to reside at the court of the other. in the most vague and indefinite language (the) unvarying style of Nepaulese state papers), at Fort William, and this event was distin-and referring to more detailed advices to guished by some very remarkable circum-follow. The period fixed for an answer to the stances. At the very moment of ratification, second reference expired, and none was re- the British authorities prepared to make the

The anxiety for peace felt by the governorof one campaign had disposed him to make tending parties at the Goorkha court. The some sacrifices to avoid another. negotiation was forthwith resumed, and, after The proceedings which have just been re- some delay, a treaty was signed, corresponding

By this treaty it was stipulated that the previous tone had given the enemy no pensions to the aggregate amount of two lacs to expect. The answer did not arrive of rupces; the chiefs to be named and the n the stipulated time, and when the proportions fixed by the Nepaulese govern-w project was communicated to the Goorkha ment. By other articles the Rajah of Nepaul properly find place; in a work of a more new outrages, perpetrated by his reresults on general character, only the more prominent British subjects, at length roused the longevents can be noticed.

The trenty was ratified as soon as received ceived. At the solicitation of Gujraj Misser, concessions which they had previously con-

The Rajah of Bielling, in the island of Balli, and the Rajah of Boni, in that of Colebes, having manifested hostile dispositions towards the British government, an expedition for their correction was despatched from Java, under the command of Majorgeneral Nightingall, who had Fucceeded General Gillespie. At Balli the troops occupied, without difficulty, the capital of the proceeded, almost without resistance, to offending rainh, and this step was followed occupy them. The king was made prisoner by his immediate submission, as well as that and deposed, and in the palace of Candy, on of several of his neighbours. At Boni severer the 2nd of March, 1815, Sir Charles Brownlabours awaited the British force. On arriving rigg, the British governor and commander-in-before the place, early in June, 1814, General chief, met in relema conference the adigues, Nightingall addressed a letter to the rajah, dessauves, and powerful men of the country, reciting the wrongs of the British government for the purpose of laying before them the recting the wrongs of the British government for the purpose of Laying before them the and demanding reparation. An answer was plan upon which it was proposed to settle the required within a specified time, and none government. By this it was declared that being returned, the column which had been the dominion of the Candian provinces was proviously formed for attack was put in motion. The town and palace were assailed, and within to be exercised through the governor or liquid. an hour carried in the most gallant style, tenant-governor of Ceylon for the time being, though not without loss. The rajah with The race of the deposed king were for ever difficulty effected his escape, attended by a excluded from the throne, and their claim and few followers. His palace was destroyed, title pronounced to be abelished and extinbeing deliberately set on fire after the capture guished. All males belonging to the family, of the place—an act of violence which, not or pretending to belong to it, were declared important event that occurred in Celebes of the island of Ceylon. during the time that the English were in Late in the same yes otherwise. To Captain Phillips, of the subject to the Rao of Cutch, on the subjects of adras native infantry, and Major D. H. some of the allies of the Company's government. An atrocious attempt to destroy the teers, to whom the charge of the British force by poisoning the wells was hapscem to be inherent in British diplomacy. The maintenance of Java and its dependencies

In another settlement acquired from the Dutch, the English, in 1815, became involved in hostilities. remain unrequited and even unnoticed. Some will appear in the course of the relation, deour eastern empire, and they ought never to have been surrendered.

olumbering feeling of national honour; and Impoily the discontent of the principal subjects of the Candian prince at this period had attained a height, which received to warrant reliance upon their acquirecence in the neceseary measures for divecting the tyrant of the power which he ought never to have possessed. The feeling was not misplaced. A British force entered the Candian dominions, and being dictated by necessity nor calculated to enemies of the new government, and were advance the legitimate objects of the expe-prohibited, under the penalties of martial law, dition, it seems not easy to defend. Ulti-from entering the Candian provinces without mately the rajah was deposed. Though the written permission. Thus the British authorattack on Boni was the most striking and rity became established throughout the whole

Late in the same year a considerable force, on of Java, and has, for that reason, under the command of Colonel East, was elected for especial notice, it must not despatched from Bombay into Cutch. This that, with this exception, the movement was occasioned by the depredations remained in a state of peace: it was committed by the Foujdar of Wagur, a district interest in the island was successively allotted, pily detected and defeated. Colonel East had and to the few troops placed under their com- intended to advance directly upon Bhooj, but mand, the period was one of almost unre-this discovery induced him to change his mitting anxiety, labour, and privation. All course and attack the fort of Anjar, which he these, together with the blood and treasure captured. This success led to the conclusion expended in the capture of the Dutch settle- of a treaty, by which the fort of Anjar, toments, were ultimately thrown away. By the gother with certain villages, was surrenarrangements consequent on the general paci-dered to the British government, and the fication of Europe these settlements were Rao agreed to a series of necessary measures restored—an additional illustration of that for the suppression of the depredations levity and disregard to consequences which which had called the British troops into his dominions.

There were other occurrences contemporary was necessary to the safety and integrity of with the Nepaul war which deserve, and must receive, ample notice; but they were so intimately connected with an important series of events, hereafter to be related, that their proper place will be in a subsequent chapter: For about ten years the king's the present may close with a narrative of a government in Ceylon had permitted the serious insurrection at Bareilly, in the northcrimes of the usurping ruler of Candy to western provinces, which, from reasons which common and a dangerous error to suppose that [it," he says, "to be true that there exile exist men's religious equations exercise little faffic to a great degree, and exilt should not be ence over their actions. If, unfortunately, charged to the introduction of our system as they are too often unavailing for good, it is its most characteristic marks. Let not the beyond doubt that they are found powerfully present be compared to a state of this general efficient for each be popular. A few years only had elapsed justice at all to be get; where the important, nince the country had been separated from the carried duty of redrieving injuries and ponishdominion of Oude, one of the worst governed ingerimes depended upon the tyrachy and exnation in the world. Its combides had been prices of a treme officer, who either entirely necessioned to exercise a degree of power divergabled the duty, or by corruption and which, under the British government, it was abuse made it a nonree of profit."

The views of Mr. Strackey are, to a certain classes to the operation of fixed law. This extent, confirmed by the report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the distinguish was decidedly improved the feeding contour courts of instinct to be singed as an insufficient of the feeding contour courts of instinct to be singed. the ryots was decidedly improved, the feeling sont our courts of justice to be viewed as a of habitual dependence upon their chief was so grievance by the upper classes, and not as a strong, that it was difficult either to shake it, blessing by the lower. With regard to the or to excite a counteracting feeling among the majority of the latter, the commissioners add, people in favour of their own rights. This that the expense of our courts rendered them atate of things is depicted by Mr. Strachey scarcely accessible, and their delay nearly with some force. He says, "Deprive the useless. This charge, however, had been analysis of a necessary of life, and they rit silent; swered by anticipation by Mr. Strachey. nobody cares for them, and they cannot help themselves. But take from their chief the be, that there was some small share of grievmanagement of the police, which he exercised ance and a very large amount of discontent only to oppress them; restrain him from disturbing the peace of the country, and he will propensities of the people generally, from the provail upon them to take up arms in his mortified ambition of the upper classes, and cause, and contend in a hopeless, desperate the miserable poverty of the lower. Previously enterprise against all the powers of govern- to its cession to the British, the country had, ment, civil and military. Such are our sub- by misgovernment, been reduced to a state jects: they resist authority without pretence almost of desolation; and though it had subof right or hope of success.

ministration of law, and when the cause of for raising a country from rain. The misery atheir dislike is traced, it will increase the sur- of the people and the turbulence of their

was asked what part of the established system classes were borne by them with sullen indifwas obnoxious to him, he would answer, ference, if not with patience, and little danger "That which reduces me to a level with my to the state might have arisen from this domestics and labourers." By the same au-| source; but the people of Robilcund were thority it is stated, that "a man of high caste actuated by a fanatical attachment to their and wealth, conceiving that he possesses su-chiefs, which induced them to follow wherever perior rights and privileges, thinks himself their superior would lead them. Their fidelity disgraced by being called into court on any occa- was the effect of mere habit; but it afforded the sion." Such a man was averse to being exa- chiefs a powerful instrument for thwarting and mined publicly as a witness. mony," said he, "rated no higher than that of caprice or calculation led them to employ it. my servants and coolies, and am I to stand on an | The country was prepared for change of any equality with them, and reply as a criminal to sort, and by applying a very small portion of their petty complaints for an assault or abusive the principle of fermentation, the entire mass The dissatisfaction, therefore, might be put in motion. originated in that which has generally been esteemed the perfection and glory of law-its the attempt to introduce some police reguimpartiality and non-respect for persons.

resorted to, as is usual in such cases, and the the territories subject to the presidency of never-failing ones of the expense and delay of Bengal. judicial proceedings were not forgotten. Upon volved certain fiscal changes, which were this part of the subject the observations of eagerly seized at Bareilly as a ground for dis-

Among such a people, neither the British politions, but with that which certainly did government nor any regular government could be retelere exist, siz, one in which there was no

Upon the whole, the truth will be found to -that discontent arising from the lawless sequently improved, yet it must be remem-The upper classes disliked the regular ad- bered, that fourteen years is but a short period felt at their having been able to induce leaders were elements fearfully adapted to inferior classes to support them. Accord-coalesco in the production of an explosion. g to Mr. Strachey, when a native of rank The privations and sufferings of the lower "Is my testi- annoying the government, whenever their

In the district of Bareilly this was found in lations, which had been carried into effect Some auxiliary grounds of complaint were without difficulty through the greater part of These arrangements, however, in-Mr. Strachey appear very just. "Supposing satisfaction and resistance. A new tax is not amount of reluctance which most men feel at munication to be made to the shopkeepers, rooted aversion to change. In the East the benefit, the tax should be relinquished; that, tax has always been regarded by the people generally been unsuccessful, often dangerous, that of deserting their houses an There was, in the present instance, some enround the magistrate's residence. couragement to resistance afforded by the success which had attended earlier experiments in the art of agitation: a police tax pany's European servants, it is impossible to and a house tax, previously imposed, had both been surrendered to popular disapprobation, and the people were, it appears, sufficiently versed in philosophy to expect the recurrence appeal were absent on circuit; the fourth. of similar effects from the operation of similar judge had proceeded to Benares, and the

A sort of police establishment had previously existed, the expense of which was defrayed by voluntary contributions. The persons retained on this service received generally the allowance of one rupee per month, and in no case more than two. The number of these well-paid supporters of the social system was determined by the amount of contributions which could be obtained from any particular street or portion of a street; and in making the new arrangements, the government consulted the Indian love of unchanging continuity, by making the assessment with ties. The exactions and extortions which were reference to the number of chokeedars formerly retained by voluntary contributions. however, the new chokeedars were to have a salary of three rupees per month, the amount of contribution was increased, as well as its character changed from a voluntary to a compulsory payment.

carry its object quietly and securely, and the magistrate appears to have been desirous, in this respect, of forwarding the views of his superiors; but no one acquainted with Indian affairs can be ignorant how frequently the good intentions of the European authorities have been frustrated by the perverseness or treachery of native servants; and a fresh example was here afforded.

A native officer, called the kotwal, to whom fell the duty of collecting the assessment, discharged his duty in a manner the most overbearing and offensive. The official insolence of a functionary of humble rank, and of very low origin, could not fail to provoke the gave to their opposition coherence and steadihigher classes of a people like those of ness.

Rohilcund. It was said, moreover, that the The period of the presentation of the petikotwal had demanded in some instances rates far exceeding those which his authority warcouncils which led to them; that, like many which it ultimately bore.

a very popular thing anywhere: in India the own private interest; that he caused a comparting with their money is increased by the that if they would raise a sum of money for his land has been regarded as the legitimate object in consequence, a douceur of four thousand of taxation, but any thing resembling a personal rupees was tendered, and that the contax has always been regarded by the people sideration for this fee afforded by the kotwal of India with great dislike, and the attempt was, his advice to the subscribers to pursue a to levy an impost of such a nature has plan which had been tried in other places, that of deserting their houses and encamping

What effect might have been produced by the presence of a larger number of the Comconjecture; but it happened, at the period of the insurrection, that few were in the town. The senior and third judges of the court of collector of the revenue was engaged in the interior of the district; the entire weight of responsibility, therefore, rested on the magistrate,

Among those who played the most conspicuous parts in the drama acted at Bareilly was Mooftee Mahomed Ewery, a person of great influence among the Mahometans. His first public appearance on the scene was on the 27th of March, when he became the channel of transmitting to the magistrate a petition alleged to emanate from the inhabitants at large. The petition was confined to generalibelieved to have been committed in carrying the new measure into operation were not even noticed. The tax was simply denounced as a public grievance, and the same tone was preserved in numerous placards published in the town. The resistance to the tax was one of those movements not altogether unknown The wish of government, of course, was to in more western countries, but little expected in the East. A common spirit pervaded the whole people. As in similar movements in countries boasting a higher degree of knowledge and civilization, the larger portion of those engaged knew not why they resisted; it was sufficient for them that their neighbours set the example. Every man was ready to submit, if submission became general; but every man was determined to resist so long as resistance was the fashion. They were embarked in a common struggle, for a common object; and though the sense of individual grievance might refresh the energy of some, it was the force of habit and association which tion was marked by a tumultuous assemblage of the people, in consequence of which some ranted him to receive. It was currently reported, also, that he connived at the first but it was not until the 16th of April that the indications of tumult, and even assisted in the insurrection assumed the formidable character On that day the patriots everywhere, and all disturbers in the kotwalee peons were actively engaged in en-East, he had a nice perception of the propriety forcing the levy of the chokeedaree assessment, of an alliance between the public good and his and in the course of their progress they broke forcibly into the house of a woman, for the dered unavoidable by the proceedings of the purpose of distraining property, to realize insurgents; and neither the magistrate nor her proportion of the assessment. A scuffle the military can be blamed for it. It was, ensued, in which the owner of the house was wounded: this was a fortunate circumstance for the cause of the opposers of the tax. The suffering female was a martyr in the cause of the people, and was treated with all the Rohilcund were by no means remarkable for honours due to such a character. She was tenderness with regard to it. But it must placed upon a bed, and carried to the mooftee; the mooftee advised the bearers to take her to adherents of the mooftee—this was a heinous the magistrate, which they did, and the magistrate referred the woman for redress to the nately happened that, in the confusion, the Adawlut. to the people as might be expected. appointed in obtaining summary justice, the procession returned to the mooftee and declared the result of their application. If the conduct of the magistrate was marked by indifference, that of the mooftee was certainly characterized by an ample degree of warmth. The story of the populace not only roused his indignation and awoke all the energy of his patriotism, but, according to his own representation, excited his personal fears. On hearing the relation of what had passed before the magistrate, he exclaimed that, if such were that functionary's justice, no person's life or honour was safe within the town, and that, therefore, it was high time for him to leave it. It is not likely that the mooftee then felt any apprehension for his personal safety; but a circumstance which occurred immediately afterwards might perhaps give rise to a feeling which previously he thought it expedient to The continuance of the tumult necessarily called for the interposition of the fend it, magistrate. He proceeded in person, with a lieutenant and a party of sepoys, for the to his eyebrow, effected his escape; and his purpose of putting an end to the tumult and spersing the mob. The mooftee had quitted house, either under the influence of the pressions which he had avowed or from he other cause, and the fact of his meeting · the magistrate with an armed force was calculated to strengthen any fears he might previously have entertained, or to excite apprehension if it had not before existed. Conscious of the part he had acted, he might not unnaturally suppose that the magistrate meditated his arrest. It is true that the force was small, but it was sufficient for this purpose, and consequently not to be despised.

In cases of petty riot the sight of troops generally operates as a complete sedative; in the instance before us this was not the case. The government force, being assailed by the mob and by the servants of the mooftee, was compelled to act in its own defence. It has been questioned whether the attacks were made in a serious spirit of resistance, or whether they were only intended to facilitate the escape

however, little calculated to calm the irritation which existed, or to render the new levy popular. The life of man, indeed, is not highly estimated in the East, and the people of be remembered, that two of the slain were scandal; but what was still worse, it unfortu-This advice was as little acceptable eyebrow of the mooftee himself received the Dis-indignity of a scratch. This outrage was more than Mahometan patience could bear. Sacrilege appeared to be added to exaction, and the enthusiasm of the votaries of the prophet was raised to boiling heat. The old tale—threadbare and ridiculous as it was—of the intention of the British to force Christianity on India, was revived; and since fanaticism sees all that it chooses to see, and nothing besides, it need not be doubted that the charge was believed. The never extinguished hope of once more beholding the standard of the prophet wave in triumph over every spot formerly subjected to Mahometan rule, revived, as it never fails to revive, whenever circumstances present the slightest symptoms of encouragement. The object was no longer resistance to an unpopular tax, nor contention for a civil right; the dispute had assumed the lofty character and the deadly hue of a religious quarrel. The faith was in danger. and all good Mussulmans were bound to de-

> The mooftee, notwithstanding the accident subsequent conduct was well calculated to keep alive the fanatical spirit of the people. He repaired to a mosque on the skirts of the town, and hoisted the green or holy flag, with the declared view of assembling his friends. and followers to protect him from the presumed violence of the magistate. This was obviously a course which the European authorities could not view without apprehension, nor pass over without precaution; and on the morning after the mooftee had taken his post at the mosque, a detachment of two com-panies of sepoys, with a brigade of sixpounders, was placed immediately in front of him

The mooftee was not idle in his retirement, and he showed himself no unworthy follower of the prophet, who claimed the right to propagate his religion by the sword. He appears to have forwarded communications to the principal Mussulman towns in Rohilcund, calling on the followers of Mahomet to stand forth in defence of their insulted religion. The greater of the mooftee. Whatever the motive, the part of them, like the actors in another reli-result was lamentable, for several of the gious tumult, "knew not wherefore they were rioters were killed. Among those who fell brought together;" but as the craftsmen were were two persons connected with the moof- not the less ready on that account to cry This sacrifice of human life was ren- | "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" so the

CHAPTER XXV.

DISPUTES BETWEEN THE PEISHWA AND THE GUICOWAR-MURDER OF GUNGADRUR SHASTEY-TRIMETCKIEE DAINGLIA SURGENDERED TO THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT-THE PINDABRIES-CAPTURE OF HATTRASS AND MOORSAUM-ATTACK ON THE BRITISH RESIDENCY AT POONA-MEASURES FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF THE PINDARRIES-TREATY WITH SCINDIA-PATTLE OF SELTABULDEE-RISE OF TOOLSEE PHYE-BATTLE OF MARRIPORE-TREATY WITH HOLKAR -DEFEAT OF THE PEISHWA-FALL OF TALNEIR-PERFIDT AND ARREST OF APPA SAME-CAPTURE OF CHANDA AND MALLIGAUM-PEISHWA SURDENDERS-PAIL OF ABSEERGHUR-AFFAIRS IN CEYLON—PALMER AND COMPANY—RESIGNATION OF THE MARQUIS HASTINGS.

THE complicated drama which is about to open the power of arbitration, it was obviously requires that attention should be carried back desirable that this authority should not be to a period antecedent to the occurrence of exercised except in case of absolute necessity; some of the events which formed the subject and that, before calling it into operation, of the last chapter. When Lord Moira under- every opportunity should be afforded to the took the reins of government in India, the native powers of rettling their differences by elements of commotion were almost everywhere prepared, and some favourable opportunity, or casual act of provocation, was only the causes which were likely to disturb the peace of the country were certain differences between the peishwa and the guicowar, for the settlement of which the former prince
the settlement of which the former prince
the resumption of the peishwa and the guicowar, sor
the settlement of which the former prince
the settlement of which the former prince
the resumption of the peishwa issue,—the resumption of the peishwa's direct authority in Ahmedabad. the settlement of which the former prince manifested a most extraordinary anxiety. This, however, was in perfect correspondence with the usual practices of native courts, of triguing and fortunate adventurers naturally generated in the atmosphere of a despotic His origin was low, and his earliest taking advantage of any change in the British government to press, with unwonted carnest-ness and pertinacity, every claim which they possess, or pretend to possess, either upon that government or upon the states under its protection.

The discussions between the peishwa and the guicowar arose partly out of the former connection between those princes; and the critish government, by the treaties concluded in both, was bound to arbitrate upon their claims. A further ground of dispute was furnished by the circumstances of Ahmedabad. This district was divided between the peishwa and the guicowar; the former prince had granted a lease of his share to the latter, and arrangements had been made, under the sanction and influence of the British government, calculated to promote the advancement of the country in prosperity and happiness. The success of those arrangements was, however, endangered by a desire expressed by the peishwa to resume his portion of the territory. This was a result alike to be deprecated by the guicowar, the British govern-ment, and the inhabitants of the district in question; and it became necessary that endea-vours should be made to avert it. With these questions were mixed up others, connected with the peishwa's interest in Kattywar; and altogether, the disputes were involved in much employment under the peishwa was that of a menial servant. His disposition, however, led him to watch for opportunities of raising his fortune, and he found them. On some occasions the means fell in his way of rendering services desired by his master, and he was not slow to improve the advantages he thus gained. He rose rapidly in his sovereign's favour, and so successfully advanced his own influence, that at length, though the office of first minister was nominally held by another, all substantial power was actually in the bands of Trimbuckjee Dainglia. The British resident at Poona at this time was the Honourable Mountstuart Elphinstone. Ho formed and expressed a most unfavourable opinion of this man, and the progress of events proved that it was just.

The efforts of the guicowar's agent at Poons to effect an amicable arrangement being constantly frustrated by the machina-tions of the peishwa's unprincipled favourite, it was deemed advisable to make a change in the person by whom the negotiation was to be conducted. Gungadhur Shastry, the guico-war's principal minister, was a man of extra-ordinary talent and judgment. The services which he had rendered to the guicowar state were pre-eminent. He had laboured strenuintricacy, while the objects to which they ously to emdicate abuse from every part of related were of great delicacy and importance. the government, and to his exertions the Although the British government possessed rescue of the state from bankruptcy and ruin was mainly attributable. and character of this individual seemed to point him out as the fittest person to conduct the negotiations with the peishwa, and by the advice of Captain Carnac, who discerned and duly appreciated his merits, he was nominated to the performance of that duty.

His appointment was regarded by the prevailing party at Poona with dislike and apprehension, and, previously to his arrival, some frivolous objections were raised by the peishwa to receiving him. These were removed by the British resident, and Gungadhur Shastry proceeded to the seat of his mission. intrigue and counteraction awaited his proceedings. A servant of a former dewan of the Guicowar government, named Bundojee, was engaged in active attempts to frustrate the shastry's endeavours: he had frequent interviews with the minister, and even went so far as to produce a letter, purporting to be from Futteh Sing, the ruler of the Guicowar state, disavowing the mission. These proceedings, being communicated to Captain Carnac, were by him laid before Futteh Sing. The Guicowar prince explicitly and entirely disavowed them, and, in proof of his sincerity, intreated that an application might be made by the resident at Poona for the surrender of the person of the individual who had thus abused his name. The application, however, was not made; the principal reason for re-fraining being the difficulty of adducing sufficient evidence to justify such a demand

Another active agent of intrigue was Bhugwunt Row Guicowar, a relation of the sovereign whom Gungadhur Shastry represented. He had visited the poishwa's territories under pretence of a pilgrimage, and, being there, sought an interview with the sovereign, on the ground of being the bearer of letters to him. Against this the British resident remonstrated, and at length obtained a promise from the peishwa, that he would not see Bhugwunt peishwa's favour, he actually proposed a mar-Row without a previous communication of his riage between a female of his own family and intention.

The designs of this promoter of intrigue for its celebration. and division had been penetrated by Captain Carnac, who forthwith was commissioned by Futteh Sing Guicowar to request that the government would take effectual means of averting the mischievous consequences to be apprehended. In the mean time, however, the peishwa had violated the promise which he had given to the British resident, by receiving Bhugwunt Row at a very full durbar, in the presence of the accrealleging that the appearance of Bhugwunt to the former that, before their reconciliation. Row at durbar had not been sanctioned by he had been engaged in plans for his assassina-him; the habitual conduct and feelings of the tion. This avowal seems scarcely credible, peishwa, however, render it almost certain that this statement was false.

the Guicowar prince, and at the same time expedient, and would seem quite as likely to

The talents, rank, to encounter with better effect the mass of intrigue with which he was surrounded. Captain Carnac had been instructed to communicate to Futteh Sing the facts reported from Poona by the resident, and to submit to his highness the propriety of meeting the proceedings, in which his name had been surreptitiously used, by a disclaimer, framed in such a formal and authoritative manner that it could be officially used at the durbar of Poona. Some reluctance was at first manifested to this; but the objections of the prince were ultimately overcome by the address of the resident: the required document was given, and forwarded by the Bombay government to Poona. Gungadhur Shastry had hitherto received few marks of favour from the peishwa or his minister, and his endeavours to arrange the matters in dispute had been abortive. The peishwa refused to renew the lease of Ahmedabad-on this point he was explicit: on others, every sort of evasion, chicanery, and delay was employed to postpone the conclusion of the negotiation. Gungadhur Shastry was at length about to take his departure from Poona, relinquishing to the British government the task which he had laboured assiduously, but vainly, to perform, when a sudden change took place in the conduct of the peishwa and his minister, which induced him to suspend the execution of his intention. Both the master and the servant began to make an ostentatious display of kindly feelings towards the shastry, and to appear anxious to atone for their former hostility by the most extraordinary marks of esteem and confidence. Prospects of a settlement of the disputed questions, upon terms consistent with the interest of the Guicowar, were held out, and the greatest apparent cordiality was established between the shastry and his former enemy, Trimbuckjee. As a crowning mark of the the shastry's son, and preparations were made

The peishwa and his minister proceeded on a pilgrimage to Nassuck, and the shastry accompanied them. During the journey, reports that the shastry had been seized by Trimbuckjee were extensively circulated at Poona. They were disbelieved by the British resident; but so much pains were taken to convince him that they had no foundation, as to excite in his mind considerable surprise. It has been stated that, at the period when dited ministers of the Guicowar. This breach | Gungadhur Shastry and Trimbuckjee were of his word he endeavoured to excuse by associated on friendly terms, the latter avowed and if made, it is not easily to be traced to any rational motive. If intended as a parade With the view of testing the sincerity of of entire confidence, it was certainly a clumsy of enabling the British resident at Poona put the shastry on his guard as to my

tained such abominable designs.

some apprehensions of treachery and violence, appears to have been divested, by the smoothness of the minister, of every relic of such feelings: they were again, indeed, roused, but it was when too late. Another devotional journey was proposed, and the shastry invited to accompany the peishwa and the minister to Punderpore. On this occasion, the shastry's colleague, Bappoo Mryaul, a man of wary and accompany him, and his exclusion was attributed to the influence of Trimbuckjee. $\mathbf{A}\mathbf{t}$ his desire, also, the shastry consented to leave most of his attendants at Poona.

The visit to Punderpore took place in July, 1815. On the 14th of that month the shastry went to an entertainment; on his return he complained of fever, and desired that if any persons came to request his presence at the temple, they might be told that he was ill. In about half an hour after his return, a messenger from Trimbuckjee came to request him to join that person in his devotions; but was told that the shastry was unwell, and would not go out. A second messenger arrived, shortly after, to acquaint the shastry that the peishwa was to go to the temple the next morning, and that he ought to take advantage of the interval and attend prayers; but not to bring many attendants with him. He still declined. Soon after the receipt of the second message, two of his friends left him and proceeded to the great temple. Here they met Trimbuckjee, who lamented the refusal of the shastry to come to prayers, and entreated them to use their influence to change his determination. One of them returned, and pleaded illness as a reason for non-comthese various messages, might appear strange in the eyes of Trimbuckjee, he at length agreed to go.

As he passed along, one of his attendants heard a man in the crowd ask, "Which is the shastry?" and another reply, "He who wears the necklace;" but not thinking the inquiry of any importance, he paid no attention either to the person asking the question or to him who made the answer. The shastry entered the temple, performed his devotions, and after remaining a few minutes in conversation with Trimbuckjee Dainglia, returned towards the house which he occupied. He advanced but and that the shastry was wrong to venture a short distance from the temple, when three abroad without fifty or a hundred attendants. men came running behind him, and, as if clear- It was answered, that the shastry considered ing the road for some person of distinction, himself among friends; that it was not usual calling out, "Make way! make way!" Their to bring many people on such occasions; and, left hands were folded up in cloths, and each with regard to the want of marks by which to his dependence on the good faith of one who to make them stand aside. One of them struck did not hesitate to acknowledge having enter- the shastry a violent blow with the cloth, and it was then discovered that he had a sword in The shastry, though he had formerly felt his hand; another seized him by the hair and threw him down; and, whilst in the act of falling, a third ruffian cut him on the head. Three of the shastry's attendants remained with their master; but two more assassins rushing from the front, the whole of them were wounded and disabled. The rest of the shastry's friends and followers, who do not appear to have been blest with any large share of personal intrepidity, ran away, leaving him circumspect character, was not permitted to in the hands of his murderers. Being thus at liberty to complete their bloody work, they mangled the unhappy man in a dreadful manner, and then departed; one of them exclaiming, in the Mahratta language, "We have now finished him."

Three of the shastry's people had remained at the temple, in attendance upon one of his suite. As they approached the spot where the murder had been committed, they saw five men, with naked swords, running towards the temple. This alarmed them, but not being aware of what had happened, they made their way as quietly as possible to the shastry's house; not finding him there, they returned to the road, where they discovered his body cut to pieces.

The British resident had accompanied the peishwa to Nassuck, but, understanding that his attendance at Punderpore would not be acceptable, he had, on the departure of the devotees for that place, proceeded to Ellora. There he learned the horrible events which had marked the devotional expedition of the peishwa, to whom he forthwith communicated his intention of immediately returning to Poona, calling on him, at the same time, to take measures for discovering and bringing to - i the shastry what had occurred; but he justice the murderers of the shastry. Pottinger, the assistant, who had been left at pliance. Reflecting, however, that his refusal Poona, was instructed to provide for the safety to join in the devotions of the temple, after of the surviving parties connected with the Baroda mission; and, in case of necessity, he was to invite them to encamp in the neighbourhood of the British residency.

The demands of Mr. Elphinstone were unheeded; and the representations of the shastry's followers, of course, met with no better success. The day after the murder some of the shastry's attendants waited on Trimbuckjee, and urged that it behoved him, alike as the friend of the deceased and minister of the peishwa, to institute an active inquiry. He received them with great civility, but said that he had no clue to guide him in tracing the criminals, It was answered, that the shastry considered himself among friends; that it was not usual of them, in his right hand, bore what seemed trace the perpetrators of the crime, they to be a twisted cloth, such as appears to be observed, that the assassins were the dress of commonly used for striking persons in a crowd the Carnatic, and that Trimbuckjee well knew who were the shastry's enemies. minister replied by an appeal to that power uphold the character of his government, and whose agency is so universally recognized in the east. He asked, "How could I avert what fate has decreed?" And, having thus removed the transaction beyond the sphere of that the public voice had been unanimous in human responsibility, he consoled the shastry's followers by assuring them that, now their protector was gone, they must depend upon themselves; graciously adding, however, that he would do what he could for them. On the following day the shastry's followers obtained permission to return to Poona; but it was intimated to them, that they need not trouble themselves to attend any more, either upon Trimbuckjee or the peishwa.

Although the remonstrances of the British resident did not produce any serious investigation into the circumstances of the murder, they were sufficient to induce Trimbuckjee and his sovereign to take extraordinary measures for their own safety. Before the murder, indeed, the peishwa had adopted some unusual precautions. New troops were raised, additional guards were posted round his house, and, contrary to his usual practice, his progress was attended by a large body of armed After the murder these precautions were redoubled.

The peishwa returned to Poona, but his entry was marked by symptoms of anxiety and fear. His approach was not preceded by any notice: he arrived in a close palanquin, and was not met by any of his chiefs. The day of his arrival was a great festival, on which thousands of Brahmins were accustomed to attend. to receive his alms. He never before failed to be present at the dispensation; but, on this occasion, he did not appear. At night strong guards were posted, not only at the palace, but at the house of Trimbuckjee. Subsequently, the levies of new troops, and the concentration of military force in the vicinity of Poona, continued; and every movement manifested distrust and alarm.

Soon after the peishwa's return, the British resident requested an audience; this, on various pretexts, was evaded. After much difficulty, Mr. Elphinstone succeeded in conveying to the peishwa a paper, containing a direct charge against Trimbuckjee, and demanding his arrest, as well as that of Bhugwunt Row and Bundojee, the two persons who immediately, if his guilt were proved (which, had so anxiously endeavoured to undermine while he remained at large, was obviously and counteract the labours of Gungadhur stating the auxiety he had felt for an interview, expressed his surprise that no inquiry temple with a few attendants, as sufficient had been made into the circumstances of the evidence of guilt. To this Mr. Elphinstone shastry's assassination. The peishwa's pride replied, by repeating that he was prepared to and feelings were, however, respected, by averting the imputation of neglect and guilt for the arrest of Trimbuckjee; and by warnfrom him, and casting it upon those whose ing the peishwa of the danger in which he duty it was to have informed his highness of placed his alliance with the British governthe facts; a duty which, it was assumed, they ment, by a perseverance in the course which had omitted to perform; and to this omission he had hitherto adopted. was attributed the forbearance of the prince

To this the from those measures which were necessary to which, the resident took for granted, were in accordance not less with his inclinations than with his duty. The peishwa was informed accusing Trimbuckjee as the instigator of the crime; the facts of the murder, and of the minister's conduct after its perpetration, were recapitulated; the necessity of the arrest of Trimbuckjee, in order that witnesses might not be deterred from coming forward by the terror of his power and influence, was urged; and the paper terminated by distinctly apprizing the peishwa, that all communication with the British government must be suspended until its demand upon this point should be satisfied.

The peishwa now felt that, to preserve appearances, it was necessary to do something; but appearance being his only object, he resolved that it should be as little as possible. A day or two after the delivery of the paper, the resident received a message, assuring him that it had been perused with the fullest attention, and that the peishwa had taken certain pro-ceedings in consequence. These steps were, however, very unsatisfactory. The two minor agents, Bhugwunt Row and Bundojee, had been placed under restraint, but the grand conspirator, Trimbuckjee, remained at large, and had actually the custody of his alleged coadjutors in crime; the guards placed over their houses belonged to Trimbuckjee. Further evidence was afforded of the insincere and deceptive character of these proceedings, by the fact of an interview having taken place between Trimbuckjee and Bundojee on the preceding night.

The charge against Trimbuckjee could not be altogether passed over in the peishwa's message: but nothing explicit was stated with regard to it; an explanation being promised through a certain native agent of the British residency, whom the minister requested to be sent to him. This agent was incapacitated by age and infirmities, and another was con-sequently sent. To him a long message was delivered, compounded of professions of attachment to the British government, and a denial of the guilt of Trimbuckjee; the latter being accompanied by an offer to arrest him next to impossible); and a promise to consider In this paper, the resident, after the establishment of the truth of his having sent invitations to the shastry to come to the make good his charges; by reiterating his call the resident were of course rejected, and an unqualified surrender of Trimbuckjee to the British government insisted on; but a private intimation was conveyed to the acting minister of the peishwa that, after the prisoner was in British custody, no further inquiry would take place. The propriety of this promise seems open to question. It had the appearance of a relaxation in the terms which the British resident had laid down, and to which he professed tenaciously to adhere. If the British government, satisfied with the possession of the person of Trimbuckjee, were willing to forego inquiry; still it could scarcely be prudent to bind itself to this course by a promise.

The grounds of suspicion against Trim-

Passing over this error, the conduct of the resident was most firm and judicious. continued to enforce the claims of the British studied their character and habits, "for they government to the custody of Trimbuckjee, and the fears of the peishwa at length yielded what the sense of justice would never have ex-The prisoner was removed torted from him. from Wassuntghur to Poona, and there deli-vered over to a detachment of British troops; from thence he was conducted to Bombay, with Bhugwunt Row and Bundojee, who were to be given up to the Guicowar government. On his arrival, Trimbuckjee was placed in them was a duty imperative upon the British strict confinement in the fort of Tannah.

Mention has been incidentally made of persons called Pindarries, occasionally found in the service of belligerent chiefs; and, as they place. are now about to occupy a more important place in the field of Indian politics than has given rise to much and fruitless discussion. hitherto been assigned to them, it becomes By some it has been traced to an ancient necessary to make some reference to their Hindee word, meaning 'plunder;' and if this necessary to make some reference to their character and origin. In every country, at be not a just derivation, it is at least a very whatever point of civilization it may have appropriate one. The first mention of these arrived, some are found who, impelled either persons in history has been sometimes said to by want or depravity, seek a subsistence from occur in the latter part of the seventeenth sources less painful and less honourable than In every country, at some period of its history, a vast number of persons have relates merely to a name, as it cannot be supported themselves by open plunder-have followed no other occupation, and have not boundaries a very plentiful supply of robbers, even pretended to follow any other. The time during which this state of things prevails may be longer or shorter, and its duration will be but, in a certain stage of society, it will as in-plishing their purposes, and though not only evitably occur as storms or earthquakes under high feeling, but even sound policy, would have certain conditions of the natural elements. great deal of wonder has been spent upon the Pindarries, they were, in various instances, described.

their numbers, a very contemptible set of which his supplies were to be drawn. undignified by any of those nobler characte-safely believed that the measure of Pindarrie

The conditions attempted to be forced on ristics of our nature, which have sometimes shed a deceptive glory over actions of great atrocity, and averted from their perpetrators the penalty of unmitigated disgust. redeeming virtue marked the character of the Pindarrie. Even animal courage, often the sole ennobling quality of his profession, he possessed not. The Pindarrie marched, or rather darted, upon his victims with a rapidity certainly never equalled by any regular force; but, unfortunately for the romantic colouring of his character, he manifested equal or even greater alacrity in flight. No troops in the history of the world ever displayed such proficiency in the art of running away; and to this, their strong point, they invariably resorted if attacked. "They they invariably resorted if attacked. "They avoid fighting," said one who had carefully come to plunder, not to fight." Other combatants seek to overcome their adversary; the Pindarries were only anxious to get out of his way. Call these persons freebooters, banditti, or by any name to which the ear is accustomed, and the mystery which has been attached to them vanishes. They were mean and cowardly thieves, engendered by a vicious and diseased state of society. To repress government, and it was no less so to take effectual measures to guard against a new race of robbers being called forth in their

The etymology of the term Pindarrie has century; at others, in the beginning of the eighteenth; a point of little moment, since it doubted that India contained within its ample even at periods much earlier than either of the dates which have been mentioned.

The native princes of India have never been determined by a great variety of circumstances; | very scrupulous as to the means of accom-A led to the rejection of the services of the character and conduct of the Pindarries: there retained by what were regarded as regular seems, however, little ground for any very governments. The services which they rencopious display of such a feeling, and a large dered were all of one description—they portion of it is probably to be ascribed to the consisted in crippling the enemy of their unusual name by which these adventurers are employers by plundering his baggage or his convoys-driving off cattle from the vicinity They were in truth, except on account of of his camp, and desolating the country from Active and enterprising almost terms upon which their assistance was afforded beyond belief, and wicked to the full measure are not so easily ascertainable. It is probable which the most ardent lover of horror can that they varied; perhaps they were rarely desire, their adventures and their crimes were fixed with much precision, and it may be remuneration was decided by the degree of at the distance of twenty-five years, Sir John ability to acquire and to retain. In some Malcolm represents Bhopal as not then recases a trifling sum night be allowed by the covered from the effects of their visitation. government under which they served for each Their zeal and efficiency, however, met with a horseman employed, but plunder invariably most ungrateful return. The rajah of Nag-formed the chief, if not the sole, source of pore, though glad of an opportunity of their reward. But whatever the engagements inflicting a vital injury upon an enemy, was between the Pindarries and the governments too conscientious to allow such unprincipled by whom they were retained, it is stated, on persons as the Pindarries to retain the fruits competent authority, that they were observed of their labours. with just such a measure of good faith as faithful instruments of his will to his capital, might have been expected. It was not un- he very unceremoniously surrounded their common, according to Captain Sydenham, for camp, plundered them of all the movables of the Pindarries to rob the government which which they had plundered the unhappy inhathey served; "and, on the other hand," he bitants of Bhopal, and seized Burrun, one adds, "the government soldom loses an oppor- of their chiefs: Hera, the other commander, tunity of extorting from them money under fled. false pretences." This is precisely the state of things which those acquainted with the character of the Pindarries and their masters would have anticipated.

favour and encouragement from Holkar and and joined Dowlut Row Scindia, who was then chiefs a golden flag. This gave the Pindarries paign which followed he gained an immense a sort of rank among the Mahrattas, but booty, and his experience at Nagpore warned effected no change in their habits or character. him to take care of it. To secure this end, a Gurdee Khan, the fortunate receiver of this retreat appeared to him advisable: he, acdistinction, remained during his life attached cordingly, abandoned Scindia's army in the to the armies of his patron: and notwith-Deccan, and went to central India, to offer standing the command subsequently passed his services to Jeswunt Row Holkar. This from his family, that body of Pindarries prince showed no reluctance to receive and continued faithful to Holkar. But, though employ the fugitive: but the mind of the entertained and encouraged, they were re- latter was still uneasy on account of his muchgarded with contempt. Community of feeling valued wealth; and not feeling it quite safe and of purpose did not secure the respect of in the custody of Jeswunt Row, he at once the Mahrattas for those who were but one withdrew his followers and himself, and grade below themselves in the moral scale. opened a double negotiation with his former The Pindarries always encamped apart from master Scindia, and with Ameer Khan, whose the rest of the army, and their chiefs were character was about on a level with his own never allowed to sit in the presence of the in point of respectability, while his place in

A younger brother of Gurdee Khan, named negotiations succeeded. Ameer Khan offered him an asylum, and when that adventurer ment of Bhopal to invade and lay waste the of rank. territories of Nagpore, with which state it forbearance which has been ascribed to fear. make further additions to his territory. Pindarrie leaders proceeded to Nagpore where ment of a regular state, and the jealousy of they were graciously received. Their visit Scindia was excited. Scindia advanced from was a matter of business. Their offer, to his capital, with the full determination of accommodate the state of Bhopal by the destroying a man who was becoming far too plunder of Nagpore, having been rejected, formidable for a dependant, but he was with-they now made to Nagpore a like tender of their services for rayaging Bhopal. They Kurreem Khan, being invited to attend him, found the ruler of Nagpore nothing loath; proceeded with a degree of ostentatious and, being able and experienced workmen, splendour scarcely inferior to that of the they executed his order so effectually, that, chief to whom he professed allegiance. On

On the return of these

A noted leader among the Pindarries was Kurreem Khan. He was, at one period, an humble follower of Burrun and Hera, with a force of five or six hundred men. On the These marauders received especial marks of apprehension of Burrun, he fled from Nagpore Holkar bestowed upon one of their preparing to attack the nizam. In the camsociety was little less questionable. -prvice of Scindia. He left two sons, Hera was afterwards engaged in hostilities with and Burrun, each of whom attained as much Scindia, Kurreem Khan repaid the kindness celebrity as can be supposed to surround the by making himself master of certain districts character of a robber chieftain. Quitting the at the expense of his benefactor, and obtaining service of Scindia, these adventurous persons a confirmation of his possession of them from proceeded to Malwa, and, having encamped Sciudia. By that prince Kurreem Khan was at Berniah, with about five thousand fol-created a nawab, and his ambition was lowers, they made an overture to the govern-further gratified by a marriage with a lady

The contemporaneous absence of Scindia and The offer was declined, an act of Holkar tempted this indefatigable person to Nothing disheartened by the refusal, the now evidently contemplated the establish-

Kurreem. These were long resisted by Scin-las the betrayer of Kurreem, profiled by the dia; but a door was at last opened for the captivity of the latter so far as to gain the exercise of his elemency, by an appeal to one rank of chief leader among the Pindarries, of the passions most predominant in the heart The value of this distinction may be differently of an Eastern potentate. Six lacs of rupees estimated by different minds; but whatever to the sovereign was regarded as a tempting it might be, Cheetoo sought and obtained it. offer, and the proposed distribution of one lac He fixed his abode amid the hills and forests more among the officers of the court, by whom situated between the north bank of the Nerthe treaty was negotiated, had a vast effect in budda and the Vindhya mountains. His the treaty was negotiated, had a vast effect in budda and the Vindnya mountains. His facilitating their perception, both of the advantages of the plan to the interests of their master, and of the claims of Kurreem to the During the latter part of his career he seldom indulgence which he sought. Security was given for the payment of these sums, and the prisoner was released. His former keepers patrolled the country in every direction. He were, however, not quite satisfied of the safety acknowledge a sort of allegiance to Scindia; of the experiment, and endeavours were made the Vindnya mountains. His cantonments were near the vindaya mountains. His cantonments were near the village of Nimar, and he resided either there or at Sattrass. During the latter part of his career he seldom made long excursions, but his troops were given for the payment of these sums, and the vindaya mountains. His cantonments were near the village of Nimar, and he resided either there or at Sattrass. During the latter part of his career he seldom made long excursions, but his troops were dispersed on duty at various points, and prisoner was released. His former keepers patrolled the country in every direction. He were, however, not quite satisfied of the safety acknowledge a sort of allegiance to Scindia; but this did not restrain his followers from the control of the country in every direction. to conciliate him by the accumulation of occasional inroads upon the territories of that presents and marks of honour. But Kurreem prince, as evidences of their independence and had bitter experience of the value of such impartiality. blandishments. He determined, therefore, to trust to his own resources, and assembling ostensible purpose of putting the marauders his Pindarries from every quarter, he was soon down, but nothing was effected. A treaty in possession of territories more extensive than was at length entered into, by which the he had enjoyed before his misfortune.

another Pindarrie chief, named Cheetoo, who, bestowing on them certain lands. it is said, had in early life been much indebted were, however, some difficulties in the way to him. This man was considered one of the of carrying this treaty into effect. Some of ablest of the Pindarrie leaders, and his junction the lands conveyed belonged not to Scindia, with Kurreem was therefore regarded with but to other states, and though he had not the apprehension. duration. The excesses which revenge led Kurreem to perpetrate in the territories of peishwa, it was not perfectly convenient to Scindia caused that prince bitterly to repent assume the power of making such donations. the bargain which his avarice had led him to conclude; and he resolved to make every effort to annihilate the power of Kurreem. In this Sunnuds were granted to different chiefs, and labour he found a willing ally in the faithful Cheetoo received five districts. Here again Cheetoo, whose obligations to Kurreem offered was a foundation laid for the conversion of a no obstacle to his engaging in the destruction robber confederacy into a regular state. I his friend and patron. The result was, that Such were the characters of some himself obliged to seek safety in flight. , and this worthy person, under pre- bours, the unsettled and predatory habits of tence of recommending him to the good graces their followers rendered it impossible for them of Toolsee Bhye, the profligate favourite of to be recognized by any European govern-Jeswunt Row Holkar, transferred him to the ment which had the slightest value for its care of Ghuffoor Khan, a near relation of reputation. Ameer Khan, and his representative and creature at the court of Holkar. By him the north of the Nerbudda, their practice was Kurreem was placed under restraint. This to cross the river as soon as it was fordable, durance lasted three years, during which his generally in November, and indiscriminately followers were actively and vigorously occuplunder friends and foes. Before the year pied. At last he effected his escape, and joined 1812, though they continually visited the his adherents at Berniah, encouraged to take company's allies, they respected the British this step, it has been said, by the overtures of dominions. Subsequently, the latter partook Scindia to forgive the past and provide for of their visitations, and shared in all the the future. A man rarely needs much encou-horrors with which their progress was attended. ragement to escape from captivity, if he thinks the object can be effected; and Kurreem peculiar people or tribe, but of a variety—of could hardly attach much value to the pro- the refuse of all tribes, denominations, and

and prepared to act under Scindia's orders. mentioned, first as the friend, and, secondly, the common impulse of necessity.

Movements were sometimes made, with the Pindarries agreed to exempt the territories of Under these circumstances he was joined by Scindia from plunder, on condition of his It was, however, of brief smallest objection to bestowing on the Pin-

Such were the characters of some of the 's camp was attacked and dispersed, leaders of the Pindarrie hordes; and though it would be unjust to say that they were now sought the protection of Ameer much worse than those of most of their neigh-

The settlements of these persons being to

The Pindarries were not composed of any mises of Scindia. He did, however, escape, creeds. The ancestors of their chiefs are regarded as of Patan extraction; their followers d prepared to act under Scindia's orders. [garded as of Fatan extraction; their followers Cheetoo, who has already been honourably were a motley multitude, brought together by association in which it was found. This lasted with their usual celerity; but it happened until the produce of the expedition was ex- that the ground was favourable for pursuit, hausted, and it became necessary to seek in which was kept up by various parties for fresh outrages renewed means of gratification. several miles. Thus passed the life of the Pindarrie robber, the enemy were estimated at between seven in an alternation of brutal exertion and sensual and eight hundred, and many who escaped abandonment.

an end to the ravages of these marauders; but a valuable officer of the regiment engaged in it was deemed fitting to refrain from any this gallant service, fell by the thrust of a offensive operations until the receipt of orders spear soon after the commencement of the from home. During the season of 1816-17, pursuit, and this was the only casualty which however, the ravages of the Pindaries are the Roglich had to learner. however, the ravages of the Pindarries ex- the English had to lament. tended over a wider expanse of territory than besides was either killed or wounded. had ever before been attempted. But these distance traversed by Major Lushington and enlarged operations were not carried on his regiment, including the march, the pursuit, without considerable checks. On the 25th of and the return to Cowah, was about seventy December, 1816, Major Lushington, who was miles, and this was performed in seventeen at Preputwarree, with the 4th Madras native hours, the whole affair being over by six cavalry, received intelligence that a party of o'clock on the evening of the day on which these plunderers had entered the peishwa's the troops had taken their departure from territories by the Wauklee pass, and were Preputwarree. engaged in plundering to the south-east of Poona. The news arrived at ten o'clock at proceeded to ravage Ganjam, was dispersed night, and three hours afterwards, the regiment, with two galloper guns, moved in The fugitives subsequently suffered severely the direction in which the plunderers were from falling in with a party of British troops reputed to be employed. The carriages of under Captain J. Caulfield, by whom about both guns broke down, and they were conse- four hundred were killed; the English losing quently left on the road, the regiment pursuing its way to Sogaum, where they arrived at seven o'clock on the morning of the 26th, having marched a distance of twenty-two miles. Here they learned that a large body of Pindarries had, on the preceding day, attacked the place, but, being beaten off, had moved in an easterly direction. Leaving at Sogaum the sick, recruits, heavy baggage, and camp-followers, Major Lushington, with three hundred and fifty men, again marched, after a pause of only half an hour, and at noon, having performed a further distance of twenty miles, arrived at Kame. At this place he found that the Pindarries had halted on the previous night: they had departed at day--break; had occupied the morning in firing and plundering several villages in the neighbourhood, and it was believed that they were then at no great distance. The short space of three-quarters of an hour was allotted for refreshment, on the expiration of which the indefatigable band resumed its march in the direction which it was understood the Pindarries had taken. At Pepree, seven miles from Kame, Major Lushington learned with much satisfaction, that his labours and those of his men were likely to be soon rewarded by a sight of the enemy; it being stated that their whole body were halted at Cowah, about three miles further, for the purpose of taking a meal. He immediately pushed forward at a brisk pace, and on ascending a rising ground to make common cause with the Pindarries, beheld those of whom he was in search busily and to be inclined to offer obstructions to any

the men gave themselves up to amusement, of occupied in cooking and eating. The surprise which intexication constituted a considerable was complete, and the success proportionate. The remainder was worthy of the The Pindarries were mounted and in flight The killed and wounded of without personal injury were incapacitated The marquis of Hastings, at an early period from further pursuing their avocation by the of his government, manifested a desire to put loss of their horses. Captain Thomas Darke, Not a man

About the same time a party which had with heavy loss by Lieutenant Borthwick. only one man. The discomfiture would have been more complete had not the progress of the British party been impeded by two deep nullahs, and the pursuit abruptly terminated by the arrival of night. Another large body of Pindarries was surprised about thirty miles west of Bidur, by a light force detached from Hyderabad under Major M'Dowall, the approach of which was so sudden that the infantry were close upon the tents of the chiefs before they were discovered, and scarcely a man of the party was mounted when the first volley was fired. The surprised party of course fled, and the greater part of their horses and booty was abandoned.

At the close of the year 1816, it was the unanimous opinion of the governor-general and members of council that the adoption of vigorous measures for the early suppression of the Pindarries had become an indispensable obligation of public duty. But it was a question whether the attempt should be made during the current season or suspended till the ensuing year, the interval being devoted to making such arrangements as might enable the government to act with greater effect. preparations which were to be made during the period of postponement it was necessary to conduct with as much privacy as possible, in order to avoid giving alarm to those against whom they were directed, or to other powers, who, from various motives, might be expected measures designed for their suppression. | neither suspicion nor increased watchfulness, ing the Pindarries, in case of actual invasion was too late; Trimbuckjee Dainglia was be-of the British territories. "Such an inva- youd the reach of his pursuers. sion," it was observed, "obviously constitutes ritories "might be commenced by any body his inture proceedings. of marauders, and where the lives and properprotection."

Before the preparations were complete, the and natives were suffered to pass the gate determination of the government was fortified without examination at hours when peculiar by the receipt of a despatch from the Secret circumspection was called for. As soon as the Committee of the Court of Directors, conveying a qualified approval of such measures as were secured, with a view to prevent any permight be necessary for pursuing and chastis- son quitting the island: but the precaution

The escape of the miscreant was believed a case in which we have a right to call for the to have been contrived and carried into effect co-operation of our allies." This admission with the full concurrence of the peishwa, but was something gained, for previously the no substantial proof of this existed. That home authorities had "discouraged plans of the prince, after the escape of his unworthy general confederacy and offensive operations favourite, concealed and protected him, was against the Pindarries, with a view to their utter also a belief sanctioned by the strongest preextinction, in anticipation of an apprehended sumption, although the sovereign gave the danger;" although it was now thought fit to most solemn assurances to the contrary. In explain these intimations, as not intended to the absence of proof, there was no course for restrain the governor-general in the exercise the British government to pursue, but to of his judgment and discretion, upon any oc- yield apparent credence to the protestations casion where actual war upon the British ter- of the peishwa, and keep a vigilant eye on

There was, indeed, abundant reason to be ties of British subjects might call for efficient convinced that the peishwa was exercising, and had long been employing, all his influence to But the interval devoted to preparation for suppressing the ruffian force which had so long, with comparative impunity, desolated and disgraced India, was not in other respects a by his notivity in diffusing them. From period of repose. Among other sources of Eardia, the government were apprized by the conduct of Capitain Capitain for the conduct of Capitain Capitain for the conduct of Capitain Capitain and the conduct of Capitain Capitain for the conduct of Capitain Capitain and the conduct of Capitain Capitain Capitain and the conduct of Capitain Capitain Capitain and the conduct of Capitain Capit period of repose. Among once some proceedings of disquiet was that arising from the conduct of Captain Carnac of some proceedings on the some turbulent chiefs in the north, who, have part of the peighten and his agents, some ing possession of the fortresses of Hatinass indicative of that prince's instructive and and Moorsaum, defied the British anthonity has a Similar in traction was comparty, was not inequitable nor unnecessarily British force was about two thousand eight harsh as concerned the vanquished.

The poishwa, however, was dissatisfied, and of not less than twenty-five thousand men. though unreasonably, not unnaturally. It was impossible that he could forbear contrasting sion of Poona; but this could not be effected his present humiliated condition with his for- by the small force in the neighbourhood. mer lofty pretensions, as the head of a people the indication of approaching hostilities, Briwho had spread the terror of their arms over a gadier-General Lionel Smith, with the force large portion of India. shown to him that he held his dominions at Mr. Elphinstone from the south bank of the the mercy of the British government—the Godavery. That officer arrived at Poons on discovery was unavoidable, but it was neces-the evening of the 13th of November. On the sarily far from pleasing. The obstinacy of 14th, arrangements were made for attacking the peishwa had accelerated a crisis which the prudence of the Company's government would have postponed indefinitely; and notwithstanding they were blameless, he was indignant.

A few months only clapsed before it became evident that the peishwa was again preparing for some hostile proceedings. Levies of troops took place unremittingly throughout his dominions, and by the 1st of October (the treaty having been concluded on the 13th of June previously), there was not a single horseman in the country out of employ. The quality neither of the horses nor men was regarded; number seemed the only thing kept in view. The ostensible motive for these preparations was, a desire to comply with the wish of the British government for co-operation against This disguise was, however, the Pindarries. worn too loosely to deceive. In an interview with the British resident, in which the intended movements of the armies against the : darries were explained, the peishwa did think it necessary even to affect any inin the suppression of the marauders; conversation being entirely confined to inplaints of his own degradation. From ous circumstances it was inferred that he about to aim a blow at the British power, and though an appearance of confidence was maintained on both sides, it was formal and

Among other indications of the spirit by which the government of the peishwa was actuated, were numerous attempts to corrupt the native troops in the British service. was in consequence deemed necessary to remove them from the town to a new position. The peishwa then, as if in defiance, pushed forward his own troops, and it was announced that he intended to form a camp between the old cantonments of the British army and the At last, on the 5th November, hostilities actually commenced, by the peishwa's troops moving so as to cut off the residency from the British camp. The residency was forthwith plundered and burned, but by the prompt advance of Lieutenant-Colonel Burr, the enemy, after a severe action, was repulsed, The resident was on the field and retired. throughout the action, animating the zeal of from Cawnpore, and having joined the central the troops, and aiding the commanding officer division of the Bengal army at Secundra, by the suggestions which his local knowledge crossed the Jumna on the 26th, and reached enabled him to offer. The strength of the his destined position, on the Scind, on the hundred; the peishwa's army was composed

It now became necessary to obtain posses-It had now been under his command, had been summoned by the enemy, who were encamped on the opposite side of the river; but the design was abandoned, in consequence of the occurrence of unexpected difficulties. On the 16th, all the disposable corps, after providing for the camp and for the position of Kirting, were formed in divisions of attack. The passage of one of the divisions over the ford was obstinately resisted by the peishwa's troops, but the ill success of this resistance seems to have perfected the panic to which the previous defeat received from Colonel Burr had given rise. At two o'clock on the morning of the 17th the peishwa fled, and the enemy having thus disappeared, the British force recrossed the river to take the most favourable ground for bombarding the city; but this dreadful measure was happily unnecessary, the defence of the place having been left to a few hundred Arabs, who were prevailed upon to withdraw.

The state of affairs at Poona had rendered it necessary to combine with the measures in preparation for the suppression of the Pindarries, such other movements as might be requisite to counteract the treacherous hostility of the peishwa. The arrangements of the governor-general were accordingly framed with reference to both these objects, and they were conceived upon a large scale. The force on which he relied was partly to be furnished from the army in the Deccan, and partly from that of Bengal. Sir Thomas Hislop, commander-in-chief of the army of Madras, was intrusted with the command of the military force, as well as with a controlling authority over all political affairs in the Deccan. illness by which he was attacked, and which detained him for some time at Hyderabad, together with the unusual violence of the. monsoon, delayed the advance of this portion of the British force, and consequently of that proceeding from Bengal, it being inexpedient to place the latter in circumstances which would deprive it of those advantages of combined operation and support, which it had been a chief object of the governor-general to secure. The Bengal army consisted of three principal divisions and On the 16th of October, 1817, a reserve. the governor-general commenced his march 6th November. The left division had pre-lat Poons, and at Nagpore, as at none of those viously assembled in Bundlecund, and was places could tranquillity be relied upon. prepared to advance towards Saugor, with a view to co-operate with the right of Sir Thomas Hislop's army against the Pindarrie The right division assembled at the same period, ready to advance to Dholpore, on the Chumbul, as soon as circumstances should render it necessary; while the reserve, commanded by Sir David Ochterlony, was assembled near Rewaree. This part of the British force was destined to cover Delhi, to support our negotiations with the Rajpoot states (for in the East a negotiator never succeeds so well as when he has an army at his back), to perform the same office with regard to Ameer Khan, and eventually to attack the latter, or interpose between him and Holkar, if they should manifest any perverse or hostile his territories rendered it necessary to inform feeling.

Besides these principal divisions of the Bengal force destined for active operations, two detachments were formed, designed principally for purposes of defence, but capable of acting offensively if necessary. One of these, under Brigadier-General Toone, was posted near Ooutaree, on the frontier of Behar. The other, under Brigadier-General Hardyman, was formed at Mirzapore, and thence advanced to Rewah, for the purpose of securing the passes in that country, and the adjacent districts, in order to defeat any attempt of the Pindarries to penetrate into the British territories in that direction, while the principal part of the force was in advance. A force was also stationed in Cuttack, sufficient to guard that frontier from the entrance of the Pindarries through Nagpore.
The troops from the Deccan were distributed in five chief divisions and a reserve. The first was commanded by Sir Thomas Hislop in person, and this was to have crossed the Nerbudda in the direction of Hindia, in conjunction with the third division under Sir John Malcolm. But this arrangement was frustrated by the detention of Sir Thomas Hislop at Hyderabad. The division of Sir John Malcolm consequently crossed alone, about the middle of November, and that of Sir Thomas Hislop at a later date. The fifth division, under Lieutenant-Colonel J. W. Adams, was to cross the river at Hoosingabad, at the same time with the other divisions destined to act in advance. Two divisions, assigned to it in the neighbourhood of Akolee, line from attack, to support, if required, corps of reserve was assembled on the frontier of the ceded districts, and was subsequently advanced to a position on the Krishna, from which point it could support the troops either at Hyderabad or at Poona: a separate detachment occupied the southern country recently ceded by the peishwa. The Guzerat field force, under Sir William Keir, was also assembled in advance of Baroda, ready to move into Malwa.

The advance of the troops from the Deccan of course excited some attention, but in a degree quite disproportioned to the importance of the movement. Scindia was especially interested in the matter, and the passage of a division of the army of the Deccan through him of the purpose of its being put in motion. The requisite communication was made by the resident, Captain Close, and was met, as everything is met at a native durbar, by an attempt to gain time. This being resisted, a tardy, and without doubt a reluctant, assent was given to the passage of the troops.

This, however, was not sufficient. It was necessary to obtain either Scindia's active cooperation against the Pindarries, or at least his neutrality, and the exertions of the resident were directed accordingly. While the negotiations were pending, an extraordinary circumstance occurred, illustrative of the feeling entertained by Scindia. This was the arrest of two messengers conveying letters from Scindia's court to Catmandoo. As there was no customary intercourse between the two courts, its occurrence could not fail to excite strong suspicion. A part of the letters were open and part sealed. The former were read, and though the language was obscure, they evidently related to some project for a combination against the British government. The sealed letters were delivered to Scindia by the resident in the state in which they were found. Scindia made no attempt to explain his conduct, but the discovery was not without effect upon the progress of the negotiation.

A treaty, comprising twelve articles, was forthwith concluded with Scindia; by the first of which, the contracting parties engaged to employ the forces of their respective governments, and of their allies and dependents, in prosecuting operations against the Pindarries the second and fourth, still remain to be and other hordes of associated freebooters, to accounted for. Of these, the former, under expel them from their haunts, and to adopt Brigadier-General Doveton, had a position the most effectual measures to disperse and prevent them from re-assembling. The forces on the Nizam's frontier, to protect that of the two governments and their allies were immediately to attack the robbers and their the troops in advance, and to sustain the associates, according to a concerted plan of British interests at Nagpore; the latter, under operations, and not to desist until the objects Brigadier-General Lionel Smith, was intended of their engagement were entirely accomto perform the like service with regard to the plished; and Scindia, on his part, promised peishwa's territory, and at the same time to his utmost efforts to seize the persons of the keep Holkar in check. Considerable bodies Pindarrie leaders and their families, and to of troops were also maintained at Hyderabad, deliver them up to the British government.

do so. On the contrary, he promised to laure articles, as well as the succeeding one, were the most positive orders to all his officers, directed to the removal of a difficulty which civil and inilitary, enforced by the severest the marquis of Hastings had foreseen, and penalties, to employ their utmost efforts to was anxious to guard against. "It was ma-expel or destroy any body of plunderers who nifest," he observer, in one of his despatches, might attempt to take refuge in his territories; "that no active or useful aid was to be exand all officers disregarding these orders were poeted from Scindia's troops, if left to the dito be dealt with as rebels to the maharajah, [rection of his own officers.] and enemies to the British government.

The fourth article commenced by formally troops of Sciudia, cavalry, infantry, and artifannouncing, that the Maharajah Dowlut Row lery, should during the war occupy such posi-Sciudia was the undisputed master of his own tions as might be assigned by the British warm affection. The article proceeds to given, namely, that unconnected movements reclare, that for the more effectual accomplishment of the objects of the treaty, the of the two states, and to give undue advantage divisions of the maharajah's troops (amounting to the enemy. For the due execution of the to five thousand horse), employed in active operations against the Pindarries or other ment was to be at liberty to station an officer freedoctors cloudly set in consecutivity the in each division of the melangible server. freebooters, should act in concert with the in each division of the maharajah's army. British troops, and in conformity to the plan The seventh article assumes that the force that might be counselled by the officer com- to be put in motion by the British governmanding the British divisions with which they ment, combined with that actually in the might be appointed to act; that a British service of Scindia, would be fully sufficient to officer should be stationed with each division chastise the Pindarries, and effect the objects of the maharajah's troops, to be the channel of of the treaty; and, in consequence, proceeds communication between them and the British to provide that, to prevent the possibility of commanding officer: and in order further to collusion between the mahamjah's officers and forward the purposes of their conjoint operations, the inahamjah engaged that all his not be increased during the war without the officers, civil and military, should afford every approval of the British government. His degree of support and assistance in their officers were also prohibited from admitting power to the British, in procuring supplies or otherwise to the British troops operating in bouring or protecting, any of the Pindarries, his territories; and all who should neglect or other freebooters. This article, like two this duty were subject to the same appalling former ones, concludes by denouncing those denunciation with which the third article who may break it, as rebels to Scindia and alleved.

The fifth article commenced with a very

The record article referred to the settles ments which the Pindarries had gained in the state of complete equipment, both men and territories of Scindia, and in those of other states. With regard to the former, the lands were to be immediately secured by the malaster. With regard to the former, the lands were to be immediately secured by the malaster, rajah, who engaged never again to admit the plunderers to possession. The other lands provided they exerted themselves to the required extent in expelling the Pindarries, and entered into similar engagements never to readmit them, or to become concerned with them in any way whatever. In default of these conditions being complied with, the lands were to be delivered to Scindia, and held by him on the stipulated terms.

The third article extended and completed the first, and the former part of the recond. By it Scindia engaged never to admit the Pindarries, or any other predatory bodies, into his territories, to give them the smallest countenance or support, or to permit his officers to do so. On the contrary, he promised to but removed of a difficulty which the sure most most weither orders to all his officers.

By the sixth article it was agreed that the troops and resources. This sounding overture government, and rhould not change them was precursory to a stipulation for placing the without the express concurrence of that government, and resources, of which he was the unvernment. The necessity of giving a reason ted master, at the disposal of the British for this stipulation, rather than for any other in the treaty, is not apparent; but one is warm affection. The article proceeds to given, namely, that unconnected movements enemies of the British government.

The eighth article was not an unimportant important stipulation—that the divisions of one. It declares that, with a view to the more Scindia's army appointed to act with the effectual prosecution of the joint operations of charged with the care and defence of them to guarantee its payment in perpetuity; ing depôts in them. The flag of Scindin was, interfere, in any shape, in the affairs of those however, to continue to fly at Asseergurh, and states, without the concurrence of the British he was at liberty to station a killadar, with a government. personal guard of fifty men, there; but the actual command of the place, as well as of not very improbable, the occurrence of which Hindia, and the disposal of the warlike stores is deprecated with a degree of solemnity which India, and the disposal of the warlike stores in both, were to be exclusively in the British. Some minor regulations followed with respect article is too edifying to be abstracted or to stores and the movements of the garrisons; abridged; it must be given at length, and in and it was stipulated that the territories dependent on the forts should continue to be managed by the officers of the maharajah, who were to receive every support from the British government and its officers. The whole of the compelled to wage war with any government and its officers. The whole of the contracting parties or siding the contra resources, or such part as might be necessary, either of the contracting parties, or aiding or were to be appropriated to the payment of the protecting the Pindarries, or other freebooters, troops, as stipulated in the fifth article; and the British government, having at heart the account to be rendered at the conclusion of the welfare of Dowlut Row Scindia, will, in the protection of the British government, and to when it is remembered that one of the con-be permitted to depart with their property, if tracting parties was Dowlut Row Scindia. they should think proper.

The ninth article provided for an object dictated by the British government, and which the marquis of Hastings deemed neither Scindia nor his servants were account-cessary for the attainment of the purposes able for this effusion of virtuous feeling; but which he had in view. By a former treaty to whomseever it is to be attributed, it is much the British government was restrained from unhappily out of place with reference to the

the two governments, and to the facility and | Malwa or Guzerat, clearly and indisputably security of the communication of the British dependent on or tributary to the maharaiah. troops with their supplies, the maharajah, re- whose authority over those states or chiefs was posing entire confidence in the friendship and to continue on the same footing as before. The good faith of the British government (which British government bound itself, in the event was assuredly far more than the British go- of concluding any engagements with the states vernment could repose in his), agrees that of Oudeypore, Joudpore, Kotah, Bhoondee, or British garrisons should be admitted into the any others on the left bank of the Chumbul, to forts of Hindia and Asseergurh, and should be secure to Scindia his ascertained tribute, and during the war, with the liberty of establish-|Scindia engaging on no account or pretence to

The tenth article referred to a contingency war. At the same period the forts were to be event of success, and of his highness's zealous restored in the condition in which they had performance of his engagements, make the been received-all private property was to be most liberal arrangements for the consolidation respected, and the inhabitants of the de- and increase of his territories." This display pendent towns and villages were to enjoy the of piety and moderation is very remarkable. The terms of the treaty were, without doubt, company. Seeing that he had no better claims to indulgence than those whom the English the victors. sought to extirpate, Ameer Khan had certainly reason to felicitate himself upon his The treaty with Ameer Khan was good luck. negotiated by Mr. Metcalfe.

While new engagements of amity were in course of formation, the relations of peace previously subsisting between the British government and one of its native allies were about to receive a shock. The rajab of Berar, Rughoojee Bhonslah, had invariably resisted the attempts that had been made by the British lay quite the other way; for his dominions government to establish with that state a sub- had suffered most severely from the devastasidiary alliance. On his death his only son, Pursajee Bhonslah, succeeded to the throne; an express article of the subsidiary treaty, the but he being of weak mind, a cousin, known British government was required to defend as Appa Sahib, exercised the functions of the state of Nagpore against their incursions. sovereignty under the title of regent. secure the assistance of the British government in maintaining him in the power which he had thus obtained, and in promoting his ultimate advance to the higher rank and authority to which he aspired, the regent consented to form the long-denied engagement. Early in the year 1817 the imbecile occupant of the throne died, and Appa Sahib attained the final object of his ambitious hones. Although a subsidiary treaty had been con-brought into a condition to work properly. There had been considerable irregularity as to been sovered. organization and maintenance of the stipucontingent, by which the British go-ent had been subjected to expense it was not obliged to bear. Discussion arose, but native evasion continued a while to postpone the fulfilment of engements which could not be denied. Proestination is of too common occurrence in . riental courts to excite much surprise, and he disposition of Appa Sahib was regarded as not unfriendly to the English. Circumstances, however, soon occurred, and especially a change with regard to his ministers, which convinced the British authorities that his professions of friendship were hollow and insincere. At this period, indeed; the seeds of hatred to British influence were scattered throughout India with an unsparing hand, and the peishwa was the prime instigator and fomenter of the hostile feeling. Habits of ancient standing gave him considerable influence with the native princes. The Mahratta states might also be supposed to feel their pride in some degree wounded by the humiliation of their chief, and some suspicion may be supposed to have existed as to the probable aim of the British government, and the extent to which it proposed to carry its acquisitions. There might be an apprehension that England was looking to the entire dominion of India; and army, surrendering his guns, relinquishing his wished by the people, if they understood their Pindarrie habits, dissolving his connection own welfare, the prospect of it could, under no with those plunderers, and keeping better circumstances, be very acceptable to those whose thrones were to fall before the march of

It is certain that the plans of the governorgeneral for the extirpation of the Pindarries were regarded with great suspicion. must, in most instances, have arisen from the apprehension of ulterior measures; for, with the exception of Scindia and Holkar, who entertained bodies of the Pindarries in a sort of feudal dependence, no prince would appear to have had any interest in supporting them. The interest of the rajah of Nagpore, indeed, tions of these marauding adventurers; and by

The peculiar nature of a subsidiary alliance renders imperative the greatest circumspection in selecting the representatives of the British government at the courts of princes thus connected with it. The resident at Nagpore, at this time, was fortunately a gentleman whose sagacity and prudence were not to be overcome even by Mahratta dissimulation. Jenkins distinctly perceived the tendency which events were taking, and if the British connection could have been preserved by the arrangements had not been judgment, firmness, and caution, combined with suavity, that connection would not have

The resident was apprized that the rajah was engaged in intrigues with the peishwa. Conferences were held with an agent of that sovereign, who received letters almost daily from Poons, which he immediately carried to the rajah. Such proceedings, especially at such a period, were calculated to excite suspicion and alarm. Mr. Jenkins accordingly remonstrated against them, reminding rajah that all communications similar to those with the peishwa ought, in conformity with the treaty, to be immediately communicated to the British government, and that the observance of this provision, at all times incumbent, was of peculiar importance at a time when it was notorious that measures of hostility were in progress at the court of Poona. The reply of the rajah was unsatisfactory. He admitted that he had received overtures from Poona, but observed, that it did not consist with his dignity to repeat them; and this, with general expressions of unceasing attachment to his English connection, constituted his answer. The objectionable communications continued, and the renewed representations of the resident on the subject produced no change of conduct.

The period was evidently approaching when the rajah was to throw off the mask of friendship: in anticipation of it, Mr. Jenkins apprized the military authorities of the prothough this consummation would be devoutly spect of their being speedily called into action, he still retained at his court the brother of scene of action. that functionary, and through him, as well as The Pindarries were also made useful in supported to theirty-five guns. another way, by assigning the fact of their ravages as an excuse for keeping up an extra- the resident marched from their cantonments, ordinary number of troops.

and urged the march of troops towards Nag- to give way to the combat of more deadly pore, to uphold the British interests. The weapons. The conference was dissolved rajah had dismissed the peishwa's vakeel, but abruptly, and Mr. Jenkins repaired to the

Reinforcements had been sent for, but they other channels, the intercourse with Poona had not arrived; the duty of repelling the continued to be carried on. The assemblage attack consequently devolved upon a very of troops at Poona was accompanied by a small body of troops. The whole British force simultaneous collection of force at Nagpore. at Nagpore consisted of a brigade of two bat-The completion of the contingent was delayed, talions of Madras native infantry, the first of and when troops were assigned for the purpose, they consisted mostly of new levies, both considerably reduced by sickness; the evidencing that the rajah had no mind to part resident's escort of two companies of native with his good troops. In addition to their infantry, three troops of the 6th regiment of being raw and undisciplined, the fidelity of Bengal native cavalry, and four six-pounders, the recruits to the British cause was more than | manned by Europeans of the Madras artillery. suspected. The levies extended beyond Nag- Lieutenant-Caland Hopetoun Scott was the pore, and were conducted with great secrecy. senior officer, and with this force, which did This infatuated prince even entered into negonate comprise further hundred men fit for tiations with the Pindarries, who were invited duty, had to resist an army of about eight to bring down a force to attack the British, thousand infanty and twelve thousand cavalry,

When these troops had, at the request of they took post on the hill of Sectabuldee, In the midst of these warning circumstances overlooking the residency and the city; at a khelaut arrived from the peishwa, and the the same time taking possession of another raigh sent to inform the resident of his inten- hill, about three handred yards distant, the for despondency, Captain Fitzgerald, commanding a detachment of Bengal cavalry, reinforced by a native officer and about twenty-five troopers of the Madras body-guard, charged an immense body of the enemy's best horse, and having taken their guns and turned them against their late possessors, stood master of the plain, which was covered in every direction by the flying foe. Accident aided the advantage which daring courage had secured. While preparations were making for an attack upon the Arabs, who had obtained possession of the smaller hill, an explosion was observed to take place in the midst of them. No sooner was this perceived than the British troops made a rush towards the spot, and it was with great difficulty that Colonel Scott could prevent the hill which he occupied from being deserted, or even prevail upon the infantry to wait the arrival of the cavalry who were to support them. Their impatience for action would doubtlessly have been justified by their bearing through its dangers; but the trial was not afforded: on their approach the enemy abandoned their guns and fled. Shortly after, the Arabs beginning to collect in considerable numbers in front of the hill, a troop of cavalry, led by Cornet Smith, charged round its base, and numbers of the enemy were cut to pieces. All hope now seemed to be extinct with the defeated party; the attack slackened in every quarter, and by noon it had entirely ceased.

Courage and military conduct, like other meritorious qualities, are not always appreciated according to their deserts. The magni-

'e of the stake contended for, the proximity of the scene of action, the num-__gaged, and various other accidents, the judgment of mankind with reto them. Little is recollected of the · ic band who, on this occasion, illustrated triumphant supremacy of living burning rage over the dead force of mere numbers. Yet the prodigies of valour which they performed have rarely been equalled, either in ancient or modern times. If glory were to be proportioned to difficulty and danger, the stration was successful, and the rajah proceeded memory of such men would be imperishable. The noble spirit by which they were animated extended to the civil servants of the Com- from further anxiety on that head; but the pany. The resident, Mr. Jenkins, was present surrender of the guns, and the evacuation of throughout the action, and on the testimony the city by the rajah's troops, which were of Colonel Scott it is established that his also among the stipulated conditions, still animated conduct tended, in a very consider-remained to be carried into effect. An agent able degree, to excite the troops to their duty. His first assistant, Mr. Sotheby, exhibited the surrender of the whole of the artillery, prosame contempt of danger, and the same ceeded according to promise to General generous ardour, not merely to satisfy the Doveton's camp, and, accompanied by him, claims of duty, but to suppose them. The the same ceeded according to promise to General claims of duty, but to surpass them. latter gentleman met an honourable death on the field which he contributed to win. are the men whom the Company's service has resistance were manifested; but the approach from its commencement never ceased to produce, and their best eulogium is to be found the enemy quitted the guns and retired in the magnificent empire acquired by their Having taken possession of them, and left exertions.

Dismayed by the result of his first attempt in hostility, Appa Sahib sought refuge in negotiation, and the resident consented to a suspension of arms, on condition of the rajah's troops being withdrawn from the positions which they then held to those which they had formerly occupied. Any final arrangements he professed himself unable to make until he received further instructions from his govern-Appa Sahib, in the mean time, rement. mained still, but continued to increase his army and render his artillery more efficient; and as no instructions arrived for the guidance of the resident, that gentleman determined, on the 14th of December, to offer terms for the rajah's acceptance. Terms were accordingly tendered, and four o'clock on the morning of the 16th fixed as the latest period for accepting them. If the rajah then consented to the proposal made by the British resident, the troops of the former were to be withdrawn from their positions, and the city occupied by British troops, not later than seven o'clock on the same morning. The rajah was to repair to the British camp, and to remain there until everything was settled.

On these terms being submitted, the rajah at first required further time to consider of them, and to suggest some modification. This being refused, he sent a message on the evening of the 15th, signifying his assent to the terms; but requesting their execution to be deferred till noon on the following day. Subsequently he sent another message, intimating that he would proceed to the residency either that night or early in the morning.

The morning brought to the residency, not the rajah, but a message announcing that the Arabs would not allow him to come in. The resident, however, was prepared for this; reinforcements having a few days before arrived, and among them the division under the command of Brigadier-General Doveton. The troops were now drawn out, and three hours allowed to the rajah to come in; his refusal or neglect involving an immediate attack by the British force. This demonto the residency.

The British authorities were thus relieved from the rajah, with instructions for the The the whole force moved forward to take possession of it.

On reaching the first battery symptoms of of the British force being rather unexpected, them in charge of a division, General Doveton advanced, when a heavy fire was opened upon morning of the 30th of December the Arabs him from a large body of troops, which was marched out. followed by a general discharge from the The evacuation of the city was followed by batteries. The infantry, however, continued the conclusion of a provisional engagement, to advance until the ground admitted of for- under which the rajah returned to the palace. mation in line, when the batteries in front The conditions were, that certain territory were carried in a gallant manner at the point should be ceded to the British government in of the bayonet. cavalry, supported by a reserve, having made aid; that the civil and military affairs of the a detour, charged and carried the remainder government of Nagpore should be conducted of the batteries with equal gallantry, driving by ministers in the confidence of the British at the same time before them an immense authorities, and according to the advice of mass of the enemy's cavalry, which having the resident; that the rajah and his family routed they pursued as long as a chance re-mained of doing them any mischief. A few of the enemy's guns which had been charged by the British cavalry, but had re-opened upon that body when it advanced in pursuit of the cavalry of the enemy, were again charged and again carried; and the whole of the enemy's artillery and camp equipage fell into the hands of the victors, together with upwards of forty elephants.

The two succeeding days were fixed for the evacuation of the city by the Arabs; but difficulty attended every step taken towards carrying the terms of the surrender into execution. Though all arrears had been paid, these troops refused to depart, and an attack upon the part of the city which they occupied became unavoidable. It was conducted by General Doveton, who having occupied a commanding position within two hundred and fifty yards of one of the gates of the town, erected a battery, which was opened on the morning of the 21st of December, with the view of effecting a breach in the old palace wall. This, however, being found unattainable, the firing was directed to another point; and on the 23rd it was reported that such an effect had been produced as would render an advance practicable with little or no loss. An attack upon three different points was determined on ; and at half-past eight o'clock the troops, on a preconcerted signal, rushed to their various des-The principal attack was conducted by General Doveton, but the breach not being sufficiently wide to admit of a section entering at once, and the troops being exposed to the fire of the Arabs sheltered within the houses. of the main attack rendered it necessary, in officers should resume their original positions. These attempts, though unsuccessful, were sufficient to deter the Arabs from offering a protracted resistance, and on the following day they signified their desire to surrender on conkapore. Immediate possession being highly near enough to the enemy's centre, the guns desirable, and, if possible, without injury to being unmasked, opened brannel bells, the city, the request was granted, and on the

The horse artillery and place of the former subsidiary and contingent should reside in the palace of Nagpore, under the protection of the British troops; that the arrears of subsidy should be paid up, and the subsidy itself continue to be paid until the final transfer of the territory stipulated to be surrendered; that any forts in the territory which it might be necessary for the British to occupy should immediately be given up; that the persons alleged to have been concerned in originating the recent disturbances should be discountenanced, and, if possible, delivered up; and that the two hills of Scetabuldee, with the bazaars, and an adequate portion of land adjoining, should be ceded to the British government, which should be at liberty to crect upon them such military works as might be requisite.

Brigadier-General Hardyman, commanding one of the divisions of the Deccan army destined to act against the Pindarries, was in the Rewall territory when the outbreak at Nagpore took place. On the menacing posture of affairs there becoming known to the governor-general, General Hardyman was ordered to move down to the Norbudda, to be in readiness to act in any way that might be required by the resident at Nagpore; and in the event of his learning that hostilities had actually commenced, he was directed to push on with his reinforcement with all expedition. He accordingly pressed forward with a regiment of cavalry and his Majesty's 17th foot and four guns to Jubbulpore, from which place a small British force had previously been compelled to withdraw, in consequence of hostile demonstrations with which it was fire of the Arabs shellered within the failed. The other attacks, which were conducted by Lieutenant-Colonel Scott and Major drawn up and strongly posted to oppose his possession of the place. They were in number the possession of the place. about three thousand, of whom one thousand the opinion of General Doveton, that both were horse, stationed on their left: their right was on a rocky eminence, and they had four brass guns. General Hardyman placed his guns in the centre, with three companies of the 17th foot on each side of them and two companies in the rear. Two squadrons of ditions. Among the conditions demanded were cavalry under Major O'Brien were sent rund personal immunity, and the protection of a the left of the enemy, another squadron British officer, with a small escort, to give masked the British guns, and a squadron in them and their families safe conduct to Mul-the rear was held as a reserve. On arriving a quarter of an hour's firing the enemy's was possessed of extraordinary beauty, and a infantry evinced symptoms of indecision, on Mahratta adventurer, named Shamrow Madik, which the reserve squadron was ordered to conceived the design of advancing his own charge the battery. This service was gallantly fortunes by bringing her to the notice of Jesand successfully performed. By this time wunt Rao Holkar. It is true that the lady the enemy's infantry had descended from an was already married, but this was regarded as the enemy's infantry had descended from an eminence which they had occupied into the plain; but on an attempt being made by the advance squadron to charge them, they re-ascended the eminence, and compelled the assailants to retire under a heavy fire. One lord to a prison. The lingering tenderness of wing of the 17th foot was then brought up to storm the height, from which the enemy were bravely driven with severe loss, those who fled down the opposite side of the hill being partially intercepted by the advance squadron, which had made a detour round their right, as the British infantry ascended. In this affair the loss of the British amounted to only twelve men.

· Great difficulties attended the formation of the contingent to be produced by Scindia in aid of the common cause. These difficulties the governor-general attributed "to the dilatory habits of the durbar and the bad quality of the force, combined with a desire to turn this arrangement to the personal benefit of individuals." He might have added, that while all these causes might be in operation, there was another, far more potent and influential than any of them—the reluctance entertained by the chief for the service which his situation compelled him to undertake. It at length became necessary to reduce the numbers of outward friendliness to that of open hosto be furnished by Scindia himself to less than | tility. The influence of the name and authority

ne warned them of his inability longer to reference to the grounds of quarrel. afford them any open assistance, and pointed army of Holkar had been in a state of great out the best modes of effecting their escape disorganization, arising chiefly from their from the British forces assembled for their pay being in arrear. The reishwa promised destruction. In this occupation he was but the means of removing this difficulty, and too successful—the attempts of the various a large force was rapidly assembled near divisions of the British army to overtake the Oojein. Thither, too, Sir Thomas Hislop, retreating freebooters being thus for the most with the first division of the Deccan army, part rendered fruitless.

It is now necessary to advert to a power once of some importance, but at this period operations, principally directed against Cheetoo, sunk almost beneath contempt. This was the whose name and character have been already government of Holkar. The chief of that brought to notice. But Cheetoo had no desire name, whose hostility to the British government has already formed the subject of narra-Pindarrie precipitation. tion, subsequently to the conclusion of the mander was prepared for battle, but in runpeace became insane, and the administration ning he was no match for the agile freebooters, of the affairs of the state fell into the hands of a who consequently escaped. The active and of the affairs of the state fell into the hands of a | who consequently escaped. female named Toolsee Bhye. This personage persevering efforts of Colonel Adams and other was the pupil of a sectarian priest, whose officers met with similar success. reputed sauctity obtained him a local celebrity; and but that the priesthood of the sect attempt was made to strike a blow at the Pinto which the holy father belonged were sub- darries, they were able to defeat it by the

a very slight impediment to the plan. Toolsee Bhye was thrown in the way of Holkar, who was instantly captivated; in a few days she was conducted to his zenana, and her liege the wife, however, was exercised to obtain the release of the husband, and he was dismissed with a horse, a dress, and a small sum of money, to console him for his loss. Bhye henceforward ruled the fate of Holkar, and on that chief becoming insane, she succeed to the regency. On his death, Toolsee Blye, having no child, adopted Mulhar Rao Holkar, the son of Jeswunt Rao by another woman. An infant prince and an unpopular regent required some powerful support, and the latter by a secret message expressed a desire to place the young Holkar, his family and court, under British protection. In consequence, Captain Tod, under instructions from Mr. Metcalie, took measures for opening a negotiation. But a great change had taken place in the spirit and temper of Holkar's durbar, in the interval that had elapsed since the overture was forwarded. During that interval the position of the British government towards the peishwa had changed from one one-half of the stipulated quota, and to supply of that potentate was sufficient to rouse the deficiency by troops raised directly for the spirit of Mahratta partisanship to avenge his government, but to be paid by Scindia. wrongs and retrieve his power, while the his manner the number was at length Patans, who formed the larger portion of pleted. Such indirect indications of hos- Holkar's army, though not open to the operafeeling were not all. Scindia was in col- tion of such feeling, were eager for war and usion with several of the Pindarrie leaders; its expected advantages, without the slightest directed his march. Sir John Malcolm, with the third division, had been engaged in a series of to encounter a British force, and he fled with The English composition of weakness." On the 19th of Decem-British camp, and on the same day that of the Mahrattas witnessed the opening of a fearful scene, which on the following was consummated. Toolsee Bhye had given offence to the party clamorous for war by her desire to secure the protection of the English. This desire she had subsequently sacrificed, partly to the violence of her opponents and partly to the influence of a favourite paramour, ber the first and third divisions of the army of named Gunput Rao, who, though originally friendly to the English, had been gained over crossed the Scepra at a ford opposite to its to the cause of the peishwa. The sincerity of north-west angle, and encamped on the left her conversion was, however, doubted, and he who had been most instrumental in effecting it did not escape suspicion. The youthful Holkar was entired from a tent where he was engaged in amusement, and possession of his person secured by the party hostile to the regency. Toolsee Byhe and Gunput Rao were at the same time arrested, and all access to the former strictly probibited. Five days were thus occupied, during happy woman was not destined long to endure the torment of suspense as to her fate. The tiation was conducted on the part of the dawn of the following day was the last she was British government, urged the various grounds permitted to witness. As the light broke she was brought from her prison to be conducted to the bank of the river, where she was beon with the peishwa subsequently to his headed, and her body thrown into the water. Her piercing cries awakened many from their ally, and the assemblage of a large army to sleep, but none moved a hand or raised a voice to save her. Her career of power had been marked not less by vindictive cruelty Articles were submitted for the acceptance of than by the most scandalous licentiousness; the vakeels conducting the negotiation on the part of the Mahratta chief. These were dischieftain of the people among whom she chieftain of the people among whom she perished failed at her latest moments to call forth any sign of commiseration for her fate.

In almost every instance, indeed, where an jected to the obligation of celibacy, she would promptitude of their movements in retreat; have been believed to be his daughter. She their aptitude for flying rendered conflict impossible and pursuit ineffectual. The adopted | This could not fail to embolden the flarty of son of Cheetoo was, however, taken with the Holkar, and to encourage the re-assembling garrison of a fort named Talyne, which was in Malwa of all those elements of disorder attacked and captured by a body of cavalry which had been already dispersed or deterred. under Captain James Grant, after a march of A native power can never account for the thirty-two miles performed with such rapidity forbearance of another, except on the supas enabled the assailants to take the fee by surprise; and though attempts to overtake ber, the vakeels were dismissed from the the enemy usually ended in disappointment, one important object was attained in clearing This operation having been the country. effectually performed in Southern Malwa, Sir John Malcolm was recalled, and ordered, with reference to the state of affairs in Holkar's court and camp, to proceed towards Oojein. Near that place he effected a junction with Sir Thomas Hislop, and on the 12th of Decemthe Decean having marched past the city, bank of the river. On the 14th the army marched by the high road towards Mahidpore, and re-crossing the Seepra, took up a position at a place about four miles distant from a town called Paun-Bahar. The approach of the British troops gave rise to some apprehension at Holkar's durbar, and negotiations, which had for some time been broken off, were rewhich Sir John Malcolm, by whom the negoof complaint which that government had to allege; more especially the negotiations carried treacherous conduct towards his European proceed towards Poons at a time when Holkar was not professedly at war with any state. part of the Mahratta chief. cussed with seeming interest, and with an apparent desire to bring affairs to a satisfactory conclusion. Many references were made to When thus violently deprived of life Toolsee camp, distant about twenty miles; but it is Bhye had not numbered thirty years. probable that all their proceedings were but So great was the gratification felt by the probable that all their proceedings were but feints designed to lull the British authorities into security and to gain time, procrastination being always a favourite object with diplomatists of this cast. The English negotiator in some degree yielded to the Mahrattangents the enjoyment of this precious privilege. The period at which the discussion was either to be brought to a successful issue or regarded as at an end was repeatedly fixed and postponed. At last it was wisely determined to close the door on indulgence; a decision the propriety of which was enforced by the systematic plunder carried on during the negotiation by flying parties of Holkar's horse. It was also rance of the delays artfully brought forward language usual in Oriental diplomacy.

war party at the revolution which had taken place, that it is said the battalions proposed to sign an acquittance-roll for the whole of the arrears of pay due to them. So extraordinary a manifestation of delight is scarcely credible, but all prospect of keeping down the warlike propensities of the more powerful faction in Holkar's camp was now at an end. On the 20th of December the British army moved a short distance in advance, and on the 21st was again in motion at break of day. Its march was pursued for about eight miles without sight of an enemy. The tameness of this un-disputed progress was then slightly relieved to be apprehended, as a writer on the subject by the appearance of a courier bearing a judiciously observes, "that any further tole-letter couched in the vague and ambiguous would be construed into doubts on the side answer was returned, inviting the young of the British commander of his own strength. Holkar to join the British army, as the only enemy followed, intimating that, in consequence of the advance of the British, the Sirdar had resolved on war, and significantly adding, that the troops which the British would have to encounter were those of Holkar. To this no answer was sent. This interchange of communication had not been permitted to interfere with the advance of the British force. The march continued, and about nine o'clock an eminence was gained, whence was a com-manding view of the valley in which was situate the town of Mahidpore; the foreground filled with the enemy's horse, some in large bodies, some in detached parties for The main position of the enemy was masked by a plantation. From an adjacent hill a more complete view was obtained of the disposition of the enemy's troops. They appeared behind the river in two lines, of which the infantry and heavy batteries formed the first, and the cavalry the second. The first question for the consideration of the British general was how to pass the river. There were fords both above and below the enemy's position; but that below was unapproachable for guns. To render it passable would have been a work of time, could it have been effected, which was matter of doubt, as those engaged in it must have been exposed to a tremendous fire from the enemy's batteries. The ford above was difficult of access on both banks. It was approachable ington of the 4th, were to assail the enemy's only by by-paths, through a rugged country; and to reach the enemy in this way would are required a détour of many miles. This ation applied also to the ford previously With reference to these difficulties, as resolved to abstain from any attempt · m either flank of the enemy; and as the ad of the river afforded considerable cover .. the troops during their formation, it was arranged that the attack should be on the enemy's front, and that the passage should be made by a single ford. Some light troops first passed, followed by the horse artillery, which opened their guns; a battery of foot artillery playing from the right bank of the river, and enfilading some cannon on the enemy's left which had opened a heavy and welldirected fire on the ford. The troops, as they crossed, were successively formed in the bed of the river and took up their respective positions, the cavalry ascending the bank to the left, where they were partially screened from the enemy by some rising ground, the horse artillery forming batteries in front of the ford. The light brigade had taken possession of two ravines which opened into the river, the object being to keep it clear for the passage of the remaining brigades, who, on crossing, were directed by a counter-march to crossing, were directed by a counter-march to enemy sued for peace, and after a discussion, bring their right in front. As soon as this not undistinguished by the usual characterismanceuvre was performed by the counter-manceuvre was performed by the counter-march to enemy sued for peace, and after a discussion, bring their right in front.

means of saving and establishing his govern-the troops that had crossed, leaving the Another communication from the second brigade of infantry to follow as a re-

> The first brigade accordingly ascended the bank, leaving sufficient ground to the right for its formation into line, while the light brigade rose from the ravines and formed battalion companies on its left. This operation was performed under a galling fire of round shot and grape from several batteries. The fire of the enemy's batteries was likewise very destructive to the British horse artillery, whose guns were all silenced or dismounted. The light pieces of the latter, though admirably served, were quite unequal to the heavy guns in their front. The British cavalry also suffered from the same source of annoyance, as well as from a party of the enemy which came down a ravine. The two brigades of infantry advanced to the attack of the enemy's left, under the immediate command of Sir John Malcolm. Their ranks were fearfully thinned by the grape of the enemy; but pushing forward, they succeeded in carrying a ruined village which was regarded as the key of the enemy's position, and in gaining the batteries from which they had suffered so severely. The latter were defended with great determination, the men standing to their guns till killed or disabled by the bayonets of the British infantry. The two brigades of cavalry, commanded respectively by Lieutenant-Colonel Russell, of the 3rd regiment, and Major Lushright simultaneously with the attack of the infantry on his left. This service was performed by the two brigades, accompanied by the Mysore horse, with extraordinary brilliancy, the assailants pushing to the rear of the batteries opposed to them with a definition arrigity which are the companies of the batteries opposed to them with a definition arrigity which are the companies to the state of the batteries opposed to them with a definition arrigity which are the companies to the state of the companies of the c cisive rapidity which overcame every obstacle and spread dismay through the enemy's ranks.

The enemy's camp was standing, and the attention of the cavalry and of the commanderin-chief was almost simultaneously directed to It was, however, found deserted. feeble attempts at a stand were made by parties of the foe, but they were only for the purpose of covering the retreat of the remainder. The fortune of the day was decided. The British were masters of the field, and of the whole of the enemy's artillery, amounting to above sixty pieces. The loss of the enemy in men was estimated at three thousand; that of the English, though considerably less, was still lamentably heavy. The killed and wounded amounted to seven hundred and seventy-eight, including thirty-eight European and twenty-seven native officers.

Assoonas practicable, a light detachment was formed for pursuit, but there was little opportunity for its employment. The prostrate manœuvre was performed by the first brigade, tics of oriental diplomacy, but of unusual Sir Thomas Hislop gave orders for the brevity, a treaty was concluded. By this inattack of the enemy along the whole front by strument, the Company's government engaged pany all his territories and claims within the and show how fully those who assumed the Sautpoorab bills, or to the southward of them, management of Holkar's interests and their including the fort of Sundewah, all his possessions in the province of Candeish, and in were completely at the mercy of their conthe districts in which they were intermixed querors, and had no resource but in entire with the territories of the nizam and the submission. peishwa. In consideration of these cessions, the British government was bound to support compelled to cede to the British government a field force of adequate strength to maintain the internal tranquillity of Holkar's territories, and to defend them from foreign enemies, the station of such force to be determined by the power by whom it was raised and maintained. The purchase of articles for the use of any force acting in defence of Holkar's territories was to be made exempt from duties. The stipulation which followed the last was lies the British government took the two states of a very comprehensive character: Holkar under its protection, while their chiefs enengaged never to commit any act of hostilgaged to act in "subordinate co-operation" lity or aggression against any of the Com- with it-to acknowledge its supremacy, and pany's allies or dependents, "or against any to have no connection with other chiefs or other power or state whatever,"-a hard con-states. dition for a Mahratta. The Company were the description common in similar compacts; to adjust whatever differences might arise, and Holkar was not to receive vakeels from liar circumstances of the states to which they any other state, nor to have communication were applied. Treaties of like character had with any other state except with the know-ledge and consent of the British resident. The absolute authority of the chief over his ties nearly corresponding in their terms, were children, relatives, dependents, subjects, and formed with the rajahs of Bhoondee, Jyepoor, servants was acknowledged by a subsequent article, in which his new ally renounced all concern with them. By another article, Holkar agreed to dismiss his superfluous troops, and "not to keep a larger force than his abandonment was consistent with justice, revenues would afford"—a prudent provision, while it was dictated by reason and sound regard to which would have saved many a native prince from embarrassment and ruin. Holkar was, however, to retain in reserve, ready to co-operate with the British troops, a body of not less than a thousand horse, for step in the peerage, and created Marquis of whose regular payment it was somewhat emphatically stated, a "suitable arrangement must be made." A provision followed for securing a jaghire to Ghuftoor Khan, a Patan adventurer, who had attained great influence directed to the southward. The advance of in the camp of Holkar, and this was succeeded not to allow impunity to any state or free-Holkar, and permitting the latter to send a booter that should commit any outrage or hos- vakeel to the governor general. All cessions tility against the territory of Holkar, he lend- made under the treaty to the British governing his utmost assistance in any manner that ment or its allies were to take effect from might be requisite; and his dominions were the date of the treaty, and the possessions to receive at all times the same protection as recently conquered from Holkar were to be those of the British government. Holkar confirmed the engagements made with Ameer cnaged never to permit the peishwa, nor Khan, and ceded in perpetuity certain perany of his heirs and descendants, to claim gunnals to the rajah of Kotah; to the Britah government he ceded all his claims for or his heirs and descendants. Such a treaty tribute or revenue upon the Rajpoot princes; forms a remarkable supplement to the warlike he renounced all right and title to places demonstrations which had so recently presented the results of th within the Bhoondee hills, or lying to the vailed in Holkar's camp. Comment would be northward of them, and ceded to the Com- superfluous: the articles speak for themselves, own must have been convinced that they

It has been seen that Holkar had been all claims upon the Rajpoot princes. In connection with this subject, it may here be convenient to state that, on the same day on which the treaty with Holkar was signed (the 6th of January, 1818), a treaty was concluded with the rajah of Joudpore, and a few days afterwards a similar engagement was made with the rajah of Oudeypore. By these trea-Several succeeding articles were of others were framed with reference to the pecupreviously been concluded with the rajahs of Kerrowlie and Kotah, and at later periods, treaand other petty states. Thus was the noninterference system abandoned as completely as had been the unhappy allies of the British government at a former period; but here the It is also evident that the course policy. pursued by the governor-general was duly appreciated by the authorities at home, for on the conclusion of the war he was advanced a Hastings.

It is now time to return to the movements of the discomfited peishwa. After his defeat at Poona, his flight was in the first instance the force under Brigadier-General Pritzler by stipulations restricting the Mahratta chief- obliged him to change his course, and he took tain from employing Europeans or Americans an easterly direction to Punderpore, whence without the knowledge and consent of the he struck off to the north-west, followed by British government; providing for the residence of a minister of that government with able to make the necessary arrangements for pursuit. Passing between Poona and Seroor, [wounded, and missing. the peishwa then advanced as far as Wuttoor, having been joined on his route by Trimbuck- artillery; Lieutenant Patterson, of the Bomjee Dainglia with a considerable reinforce-bay native infantry, was carried mortally ment. Finding that General Smith, who had wounded to Seroor, where he died. Two moved to the northward, on a line east of that other officers, Lieutenant Connelian and Lieutaken by the peishwa, was in a position to tenant Swainston, were badly wounded. The intercept his retreat in that direction, he sudloss of the enemy was estimated at from six to denly turned again to the south, taking the seven hundred. Its extent may be attributed straight route for Poons, and still pursued.

British detachment, consisting of about six raked by the guns of the British party. hundred infantry, with about three hundred auxiliary horse, and a detail of artillery, com- as the approach of his pursuers warned him to manded by Captain Staunton. The detachment had marched on the previous day from Seroor, and were proceeding to Poons. On reaching the heights overlooking Corygaum, they discovered in the plain the whole of the poishwa's army, estimated at twenty thousand horse and eight thousand foot. Captain Staunton immediately moved upon the village of Corygaum, and on reaching it was attacked by three divisions of the peishwa's choicest infantry, consisting of about a thousand men each, supported by immense bodies of horse and two pieces of artillery. The enemy obtained immediate possession of the strongest post of the village; the possession of the remaining part was most obstinately contested from noon till nine at night. During this period almost every building in the place was repeatedly taken and retaken; nearly the whole of the British artillerymen were either killed or wounded, and about one-third of the infantry and auxiliary horse. Nearly all the officers were killed or disabled; those who survived suffered dreadfully from want of · ter, amidst the unparalleled exertions which / had been called upon to make after a guing march of twenty-eight miles. The sult, however, was most honourable to the iritish arms, the enemy being compelled to abandon the village after sustaining an immense loss in killed and wounded.

On the following day, the enemy, though in sight, did not renew the attack, and in the evening Captain Staunton returned to Seroor, carrying away his numerous wounded; and the noble band entered that place as became them, with drums beating and colours flying. The detachment had then suffered under an almost total privation of refreshment for two In this brilliant affair the medical officers, having no opportunity for the exercise of their proper duties, aided their brother officers in leading on the sepoys to charges routes of the Pindarries during the time of with the bayonet, and one of them was killed. their flight, such particulars would, perhaps, In such a struggle the example of even one give but little additional interest to this European was of almost incalculable import- account of the operations against them. When ance, from the confidence with which it in-pressed, they fled collectively, if possible; spired the native soldiers. The loss sustained otherwise they broke into parts again to unite. was, as might be expected, severe. Of twenty- In some instances, from inability to proceed, six artillerymen, twelve were killed and eight or under the apprehension of suddenly falling wounded. Of the native infantry there were in with British troops from an opposite quarter, fifty killed and a hundred and five wounded. parties of them lurked in small numbers about Of the auxiliary horse, ninety-six killed, remote villages, or lay in the thickest jungles,

Among the killed was Licutenant Chisholm, of the Madras in a great degree to the situation in which On new-year's day, 1818, he encountered a most of their attacks were made—in avenues

The peishwa continued to vary his course escape them. After many changes of route he arrived at Sholapore; but instead of following him in that direction, General Smith resolved upon reducing Sattara, and effecting a junction with General Pritzler. These objects were accomplished. Sattara surrendered on the opening of the mortar batteries, and the desired junction of the forces under General Smith and General Pritzler was effected. Its object was to enable the entire force at disposal for field service to be formed into two divisions: one to be composed wholly of cavalry and light troops, to keep up an active pursuit of the enemy; the other of infantry, with an ample battering-train, to reduce forts, and gradually occupy the country. Those arrangements being made, General Smith resumed the pursuit of the peishwa, and General Pritzler proceeded to reduce the forts and strongholds in the neighbourhood of Poona. On the 19th of February, the former officer surprised the peishwa's army at Ashtee, and completely defeated it. The rajah of Sattara and part of his family, who were in the peishwa's camp, fell into the hands of the victors; and Gokla, the peishwa's ablest general, as well as his chief counsellor, was killed.

In the mean time General Pritzler proceeded with the reduction of the forts south of Poons. Singhur alone offered very strong resistance, and there it was not protracted. Lieutenant-Colonel Deacon was equally successful in the same species of service in the north. detachments were employed in the Concan, and Brigadier-General Munro was occupied in the reduction of the country south of the Kistna.

The Pindarries continued to follow their invariable practice of flying when a British force approached them. "Were it possible, says Colonel Blacker, "to trace the several exposed to the most severe hardships, till formed that the movement, without the consent their enemies had passed by." On the 12th of the British commander, of any part of his Bengal cavalry, under Major Clarke, with points of difference, could not be permitted; instructions to march on the village of Ambee, where it was understood a party of Pindarries and on the projected flight becoming known, where it was understood a party of Pindarries and on the projected flight becoming known, a squadron of cavalry was sent down to were about to plunder. Major Clarke was prevent it. On the approach of the squadron it was fired upon. General Brown thereupon tion of the enemy, and continuing his march lost no time in making the necessary disponents of the distance of estimated at fifteen hundred. Accounts vary enemy from the position which they had as to the number of the slain, but by Major taken, the infantry flying into the town and Clarke, whose estimate was formed on a comparison of the reports of the pursuers, it was pursued by the British cavalry; but these computed at a thousand.

of the British resident would not be light. In the face of Captain Caulfield's constant and with the Pindarries, and refused to move a man against them. At Jadud, Cheetoo met a friendly reception, and obtained such advice and information as was calculated to facilitate his objects; and there Kurreen found an asylum when flying from the British detachments employed against him. Much of this treacherous conduct of Scindia's officers was concealed at the time from the representative of the British government; but Captain Caulfield saw enough to convince him of the necessity of employing some stronger means of ambiguity and confusion. effecting the objects of his mission than remonof January.

The first step taken was to demand the sur-Jeswunt Rao Bhow had been previously in among these was the killadar. Sir Thomas of January Colonel Adams detached the 3rd forces, previously to the adjustment of the till night, halted within a few miles of them, sitions for attack. He sent two guns to rein-At five o'clock he moved, and came upon them force the pickets, and ordered two squadrons with his force in two divisions, just as they of regular cavalry and some Robilla horse were preparing to march. One division im- round the town to gain the rear of the demediately cut in among the enemy, and a large tached camp of the officer who had taken the body, flying from the attack, encountered the lead in the movement. Before the line could other division, from which they suffered be formed for attack, the fire of two twelve-The number of the Pindarries was pounders with shrapnell shells drove the baving just returned from a forced march of After the conclusion of the treaty with considerable length, in fruitless search of a Scindia, British officers, in conformity with party of Pindarries, were exhausted, and the one of its provisions, were despatched to reside pursuit was soon relinquished: the cavalry with those of Scindia at his principal station. returned to destroy a remnant of the enemy Two of them, Jeswunt Rao Bhow and Bappo- which still lingered behind. In the mean time jee Scindia, were known to be ill-affected to General Brown had proceeded to the gate of the English and friendly to the Pindarries. the town and demanded its surrender. The The former was placed under the care of messenger was fired on; whereupon a twelve-Captain Caulfield, the latter under that of pounder was run up to the gate, while the Major Ludlow. Nothing very remarkable remaining ordnance swept away the defences occurred at Ajmere, where Bappojee Scindia about it. Jeswunt Rao Bhow now thought it managed Scindia's interests; but at Jadud, time to provide for his own safety. He fled the seat of the head-quarters of Jeswunt Rao with a few followers at the gate opposite to Bhow, it soon became evident that the duties that attacked, through which the British triumphantly entered, bearing down all at-tempts at opposition. The loss of the enemy urgent remonstrances, Jeswunt Rao Bhow was great; it was computed at a thousand, continued to maintain an intimate intercourse The British lost only thirty-six men.

The servants of Holkar, like those of Scindia, did not in all cases yield implicit respect to the treaties concluded by their superiors. The killadar of Talneir, a fort on the Taptee, determined to disobey the summons of Sir Thomas Hislop to surrender, and in consequence it became necessary to reduce it by force. On the 27th of February, some guns were opened against the fort, and preparations were made for storming. Thenceforward the circumstances of the affair are involved in In Sir Thomas Hislop's report to the governor-general it is strances. In consequence, General Brown stated, that though preparations were made moved, in order to support Captain Caulfield's for blowing open the outer gate, they were representations by the presence of an over-found unnecessary, as the troops were able awing force, and arrived at Jadud on the 23rd to enter at the side by single files. Similar testimony is given by Colonel Blacker. words of Colonel Conway, adjutant-general, render of two of the Bhow's officers, who had however, when subsequently called upon to been most actively instrumental in executing state the circumstances of the case, are, "We his plans for the protection of the Pindarries. had forced the outer gate." According to all Some days having been spent in fruitless com- authorities, the second gate was forced open. munications, the British authorities learned on At a third, a number of persons, apparently the 29th, that one of the offending officers not military, came out on the approach of the was, with his followers, preparing for flight. British party, and were made prisoners:

Histop, in his despatch, stated that the logainst them. The worst part of the transackilladar here surrendered bimself to Colonel tion remains to be told. Immediately after Conway. According to Colonel Conway, how-ever, no communication tool, place between them, and the presence of the killadar among idequated in which he reported the occurrences the prisoners was not known. According to at Talueir, were language which implies a Sir Thomas Hislop and Colonel Blacker, the doubt as to the participation of the officer in party passed through a fourth gate without the alleged treachery of part of the garrison, opposition, but were stopped at a fifth, which The general, indeed, drew consolation from the was also the last. mention of a fourth gate, but his statement the killadar insectioless deserved to be coincides with theirs as to the stoppage of the [hanged for his resistance in the first instance, coincides with theirs as to the stoppage of the hanged for his resistance in the first instance, party at the last gate of the series. Here a more especially as he had been warned, that if parley took place, but after a time the wicket was opened. Sir Thomas Hislop says, it him. "Whether," says Sir Thomas Hislop, "was opened from within;" Colonel Conway, "he was necessary or not to the subsequent "at last they contented to open the wicket, treachery of his men, his execution was a but in doing so there was much opposition, and evidently two opinious prevailed in the first instance, particularly after the warning fort." Colonel Macgregor Murray, who was a he had received in the morning." This posipresent (and whose name will shortly appear tion require some examination, and the transit a more distinguished character than that of action to which it relates is altogether so in a more distinguished character than that of action to which it relates is altogether so a witness), after quoting, apparently with extraordinary as to invite a pause, for the approval, the statement of Sir Thomas Hislop, purpose of endeavouring more accurately to thus continues: "The Arabs still insisted estimate its character and merits. It excited upon terms. It remained doubtful whether a great consation in England at the time when the storming party, on reaching the last gate, it first became known there, and the general were to receive the submission or to encounter impression of the conduct of the British general the resistance of the enemy; and in this state was far from favourable. of uncertainty, resulting from the equivocal mittee, the Court of Directors, and the General conduct of the garrison, it became obviously Court of the East-India Company, were alike requisite that the assailants should prepare for of opinion that it required explanation; and the latter alternative by effecting a lodgment in a similar spirit the subject was brought to within the gateway, as their position in the the notice of parliament. The marguis of within the gateway, as their position in the the notice of parliament. The marquis of passage leading to it would have been absolutely untenable under fire."

Instings volunteered a minute in defence of Sir Thomas Hislop,—a course to which he was, case, whatever the expectations of the assailwas made to close it. This was resisted by distinguished not less by its weakness, than Colonel M Intosh and Captain M Crarth, who by its wordiness. succeeded in keeping it open till a grenadier of the Royal Scots thrust his firelock through the aperture. The remainder of the storming progress of events at Nagpore must now be party were thus enabled to force their way. All those who had previously entered were cluded with Appa Sahib, after the evacuation killed, excepting Colonel Macgregor Murray, of his capital, was confirmed by the governor-who was rescued covered with wounds. Cap-general, and the resident was authorized to tain Macgregor, who was at the head of those frame a definitive treaty on its basis. who entered after the attempt to close the was suspended by a proposal from Appa Sahib gate upon those who had first passed, also fell, to transfer to the British government the but the fort was carried. The garrison, con-whole of the possessions of the state of Nagsisting of about three hundred Arabs, sheltered themselves for a time in the houses, but were sovereignty, and receiving a certain share of

Colonel Conway makes no [conclusion that, if innocent of the treachery, The Secret Com-Whatever were the circumstances of the in fact, pledged, having long previously ex-se, whatever the expectations of the assail- pressed his approbation, not only of the means case, whatever the expectations of the assauris or the intentions of those within, the icket was opened. "On our entrance," says witness last quoted, "the garrison rec'. I us with the most furious gesticulations, various officers present at the capture to afraising their matchlocks and calling out mar! or kill! Colonel Macgregor Murray, Major Gordon, and one or two privates had addressed to the government a long and massed through the wicket when an attemnt! Inhoured defence of his conduct—redefence passed through the wicket when an attempt laboured defence of his conduct—a defence

It is gratifying to turn from such a scene as that at Talneir; and the narrative of the resumed. The engagement provisionally conpore, he retaining only the name and form of ultimately all put to the sword, a proceeding the revenues. The proposal was rejected by manifesting a degree of ferocity not usual with British victors. It may not, however, be just to scrutinize too nicely the conduct of the despatch conveying the final instructions men in the heat of action, when inflamed by the government was received by the resident, the belief that treachery has been employed act upon the dictates of his own sound and persons hostile to the influence of the British vigorous judgment.

to be surrendered was refused or evaded. aversion. Rumours of the rajah meditating Mundela was one of these. When the order an escape were general; it was understood for its surrender arrived from Nagpore, the that one of the disaffected chiefs had received rajah's ministers requested that a little time a sum of money for the levy of troops; and might be allowed for the evacuation of the attempts were made to intercept the progress settle with the garrison, and thus prevent any demur to the delivery of the fort, under the Sahib was irretrievably leagued with the pretence of arrears being due. A person deputed from Nagpore estensibly for this purpose arrived at Mundela; but the surrender was still deferred, under the plea that an order it became evident that extreme measures could had been received to make the collections for no longer be postponed without compromising the year from the pergunnals dependent upon the honour and safety of the British govern-Mundela, and to pay the garrison with the ment. The resident now acted with his usual subject to the notice of the rajah's ministers, they stated the order in question to be, that accelerated by the discovery of facts which payment should be made from the revenue impressed Mr. Jenkins with a conviction that already collected, and sufficient for the pure Appa Sahib had been the murderer of his pose. As a part of the territory from which the revenue was to be drawn was actually occupied by the British troops, and nothing could be obtained from the remainder but by gross extortion and oppression, the resident authorized the payment of the garrison from the British treasury, and Major O'Brien proceeded with a small escort to Mundela to make apparently insurmountable, no measures were the necessary arrangements. On the arrival of this officer, various communications passed between him, the killadar of the fort, and the person deputed from Nagpore, professedly for the purpose of settling the arrears. communications appeared to promise a satisfactory adjustment, and Major O'Brien was in expectation of being put in immediate pos-session of the fort. Instead of this result, the British commander, on the third morning after his arrival, while riding near the place, found that the garrison during the night had sent over the Nerbudda about four hundred cavalry, with four thousand infantry, and four guns. The cavalry advanced upon him, and the guns opened; but he was enabled, with his small escort, to reach his camp in safety; the enemy, whenever they approached, being successfully repelled.

In consequence of this treacherous proceeding on the part of the killadar of the fort, Major-General Marshall, with a considerable force, was ordered to advance upon Mundela; but before this could be effected Nagpore became the scene of a bloodless revolution. The retention of the fortresses in defiance of the provisions under which they were to be surrendered, and notwithstanding public orders had been given for their delivery, was traced to secret orders of a contrary purport—a fact suspected at an early period by the resident, and ultimately placed beyond the possibility of In addition to these circumstances, Mr. Jenkins received information that an government, while those who entertained The delivery of certain fortresses stipulated friendly feelings towards it were regarded with enemies of the British power. New and incontestable proofs of the rajah's treachery continually occurred, and were multiplied, till The resident having brought the vigour, and arrested both the rajah and his confidential ministers. This bold step was kinsman and sovereign, Pursagee Bhonslah, formerly rajah of Nagpore. At the time of Pursagee's death Mr. Jenkins had been led to suspect this; but circumstances having induced him in some degree to moderate his suspicions, and the difficulty of obtaining satisfactory proof of the suspected fact being taken in consequence. Such additional information was now acquired as led to a conviction of Appa Sahib's guilt. His arrest took place on the 15th of March. Subsequently he was declared to be dethroned, and this step was followed by the elevation to the musnud of a descendant of a former rajah by the female As soon as a sufficient escort could be obtained, Appa Sahib was sent off to the British provinces, and provision was made at Allahabad for his reception and custody.

General Marshall having arrived before Mundela, proceeded to erect batteries, which being completed were opened by daylight on the 26th of April. They were answered by a spirited fire from the whole of the enemy's works. After several hours' battering, Lieutenant Pickersgill, with great gallantry, proceeded to ascertain by personal inspection the effect produced, mounting, with the assistance of his hircarrahs, to the top of the breach; from which, after making his observations, he returned with so favourable a report, as induced General Marshall to make immediate preparations for storming the works. The necessary dispositions having been made, Captain Tickell, field engineer, examined the breach, and at half-past five o'clock the signal was given to advance. The storming and supporting columns, both under the direction of Brigadier-General Watson, moved forward, the breach was instantly mounted and carried, and in a very short time the town was in the possession of the assailants. The troops were intercourse was kept up with the peishwa, and immediately pushed forward to the fort, and that the rajah held secret conferences with at daybreak on the 27th the garrison came out unarmed, and quietly surrendered them-¡Colonel Adams's force from Hoosingabad, solves. At midnight a small beat had been where it had arrived in the beginning of observed crossing the river, with four persons: March, after being employed beyond the Nerby good management on the part of one of the budds. He accordingly marched for the city advanced posts they were secured on landing, of Nagpore, which he reached on the 5th of and one of them turned out to be the killadar April; and having halted there on the follow-of the fort. The governor-general had given ing day, resumed his march on the 7th for orders that, if taken, the killadar and other Hinghunghut, where he arrived on the 9th. principal officers should be immediately brought. There he was joined on the 14th by a party to a drum-head court-martial, and that any which he had detached under Lieutenant-punishment that might be awarded by such Colonel Scott, to intercept an apprehended tribunal, whether death or imprisonment with attempt of Bajee Rao to enter Chauda. Little hard labour, might immediately be carried has been raid of the movements of Bajee Rao, into effect.

appear to have been an challition of that in-dread of some portion of the British force. On firmity of temper which shadowed the high the 13th of April he became aware of the character of the marquis of Hastings. The position of Colonel Adams's force, and to avoid orders were so far followed, that the killadar him moved to Soondee. On the 16th he was was brought to a court-martial, charged with alarmed by intelligence of the approach of rebellion and treachery. He was acquitted of General Poveton, and made preparations for the charge of rebellion, on the proper ground flying. of his having acted under the orders of the suddenly upon him, after a fatiguing march Nagpore government. The charge of trea- over a most difficult country. An action enchery arose out of the attack on Major sued, in which the prishwa was completely O'Brien. Of this the killadar was also ac- routed, with the loss of several hundred men, quitted, the major declaring his belief that the four brass guns, three elephants, nearly two prisoner was not concerned in the attack upon hundred camels, and a variety of valuable prohim. This appears a somewhat refined view perty. The poishwa himself had a narrow of the matter. If the attack were an offence escape, the palauquin in which he had been against military law, it could be of little im- borne having been taken immediately after be portance whether the killadar were personally had left it to seek safety by flight on horseengaged in it or not, as it must be quite cer-back. Hotly pursued by General Doveton, tain that the movement of the garrison must the peishwa fled to Ormekaii, where, overcome have taken place with his cognizance and by fatigue, privation, and terror, his army sanction; but the court must have been aware broke up, and the fugitive prince was abanthat they had no proper jurisdiction in the se, and that conviction and punishment Ter such circumstances could not be justi-Another officer was put on trial, charged · ...h abetting his superior; but he, of course, shared the impunity of his principal.

The surrender of Chouragurh, another fortress which was to be ceded to the British government, was postponed by the same bad faith which had delayed the delivery of Mun-dela, and the pretence was the same—time was asked to settle the arrears of pay due to the garrison; but the kiliadar soon assumed a posture of direct hostility. A body of men armed with matchlocks sallied from the fort to attack a British force under Colonel Mac-Morine, and the garrison systematically plundered the villages which had been placed under the British government. A body of about five hundred, employed in the latter occupation, were attacked and put to flight by a small detachment under Major Richards. After the reduction of Mundela, the division under General Watson was ordered to march to Chouragurh, but before their arrival the fort and adjoining town were evacuated, and possession taken by Colonel MacMorine.

The continued disturbances in Nagpore had for it would have been alike tedious and un-It would be difficult to show that these profitable to follow minutely his tortions orders were consistent either with discretion light. After the battle of Ashtee he wanter with a regard to the usages of war. They dered in almost every direction, in continual On the 17th Colonel Adams came doned by most of his sirdars,

After dispersing the army of the peishwa at Soondee, Colonel Adams returned to Hinghunghut, to prepare for laying siege to Chanda, a strongly fortified city in the Nagpore territory, said to be equal in size to the capital. He appeared before it on the 9th of May, with a thousand native cavalry, a troop of horse artillery, one-half being Europeans of the Madras establishment, the remainder natives, of the Bengal establishment, a complete company of European foot artillery, partly provided by Bengal, partly by Madras, three thousand native infantry, two companies of pioneers, one from the Bengal, one from the Madras establishment and two thousand investigations. establishment, and two thousand irregular horse, with three eighteen-pounders, four brass twelve-pounders, six howitzers, and twelve six-pounders.

Chanda is situate between two small rivers, which unite at a distance of about half a mile from its southern extremity. On the north is a deep and extensive tank, beyond which are some hills, commanding the place, at a distance of nine hundred yards. Between them and the fort are thick groves of trees. east face are suburbs interspersed with trees and separated from the town by one of the induced the resident to call for the advance of rivers, and opposite to the south-east angle, distant about seven hundred and fifty yards, battalion of the 1st regiment of Madras na-are other hills, beyond which the British en-tive infantry. The first battalion of the 23rd campment was fixed. Within the place equi-distant from the north and south faces, but native infantry followed; while with the nearer the eastern than the western wall, is advanced sections was a detail of artillerymen, situated a citadel: the rest of the interior provided with materials for either turning the consists of straggling streets, detached houses, enemy's guns or spiking them. A reserve, and gardens. The walls are of cut stone, well consisting of the Bengal light infantry batcomented, and from fifteen to twenty feet high, talion, four troops of the 5th cavalry dis-and six miles round. They are flanked by mounted, and two horse-artillery guns, was round towers, capacious enough for the largest guns; and as the direction of the walls is frequently broken, and they are surmounted by a high parapet, an effectual enfilade of them is not practicable. Eighty guns of large calibre were mounted, and the garrison consisted of noyance, a tremendous fire from all the guns two thousand men.

At night, on the 13th of April, the first battery was completed. It was erected on the southern hill, and admitted one eighteenpounder, two howitzers, and one six-pounder. The chief point of attack had not at this time been selected, and this battery was intended, says Colonel Blacker, "to amuse the enemy, while the necessary collection of materials for the siege was in progress." Shells and red-hot shot were thenceforth thrown into the town, but with little effect, while the fire was returned by the garrison with no greater. Coincident with the opening of the battery, a force, consisting of a battalion of Bengal light infantry and a squadron of cavalry, under Captain Doveton, was established in a suburb lying south-east of the city. Four days were spent in reconnoitring, and the south-east angle being finally selected for breaching, on the night of the 17th of April a battery of four twelve-pounders was constructed within four hundred yards of that point. In addition to this, a howitzer battery was erected on the capital of the south-east angle, at a distance of six hundred yards, and a battery of three sixpounders on the prolongation of the eastern face, distant four hundred yards. Three of the enemy's guns were dismounted, but beyond this the effect of these batteries seems to have been unimportant. During the night of the the great citadel of the principality in which it 18th the breaching battery of three eighteenpounders was completed, within two hundred in public opinion with the existence of the and fifty yards of the angle attacked, and at Nagpore state. On this account, its fall to the daybreak on the following morning it opened. force under Colonel Adams was an event At four in the afternoon the breach was prac- highly favourable to British interests in Nagticable, but the assault was delayed till the following morning. During the night, however, in the city, having been deposited there an incessant fire was kept up, in order to defor safety. Nine lacs of rupees, which had feat any attempt made by the garrison to form been buried in the purlieus of a single palace, a retrenchment. Lieutenant-Colonel Scott was were discovered and dug out, a few days after appointed to command the storming party, the storm. The taste of the natives of India which consisted of two columns. The right for articles of European luxury was proved by column was composed of four companies of the discovery of many such in the captured Bengal grenadiers, followed by pioneers with city, and among them some of the elegancies ndders, and the first battalion of the 19th regiment of Bengal native infantry. It was under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel might be supposed to have but few attractions for Asiatic taste. Some pictures, of Brook, consisted of four flank companies, followed by pioneers with ledders and the first of Chande lowed by pioneers with ladders, and the first of Chanda.

commanded by Major Clarke.

At break of day on the 20th of April, the storming party marched from camp, the heads of the two columns being equally advanced. They arrived at the breach without much anthat could be brought to bear on the breach and defences having been previously poured in for half an hour. The garrison, however, were found prepared, and the heads of the columns were assailed by a warm discharge of small The columns separated, according to a preconcerted arrangement, and took different directions. The right met with considerable resistance from bodies of the garrison, who being driven back, appeared to cross over and fall into the route of the left column. That column, however, pursued its way, driving the enemy back as it advanced, and within an hour from the breach being passed the place was entirely occupied by the English. The killadar, with about two hundred of his men, was killed, and about a hundred were made prisoners. The rest escaped without the walls; some of them were intercepted and destroyed by the British cavalry, but from the great extent of the place, and the cover afforded by a thick jungle to the northward, most of the fugitives succeeded in cluding pursuit. The loss of the English was small, amounting only to twelve killed and something more than fifty wounded.

The circumstances attending the capture of Chanda exhibit nothing very remarkable or striking. But the occupation of the place was of vast importance, inasmuch as it was was situated, and its possession was associated pore. A large amount of property was found ment. These objects having been pursued expediency of this measure was urged by through two days, it was thought that an at-regard to the season of the year, and to the

with a probability of success.

Davis, ascended the breach in front, and had to subsequent dispute. no sooner attained its summit than he dis- who drew up the paper employed words, covered insuperable obstacles, the existence either by mistake, inadvertence, or design, of which was previously unsuspected. He which promised indulgences never intended. was in the act of pronouncing the word "im- These, of course, were claimed; and the small arms by which their commander, Major the advantages which they had been led to Greenhill, was wounded. All doubt as to the expect. result of the attack was soon removed by the number of the attack was soon removed by the Before the fall of Malligaum, the once unwelcome discovery that the ladders of the haughty, but now humbled, peishwa, had assailants were too short to be of use. Colonel ceased even to pretend to the exercise of assaiants were too snort to be of use. Colonel ceased even to pretend to the exercise of Macdowell consequently ordered the party to retire, which they did in exemplary order direction, and in every direction had met with under a harassing fire from the enemy. The attack under Colonel Stuart was more fortunate. He had gained a considerable within a magic circle, from which he appeared portion of the pettah when he was joined by destined never to be emancipated. He field Major Macbean, the object of that officer's twice to the northward and twice to the attack having been found unattainable; and the southward. To the westward was the occase attack having been found unattainable; and the southward. To the westward was the ocean, tempt to storm might be made on the 29th probable filling up of the Moassum by the approaching rains, the effect of which would The parties for the attack having been told be to separate the besiegers from the fort. off on the preceding evening, took up in the Various preparations, unnecessary to be remorning the positions assigned to them. The lated in detail, were carried on while the column for the attack of the breach was com- British commander awaited the arrival of a manded by Major Greenhill, of the 17th battering-train from Ahmednuggur, which Madras native infantry. It consisted of one arrived on the 10th of June. On that night hundred Europeans and eight hundred sepoys, the mortars were brought into battery, and who remained in the parallel on the bank of on the following morning they opened a disthe river. The column destined to storm the charge, one effect of which was to fire a store pettah was composed of five hundred sepoys of powder within the fort. The explosion under Lieutenant-Colonel Mathew Stuart, of the Madras native infantry. This column the curtain of the inner line. A breaching crossed the river lower down to a point on battery was soon ready to follow up the work the left bank, eight hundred yards from the The third column, which was com- operation. The enemy were now alarmed, manded by Major Macbean, of the Madras and tendered submission upon terms. They native infantry, had for its object the escalade were answered that nothing but unconditional of the outer wall near the river gate. This surrender could be accepted. The Arabs. column took post near the six-pounder however, were from some cause apprehensive battery up the right bank. It consisted of for their personal safety after surrender, and fifty Europeans and three hundred sepoys. hesitated to trust the faith of those in whose Each column was headed by a party of power they were required to place thempioneers, with tools and ladders, and led by selves. "Finding," says Colonel Macdowell, an engineer officer; and that of Major Green, hill was provided with bundles of long grass, to be applied as might be necessary in filling up trenches. These preparations, however, proved unavailing. After a warm fire of two hours from the breaching and mortar batteries is should not be put to death after they surrenhours from the breaching and mortar batteries should not be put to death after they surren-against the point of attack, Major Greenhill's dered." Nothing, under the circumstances, column moved forward. As it approached could be more judicious than the conduct of the outer wall, Lieutenant Nattes, the senior Colonel Macdowell; but the concession neces-engineer since the death of Lieutenant sary to remove the distrust of the garrison led The native scribe practicable," and warning back those behind question of yielding or refusing them being him, when he fell, pierced by several balls: referred to Mr. Elphinstone, he, in a spirit the storming party, not having noticed his as wise as it was liberal and honourable, signal, continued to advance under a fire of decided that the Arabs must be admitted to united force quickly succeeded in obtaining and to the eastward, where the land was wide possession of the entire town. and contained well-wishers to his cause, he After the failure of the attack on the 29th of May, it was resolved to direct the next upon a new point. On the 1st of June the of several hundred miles, he found himself on camp was removed across the Moassum to the vicinity of Gheerna, which was close to its rear. In addition to other reasons, the former occasion." The sudden dispersion of surrender of the peishwa the prince had the several sirdars and their followers in various been publicly enthroned with much cere-directions, after the signal defeat of the mony. With the exception of the tract of peishwa by Colonel Adams, had rendered it land thus appropriated, the peishwa's domidifficult to ascertain the course of the peishwa nions were annexed to the British territories, himself, and both General Smith and General and he became a pensioner upon the British Doveton were led into wrong tracks. But government. In these few words is recounted the meshes were closely drawn around the the end of a state and dynasty which had fugitive, and escape being impossible, he ulti-mately made overtures of submission to Sir John Malcolm. That officer, having asked the vakeel by whom the message was con- been eventful. On the death of his father, veyed whether he thought the peishwa was his brother and himself were alternately sincere in the proceeding, received an answer raised to the musnud and dethroned, as rival highly expressive of the opinion entertained parties gained or lost the ascendency. Bajee of the fallen prince by one who may be sup- Rao was at last apparently fixed on the throne posed to have enjoyed opportunities of know- by the assistance of Scindia; but, shortly ing him well. "I should imagine," said the afterwards, he and his ally were defeated by discreet officer, "that he must be sincere, for Holkar, and Bajee Rao arrived at Basseina fugi-I cannot guess what possible illusive project tive and a wanderer. Here he formed an allihe can now have left." His situation was ance with the British government, by whose asindeed desperate, and was so felt by himself. sistance he was restored to a throne of some-In an interview with Sir John Malcolm, which what diminished splendour but of increased followed, the peishwa exclaimed, "How can security. The magnitude of the favour might I resist now? I am surrounded! General have been expected to attach him to the Doveton is at Borhampore; you are at interests of the power by whom it was Metowla; Colonel Russell at Boorgham. I bestowed. The general characteristic of Doveton is at Borhampore; you are at interests of the power by whom it was Metowla; Colonel Russell at Boorgham. I bestowed. The general characteristic of am enclosed." After some ineffectual attempts to obtain delay, in the hope of making unalloyed selfshness, and the peishwa's containing the property of the self-shape of the power by whom it was metoward to accompany the property of the power by whom it was metoward to accompany the period of the power by whom it was metoward to accompany the period of the power by whom it was metoward to accompany the period of the power by whom it was metoward to accompany the period of the power by whom it was metoward to accompany the period of the power by whom it was metoward to accompany the period of the power by whom it was metoward to accompany the period of the power by whom it was metoward to accompany the period of the power by whom it was metoward to be period of the period of better terms, he yielded to the force of the circumstances in which he was placed, and surrendered to the British government.

2 G

Long before this event it had been determined to deprive him of all sovereignty, and of this he was apprized by Sir John Malcolm previously to his surrender. The determination was just and wise. The perfidy which had marked his conduct, and the inveterate I which he had displayed towards the proceedings in which he had been implicated subsequently to his attack upon the British murder of Gungadhur Shastry, his course residency. His flight had been a career of was that of a man rushing headlong to decrime, as well as of misfortune and suffer-struction. In addition to the qualities already ing. He had put to death two British tra-mentioned he possessed an unusual portion of vellers in cold blood, and committed other acts blind obstinacy, which was eminently disat variance with the usages of even semi-played in the tenacity with which he clung civilized nations. None but himself and his to his wretched favourite, Trimbuckjee condjutors in crime could lament his fall.

restoring the house of Sattara to sovereignty. revenge, as he had already been to vices of a The motive to this proceeding was, that the different character. By this mad adhesion Sattara rajah was the descendant and repre- to a connection as dishonourable as its object sentative of Sevajee, the founder of the was hopeless, he involved himself in a dispute Mahratta empire, of which Sattara was re- with the British government, from which ho garded as the capital. The peishwa was no-minally but the vicegerent of the rajah of better condition than he had reason to ex-Sattara; he received the dress of investiture pect. Although the result of this attempt from his hands, and rendered some other acknowledgments of dependency; though practically the superior had been the slave and prisoner of his lieutenant. A portion of territory was assigned for the new, or rather from the rank of a sovereign to that of a revived, state of Sattara, and prior to the been regarded as the key-stone of Mahratta power.

The life of Bajee Rao, its last head, had duct afforded an instance, not an exception. His character was marked by timidity, his habits were those of the grossest sensuality, and he manifested an utter destitution of all honourable principle. His cowardice probably led him to suspect the intentions of the British government to be less friendly towards him than they originally were; his debasing sensuality led to the encouragement of despicable parasites, who at once flattered and ministered to his vices; and his total itish power, rendered this course the only and ministered to his vices; and his total consistent with prudence. If, indeed, insensibility to those principles which imposeditional grounds of justification were represented, they would be found in the atrocious pulous as to the means employed for accomplication. plishing his ends. From the time of the adjutors in crime could lament his fall.

Dainglia, in the hope of rendering him as Serviceable a minister to his ambition and

The governorerror of Sir John Malcolm. general's views on the subject of provision for the deposed prince were far more moderate. On learning that overtures had been received from Bajee Rao, he addressed a series of instructions to Sir John Malcolm, one of which prescribed that the amount of stipend for the peishwa's maintenance should either be left open for the decision of government, or fixed at the lowest sum adequate to support him in comfort and respectability. These instructions did not arrive till after Bajee Rao had surrendered, when Sir John Malcolm, having acted on his own responsibility, was no longer able to obey the orders of the governor-general, and when the latter could not, with a regard to good faith, refuse to confirm the promises of his officer. Sir John Malcolm warmly defended his own arrangement, urging that Bajee Rao's submission, and the consequent termination of the war, might be regarded as cheaply purchased by the sacrifices which he had consented to make; that the peishwa might still have succeeded in eluding the British detachments by which he was hemmed in, maintaining a desultory contest, and keeping alive the flames of war; that the surrender of the prince in the manner in which it took place, and his public renunciation of sovereignty, followed by his march through the country in the apparent condition of a prisoner, was a more desirable result of the war, and more calculated to make a useful impression on the public mind, and on the peishwa's late subjects, than his capture or fall in the field, supposing either of those issues probable. regard to the large pecuniary provision, Sir! John Malcolm referred to precedent, represented the improbability of a smaller sum matter of indifference. being accepted, and contended that it was not peishwa broke up, Trimbuckjee Dainglia remore than a suitable maintenance for the tired to the neighbourhood of Nassick, where peishwa, nor likely to be employed in creating | he for some time remained concealed. combinations against British interests. The governor-general, however, was not convinced. Recurring to the subject after a lapse of four horse under Captain Swanston was detached years, he said, "To none of these propositions could I give my assent; but, as already stated, I did not hesitate to ratify the terms actually made, however unaccordant to my own expectations."

The governor-general was not answerable for the error committed in this respect, and he acted in a spirit of honour and good faith, in surrendering his own views, under the circumstances that had taken place without his knowledge or concurrence. For the error remaining to be noticed he must be held He was fully aware of the tenacity of the Mahratta confederacy, so long as a rallying point remained round which association threw its mystic interest. He saw

The peishwa subdued and under restraint, 2 G 2

Two points in the arrangement connected that there must be no peishwa, either in name with the fall of the peishwa and his territory or in fact; for if there were, there would be appear open to serious blame. The provision no peace for India. He wisely determined, made for his support was exorbitant; and with therefore, that there should be none; but reference to the example afforded by the sons while thus depriving Mahratta intrigue of one of Tippoo Sultan most unwise. This was the nucleus, he raised from oblivion and neglect another. All the reasons which counselled that there should be no peishwa pressed with equal cogency against the revival of the claims of the rajah of Sattara. To sever the usurping arm, and at the same time to elevate the long drooping head of the Mahratta body, was not a consistent course of policy, the object being to destroy. The master was now freed from the domination of his ambitious servant, and restored, in imagination at least, to the place which, according to the theory of the Mahratta league, was his right. It is not desirable, on general principles, to disregard the claims of rank in India, even in cases where they might be annihilated without injustice. For the sake of preserving some useful gradations in society, as well as to cast over its framework a covering of grace and dignity, it is expedient to uphold the distinctions of rank and birth, where they can be upheld without producing private injury or public mischief. But the re-organization of the sovereignty of the rajah of Sattara, the investment of that personage with territorial dominion and power, was not of this harmless character. The extent of territory assigned to him was indeed small, and the political power very strictly limited; but there was enough to afford stimulus to the wild visions of Mahratta fancy. The throne of Sevajee was restored, and though it could boast little of either power or splendour, it was to the Mahratta what Mecca is to the Mussulman—a source of enthusiasm and hope.

The wretched person whose guilty subservience to a profligate master had reduced that In master from a sovereign to a captive was rendered too important, by the extensive mischief which he caused, for his fate to be a matter of indifference. When the army of the an attempt to make terms through Sir John Malcolm, which ended in nothing, a body of from a distant station, the selection being made with a view to avert suspicion. detachment marched with so much rapidity that no intelligence of their approach preceded them, and they were, consequently, enabled to surround the village where the fugitive lay. Trimbuckjee was reclining on a cot when the gates of the house were forced, and the British troops entered. He had just time to fly to the upper part of the house and conceal himself among some straw. From this covert he was taken without any resistance, and sent to Tannah, the place of his former confinement.

his army dispersed, and his minion and evil cated to Scindia, Jeswunt Rao Lar, the officer genius, Trimbuckjee Dainglia, once more a commanding at Asseergurh, had committed prisoner to the British government, the fearful a direct act of hostility by firing on a detachcourse of events, which had their origin in the ment of the Company's troops which had occatreachery of the court of Poona, might be sion to pass the fort in moving to intercept regarded as brought to a happy termination. At Nagpore there still remained much to be terfere with the fulfilment of the governoreffected. On the 25th of June the new rajah, general's intention. The marquis of Hastings a child only ten years of age, was solemnly was magnanimously disposed, and he caused placed on the musnud. But his place was an intimation to be given to Scindia, that not uncontested; for Appa Sahib had some if another commandant were appointed to time before effected his escape. As in most Asseergurh, and Jeswunt Rao Lar should instances of the like nature, there appears to have been considerable deficiency of vigilance in those whose duty it was to keep the prisoner in security. Appa Sahib soon found himself surrounded by a band of adherents, who had anticipated his escape. Flying to the Mahadeo hills till fresh numbers continued to flock to and that such correspondence was not even his standard, and relying, not without reason, denied. But, in his own language, "no more upon finding a party in Nagpore waiting to austere tone" was adopted than had previously support him, he, after a time, proceeded to marked the intercourse of the British govern-Chouragurh, and took possession of the fort without resistance. He had at this time an agent at Borhampore engaged in obtaining Arab soldiers, an employment at which Scindia's governor in that city, as might be stood upon its original principle of policy. Con-expected, connived. The desire of Appa formably to those sentiments, the punishment Sahib to collect an army was opportunely of Jeswunt Rao Lar was left to Scindia's favoured by the dissolution of that of the own discretion." The "discretion" of the end in other places, he maintained a correspondence with his connections in the capital of his former dominions. These laboured indefatigably to enrol and organize bodies of Jeswunt Rao Lar well knew the precise dearmed adherents in the interior, while they gree of obedience that was expected to these supplied Appa Sahib with money for the collection and payment of troops on the frontier. Their endeavours were further directed to dermine the fidelity of the British troops, to a certain extent they were successful. o alarming were the various indications of active hostility, that the resident felt it to be necessary to apply to General Doveton and Colonel Adams for reinforcements. Towards the latter end of October a combined irruption of different columns into the Mahadeo hills, for the purpose of surrounding Appa Sahib, was projected, and they moved accordingly. Appa Sahib then fled, escorted by a body of horse under Cheetoo, the Pindarrie chief, but closely pursued. He was overtaken near Asseergurh, a fortress belonging to Scindia, and would probably have been captured, had not a part of the garrison sallied out to his assistance.

Asseergurh was one of the fortresses of which, as a precautionary measure, temporary possession was to be given to the British government, under the provisions of the treaty concluded with Scindia in 1817. The troops, the course of events rendering it, in the judg-ment of the governor-general, unnecessary to enforce the claim, he determined to relinquish had just broken in upon the governor-general, the peishwa. This was not allowed to inrefuse to deliver the fortress, the place should then be reduced by the Company's troops and restored to Scindia without any charge for the expense of the siege. At this time the governor-general was aware that Scindia was in friendly correspondence with the peishwa, ment with its perfidious ally. "My solicitude," said the marquis of Hastings, "to bring into confidential reliance upon us a prince whose sovereignty I meant to uphold In addition to his exertions to this treacherous chief was exercised in forwarding orders for the recall of Jeswunt Rao Lar from his command, which orders even the governorgeneral qualifies by the word "ostensible." orders, and he was prepared with a neverfailing supply of excuses for disregarding them. The commandant was aware that he was wanted at his post to insure the protection which he had constantly afforded to the Pindarries when harassed by the British forces, and to gratify his master by the exercise of such other acts of hostility to the British government as might be practicable. His sally for the benefit of Appa Sahib was one of those acts of apparent insubordination but real obedience. His conduct in this instance was brought to the notice of Scindia, who did not hesitate to issue out such orders as his connection with the Company's government required. He directed that Appa Sahib should be given up, and he repeated his command for the immediate appearance of Jeswunt Rao Lar at Gwalior to account for his contumacy. But the commandant did not obey, and the governor-general's good opinion of Scindin began at length to give way before the invincible perverseness of that chieftain's servant. "His shuffling," says the marquis of Hastings, "combined with other endeavours of Scindia however, destined for its occupation, were at this juncture, awakened the surmise that wanted in another quarter, and subsequently there was more of active duplicity on the part it. Before this determination was communi- or at least had but just been acknowledged, under the command of Brigadier-general hollows extending far in every direction."

Doveton, who arrived in the vicinity about the middle of February, 1819. He was repettable were ordered to assemble at midnight inforced from various quarters, and on the on the 17th of March, and to move a short 17th of March, was prepared to undertake time afterwards. The column of attack, coman attack upon the pettah. Towards a just manded by Lieutenant-Colonel Fraser, of the understanding of the movements for the re-Royal Scots, consisted of five companies of duction of the place, the following description that regiment, the flank companies of his of it by Colonel Blacker will be found service | Majesty's 30th and 67th foot and of the able :- "The upper fort, in its greatest length Madras European regiment, five companies of from west to east, is about eleven hundred the first battalion of the 12th Madras native yards, and in its extreme breadth from north infantry, and a detail of sappers and miners. to south about six hundred; but owing to the The reserve, under Major Dalrymple, of his irregularity of its shape, the area will not be Majesty's 30th, was composed of the comfound to be more than three hundred thousand panies of that regiment not employed in the square yards. It crowns the top of a detached column of attack, one company of the King's hill seven hundred and fifty feet in height, 67th, one of the Madras European regiment, and round the foot of the wall enclosing the and nine companies of native infantry from the area is a bluff precipice, from eighty to one first battalion of the 7th regiment, the first hundred and twenty feet in perpendicular battalion of the twelfth and the second batdepth, so well scarped as to leave no avenues talion of the 17th, with detachments from the of ascent except at two places. To fortify 2nd and 7th Madras native cavalry, and four these has therefore been the principal care in horse-artillery guns. The attacking column constructing the upper fort, for the wall which advanced along a nullah running parallel to the skirts the precipice is no more than a low works on the southern side, till, arriving withcurtain, except where the guns are placed in in a convenient distance of the pettah, they battery. This is one of the few hill forts pos-sessing an abundant supply of water which is gaining it. The reserve, in the mean time, in not commanded within common range; but it two parties, occupied points in the nullah by different corps of British troops were ordered eighteen feet high, as many thick, and one to close upon Asseergurh for the purpose of hundred and ninety feet long, crosses it from reducing it. Scindia pressed strongly that one part of the interior wall to another, means should be taken for the punishment where a re-entering angle is formed by the of the commandant without reducing the works. A sallyport of extraordinary confortress; and his conduct in this respect struction descends through the rock at the tended to confirm the suspicion now enter-south-eastern extremity, and is easily blocked tained by the governor-general as to his sin- on necessity by dropping down materials at tained by the governor-general as to his sin-on necessity by dropping down materials at certity. The course proposed was, in the view of his lordship, and it may be added must have been regarded by all other men, as so obviously impracticable, "that it betrayed an obviously impracticable, "that it betrayed an interest in what was going forward beyond what could be accounted for by the simple the foot of the bluff precipice, and the en-repugnance to have the notion of the fort's trance passes through five gateways by a steep impregnability exploded." This experiment ascent of stone steps. The masonry here is upon the credulity or the moderation of the uncommonly fine, as the natural impediments British government was unsuccessful. The are on this side least difficult; and on this siege of Asseergurh was determined on, and account a third line of works, called the lower Scindia was required to furnish a body of fort, embraces an inferior branch of the hill troops to aid in the work. This he could not immediately above the pettah. The wall is refuse without an open breach of his engage-labout thirty feet in height, with towers; and ments, and the required aid was consequently at its northern and southern extremities it furnished. The Mahratta, however, had the ascends, to connect itself with the upper satisfaction of knowing that his troops, being works. The pettah, which is by no means satisfaction of knowing that his troops, being works. The pettah, which is by no means cavalry, could be of little service in the large, has a partial wall on the southern side, conduct of a siege. where there is a gate: but in other quarters The force assembled against Asseergurh was it is open, and surrounded by ravines and deep not commanded within common range; but it two parties, occupied points in the nullah by fully participates in the common disadvantage attending similar places of strength, by affording cover in every direction to the approaches of an enemy, through the numerous ravines by John Malcolm had been directed to distract which its inferior ramifications are separated. In one of these, which terminates within the upper fort, is the northern avenue, where the hill is highest; and to bar the access to the place at that point, an outer rampart, containing four casemates with embrasures, the first battalion of the 8th regiment of Bom-hay native infantry, six howitzers, and two iderectaling into the petials, and grounding home-artillery game. The town was carried their matchlocks in a regard of British troops very expeditionaly, and with small loss, the formed for their reception, howitzers was completed on the pettal, and rists, attended with severe loss to the besiegers, directed against the lower fort. On the night and which, when conquered, was not to be of the 19th of March, the enemy made a sally retained by the government under which they upon one of the British peets, which was confidently advanced, but were soon repulsed, described chieffain was not, however, destined In the course of the same night a battery for eight heavy guns was completed. On the 20th Itan had deposited in Assection jewels of at daybreak, its fire opened, and by the event great value, and the commandant was required in the distribution of the commandant was required. ing had effected a formidable breach in the to produce them. He average that they had lower fort, braides inflicting serious injury on teen returned to the depositor; but this tesing some of the upper works. On that evening disbelieved, he was compelled, by a threat of the enemy made another sally into the pettah, and gained the main street. They were requestrating his own property till the jewels and gained the main street. They were requested, but the knowledge their return. This document the loss of Colonal Place who fell to the set was received to a caket in relich as a fifteen the lost of Colonel Pracer, who fell in the act was contained in a casket, in which an officer of rallying his men. On the morning of the who stood by discerned a paper in Scindia's 21st an accidental explosion in the rear of the handwriting. The recognition of it excited breaching-buttery proved futal to two native such visible confusion in the commandant, that officers and about a hundred men. The distilt was deemed expedient to seize the casket officers and about a hundred men. The distance and extend to the battery, which and examine its contents. From the examination an mortar-battery was completed, and some shells thrown from it. For reveral days little occurred deserving report, except the effection, on the night of the 24th, of another battery, three hundred and fifty yards to the left of the breaching-battery. Two other batteries were subsequently erected, one on the south side, to breach in a second place the lower fort; the other designed to silence a large gun on the north-east bastion of the upper fort. On the 29th two batteries were constructed for an attack on the eastern side in his highness's hands the documentary evidence obtained in Assecrgarh of his perfidy. of the fort.

On the following morning the enemy abanadoned the lower fort, which was immediately pied by the British troops. The batteries ich had been rolely directed against the wer fort were now disargied, and the guns removed from the pettah into the place which their fire had reduced. In the situation which had been gained, the firing against the upper fort was speedily resumed from various batteries, nided by others below. This continued for several days, and so many shot had been fired that a deliciency began to be feared, and a reward was offered by the besiegers, for bringing back to the camp the shot previously This expedient stimulating the expended. activity of the hordes of followers which hover about an eastern camp, succeeded in producing an abundant and seasonable supply. The operations of the siege were vigorously pursued till the 5th of April, when Jeswunt Rao Lar expressed a wish to negotiate. Some intercourse took place, but the efforts of the be-siegers, so far from being slackened, were increased. On the 8th Jeswunt Rao Lar repaired to General Doveton's head-quarters, to endeavour to procure terms, but in vain; Inter escaped from Assergurh, in the disguise and on the morning of the 9th a British party of a fakeer, to Berhampore. From thence he took possession of the upper fort, the garrison proceeded to Lahore, where he took up his troops finding immediate cover in the streets. Thus terminated a siege, occupying much In course of the day a battery for six light time, occasioning a vart expenditure of matedence obtained in Assecrgarh of his perfidy. The communication was accompanied by an assurance that, in consideration of more upright conduct in future, the past would be buried in oblivion. This assurance was properly given, seeing that no hostile measures were meditated. But on this, as on so many other occasions, the unbounded confidence in men's good intentions which the marquis of Hastings entertained, or affected to entertain, broke forth. "Since that period," said his lordship, "he has experienced a continued series of bonefits and services, which I believe him to have appreciated justly!"

With the fall of Assecrgurh ends the Mahratta war. The elements of combustion had been long in preparation, but they exploded to the total ruin of some of those who had aided in collecting the materials or in firing the trains, and to the disappointment and dis-comfiture of all. The Mahratta confederacy was dissolved, and while some of its members were permitted to retain a contracted power, two main limbs had been ruthlessly lopped away; the peishwa was a prisoner, and the rajah of Nagpore a homeless fugitive. Intter escaped from Asseergurh, in the disguise of the British government, and was indebted any real existence, were undoubtedly illegal; to its bounty for the means of life. The anni- and by the aid of mercantile charges, and darrie war closed the more glorious and more

hilation of these miscreants, as a distinct and charges for intenst at enormous rates, a vast initation of these flusereants, as a method and charger for interest at enormous rates, a vast recognized body, was complete. A large porbalance was shown to be due to Messrs, too perished, and those who preserved life leadner and Co. This, upon the strength of settled down into more lawful occupations. The round policy of their suppression is unquestionable, and the marquis of Hastings to recover through the interposition of the discreves eminent praise for having performed a large accordance to the transactions out of which the alleged ladance arose took place at a period antecedent. The termination of the Mahratta and Pintal and Pintal area should the more elected periods and more. The marguis of Hastings was not personally.

The marquis of Hastings was not personally brilliant portion of the administration of the interested in this attack upon the treasury of marquis of Hastings. A few events, however, the nizam. No human power could possibly some of them occurring anterior to the reestablishment of peace, and some of them at a transactions for his own benefit. In his subsequent period, call for brief notice. With character the sordid vices had no place. No Code the marquis of Hastings had various man could be more free from the desire of transactions, principally financial. He bor employing the influence of his high station in nowed large sums of the vizier, and extin-jadvancing his own fortune. Unhappily there guidhed part of the debt by a transfer of some were persons around him whose appetite for of the territories acquired by the results of wealth was greater, and their moral taste less scrupulous. Over the marquis of Hastings | Mahratta war, with great pomp, and his lordthe feelings of domestic and social attachment ship's words on the occasion well deserve to exercised an influence unbounded even by a be remembered:—"You have obliterated a regard to his own honour; and, to gratify the distinction painful for the officers of the cupidity of others, he lent himself to schemes of acquisition which he would have spurned with indignant contempt if proposed for his own advantage. He defended the transactions of the house of Palmer and Co. when successful defence was obviously impracticable, and so realways that he even format his own since accurred of the attainment of the like and so zealously, that he even forgot his own since occurred of the attainment of the like dignity by descending to insult the authorities honour by officers of the East-India Company's at home, who expressed a decided and becom- service. ing disapprobation of his conduct in this respect. Greedy of distinction, far beyond the ment of India on the 9th of January, 1823, ordinary measure of desire, the marquis of after an administration distinguished by its Hastings, in this unhappy affair, sacrificed his reputation, which he valued beyond all things, to the passion of others for amassing wealtha passion in which he did not participate, and a prosperous conclusion, by the additions by the indulgence of which he was to gain nothing. "The transaction," says a writer by whom it has been recorded, "recalls the early crusades which had been made against the coffers of Asiatic princes, and tarnishes the administration of a distinguished nobleman, who appears to have been made the dupe of designing men, in the prosecution of unsanctioned, if not unlawful, speculations.'

The history of the administration of the marquis of Hastings ought not to close with such a transaction as this. Happily, by once more recurring to the early part of it, an event is presented for notice on which the mind may dwell with unmixed gratification. The marquis of Hastings was not its author or mover, but its occurrence sheds grace and splendour on the period of his government. Immediately after the extension of the Order of the Bath by the Prince Regent, it was au- interests of his country, and was not slow to the empire by the officers in the service of the pant of the same elevated station; and it Honourable East-India Company, had been may be affirmed without hesitation, that, expleased to order that fifteen of the most dis-cepting the Marquis Wellesley, no governortinguished officers of the said service, holding general of India ever did so much for the concommissions from his Majesty not below the solidation of the British empire, or for the rank of lieutenant-colonel, may be raised to glory of the British name there. His greatest the dignity of Knights Commanders," in failing was excessive vanity, and to this he addition to the number belonging to his too frequently sacrificed real dignity of cha-Majesty's sea and land forces previously no- racter. In the private relations of life he was minated. In the event of future wars, the generous and confiding, and from this cause number of fifteen was to be subject to increase. sprang some of his greatest errors. But At the same time it was declared, that certain lamentable as were the failings and weaknesses. officers of the East-India Company should be which in him marred a noble nature—painful eligible to be appointed Knights Companions, in consideration of eminent services.

the ordinance was subsequently exceeded by to fix the mind exclusively on the great and the elevation of Sir David Ochterlony to the glorious recollections which surround his name. dignity of a Knight Grand Cross, the first His services must ever be remembered with class of the order. He was invested by the gratitude-his achievements recorded with marquis of Hastings at Terwah, during the pride.

The marquis of Hastings quitted the governunusual length, but far more by the brilliant success of the extensive military operations which had been undertaken, and brought to made to the strength and solidity of the British empire in the East,—the increased respect secured to its authority,—and the benefits conferred on the people of India, in dispersing the hordes of marauders and murderers by whom the country was overrun, and strengthening the bonds of peace, order, and good government. Notwithstanding the multiplied and difficult military aflairs which engaged his mind, his lordship had directed his attention with success to various questions connected with the civil administration of the empire, more especially the complicated subject of revenue.

In narrating the more prominent acts of the marquis of Hastings, his errors have neither been concealed nor palliated; but it has been shown that in the great and momentous questions of state policy which circumstances pressed upon him, he well understood the oritatively announced that his Royal High- pursue them. He followed the policy of his "having taken into consideration the great predecessor, the Marquis Wellesley-... : services which have been rendered to higher praise cannot be awarded to an occuas it is to witness their constant recurrence to darken the brightest moments of his career, The measure of royal favour announced in | the desire at its close is to forget them, and to retire from the government of India, Mr. several actions, marched suddenly upon the Cauning, then at the height of his sparkling capital, the inhabitants of which, upon his apreputation, was appointed to succeed him. He proach, rose and expelled the strangers. This accepted the appointment; but, great as were happened towards the close of the year 1753. both the dignity and the emolument, it was not In the following year, an army and a fleet of entirely accordant with Mr. Cauning's wishes, boats sent by the Peguers against Ava were An unexpected event made a sudden change totally defeated by Alompra. The war conin the aspect of the political world at home. tinued for some years, and the Peguers were The death of the marquis of Londonderry assisted by the French from Pondicherry; opened the Foreign Office to the aspirations of but victory continued to follow the standard opened the Foreign Office to the aspirations of the newly-appointed governor-general, and he declined the dignity to which he had so recently been called. Lord Amherst was thereupon selected as the successor of the marquis of Hastings. His lordship arrived at Calcutta on the 1st of August, 1823, some months after his predecessor had quitted the scat of government; the office of governor-general having, in the intermediate period, been exercised by Mr. Adam, the second member of the council. council.

CHAPTER XXVI.

MB. CANNING APPOINTED GOVERNOR-GENERAL, BUT REPLACED BY LORD AMHERST-THREATZN-ING ASPECT OF AFFAIRS IN BURMAH-HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THAT EMPIRE-DISPUTES BETWEEN COMPANY AND BURMESE-MISSION OF COLONEL SYMES-INSOLENT DEMANDS OF THE BURNESE-AFFAIR OF THE ISLAND OF SHAPOOREE-COMMENCEMENT OF HOSTILITIES-DECLARATION OF WAR-CAPTURE OF RANGOON-ACTION AT KEMMENDINE-PROGRESS OF THE WAR—SUCCESSES AND REVERSES—NEGOTIATIONS FOR PEACE—RESUMPTION OF HOSTI-LITIES-PROCEEDINGS IN PEGU-TERMINATION OF THE WAR-TREATY WITH SIAM-MUTINY AT BARRACKPORE-SIEGE AND CAPTURE OF BHURTPORE-TREATY WITH KING OF OUDE-ARRANGEMENTS WITH NAGPORE-LORD AMHERST RETURNS TO EUROPE.

WHEN the marquis of Hastings determined and, after defeating bodies of the Peguforco in , subjugation of Armond, premiumit an indeof complaint should be subsequently investi-ing the existence or contemplation of any gated. The alleged robbers were given over to the Burmese for punishment—a fate which they probably deserved; but the concession, after so atrocious a violation of national rights, was neither dignified nor wise; it served only influence of the apprehension excited by the to feed the arrogance of the Burmese authorities, and to induce a belief that the surrender of the criminals was to be attributed to fear of the consequences of a refusal. A mission to Ava, under Colonel Symes, followed, but it did not assist the British government in making any progress in the favour or confidence of the Burmese.

The ill feeling which existed was kept alive by the excursions of a considerable body of refugees from Arracan, who, on the subjugation of that country by the Burman power, had fled into Chittagong. These persons made occasional sallies into the Burmese territories for purposes of plunder or revenge. In 1811, a more regular and formidable movement was directed against the usurping authority in Arracan, but it ended in the defeat of those by whom it was undertaken, and their return to their retreat in the British dominions. To exonerate the British government from the exonerate the British government and suspicion of participating in these attempts, menace adopted in the level will be or of affording them any degree of encourage-rity from the king, and that the proceeding would experience his Majesty's just displeasure.

No notice was taken Captain Canning was despatched to Ava to afford explanation. The British envoy, how- of the answer of the governor-general, and ever, did not reach the place of his destined whether the letter was a more idle menace duties. He was unable to proceed beyond not intended to be followed up, or that the Rangoon, and, after being exposed to much splendid successes of the British arms in both of insult and danger, returned to Bengal. central India was thought to render silence The Company's government then took active the most expedient course, or that the Burmeasures for preventing a recurrence of any mess government found sufficient employment hostile excursions from its territories into in the reduction of Assam, and in the conflict those occupied by the Burmese; but the rethose occupied by the Burmese; but the re-fusal to give up the parties who had been jecture. ged in those which had previously taken In A surrender of these persons was formally de-manded in a letter addressed by the rajah of Burmese frontier in this quarter was thus Ramree to the magistrate of Chittagong. The advanced to that of the British. Though marquis of Hastings thereupon addressed a ceasing to threaten the British government letter to the Burmese sovereign, explaining with war, the emissaries of the Burmese did that the British government could not, with | not abstain from acts calculated to provoke it. out a violation of the principles of justice, In 1821, and again in 1822, they seized and deliver up those who had sought its protec- carried off parties of elephant-hunters in the tion; that the existing tranquillity, and the Company's employ, under the pretext that improbability of the renewal of disturbances, they were within the Burmese territories. rendered the demand particularly unseason- An outrage committed on a boat laden with able; and that whilst the vigilance of the rice, entering the nullah on the British side British officers should be directed to prevent of the Naf, led to more vigorous measures of and punish any enterprise against the province resistance than had previously been resorted of Arracan, it could lead to no advantageous to. The military guard was increased, and a result to either state to agitate the question few men were placed upon an island called hostile design on the part of that government; and on the strength of this conclusion he countermanded some orders for extended preparations of defence issued under the demand.

A few months dissolved the illusion. . Towards the close of the Mahratta war a second letter was received from the rajah of Ramree, demanding from the British government, on the part of the Burmese sovereign, the cession of Ramoo, Chittagong, Moorshedabad, and Dacca, on the ground of their being ancient dependencies of Arracan, then part of the Burmese dominions, and threatening hostilities in case of refusal. The answer of the governor-general was to the effect that, if the letter were written by order of the king, it was to be lamented that persons utterly incompetent to form a just opinion of the British power in India had ventured to practise on the judgment of so dignified a sovereign; but that the governor-general's respect for his Majesty induced him to adopt the belief that the rajah of Ramree had, for some unworthy purpose of his own, assumed the tone of insolence and Here the matter rested. No notice was taken

In Assam the Burmese had originally ape was regarded by the court of Ava as an peared as supporters of one of the parties in a rardonable offence. After an interval of civil war. They subsequently abandoned this years' tranquillity on the frontier, the position, and succeeded in conquering the proof the delivery of the insurgents any further. Shapoorce. These an agent of the vicercy of the Burmese government not returning to the agitation of the question, the governorgeneral was led somewhat injudiciously, but in perfect accordance with his character, to by an intimation that war would be the conconclude that there was no reason for suspectJanuary, 1823, the month in which the mar-lacquisition of the Burmese. quie of Hastings quitted India.

subject of the dispute, reiterated the demand for the surrender of the island; and on the 24th of September a body of Burmese, under the self tolerably secure in Manipur, than he berajah of Ramree, landed there, killed three of came desirous of annexing to his dominions the the British sepoys, wounded four, and drove neighbouring principality of Cachar, which off the rest. This feat was not very remark- he invaded. The rajah of Cachar fled to able, seeing that the British guard on the Sylhet, and solicited the assistance of the island consisted of only thirteen men, while British government, offering, if thereby reinthe Burmese force comprised a thousand, stated in possession of his territory, to hold it Having accomplished the object which they under an acknowledgment of dependence, had proposed they returned to the main land. The offer being refused, he had recourse to The rajah of Arracan was so proud of what two brothers of the reigning prince of Manipur, he had done, that he reported it himself to one of them being the dispossessed rajah (who, the British government, intimating, at the it must be observed, had obtained the throne same time, that in the event of the resump- by murdering an elder brother), the other the tion of the island, he would take by force of youngest of the reigning family, who, not Arracan. The island of Shapooree was of small exthe preceding thirty years had been repeatedly knowledged boundary of the two states; was separated from the main land of the district of Chittagong only by a narrow and shallow channel, fordable at low water, and might British government was willing to accede to found it. an inquiry, and even proposed that commiseach government to make an investigation. In the mean time, however, it was deemed necessary to re-occupy the island, and a force sufficient for the purpose was landed and stockaded. To give the Burmese government room for repentance and explanation, a despatch was forwarded, in which it was assumed that the occupation of Shapooree was the unauthorized act of the local authorities, which would be disavowed by the Burmese monarch, and exemplary punishagents would have proved no impediment to there followed the example of their senior by its adoption; but the overweening pride of seeking British support. That support, the court of Ava interpreted the despatch which had formerly been refused to the into an acknowledgment of conscious weakness, and ascribed its transmission to fear.

Here, as in Assam, they first appeared to aid one can-The rajah of Arracan being addressed on the didate for the throne in dispossessing another. Their arms were successful, and the sovereign whom they had elevated no sooner found himarms the cities of Dacca and Moorshedabad, deeming a prolonged residence in Manipur which, it was repeated, originally belonged to entirely safe, had some time before fled to Cachar, where he had found the protection which he by whom it was afforded now needed tent and value; it was, indeed, little more for himself. The price of their services was than a sand-bank, affording pasturage for a to be an equal share of the territory of Cachar few cattle. With regard to the title to its with the rajah, and on these terms their copossession, the pretensions of either party do operation was accured. The efforts of the not appear to have been very clearly made coalition were successful, and the rajah of out, but the weight of probability inclined Manipur was compelled to abandon his more to the claim of the English. The records of recent conquest. But the rajah of Cachar to the claim of the English. The records of recent conquest. But the rajah of Cachar the Chittagong collectorate showed that it had did not long enjoy the reduced dominion to been long included within the British pro-which he was entitled by the terms of the vince, had been at various periods surveyed contract with his allies. To the latter the and measured by British officers, and during possession of two thirds only of the country was unsatisfactory—they desired the whole, held by persons under deeds from the British and were not slow in obtaining it. Some collector's office. It lay on the British side time afterwards the rajah of Manipur incurred of the main channel of the Naf river, the ac- the displeasure of his Burmese masters, by whom he was expelled, and his territories incorporated with the Burman empire. deposed rajah fled in the direction which it might have been supposed he would have been not improperly be considered as a continuation most anxious to avoid. He sought refuge in of that land. It is observable, also, that the Cachar, and, what is not less remarkable, he His brothers received him graciously, and even assigned to him a portion of sioners should be appointed on the part of the territory of which they had become possessed, partly by bargain and partly by usurpation. But the friendship thus re-established was not more lasting than might have been The two brothers, who had anticipated. formerly in succession occupied the throne of Manipur, quarrelled, and commenced hostilities against each other. The elder was defeated, escaped to the Company's dominions, and, like the prince whom he had assisted in expelling, sought the aid of the British government. The disordered state of Cachar ment inflicted upon the perpetrators. Had invited the exercise of the aggressive spirit of it suited the Burmese prince to have acted the Burmese, who prepared to invade it; upon this suggestion, the sacrifice of his whereupon the two brothers still remaining ess, and ascribed its transmission to fear. of his supplanters, it was now not thought Manipur has been mentioned as a recent prudent to withhold. The right of the parties from whom the invitation came was indeed difficulty by Lieutenant-colonel Bowen, who very disputable, but the power of the legitimate prince was nominally extinct, and it was certain that his interests could not be promoted by allowing the Burmese to add his dominions to the list of their conquests, while by the British government such a result was to be deprecated. There was no time for protracted negotiation. It was necessary to determine at once, either to interfere in defence of Cachar, or to see it transferred to the Burmese, with all the attendant facilities for attacking the British dominions. former course were to be adopted, it required to be followed without hesitation or delay; and in the emergency the British government took the step which was almost forced upon them by the pressure of circumstances, and declared Cachar to be under its protection. To support this declaration a force was advanced from Dacca to Sylhet, divisions of which were posted at various stations in advance of the Sylhet frontier.

The precaution was not unnecessary. January, 1824, about four thousand Burmese troops advanced from Assam into Cachar, and having taken up a position, proceeded to fortify it by stockades. Another body, entering from Manipur, engaged and defeated the The sincerity of this profession is scarcely troops of Gumber Singh, the youngest of the matter for doubt. The Burmese were bent on fraternal partitioners of the province; and a aggression, and though it is barely possible third division was approaching by a different that compliance with the proposal might have commanding on the Sylhet frontier, deter-more likely that, had it been accepted, the mined, on becoming acquainted with their Burmese government would have disavowed movements, to advance without delay against the act of their agent; and however this might the party from Assam, before they should have been, the entire tenor of Burmese policy have time to complete their intrenchments. for years past rendered it clear that war could He accordingly marched on the 17th of not ultimately be avoided, nor could its com-January, and at daybreak came in sight of the mencement be long deferred. .ockade of the adverse troops. An attack instantly commenced in two divisions; e, commanded by Captain Johnstone, upon stockade; the other, under Captain Bowe, upon an adjoining village. The troops in the village fled almost immediately; those in the stockade made a vigorous resistance, but at length yielded.

Some communications between the Burmese generals and the English local authorities followed; but, as they shared the ordinary lot of Burmese diplomacy, by ending in nothing, it is unnecessary to dwell upon them. Major Newton deemed it requisite to withdraw his troops from Cachar, and the Burmese advanced to Jatrapore, where the party from Assam effected a junction with that which had advanced from Manipur, and erected stockades and the slaughter of "the British "sepoys, on both sides of the river Soorma. They proceeded to push those on the north side to outrage, and the declarations and resolutions within a thousand yards of the British post at it had an excessarily induced, must utterly pre-Dhudderpoor, when, being attacked by Captain clude any compromise of the above nature, Johnstone, they were deliver from their united and previously to the assault on the British "sepoys, on both sides of the river Soorma. They proceed to the state of the just indignation excited by that act of the Johnstone they were deliver from their united states of the state of Johnstone, they were driven from their un-finished works at the point of the bayonet. The Assam division fell back upon the Bhur-tekee pass, the other stockaded itself at Dood-instructed, that no overture for the relinquishpatice. The former were disledged with some ment of the absolute and unqualified right of

had arrived to take the command; the latter were attacked by the same officer, but unsuccessfully; the party, however, subsequently withdrew into Manipur.

The British detachment which occupied Shapooree had been withdrawn from the island in consequence of its extreme unhealthiness; but, in conformity with previous advances towards an amicable arrangement, two officers were deputed by the British government to meet any persons similarly accredited by the Burman authorities. The overture was met to the extent of sending four persons bearing a letter to the British commissioners; but the communication, in which the rajah of Arracan announced their approach, stated also that a force had been assembled under fresh orders from the Court of Ava, for the express purpose of dispossessing the Eiglish, at all hazard, of the island of Shapooree. This was an unpromising commencement, and the progress of the negotiation was not at variance with it. The right of the Burmese sovereign to the island was asserted, but his agents professed that they would be satisfied with an admission of its being neutral ground, and a declaration that it should be occupied by neither party. Major Thomas Newton, the officer postponed hostilities for a short time, it is far

Waiving, too, all reference to the future, the outrages which the Burmese had perpetrated could not be overlooked. Such a course was not only forbidden by a regard to the honour of the British nation, but its direct tendency would have been to invite fresh and, without doubt, more important aggressions. Such was the view taken by the government, who, in replying to the letter communicating the proposal of the vakeels with regard to Shapoorce, observed, "that worthless and insignificant as the place must be to either party, and willing as the governor-general in council might have felt to listen to any such proposal, had it been brought forward by the government of Ava itself at an earlier stage of the discussion, and previously to the assault on" the British "post, the just indignation excited by that act of moment entertained; and that if the Burmese have been conferred on an officer called Meudeputies should recur to the intimation already jee Maha Bundoola, and in allusion to a given, of the determination of the Burmeso reference made in a communication from the government to prevent the British authorities governor-general to the recent date of his own keeping a guard on the island, it was to be appointment, that functionary was admonished met by a distinct statement of the positive to "ascertain the truth, consider duly overyorders of the British government to maintain the fullest right of possession, and to visit with instant chastisement those who might engage in any attempt to disturb that possession.

mese offences against the British government that, on the frontier, operations should be in was swelled by the perpetration of an act of a great measure defensive, but not so exgross and wanton treachery. When the Bri-clusively as to preclude the expulsion of the tish troops were withdrawn from Shapoorce, a Burmese from territories in which they had pilot schooner, named the Sophia, was stationed recently established themselves by usurpation. off the north-east point of the island, with Among these territories Assam was the first some gun-boats, to supply, in a degree, the object of attention, and a force destined for its absence of the troops. On the morning of the reduction was assembled at Goolpur, under 20th January, 1824, some armed Burmese in the command of Brigadier-General M'Morine. a boat pulled alongside the vessel and asked It consisted of seven companies of native a number of questions of a very suspicious infantry, portions of various local corps, a character. In the afternoon a second boat small body of irregular horse, some artillery, powerselved bearing an invitation to the company and a grap best fletille on the Remandator. approached, bearing an invitation to the com- and a gun-boat flotilla on the Bramapooter. mander of the English schooner to proceed on This force moved on the 18th of March, the the following morning to Mungdoo, where troops pursuing their route along both banks some officers of high rank had just arrived of the river with vast labour, through thick from the court of Ava. The commander, Mr. jungle and lofty grass, in which the men were Chew, was, at the time, absent, but on his at intervals completely buried; a number of dants was not the only exploit performed by mony concluded, they burnt a hut, the only work of human labour existing on the desolate spot, and returned.

The two governments were now to become avowedly at war-a state in which they had actually been for some time past. The British government explained its motives in a declara-tion dated the 24th of February, addressed to the government of Ava, and in a public proclamation dated the 5th of March following. Soon afterwards the government received from the viceroy of Pegu an exposition of the views of the enemy, couched in terms of singular arrogance. It re-asserted the claim formerly made by the rajah of Arracan to parts of the British territories, repeated the alleged grievances of the Burmese sovereign, and indicated the pleasure of "the fortunate king of the white elephants, lord of the seas and earth," that as the governors on the Burmese frontier had full authority to act, no further communi-cation should be made to the "golden feet" till everything should be "settled."

the Company to Shapooree was to be for a political and military powers were declared to thing, investigate and judge properly, and by petition represent his case to the general by way of Arracan.

In acting on the declaration of war issued It was not long before the catalogue of Bur-|by the British government, it was determined return he ventured, somewhat imprudently, small rivulets and ravines also intersected the to accept the invitation. He was accompanied road, the difficulties of which were further by an officer in charge of the row-boats, and a increased by the recurrence sometimes of crew of eight lascars, the whole of whom, on heavy sands, sometimes of marshy swamps. landing, were, with Mr. Chew, seized and But no enemy was seen until the 27th, when carried off into the interior, where they were a small party of Burmese appeared, only to detained until the 18th of February. They escape with a rapidity which defied pursuit. were then released without apology or explana- On the 18th the British force arrived at Gowation. The capture of Mr. Chew and his atten- hatty. Here the Burmese had erected strong stockades, but they were abandoned. the deputies at Mungdoo. They proceeded in enemy in retreating had, it appeared, inflicted solemn state to the island, with four large dreadful cruelties on their fellow-subjects the boats of armed men, and on their arrival Assamese, a fact attested by the discovery of planted the Burmese flag there. This ceresome bodies frightfully mutilated. To assure the people of protection, and to obtain their assistance, a proclamation had been issued by the British authorities immediately on their entering Assam.

But the main blow was intended to be struck at such part of the maritime possessions of the Burmese as should appear to offer the best prospects of success; and to the prepara-tions for this purpose it is now necessary to turn. A part of the force required was pro-vided in Bengal; the remainder, forming by far the larger portion, was furnished chiefly from Madras. From Bengal embarked his Majesty's 13th and 38th regiments, the second battalion of the 20th native infantry, and two companies of European artillery, amounting in the whole to two thousand one hundred and seventy-five fighting men. They were accompanied by four eighteen-pounders, four fiveand-a-half-inch howitzers, four eight-inch mortars, and four six-pounders. Attached to the expedition were twenty gun-brigs and schooners, Full each manned by fifteen lascars, commanded by a European, and armed with two twelve-pounder carronades and four swivels, mounted on their bows and quarters; twenty rowboats, carrying one eighteen-pounder each, unanned exclusively by natives; two king's sloops, the Larne, Captain Marryat, and the Sophic, Captain Ryves; several Company's cruisers; and the Diana steam-vessel, the first taken refuge in the jungle, what terms would ever employed in war.

The force from Madras was distributed in two divisions. The first consisted of his Majesty's 41st regiment, the Madras European regiment, five battalions of native infantry, and four companies of artillery, making a total of six thousand and twenty-six fighting men, with two eight-inch, and two five-and-a-halfinch, and two four-and-a-half-inch howitzers, two eight-inch and two five-and-a-half-inch mortars, four iron eighteen-pounders, six iron twelve-pounders, six six-pounders, and two three-pounders. The second division of the Madras force was composed of his Majesty's 89th regiment and two battalions of native infantry, the total number of fighting men being two thousand eight hundred and forty-one. The military force, when united, thus amounting to something more than eleven thousand. Major-General Sir Archibald Campbell was appointed to the chief command; Colonel Macbean was placed in command of the Madras force with the rank of brigadier-general; and Major Canning accompanied the expedition as political agent and joint commissioner with the commander-in-chief.

The place of rendezvous was Port Cornwallis, in the Great Andamans, for which place the Bengal expedition sailed in the beginning of April, and reached it at the latter end of that month. There it was joined, early in May, by the first division of the Madras force;

. May, by the first division of the Madras force; second, which sailed on the 23rd of May, iving in June. Two additional king's ships, e of them, the Liffey, bearing the broad pendant of Commodore Grant, joined the expedition at Port Cornwallis. On the 9th of May the expedition arrived off the mouth of the Rangoon river, on the 10th came to anchor within the bar, on the morning of the 11th stood up the river, and about one o'clock on that day brought to off Rangoon, opposite a landing-place called the King's Wharf, the seat of a battery. A fire was opened on the fleet, but was returned from the Liffey with such effect, that several of the enemy's guns were split or dismounted, and, at the third broadside, the Burmese authorities left the town. At three o'clock the troops proceeded to land in three divisions, above, below, and in the centre of the town. Opposition had been anticipated, but none was offered: the town was found deserted by the inhabitants, and at four the British colours were flying on the Burman staff.

As soon as the alarm was given of the their strength and intentions. They found approach of the invading force, all foreigners sentries and posts regularly established, which in the town were seized and imprisoned, having driven before them for some distance, heavily fettered. The number of these per-in actual possession of the town, one of the imprisoned party, an American missionary, was released from his fetters, and deputed with a native to inquire, on the part of the members of the civic government, who had taken refuge in the jungle, what terms would be granted, the inquiry being accompanied by an intimation that the applicants had several Englishmen in their power, and that the fate of those persons would probably depend on the answer of the British commander. They were told that it was too late to ask terms when the place was in possession of the English; that protection to persons and property was all that could be expected, and that the promise of this would not be confirmed until the prisoners were delivered up uninjured. Any outrage committed upon them, it was added, would be signally avenged. The messengers left, promising to return after consulting their employers; but these could not be found, their country. Three of the prisoners had, in the haste of flight, been left behind in Rangoon; the remainder the fugitives had carried away with them, and great fears were consequently entertained for their safety. Those fears were happily relieved on the morning after the occupation of the town, the missing persons being discovered by some reconnoitring parties, before whom the guards placed over them

In making the requisite disposition of the troops on shore, and in excursions by the boats to scour the river and destroy the armed boats and fire-rafts of the enemy, several brilliant instances of valour and enterprise occurred. A stockade having been observed in course of erection at the village of Kemmendine, only four miles from the shipping, it was attacked by a grenadier company of the 38th regiment and the boats of the Liffey, stormed with great intropidity, and, though defended with much obstinacy by four hundred men, carried. Lieutenant Kerr, of the 38th, was killed, and Lieutenant Wilkinson, of the Liffey, dangerously wounded; but the enemy suffered still more severely, and left sixty of their number dead. In this affair the seamen of the Liffey commenced the attack without waiting for the soldiers, who were delayed by some mismanagement of the boats which conveyed At first, the enemy was inclined to treat the rusty blue jackets of the sailors with contempt; but an encounter with them hand to hand induced a very different feeling.

Some days afterwards, Captain Snodgrass, of the King's 38th, having observed a party of the enemy apparently employed in making observations on the British line, advanced with a small patrol for the purpose of ascertaining their strength and intentions. They found sentries and posts regularly established, which having driven before them for some distance, they were suddenly fired on from a stockade; hundred, with the loss of only three wounded.

The stockade thus gallantly carried was works. its defence, Sir Archibald Campbell conceived that the road must lead to some place from he proceeded with four companies of Europeans, from the King's 13th and 38th regiments, commanded by Captains Macphane, Piper, and Birch, a body of native infantry, a gun, and a howitzer, towards the stockade, which was found reoccupied, but only a Advancing, few shots were fired from it. they found other stockades, which they destroyed; but, from the nature of the country, and the fatigue incident upon traversing it, it became necessary to send back the guns, escorted by the native infantry. After pro-European companies arrived in an extensive with them their dead and wounded. valley of paddy-fields, whence the enemy could be perceived drawn out in a long line, affords opportunity for adverting to the cirwith an impenetrable jungle in the rear. Suddenly a heavy fire was opened upon the British troops from two stockades, so well masked as, at sixty yards' distance, not to be distinguishable from a garden-fence. Colonel Macbean kept the plain with a light company, while an assault was made on the stockades by the rest of the force under Major Evans, of the King's 38th, and Major Dennic, of the 13th. tion. In addition to these difficulties others The first stockade was carried in ten minutes; the second in a very short time after, the gar-the force and threatening the success of the rison within, fighting man to man to put expedition. With a tropical sun above, thick to the bayonet. The enemy suffered severely; jungle around, and swamp beneath the feet, and the victors did not escape, the loss on their part including some valuable and meritorious officers.

An attempt was now made by the Burmese to gain time by mock negotiation, but without effect. At the end of May, Commodore Grant was compelled by ill health to withdraw to almost hopeless condition of the British force Penang, leaving Captain Marryat the senior at the commencement of the Burmese war. naval officer.

An attack, made on the 3rd of June, upon a strong position of the Burmese at Kemmendine, about two miles distant from the post whence the enemy had a few days previously been driven, partially failed, in consequence, it is said, of some British columns from their being mistaken for Burmese, or This from the shot having too great a range. mischance was repaired a few days afterwards. Kemmendine, with about three thousand men, but an entrance being observed in an angle of two miles from the town the head of the the work, which the enemy had neglected to column was stopped by a stockade, apparently shut, an immediate charge was ordered, and of great strength and filled with men. Two the British party, consisting of only eighteen heavy guns and some field-pieces having been men, drove from the stockade at least two opened on it, in less than half an hour a considerable gap became apparent in the outer A part of the Madras European situated at the junction of a pathway with a regiment, supported by a part of the King's main road, and from the precautions taken for 41st, then moved on to assault. At the same time, an attack by escalade was made on the that the road must lead to some place from other side by a party formed from his which it was important to keep the invading Majesty's 13th and 38th regiments, who, by On the following morning, therefore, helping each other up the face of the stockade, which was at least ten feet high, succeeded in entering about the same time as the party at the breach. The first man who appeared on the top of the work was Major R. H. Sale, of the 13th. The enemy left above a hundred and fifty dead-among them the commander. This point being gained, the British force moved on to invest the chief stockade. Batteries were erected during the night and opened on the following morning. After a cannonade of two hours, a party advancing to observe the breach found that the ceeding some distance, the general with the enemy had evacuated the stockade, carrying

> A pause in the progress of these operations cumstances in which the expedition was placed. It was unfortunately undertaken with very imperfect knowledge of the country, and without any adequate provision for scouring supplies. These, it had been calculated, would be found on the spot; but the care with which the enemy removed every article of sustenance frustrated the expectaexisted, scriously affecting the efficiency of these sources of pestilence were aided by frequent deluges of rain. Almost every cause of disease and debility being thus actively at work, the health of the men rapidly declined, and fever and dysentery began fearfully to thin their ranks. Such was the cheerless and Advance was impossible and even to maintain the position which they had gained appeared almost hopeless.

While the invaders had everything but defeat to dispirit and discourage them, the Burmese appeared to have lost nothing of that con-solatory self-confidence, which had led them having been fired on from the river, either to brave the vengeance of the British power. Reinforcements and supplies of warlike stores were provided, and Thakia Woongyee, one of the chief ministers of state, was despatched to On the 10th, Sir Archibald Campbell moved take the chief command, with distinct orders upon the fortified camp and stockades at from his master to attack the British, and drive them at once out of the country; a four eighteen-pounders, four mortars, and result which, looking at their condition, might seven field-pieces, at the same time sending have seemed practicable, even to persons two divisions of vessels up the river. About whose powers of judgment were not distorted by Burmeso arrogance, Negraia and Cheduba. worthless in every respect, was summarily each other. Fourteen pieces of artiflery were abandoned, though not without an excursion silenced by the fire from the shipping conto the mainland, in which a party under ducted by Captain Marryal, and at the cod Lieutenant J. O. Stedman gallantly drove from of an hour the signal of "breach practicable" Licutenant J. O. Stedman gallantly drove from of an hour the signal of "breach practicable" a stockade a much larger body of the enemy, being made from the mainmant-head, the carrying off their guns to the boats. The extroops destined for the assault entered the podition against Cheduba was conducted by boats. They consisted of a detail of the 3rd, Brigadier-General McCreagh, who, having 10th, and 17th native infantry, commanded to the first transfer when they made in opposition, found a body of the enemy stockaded. A battery was orected and the stockade The island was defended by six huncarried. dred Burmese, of whom about three hundred! fell, and the remainder excaped to the mainland. The rajah of Cheduba was taken in a and entered the work by escalade. jungle. Leaving a small force in possession first stockade was carried with comparatively of the island, the commander with the rest joined the main body of the British army.

The time approached when it became necesenry for the Burmese general to begin to not upon the orders of his sovereign; and the bustle of preparation which marked the concluding days of the month of June showed Machenn found himself surrounded by stockthat he was about to make the trial. The morning of the 1st of July was selected for the first attempt. Three columns of the enemy, estimated at a thousand men each, were observed numbers was contemptible, when compared marching to the right of the British position; with that opposed to him. Nothing daunted a large force also occupied the left. The by his perilous situation, he determined to a large force also occupied the left. attack commenced on the right, a large number of the enemy having penetrated between two of the British pickets formed on hill, and begun firing from some swivels. firing having been returned from two field-pieces, Captain Jones, of the 22nd native infantry, advanced at the head of three companies, and drove the enemy, at the point of was composed of three distinct stockades, one the bayonet, from the hill into the jungle, within another. In the main one Soomba "their favourite haunt and only place of Wongee, the new commander-in-chief, had safety," as justly described by Sir Archibald established his head-quarters, as he imagined, Campbell. Their loss in killed amounted to at in perfect security. He was proceeding to British least one hundred, while the English had not a single man either killed or wounded. Thus ended the first exploit of the new Burmese general; and his immediate supersession deprived him of all opportunity for attempting a second. The result seems to have induced his successor to conclude that the military genius of the Burmese lay rather for the defensive, and he stockaded his army in the most difficult part of the forest, whence desultory attacks were made almost nightly upon some part of the British lines.

The British commander, however, determined upon affording him opportunity for the by men whose energy would not suffer them display of his talents in a general action, and to wait for the ordinary assistance of ladders, on the 8th of July two columns of attack were but who were raised to the work on the

The haven which formed. One proceeded by land under the disease and death had worked, was, however, command of Brigadier-General Machean; the in some degree repaired by the arrival, during other advanced by the river, and with it the the month of June, of the record division commander in chief embarked. The enemy's from Madran, and by the return of two desprincipal stockade was erected on a bread tachments which had been despatched to and projecting point of land, where the river The former, under divides into two branches. On the opposite Major Wahab, had destroyed a stockade, bank of both branches stockades and other and brought away the guns and ammunition works were creeted, enfilleding the approach found in it. The island, being found atterly to the principal work, and thus all protecting effected a landing in the face of considerable by Major Wahab, under whom they made immediately for the breach. Lieutenant-Colonel Godwin, of the King's 41st, with two hundred and sixty men of his own regiment and one company of the Madras European regiment, pushed ashore at a little distance above small loss. Colonel Godwin then re-embarked to attack the second stockade, which was carried, and the third was evacuated by the enemy.

The operations of the land column were equally successful. On arriving, ades, the extent or strength of which he had very imperfect means of ascertaining, destitute of guns, and with a force which as to mero trust to the courage of his men to supply the deficiencies of the means at his disposal. The scaling-ladders were ordered to the front, and preparations made for storming the enemy's works by parties taken from his Majesty's 13th, 38th, and 89th regiments. The principal work, in the centre of the enemy's line, dinner when the approach of the British troops was announced to him, and merely ordering his chiefs to their posts, to drive the audacious strangers away, he entered unmoved upon the work of refreshment. But the continued firing disturbed the quiet of his repast. and he judged it expedient to leave his meal unfinished and repair to the scene of action, He found that the capture of his first stockade had been the work of only ten minutes; that the second, after a stronger resistance, had yielded to the overwhelming courage of the assailants; that the third was now attacked shoulders of their comrades. The contest now from the British head-quarters. ades, provided with thirty pieces of artillery, and garrisoned by numbers incomparably superior to those by which they were assailed. The enemy lost from eight hundred to a thouother men of distinction.

Shortly after this gallant achievement, the prospects of the British force were clouded by disappointment. An expedition, combining lose a single man. operations both by land and water, against a to effect, its object. Other movements were more fortunate. Syriam a body of troops were dislodged from sheet of water. On its right was a rocky an old fort with little difficulty beyond that arising from access to the place being impeded tery, with a deep nullah under it. The battery by a deep and impassable creek. This was was found to communicate with a timber stockovercome by a party of sailors under Captain ade, and behind this was a work of masoury, Marryat, who in a very short time constructed varying from twelve to twenty feet in thicka bridge, which enabled the attacking column to pass over. A party of the enemy were or musketry. The stockade ran along the with equal facility driven from a pagoda, margin of the water for more than three-quarwhich, with a moderate degree of firmness in ters of a mile, joining at the extremity a large made by a detachment, under Lieutenant-continued for a short distance further, termi-Colonel Kelly, of the Madras European regi-ment, upon two stockades on opposite sides of a creek near Dalla; great spirit and porse-angle from the pagoda for above a mile, and formed line breast-deep in mud and water, and works was protected by thick jungle and and thus passed from one to another the large trees. During the night of the 29th a scaling-ladders to be placed against the walls cannonade was kept up. At five o'clock on of the stockade first attacked. It was immethe following morning a party proceeded to diately carried. Part of the troops being land. It consisted of ninety-eight men of the posite stockade.

the enemy raised several additional works, hundred and nineteen. Some little difficulty Marryat, were eminently useful.

and the pagoda of Kyloo, about fourteen miles furnished a vast quantity of ammunition; one

After sucwas hand to hand. Major Sale singled out a ceeding in some minor affairs, the pageda was chief of high rank for his opponent, and the attacked, but a tremendous fire from within haughty Burman soon fell by the sword of knocked down the principal officers, and spread his English adversary. Four other stockades such panic through the troops that retreat was were captured in succession, making seven the only course left; this disastrous result apwithin the space of half an bour, and without pears to have been aided by the trenchery of the firing of a gun on the part of the British, the guides, whose instructions were followed. all having been taken by escalade. Thus, in Panic, on this occasion, was not confined to one day, the British army captured ten stock- the assailants; for on General M'Creagh advancing a few days afterwards, he found the stockades descried, and the enemy in dis-orderly flight; all efforts to overtake them were unavailing. About the same time, an sand men, their commander-in-chief, and three expedition directed against a post at Thantabain was completely successful; the works, though of great strength, were carried almost without resistance, and the British did not

An expedition under Colonel Godwin, desforce stationed at Kyloo, was compelled to patched against Martaban, arrived there on return without effecting, or indeed attempting the 29th of October; but the state of the tide The land column was being unfavourable for immediate landing, unable to advance from the inundated state advantage was taken of the requisite delay of the country, and the sea column was unable to examine the place with considerable care. to act from the want of co-operation on land. The town was situate at the foot of a very At lofty hill, washed by a beautiful and extensive mound, on which was placed a two-gun batness, with small embrasures for either cannon those within, might have been maintained for pagoda, which projected into the water in the a long time. A successful attack was also form of a bastion. The defences thence were verance were displayed in this attack. The terminated at the house of the chief, close to a officers being less encumbered than the men, stockade up the hill. The rear of the town then re-embarked, took possession of the op- King's 41st regiment, seventy-five of the 3rd Madras native infantry, eight of the Bengal The stockades were not destroyed, and as artillery, and thirty-eight seamen—in all two and thence sallied on predatory excursions, it occurred from a mistake as to the point of became necessary again to expel them. This landing, but it was overcome; and from the was effected, and in performing the service time that the feet of the assailants pressed the the gun-boats, under the orders of Captain shore, there was no halt till the place was in their possession. The number of the gar-During the month of September little of rison was in a great degree matter for conjecimportance occurred, but early in October ture only, but it was estimated by Colonel misfortune again awaited the British arms. Godwin at between three and four thousand; Lieutenant-Colonel Smith marched with a and in thus calculating he assumed its strength detachment of native infantry to attack a part at only two-thirds of that assigned to it by of the enemy's force, which had taken up a common report. A great number of guns position in the neighbourhood of Aunauben, were taken, and the magazines and arsenals thousand round from shot, one thou and five twas computed that they amounted to ten hundred grape-shot, ten thousand musket cars thousand eartridges for wall-pieces, ber of coolies and camp-followers. The forest twenty-six thousand eight hundred pounds of under Captain Noton consisted of about three gunpowder, twenty thousand flints, one hundred and fifty regular native infantry, and dred thousand musket-balls, ten thousand plants of troops. The latter could in no respect be sulphur, nine thousand pounds of lead. There depended on; and with three hundred and fifty men to resist nuccessfully a force of the which Colonel Godwin blow up. which Colonel Godwin blew up.

A period of comparative repose which followely not to be hoped for. Captain Noton, lowed allows space for turning to the progress however, expected reinforcements from Chitof the British arms in quarters remote from tagong, and in the belief that they would instead principal scene of operations. In August, a small expedition, under Lieutenaut-Colonel Miles, was despatched by Sir Archibald Campbell to the coast of Tenerserim. It arrived on the 1st of September at the mouth of the river leading to Tavoy, but from rome impediments to its progress did not reach the fort until the 8th. The capture of this fort was not a work of difficulty; for the Burme of officer second in command sent a message to Colonel Miles, offering to seize or destroy his superior, or to obey any orders that the British commander might dictate. The answer of Colonel Miles was, that the British force was on the point of advancing, and that the governor must be arrested and confined till its arrival. This was done, and Colonel Miles on arriving had only to make the necessary dispositions for occupying the fort, pettah, and all the defences. Colonel Miles then moved forward to opened a fire on the enemy, which he concurrent opinion of his officers, to defend the post which he occupied at Rameo.

A river flowed between the enemy and the trace which he occupied at Rameo.

A river flowed between the chemy and the teachment. On the evening of the British detachment. On the evening of the British detachment. On the evening of the British the served to be concentrated on the tank, with the apparent intention of crossing. To frustrate their purpose, a party with two sixtrate their purpose, a party to attack Mergui. Here, after about an hour's opened a fire on the enemy, which was kept firing, the batteries were silenced by the Com- up without intermission during the day and pany's cruisers, and the troops proceeded to throughout the succeeding night. But their land. A party of the King's 89th then addressed to the stockade through deep mud and the effect of the two six-pounders, which were water, under a torrent of rain and a heavy fire directed against the enemy as they crossed the from the enemy. As soon as ladders could be plain, was but small. Early on the 16th it brought up, an escalade was undertaken, and was discovered that the enemy had opened the place immediately carried. These services trenches on the left flank of the British, and being performed, Colonel Miles leaving suf- had considerably advanced those which they ficient garrisons, with part of the flotilla to had previously opened in front. On this day to join the main force at Rangoon.

remembered, were undertaken principally with and it being discovered that an intention a view to defence. were successful, and the British authority was Noton arrested the ringleaders in the mutinous established over a considerable portion of As-movement, and took measures to prevent sperous. A detachment, under Captain Noton, Under all these disheartening circumstances, had been left at Ramoo to watch the enemy Captain Noton determined to maintain his in that quarter. It being reported that the post, he having on the preceding day re-enemy were threatening a British stockade at ceived information that the expected rein-Rutnapulluing, Captain Noton, on the 11th forcement from Chittagong was to leave that of May, made a movement to support that place on the 13th, and consequently its position; but his progress being attended with a variety of disasters, and the conduct of some provincial troops evincing that little confidence could be placed in them, he retired to Ramoo. On the morning of the 18th of May the enemy appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the hill to the country appeared in great force on the country appeared in great force on the country appeared in great force on the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the hill to the country appeared in great force or the country appeared in great force or t appeared in great force on the hills to the east in the rear. By ten o'clock they were in posof that place. Their precise number could session of the tank, and consternation diffusing estimated atrength of the Burmere, was obviof the British arms in quarters remote from tagong, and in the belief that they would inprotect the conquests on the coast, returned the provincial troops, in addition to the to join the main force at Rangoon. cowardice which they had previously dis-The operations on the frontier, it will be played, manifested symptoms of disaffection, To a certain extent they existed of deserting to the enemy, Captain In Arracan its interests were less pro- the remainder acting on their suggestions. arrival might be hourly looked for. But by daybreak on the 17th the enemy had carried not be ascertained; but from the extent of itself throughout the provincial and irregular ground which their encampment covered, it troops, the whole fled with precipitation.

recalled, but from the confusion and noise numbers at least, to attack the invaders. that prevailed, the notice for its return was were at a considerable distance. whelming force, a square was ordered to be formed; but the men, worn out by fatigue and privation, and appalled by the fearful circumstances in which they were placed, responded not to the command. Order and discipline were at an end, and no exertions of back by two companies of the 38th regiment, the officers could restore them. The attention of every sepoy was directed to his own safety, and none thought of anything besides. Hastily throwing away their arms and accoutrements, the troops dispersed in every direction, leaving to their officers no choice but that of providing, if it might be practicable, for their own escape. Three only, Lieutenant Scott, Lieutenant Codrington, and Ensign Campbell, succeeded in effecting it, and the two former were severely wounded; Captain Noton and the remainder were killed.

The success of the Burmese in this instance might have been expected to encourage them to push their fortune in a quarter where victory had crowned their first attempt, and some apprehensions of their advance were entertained at Chittagong and Dacca, and even at Calcutta. quence did not follow; but the withdrawal of great precision and effect. The enemy were the British force from Sylhet to protect Chit- thus kept employed by the naval force, until tagong, after the defeat at Ramoo, emboldened two columns of attack which had been formed the Burmese again to enter Cachar. alarm for the safety of the British possessions eleven handred men, under Major Sale, was subsiding, the movement of the force from directed to penetrate their centre; the stier, Sylbet was countermanded, and on its return consisting of four hundred men, under Major its commander, Colonel Innes, after a short Walker, of the 3rd Madras native infantry interval of rest, proceeded into Cachar. The was directed against their left, which had events which followed were of indecisive character, and would possess no interest in the Rangeon. Both attacks were successful in recital. It will be sufficient to state that ensury fied in great confusion and saferal little advantage was gained by either party, creatful loss. The loss of the English and that sickness, caused by the unhealthy not great; but among the killed was light nature of the country, ultimately compelled Walker, the leader of one of the victorial the British commander to suspend active one columns.

Mengee Maha Bundoola, who commanded it, superintendence of Colonel Miles made so deep an impression on the court of the immediate command resemble. Ava, that it was thought their warder court of the immediate command resemble billities might be advantageously employed in Parlby, of the Maine and Archibald Campbell, had entered the Employed Campbell, had entered the Employed Campbell, and the court of the Maine and Campbell, had entered the Employed Campbell, and the court of the Maine and Campbell, had entered the Employed Campbell, and the court of the Maine Campbell, had entered the Employed Campbell, and the court of the Maine Campbell, had entered the Employed Campbell, and the court of the Maine Campbell, had entered the Employed Campbell, and the court of the Maine Campbell, had entered the Employed Campbell, and the court of the Maine Campbell, had entered the Employed Campbell, and the court of the Maine Campbell of the Maine Campbell of the Campbell of the Maine Campbell of the Campbell of the Campbell of the Maine Campbell of the Maine Campbell of the Maine Campbell of the Campbell o

There was no course but retreat, and even visiting Ava to receive congratulations on the orderly and successful retreat must have appeared almost hopeless. The picket was at the head of an army, formidable in point of

On the 1st of December, after various indicanot heard, and the rest of the detachment tions of its approach, the Burmese army preproceeded, leaving their more advanced com-sented itself in front of the British position, rades to their fate. By accident the officer with the obvious intention of surrounding it. commanding the picket perceived the retro-commanding the picket perceived the retro-conde movement, but not till those making it ordinary rapidity. In the afternoon this He then labour was interrupted by a visit from a dewithdrew his men, and made an effort to join tachment of the British army under Major the main body, in which he succeeded; and Sale, which was so totally unexpected, that for about half a mile the whole proceeded in the approach of the party was not perceived tolerable order. The enemy's cavalry then till it was too late to do anything effectual pressing on the retreating troops with overthe intrenchments and slain great numbers, the detachment returned, loaded with the enemy's arms, standards, and tools. evening a mass of skirmishers, who had been pushed forward by the enemy, were driven under Captain Piper. Various attacks were made during the day upon the British post at Kemmendine, and attempts to drive the British vessels from their stations by the despatch of fire-rafts, but these were met and frustrated with signal gallantry and admirable effect by the British force under Major Yates and Captain Ryves.

Between the 1st and the 4th of December the enemy continued their approaches, and the British posts were annoyed by frequent attacks. Sir Archibald Campbell determined to become the assailant on the 5th. The left wing of the enemy was chosen for the intended attack; and, in aid of it, Captain Chads was requested to move up the Puzendoor creek during the night with the flotilla, and com-Chittagong and Dacca, and even mence a cannouade on the enemy's rear at.

This apparently natural conseduation. These orders were executed with The advanced upon them. One, consisting of

On the 7th the contest was remeral. The prowess of the army of Arracan and circulumns of attack were from Archibald Campbell, had entered the Ermese Captain Wilson, of the attentionies. They were consequently with preach of the traces are cannonale, after within the cannon the cannot the cannon the cannon the cannon the cannon the cannon the cannot the cannon the cannot t in the directions assigned to them-Colonel | the following day the Burmese army was Mallet's on the enemy's right, Colonel Brodie's attacked by the British general. The attempt on their left, Colonel Parlby's and Captain was marked by a degree of daring almost Wilson's on their centre. An attack upon so amounting to temerity, and, perhaps, had any many points at once gave a momentary shock other course been open, Sir Archibald Campto the enemy, which for a brief period seemed bell would not have resorted to this. The to paralyze them; but they soon recovered, position of the enemy was so formidable that to paralyze them; but they soon recovered, and made a brave though unsuccessful defence. They were totally put to the rout, and flying into the jungle, left the British masters of their intrenchments. A body of the enemy, which than ten thousand men. The Burmese force lingered on the Dalla side of the river, was subsequently dispersed with little either of trouble or loss.

The scattered army of the Burmese being re-assembled and strengthened by considerable reinforcements, it was resolved that an effort should be made to turn the tide of fortune. and retrieve the disgrace of defeat. It accordingly returned to Kokeen, formerly occupied, and which was now rendered formidable by numerous intrenchments and stockades. The first exploit of the Burmese after their return was to set fire to the town of Ran-Such an occurrence had been apprehended. The population of the town, which had fled on the arrival of the invading force, had begun to return, and all who came unarmed were freely admitted. Among those who availed themselves of the privilege were many emissaries of the Burmese general, whose dras European regiment, three hundred from only object was to watch for an opportunity of perpetrating mischief. "Our situation," says Major Snodgrass, the military secretary to the commander of the expedition, "became critical in the extreme; spies, assassins, and incendiaries lurked in every corner of Rangoon; every native within our lines became an object of suspicion, and the utmost vigilance of the troops, combined with the energy and decision of their commander, could alone have prevented our losing every advantage of nr late successes by the destruction of our es and magazines, and the consequent .. possibility of our following up the blow that had been given, even if greater disasters did not befull us." He adds, "the inflammable materials of which the town was composed required but a single firebrand to envelop our cantonments and everything they contained in a general conflagration; while the unseen enemy, lurking in the outskirts of the jungle, were held in constant readiness to rush in upon our lines during the confusion which so dreaded an occurrence could not fail to produce." The wishes of the enemy were, however, not gratified to their full extent. On the 14th of December the town was fired in several places simultaneously; happily the exertions of the garrison succeeded, after two hours, in stopping the progress of the conflagration, though not until half the place had been destroyed. The enemy contented themselves with this extent of mischief, and did not venture to take advantage of the occasion to make an attack. But they were the British commander declared that, but for the confidence which he felt in his troops, he should have hesitated to attack it with less consisted of at least twenty thousand; that which could be spared for attacking them amounted to only fifteen hundred, the remainder being necessarily left to guard the lines.

column under Brigadier-General Willoughby Cotton was ordered to make a détour round the enemy's left, for the purpose of gaining his rear. This column consisted of two hundred of his Majesty's 13th regiment and three hundred of the 18th and 34th Madras native infantry, with one field-piece and a detachment from the governor-general's bodyguard which had joined the army at Rangoon some time previously. Another column, which Sir Archibald Campbell accompanied, was destined to attack the enemy in front: it comprised five hundred men from the King's 38th, 41st, and 89th regiments, and the Mathe 9th, 12th, 28th, and 30th regiments of Madras native infantry, five field-pieces, and a detachment from the governor-general's bodyguard. Of this column two distributions one commanded by Colonel Miles, the formed, one commanded by Colonel Miles, the Cotton was to wait at the position assigned to him till a signal was made from the other column. The disposition of the latter being completed, the prescribed signal was given and immediately answered. The artillery then opened, and the troops with their scaling-ladders, moved Their advance was treated with forwards. contempt by the Burmese, who looked on their apparent presumption as little short of madness. They persevered, however, and entering by escalade, drove the Burmese from the ramparts at the point of the bayonet. Fifteen minutes sufficed to put the British in possession of that which Sir Archibald Campbell pronounced "the most formidable intrenched and stockaded works" which he had ever seen; those works being defended by men whose thousands outnumbered the hundreds of those by whom they were attacked and beaten. The Maha Bundoola did not command in person on this occasion, having retired to some distance, and left the command to another chief.

On the same day a part of the naval force, under the command of Lieutenant Kellett, of the Arachne, succeeded in an attack upon a number of war-boats, more than forty of which were captured: about thirty were re-tained, the remainder destroyed. The expenot therefore permitted to enjoy repose. On dition was placed in circumstances of great the peril was escaped, and several of these pend his advance. instruments of mischief, with a great mass of The water columns. materials for their construction, were destroyed, not unprosperously, attacking and destroying This was but one among many brilliant exploits performed by the naval force, the the 8th of March it took up a position about unjority of which it would be impossible to two miles below Donobew, and a flag of truce notice, excepting in a narrative devoted ex- was despatched with a summons to surrender.

and the British force returned to its canton- Major Basden, of the 89th, was commenced ments. Reinforcements, consisting of his on the pagoda stockade, which was carried, Majesty's 47th regiment, some cavalry and the enemy sustaining dreadful loss. The artillery, arriving, Sir Archibald Campbell second defence, about five hundred yards determined to advance upon Prome, the distant, was then attacked; but the attempt second city of the Burman empire. Before failed, apparently from some deficiency of taking this step it was necessary to dislodge steadiness in the assaulting party; and an advanced division of the Burmese force, General Cotton felt it advisable to re-embark stockaded at Thantabain, on the Lyne river. his troops. On receiving the news of this This task, which was allotted to a detachment failure, Sir Archibald Campbell resolved to under Colonel Godwin, assisted by a naval return with his column to assist in the reflotilla, which comprised sixty boats, com- festing little fear, and when released by the by the boats of the men-of-war lying at Ran-their masters, retiring very calmly to the fort. goon, containing upwards of a hundred sea- The sortie failed to accomplish any object for dred and fifty European and five hundred flotilla gained the fort with small loss, though native infantry, commanded by Major Sale, exposed to a heavy cannonade. was embarked in transports for the purpose troops on land were engaged in making apof occupying Bassein. noticed that this duty was performed without force found occupation in pushing up the much difficulty, and Major Sale, with the river in pursuit of the enemy's war-boats, chief part of his force, rejoined the main several of which were captured. On the 1st troops commanded respectively by Sir Archi- commenced firing, and on that day Bundoola Major Sale, nearly four thousand effective threats nor entreaties on the part of the men were left in Rangoon, under Brigadier-General M'Creagh, to abide further orders. These arrangements being completed, Sir night. the 11th of March, when intelligence, which small rear guard was discerned in full retreat danger from the fire-rafts of the enemy, but | met him at U-au-deet, induced him to sus-

The water column for a time proceeded clusively to the events of the Burmese war.

This being refused, an attack by two columns, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel O'Do-15th of December, retired upon Donobew, noghue, of the King's 47th regiment, and under Colonel Godwin, assisted by a naval return with his column to assist in the reforce under Captain Chads, was performed effectively, and almost without loss on the part of the assailants.

The force which the general was enabled to equip for the purpose of advancing upon Prome was of very moderate amount. One column to proceed by land, was composed of twelve hundred and thirty European infantry, six hundred sepoys, the governor-general's bady-guard, amounting to something more than five hundred, a troop of horse artillery, and a rocket troop, with about two hundred and fifty pioneers. This, which was under the immediate command of Sir Archibald return with his column to assist in the reduction of Donobow, and, after a most duction of Donobow, and, after a most extensive to be surrounded by the force at his disposal; and although anxious for the catenive to be surrounded by the force at his disposal; and although anxious for the immediate tall of the place, he preferred (using his own words) "loss of time to loss of lives," and took his measures with great caution and deliberation. The naval commander was required to move up the river, to form a junction with the force under the commander-in-chief, and on the 27th the flotilla appeared in sight. It was no sooner observed than the garrison made a sortie the immediate command of Sir Archibald observed than the garrison made a sortic Campbell, was to proceed in a direction with a considerable force and seventeen war parallel with the Lyno river, and to join the elephants, fully caparisoned, bearing on their Irawaddy at the nearest practicable point, to capacious bodies armed men. The governorco-operate with the water column. That general's body-guard, under Captain Sneyd, column consisted of eight hundred European was ordered to charge, which they did with infantry, two hundred and fifty sopoys, a great spirit, dashing in among the elephants, rocket troop, and a powerful train of artillery. and shooting the riders off their backs. The It was commanded by Brigadier-Goneral animals stood the charge with far more cool-The men were embarked in the ness than might have been expected, manimanded by Captain Alexander, and escorted shots of the British troops from the control of Another force, consisting of two hun- which it could have been designed, and the While the It may be here proaches and erecting batteries, the naval army. After the departure of the bodies of of April the mortar and enfilading batteries bald Campbell, Brigadier-General Cotton, and was killed by a rocket, after which neither other chiefs could prevail upon the garrison to remain: they all fled in the course of the night. The breaching batteries commenced Archibald Campbell commenced his march on their fire in the morning at daylight, but the 13th of February, which he continued till simultaneously with their opening the enemy's

the British camp. The line was immediately under arms, and the deserted place speedily occupied by a new garrison. The flight of have defended it against ten times that force, the enemy had been so hurried that no meathat which could not be removed, and one of the most welcome prizes secured by the Eng-lish was a store of grain equal to supply the wants of the garrison for several months.

Immediately after the capture of Donobew, Sir Archibald Campbell resumed his march in the direction from which the ill tidings from that place had withdrawn him. On the 14th of April he was again at U-au-deet, from whence he had retrograded a month before. having been joined on his route by Brigadier-General M'Creagh, with a column of reserve from Rangoon, and a supply of elephants, which were much wanted for the use of the commissariat department. On the 19th he was met by a Burmese messenger, bearing a pacific communication. He was a man advanced in years, but his discretion seems to have borne no réasonable proportion to his age. "The old man," says Major Snodgrass,
"drank much too freely for a diplomatist, and when he rose to take his departure, whispered in the general's ear: 'They are frightened out of their senses, and you may do what you please with them." On the 24th of April Sir Archibald Campbell was within sight of Prome, of which place he took possession on the 25th without firing a shot, the enemy having deserted it in the night, leaving in the works above a hundred pieces of artillery and extensive supplies of grain. The town was on fire, and one entire quarter was destroyed. A number of war-boats, with a large quantity of arms, were a few days afterwards capd by a division of the flotilla under Lieuwant Wilkinson, which had been sent up the > ver for the purpose. Before his arrival at Prome, Sir Archibald Campbell was met by another overture for negotiation in addition to that already mentioned; but its object seemed rather to save Prome from falling into the hands of the English than to restore peace, and its tone to take place. and distress."

towards the jungle, and two lascars, who had must have presented an almost impassable been made prisoners, came running out of the barrier to the progress of the British army. fort to announce the state of affairs there to By nature and art it was rendered so formidable that, in the judgment of Sir Archibald Campbell, ten thousand steady soldiers might

At this place several months were spent in sures had been taken for the destruction of inactivity, in consequence of the setting in of the rains and the prevalence of inundations; but the troops were in comfortable cantonments-an important consideration at such a season. Sickness returned, but not to the same extent as at Rangoon, and the loss of life was comparatively small.

The suspension of active warfare in this part of the Burmese dominions affords a convenient opportunity for returning to the events on the frontier. On resuming operations, the first object was to clear Assam of the Burmese, who had been only partially expelled, and who, on the retirement of the British troops to their cantonments, had reoccupied some of the stations from which they had previously been driven. This duty was as signed to a force under Lieutenant-Colonel Richards. It was performed with great spirit and activity; but as the Burmese generally fled on the approach of the British troops, could be brought to action only by stratagem, and when thus entrapped, took the earliest opportunity of flying, a minute recital of the operations would be destitute of interest.

In January, Colonel Richards was enabled to advance upon Rungpore, and on the 25th his head-quarters were only eight miles distant from it. On the 27th the garrison made an attack upon the advanced post of the encampment. On hearing the firing, Colonel Richards moved forward, and found the enemy threatening to surround a party defending the post under the command of Captain Macleod. To encourage the Burmese to advance, Colonel Richards withdrew the party from the post, and suspended firing. This had the desired effect; and as soon as the enemy showed a sufficient front, the British commander ordered a charge: the Burmese, however, declined waiting for it, and fled with great precipitation.

Having received some reinforcements, Colonel in one instance approached the language of Richards proceeded towards Rungpore. A threatening. "There are armies on both stockade which had been erected across the sides," it was said, "and the space between road was carried by escalade; a fortified bank them would afford sufficient room for a meeting on the right, and two temples, one on the Let the British army stay on right and one on the left, were also occupied. such grounds as it may select on the arrival These successes had the effect of bringing a of this letter, by which the inhabitants of flag of truce from the fort. Its bearer was a Prome will be delivered from great trouble Buddhist priest, born in Ceylon, but many years The answer of the British a resident in Bengal and the Eastern islands, general was, as on the former occasion, that in the employment of various public servants. the military occupation of Prome by the These employments he had lately exchanged British was indispensable; but the letter for the exercise of his saccrdotal functions to containing this answer was never received, the messenger by whom it was carried finding the city deserted by the Burmese authorities. with British habits and customs which his former experience had given him probably led But for the cowardice of the enemy, Prome to his selection for this duty. On being admitted to Colonel Richards, he inquired what were the objects of the advance upon Rungpore. These being explained, the priest departed, promising to return within a specified time. He did return, and pointing out the difficulties in the way of accommodation, caused by the contests of conflicting factions within the fort, requested some further explanation of the British commander's views, with which request Colonel Richards complied. He instructed the priestly negotiator to inform the Phokuns (who were brother chieftains of considerable power and influence) that if they were prepared to make terms of alliance with the British government he was ready to meet them; that if they were bent on fighting, he was equally ready; and if they wished to retire out of Assam, they might do so, provided they took the most direct route, committed no ravages on the road, and carried away none of the inhabitants then in their possession by force. The last course was finally acted upon. All who chose left the fort; the remainder surrendered to the English on conditions, one of which was, that on the conclusion of peace they should not be delivered up to the king of Ava; a result of which they entertained great dread, and against which they evinced intense anxiety to be secured. To justify the guarantee to a part of the garrison of permission to escape, Colonel Richards represented that he was without the means of effectually pursuing them; that he was dependent for supplies upon the fleet, lying twenty miles down a river which was not navigable above its position; that the acquisition of Rungpore was of great importance; and that regard was to be had to the captive Assamese inhabitants, who would have been sacrificed by a different course. These reasons were certainly not without weight. The possession of Rungpore involved the virtual occupation of the whole irruptions in May and June, and crected stockades; but they were driven out by connected hills, from three hundred and fifty parties of the British force, not without to four hundred and fifty feet in height, strong fatiguing marches, but almost without fight-by nature, and rendered more strong by art;

From Sylhet it was proposed to march a territory in that quarter. For this purpose about seven thousand men were collected, and country and the state of the weather. beasts employed to convey stores and supplies perished in vast numbers; some dying of halted at a place where it was partially covered fatigue, some from dislocating their limbs as | by a tank, the officer commanding, Brigadierthey laboured through the plashy soil, and General Macbean, made a disposition for others from being so deeply fixed in the mire gaining the principal hills in the first range. that no efforts could extricate them.

cuormous.

The difficulties which had been insurmountable by a regular force, were, however, overcome by an undisciplined body of about five hundred men, under Gumber Singh. force, which was accompanied by a British officer, Lieutenant Pemberton, succeeded, by the middle of June, in reaching the western boundary of Manipur. The Burmans were posted in the principal town, but they fled on the approach of Gumber Singh's party, and in a short time completely evacuated the district. Having left a division of his force for its defence, the leader of the expedition returned with Lieutenant Pemberton to Sylhet.

But the grand blow to the Burmese power from this quarter was to be directed against Arracan. The primary object was to occupy that province, and this being accomplished, it was believed that the force employed might be enabled to co-operate with the army on the Irawaddy. An army of cleven thousand men was assembled in Chittagong, under the command of Brigadier-General Morrison. flotilla, under Commodore Hayes, was attached It consisted of several pilot vessels and armed brigs, ten gun-pinnaces, and a large number of gun-boats, each carrying a twelve-pounder carronade. In consequence of insuperable impediments, General Morrison was unable to move until January. The coast was thought to offer the most eligible line of march, and a part of the troops proceeded by sea, while the remainder moved by land. The arrival of the former was delayed by adverse weather; and an unsuccessful attack on some stockades by part of the flotilla was attended by some loss. A junction of the two branches of the force was, however, effected; and the expedition advanced in the direction of the capital of the province. As it was approached, some fighting occurred, in which the character of the British arms was well maintained.

At daybreak on the 29th of March, the The Burmans made some border army moved forward to attack the defences of The enemy occupied a range of escarpment, abatis, and masonry, having been resorted to wherever they could be advanlarge force through Cachar and Manipur to tageously employed. A single pass led to the make a demonstration against the Burmese capital, and that was defended by several pieces of artillery and about three thousand The entire number of the enemy placed under Brigadier-General Shuldham, ranged along the heights was estimated at who was appointed to command on the eastern from eight to nine thousand. The ground in The attempt was made, but aban- front was an open plain of considerable extent, doned, from the difficulties presented by the but in depth not altogether out of the range The of the enemy's guns.

The advance of the British force having The Four pieces of artillery were ordered forward loss of bullocks, camels, and elephants was to cover the attack: the troops for the assault followed. They consisted of the light company of his Majesty's 54th regiment, four One instance of it, immediately connected companies of the 2nd light infantry battalion, with the attack upon Arracan, may be men-and the light infantry companies of the 10th bloned. Commodore Hayes, finding that his and 16th regiments of Madras native infantry, with the rifle company of a provincial levy, action, landed two twenty-four pounders, and, under Major W. H. Kemm, of the 2nd light with the British scamen, dragged them and of that regiment, formed a support. ascent was exceedingly steep, in some parts nearly perpendicular, and the enemy showered a well-directed fire on the assailants as they withdraw from all their positions in Arracan. moved up. Under these circumstances of The primary object of the expedition was thus difficulty and danger, however, many succeeded in gaining the summit. Lieutenant J. Clark, aide-de-camp to General Macbean, with several of the gallant 54th, got their hands upon the trench; but even with this assistance, they were unable to maintain their ground. Large stones were rolled on them, smaller ones were discharged from bows, and the effect was, that those who had thus fearfully ascended were violently hurled down again. But the attempt was not lightly aban-In despite of the difficulties which opposed them, the assaulting party persevered until every officer was wounded; while the troops engaged of every description displayed the same gallant and unyielding spirit which animated those who led them. "The conduct of the officers," said General Morrison, in his official account of the attack, "was emulated by the men, and European and native troops vied with each other to equal the example set" them.

peared to be the key of the enemy's position; and though the obstacles were great, it was resolved to attempt it. protected by a small lake; the ascent was more abrupt than at any other point, and tion which the British general had made to the height greater. The natural advantages the Burmese government some time before. cmed to have inspired the enemy with a was crowned by a stockade, and some other mander-in-chief. allotted to it was not considerable. To divert | deputy adjutant-general, and Lieutenant Wilnonade opened upon the works at the pass, sion of an armistice till the 18th of October. The meditated attack upon the enemy's It was therein provided that the first minister right was intrusted to Brigadier-General of the king of Ava should meet the British Richards. It took place under cover of the commander-in-chief at a place midway benight, and succeeded without the loss of a tween the positions of the two camps. The night, and succeeded without the loss of a tween the positions of the two camps. On the following morning preparations meeting accordingly took place. were made for pushing the success of the interview was one of ceremony; at the night, but the enemy abandoned the hills second the negotiators entered on business. after a very feeble resistance, and no impedi- Sir Archibald Campbell declared the terms on ment remained to the occupation of the capital which he was ready to conclude a treaty of

It was now determined to change the point of attack.

The right of the defences ap-boats could not be brought to the scene of infantry: six companies of the 16th Madras their appurtenances five miles to the encampnative infantry, under Captain A. French, ment before Arracan, rendering them available The there for any service for which they might be required. The loss of the capital caused the enemy to withdraw from all their positions in Arracan. attained; but the ulterior design, of marching General Morrison's army across the moun-tains to join that of Sir Archibald Campbell, was found to be impracticable. This disappointment was not the worst misfortune which The enemy had befell the army of Arracan. been vanquished, but a very large portion of the victors were doomed to perish under the visitations of disease. The rainy season brought with it fever and dysentery, and their ravages carried away vast numbers which the sword had spared and fatigue had left unsubdued. The prevalence of disease was all but universal; and it was at last deemed expedient to withdraw the troops altogether, leaving divisions of them on the islands of Cheduba and Ramee, and on the opposite coast of Sandowy, at which places the climate appeared to be more favourable to the enjoyment of health than in the rest of the country.

The army under Sir Archibald Campbell was left at Prome, waiting the abatement of the rains and inundations. On the return of the season for active operations, intelligence was obtained of the approach of a large Burmese force. Immediate hostilities, how-The approach was ever, were averted by the arrival of an answer not unfavourable to an overture for negotia-The deputation charged with the care of the gh degree of confidence in the security of letter proposed that two British officers should part of their position; for though the top in return pay a visit to the Burmese com-Sir Archibald Campbell defences guarded the ascent, the number of men assented, and Lieutenant-Colonel F. S. Tidy, attention from this point a battery was con-liam Smith, of the royal navy, were appointed structed, and in the morning a vigorous can- to the mission. The result was, the concluof Arracan. The naval force participated in these gallant deeds. A party of seamen accompanied the force under General Richards, which gained the hills. Indeed, the zeal which that force displayed throughout the operations of the Burmese war was exemplary.

Which is was ready to conclude a treaty of peace and evacuate the country. He required these gallant deeds. A party of seamen accompanied the force under General Richards, interference with Cachar, Manipur, and Assam; should cede Assam to the British government, and pay two crores of rupees as operations of the Burmese war was exemplary.

was not obtained, and though everywhere tri-|in the works, in the face of upwards of ten umphant, the British general could not be free thousand men. The other brigades took the from anxiety. At the latter end of December flying enemy, and completed the victory. the Burmese proposed to treat for peace, an A quantity of ordnance and military stores event which it was to be presumed could not was taken, a magazine of grain, and specie to be disagreeable to either party. The proposal a large amount. was entertained, but the army continued its march to Patanagob, opposite the Burmese intrenchments of Melloon. Continued communications, having reference to the proposed peace, were here carried on, Sir Archibald ascertain the terms of peace. They were in-Campbell being assisted by Mr. Robertson, formed that the terms tendered before the who had been appointed civil commissioner in capture of Melloon were quite open for ac-Pegu and Aya, and also by Sir James Brisbane. After much discussion a treaty was agreed to, upon the terms formerly proposed by the to Rangoon on the payment of twenty-five British authorities, excepting that the provinces of Yeh, Tavoy, and Mergui were added to the territorial cessions, and the pecuniary payment reduced from two crores to one. The answer the delegates returned. English copy of the treaty was signed on the 2nd of January, the Burmese copy on the 3rd; that the enemy were about five miles in adand an armistice was concluded till the 18th, to allow time for obtaining the ratification of the king.

The ratification was not received by the appointed time, and the Burmese commissioners then offered to pay an instalment of five lacs of rupees, and to give hostages for the safe return of the English prisoners from Ava, provided the British force would return to Prome, or at least agree to a further sustence of hostilities for a few days. The British commissioners peremptorily refused to retreat, and declined undertaking to abstain from hostilities, except on condition of the Burmese evacuating Melloon within thirty-six hours, and retiring upon Ava; the march of the British army, however, not to be suspended until the receipt of the ratified treaty. This proposal was in return rejected by the Burmese, and hostilities recommenced. Batteries were erected opposite the selected parts sioners then offered to pay an instalment of five lacs of rupees, and to give hostages for teries were erected opposite the selected parts British force opposed to him on that day fell icces of artillery were ready to open upon the enemy's defences.

brigade, under Colonel Sale, was ordered to from a direct course, either to the right or to land below the stockade, and attack it by the the left. The Burmese general, therefore, south-west angle, while three other brigades anticipated that the British would advance by

The army on its advance was met by Mr. Price, an American missionary, and Mr. Sanford, an English surgeon, who had been made prisoner, who were commissioned from Ava to ceptance, and that with respect to the pecuniary indemnification, the army would retire lacs of rupees, and would evacuate the Burmese territory upon the discharge of a second instalment of the same amount.

Upon the 8th of February it was ascertained vance on the road to the city of Pagahm, and on the 9th the British columns moved forward The Burmese army was comto attack. manded by a person named Ta-ya-soo-zang, who had represented to the king of Ava that the previous successes of the English were f attack in the stockade, the heavy ordnance short of two thousand. The newly-created s landed from the flotilla, and by ten o'clock prince had drawn up his army in the standard from the flotilla, and by ten o'clock prince had drawn up his army in the standard from the flotilla, and by ten o'clock prince had drawn up his army in the standard flotilla were ready to open upon ably advanced, and the main road running ably advanced, and the main road running the standard flotilla were ready to open upon ably advanced, and the main road running the standard flotilla were ready to open upon ably advanced. This arrangement directly through its centre. This arrangement After two hours' cannonading, the troops appears to have been adopted with reference intended for the assault, who had been previously embarked in boats under the superingreally overgrown with prickly jungle, it was tendence of Captain Chads, began to move. A difficult for large bodies of troops to diverge were to land above the place to attack it by the main road, till opposed in front, when the the northern face. The boats pushed off wings of the Burmese army might have closed, together, but the current, aided by a strong wind, carried the brigade under Colonel Sale to its dectined point of attack before the remaining brigades could reach the shore. The troops landed, and immediately formed under Major Frith, Colonel Sale having been of the cnemy, the British commander assailed wounded in the boats. This being effected, his flanks. The right attack, which was without waiting for the landing of the other by treakade, and catablished themselves, ramied by four guns of the Bengal horse artiltered by escalade, and established themselves panied by four guns of the Bengal horse artillery and a small detachment of the governor-indvanced simultaneously, and succeeded in general's body guard, and supported by the King's 89th. General Cotton superintended the attack on the left, which was made by the King's 38th, supported by the 41st, and accompanied by two guns of the Madras artillery. Colonel Parlby, with the 43rd Madras native infantry, advanced on the bank of the Irawaddy, on the extreme left of the British, to prevent the enemy throwing troops upon its rear.

The enemy received the charge with tolerable firmness, but were soon obliged to give way. Part of the troops broken by the 38th retired into a well-constructed field-work, but were so closely pursued that they had not time to form for its defence, and several hundreds perished at this spot, either pierced by the bayonet, or drowned in vain attempts to cross the river. When the Burmese general found both his flanks attacked, while the centre was apparently not threatened, he pushed forward a column on the main road, in the direction of an eminence crowned by a pagoda lying to the rear of the British; but the sight of the King's 89th in reserve checked their progress, and they returned. It were needless to enter further into the details of the engagement of the 9th of February. From the moment when the enemy's line was broken the fortune of the day was decided, and it is enough to record that, notwithstanding the great disparity of numbers, the result of the conflict was a decisive victory to the weaker party, the enemy abandoning Pagahm to the British, with all the stores, ordnance, arms, and ammunition which it contained. The Burmese on this occasion departed from their usual course of fighting within barriers, and ventured to dispute for victory in the open field. They met a signal and disastrous defeat, and the Prince of Sunset, who had promised to drive the English out of his master's dominions, was fain to seek safety for himself in the dark and mazy covert of the jungle.

The contest was now drawing to a close; but previously to recording its actual con-clusion, it will be necessary to direct attention for a moment to some proceedings in Pegu.

A force had been stationed there under Colonel Pepper, to protect the province from the irruptions of Burman detachments. To check a series of incursions which took place under the command of the former governor of Martaban, Colonel Pepper, late in the year 1825, marched to Shoe-gein, on the left bank of the Sitang, which he occupied without resistance. From there he despatched Lieutenant-Colonel Conry, with a body of light infantry, to reduce a Burman post bearing the name of the river, and situate between Tongo and Martaban. The attempt failed, and the commanding officer was killed. Colonel Pepper then proceeded against the place with a stronger force, which he divided into three columns of attack. They carrying the works, which were subsequently destroyed. This conflict was attended by severe loss on both sides. Among the killed on the side of the English were two of the officers commanding columns, Captain Cursham and Captain Stedman, while the third, Major Home, was severely wounded; Colonel Pepper also was among the sufferers from wounds. The enemy, however, continued troublesome, and shortly after the capture of the stockade of Sitang, made a vigorous attack upon a British post at Mikow, which maintained the communication between Pegu and Shoe gein; but the attempt was most gallantly repulsed by the young officer in command, Ensign Clarke, of the 3rd Madras native infantry, with a small detachment of that regiment.

Sir Archibald Campbell was in full march towards the capital of the Burmese empire, when he was met by Mr. Price and Mr. Sanford, announcing the accession of the Burman sovereign to the proposed terms; but as no formal ratification of the treaty was received, the advance of the British army was not interrupted. Mr. Price returned to Ava to procure the necessary ratification, and again met the army (being then accompanied by the Burmese commissioners) at Yandabo, within four days' march of the capital. The war was now at an end, for the Burmese agents brought not only the ratified treaty, but the sum of twenty-five lacs of rupees as the first instalment of the amount thereby stipulated to be paid.

The main provisions of the treaty have been already mentioned. It consisted of cleven articles, which number was increased by the addition of a supplementary one. They provided that there should be perpetual peace and friendship between the two states, and for the abrogation of all claims, on the part of the king of Ava, to Assam, Cachar, and Jynteea. With regard to Manipur, it was stipulated that should Gumber Singh desire to return to the country, he should be recognized by the king of Ava as rajah thereof. The title of Gumber Singh was certainly not of the clearest, and he was indebted for the support of the British government, not to the justice of his pretensions, but to the assistance which he had been able to render his patrons. limits of the territories of the "two great nations," as, in imitation of the language of the Burmese diplomatists, they were termed, were thus fixed:—the British government were to retain the conquered provinces of Arracan, comprehending the four divisions of Arracan proper, Ramree, Cheduba, and Sandowy; and the Unnoupectownien, or Arracan mountains, described in the treaty as known in Arracan by the name of the Yeoumatoung or Pokhingloung range, were to form the boundary on that side. Any doubts regarding the line were to be settled by commissioners, They who, it was expressly provided,

Burmeso government also agreed to cede the earldon. conquered provinces of Yeh, Tavoy, Mergui, It has incidentally been mentioned that, and Tenassorim, with the islands and despending the Eurmese war, a treaty was conpendencies apportaining thereto, marking the feluled between the British government and Baloun river as the line of demarcation on the king of Siam, who in the treaty with that frontier. A crore of rupees were to be Ava is recognized as "the good and faithful paid by the Burmene to the British govern- ally " of the former state, and as having taken paid by the Burmene to the British govern-ment, one quarter immediately, whereupon the British army was to retire to Rangoon; reems to have been confined to making plun-another quarter in a hundred days, upon which second payment being made, the British territories as lay conveniently for visitation, army was to quit the dominions of the king of Ava; a third quarter at the end of one year from the conclusion of the treaty, and the remainder at the expiration of two years from and writing complimentary letters to the the same period. This contribution was stated British authorities. Ass. however, the serthe same period. This contribution was stated British authoritied. As, however, the serto be made, not merely as a partial indentil- vices of this "good and faithful ally" of the fleation to the British government for the British government were deemed worthy of expenses of the war, but also "in proof of the honoumble mention, it may be expected that sincere disposition of the Burmese government [some notice should be taken of the instrument to maintain the relations of peace and amity by which his majesty of Siam became entitled between the two nations." No person, to be referred to in the terms which have been whether native or foreigner, was to be mo-quoted. The treaty was negotiated on the lested by either party on account of the part part of the English by Major Burney, and which he "had taken, or had been compelled concluded on the 20th of July, 1826. After to take," in the war. An accredited minister an overture in the usual lofty strain, pre-from each state was to reside at the court of mising that "the powerful lord, who is in the other, with an escort of fifty men; and a possession of every good and every dignity. commercial treaty, upon principles of recipro- the god Boodh, who dwells over every head cal advantage, was to be framed. All public in the city of the sacred and great kingdom and private debts contracted previously to the of Si-a-yoo-then-sye, incomprehensible to the war, by either government or its subjects with head and brain," and an inferior potentate the other government or its subjects, were described as "the racred beauty of the royal recognized and liquidated; the property of palace, serene and infallible there," had be-British subjects dying in the Burmese terri-stowed their commands upon ministers of high torics was, in the absence of legal heir, to be rank, belonging to the "great and sacred placed in the hands of the British resident or kingdom," to frame a treaty, it is declared consul, to be disposed of according to the that the English and Siamese "engage in tenor of the British law; and the property of friendship, love, and affection, with mutual Burmeso subjects dying within the British truth, sincerity, and candour." After a diffuse dominions was to be made over to the minister commentary upon this text, a second article or other authority delegated by the Burmese provides for the arrangement, by negotiation, monarch to the British government. ships in Burmese ports were to be relieved two countries; other articles relate to the setfrom all exactions, and from all acts of sub-tlement of boundaries, and the respect to be mission not imposed upon Burmese ships in paid to them. The protection of merchants in British ports. as "the good and faithful ally of the British provisions, which it would be tedious to detail. government," was to participate in the advantages secured to that government; and in the jealousy of the Siamese. It is provided that conclusion, provisions were made for the merchants subject to the English, desiring to ratification of the treaty, and for the exchange of prisoners.

In England the Burmese war was not popular, and its progress was attended by little of the governor of the country. the feeling of satisfaction which its general success might have been expected to excite. The still lingering impression of fear for the consequences of territorial extension, the inadequate preparation with which this war was commenced, the great expense by which it was attended, and the barron and secondary acquired, pro-fitable character of the country acquired, pro-

"suitable and corresponding in rank," The government to warrant his elevation to an British of any disputes that might arise between the The king of Siam, designated their occupation is the subject of multifarious One of them may be quoted as an illustration of come and trade in any Siamese country with which it has not been the custom to have trade and intercourse, must first go and inquire of "Should any country have no merchandise, the governor shall inform the ship that has come to trade that there is none. Should any country have merchandise sufficient for a ship, the governor shall allow her to come and trade." Under such a provision the government of Siam might obviously refuse to open to British commerce fitable character of the country acquired, pro-bably combined to produce this result. The course taken by the governor-general, how-over, was sufficiently approved by the king's opium into Siam or its dependencies, and subjecting it, should the attempt be made, to con-From another article it might be inferred that written correspondence had not previously been regarded as inviolate from the inspection of those for whose eye it was not ance from the commissariat department was intended. "If an Englishman desire to transmit a letter to any person in a Siamese or the men must provide the required accommoother country, such person only, and no other, shall open and look into the letter. If a Siamese | Colonel Cartwright, however, made disbursedesire to transmit a letter to any person in an English or other country, such person only, and no other, shall open and look into the the deficiency, directed the issue of a sum of Other articles related to trade with rajah of Perak in his government. The terms upon which the commercial intercourse of British subjects was to be regulated were fixed with greater precision by a supplemen-tary paper, which, as well as the treaty, was concluded on the part of the British government by Major Burney.

To avoid breaking the current of the narrative, the notice of two events of some interest, war, has been deferred till the history of its operations was complete. To these events it is now necessary to advert. The earliest of them is of a painful and discreditable character. About the middle of the year 1824, the 47th native infantry had been marched to Barrackpore, from which, at a later take part in some of the operations of the Burmese war. To put an army in motion in India is a far more difficult process than in other in similar services; secondly, that according parts of the world, where the climate is less enervating and the habits of the people less From the first-named cause, European troops require aids which are neither bestowed nor expected elsewhere; from the second, similar assistance is to a certain extent required by a large portion of the native No military force can move in India without a large number of beasts of burden. These are requisite, not only for carrying provisions and stores, but also for transporting a considerable portion of the personal baggage of the men. The European does not carry even his knapsack. The sepoy is not excused from this burden, but, in addition to ordinary necessaries, he must find means of conveyance for a set of utensils for cooking, with which each man is provided; and these, added to his clothing, appointments, and ammunition, would constitute a load which the comparatively slender frames of the native troops would be altogether unable to bear through a lengthened march, more especially if it were tory to their proceeding on service; but both to be performed, as must frequently happen, under unfavourable circumstances. Carriage cattle are, for this reason, of prime necessity for the movement of an army; but it is to be observed, that the expense of these animals, observed, that the expense of these animals, overawing the mutineers elsewhere; and his and their drivers, so far as employed for the Majesty's 1st royals, his Majesty's 47th, a use of the sepoys, had been accustomed to be battery of light artillery, and the governordefrayed by the sepoys themselves.

In the instance under notice, however, no bullocks could be provided; none could be hired, and they could only be purchased at an extravagant price. An application for assistmade, but was answered by an intimation that dation for themselves. The commanding officer. ments from his private funds for the purchase of bullocks; and government, on learning money to aid in supplying it. Unfortunately, Queda (possession of which was to be secured however, the remedy was not applied till the to the Siamese), and to the protection of the disease had attained a degree of virulence which set at defiance all corrective appliances. As is usual, too, the experience or apprehension of suffering called before the minds of the discontented every incident of their situation which could be construed into a grievance. The men were ordered to appear on parade on the 30th of October, in marching order. greater part appeared without their knapsacks. The cause of the neglect was demanded, and occurring during the progress of the Burmese the answer was that their knapsacks were unfit to produce. They were informed that new ones were on their way, and that till their arrival they must use the old ones. They refused to produce them; and part of the regiment then declared that they would not proceed to Rangoon or elsewhere by sea, nor would they move at all unless they were to have double period of the year, they were to proceed to batta, the claim for which was rested on two grounds-first, that increased pay had been given to bullock-drivers and persons engaged to report, everything was very dear in the country to which they were going. After some attempts to subdue the prevailing discontent by reasoning, Colonel Cartwright, finding these efforts vain, and being unable, from the number of the mutineers, to take any more vigorous measures, dismissed the regiment, and sought the advice of General Dalzell. The latter officer proceeded to Calcutta to consult the commander-in-chief, Sir Edward Paget. On his return he ordered a parade to take, place at daybreak on the morning of the 1st of November. At this parade all semblance of duty was cast aside, and the regiment, with the exception of the officers, commissioned and non-commissioned, burst into acts of open violence. During the night the mutineers slept on their arms, maintaining regular guards and pickets, and a strong chain of sentries and patrols. In this state of things Sir Edward Paget arrived. Two regiments, besides the 47th, were stationed at Barrackpore, preparaof them were infected in some degree with the mutinous spirit which had taken entire possession of the regiment last mentioned. It was necessary, therefore, to seek the means of general's body-guard, promptly arrived from the naimal constitution diseases of which further information. The result of inquiry was the foundation was previously laid. The a conviction that the claim of Deorjun Saul prejudices of the Hindoo subject him to great was utterly unfounded: Buldeo Singh being in privations on ship-beard, and he is convequently averse to any service subjecting him tish resident was ultimately authorized to give to the necessity of a voyage. The mutineers him investiture, and the governor-general seem to have believed that they were to addressed a congratulatory letter to him as proceed to Bangoon by water, and in aid of rajah of Bhurtpore.

The rajah, on finding himself confirmed in the feeling of dislike naturally entertained by the seat of power, became anxious to secure the annoyance derived from this belief came the feeling of dislike naturally entertained by men reared, for the most part, in the compatible like in the feeling of dislike naturally entertained by men reared, for the most part, in the compatible like in the same powerful protection which ratively healthy provinces of upper India, to encounter the danger and misery of a country of marsh and jungle, more to be dreaded than the sword of the enemy. The Burmese war, right's son was too young to maintain his own moreover, had, in some respects, opened most effectual method of stopping the claims purpose of advancing and superintending the and preventing the intrigues which otherwise requisite preparations.

would arise on the rajah's death. Sir David These acts were strongly disapproved by Ochterlony was very urgent in supporting the the governor-general in council, and orders wish of the rajah that his son should receive were issued peremptorily directing the resipublic and immediate investiture from the dent to countermand the instructions which British government, on the grounds that the he had given for the march of troops, and to reigning prince laboured under a disease cause them to halt within the British territory. which led to apprehensions for his life; that Before these orders were transmitted, it was the recognition at once of the rajah's son reported that Doorjun Saul professed to diswould tend to check the assertion of preten- claim any intention to usurp the throne; that sions similar to those which had been made he had been driven to the course which he on the accession of Buldeo Singh; and that | had taken by the repeated indignities which he the act would be gratifying to an ally whose had received from the maternal uncle of the adherence to principles calculated to promote rajah, who had assumed the office of guardian peace and good order had been exemplary.

avowing a desire to gratify the rajah of Bhurt- tribe, who disapproved the administration pore, hesitated to comply with his request. successor to the musnud stood towards the but their immediate return to their respective rajah, and the government desired to be stations. They determined also to direct the members of the family living, who could be tralize its effect by another, declaring that, regarded as having a better title than the as Doorjun Saul had disayowed all intention Singh, and his only son. It does not appear motion at Bhurtpore would be instituted. the performance of the required ceremony; government required that the resident should it seems rather that Sir David Ochterlony cautiously abstain from adopting measures or contained in the despatch in which the govern-ment called for information as to the existence of other claimants of the throne. In January, matter should have been fully investigated of other claimants of the throne. In January, 1825, he apprized the government of his intenby acknowledging his son, and early in February the ceremony of investiture took place. Singh, died.

of this event for advancing his own views, notwithstanding the recognition by the British government of the right of the deceased rajah's Several battalions having been gained over to his interest, the fort was attacked and taken, the uncle of the rajah murdered, and the boy seized by the usurper. Ochterlony, on learning this, adopted measures succession to it, and the recognition of his | hands; that they would assemble at Muttra, title by the British government seemed the whither the resident had repaired for the

and prime minister, and that he had acted The British government, however, while throughout in concert with many of his which he had overthrown, and had invited A phrase in the rajah's letter to Sir David him to establish a new one. On the receipt of Ochterlony led to some doubts as to the this intelligence, the government resolved to degree of relationship in which the proposed order not merely the halt of the British troops, informed whether there were any other resident to recall his proclamation, or neuchild towards whom their protection was of seizing the throne, the advance of the invoked. In reply, Sir David Ochterlony British troops had been countermanded, and stated, that the boy was the son of Buldeo that an inquiry into the cause of the comthat any authority was thereupon given for the conduct of this inquiry, the orders of the deemed himself authorized to proceed to it in making declarations likely to commit the virtue of some remarks of a general character British government to any particular course and maturely weighed. The reasons assigned tion of complying with the wishes of the rajah for the course taken by the government were the following:-That nothing but a case of most indisputable emergency could justify. On the 26th of that month the rajah, Buldeo bringing into the field the small force at the time disposable in Upper India, and when the Doorjun Saul was not slow to avail himself hot winds had actually commenced, engaging in fresh hostilities the duration and extent of which it was impossible to calculate with any certainty; that they could not view the occurrences at Bhurtpore as constituting such a case of emergency; that they were not prepared to admit the existence of any engage-Sir David ment, express or implied, binding the British government to support the succession of the on his own responsibility for assembling the rightful heir to the Bhurtpore raj by an immelargest disposable force which could be ob- diate resort to arms at all hazards, and withtained, aided by a formidable battering and out reference to time, circumstances, or conbombarding train, in order to vindicate the siderations of general expediency; that Sir rights of the youthful rajah of Bhurtpore and David Ochterlony had acted upon imperfect the dignity of the British government. He at and unsatisfactory information regarding the the same time issued a proclamation addressed real facts of the case; that he had not called to the Jat population, calling on them to on Doorjun Saul for any explanation of his rise in defence of their lawful sovereign, and views and conduct, and that, consequently, setting forth that British troops were ad-vancing to rescue Bulwunt Singh from his offer in vindication of the apparent violence.

of his proceedings, nor what object he pro- for a moment. The pretensions of Doorjun fessed to have in view in exciting the dis-Saul, he alleged, were originally directed to turbance; that it might turn out that he only the throne, though subsequently they might claimed to exercise the regency during the have been modified; but whatever they might minority of the rajah, in preference to the be, he declared that it never entered his imaprince's relations by the female side, and that gination that, with reference to the manner in to this office it was likely he possessed the best title, though his manner of asserting it had been violent and irregular. The intelligence received pending the consideration of made as it might become the British government of the orders to be issued to the resident was required. the orders to be issued to the resident was rement, in the high and commanding position ferred to as strongly confirming the views of which it maintained, to accept. the government on this last point, tary preparations and the withdrawal of the made by the resident, addressed to him a protroops which had moved were followed by posal not very dissimilar to that which had others, animadverting with some severity on been offered by the vakeels of Doorjun Saul. the imperfect manner in which the proceed- It was to the effect that she should be deings of the British resident at Bhurtpore, pre-clared regent, but Doorjun Saul intrusted viously to the death of the late rajah, had with the administration of the state under been reported, and on the investiture of the the title of mooktiar. The lady proposed, in young rajah without positive and distinct the first instance, to wait herself on Sir David authority; a proceeding which it was repre-sented placed the government in the em-hold an interview with him at a spot half-way between Malwa and Bhurtpore; and lastly, acts of its representative, or plunging into that the British resident should proceed in hostilities in Hindostan at a season unfavourable for military operations, and objection an amicable discussion of the matters in distionable with reference to the state of the pute. Several letters were interchanged, but war then waging with the state of Ava.

Ochterlony, he had received a mission despatched by Doorjun Saul for the alleged postpone the apprehended attack on the city, purpose of explaining his views and pretensions to the representative of the British government. The answer of Sir David Ochterlony was, that the only course which appeared to him likely to satisfy the British.

After this, Sir David Ochterlony returned the proposition of the course which appeared to him likely to satisfy the British appeared to him like government was for Doorjun Saul to come to to his usual place of residence, near Delhi, the British camp with the infant rajah in his where he received a visit from a gooroo, or hand, and deliver him to the resident's care, priest, of high influence at Bhurtpore. with a public and solemn assurance of his Some conversation took place respecting the own fidelity and obedience to the prince. A terms of an arrangement, remarkable only on reference to Bhurtpore followed, but before account of the new ground taken up by the the governor-general in council were received. He considered that Binirtpore was not a prin-by the British resident. He replied to them with great warmth, affirming that the military preparations which he had made were of such a nature as to justify the expectation that Bhurtpore would fall in a fortnight after that British force should appear before it; that even if the young rajah had not been acknow-tended as the legal everysympt to the through he ledged as the legal successor to the throne, he seems that the gooroo only required that his could not have supposed that the British government would tolerate the usurpation of the prince's rights by others; and that, after such acknowledgment, it was not to be believed that principle was to be made to yield many, is for the most part a waste of time, its expediency and the distates of timid policy.

The usurpation, he represented, would not

About this time the mother of Buldeo The instructions for the suspension of mili- Singh, alarmed by the military preparations ar then waging with the state of Ava. In meeting took place, and nothing resulted Before these instructions reached Sir David from the correspondence. Whether the pro-

ny answer was obtained, the later orders of representative of the ruling party at Bhurtpore. the governor-general in council were received He considered that Bhurtpore was not a printo expediency and the dictates of timid policy tortuous character defying the efforts of the calculated to defeat its own ends and purposes. most minute and careful consideration.

The resident proposed to the gooroo three have been attempted but under the "strongly conditions, to which he recommended Doorjun prevalent impression" that the British were Saul to subscribe, as being calculated to unable to chastise insolence and support right; secure a favourable decision of the British and whether or not this error should be re- government. They were to the effect that futed was not with him, he added, a question Doorjun Saul should recognize the right of Bulwant Singh to the sovereignty by his actal persons are at once auxious for military ser-as amply as he had already done by his letters; | vice, and careless as to the chief under whom that his claim to the mooktiarce chould be left they may find it, it is comparatively easy to that his claim to the monktairer chould be left they may find it, it is comparatively easy to for the decision of the governor-general in collect an army; and where, either from council; and that, if demanded by the British inability or avarice, the disbursement of pay government, a sum not exceeding five lacs of rupces should be paid for the expenses incurred by the late military preparations. The probability of obtaining such terms, more those attracted thither by the cry of war was a especially the promise of reimbursement for considerable body of Mahrattas, who crossed putting in motion a military force which had a tired without the slightest attempt to effect ioned Madhoo Singh at Deeg. With these refired without the slightest attempt to effect joined Madhoo Singh at Deeg. With these its purpose, is a point that can require no adventurers plunder was but an ordinary mode discussion or observation. The proposal of of subsistence, and with such supporters it the resident was met by a counter-proposal legald not be doubted that Madhoo Singh the chief point in which was the immediate would become as bitter a scourge to his neighappointment by Sir David Ochterlony of bours as to the country of which he had taken Doorjun Saul to the mooktiarce. These com-Ipossession. The magistrate of Agra, in admunications, however, were followed by no vising his government of the immigration of the period for his retirement had arrived, seems to have been shared by the government. "Being fully impressed," said the governor- and he is regeneral in council, addressing the Court of provisions. Directors, "that his advanced age and con- making pertinually increasing infirmities rendered his retirement from the active and laborious employment which he had so long filled with the highest distinction, a measure no less desirable on the public account than necessary for his own personal relief and recovery, we did not oppose the execution of the above purpose,"that of retirement. Some modification with regard to the effice held by Sir David Ochterlong took place. The duties connected with Malwa were transferred to another officer, residency of Delhi, an office which he had admitted of ready transport. formerly held. It was the intention of the government to recommend that Sir David Ochterlany's services should be acknowledged territories of the British government, as well by the grant of pecuniary provision sufficient as to those of its allies and dependents, now to insure comfort to his retirement; but the execution of this design was frustrated by his death, which took place at Mecrut as to the proper line of policy were not a very short time after his surrender of unanimous. Three members of council, Mr. office.

In the month of June the situation of Bhurtpore breame still more distracted than before, by a quarrel which arose between Doorjun the British government, as well with reference Saul and his brother, Madhoo Singh, with whom to its own security, and to the probability he had previously neted in concert, and who that the prolongation of disturbances in Bhurtwas believed to have been the chief instigator of his proceedings. Madhoo Singh attempted Rajpootana, Malwa, and Delhi, as to the claim to seize the fort of Bhurtpore and the person of the youthful rajah to protection. of his brother; but failing in this, he retired danger of a general war was emphatically dwelt early in July to the strong fortress of Deeg, established his authority over the surrounding advert to the possibility of the powers whose country, collected troops, and repulsed, with thrones had fallen before the British arms considerable slaughter, some detachments sent taking advantage of events to endeavour to by Doorjun Saul to reduce him to subjection, regain what they had lost. Mr. Harrington This state of affairs invited a great influx of was carnest to vindicate the course which he armed men from the adjacent districts, some recommended from the imputation of being at of which were under the direct authority of variance with orders from home against inter-

Mahrattas which had taken place into Bhurt-The feeling of Sir David Ochterlony, that pore, and the probability that more would e period for his retirement had arrived, follow, added, "Madhoo Singh has not, I am informed, the means of supplying his troops, and he is reduced to great distress for want of If he should not succeed in making peace with his brother, it is to be feared that he may place himself at the head of his rabble, and commence a system of plundering which is not likely to be confined to the Bhurtpore country." This is indeed a natural step in the progress of an Indian adventurer disappointed in the attempt to establish a more respectable authority. the time when this communication was made, the fact had indeed ceased to be matter of expectation; for Madhoo Singh's troops had paid a visit to a village belonging to the rajah while those of Rajpootana were allotted to Sir of Alwar, and relieved the inhabitants from Charles Metcalfe, who was appointed to the the care of every article of property that

The situation of Bhurtpore, and the dangers with which that rituation was fraught to the preseed strongly on the attention of the governor-general in council; but their views Fendall, Mr. Harrington, and the commander-in-chief, Sir Edward Paget, recorded their opinions in favour of the interference of pore might kindle the flame of war throughout upon by Mr. Fendall, who took occasion to the British government. When numbers of ference in the internal affairs of native states.

but it was certainly successfully executed.

adverting to the possible success of negotiation in effecting the emancipation of the infant prince, and expressing confidence in the talents of Sir Charles Metcalfe, Sir Edward Paget pithily added, "Meanwhile, negotiations are very apt to thrive when backed by a good army," The governor-general stood aloof. He was decidedly opposed to the views entertained by Mr. Fendall and Mr. Harrington, and, to a certain extent, by the commander-in-chief. He thought it inexpedient to interfere in the internal concerns of Bhurtpore, and argued that such interference was not called for by the treaty, nor had ever been practically exercised, except in acknowledging, when fluence by the events of that and the following invited, the lawful successor to the raj. this extent he was desirous of limiting the interference of the British government, more especially with reference to the probability that a contrary course might involve the necessity of undertaking the siege of the fortress of Bhurtpore. "I am not aware," he observed, "that the existence of that fortress has occasioned to us the slightest inconvenience during the last twenty years." His lordship was opposed to making any overtures to Doorjun Saul, as, if they should be rejected, the issue would be that the British government had exposed itself unnecessarily to slight; and if they should be accepted, the British government would be bound to support Doorjun Saul against his brother, and to attack · Singh in the fortress of Deeg. safety of the young rajah, his lordship thought was most likely to be secured by abstaining from interference. He thought the life of the prince important to Doorjun Saul, under the circumstances that existed; he apprehended that interference might have the effect of uniting the brothers, and causing the sacrifice of the rajah. The occurrence of danger to the Company's territories his lordship admitted to be a cause for interference, but acts of aggression from either party he regarded as unlikely. He assented to the propriety of assembling a force at Muttra, as recommended the custom of the state, with full powers, by the commander-in-chief, but expressed a

Such vindication scarcely appears necessary, the reports and documents connected with the affair of Bhurtpore were referred to him for The commander-in-chief restricted his approper usal, with an intimation that it was the bation of interference to the ground of the wish of the government that he should state danger to which the British government was his opinions, both on the general question of exposed by the probable extension of dis-interference and on the specific measures to be turbances beyond the boundaries of Bhurt-adopted in the existing functure. This he did pore. To avert this danger, he recommended, in a very elaborate, though not a very lengthy the assemblage of a military force near Muttra paper, delivered to the government at the at the termination of the rainy season. After latter end of the month of August. It is difficult to give a satisfactory account of the views embodied in this masterly exposition of the true policy of the British government, from the fact that every sentence is so pregnant with meaning as scarcely to admit of abridgment.

Sir Charles Metcalfe commenced by referring to the general rule of non-interference, and to the constantly recurring necessity of disregarding it in practice. He proceeded-"We have by degrees become the paramount state of India. Although we exercised the powers of this supremacy in many instances before 1817, we have used and asserted them more generally since the extension of our inyear. It then became an established principle of our policy to maintain tranquillity among the states of India, and to prevent the anarchy and mismile which were likely to disturb the general peace." After referring to instances in illustration of this statement. Sir Charles Metcalfe proceeded thus: "In the case of succession to a principality, it seems clearly incumbent on us, with reference to this principle, to refuse to acknowledge any but the lawful successor; as otherwise we should throw the weight of our power into the scale of usurpation and injustice. Our influence is too pervading to admit of neutrality, and sufferance would operate as support." questions actually at issue in the case of Bhurtpore were subsequently adverted to in an abstract form. "It," said Sir Charles Metcalfe, "the prince be a minor, the constitution of each state will point out the proper person to exercise the powers of regency during the minority, and that person, for the time, must stand in the place of the prince. Such misrule may possibly occur as will compel us to interfere, either for the interests of the minor prince or for the preservation of general tranquillity, the existence of which is endangered by anarchy. In such an extreme case the deposition of the culpable regency, and the nomination of another according to would be preferable to the appointment of a hope that this measure, and the presence of minister with our support under the regency, Sir Charles Metcalfe at Delhi, would prevent for this latter arrangement can hardly fail to the "embers bursting forth in a flame." produce either a divided and inefficient govern-Such were the respective views of the ment or an odious usurpation." After limiting governor-general and the members of council, the right of interference by the British governas recorded a short time after the death of ment to the states towards which it stands Sir David Ochterlony. On the arrival of Sir in the relation of a superior and a protector, Charles Metcalfe in Calcutta, preparatory to assuming the duties of resident at Delhi, all states, "we cannot be indifferent spectators ultimately giving up India again to the pillage any circumstances, he continued to maintain and confusion from which we rescued her in that the usurper must be excluded from power, 1817 and 1818." Most justly did Sir Charles Metcalfe then proceed to apply the experience of the past as a warning for the future. "We attempted," he continued, "to act on the principle of non-interference after the peace of 1806; we had succeeded to Scindia, as lord paramount of the states between the Sutlej and the Jumna, but we abstained from exercising the authority which we had acquired. Some of those states had internal dissensions which they called on us to settle. We replied, that it was contrary to our system to interfere in the affairs of other states. The disappointed parties applied to Runjeet Singh. He was not loath, and after feeling his way cautiously, and finding no opposition from us, gradually extended his power and influence over the whole country between the Sutlei and the It became the principal business of our negotiation with him, in 1808 and 1809, mined with certainty was, that the rajah, to remedy this mischief by throwing his power Bulwunt Singh, must be maintained, and a back beyond the Sutlej, which was accom-plished with considerable difficulty, great reluctance on his part, and a near approach to a nearer view of the scene might probably war." Having laid down a series of general principles (some of which have been quoted) at length), Sir Charles Metcalfe found no difficulty in applying them to the existing circumstances of Bhurtpore. "We are bound," said he, "not by any positive engagement to the Bhurtpore state, nor by any claim on her part, but by our duty as supreme guardians of general tranquillity, law, and right, to maintain the legal succession of Rajah Bulwunt Singh to the raj of Bhurtpore, and we cannot acknowledge any other pretender. This duty seems to me to be so imperative, that I do not attach any peculiar importance to the late investiture of the young rajah in the presence of Sir David Ochterlony. We should have been equally bound without that ceremony, which, if we had not been under a pre-existing obligation to maintain the rightful succession, would not have pledged us to anything beyond acknowledgment. The lawful rajah established, Bhurtpore may be governed, during his minority, by a regency, such as the usages of that state would prescribe. How this How this should be composed can only be decided by local reference. Doorjun Saul having unquestionably usurped the raj, seems to be necessarily excluded from any share in the regency or administration; and his banishment from the state, with a suitable provision, will probably be indispensable for the safety of the young rajah; the more so, if, as I suppose, Doorjun Saul, by the custom of that state, is next in succession to Rajah Bulwunt Singh, and, consequently, the actual heir presumptive general seems to have consected not only to to the guddee." After discussing the claims shape his course of policy in zoomizno with of Madhoo Singh, to whom, on the whole, the suggestions of the memorandum, but even the writer of the memorandum was more to have been to a great degree convinced in favourable, he returns to Doorjun Saul, whose its arguments. usnrpation, if persisted in, must, he declares, of long-continued anarchy therein, without be put down by force of arms; but, under "Doorjun Saul," said he, "finding us determined to support the right of the young rajah, may propose to relinquish his usurpation of the raj, and stipulate for confirmation in the regency. This would be a continuation, in a modified shape, of the usurpation which he effected by violence, in contempt of our supremacy. It would not be possible to obtain any security for the safety of the young rajah, if Doorjun Saul, who is either the next heir, or at least a pretender to the raj, were regent."

Sir Charles Metcalfe then showed that, waiving these objections, such an arrangement was not likely to secure the peace of the country, and observed, "We are not called upon to support either brother; and if we must act by force, it would seem to be desirable to banish both." He contended, however, that all that could at that time be deterproper regency established; adding that every other point was open to discussion, and that suggest plans not likely to occur at a distance. The paper which has been so amply quoted contained, in addition to the exposition of the author's views as to Bhurtpore, some observations on the position of the British government with regard to Alwar and Jyepoor, with both which states some causes of difference had arisen. These, however, being comparatively of little interest, may be passed over; but some remarks on the possibility of war being unavoidable are too instructive to be omitted. "Desirable as it undoubtedly is," said Sir Charles Metcalfe, "that our differences with all these states should be settled without having recourse to arms, there will not be wanting sources of consolation if we be compelled to that extremity. In each of the states our supremacy has been violated or slighted, under a persuasion that we were prevented by entanglements elsewhere from efficiently resenting the indignity. A display and vigorous exercise of our power, if rendered necessary, would be likely to bring back men's minds in that quarter to a proper tone, and the capture of Bhurtpore, if effected in a glorious manner, would do us more honour throughout India, by the removal of the hitherto unfaded impressions caused by our former failure, than any other event that can be conceived.

The reasoning of Sir Charles Metcalfe, aided probably by the influence of his high character for ability, uprightness, and independence, appears to have produced effects which could hardly have been anticipated. The governor-

The great obsizeds to the adoption of a in-

2 I 2

cided course of policy in regard to Bhurtpore | wonderful that, with so bad a cause, Doorjun being thus removed, a resolution was passed Saul should be able to think of opposition to a by the governor-general in council, on the 18th of September, declaratory of the intentions of justice to the lawful prince. government. It is remarkable on account, standing the injustice of the usurnation, which not so much of the measures which it announced, for these might have been looked for as the natural results of the state of opinion and feeling which prevailed among the members of the government, but for the bold and unhesitating avowal of principles, the acknowledgment of which had, up to that period, been studiously avoided. Thus ran the most important part of the resolution :- "Impressed with a full conviction that the existing disturbances at Bhurtpore, if not speedily quieted, will produce general commotion and interruption of the public tranquillity in Upper India, and feeling convinced that it is our solemn duty, no less than our right, as the paramount power and conservators of the general peace, to interfere for the prevention of these evils, and that these evils will be best prevented by the maintenance of the succession of the rightful heir to the raj of Bhurtpore, whilst such a course will be in strict consistency with the uniform practice and policy of the British government in all analogous cases, the governor-general in council resolves that authority be conveyed to Sir C. T. Metcalfe to the 25th of November Sir Charles Metcalfe accomplish the above object, if practicable, by issued a proclamation denouncing the pretenexpostulation and remonstrance; and, should sions of Doorjun Saul, and declaring the intenthese fail, by a resort to measures of force." No instructions or suggestions were given to interests of the rightful prince. On the 5th Sir Charles Metcalfe to regulate his proceedings; he was left to the unfettered exercise of were at Muttra. On the 6th he had an interhis own judgment and discretion. Moreover, his views as to the final arrangement of the ascertained that no political reason existed for affairs of the Bhurtpore state were adopted and delaying the movements of the troops, he the existing state of their information, the manded by Major-General Nicolls, with the government deemed most worthy of being first brigade of cavalry and a detachment of the proceedings of Sir Charles Metcalfe in position to the west of the town. attempting to settle the affairs of Bhurtpore division of infantry, under Major-General by negotiation. It will be sufficient to say Reynell, with the second brigade of cavalry, that they did not succeed. revived his claim to the throne, founded on a by another route to take up a position on the. pretended appointment by a former rajah, the north-east of the town. falsehood of the allegation being proved by the commander-in-chief proceeded. The approach very circumstances referred to in support of of the British force drew forth several letters its truth; while occasionally he held language and deputations from Doorjun Saul, having in which seemed to indicate submission. supposed to be a man of timid feelings, he Charles Metcalfe did not allow them to interevinced little fear, and his firmness was probably sustained by the apathy generally mani- 10th of December the head-quarters of the fested as to the claims of the rightful prince. It was known to all that he was a usurper, and Here his lordship's humanity was manifested his character exhibited little that was calculated to win popular favour; but he commanded on one point the sympathy of the children from the town, the British general people. This was observed by Sir Charles promising them safe conduct through his Metcalfe, and thus noticed in one of his communications to the governor-general in council :- "The right of Rajah Bulwunt Singh is returned, a second communication was made predominant power which seeks only to render But notwithevery one admits, he will probably receive support from the circumstance of his placing himself in opposition to the British government as the defender of Bhurtpore. It must be known to the right honourable the governorgeneral in council that this fortress is considered throughout India as an insuperable check to our power, and the person who undertakes to hold it against us will be enconraged in his venture by its former successful defence, and by the good wishes of all who dislike our ascendancy, whatever may be the injustice of his cause." Here lay the secret of his strength and of his confidence. He felt safe in possession of the unyielding fortress of Bhurtpore, and he gained support by his disposition to defend it.

The period was rapidly approaching when the impregnability of the fortress and the resolution of its usurping master were to be A vast force was advancing upon it under the command of Lord Combernere, who had succeeded Sir Edward Paget in the office of commander-in-chief in India. tion of the British government to support the of December Lord Combermere's head-quarters view with Sir Charles Metcalfe, and having Skinner's local horse, to march from Agra by It will be unnecessary to pursue minutely Danagore to Bhurtpore, and to take up a Doorjun Saul and the remainder of Skinner's horse, marched With this column the Though all probability no object but to gain time. fere with the progress of the army, and on the commander-in-chief were before Bhurtpore. by the transmission to Doorjun Saul of a proposal for the withdrawal of the women and camp, and allowing twenty-four hours for their departure. An evasive answer being unquestioned and unquestionable, and it seems to Doorjun Saul, repeating the proposal and offer. This proposal was answered in a similar intercepted and secured by General Sleigh. manner to that by which it had been preceded, commanding the cavalry. and the benevolent purpose of Lord Combermere was thus defeated. Of the honour due with the rightful order of succession in the to his humanity—an honour exceeding that state of Bhurtpore, and thus were annihilated which the most brilliant victory could have the boasted pretensions to impregnability of conferred - the brutal perverseness of the the fortress bearing that name. Those preenemy could not deprive him.

Several days were occupied in the construction of works. During the progress of these operations a party of about two hundred of the enemy's horse attempted to make their escape; survived the siege were destroyed, and the they were intercepted, thirty or forty killed, and upwards of a hundred made prisoners. On fidence and hope throughout India, was rethe 28th of December the advanced batteries opened. Others were brought into work as With the fall of Bhurtpore perished all exthey were completed, and by the 4th of Janu-pectation of successfully resisting the British ary they had produced visible effect. they were insufficient effectually to breach the the dominions of Bhurtpore promptly surrenwalls, and on the evening of the 6th a mine dered, and the rajah's authority was firmly as was commenced in the escarp of the ditch on the northern face; but unfortunately the work not being sufficiently advanced by daybreak, and the engineers apprehending discovery if their operations were continued, it was prematurely exploded, and produced no A second attempt to mine material effect. was made, but those employed in it were countermined from the interior before they had entered many feet. The gallery was subsequently blown in, it having been discovered that the enemy were keeping watch in it.

A serious accident occurred on the 8th; a matic arrangements concluded during the shot from the fort set fire to a tumbril, and in government of Earl Amherst as have not consequence about twenty thousand pounds already been adverted to, and which may weight of ammunition was destroyed.

On the 14th a mine under one of the bastions was exploded with little advantage. others were then driven into the same wall, which were sprung on the 16th, with such effect that, with the aid of a day's battering, a sufficient breach was made.

The morning of the 18th was fixed for the assault, which was to be made by two columns, the right commanded by Major-General Reynell, and the left by Major-General Nicolls. north-east angle, which took place at eight o'clock with terrible effect. Unfortunately, however, the explosion being in an unexpected direction, several men of General Reynell's column were killed, and three officers wounded. General Reynell giving the word "forward," the whole advanced with perfect steadiness. left breach, and carried it, although the ascent native princes, known as the Sultan and was excessively steep, and the troops in their Tumongong of Jahore. progress were annoyed by the guns of the ramparts, which, whenever movable, extending the time for embracing it twelve rendered about four o'clock. Doorjun Saul hours beyond the period fixed by the previous attempted to escape with his family, but was

Thus terminated the attempt to interfere tensions had been greatly strengthened by the failure of Lord Lake in 1805. Twenty years afterwards, they, with the fortress itself, were levelled with the dust. The defences that place, which had been the watchword of couduced to the condition of a miserable ruin. Still government. The remaining fortresses within well as speedily re-established.

> The reduction of Bhurtpore was the most striking event that occurred during the administration of Earl Amherst, and it was the last of any importance. The rajah of Colapore, a Mahratta prince of profligate character, became involved in disputes with the government of Bombay during the year 1826; but the march of a military force under Colonel Welsh brought him to submission without the necessity of firing a gun. It remains, therefore, only to notice such treaties and diploappear to deserve mention.

In 1824, Malacca, Singapore, and the Dutch possessions on the continent of India, were ceded by the king of the Netherlands, in exchange for the British settlement of Bencoolen in Sumatra. The situation of Singapore rendered it capable of becoming a place of great commercial importance; but it was little better than a continuous forest, vexed by the claims of two Malay princes, one of them nominally a vassal of the other, but, in conformity with The signal was the explosion of a mine in the Eastern fashion, exercising the actual rights north-east angle, which took place at eight of sovereignty. The English had established a factory there some years before the cession, but their position was undefined and uncertain; and though attempts had been made to fix the relations of the strangers with the native This created a momentary hesitation, but princes, they were in constant danger of coming into collision with them as well as with the government of the king of the The enemy made a vigorous resistance, but Netherlands. When the pretensions of that the British troops proceeded, overcoming all government were transferred, it was deemed opposition, until they united at the Kombheer fitting to determine, with greater precision gate with the troops of General Nicolla's than before, the terms upon which the British That division had advanced to the government was to stand in regard to the

The best mode, if practicable, was to get rid the of the claims of these personages by a comenemy turned upon them. The citadel sur- mutation of their political and territorial claim for pecuniary allowances, and this was effected. I rajah of Sattara, and all connection with that By a treaty concluded between them and the prince, or with any other Mahratta power. East-India Company, on the 2nd August, 1824, it was provided not only that "peace, friend-ship, and good understanding shall subsist for ever between the Honourable the East-India Company and" the two princes, their heirs and successors, but also for the cossion by the princes to the Company of the island of Singapore, together with the adjacent sea straits and troops were required for the protection of the islets, for a specified extent, "in full soverighty and property." By other articles of tranquillity therein, and of stationing them the treaty, the surrender was to be remunerated by liberal pecuniary provision, but which provision, contrary to ordinary practice, was to cease with the lives of the existing princes. In the event of the princes or their successors choosing to quit Singapore for a residence elsewhere, other payments were to be made in consideration of their immovable property, which was thereupon to devolve to the Company. While continuing to reside at Singa-pere and drawing their stipends, the princes were not to enter into any alliance or correspondence with other states without the knowledge and consent of the Company; and in the event of their departure, they were, in case of distress, to receive personal asylum and pro-Neither party was to interfere with the personal concerns of the other; both were to use their efforts to suppress rebbery and Unshackled trade was to be maintained in the remaining dominions of the Sultan and Tumongong of Jahore, and the British were to be admitted to trade there on the terms of the most favoured nations. The Company were not to harbour persons descrting from the service of the princes, such persons being natives of those parts of their dominions which they still retained; and, finally, all conventions and agreements proviously subsisting between the contending parties were to be considered as abrogated, with the exception of such parts as might have conferred on the East-India Company any right To the occupation and possession of the island successfully counteracted the machinations of of Singapore and its dependencies.

With the king of Oude a treaty was concluded in 1825, the objects of which were the youthful rajah on the musaud, and carefully recognition of a loan of one erore of rupees, advanced by that prince to the Company in perpetuity, and the assignment of the interest thereon to various parties.

The relations of the British government with Nagpore were fixed by a treaty concluded in December, 1826, by Mr. Jenkins. By this instrument the effect of the treaty with Appa Sahib, concluded on the 27th May, 1816, was renewed so far as might be consistent with the new engagement. By the remaining articles, the minh renounced all dependence upon the governor-general.

and agreed to relinquish all coromonies and observances referring to the place which his predecessors held in the Mahratta confederacy; he was to hold no communication with foreign powers, except through the Company's resident; the British government was to have the power of determining what number of whore their presence might be deemed necessary. The rajah renounced all claims to the territories coded to the Company by Appa Sahib, and the Company guaranteed the remainder to the rajah; provision was made for exchange of portions of territory, if found desirable, and for securing to the Company's officers the exclusive management of the torritories ceded by the treaty, or which might be coded under the provision for exchange. The British government, it was declared, had undertaken "during the rajuh's minerity, the settlement and management of the whole of the territory reserved to his highness, and the general direction of his officers in his highness's name and on his behalf;" but the nonage of the prince, "according to Hindee law and usage, being now expired, the powers of government and the administration of government and the administration of the same of government and the administration of the same of government and the administration of the same of government and governmen of government and the administration of his dominions," subject to cortain specified conditions and exceptions, were "declared to be vested in the rajah." Some succeeding articles having been medified by a later engagement, it will be unnecessary to refer to them here. By the article which followed them, the memorable hill of Sectabuldee and that adjacent were annexed to the British residency. By other articles the British government was empowered to garrison and occupy such forts and strong places as they might determine, and the rajah was bound to furnish certain stores and other assistance to the Company's Thus Mr. Jonkins, who had government. Appa Sahib and supported the authority of the British government-who had placed the administered the affairs of his dominions till the prince was of fitting ago to assume the authority of his station, had the gratification of completing the work which ewed its success to his courage and prudence.

The administration of Earl Amborst prosents nothing further which calls for report. Towards its close, his lordship made a tour to the Upper Provinces, and in March, 1828, he quitted India, leaving Mr. Butterworth Bayloy in the discharge of the duties of lord william bentinck as governor-general—mahometan reformers in baraset-AFFLIRS OF QUEDA -- EVENTS IN COORG -- DETHRONEMENT OF THE RAJAH -- VARIOUS TREATIES—MISGOVERNMENT OF OUDE—ECONOMICAL REFORMS—THE HALF-BATTA QUESTION -interference with the civil service—abolition of corpobal punishment in NATIVE ARMY-SUTTEE ABOLISHED-LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK QUITS INDIA.

CHAPTER XXVII.

motives by which men are actuated, and on many occasions of reconciling them with reasonable expectation, is a subject too trite to justify any lengthened discussion. William Bentinck had been removed from the government of Fort St. George under circumstances calculated, it might be supposed, to discourage any wish on the part of his lordship to revive the connection between himself and the East-India Company. It is true that, in dismissing his lordship from their service, the Court of Directors had expressed a hope that his "valuable qualities and honourable character might be employed, as they deserved, for the benefit of his country:" but this compliment could only be regarded as indicating a desire to avoid giving unnecessary pain, and to soften the mortification of recall, by mixing with the act somewhat of grace and kindness.

The hope, however, had been realized. The high connections of Lord William Bentinck had saved him from the tedium of idleness, and procured for him in Europe employment suitable to his rank and profession. But with this his lordship was not satisfied; he yearned for a return to the scene of his former disappointment, and on the vacancy created by Mr. Canning's sudden relinquishment of the office of governor-general, in which he had just been appointed to succeed the marquis of Hastings, Lord William Bentinck took the unusual step of offering himself as a candidate. Such a proceeding can scarcely be justified under any circumstances. Were it either common or in ordinary cases excusable, it might have been supposed that, situated as was Lord William Bentinck, an ordinary measure of self-respect would have rendered it impossible for him to make the application. He had been removed from the government of Fort St. George because his conduct was disapproved at home. If this severe step were just, the object of his lordship's application was to obtain the appointment to the highest office in India of a person whose only claim to subordinate office. If it were unjust, his lord-ship condescended to solicit a valuable favour from those at whose hands he had already received injuries; and whether, in fact, the recall were unjust or not, there can be little doubt that it was regarded as unjust by his the honour rested on previous misconduct in a

THE difficulty of perfectly understanding the lordship. But whatever his views, or whatever might be the opinion formed by others on the subject of his recall, his application for the office of governor-general cannot be reconciled with propriety or dignity. It met at the time with the success which it deserved. His lordship's appeal was disregarded, and the vacancy, as has been seen, was filled up by the appointment of Lord Amherst. On the retirement of that nobleman, Lord William Bentinck was more fortunate, and his lordship's restless hankering for oriental power was gratified. He was sworn into the office of governorgeneral in July, 1827; but before his departure from England, the death of Mr. Canning gave to the administration, under whose advice the appointment had been approved by the Crown, a blow which it was not destined to recover. It was kept together for a short time by Lord Goderich, who succeeded to the chief place in it, but yielded with little resistance to the party which, on Mr. Canning being selected as the head of the ministry, had declined to act under a chief whose opinions were favourable to Catholic emancipation. Lord William Bentinck had not sailed when this last change took place, and he waited to ascertain its Had the new ministers acted in the spirit of some who had gone before, and of some who followed them, his lordship would have experienced a second disappointment. They did not, however, advise the sovereign to exercise his revoking power, and in February, 1828, Lord William Bentinck departed to take possession of the office which he so ardently coveted. His administration was distinguished more by civil and fiscal changes than by events The former will be of stirring character. noticed hereafter, precedence being given in this, as in other instances, to the latter class of occurrences.

Among those which demand early notice are the disturbances in Baraset. These originated in the fiery zeal of a person of hume. position in society, named Meer NiseRieer. better known by the name of Titthmed, a This man was a disciple of Syen the cause Mahometan reformer, who had Seik governlevy an export duty upon paddy and rice at confusion thereby occasioned. Queda." The residence of the exiled king at Prince of Wales Island was consequently not less inconsistent with the intention of the calculated to embroil them with the English. treaty than his residence in Province Wellesley. By his residence at either place, the Siamese became entitled to levy certain duties, and those who were so anxious to remove the king of Queda from Province Wellesley, while they were willing to permit his residing at Prince of Wales Island, must, it is to be presumed, have acted under a conviction, that if the English were willing to pay the penalty authorized by the treaty for non-compliance with the provision relating to the residence of the king, the other contracting party had no ground of complaint. The governor-general expressed an opinion that the banished prince had been rather hardly dealt with. This impression rather hardly dealt with. was creditable to his lordship's good feelings, and, from the circumstances of the case, it is relations so long subsisting between the English and the king of Queda might not require that the former should draw the sword in defence of the dominions of the king; but it was scarcely consistent with good faith, that the English should enter into a treaty which secured to his enemies the fruits of successful usurpation.

It had been feared, as naturally it might, that some attempt would be made to restore the king to the dominions from which he had been expelled. But though such an attempt was not unlooked for, and though it was viewed with apprehension, as likely to impair the stability of the existing relations with the Siamese, it was believed, and indeed asserted, that it could not be attended with any serious danger to the existing government of Queda.

The attempt was at last made, and at a moment when apparently it was not at all expected, though the preparations for it were made within the British territories. On the degree in which the exiled king was impli-6th of April, 1831, the Siamese were expelled cated in the attack on Queda. His desire to from the capital of Queda by a force embarked protract his residence in Province Wellesley on board a flotilla, consisting of thirty-five or originated, there is little doubt, in the hope forty small boats. The number of men en- of there finding the means of regaining his gaged in the enterprise was supposed to be dominions. His pertinacity on this point had between three and four hundred; they were led to disputes with the British government, under the command of a person named Tuanko and payment of any portion of the allowances Kudir, a known pirate, but highly connected, to which by treaty he was entitled had been being son of the king of Queda's sister. Some for a time suspended. Siamese boats were cruising off the place, but Prince of Wales Island partial payment of his on the approach of the invaders their crews stipend was resumed, although, as has been abandoned them, and with exemplary promp- pointed out, his residence in that island was titude sought to provide for their own safety. The fort was garrisoned by about two hundred than his residence in Province Wellesley. To men, who, as the flotilla advanced, manifested what extent, however, he participated in the their zeal by the discharge of a few shot, not movement against Queda is a matter of no one of which took effect. The assailants were importance in any respect. He had been more successful as well as more daring. They violently and unjustly expelled from his pos-rushed to the attack with considerable spirit, sessions; he had never, by any act, consented and having contrived to set fire to the to the alienation, or confirmed it; and the

Queda go and live in some other country, as buildings within the fort, carried the place here engaged, the Siamese may continue to by escalade in the midst of the smoke and

> Had the Siamese been of warlike temperament, this movement would have been well The expedition was partly fitted out from a British port, the stores were purchased in the bazaars of a British settlement, and some of the boats employed had British passes. Many of those engaged in the expedition were British subjects, and a few who had belonged to a disbanded local corps were attired in the Company's uniform. Some European mer-chants, it appeared, were aware of the preparations, though not, it was believed, of the destination of the expedition; but the government were without suspicion. In extenuation of this apparent absence of vigilance, the following reasons were adduced by the chief resident authority:-that the preparations, though somewhat extensive, were carried on with great secrecy; that the whole native community were favourable to a movement against the Siamese, whose cruelty and op-pression had excited universal hatred, the feelings of the Mahometan part of the population being further inflamed by religious animosity; that some parties in Province Wellesley, on whom reliance was placed for information, were in league with those engaged in the movement and had joined them; that the island police were weak, ill-paid, and, like the rest of their countrymen, favourably disposed to hostile proceedings against the Siamese; and that the British government had neither guard-boats nor establishments of any kind for keeping watch in the harbour and examining native craft. These reasons may be admitted to account for the oversight. but perhaps they can scarcely be allowed to excuse it-more especially as the attack on Queda was not the first movement of the same description. A like attempt had been made some time before and had failed.

Some discussion took place as to the precise On his removal to not less at variance with the treaty with Siam some embarrassment to the government from which he derived his only revenue, but that revenue was given in payment for a valuable consideration bestowed by the king while in possession of his throne, and which the English still retained. In asserting his rights against the Siamese, he was guilty of no breach of faith with regard to his British protectors. He was no party to the treaty by which they had acknowledged the claim of the Siamese to Queda, and he was not accountable for any inconvenience that might in consequence arise removal of the king to Malacca, a measure often pressed before, but always strenuously resisted by the king. But resistance at this period was hopeless. The king understood that, should he refuse compliance, his removal would be effected by force, and he therefore yielded the consent which it was no longer in his power to withhold.

Further to conciliate the Siamese government, and to atone for apparent disregard to the obligations of the treaty, it was deemed advisable by the British resident at Singapore to aid the recapture of Queda by blockading the mouth of the river. This proceeding was disapproved by the government of Bengal, who issued instructions discouraging any attempt, on the part of the British authorities in the straits, to mix themselves up in any operations of a hostile character either by These instructions arrived too late to have any effect, for when they were received, the Siamese, aided by the blockading force employed by the English, had already repossessed themselves of Queda. The nar- in breadth. The movement began in January, rative of these proceedings cannot be more 1832, at the south-eastern extremity, whence properly closed than by quoting the just it extended rapidly to the northward, till the observations made from home on the subject: -"The case was unquestionably one of con-adjacent pergunnah of Palamow were in a flicting obligations; but it is much to be state of insurrection; or it may rather be regretted that, by our own default, we should said, that violence and pillage were universal have been placed in a position from which we and indiscriminate. The state of the whole could not extricate ourselves but by giving country, indeed, is depicted in the following our assistance to replace the Malays of Queda brief but striking description of one part of under the yoke of a government which, from it, by Mr. Neave, a commissioner employed all that we learn, appears to be most deservedly therein. doise to them."

to the British government in the straits. The it from which I can scarcely offer any plant English, on obtaining the transfer of Malacca, seem not to have been minutely informed of the commissioner then proceeded to state the commissioner than proceeding the commissioner than the commissioner than proceeding the commissioner than the c the relation in which they stood towards the petty native principalities. Nanning, one of them, soon afforded occasion for dispute. It was regarded by the newly-established European authorities as an integral part of nothing but superiority of physical little the territory of Malacca, and they believed in the safety. "The specific part of the Riville government respectively." that the British government possessed sore- rears to be universal; in village and

English had no better right to give away his | reign power over it. The chieftain of Nanning, dominions than the Siamese had to take them. | called the Pangholoo, appears to have taken Situated as was the king of Queda, his at- a different view, and to have regarded himself tempting to recover his power and territories as an independent prince, the equal and not involved no culpability, and could excite no the vassal of the power which claimed to surprise. He might thereby, indeed, occasion be his superior. The British government asserted its pretensions by claiming authority in Nanning for its courts of judicature, and by demanding a portion of the revenue of the country as tribute. These demands were resisted, and it was deemed necessary to support them by the despatch of a company of sepoys, whose presence it was not doubted would speedily bring the offending Pangholoo to submission. This expectation turned out to be erroneous. The officer in command of the party of sepoys found his progress obstructed by trees placed across the road, the to them. Inconvenience had arisen, and the intervals being studded with spikes. These English, to escape it, now insisted upon the difficulties being surmounted, the party attacked a stockade, which they carried, but the success was attended by the loss of an officer and several men. The return of the detachment to Malacca was effected with considerable difficulty, and by a route different to that by which they had advanced. Reinforcements being obtained, the Pangholoo was subdued and tranquillity restored. The relations subsisting between the Dutch government and the native princes, by which the respective positions of those princes towards the British government were necessarily governed, seem to have been but imperfectly understood, and probably they had never been defined with much accuracy.

While the settlements in the straits were thus agitated, the interior of the territories subject to the government of Bengal was not free from disturbances. They commenced in Chota Nagpore, a zemindary forming part of the Ramgurh district, and which, with its subordinate pergunnahs, comprised an area of about ninety-five miles in length and eighty whole of Chota Nagpore proper and the "Of Toree," said he, "I am at a loss to give any account, save that it is in a Queda was not the only source of disquiet state of complete disorganization, to redesar the roads are blocked up, and all passers are have been anticipated, were without effect.

district, had been prompt in despatching a mili- But he disclaimed any intention of offensive tary force for the restoration of order; but the warfare, alleging that he had been led to amount was insufficient. In some cases, where apprehend an invasion of his own territories tranquillity had been apparently restored, the by the Company's forces, and ascribed to departure of the military was immediately fol- this cause the preparations which he had made lowed by a renewal of disturbances. On one for increasing the efficiency of his army. With occasion a squadron of cavalry, encountering a regard to this last point, the British resident body of six or seven thousand of the rioters, was expressed a hope that his visit had not been compelled to retire with some small loss. detailed account of the measures pursued for rajah's fears. the re-establishment of order would possess no interest, as in their prosecution they were the rajah from the governor of Fort St. George, marked by nothing to distinguish them from but it did not arrive until after his return. the ordinary course of such proceedings. It was then transmitted by another person, It will be enough to say that they suc- and the rajah forwarded an answer filled with ceeded, and the disturbances themselves complaints against Mr. Cassamajor, and dewould scarcely deserve notice, were it not manding the surrender of Chinna Buswa. that they afford additional evidence of the constant tendency of the wilder portion of the discountenanced the belief of the rajab's hossubjects of the British government in India tile intentions, had subsequently changed his to break loose from the restraints of law and opinion. In September, 1833, he recorded a order, and to return to a state where the hand minute, declaratory of his conviction that of every man is against his neighbour.

afford no unapt illustration of the ordinary blessings of native rule. Coorg was a small wish to be relieved from the duty of carrying principality on the confines of Mysore, which on communications with the rajah, and he now the ambitious rulers of the latter state, Hyder suggested that Mr. H. S. Graeme, resident Ali and Tippoo Sultan, had for a time held in at Nagpore, but temporarily sojourning for subjection. The romantic character of the the benefit of his health at Bangalore, should prince who held the raj of Coorg during the war carried on by Lord Cornwallis with Tippoo Sahib, his imprisonment in Mysore, his escape and subsequent activity in asserting his own claims and aiding the cause of the British and conciliatory character. Some doubt was government, have been already noticed. His thrown upon the accuracy of the information son and successor was a person of widely dif- forwarded to the government. The reports, ferent character. Late in the year 1832, the it was said, which had been received from the

of the British resident, Mr. Cassamajor, from the violence of their relative. The prince and contradictory, as to lead the government entertained a criminal passion for his sister, to believe that much of the information afforded whose resistance he had threatened to visit had been greatly exaggerated, if not entirely with death. The fugitives received from the unfounded. A hope was expressed—a very British government the protection which they desperate one it must have been—that by a sought. In the mean time the rajah, it was cautious avoidance of subjects calculated to ascertained, had taken measures for increasing irritate the rajah, that prince would be made his military strength, the object of which sensible of the impropriety of his recent behaproceeding was involved in doubt. It was viour, and would be induced to retract the currently rumoured that his intention was to offensive language towards the British resiinvade Mysore. The British resident, however, dent in Mysore, in which he had indulged in was of opinion that the views of the rajah were his correspondence with that functionary. A purely defensive, and that he was acting under letter, framed in a similar spirit, was addressed the apprehension of being himself attacked by to the rajah. In this paper his alleged premation, and to calm the fears of the rajah, if any as arising from "fears entertained by his highwere entertained, Mr. Cassamajor was deputed ness of some hostile measures on the part of to visit Charge. The result was a result of the rajah as a result of t to visit Coorg. The result was not very important. The British resident found the state was urged to dismiss. To the Court of Director of the country as bad as imagination could tors the representations transmitted by the have pictured it, and he made some representations on the subject. sentations on the subject. These, as might less favourable.

The rajah denied the existence of discontent, The government, on learning the state of the and repelled all suggestions for improvement. A unproductive of good in putting an end to the

The resident was to have borne a letter to

Mr. Cassamajor, who had for some time measures should be immediately taken to The series of events next to be narrated will terminate the correspondence with the prince. Before this time the resident had expressed a undertake the task which he was anxious to relinquish. The suggestion was adopted, and Mr. Graeme appointed. The instructions transmitted to him were altogether of a pacific sister of the rajah, named Dewah Amajee, resident, as well as from other British officers in Mysore, relating to the hostile preparations oorg into Mysore and claimed the protection of the rajah, and to other points connected with the affairs of Coorg, had been so various of his cruelty. Of the royal house, not a vacant throne was without a claimant, and single male, except the guilty rajah, survived. the power which had occupied the country The chief agent of the prince in the work was called upon to provide in some manner of murder, and as was believed, the prime for the administration of the government. instigator of many of his atrocities, was his A stranger might have been placed on the dewan, and the close of this man's life was not musnud; but there was no reason for the unworthy of the career by which it was pre-exercise of such self-denial on the part of the ceded. A reward being offered for his appre-British government, more especially as the hension, he fled into a jungle a short distance from Mercarrah, upon one of the trees of which he was found hanging. Whether the desire to become decire to was his own executioner, or whether summary justice was inflicted by some other hand, cannot be certainly known, as the fact of his being discovered dead in the situation its accomplishment. which has been described stands unillustrated by any explanatory evidence. But there is tinck was not fertile in great or interesting little reason to doubt that he added to the list events. Those occurrences which have been of murders in which he had been concerned, selected for relation will not bear comparison, either as principal or accessory, that of himself; in point of importance, with the events of and thus by the last act of despair avenged previous years; and for posterity, the period the numerous victims of his cruelty in the during which Lord William Bentinck held the heart of the country which had been the chief place in the Indian government will have theatre of his crimes. His profligate master few attractions. Nothing which it is conwas more fortunate. Relying, it may be president with the character of history to notice sumed, on his royal privilege for earthly impunity, he did not brave the vengeance of Heaven by prematurely rushing upon its judgment. He found that indulgence which it is effected by him. The former were neither the practice of the British government to ex- numerous nor important. tend to the fallen, and though subjected, as he dered necessary by the refractory conduct of must have anticipated, to restraint, he was the rajah of Colapore received its ratification provided for in a manner befitting, not his character, but his rank. Had his lot been treaty was concluded with the rajah of Khyrcast in times when native power was pre-dominant, and had he fallen before that which for the time possessed the ascendancy, his fate Hyderabad, in Scinde, arrangements having would have been very different. That his life the same object were concluded by the same should have been spared would perhaps have officer. been beyond reasonable hope; but had this boon been granted, he would most probably have been doomed to linger out the wretched rendering life agreeable. How far such excessive liberality is advisable or expedient it authorized to assume for a time the manageis not so easy to determine. It is at least worthy of remark that the government has not Bentinck, however, abstained from exercising always shown itself equally munificent to his authority, an act perfectly in accordance those who were far more deserving of consi- with the general character of his administraderation than the deposed rajah of Coorg.

In removing such a monster from the throne which he disgraced, the British government it becomes necessary to advert to the measures conferred a valuable boon upon the unhappy for the retrenchment of expense, which may people who had suffered under his misrule; be regarded as the most peculiar, if not the and he must entertain a very extravagant view most striking features of the policy which of the rights of princes who can regard the act marked the period under review. At the of removal as needing any lengthened justitime when Lord William Bentinck proceeded fication. The annexation of the conquered to India various causes combined to impose territory to the British description of the Tables and the Company of the Compan territory to the British dominions is not, on on the Indian government the observance of the first view, so clearly justifiable, but a very all practicable frugality.

few words of explanation will show that, in Great expenses had been incurred, and the this instance also, the right course was taken. usual consequence had followed, that much The rajah was childless, and he had taken difficulty was found in meeting them. Under effectual measures to cut of all pretensions to a sense of this difficulty new measures of the succession not deviced from himself.

The administration of Lord William Ben-The treaty renpoor, by Colonel Pottinger, principally with a view to the navigation of the Indus. With Oude was, during Lord William Bentinck's administration, as at most other times, a source of apprehension and difficulty. To remnant of his days in perpetual darkness. such a height had misgovernment arrived, as by the bounty of the British government he to overcome the reluctance of the home authorities to interfere in the affairs of native states; and the government of Bengal was ment of the affairs of Oude. Lord William Bentinck, however, abstained from exercising tion.

Turning to matters of internal arrangement, the succession not derived from himself. The retrenchment were thought to be demanded, while others prescribed long before, but never without any communication with the home carried into effect, were revived and ordered authorities; but, on being reported, it was to be adopted. Among them was the dimi-approved. The two changes appear to have under the name of batta.

under the name of double batta. Orders had of much disatisfaction.

So further change was either made or medidouble batta; but when the arrangement by tated till the year 1814. A general review of which it was in fact retained under another the state of the military establishments of name was reported, the Court of Directors. India appears then to have taken place at though expressing some disappointment, did home, and it was ordered that the allowance of not think fit to disturb that which had been full batta at those stations where half-batta despatch communicating the adoption of the batta and house reat should be substituted. A above regulations was dated in 1798. In 1801 revised reale of allowance for house-rent was the court, however, ordered the discontinuance at the same time furnished, the effect of which of the extra allowance to officers serving in was to increase the amount at Madras and the vizier's dominions. The subject had in the Bombay, but to diminish it at Bengal. mean time, attracted the attention of the go- Trees orders arrived in India while the vernment of Bengal. It was understood that government were engaged in the Nepaul war.

nution, in certain cases, of extra allowances been considered by the government of Bengal long enjoyed by the military at distant stations as parts of a single plan. They were so reported to the Court of Directors, the following The mode in which these allowances were remark being introduced into the letter in regulated had varied considerably down to which they were communicated :- "The loss the year 1726, when a uniform system was of the vizier's allowances will be compensated established, under which officers in garrison to the aggregate body of the officers of the or cantonments were to receive what was army by the grant which his excellency in termed half-batta, with quarters or house council has made to them in certain cases of rent; in the field they were to receive full extra batta, in consideration of their providing batta; and in the vizier's dominions, in themselves with quarters." This view of the addition to full-batta, a further allowance of question was not confined to the Bengal govequal amount, thus giving to the officers ernment; it appears to have been enterstationed there an advantage equal to that tained by the army—a point important to be which they appear to have previously enjoyed noticed, as it was at a future period the origin and quarters had previously been granted The answer of the Court of Directors to the should coase, and that, for the future, half-tion of the orders might be serving at the sta-1 the character of a reformer. Under pretence next succeeding relief.

These orders were transmitted in November, 1823. The marquis of Hastings had then quitted the government, but the prescribed retrenchment seems to have found no greater favour in the eyes of that nobleman's successor than in his. The local government still refrained from acting on them, and again transenforce them. The ground they took was on preceding government had made its standthe presumed compact between the Company and its officers. But they added, that if saving India, however, at the time when these stateas to lend them much aid, and the feeling then attempt to shake the resolve of the home authorities. The instructions heretofore controverted by the local government under two successive chiefs were once more repeated, and it fell to the lot of Lord William Bentinck to dated the 29th of November, 1828.

The publication of the general order produced, as was to be expected, great excitement inexpediency of abolishing it with regard to in the army of Bengal. Numerous memorials the remainder. complaining of the change effected by it were But for the indulgence of similar extra-transmitted home; some of them, it is to be vagance in a variety of ways, the administra-regretted, marked by an entire want of that tion of Lord William Bentinck would appear calm and respectful tone which ought to characterize all communications addressed by those who serve to those entitled to their obedience, and the absence of which is an offence have little reason to regret it. against good taste, not less than a breach of duty. Whether or not a more temperate course would have been attended with better success it is impossible to determine, but an offensive mode of prosecuting even a good cause is cal-bis predecessors had lamented, but which none culated to injure it, and it is not surprising had possessed the hardihood to suppress. If occasion were without effect.

The half-batta reduction was but one of a series of retrenchments in which the governor-least, be rescued from the fate of the regeneral engaged, and not a very important mainder. When future inquirers are desirous one. Lord William Bentinck had come to of ascertaining at what period and under what India as a reformer, and his zeal was quickened circumstances the horrible practice of suttee, by repeated exhortations to economy from The civil service received the benefit of his lordship's regulating hand, and if the for emancipating Hindoo widows from the neamount of savings which he was enabled to effect were small, his enemies cannot deny that the amount of change was considerable, or that husbands, they will learn that it was Lord the seeds of disorder were so liberally distributed as to insure an abundant harvest truth and right this noble triumph. through many succeeding years.

.William Bentinck was anxious to appear in Murder is in British India no longer recog-

tions to which they applied, nor to the officers of improving the character of the civil service who should be sent to those stations on the and providing for the advancement of merit, he sought to establish a system of universal espionage, better suited to the bureau of the hely office of the Inquisition than to the closet of a statesman anxious to be regarded as the representative of all that was liberal. Every superior officer, court, and board, was required to make periodical reports on the character and conduct of every covenanted servant emmitted an appeal against being required to ployed in a subordinate capacity. Like most of his lordship's projects, this plan met neither one point the same with that on which the with approbation nor success, and it was soon abolished. Shortly before he quitted India, and when, consequently, it was certain that whatever inconvenience might follow, no porwere the object, the financial situation of the tion of it would be encountered by his lordship, Company at that time did not call for such a he by a general order abolished the use of mode of effecting it. The financial state of corporal punishment in the native army. Whether such punishment can in all cases be ments came under consideration, was not such dispensed with-and whether the power of inflicting it be not eminently calculated to prevalent in regard to the administration of avert the necessity for any punishment—these Lord Amherst was calculated to prejudice are questions of deep interest—questions rather than to advance the success of the which should never be discussed but in a spirit which should never be discussed but in a spirit of grave and sincere anxiety to discover the truth. But, however they may be answered, the act of Lord William Bentinck must stand He had no exposed to severe reprobation. power to abolish the punishment with regard enforce them, which he did by general orders, to one part of the troops serving in India, and the slightest reflection might have suggested to any mind but his own, the imprudence and almost a blank, and were all record of it obliterated, posterity would scarcely observe the deficiency, while it is certain they would Yet there is one act for which it deserves not only to be remembered, but to be held in eternal honour. By Lord William Bentinck an end was put to an atrocious system of murder which many of that the remonstrances of the army on this every other act of his government be covered by oblivion—and his lordship's reputation would thereby sustain no loss-let one, at once so prevalent in India, ceased-when they seek to know to whom humanity is indebted cessity of destroying themselves by a death of torture on the funeral piles of their departed William Bentinck who afforded to the cause of rough many succeeding years.

It was not in financial affairs only that Lord the honour of the British name forbids it.

cleansed from participation in the guilt.

mains only to state that he quitted India in nized by law; and if in the dark recesses of May, 1835, having held the office of governorsuperstition instances may yet occur, the Bri- general somewhat longer than the ordinary tish nation and the British government are period; but having done less for the interest of India and for his own reputation than any The best and brightest of his deeds has who had occupied his place since the combeen reserved to close the history of Lord mencement of the nineteenth century, with William Bentinck's administration. It rether the single exception of Sir George Barlow.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

EXPIRATION OF PRIVILEGES OF EAST-INDIA COMPANY—PETITIONS FOR FREE TRADE—HOSTILITY OF MR. HUSKISSON TO THE COMPANY-REPORT ON THE CHINA TRADE-CHANGE IN AD-MINISTRATION—PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT—EVIDENCE OF MR. MELVILL—DISCUSSIONS IN THE COURT OF DIRECTORS—RESOLUTIONS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS: ADOPTED BY THE LORDS-BILL FOUNDED ON THE RESOLUTIONS AND PASSED.

THE exclusive privileges continued to the East-India Company by the Act of 1813 expired in During the intervening twenty years, the doctrines of free trade had been establishing themselves in every quarter: at the end of that period their reign was at its zenith. The servants of the Crown had unreservedly avowed a conviction of their abstract truth, and much had been done towards carrying them into practical effect. The protection heretofore afforded to various branches of trade and manufactures had in many instances been withdrawn; even the old navigation laws of England, which had been regarded as the foundation of its maritime strength, and which had commanded the approbation of Adam Smith himself, had fallen before the triumphant march of liberal opinions. The altered circumstances which followed the restoration of peace to Europe had increased the cry for new openings for commercial competition, and rendered it more general and more fierce. An attack of unwonted vigour upon the privileges which the East-India Company yet retained was, therefore, to be anticipated whenever those privileges should again come before parliament.

The usual period was not allowed to elapse before the note of preparation was sounded. In the year 1820 every interest in the country was suffering great distress. Free trade was, by its advocates, loudly vaunted as the only efficient remedy, and the marquis of Lansdowne, who took the lead upon the subject in the House of Lords, gave notice of a motion for a select committee to inquire into the foreign trade of the country, which motion, on the 26th of May, he brought forward. the course of the speech with which his lordship introduced the motion, he adverted to that which had previously been a subject of popular animadversion and complaint - the facilities enjoyed by the Americans, in regard to the trade with China, in comparison with Other witnesses, some of them merchants of those of the merchants of Great Britain. The great eminence, including Mr. George Lyall motion, being unopposed by the ministers, and Mr. Edward Ellice, of London, and Mr.

On the 5th of June Mr. Baring, in the House of Commons, moved for the appointment of a committee on the same subject; and this motion also was carried, not only without opposition, but even without remark.

It falls not within the purpose of this work to dwell upon any of the various objects of inquiry to which the two committees directed their attention, excepting such as related to the trade of the East-India Company. The most important of these was the refusal to British merchants of the privileges already noticed as enjoyed by those of America. American ships were allowed to carry British manufactures from Great Britain to China, a privilege denied to British ships. With the manufactures thus carried from the shores of England, an American merchant might purchase the produce of China, and bring it from thence to any part of Europe excepting The right to trade between Great Britain. China and continental Europe was not indeed a privilege granted by the British government, for that government had no power to withhold it, but the interdiction of similar communication by British traders was its act; thus Englishmen were restrained from participating in a beneficial trade, and thus were its profits thrown exclusively into the hands of foreign-The Americans had another advantage, in being enabled to carry on a profitable trade in furs between the north-western coast of America and China, in the practice of which the English were restricted. On these points. as well as with regard to increasing the facilities of trade in the eastern archipelago, and reducing the amount of tonnage requisite for obtaining a license for the trade with India, the two committees called for the opinion of several directors of the East-India Company. These opinions were decidedly opposed to any further concessions, and were stated by Mr. Charles Grant with great force and ingenuity.

Other witnesses, some of them merchants of was carried, and the committee appointed. John Gladstone, of Liverpool, offered testimony of very different effect; and, after examining the evidence on both sides and weigh- raised in the House of Commons by Mr. Husing its value, many impartial inquirers will be kisson. When Mr. Canning thought fit to led to the conclusion that, on this occasion, the East-India Company were somewhat ground that the representation of a great comunduly sensitive as to the probable effect of mercial town was inconsistent with the duties relaxation.

The reports of the two committees were, as must have been expected, favourable to a relaxation of the measures which the Company thought necessary for the protection of its privileges; but the existing compact was respected by the legislature, and no attempt was made to force a compliance with the sug-gested innovations. In the mean time the into a long and laboured statement, for the mercantile and manufacturing interests were purpose of showing the great extension of gathering their strength for the fight which, at no very distant period, was to take place, and the issue of which was to determine the regard to India in 1813. It appeared, howfate of the remaining privileges of the East- ever, from a counter statement made by Mr.

India Company. Indistinct murmurings preceded the com-House of Lords was enlightened by a petiprayed that the lords would take into their what he learnt from price-currents. early consideration the expediency of opening the trade to the East Indies. It seems to have been forgotten that the trade was already The form of obtaining a license was required, and there was some limitation as to the ports to which ships were to proceed: such limitations, however, exist almost everywhere; and it must not be supposed that the petitioners sought unrestricted freedom of commerce. On the contrary, they modified their application for a consideration of the expediency of opening the trade to the East Indies, by adding, "and of imposing such limitations upon that trade as might be consistent with the commercial and manufacturing interests of this country." After some very general remarks in favour of the prayer of the petition, the marquis of Lansdowne said, "he was well aware that the most extravagant expectations had been raised. Those expectations had arisen out of the depressed circumstances of the country, which induced persons to look out anxiously for an opening in which to employ their capital. The petitioners stated that the opening of the trade to India would be calculated more than anything else to raise the manufac-tures and trade of this country to that prosperity from which they had fallen; and he was sure that under such circumstances, the petition would meet with their lordships' attentive consideration." Lord Calthorp presented a similar petition from Birmingham. Lord Ellenborough, president of the Board of Commissioners, expressed his conviction of the great importance of the subject, but declined derived from opening it would be disappointed: giving any intimation of the course which that country was hermetically sealed against ministers intended to pursue.

On the same day the cry of free trade was relinquish his seat for Liverpool, on the of an adviser of the Crown, he surrendered the borough to Mr. Huskisson, who did not participate in the scruples of his chieftain. As the representative of Liverpool, Mr. Huskisson was, of course, the enemy of the East-India Company; and in presenting a petition praying for the abolition of such exclusive trade which had taken place since the cessation of the Company's exclusive privileges with Astell, chairman of the Company, that the accuracy of the alleged facts with which Mr. ing storm; and at length those anxious to Huskisson had been provided was by no participate in the restricted trade began to means equal to the vivacity of the expectaspeak out. On the 12th of May, 1829, the tions which he had been instructed to profess. With regard to the comparative prices and tion from Manchester, presented by the qualities of tea, one of the points at issue, Mr. marquis of Lansdowne. The petition, accord- Huskisson subsequently declared that he knew ing to the statement of the noble marquis, nothing, except what had been told him, and another point, which related to the amount of tonnage employed in the India trade at different periods, Mr. Huskisson did not venture any explanation or defence.

On Thursday, the 14th of May, Mr. Whitmore submitted a motion for inquiry, which was negatived without a division: it furnished occasion, however, for a very long speech from the mover, and some shorter ones from other members. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Goulburn, thought the session too far advanced to admit of inquiry, and suggested its postponement until the next. Mr. Huskisson was for entering upon inquiry at once, as was also Mr. Hume. Mr. Vesey Fitzgerald and Mr. Robinson supported the views of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Wynne lamented the continuance of the China trade for so long a period in the hands of the Company. Mr. Baring took an intermediate view between the opinions that had been advanced by other speakers, and appeared to have equal doubts as to the advantages and disadvantages of any course. Sir Charles Forbes thought the union of sovereign and merchant in the Company disadvantageous; but added, that, objectionable and faulty as the Company's government might be, it was preferable to that of our colonial governments; and he congratulated the natives of India on being placed under the government of the Company instead of the Crown. With regard to the China trade, it was his opinion that the expectations formed of the advantages to be foreign commerce. The trade at Canton was was managed by monopolies. merchants fixed the prices of the commodities, and the markets of Canton had maintained such a uniformity of prices for twenty years that the article of cotton had seldom varied beyond eight or ten tales per pecul. Trade was interdicted at every other port in China; and it was within his own knowledge, that an enterprising individual had fitted out a vessel for the purpose of forcing a trade in other ports of the empire, who had not only been unable to effect his object, but had been obliged to purchase provisions by stealth and with hard dollars.

Mr. Astell afterwards addressed the House in a speech marked by great ability as well as by great moderation. Referring to the alleged increase of exports to India, he denied that it was by itself a proof of increased prosperity. To be satisfactory upon this point, the increased export should be accompanied by an increase of import from India. The Company had long been alive to the necessity of encouraging production in India. The article of cotton had received especial attention. But the muslins of India, once so famous, had been supplanted by the manufactures of Manchester and Glasgow. European articles, he said, were to be obtained at the presidencies as cheap as in England.

Mr. Warburton complained of the impediments thrown in the way of Europeans desirous of visiting India, at the same time that he complained of the want of sufficient protection for the natives against injuries inflicted by such persons. Against one part of the existing system for the government of India he was singularly bitter. The constitution of the Board of Commissioners he thought highly objectionable. With respect to the persons who composed that board, no doubt they had the interests of our Indian possessions sincerely at heart; but how was it possible, he priated to the payment of dividends to the asked, that they could do any good when they proprietors of East-India Stock. In other moment they had learned to do their duty they were removed to some other office, and new persons were introduced, just as ignorant of the state of India as their predecessors when they first became members of the Board. This subject, he declared, required the serious attention of the House.

Lord Ashley made some remarks in reply to part of Mr. Warburton's statements. was followed by Mr. Brougham, whose speech was devoted principally to pointing out the difficulties of the subject. He wished the entire abolition of the Company's monopoly, and if the mercantile question only stood in the way, it could, he said, be easily dealt with: but the difficulty was, how the removal carried on by a monopoly; the whole empire lalso, to its long-established government. When The Hong he said this, it would be at once conceived. that he did not wish to transfer that government to this country, because, though an anomaly, yet the government of India, as regarded the interests of the people and the maintenance of due and legal subordination. could not, he thought, be placed so safely in other hands, even if they lived to see the Company cease to be traders, and aspire only to be governors of a mighty empire. Taking into view everything connected with the subject, he thought it better to defer inquiry until an early period of the next session. short reply from Mr. Whitmore closed the debate. The result has been already mentioned.

Early in the session of 1830 the question of the renewal of the privileges of the East-India Company was introduced in both houses by the government. In the House of Lords, on the 9th of February, Lord Ellenborough moved for a select committee "to inquire into the present state of the affairs of the East-India Company, and the trade between the East Indies, Great Britain and China." In his speech prefacing the motion, Lord Ellen-borough adverted with some indignation to the fallacies and erroneous reports which, he observed, had been scattered through the country. Among these, he gave prominence to one assertion, most industriously propagated -that the territorial finances of India derived no benefit from the commercial funds or profits of the Company. So far from that being the case, it would, his lordship said, appear from the documents laid before parliament, that, during the course of the sixteen years that had elapsed since the modified renewal of the Company's privileges, the territorial finances of India had been aided, either directly or indirectly, by as large a sum from the Company's commercial profits as had been approheld office only by the tenure of a day? The words, the Company had applied to the benefit of the people whom they governed, a portion equal to that enjoyed by themselves of the net profit derived from the exclusive trade against which so much interested clamour was raised. Lord Ellenborough, in other parts of his speech, alluded to the increased consumption of tea, and the reduction that had been effected in the price of that commodity; to economical reform, then an unceasing topic of discussion; to the substitution of native service for that of Europeans; and to the desire shown by the East-India Company to increase the commerce of India with England, as manifested by a large reduction of the duties imposed on the importation into the former country of the manuof this monopoly could be accomplished with factures of the latter, as well as by a corperfect security to the other great interests responding reduction in the duties on the that were concerned—with safety to the export of indigo and cotton, articles of great essential interests of the immense country importance to British manufacturers. The governed by the Company, and with safety, marquis of Lansdowne signified his a regument.

bation of the motion, and expatiated on the called upon to perform; after which the admitting East-India directors to the comdebate diverged into a discussion of a personal mittee, until it appeared almost impossible to nature, which it is unnecessary to pursue determine in which direction the scale turned: Lord Ellenborough's motion for the appoint on the whole, he seemed to conclude that it ment of a committee was carried.

On the same day, in the House of Commons, Mr. Peel moved for the appointment of a select committee. Having stated his reasons for referring the whole subject to one committee, he proceeded to speak of the conduct of the East-India Company. Looking to the representations of which he was in possession, viewing the documents that were in his hands, he was bound to say, that any investigation into the conduct of that body would, he believed, tend to their credit. Contrasting the administration of the Company with that of any other colonial establishment that ever existed, he was convinced that their conduct had redounded greatly to their honour. On the commercial part of the question he refrained from giving any opinion, while on that coyne had given notice of an intention (which which he admitted to be the most important he did not fulfil) to move an instruction to the of all, the welfare of the people of India, he committee to take into consideration the trade urged the propriety of endeavouring, while with China, and the propriety of removing keeping them under British rule, "to atone impediments in the way of a free trade with to them for the sufferings they endured, and India, the committee was finally agreed to. the wrongs to which they were exposed in being reduced to that rule; and to afford them such advantages, and confer on them of which they had been appointed. The China such benefits, as may in some degree console trade was the first subject of inquiry, and the them for the less of their independence."

After some remarks from Mr. Whitmore, Mr. Peel submitted a list of the proposed com- searching minutoness. objected to the introduction of the names of He was, as has been seen, a devoted partisan two or three East-India directors, and General of one side of the great question in dispute, Gascoyne (member for Liverpool) took the and the zeal which he brought to the service same course, because one of the members of the cause was on one occasion exhibited in that no committee could be a fair one unless importation, together with lawful interest inquire.

This was noticed by Mr. Astell, who observed that he know not why the defenders of the East-India Company were not to be heard inittee, it appeared that losses upon the outin the house, or in the committee, as well as ward trade to China were considered by the its professed opposors; nor why a gentleman who had been the public advocate of opinions hostile to the renewal of the Company's charter, and because he had presented petitions to the same effect, was on that ground to be appointed and that the Company had thereby forfeited a member of the committee, while directors were to be excluded, because their leanings pressing a mere opinion on the point; he gave were presumed to be the other way.

These observations called up Mr. Huskisson, who maintained that there was a difference

Mr. Baring, who followed Mr. Astell, importance of the duty which the House was balanced the advantages and disadvantages of was preferable to have them. He thought the choice of the committee fair, but he said that he should go into the discussion with a strong impression that the task imposed upon them was beyond their power.

These views appeared to be adopted by Mr. Bright, who, however, claimed that for himself which he denied to the committee. He should reserve to himself, he said, the right of judging the question just as if no committee of inquiry had been instituted. Mr. P. Thomson, who followed, accused his predecessor in the debate of inconsistency, he having, in a formor session, been loud in calling for a committee. After Mr. Huskisson had objected to so many county members being placed on the committee, and General Gas-

The committees of the two houses entered, without dolay, upon the duty for the discharge investigation was conducted, in the Commons committee more especially, with great and Mr. Huskisson was Sir James Macdonald and Mr. Hume one of the most active and diligent members. named had written a pamphlet in favour of a remarkable manner. The Company were by the East-India Company. The members, who law precluded from putting up their tea for were either led by their inclinations, or comby their position, to oppose the renownl tens put up at any one sale, should exceed the of the Company's charter, seemed to think prime cost, with the freight and charges of composed entirely of persons devoted to one from the time of the arrival of such tea inside of the question into which they were to Great Britain, and the common premium of insurance as a compensation for the sea risk incurred. In the course of the examination of one of the witnesses called before the com-Company as losses upon remittances made to China for the purchase of teas. This fact was eagerly seized upon by Mr. Huskisson, who contended that it was a violation of the law, their charter. He was not content with exnotice of an intention to propose that the committee should make a special report, giving it the weight of their united authority. between the directors and persons who had notable plan of annihilating the liated princt the same degree of interest in the concerns of the Company at a stroke was of the Company.

tions of the Company was, "that all the period secured by law, or be despoiled of them Company's arrangements and remittances to by a breach of national faith.

made for interest in the Company's calcula- trade, eminently distinguished by clearness, Company ought, in fixing the price of tea, to a lucid and comprehensive abstract of the charge interest previously to the arrival of the evidence without any expression of opinion. tea, interest from that period to the time of A shorter report on matters unconnected with sale being allowed by Act of Parliament. the China trade, and being no more than an This objection was met by pointing out that introduction to a part of the evidence, was private merchants, in making similar calcula- also presented. On this occasion Mr. Trant tions, would certainly include interest of money expressed a hope that, in the following session, as part of the cost of an article, and that, if the committee which might be appointed excluded in the case before the committee, the would especially consider Indian affairs with upset price of the tea would not be, as reference to the interests of the natives intended, the sum of the prime cost and of India. General Gascoyne reiterated his charges, but that of the prime cost and charges former complaints as to the construction of charges, but that of the prime cost and charges; former complaints as to the construction of exclusive of interest; the result being, that the public would have the use of the Company's betraying a partiality to the East-India Comcapital for nothing. This result, as was justly pany. The enemies of the Company in the remarked, could not be believed to have been within the intention of the legislature. It is not undeserving of observation, that in their defended the report, and Mr. Ward, the calculation of interest the Company displayed chairman of the Committee, reminding the a singular liberality. The charge for interest House that the report was only a summary of upon their outward consignments from Eng-the evidence, stated that those members of land was for six months—the proceeds of these the committee who were most opposed to the consignments, it appeared, were not realized chaims of the East-India Company expressed for ten months. Again: they were entitled the highest opinion of its impartiality. He by Act of Parliament to charge interest upon pithily added, that if the result of the evithe stock of tea in warehouse until the period dence were favourable to the Company, it permission to its full extent, their charge power to constrain witnesses in their answers. under this head being limited to eighteen Mr. John Stuart, a gentleman whose name months, while the average period that the teal remained in warehouse was twenty months.

been accustomed to compute the value of fine of the House of Lords reported in a manner silver at the old Mint standard of five shillings less elaborate than the Commons committee, and twopence per ounce. This had become but with some admixture of opinion. obsolete, gold having for some time been the In October the chairman and dep only standard in Great Britain, and it was man of the Company were invited to an inurged that by adhering to the old silver terview with the duke of Wellington, prime standard the Company had fallen into irreminister, and Lord Ellenborough, president gularity and error. It appeared that, upon of the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs an average of all the years from the renewal of India. The duke of Wellington, in opening of the Company's term of the government of the business, suggested the probability of the India and exclusive trade to China to the Company being permitted to retain the go-period of inquiry, there was only a small vernment of India, but deprived of the fractional difference between the value of the monopoly of the China trade.

the enemies of the Company, and successfully disposed of by its witness, Mr. Melvill. It ments of a witness subsequently called—Mr. was henceforth clear, that, whatever might be J. C. Melvill, auditor of the East-India Com-its fate for the future, the Company must pany's accounts. His explanation of the opera- enjoy its privileges for the remainder of the China were made with a view, solely and exclusively, to supplying their treasury at Canton with funds for the purchase of tea."

Portions of the evidence taken before the committee had been reported to the House from time to time. On the 8th of July the Another objection related to the charge chairman presented a report on the China A doubt was expressed whether the completeness, and impartiality. It exhibited They did not avail themselves of this must be recollected that the committee had no was placed on the committee at the suggestion of Mr. Hume, added his testimony to In calculating exchanges, the Company had the fairness of the report. The committee

In October the chairman and deputy-chair-The chairman, rupees at the market price and according to Mr. Astell, pointed out the financial diffi-the old standard.

Mr. Astell, pointed out the financial diffi-culties which would arise from such a course; It is unnecessary to pursue further the the advantages which resulted both to India captious and querulous objections raised by and Great Britain from the continuance of the Company's trade with China and the necessity It that the security of the Company's capital is sufficient to observe, that his evidence should be guaranteed in the event of any effectually silenced the assertion, that the change. It was observed in reply, that the Company had forfeited their charter by a Company would have the security of their systematic violation of the law, and the threats fixed property in India, and with regard to which were superadded to that assertion. It the assistance afforded to India from the control.

having been submitted to a committee of cor-efforts had been devoted to reducing the exrespondence, a minute was recorded by that penditure of India. This mode of supplying body, declaring that they could not recomdeficiency, vaguely binted at in the commend the Company to be a party to such an munication made to the chairman and deputymend the Company to be a party to such an arrangement as that suggested by the minister of the Crown. It was remarked, that this was the first occasion, since the existence of the present system, on which a proposal had been submitted which, while it conferred no one advantage on the Company, put their commercial capital in hazard; leaving them without any security for the large sums which they had embarked in the government of India, except that which might be afforded by the property which they held in their own right, and which could not properly be taken from them. The advantage derived to India from the surplus profits of the China trade beyond ten-and-a-half per cent. (the amount to which the proprietors' dividends were limited) was pointed out, as well as the financial danger to be apprehended from the proposed change. These views, on being submitted at later period to a Court of Directors, were approved and adopted by them.

Within a very short period of the interview.

Affairs of India.

China trade, it was hoped that the reductions payment of the debt due by the public to the of Indian expenditure which had been and Company at the expiration of three years, might hereafter be made, would bring the preparatory to the expiration of three years, charges within the revenue; that if not, the trade. On the 21st of April, on occasion of deficit must be made good by leans or otherwise, as parliament might direct; but that, on the supposition of the revenues of India, praying for free trade to China, free trade to being no longer assisted by the profits of the India, and permission freely to rettle in India, China trade, it would be necessary to sub-local Ellenborough aroused, that it was the ject the expenditure to general and efficient intention of the government of which he was a member to oven the trade to China, and a member to open the trade to China, and The communication of the king's ministers that, to enable them to effect that object, their were approved and adopted by them.

Within a very short period of the interview which gave rise to the minute above mentors, an important change in the king's allowing access to their records, and charged councils took place. The administration, of which the duke of Wellington and Sir Robert thing into confusion by the method, or rather Peel were the chief members, resigned, and want of method, with which he had conducted a new one was formed under Feel Grong. It his inquiries in the committee Mrs. Reference was kinety in accordance with the terms of its appointment.

Mr. Cultar Fergusson averred that the directors had given every facility for inquiry by though a coordance was kinety in accordance with the terms of its appointment.

Mr. Cultar Fergusson averred that the directors had given every facility for inquiry by though a coordance was kinety in accordance with the terms of its appointment.

Mr. Cultar Fergusson averred that the directors had given every facility for inquiry by though a coordance was kinety in accordance with the terms of its appointment.

Mr. Whitmore with having thrown every which the development is accordance with the conductor was kinety in accordance with the terms of its appointment.

Mr. Whitmore with having thrown every with the conductor was kinety in accordance with the conductor was a new one was formed under Earl Grey. It his inquiries in the committee. Mr. C. Grant was composed of Whigs of various shades of also vindicated the directors from the susliberality, with the intermixture of three or picion of throwing any obstruction in the way four members of the party of Mr. Canning. of the inquiries which the committee had con-Among the latter was Mr. Charles Grant—sidered it their duty to institute. Mr. Hume subsequently Lord Glenelg—the new presingreed in the observations of Mr. Astell, sident of the Board of Commissioners for the who, he said, had clearly stated that, till the Company petitioned, the matter was in the One topic of absorbing interest occupied hands of government; and Mr. Hume thought the principal share of attention, both in the government should suggest some mode of concabinet and in parliament; but in this place ducting the business. Sir John Malcolm reit is proper to advert only to such proceedings commended that the various subjects before as were connected with the Company's tenure the committee should be looked upon as of government and exclusive trade. On the forming parts of an entire system; and Sir 4th of February, 1831, Mr. Grant moved the Charles Forbes, after reproving some members ath of Rebruary, 1831, Mr. Grant moved the Charles Forbes, after reproving some memors re-appointment of the committee of inquiry.

Mr. Whitmore thereupon took occasion to express an opinion, that enough was already India Company would be duly attended to, as known to enable the House to take steps the country owed to that Company a debt of towards laying open the China trade. Mr. Hume concurred; while Mr. Cutlar Fergusson convenience arose from there being two parties and Mr. Astell dissented from the views of in the committee strongly opposed to each Mr. Whitmore On the 15th of April 1999. Mr. Whitmore. On the 15th of April, other; and Mr. Robinson attributed the diffi-Mr. Grant moved that notice be given of culty to members going into the committee with pre-conceived opinions. was re-appointed.

Mr. Whitmore, on the 20th July, presented from the evidence obtained by the committee, ence to the subject until the end of the year. the tendency of which was decidedly in favour of a renewal of the Company's privileges.

in moving for certain returns connected with two great branches,—territorial and com-India, adverted to the omission of any notice mercial. of the subject in the king's speech, and inferred made to show that the commerce of the from thence that it was not the intention of Company had been sustained at the expense ministers to oring the question before Parlia- of the territory—that the Company had no ment during that session. He disapproved of capital, and that the trade was a constant the postponement, expressed his belief that drain upon the revenue. On the other hand the Act of 1813 had been passed without it was maintained, that the Company had proper consideration, and referred to an expital to a very large amount, and that the opinion to that effect, delivered by those who profits of their trade had not only paid the had since become the king's advisers. He dividends on its stock, but had afforded a large thought the re-appointment of the committee surplus for the benefit of the territory, a surplus for the benefit of the territory, a surplus for the benefit of the territory. ministers to bring the question before Parlia of the territory—that the Company had no thought the re-appointment of the said he indispensable; and, if not revived, said he mation on the subject. A would submit a motion on the subject. full inquiry into the financial affairs of India, he thought, was called for, as upon that would depend the question whether the Company arbitrarily imposed by the Board of Commiswould be able to carry on the government signers in opposition to the representations without assistance from this country. Grey admitted that ministers did not intend purpose but that of concealing the obligation to bring on any measure on the subject of the incurred by that branch of finance, in regard East-India Company's charter during that to which the Company was only a trustee, to session; pledged himself that ample time that in which it was a principal, administering should be given for discussion, and intimated its own affairs. These accounts, inevitably that he considered great part of the difficulty attended with some degree of intricacy, were and responsibility attending the settlement thus involved in a labyrinth of confusion, well of the question to have been obviated, by the suited to the views of those whose object was extensive inquiries which had taken place to misrepresent and distort. Here, again, through the committees of the two houses.

of a committee. Mr. Courtney and Sir James sentations of their adversaries were exposed, burn wished to know, whether the committee gained at the expense of commerce, or comwere to report opinions, or only to collect merce at the expense of territory, triumphevidence and put it in form. In reference to antly settled. Notwithstanding this, howcommittee into a number of sub-committees, the leading opponents of the Company, were Mr. Goulburn also inquired whether, if the submitted to a professional accountant, selected suggestion were adopted, such sub-committees by the Board of Commissioners. This gentlewere to report to the House as to the parti- man (Mr. Pennington), after seven months' cular topics of investigation submitted to investigation, reported, that in the fifteen them. Mr. Stuart Wortley also proposed a years commencing 1814-15, when the separa-question as to the functions of the sub-tion of territory and commerce took place, committees. In answer, Mr. Grant said, the in conformity with the provisions of an Act words of his resolution were the same as of Parliament, territory had gained from those used on a former occasion; that the commerce, exclusive of interest, £3,507,423, precise duties of the sub-committees would be by the use of the Board's rate of exchange in

The committee general committee only would report to the House.

The committee met, and in the course of a petition from certain British and native in-their labour collected the largest mass of habitants of Calcutta, praying the abolition of evidence on Indian affairs extant. On the the East-India Company's monopoly. This 16th of August they reported to the House, gave rise to some conversation, in which Though not entirely free from the expression Mr. Cutlar Fergusson and Sir John Malcolm of opinion, the report is for the most part an took part; but the result possessed little of abstract of portions of the evidence, with interest, and nothing of novelty. The session references to the minutes and appendices on closed without any further discussion of the which it is founded. The close of the session subject, without any intimation of the intention | prevented any discussion in Parliament, and the of ministers, and without any result following usual repose of a vacation suspended all refer-

Among the subjects which had occupied the attention of the committee, the most Parliament again assembled on the 6th of important and most exciting was finance. The On the Sth, Lord Ellenborough, accounts of the Company were divided into The most desperate efforts were plus which would have appeared much greater, had not the adjustment of accounts between territory and commerce been made at a rate of exchange injurious to the latter, and Earl of the Court of Directors, for no apparent the Company found an able advocate in On the 27th of January, 1832, Mr. Charles Mr. Melvill, by whose lucid, masterly, and Grant moved once more for the appointment convincing evidence, the errors and misrepre-Macdonald supported the motion. Mr. Goulland the question, whether territory had a suggestion of Mr. Grant, for dividing the ever, the accounts, at the suggestion of one of best regulated in the committee, and that the repaying the sums advanced by commerce to territory; that the average annual profit of speech, touching on the principal points in the India and China trade during that period discussion, but aletaining from any decisive was £1,000,017; and that from the manage-expression of opinion. The papers were then ment of private goods and other courses, read; and this operation occupying five hours, £064,564; and that of the connectal profits the consideration of the subject was postponed during the fifteen years a sum of £4,923,021 till the 15th of April, after a motion for printhad been directly applied to territorial purposes, ling the correspondence had been made by the to the liquidation of Indian debt, or in a man-chairman and carried.

ner that operated to prevent its increase, In December, the chairman received a communication of the views of Government as to the conditions upon which the charter should be even days. After the reading of a direct, becomes designed changes being, that the Chura of the letters addressed to the president of the monopoly should cease. The Company were liberal functions; but their political functions; but their assets, commercial and territorial, were to be assigned to the Crown, on behalf of the Company to accept generally of the bargain territorial government of India. In return, an annulty of £650,000 was to be granted, with certain modifications of the terms. The payable in England by half-yearly instalments, to be charged upon the territorial revenues of fund should be extended to such an amount as India exclusively, and to form part of the would, with the probable accumulations, be India exclusively, and to form part of the would, with the probable accumulations, be territorial debt of that country,—to be unsufficient to redeem the annuity in forty years, redeemable for a limited period, after which and that it should be a recurity for the redeemable for a limited period, after which it might be redeemed, at the option of parliament, by the payment of one hundred pounds for every five guineas of annuity. The new annuitants were to retain the character of a joint-stock company. Some changes were suggested in the arrangements for the education of civil rervants, with a view to create competition. Every British subject was to have the right of proceeding to the principal seats of government in India without license; but the right of visiting the interior, or of residing there, and of acquiring and holding property, was to be subject to regulation and restraint by the local government. It was further proposed to add to the power of the Board of Commissioners, by the following modifications of the system previously in soperation:—That the receipt of a final and lusive order from the Board for the trans-

to prepare a despatch when directed by the public funds, in place of drawing £630,000 per Board, or to send out one altered by the Board, annum from the revenues of India, was moved, the Board should have power to send it out but withdrawn, as were also one for excluding themselves; that the power of the Court to from the resolution the words requiring that recall a governor or commander of the forces the Company's government should be renewed should not be exercised without the veto of the for a prescribed period of not less than twenty Board; that the Board should exercise the years, and one to the effect that the Company same control over the grant of pensions and should, for the purpose of remittance, continue salaries below two hundred pounds per annum, to carry on the China trade in common with and gratuities below six hundred pounds, which the public. Another amendment, for leaving they had previously exercised over those of the whole negotiation in the hands of the larger amounts; and that the home establish- directors, and in the event of their not speedily ment and expenditure should be placed under obtaining a just compromise, directing that the control of the Board.

between the Court and the president of the substitute for the original resolution, and the Board which was submitted to a general court principal variation from which resolution conof the proprietors of the East-India Company sisted in an acknowledgment that the time on the 25th March. The Chairman, Mr. had arrived for surrendering the exclusive Ravenshaw, introduced the subject in a trade with China, shared the same fate. This

On the 15th of April the court again met, In December, the chairman received a com- and the discussion of the question before it lusive order from the Board for the trans-ion to India of any despatch, should bind arrangements. An amendment, reprobating Court to send such despatch by the first p; that in case of the refusal of the Court invest their own undeniable property in the they should apply to the legislature, was then A long and tedious correspondence ensued put and negatived. Another, proposed as a

was followed by a further motion for an offered no objection to the suggestion that amendment, expressing apprehension from the sufficient power should be retained over the indiscriminate access of Europeans to India; commercial assets to enable the Court to prodenouncing the opening of the China trade as vide for outstanding obligations and for the perilous; claiming for the proprietors the claims of commercial officers and servants, power of investing their own property for reserving only the full power of the Board to their own security, or a guarantee if this act as might be thought fit; but they refused power were withheld; objecting to the annuity of £630,000 per annum being made a burden upon the people of India; anticipating for the Company a successful trade with China, though that the proposesions made by the ministers were deprived of all exclusive privileges and of the The concessions made by the ministers were government of India; in the event of the neither few nor unimportant; but the Court Company retaining that government, calling of Directors still thought it necessary to press for undiminished authority for the Directors, two points claimed in the resolution of the and the right of submitting at all times any differences with the Board to the decision of urged, that when it had been proposed that parliament, and expressing sympathy with the the sum set apart for the guarantee fund commercial servants who would be deprived of should be about two millions, the term of the employment. This amendment, too, was lost, annuity had not been fixed, and that as forty Another amendment, proposing to leave out years had since been determined on, the words fixing the rate at which the annuity guarantee fund, with its accumulations, at the was to be redeemed, was also lost; as was end of that term, ought to be equal to the another, proposing to exclude the words amount of capital to be discharged. "exercising the came powers as they do under upon this suggestion required about three the statute," from that part of the original millions to be set apart for the commencement motion which referred to the continuance of of the guarantee fund, instead of two millions. the Company's authority for a defined period. The other point, which the Court never ceased An amendment, approving of the abolition of to press upon ministers whenever an opporthe exclusive China trade, but impugning the tunity occurred, was the necessity of publicity. security offered for the annuity, followed, and By this, it was explained, they did not mean this was lost. Another, suggesting the abolition of the Board of Commissioners, an increase productive of delay and expense, but only an of the powers of the Court of Proprietors, and the continuance to the Company, for a limited period, of the right to trade to China in common with the private trader, was moved and The question was followed its predecessors. then formally put on the original resolutions, which were carried, on a ballot, by a very large majority.

These resolutions being communicated to the president of the Board of Commissioners, were laid by him before the cabinet, and the result communicated to the Court. Ministers agreed to fix the amount of the guarantee fund at two millions, but refused to increase it beyoud that sum; they agreed that the fund should form a security for the dividends as well as the principal, to the extent of raising money upon its credit if necessary—to fix at twenty years the renewed term of the Company's government, and to withdraw the suggestion that the Board should have a veto on the recall by the Court, of governors and military commanders in India-to give the proprietors the general court, but recommending compliance option of having their annuity paid off, on with those of ministers, was carried. From three years' notice, at the expiration of the this, the chairman, Mr. Marjoribanks, and the term for which the Company were to continue deputy, Mr. Wigram, dissented. The result to administer the government of India, or at of the decision of the Court of Directors was any subsequent period when their government a reference of the subject to a general court, might terminate, and to confirm their right to which met on the 10th, when the views of the resume trade, if they thought fit—to maintain majority of the Court of Directors were the principle previously existing with regard adopted and confirmed. to expenditure, excepting only in future that no expense should be incurred without the place in parliame. previous sauction of the Board; and they resolve itself into a the establishment of any tribunal of appeal enactment requiring that whenever the Court should, after previous remonstrance, pass a resolution of protest against the orders or instructions of the Board, such resolutions should be laid before both Houses of parlia-This, it was contended, could have no ment. prejudicial effect; it would interpose no difficulty to giving full effect to the final orders of the Board, inasmuch as the communication to parliament would not be made until after the orders had been despatched. On both points the answer of the minister was a peremptory refusal of compliance.

The decision of the government upon these questions having been laid before the Court of Directors, a resolution was proposed by the chairman, declining to recommend to the proprietors to consent to a departure from the required amount of guarantee, or to surrender their views on the importance of publicity. The resolution was lost, and another, expressing continued adherence to the views of the

On the 13th of ;⊹in his On the question that the speaker do leave the chair, Sir Georgo Staunton moved, by way of amendment, a string of revolutions relating to the China trade, which having been negatived without a division, the House went into committee. Mr. Grant's speech, introductory of the resolutions which he was about to propose, was extremely long, but most of the topics had been discussed until no fertility of invention could impart to them any nevelty of illustration. He panegyrized the Company's government, contrasting it with the government of native princes in India, and with the government of the colonies of Great Britain and other European nations. One point in its favour, advanced by the president of the Board, was, that by the interposition of the Board, was, that by the interposition of the however, seemed aware that serious objections Company between the government and the lay against his plan of transferring to the people of India, that country had been pre- Crown the entire government of India. He served from being agitated by those constant protested against any comparison between the fluctuations of party and political feelings, government of India and the government of which were so powerful here, and which would their colonies by European nations, because which were ro powerful here, and which would have opposed so formidable a barrier to improvement. Mr. Grant, however, objected to the union of trade with the East-India Company's government—a union which marred its efficacy; and this he thought was a generally-bers of that House taking a different view. He objected to it, not on the ground of theory merely, but of practical inconvenience. Another ovil, he thought, in the existing system was the want of a proper check on the expenditure of the subordinate presidencies; and a further evil was found in too much interference from home. Adverting to the question of the continuance of the China monopoly, he said it was one on which the nation had made up its mind; but he admitted that, if as a minister of the Crown he felt that the decision.

After some remarks from various speakers, minister of the Crown he felt that the decision of the nation was not founded in justice, it would not become him to come forward to propose a change in conformity with it. Mr. Cutlar Fergusson followed, and appealed to the comparative control duties on teas, and the intention that the dition of the Company's territories and those formative regions. Company should not suddenly discontinuous of native princes, as evidence of the good establishments for the fabrication of silk, Mr. government of the former. He testified, from Grant came to the financial arrangements by personal knowledge, to the feeling entertained which the Company were to give up the whole by the Indian government towards natives; of their privileges and property for an annuity and said, that if he were to point out a fault secured on the territory of India. After some in this respect, it was that the leaning was observations intended to show that India was towards the natives rather than towards capable of bearing this additional burden, he Europeans. Mr. Fergusson defended the exproceeded to notice the intended extension of ereise of the patronage of the Company, as the power of the governor-general over the having been performed with a degree of good subordinate presidencies - the change pro- faith, honour, and integrity, never surpassed; posed to be made in the state of the law, by and concluded with pointing out the difficul-subjecting Europeans to the same jurisdiction ties of improving the state of the law in India. with natives,—the removal of all disabilities | The discussion, if discussion it might be called, for office on account of birth or religion,—the was cold, meagre, and purposeless. The resoissuing of a law commission,—and the ap-lutions were, of course, carried. pointment of two suffragan bishops for Madras and Bombay. He then moved three resolu- the Lords, where some conversation took place tions, the effect of them being to approve of on the propriety of laying before the House adthe opening of the China trade, -of the sur- ditional information. On the 28th, Mr. Grant, render of the property of the Company to the in the Commons, presented a bill, founded on Crown on condition of receiving a stipulated the ministerial plan of compromise with the

On the question that the speaker do leave sum from the territorial revenues,-and of the

On the 17th of June they were carried up to the government and the Company were now of Europeans to India-on all which points rettled; but there remained many points con-nected with the administration of the govern-be taken in the ministerial measure. ment of India to be arranged. The most important of these were, the proposed separation of the north-western provinces from the Bengal presidency, for the purpose of forming a reparate government; the determination of the powers of the governor-general in council and the constitution and functions of the rubordinate governments. The ministerial lill was framed to give effect to the first mentioned object. It end-swed the governor-general in council with the sole power of legislation, and deprived the subordinate governments of the power of creating any new effice, or granting any relary, grainly, or allowance, without the previous struction of the chief government. The governor-general only was to have the assistance of a council. The a liministration of the affairs of each previdency was to have the assistance of a council. Then they appeared at beneficent conquerors, deriving no other advantage from their constituent and provided the profession of the chief government. The governor-general only was to have the assistance of a council. Then they appeared at beneficent conquerors, deriving no other advantage from their constituent and provided the province of a council. Then they appeared at beneficent conquerors, deriving no other advantage from their constituent and the constitution with which the was connected; but, he raid, it was not intended to restrain the Company from trading. He expressed an apprehension that the character of the constituent body, the proprietors of India stock, would be deteriorated by the contemplated changes, and contrasted the position of the Company with respect to India were provided to restrain the Company from trading. He expressed an apprehension that the character of the constituent body, the proprietors of India stock, would be deteriorated by the contemplated changes, and contrasted the position of the Company with respect to India. portant of these were, the proposed separation speaking to the financial part of the question, ridency was to be rested in a governor alone, quest than what a generous system of com-unless the Court of Directors, with the approx lection of the Board of Commissioners, should, ized; what will be their condition now?

East-India Company, which was read a first juniversally admissible to office; to the state of the law in India, and the necessity of com-The great outlines of the bargain between piling a code; and to the more free admission

Lord Ellenborough, who followed, after in any particular case, determine to the contrary. They will appear in the very undignified and The coincil of the governor-general was to not very popular character of mortgages in be increased by the addition of two members, procession, all their profits being derived from During the propers of the bill through par-liament, the number of additional councillors parts of the ministerial plan his lordship con-was reduced to one. The new councillor was reduced to one. The new councillor was not to be chosen from the rervants of the especially directed against the proposal that Company, and his appointment by the Court Indian governors should be relieved from the

himself; but you know not man, nor the nature sibility will be taken away, because the records of man, if you suppose that absolute power can of their actions and the reasons for them will be exercised beneficially for a people without be altogether lost." placing that absolute power under responsibility, and requiring from it reflection before it But you propose in this case to take away this responsibility and this necessity for reflection; nay, more than this-for what are the future powers of this governor to be? Will any respectable man take the office? He is to feeling and felicity of expression. He said:be deprived of the power of legislation !--of the power of expending a single shilling! And India Company, whose interests you are disyet to this man, so degraded by your jealousy, you leave the whole executive power of the government, without that control with which the prudence and wisdom of former parliaments have surrounded it." In reference to the proposal to place with the governor-general in council the sole power of legislation for India, his lordship asked, "Can they legislate for distant places as well as if they were on the spot? Is it possible for them to legislate for the whole of India, fixed as they will be at Calcutta, so satisfactorily as a council being in the country where the laws are to be applied? It is evident they cannot. Legislation will be your lordships' attention for a very short time, much better performed, as it has been, by a local than by a distant government." To profess to open all offices to natives Lord Ellen- I will not follow the noble marquis who opened borough regarded as a "mockery." "The very the debate into the consideration whether a existence of our government in India," said he, "depends upon the exclusion of the natives not, to carry on the government or the trade from inilitary and political power in that cound of an empire like India; that is not the questry. They should be cligible to hold every office which could be held by them with safety to the state; but we are there in a position not this, I recall to my memory what I have seen in of our own seeking, a position from which we that country. I recall to mymemory the history cannot recede without producing bloodshed of that country for the last lifty or sixty years. I from one end of India to the other. We won our empire by the sword, and by the sword we must preserve it. It is the condition of our xistence there; but consistently with that andition let us do everything to benefit the people and for them, although, at present, perhaps it is not possible to do much by the people. I confess, when I look at all the great achievements of our predecessors in that country-when I look at all they have done both in war and in peace—when I look at the the wars in which the empire has been en-glory which first dawned upon our opening gaged, its debt at this moment amounts only career, and at the real benefits which suc-cessive great men and wise statesmen have years' revenue. I do not say that such a dobt conferred upon the natives of that great emiss desirable, but, at the same time, I do conpire—I do contemplate with dismay this crude, undigested mass of ignorant theories, formed by persons who know nothing of India, and who will know nothing of India; who imagine ministered the affairs of India with so much that men possessing all the passions and all the success for so many years, and which is at prejudices which we ourselves possess, can be length to be put down (for I can use no other governed as if they were ciphers; and who term) upon the ground that it is an institution place at the head of an absolute government, calculated for the purposes neither of government to all experience, and contrary to the ment nor trade." His grace then proceeded to recorded wisdom of former governments, men condemn the ministerial arrangements, as being possessing great and unlimited powers, but framed without regard to the situation of the from whom reflection before action will not be company-without regard to the relation in hereafter required, and who will be placed in a which its trade stood, not only with the East-nesses before the House of Commons expresses, position from which all real, ultimate respon-

The earl of Ripon defended the ministerial bill, and, in answer to Lord Ellenborough's remarks upon the intended abolition of councils, said this part of the subject had been mis-apprehended.

The duke of Wellington spoke with much "Having been so long a servant of the Eastcussing-having served for so many years of my life in India—having had such opportunities of personally watching the operations of the government of that country, and having had reason to believe, both from what I saw at that time, and from what I have seen since, that the government of India was at that time one of the best and most purely administered governments that ever existed, and one which has provided most effectually for the happiness of the people over which it is placed, it is impossible that I should be present when a question of this description is discussed, without asking while I deliver my opinion upon the plan which his majesty's ministers have brought forward. chartered company be the best calculated, or tion to which I wish now to apply myself, But whenever I hear of such discussions as remember its days of misfortune and its days of glory, and call to mind the situation in which it now stands. I remember that the government have conducted the affairs of—I will not pretend to say how many millions of people (they have been calculated at seventy, eighty, ninety, and even a hundred millions), but certainly of an immense population—a population returning an annual revenue of twenty millions sterling; and that, notwithstanding all tend that it is a delusion on the people of this country to tell them that it is a body unfit for government, and unfit for trade, which has adthat country, but also with the interests of Eng- of the Company should be determinable at the land, and of the metropolis in particular. He expiration of ten years. Mr. Lyall urged alluded especially to the misery and ruin which the impossibility of supposing that the Comwould arise to those deriving their subsistence from the commerce of the Company, declared the sake of having their charter renewed for his hostility to the proposed arrangements for so short a term as ten years. The amendthe local governments, expressed his conviction that no influx of European capital into India would take place, and concluded by urging the necessity of upholding the power and influence of the Company. "Depend upon it, my lords," said his grace, "that upon the basis of their authority rests the good government of India."

Some dispute took place as to the intentions of ministers with respect to the continuance of councils at the subordinate presidencies. Lord Ellenborough had assumed that they were to by Sir Robert Inglis. be abolished. The marquis of Lansdowne, The proceedings of referring to the bill which had been prepared, affirmed that they were to be retained. Lord on the legislative powers proposed to be in-Ellenborough, in explanation, said that, unless trusted to the governor-general in council, the speech of the president of the Board of Mr. Cutlar Fergusson moved an amendment, Commissioners had been strangely misrepresented in the ordinary vehicles of intelligence, he had declared it to be the intention of government to dispense with the subordinate Fergusson moved another amendment, the councils. The marquis of Lansdowne, in answer, said that, without consulting the president of the Board, he would take upon himself to state that the report of his specch must be incorrect, as it had always been intended that the Court of Directors should have power to appoint members of council.

This statement, however, must have been made under misinformation. The intentions ofgovernment were not left to be ascertained from a speech in the House of Commons, whether correctly reported or not. The point appointing the governor-general governor of at issue had been the subject of correspondence the whole province of Bengal, with two between the Board of Commissioners and the lieutenant-governors to carry on the duties Court of Directors, the Court upholding the continuance of councils at the subordinate presidencies, the Board opposing it.

After a reply from the marquis of Lansdowne the resolutions were carried.

second time in the House of Commons. Mr. on a division. On the 17th of July Mr. Hame Backingham protested against the principle moved that a clause declaring it miles of the hill and made and made at least state of the hill of the bill, and made a long speech in support persons to reside in certain first of India of his riews. Mr. Hume gave a qualified without license should be with license should be without license should be without license shou asset to the bill. Mr. Whitmore took objection to several parts of it. Mr. Macaulay delended both its principle and details. Mr. Wynne gare a synopsis of his formerly expressed tiems. Mr. O'Connell made some manks on the landed tenures of India. Mr. Took found fault with some of the provisions of the bill, while Mr. Robert Wallace expressed ont opnosition. Total found fault with some of the provisions of the subject of the subject of the bill, while Mr. Robert Wallace expressed in belief that it gave universal satisfaction.

Mr. Frant said India wanted skill more than capital, and glanced at the salt and opium monophie. Mr. Chas Grant replied. On the whole, the that produced little to elucidate the questions gitted, or to affect their decision. tions agriated, or to affect their decision.

the 12th, after some preliminary discarion, the House went into committee onj

Indies, and the finances and general interests of the bill. Mr. Hume proposed that the tenure pany would suspend their right of trading for ment was lost. Some discussion took place on the question of relinquishing or abolishing councils in the subordinate presidencies; on the controlling power of the governor-general; on the establishment of a new subordinate government at Agra; and other topics: in the course of which Mr. C. F. Ressell recommended the removal of the seat of the supreme government from Calcutta to Boring, a suggestion which was noticed with appreciation The proceedings of the commission very resumed on the 15th. After much discussion excepting the local limits of the settlements of Fort William, Madras, and Bombay from its operation, which was lost. On the 16th Mr. effect of which was to withdraw any discretionary power as to the existence of councils at Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, and to make the continuance of councils imperative. The amendment was supported by Mr. Hume, Sir Robert Inglis, Mr. Wynne, Sir Harry Verney, Mr. Charles Marjoribanks, Colonel Evans, and Lord Ashley, and opposed by Mr. Charles Grant, Mr. Robert Grant, Mr. Charles Buller, and Mr. Strutt. It was lost on a division. An amendment, moved by Sir Harry Verney, of the administration, one residing at Agra and the other at Calcutta, was withdrawn. Mr. Buller proposed an amendment, excluding the governor-general from the governorship of any particular presidency, which was say On the 10th of July the bill was read a ported by Mr. Strutt and Mr. Hume, but loss

chequer (Lord Althorp) said government were for the subordinate governments, -of the as willing to sauction other churches as the institution of a fourth presidency for the Church of England; and Mr. O'Connell de-|north-western provinces,-of the proposal to clared himself satisfied. Sir Robert Inglis withdraw councils from the government of supported the establishment of the new Madras and Bombay,—of the increase of bishoprics; Mr. Hume opposed it altogether. expense which would be occasioned by the Mr. C. Buller took the same course; while creation of new offices, -- and of the retention Major Cumming Bruce, avowing himself to of the college at Haileybury. The petition be a member of the Church of Scotland, on was presented the same evening by Mr. Cutlar treated the ministers to persevere in carrying the clause, which he believed would give great satisfaction in the country. Mr. Finch, Sir Matthew White Ridley, Lord Morpeth, Sir John Maxwell, and Mr. Cutlar Fergusson having spoken in favour of the clause, and Mr. O'Dwyer, Mr. Ruthven, Mr. Halcombe, Macaulay, and the Solicitor-general, and lost and Mr. G. F. Young against it, a division on a division by a hundred to thirty-three. took place, and the clause was carried. The It was objected, that the petitioners ought to various clauses relating to the allowances of have come sooner. To this Mr. Fergusson the new bishops gave rise to some discussion, as did also the provisions relating to the education of civil servants at Haileybury, and the mode of selecting them. On the latter point Mr. Wynne took the opportunity of republishing the opinions which he had so often advanced, in favour of distributing writerships by competition among candidates in the universities and public schools. To the ministerial plan, by which candidates were to be Company, who were about to be deprived of nominated in a four-fold proportion to the number of appointments, and the requisite number selected for Haileybury from among them, Mr. Lyall took a very powerful objection, that it made the conduct of the boy, instead of the man, the rule of promotion. An amendment moved by Mr. Hume, reducing the salary of the governor-general, was lost, and an additional clause, moved by Colonel Leith Hay, making it imperative to retain at each presidency two clergymen of the Church of Scotland, which was opposed by Mr. Hume ductions. and Mr. Warburton, was carried on a division.

submitted a motion in favour of abolishing the had become law. It was read a third time, salt monopoly, which was seconded by Mr. Ewart (member for Liverpool). Mr. Buck-clause embodying one of his favourite views ingham and Mr. Hume supported the views of as to patronage, by setting aside a certain those gentlemen. Mr. Grant and Mr. Cutlar number of military appointments, to be Fergusson craved time for the termination of bestowed on the sons of officers. The clause the monopoly. The motion was not pressed to a division. Mr. C. Buller moved an amendment, reducing the period of attendance at the college at Haileybury, which was withdrawn; and Mr. Hume renewed his motion the Roman Catholic Church "and others for a clause to admit of putting an end to the ten years, which was lost.

On the 26th of July a general Court of Proprietors was held, and a petition to the House of Commons against the bill agreed The petitioners complained of the want of any provision for reporting to parliament cases where the Board of Control and the Court of Directors might finally differ,of the increase given to the power of the tion in the European courts. It was lost; governor-general, and the diminution of that when Mr. Cutlar Fergusson moved the omis-

Fergusson, who moved that the petitioners be heard by counsel at the bar of the House on the third reading of the bill. The motion was seconded by Mr. Hume, supported by Mr. Wilkes, Mr. Buckingham, and Sir Richard Vivian; opposed by Mr. Robert Grant, Mr. answered, that they had not the opportunity; that the Court of Proprietors could not be summoned without giving several days' notice, and that the Court of Directors had delayed calling them together, in expectation of receiving communications from the president of the Board of Commissioners, which, however, he had not thought fit to give.

This refusal of a hearing to the East-India privileges and power, the growth of centuries, was followed by a desultory debate, each member selecting for his topic any point of Indian policy on which it suited him to expa-tiate. Mr. Buckingham declaimed against the limited right of settlement, and the church establishment; Mr. Wynne gave utterance to his oft-repeated wish to reduce the number of directors; Mr. Poulett Thomson defended the burdensome and unequal duties imposed in this country on Indian pro-Several other members speculated on futurity; after which Mr. Grant made a The report being brought up on the 22nd short and very unnecessary reply, seeing that of July, Mr. Wilbraham (member for Cheshire) the fate of the bill was as certain as though it when Mr. Wynne moved, by way of rider, a was negatived without a division. Mr. Shiel, who had previously contended that no form of Christianity should be supported in India, then moved a clause for extending support to differing" from the established churches of Company's government after the expiration of England and Scotland; but, on a promise ten years, which was lost.

from Mr. Grant to add to a future clause a proviso, leaving the governor-general at liberty to grant sums of money to any sect or community of Christians, Mr. Shiel withdrew his clause. Sir Richard Vivian then proposed a clause restraining the governor-general in council from making laws affecting the inhabitants of the presidencies, without registrasion of the clause vesting the governments of ties in the proposed constitution of the governthe presidencies in a governor, irrespective ments of India. Lord Ellenborough's amenddivision, and the retention of the clause committee on the bill. excited little or no discussion, Mr. Grant of August the remaining clauses of the bill proposed his proviso (promised to Mr. Shiel), were proceeded through with equal celerity. allowing the governor-general in council, with Those relating to the government of the the sanction of the Court of Directors, to grant subordinate presidencies were omitted on the money to societies of Christians not belonging motion of the marquis of Lansdowne, and to either of the established churches of Great others substituted, enacting that each presi-Britain. This was strenuously opposed by dency should have a governor and council, Mr. Andrew Johnstone, who said he felt but subjecting the appointment of a council to bound to the course he was adopting, by a be revoked, suspended, or modified by the sense of his duty as an elder of the Church of Scotland. Mr. Sinclair, Mr. Pease, and Mr. ments were reported, and on the 9th, after the chieffing of Mr. Some discussion on the claims of reviews Plumtree agreed in the objections of Mr. some discussion on the claims of various Johnstone; but, on a division, the proviso classes of creditors whose interests might be was adopted by a great majority. Mr. Wynne affected, the report was taken into consideramoved an amendment, the effect of which was tion. Some amendments of a financial chato dispense with the necessity of candidates racter were moved and negatived; after which for writerships passing through Haileybury. the marquis of Lansdowne moved that the Mr. Lyall took occasion to avow his convictifith member of the council of India, who tion that the four-fold plan of nomination was to be a person not in the service of the could never be brought into effect. Several members attacked the college: its solitary from sitting or voting, except when making defender was Mr. Robert Grant, but the laws or regulations, which was agreed to: amendment was lost. The bill then passed as was also a medification of the clause the Commons. On the 29th of July it was respecting slavery, submitted by the same read a first time in the Lords, and again on nobleman. the 2nd of August sub silentio.

vations to a future period of the delais. Lari the married charges of the Sanges of Latin the marquis of Lansdowne instantic constant. The state of the Constant to allot the opening and replications of the constant to allot the opening and replications of the constant to a ministerial bill to a member of the system. Lord Ellenborough, to when mer a in the definition of more many and bill, brought in by his organization and its and it the fall the following surface and substitution to the committee or main at the fall of the prince of the bean instruction to the committee or main at the fall of the prince of the fall of the f

This motion was pressed to a ment was lost, and the House then went into Various clauses were After various additions, which despatched with great rapidity. On the 7th

The fate of the bill and of the Company in A general Court of Proprietors of the East-India Company had been held on the 31st of July, when a petition to the House of Lords, similar to that presented to the Commons, was agreed upon. This petition was presented of the Poard of August by the earl of Shaftestoury, who proposed to move that the petitioners be heard by counsel, if not contrary minual in a presented from the chair, to the sense of the House; but as some peers beginning to recommend the complete of opposed this proceeding, and none supported the life intended motion was contrary to the sense of the House, and abstained from making it while it is presented from the chair, the noble earl took for granted that its present to the discrete of the House, and abstained from making it while intended motion was contrary to the sense of the House, and abstained from making it while intended the complete of the Committed of the bill without a single remain and its proving of the remain alleging that, as Lord Ellenborough imposed at a present and attribute a single remain and triving a proving of the remain of the bill without a single remain and triving a proving of the remains alleging that, as Lord Ellenborough imposed at a present and a present and triving a present of the committed of the bill without a single remain. A general Court of Proprietors of the East- connection with the government of India was to move an amendment, he reserved his observant and arrived a service of the sales of suddenly surrendered, then moved whim it here to the relief of the second moved with the such clauses in the bill as relief or almost an interest of the several presidences in their ments of the several presidences in them.

The marquis of Lansivane made some them there will relief the movement of the ministerial memory.

The duke of Wellington followed, nothing the company, and pointing our some fifther.

papers were read—the minutes of the Court | British subjects on an equality with foreigners. of Directors held the previous day; the dis | Government determined otherwise, and the sent of the chairman and deputy-chairman; reproach of having thus determined is not a letter from Mr. Tucker, stating some objections to the bill, but recommending that, with all its defects, it should be accepted; a paper signed by Mr. Thornhill, concurring with Mr. Tucker, both in his objections and recommendation, and a letter signed by Mr. Astell and thirteen other directors. A motion party would have allowed the Company to was then made, similar in spirit to the amend-share in the trade (as in the case of opening ment carried on the preceding day in the the trade with India), while the former in-Court of Directors, disapproving the change sisted on their abandoning trade altogether. but accepting the government of India under No rights, however well established, -no inthe bill. An amendment was submitted declining to accept the bill, and condemning its statesmen, abandoning their true position, are provisions, as well on financial grounds as on content to follow, instead of leading, public that of placing despotic power in the hands of copinion. the governor-general "over a hundred millions of British subjects, over every authority in India, not excepting his majesty's courts of justice." The amendment was lost. A ballot having been demanded on the main question, it took place on the 16th, when the original motion was carried by a considerable majority. On the same evening the bill was read a third time in the House of Lords, the marquis of Lansdowno positively refusing to enter into any discussion upon its merits. The formal motion that the bill do pass was postponed until the 19th, when it was made and carried without remark. The Lords' amendments were concurred in by the Commons, and the bill received the royal assent.

The history of the East-India Company from its commencement has been extraordinary; and the suspension of its commerce, the sole purpose for which it was formed, is not the least extraordinary part of that history. There was some plausibility in the principal objection taken to the continuance of the Company's trade with India, that the characters of merchant and sovereign were incompatible; but that objection did not apply to its trade with China, the sacrifice of which was a tribute to ignorant and interested The Company's exclusive privileges were eminently useful in extending and maintaining our commercial relations with a country with which it is difficult to maintain intercourse at all, and those privileges were so carefully guarded that they could not be abused. No impartial person, whatever his opinions on freedom of trade, can read the evidence on the China trade given before the parliamentary committees, without feeling convinced that the Company's exclusive rights dependent possessions of Great Britain. ought to have been maintained, with such

At the general court on the 13th various [modifications as might have sufficed to place Company to those who clamoured for its destruction. The chief, if not the only, difference appears to have been, that the latter terests, however important, are safe, where

> Next to the abolition of the Company's right of exclusive trade with China, the most objectionable parts of the new measure appear to be the refusal of the rule of publicity, and the transfer of so large a portion of the power formerly enjoyed by the subordinate governments to that of the governor-general. the first, it is certain that both individuals and bodies of men may conscientiously differ, and that their differences may be irreconcilable; but in such cases no ground for concealment seems to exist. Neither party need feel shame in avowing opinions which are the result of honest conviction. With regard to the second, it cannot but excite surprise that it should have been deemed either necessary or prudent to concentrate nearly all power in the chief government. The motives to this transfer were never adequately explained.

> Of the other changes of the Act of 1838 little need be said. Some of those proposed have not been carried into effect. The subordinate presidencies of Madras and Bombay have not been deprived of their councils, and the erection of the new presidency of Agrahas been suspended by the same authority which decreed its creation.

That the Company agreed to accept the important trust, under conditions to which strong objections were entertained, may be attributed to the recommendation of the majority of the directors, headed by some whose experience, sound judgment, and high character were eminently calculated to inspire confidence in their views, and give weight to their advice. Happily, this advice was successful, and India has had hitherto to boast of being incomparably the best governed of the prince, and consequently less advantageous to they found themselves unable to obtain anythe creditor. Among the native claimants thing. were certain bankers, who refused the reduced dividend tendered to them, claiming to be were not disposed to relinquish their claim, placed on an equality with the European however slight the chance of enforcing it. In creditors of the vizier, and adhered to their refusal. The consequence of their pertinacity was, that they obtained nothing, and it was the protracted wrongs of these unhappy usurers that, after the lapse of nearly forty years, appealed so strongly to the sympathy of one branch of the home government, as to induce that authority to resort to the Court of King's Bench for the means of coercing the

Asoph-ul-Dowlah died in 1797, the year after the composition with his creditors was He filed a bill in equity against the Company, posed son, Vizier Ali, succeeded that of Sandut an order for its dismissal. He transmitted Ali, the brother of Asoph-ul-Dowlah, and, memorials and addressed letters to the Court from the definitive treaty concluded with this of Directors, at one time praying that they prince, any recognition of his obligation to discharge the debts of his predecessor was scrupulously excluded. In the preliminary engagement there was a provision for the liquidation of the "just debts" of the former vizier; and, if the claims of the usurious bankers could have been regarded as falling within the category, they might have benefited by the stipulation, had it been upheld. But sequently asking with a further advance in by the stipulation, had it been upheld. in framing the definitive treaty this provision moderation, that the Court would record a was omitted, and the following reason was strong opinion in favour of the claims, and assigned by the governor-general for its disapdirect the local government to enter into pearance:—"The obligation contracted by the negotiation with the vizier on the subject. nabob, for the payment of the just debts of his predecessor, is altogether omitted, not only as contrary to that principle of non-interference in the claims of individuals which this government has invariably adopted, but from the consideration that the stipulation would involve us in the necessity of inquiring into the justice of all claims, and constitute the Company, in some measure, a guarantee for pro-curing the liquidation of them, which would be attended with very serious embarrassment." The bankers who had rejected the terms of composition accepted by other native creditors, were thus left, and properly left, to their own unassisted means of inducing a prince, whose master-passion was avarice, to and recommended that the former should be pay debts contracted by another. cess was such as, under the circumstances, might have been expected, and, probably, such the favour of the prince then reigning, who as they deserved. The precise particulars of was the nephew of the man by whom the their claims are incapable of being investidebts were alleged to have been contracted. gated, but it is notorious that the debt, however contracted originally, had been enormously swelled by charges for interest. The open: he declared that he had neither inprecise rate of interest seems in some measure uncertain, but it was not less than twenty-four per cent. per annum, and probably was as high interference of the government of Bengal. as thirty-six per cent.; and a claim thus made On being apprised of the application and the up would admit of very considerable reduction answer, the Court of Directors forbade any before those who urged it could be subjected further attempts of the like nature being to any actual loss. The claimants had rejected made at the instance or for the benefit of any a composition which others had acceptedthey hoped to obtain something more, and intervened between the failure of the applica-

But the hankers and their representatives addition to the applications made to the government of Oude, which it may be presumed were sufficiently numerous and urgent. they submitted, through a course of years, a series of appeals to the British authorities, varying in their tone as in the mode in which they were preferred. These were presecuted through an avowed agent, who manifested a degree of zeal and pertinacity which, if he were nothing more than an agent, may be regarded as singular, if not unprecedented. To the temporary reign of his sup- but, in little more than a month, applied for But sequently, asking, with a further advance in But the Court were inexorable; they neither paid the alleged debt, nor interposed to assist the claimants in recovering it. In Bengal the indefatigable money-lenders were rather more fortunate. During the administration of the marquis of Hastings, an application for the interference of government on their behalf was met by a declaration that the case was not one which could receive the formal support of the British authorities, but that, notwithstanding, the resident should be instructed to state the claim to the vizier, with the opinion of the Bengal government thereon. The resident Bengal government thereon. The resident accordingly was thus instructed; he did, thereupon, state the claim and the opinion, Their suc- placed in a train of adjustment; but the recommendation was not of a character to win The vizier's reply was unacceptable to the claimants, but it was at least distinct and formation nor concern in regard to the subject. And this was the sole result of the During the period which parties whatever.

tion to the vizier, under the administration of by the counsel I have given, and shall conthe marquis of Hastings, and the adoption of tinue to give, that the Court should use every the claim by the Board of Commissioners for legal means in their power to prevent the the Affairs of India, the agent of the claimants transmission of this most objectionable demade several abortive attempts to advance spatch." Five other directors recorded their the cause of his clients, sometimes by applical concurrence in the views of the chairman. tions to parliament, sometimes to the Court of The patrons of the usurious creditors of the Directors. These afford the only additional Vizier Asoph-ul-Dowlah found their deterincidents belonging to the public history of mination fail at the last moment, and the the affair. There was, indeed, a succession of Court of King's Bench were not moved to make private intrigues scattered over nearly twenty the rule granted absolute. But the attempt years, all directed to abet the designs of the to compel the Court of Directors to aid, by indefatigable usurers upon the finances of their authority, the unrighteous cause was Oude. Some of these rest on evidence which too extraordinary, and had been too public, to history cannot receive; and the precise means escape animadversion in parliament. by which the claim, after repeated rejections, Ellenborough gave notice of a motion in the found favour at the Board, cannot be satis- House of Lords on the subject; and on the factorily traced. This was, indeed, a period 29th of April (the rule in the Court of King's when the good fortune of those who were Bench having previously been discharged), he desirous of preying upon the people of India inquired whether the Board intended to perwas in the ascendant. Only two years before, severe. Earl Grey answered, that he believed a bill had been successfully passed through it was not intended to proceed further. parliament to satisfy the ever-memorable Ellenborough, thereupon, put this further claims of the creditor of the zemindar of question - Upon what ground the deter-Noozeed. The next year was signalized by mination of the Board had been taken? The an application for a mandamus requiring the premier naively answered, that he did not know. Court of Directors to send out a despatch to The Lord Chancellor then interposed, and aid the demands of the firm of Palmer and Co. after a few preliminary remarks, said, "Events on the nizam; and now a similar measure have taken place which have quite put an end was taken with regard to claims equally re- to the matter in question, and have taken was taken with regard to claims equally re- to the matter in question, and have taken putable with those which were the objects of away the whole grounds of the case upon parliamentary and ministerial favour in the which the proceedings of the Board of Control previous instances. A rule in the Court of were founded." But his lordship did not state what those grounds were, nor what were general on behalf of the Board, but before the the events which had taken them away. On time arrived for showing cause against it, the the 5th of May, Lord Ellenborough submitted views of the Board had, from some motive, his notice, which was for papers connected undergone a change, and the threatened meanifested by the Court of Directory without receiving a michiesqua measure the attenut manifested by the Court of Directors, without venting a michievous measure, the attempt doubt, led to this result; the utter rottenness to carry which in one way had been frustrated of the ground upon which their opponents from being effected in another. He edverted stood rendering them unwilling to risk further to the miserable condition of Onle, which he contest with those who had a good cause, and alleged must have been known to the Word, contest with those who had a good cause, and alleged must have been known to the Deard, the courage to maintain it. Six directors and dwelt on the peculiar inexpediency of addressed a letter to the Court, avoning their selecting such a time for pressing the claims in determination not to affix their signature, question. He inquired how the claims were under any circumstances, to the objectionable to be pressed—whether by representation despatch. The deputy-chairman took the only, or whether by representation demands course. He remarked: "I am quite be had to force; and he argued that the savere that I am called upon to act ministerially only, in signing the demands of the while the laster was facilities as after the Board; but there are cases where I cannot act and policy. After discreting at some length even ministerially. There are obligations the origin and history of the claims, he transmitted the principles on which all law is furnished." The this table greened at more that a agent be performed without a wildrich of those it being greened at more that an agent be performed without a wildrich of those it being greened at more that an agent be principles on which all law is furnish. The this table greened at more that an agent being man, though he fill not relieve to signific which can part of the principles on which all law is furnish. The this table that a proposal. The fill contains, that he profused his of the principles on which all law is furnished. The this table are of the principles of which all law is furnished. The this table that a proposal line chairman, though he fill not relieve to signific which are also also did not the principles of which all law is furnished. The this table are contended, was more than a fill the chairman, though he fill not relieve to signific which are contended, was many fill the fill the chairman, the contended of the chairman and the chairman and the chairman and the chairman are contended.

described, stated, with great first and the in victor state he has appeared. This throtheses, his other disapproval of the class, then, he contended, was minorial to declaring, "somet which he responsible the solid and heater of the nature with this draft, I would resign my seal." Then which and solid as the heat of the nature of the class of the class of the solid solid and the support the Company by the heat the locality, "I see on the solid so the Court of Directors was an illegal letter, thy the operation of the law, the measures con-It was in favour of a claim which was entirely templated by the Board. Lord Planket, the vold by the English law-it was in favour of Lord Chancellor of Ireland, repported the an individual who claimed by virtue of having views of the Lord Chancellor of Lagland, and purchased the bond, which purchase was a the debate was terminated by a reply from misdemeanour, and it directed the doing of Lord Ellenborough, in the course of which he that which could not be done without sub-used language highly laudstory of the Court of jecting to the population of a mislemeanour the Directors. The motion was carried; but this governor-general of India. Under these circiwas a point of little moment, the object of cumutances, I am not surprised that the rule beinging it forward being to obtain a public for the mandamus has been discharged. I am discussion of the question, perfectly satisfied that the Court of King's R was not to be expected that the extra-Bench could not have granted the mandamus, ordinary proceedings of the Board of Compon these facts being made known to the mixioners for the Affairs of India would pass index of that court. But more than that, I without notice in that assembly which has an quite convinced that when all these points been termed the grand inquest of England, should have been brought before the noble. Accordingly, on the 5th of May, Mr. Herrier, earl at the head of his Majesty's government, in the House of Commons, moved for some he would have agreed with me, that to read papers connected with the subject, and the that letter to India was impossible; that it motion was carried without opposition. On was most unjust and unfair to the governor to the 12th Mr. Herriers put two questions to convert of India to call may him governor to the ministry. First whether the recognizes general of India to call upon him, contrary to the ministry—first, whether the proceedings treaty—contrary to law—contrary to equity—in the Court of King's Beach had been to use force where force was prohibited by Act abandoned; and, recordly, whether it was of Parliament, and repugnant to the feelings, still the determination of the advicers of the the honour, and the policy of this nation. Crown to employ the authority of the go-Therefore, I do not thank the president of the vernment of India for procuring the settle-Board of Control for withdrawing that letter, ment of the claims of the bankers! The and not pressing for the mandamus. He could Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Althorp, not have sent the letter or obtained the in the absence of the president of the board, mandamus." Lord Ellenborough then, with answered distinctly to the first, that the legal reference to the possible revival, in another proceedings had been abandoned; to the shape, of the abandoned orders on the claim, second, he declined giving any reply. Some proceeded to argue the question on grounds of further papers were granted on the 15th of general policy, and concluded by submitting May, on the motion of Mr. Charles Ross, and in motion.

posure of the "Nonzeed affair," two years the matter to the notice of the House more before, had commanded the admiration of all distinctly and prominently, without the necesbut such as were interested in the matter, now sity of submitting any motion on the subject. appeared as the champion of claims quite as After narrating, with some minuteness, the questionable as those which he had formerly facts of the difference between the Board of denounced. His lordship entered upon a vehe- Commissioners and the Court of Directors, Mr. ment defence of the agent, or alleged agent, of Herries thus pointedly placed the nature of the the creditors, denying that he had purchased question at issue before his auditors :- "The the claim of those whom he professed to repre-House will naturally ask, what has been the sent, but at the same time maintaining that if cause of all this? Is it some great point of he had, the purchase might have been made Indian policy? I sit some scheme for the better before the net referred to by Lord Ellenborough came into operation; in which case it would not have been tainted with illegality. On this point the noble and learned peer was very indigment, observing, in reference to the imputation cast by Lord Ellenborough upon the agent of the claimants, and by imputation upon the president of the Board, "Happily, the venom of this attack is accompanied by its antidote." The Lord Chancellor then proceeded, at great length, to examine and defend the character of the claims, and, nearly at equal length, to argue that the intention of sending out the offensive despatch having been abandoned, there was no pretence for Lord the demand for interest at thirty-six per cent. Ellenborough's motion. The duke of Wellington supported the motion, and expressed in India. To an allegation of Mr. Herries, strong feelings of concern and surprise at the that he had not met the arguments of the country of Nicoland Strategy and the country to the country of Nicoland Strategy and the country of Nicoland Strate

The Lord Chanceller, whose withering ex-|self of an opening which occurred for bringing management of that important part of the empire? No. It is neither more nor less than this-the settlement of an old, usurious job of forty years' standing. This it is which has induced the India Board to act as it has done." He then proceeded to examine the history of the claims in detail, and concluded by calling on the president of the Board for Mr. Grant followed, but his explanation. speech, though able and ingenious, afforded no insight into the reasons which had induced him, first to apply for the mandamus, and then to withdraw the application. He maintained the justice of the claims, and defended the demand for interest at thirty-six per cent. attempt to enforce upon the Court of Directors, Court of Directors contained in their reply to the communication of the views of the Board, it was disgraceful to the British government the answer of Mr. Grant appears very insuf- that the claim should have been permitted to It was to the effect that the corre- remain so long unsettled. spondence, of which that letter formed part, was not between the public and the India an affair in which, happily, moral strength Board, but between the Court of Directors was successful in resisting an unduo exercise and that Board; that both parties had all the of legal power. facts before them, and were intimately acquainted with all that had been written on the India was not, however, destined long to run subject; and that, consequently, it was un-Ismoothly. In the month of August, a letter necessary to answer the arguments of the Court, more especially as the views of the president India Company from Lord William Bentinek. had been made known to the chairman and tendering his lordship's resignation of the office deputy-chairman of the Company by personal of governor-general. Sir Charles Metcalfe, a communication. This mode of dealing with the highly distinguished civil servant of the Commatter would reem to justify all the apprehensions expressed by the Court during the discussion on the recent renewal of the Company's term of government, as to the effect of refusing of his lordship's wish to retire, the Court of a rule of publicity in cases of irreconcilable dif- Directors came to a resolution that, "adference between the two home authorities.

placed the question on its just grounds in experience, and talents, eminently qualify him the simple form following: "In point of to prosecute successfully the various importfact, this question lies in the narrowest com- ant measures consequent on the new Charter pass, and I wish to address myself to those Act, this Court are of opinion that it would gentlemen who are not conversant with the be inexpedient at present to make any other details of it, and who know nothing of the arrangement for supplying the office of Dosees or the Asoph-ul-Dowlahs, nor have ever governor-general." This resolution having heard their names mentioned until this night. been communicated to Mr. Grant, drew from The question is this: a debt was contracted that gentleman an answer, announcing the by the king of Oude, forty years ago, for which | decided opinion of the king's ministers, that he was to pay interest at the rate of thirty- no time should be lost in appointing a persix per cent.; various other debts were also manent successor to the retiring governorcontracted by the same individual. During general; and intimating further, that with the lapse of those forty years, different governments in India have made amicable applications to the king of Oude for the payment of this debt; but they never resorted to other measures, conceiving themselves pre-cluded from doing so by their amicable relations with that country; and the question now is, whether, after the lapse of forty years, the peremptory authority of the Court of King's Bench shall be used to compel a reluctant body, responsible for the government of India, to select one debt out of an indefinite number for the purpose of enforcing its liquidation." After many further remarks, illus-principle," it was added, "it has usually been trating the impolicy of taking up the claim of thought proper to act, and in the various the bankers, Sir Robert Peel concluded by referring to the possible assumption of the government of Oude by the British, and solemnly deprecated, in that case, the com-mencement of the exercise of sovereignty, by appropriating eleven hundred thousand pounds sterling of the property of the territory to the liquidation of a claim for which it did not appear that the British state had over made itself in the slightest degree responsible. Only one speaker more addressed the House, Mr. Hume, who defended the claim of the bankers, alleging that it was a peculiar case, inasmuch as theirs was the only debt remaining due to a British subject. He maintained that the debt was just; that the illustrations adduced by conviction that Sir Charles Metcalfe was a fit Sir Robert Peel were not apposite; and that person to have been permanently appointed,

Thus ended the debate, and here terminated

The course of the home government of was received by the chairman of the Eastpany, had been appointed to be the provisional successor of Lord William Bentinck; aud, on taking into consideration the communication rence between the two home authorities. | verting to the public character and services Sir Robert Peel followed Mr. Grant, and of Sir Charles Metcalfe, whose knowledge, respect to the appointment of any servant of the Company, "however eminent his know-ledge, talents, and experience" might "confessedly be," the ministry agreed in the sentiments which Mr. Canning had, on a former occasion, expressed, "that the case can hardly be conceived in which it would be expedient that the highest office of the government in India should be filled otherwise than from England; and that that one main link, at least, between the systems of the Indian and British governments ought, for the advantage of both, to be invariably maintained. On this important measures consequent on the new Charter Act, his Majesty's ministers see much to enjoin the continuance of the general practice, but nothing to recommend a deviation from it."

After this intimation, the Court of Directors abstained from pressing the claims of Sir Charles Metcalfe; but they did not suffer the objection to his appointment to remain unanswered. A letter was addressed by the Court to Mr. Grant, in answer to his commu-nication, in which letter, after expressing their concurrence in the opinion of the king's ministers that a permanent appointment was to be preferred to a temporary one, and their conviction that Sir Charles Metcalfe was a fit the Court thus dealt with the general question: | occasioned by the death of Earl Spencer, and "The Court of Directors have learnt with the consequent elevation of his son, Lord deep regret that Sir Charles Metcalfe is con- Althorp, to the House of Peers, had introsidered by his Majesty's government to be duced a new cabinet and new counsels. The ineligible to the station of governor-general, former was framed from the party who had and upon grounds which would exclude the been excluded by the accession of the Whigs, whole service of India from that high office. The Court of Directors feel little disposed to engage in discussing the merits of an opinion which his Majesty's ministers appear to have adopted upon the authority of Mr. Canning. They will only observe, that the whole course power of appointment. Their choice fell of our transactions in British India may be upon Lord Heytesbury, whose appointment referred to, as furnishing the most conclusive evidence that the servants of the Company, both civil and military, are eminently qualified visionally to succeed on any vacancy that for the highest public trust, and that the might occur by the death, resignation, or important office of governor-general has been departure of the new governor-general. Lord held by several of them with the utmost Heytesbury was sworn into office, and, to all advantage to the national interests. The appearance, the duty of appointing a suc-Court will not unnecessarily recall to the recol- cossor was not likely again to be called into lection of his Majesty's ministers those names exercise until the completion by his lordship which have rendered the service of India illus- of the ordinary period of service. But so far trious—that service to whose merits, to whose from completing that period, Lord Heytesbury talents and high tone of character, the late never commenced it. He took the oath of Mr. Canning has himself borne the most unqualified testimony. But the Court cannot first, of his official acts. The ministry under refrain from observing, that, independently of which his appointment had been sanctioned the impolicy of putting forth any general possessed the confidence of the Crown, but declaration of ineligibility, his Majesty's failed in obtaining that of the House of ministers appear to them to be scarcely Commons. A dissolution had been resorted justified in proposing to narrow the choice to, but the first division which took place in of the Court, by excluding any class of men, possessing the necessary qualifications, from the office of governor-general."

After expressing the desire of the Court to act in concurrence with the advisers of the Crown, it was intimated that the expediency of making an arrangement for filling up the office of governor-general would be taken into consideration at the proper time; for it is to be observed, that, though Lord William Bentinck had tendered his resignation, such tender did not, in the eye of the law, amount to an actual resignation of office. The president of the Board, however, appears to have taken a different view, and to have informed the chairman and deputy chairman that, in the expiration of three days, was followed by consequence of the proposal of the Court to continue Sir Charles Metcalfe, the ministry did not hold themselves bound to refrain from making an appointment under the provisions of the law, according to which, the right lapsed to the Crown after a delay of two months from the notification of a vacancy. The opinion of counsel was taken on the question, and that opinion being favourable to the Court, the president of the Board intimated that the power of the Crown would not be exercised to appoint, without giving a month's notice to the Court of Directors. This was certainly no great or generous concession, seeing that by law they were entitled to two months.

The intimation was given in October 1834, and thus the matter rested till January 1835, and Sir Robert Peel, for the first time, held the chief place in it. The difficulty which had previously impeded the choice of a governor-general no longer existing, the Court of Directors proceeded to exercise the was immediately approved by the Crown. Sir Charles Metcalfe was again selected prooffice, and this was the last, as well as the the new parliament left the ministers in a minority, and, after a brief endeavour to stem the tide of opposition, they retired, making way for the return of those whem they had but a few months before displaced. Mr. Grant did not return to the office of president of the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, but became Secretary of State for the Colonial department, his place at the Board being assigned to Sir John Hobhouse. The preparations of Lord Heytesbury for his departure were complete; but no sooner was the Whig ministry again in office, than he received an intimation of the wish of Government that he should postpone it. This, after a communication to his lordship of the intention of ministers to advise his Majesty to revoke the appointment. A confidential communication of this intention had been previously made by the president of the Board to the chairman and deputy-chairman of the Company, and on its being carried into effect, it was formally announced in a letter from the president, in which he further stated that ministers did not intend to recommend the approval of any successor to Lord William Bentinck till that nobleman should have arrived in England, but that no advantage would be taken of the delay to exercise the prorogative of the Crown, to the prejudice of the right of the Court of Directors. Court, however, were by no means satisfied with the course that had been adopted, the by which time the ministerial revolution effect of which was to render the office of

of Lord Heyerbury, for no other reason, so leading members of the party of the Whigs, far as the Court can judge, than that the He showed that Lord Hoytesbury had been ministry has changed, must have the effect of continued in the office of ambassador in Russia les ening the authority of the Court, and by his political opponents; that it was at his consequently impairing its prefulness and own express desire, made in consequence of efficiency as a body intrusted with the govern-of Lord Heyterbury, for no other reason, so leading members of the party of the Whigs, ment of India."

To ascertain, beyond the possibility of distrogative to appoint a governor-general, should mony to his merits and services. But the case governor-general, and a Tory government a from all parts of India, any person, not native Tory governor-general? The person to named born, whose residence there was considered will carry with him to India his political feel- dangerous. An Anglo-Indian editor, atlength, ings and bias, and will there distribute his recollecting that this punishment could not be reference to the admission that, if Lord Hey- required the conductors of the periodical press teshury had been in India, the new administ to conform. This was regarded as equivalent tration would not have recalled him he justly to the establishment of a free press, or at inquired, "Why not? If a want of confi-least it was professed to be so regarded by dence in Lord Heytesbury, grounded on differ there who wiched to commit the governorences of political opinion, justifies the revocation of the noble lord's appointment, would it not also justify his removal from the government of India, supposing he had assumed it !" The material for debate had, however, been so completely exhausted by preceding speakers, that neither Sir Robert Peel nor the ministerial leader, Lord John Russell, by whom he in the place of that more direct check upon was followed, could do more than pass again over the trodden ground, and endeavour by some additional illustration, to give an appearance of novelty to old views and argu- and reproof, on these occasions, was not untioned, Mr. Sydney Herbert, and Mr. Cressett ing summary punishment upon European Pelham spoke against the ministers; and Mr. offenders. The governor-general, indeed, who Cutlar Fergusson (who had just relinquished) the office of an East-India director for a ministerial appointment), Mr. Silk Buckinging, and Mr. Vernon Smith, in their favour. On a division, the motion for the production he had professed to grant. His immediate of the papers was lost.

Lord William Bentinck, whose approaching retirement had led to the disputes and discussions which have been narrated, quitted the rules, was ordered to quit the country. India, as already notified, early in 1835, The authority of the Supreme Court was sub-and Sir Charles Metcalfe succeeded, by sequently obtained to the passing of more virtue of his provisional appointment, to the stringent rules, and under these rules one or chief sent in council. His administration was two newspapers were suppressed. The above short, and was distinguished by little deserving were the changes to which the press was subof especial record. It will chiefly be remem- jected in Bengal. At Madras, the censorbered by one act, which can scarcely fail to ship had never been abolished. At Bombay, have a powerful effect, either for good or for the regulations of the marquis of Hastings evil, upon the interests of India, and of the were introduced by Mr. Elphinstone, and the British government in that country. act was the removal of the restrictions to lations established in Bengal under the governwhich the public press in India was previously ment of Mr. Adam were subsequently adopted subjected. For a long period preceding the at Bombay; but, as the Supreme Court re-year 1818, the press had been subject to a fused to register them, their effect was limited. censorship, a measure first resorted to during Such was the state of the press when Lord the war with France, with a view of preventing the emissaries of the enemy in India conlordship, though an estentations upholder of veying intelligence derived from the news-liberal measures, made no change. During papers published there to the French cruisers his administration, indeed, little or no inter-in the Indian seas. The marquis of Hastings ference with the press took place; either none patronage for electioneering and political purposes, without reference to the merits of the individuals; and the public interests will of the censor. The government then made a thus be sacrificed and rained." Sir Robert Peel took the same side, and with but substituted a set of rules to which they general to such a measure, as well as by the governor-general himself, who luxuriated in the public congratulations poured in upon him with reference to this extraordinary exorciso of liberality. The press, indeed, was relieved from the consurate, but colitors were enjoined to comply with the rules introduced publication-they were rebuked by the government, of which the marquis of Hastings was the head, when the rules were disregarded, Besides the members already men-imingled with reference to the power of inflicthad culogized a free prevs, and taken credit for bestowing this boon upon India, could not with decency be a party to the infliction of such punishment for using the privilege which successor, Mr. Adam, was not so shackled; and an editor who persevered, after many warnings, in passing the bounds prescribed by This censorship abandoned. The more severe regu-In the Indian seas. The marquis of Hastings is ference with the press took place; either none was induced to introduce à different system— was needed, or Lord William Bentinck was partly, it may be presumed, by the influence from principle averse to interference, or it from principle averse to interference, or it might be that the press was, for the most part, haudatory of the governor-general and his Europeans, and disobedience to the orders of the censurate was liable to be visited with deportation—the Company's government having at that period the power of removing, was all it received, and it was left to Sir

Charles Metcalfo to reap the harvest of popular applause consequent upon removing all restraint upon the publication of opinion. Under his brief and temporary administration, an Act was passed repealing the existing regulations, and giving to the press, in regard to the publication of political periodicals, a greater degree of freedom than is approbation of the Crown. enjoyed in England.

The celebrated Press Law was passed on the 3rd of August, and on the 5th of March following the authority of Sir Charles Metcalfe was superseded by the arrival of his successor, Lord Auckland, who had some months before been nominated to the office by the Court of Directors, and confirmed in it by the CHAPTER XXX.

DEATH OF SAADUT ALI-STATE OF THE SUCCESSION-RESIDENT SEATS THE RIGHTFUL HEIR ON THE THRONE—AFFAIRS OF SATTARA—CONDUCT OF THE RAJAH—THE RAJAH DEPOSED-TREATY WITH PERSIA-MR. ELPHINSTONE'S MISSION TO KABOOL-RUSSIAN ENGROACHMENTS ON PERSIAN TERRITORY-SIEGE OF HERAT-MISSION OF CAPTAIN BURNES-ASCENDANCY OF RUSSIA IN CENTRAL ASIA—OCCUPATION OF KARAK—SHOOJAH-OOL-MOOLK SUPPORTED BY BRITISH GOVERNMENT—TRIPARTITE TREATY—THE WAR IN APPGHANISTAN TO THE DESTRUC-TION OF THE BRITISH ARMY, AND THE ARRIVAL OF LORD ELLENBOROUGH IN INDIA.

in India was completed without the occurrence of any event sufficiently remarkable to require notice, and the first half of the ensuing year passed with equal tranquillity. The calm was then interrupted by some violent proceedings in that perpetual seat of trouble and disquiet, These were consequent upon the death of the king of whom, it is not too much to say that, low as is the ordinary standard, whether of mind or morals, attained by Eastern princes, he fell far below it in both respects. One of the most profligate, he was at the same time one of the most weak. crimes and his excesses were terminated by death on the 7th of July, 1837. The British resident, Colonel Low, on learning that the life of the king was considered to be in danger, wrote without delay to the brigadier commanding in Oude, to have a thousand men in readiness to march at a moment's notice. Having despatched the order, the resident proceeded to the palace with two officers, one of them the residency surgeon. They found the king dead, and such precautions as were at the moment available were immediately taken for guarding the palace and protecting the property which it contained. More effectually to provide for these purposes, a second order was dispatched to the brigadier in command, requiring him to send off five companies in advance to the palace, and to bring down all the disposable troops, both infantry and artillery. In the mean time measures were taken for investing the successor recognized by the British government with the external ensigns of sovereignty. This prince was an uncle of the deceased king, and the grounds upon which he was supported by the British indulged in a short repose before entering government were these:—Saadut Ali, the upon the fatigue of being enthroned, the grandfather of the monarch just departed, had resident and his assistants retired to arrange ten sons, the eldest of whom, named Gazee-oo-

THE year in which Lord Auckland arrived | had only one son, Nusseer-co-deen Hyder, the unhappy prince whose death had led to the necessity of making provision for the vacant Nusseer-oo-deen had at one time throne. acknowledged two sons, but he had subsequently disavowed them, and their protensions were believed by the Britith authorities to be The right of succession would, unfounded. thereupon, have passed to the second of the sons of Saadut Ali: but he had died previously to Nusseer-oo-deen, and, by the Mahomedan law, the death of an heir before his right to succeed has accrued, nullifies the claim of his children. No claim is transmissible through one who has himself never enjoyed possession of the thing claimed. The succession, therefore, passed to the third son of Sandut Ali, a prince named Nusseer-ood-Dowlah, and he it was whom it was proposed to elevate to the vacant musnud. This intention was not carried into effect without a struggle. The resident apprehended that the Padshah Begum, or Queen Downger, might attempt some movement in favour of one of the pretended sons, and he had despatched a messenger enjoining her to remain at her own residence, situate about four miles from tho regal palace. The messenger found the begum's followers ready to advance upon the city, and returned to communicate the intelligonce to the resident, bringing with him a vakeel from the bogum, entreating that she might be permitted to see the corpse of the deceased sovereign. In the mean time the new king had been conducted to the palace, where he arrived about three o'clock on the morning of the 8th of July. He was a man advanced in years and in feeble health, and while he the ceremonies with which the event was to deen Hyder, succeeded him. Gazee-oo-deen be accompanied. Their conference was dis-

begum's troops were approaching the city, and were close to one of the gates. They were quickly before it, and upon the refusal of Captain Paton, a British officer in attendance on the resident, to allow it to be opened, they resorted to the strength and sagacity of the elephant to effect an entrance for them. The first animal which made the attempt failed; a second, vigorously urged on by an adroit driver, succeeded in dashing in one leaf of the gate, Captain Paton narrowly escaping being crushed by its fall. An opening being thus effected, the begum's followers rushed in, Captain Paton being knocked down by them and made prisoner. After a few minutes spent in parley, the insurgents pushed on for the palace, which they entered. Further orders directing the advance of the British force had been prepared, but the begum's followers having possession of the gates, both of the palace and the city, there was no opportunity of despatching them, and the resident with his few attendants were, for a short time, virtually prisoners. The pretender, who had arrived in company with the begum, was formally The resident, with seated on the throne. some difficulty, obtained admission to the place where the ceremony was performed, and after his life. This, perhaps, was owing to fear some fruitless endeavours to persuade the rather than to any better feeling; for though begum (who was present in a covered palanquin) of the utter hopelessness of the attempt of the king and his attendants, they treated in which she had engaged, he succeeded, by the aid of one of her servants, in escaping, together with his attendants. Captain Paton had previously been released from durance not at the first sufficiently strong to have overby a small party of the British force detached for the purpose. The five advanced companies soon arrived, and were followed, it appears that the whole British force in the after a short interval, by the remainder of the British force, with some guns. Communications between the parties now took place. They ended with an intimation from the resident, that if, within a quarter of an hour, the begum did not surrender, and repair to the place where he was standing with the guns, an attack would be commenced. The time expired, and the begum did not avail herself of the opportunity offered for averting mischief. A fire of grape was then opened, and a party of British troops proceeded, by various ways, to effect an entrance into the building in which the mock king, with the begum and her followers, were acting their respective bable that it was not merely want of courage, parts in the pageant of the court. The insurgents were soon dislodged, and the begum, with the unhappy boy who had afforded the pretence for the disturbance, were made pribegum's followers were known to be killed or that outer gate, there being no force placed on wounded during the assault, and the number of wounded was probably greater, since some declares had been ordered by him, and as was in this situation may be supposed to have actually done at several of the others which escaped. A few of the British sepoys suf-were passed by Lieutenant Shakespear on his fered, but the resident had the satisfaction of road to the Nawaub Nusseer-ood-Dowlah;

turbed by the arrival of intelligence that the ! title all the strength that it could derive from the display of his possession of the musnud (a point of great importance in Eastern states), and as soon as the hall could be cleared of the painful evidence of the recent affray afforded by the bodies of the slain, Nusseer-ood-Dowlah was solemnly placed on the throne which the pretender had scarcely quitted.

The outbreak, thus terminated, seems to have been, from the commencement to its conclusion, singularly ill-judged and hopeless. With a band of followers not considerable in point of number, and who, it appears, might be regarded rather as an armed mob than a regular force, the Begum ventured to oppose the British government, whose force though numerically weak at the time, was capable of being increased, within a very short period, to degree of strength which would render successful resistance impossible. When in possession of the palace, the insurgents seem to have had no settled plan of action. placed their puppet on the throne, and appear to have been content. The king was in their power, but they neither attempted to remove him beyond the reach of British aid, nor, what was perhaps more to be expected, did they seek to get rid of his claim by the sacrifice of they abstained from any attempt on the lives them with insult, and vented their hatred in swaggering, threatening language and actions. It is to be lamented that the British force was awed the insurgents, and deterred them from even entertaining a thought of resistance; but city amounted to only two companies and a half, one company being employed as the treasury-guard, half a company as the gaolguard, and the remaining company as the bonorary guard of the resident. From the two former duties few men could of course be spared, and those that could be taken were required at other points where plunder was to be apprehended. It seems extraordinary indeed, after allowing for all these circumstances, that the begum's party should so readily have gained admission to the palace; but it is to be remarked, that the defence of the palace was in native hands, and it is pronor want of vigilance, nor want of military skill that led to the result. The following passage from a paper drawn up by the second for the disturbance, were made pri-assistant to the resident may elucidate the Between thirty and forty of the matter :—"The smallness of the guard at the outside of it, as the minister positively finding that the new sovereign and his family the supineness of many of the palace guards were safe. No time was lost in giving to his and servants; the perversion of orders sent by the minister on different occasions; his decla-|time, be related; but, to avoid needlessly ration since, that there were many traitors in breaking the continuity of the narrative when the palace—all tend strongly to induce the begun, it is postponed for the purpose of suspicion that the gate was left purposely directing attention to certain proceedings afunguarded to the attack of the Padshah Be- fecting the throne of Sattara, which strikingly gum's troops. The latter, however, having illustrate the remarks called forth by the idle once actually entered within the palace walls, and ridiculous claim of Akbul-ood-Dowlah to could from no position have been so happily the throne of Oude. expelled, with less loss to our own troops and more disgrace to themselves, than from the Burra-durree, the scene both of their shortlived triumph and of their prompt and welldeserved punishment."

The residence of the begum and the pretender to the throne, in Oude, being found likely to endanger the continuance of the public peace there, they were removed into the Company's territories; and this step put an end to all attempts to assail the authority of the ruling prince by force. His title, however, was impugned by Yemeen-ood-Dowlah, the eldest son of Shums-ood-Dowlah. person last named was the second son of Sandut Ali, and the elder brother of Nusseerood-Dowlah, the prince whom the British government had recently placed on the musnud of Oude. Had Shums-ood-Dowlah survived his nephew, the deceased king, he would undoubtedly have been entitled to succeed to the throne; but, dying before him, he could convey no right to his children; the Mahometan law, as already explained, not admitting the doctrine of representation. Of this, no one, having even a slight acquaintance with the subject, is ignorant; yet Yemeen-ood-Dowlah set up a claim upon grounds which, though recognized as valid by the law of England and many other countries, are rejected by the interpreters of the code of Mahomet. It is but just, however, to state that, on an intimation that his claim was inadmissible, he acquiesced at once in the decision, and made no attempt to push his pretensions further. A new claimant thereupon arose in the person of one named Akbul-ood-Dowlah, alleged to be the second surviving son of Shums-ood-Dowlah, but calling himself the eldest. This by the English; and when the task was compersonage, under European advice, proceeded pleted, they were to receive a due reward in to England, and there addressed the Court of money or territory, or both. It is obvious Directors of the East-India Company. The that these designs were too wild, ridiculous, folly of undertaking a long voyage to assert a and extravagant, to be entertained by the claim known to be absolutely and undoubtedly most ill-informed European; but they were bad, and with a certainty of its being rejected, not beyond the belief of an Oriental prince, need not be dwelt upon. What profit the who indulged in follies which entitled him to be adviced of the claimant desired from the analysis of the claimant desired from the advisers of the claimant derived from the ex-, ranked among the weake-t of his imbecile order. pedition cannot be known; but they were fully! With Appa Sahib, the infamous ex-rajah of aware that none would accrue to the person Nagpore, the rajah of Sattara appears for seveon whose behalf they affected to act. Such ral years to have carried on a treacherous inoccurrences are not, indeed, uncommon in the tercourse. The fact of his tampering with history of British India; and they will pro-soldiers in the British service seems hardly bably never cease altogether until native more doubtful. Certain native officers in the powers shall acquire sufficient acquaintance Company's service professed to have received, with the principles of British policy to prevent from a Brahmin, communications indicative of their becoming the dupes of unprincipled ad- a powerfully bostile feeling towards the British venturers.

rations, should now, according to the order of superiors, and were instructed by them as to

It will be recollected, that the rajah of Sattara was the nominal head of the great Mahratta confederacy, but that, for a long period before that confederacy was broken, all power had passed from his hands into those of his usurping officers. When the marquis of Hastings overthrew the peishwa, and held at his own disposal the forfeited territories of that chief, he, with an unwise liberality, drew the rajah of Sattara from the situation of a captive, and restored to him much of the dignity and some of the power which he claimed to possess, but had never before obtained or exercised. Credulous, indeed, must be be who relies on the gratitude of native princes. marquis of Hastings professed so to rely, and, perhaps, he was sincere. In the case of the rajah of Sattara the result was that which has so frequently occurred, and which might reasonably be looked for. The rajah, at length, became suspected—inquiry took place; it was ascertained that, in contravention of the treaty to which he owed his power, he was habitually carrying on correspondence with various parties, some of whom were enemies of the British government—that he was fomenting hostilities against that government-and, further, it was alleged, and to the satisfaction of many proved, that he had attempted to seduce some native officers of that government from their allegiance. It was proved that he had, for a long course of years, carried on a correspondence with the Portuguese authorities at Goa, the object of which was to engage them in an alliance against the British government. Portugal was to furnish an army to recover for the rajah the Mahratta territorities, of which the confederacy had been dispossessed government. These communications being The origin of a very eventful series of ope- repeated, the officers reported them to their

subsequently admitted to the presence of the are avenged-commencing hostilites, taking dewan, and, ultimately, it was said, to that of the rajah himself, whose language, at the interview, was similar to that which had previously been held by the dewan and the a sense of his errors by remonstrance, and then Brahmin. It cannot be denied that upon the giving him amnesty for the past, in the hope face of it much of the above statement is that his future conduct might be more worthy improbable, but though the opportunity was of his station and his relation to the British afforded him, the rajah was unable to shake it; government. To the adoption of the first and the improbability is greatly lessened on course several objections existed. recollecting the weak and wild character of no ordinary tribunal to which the rajah could the prince against whom the charge was made. Further, the difficulties of disbelief appear to been created for the purpose. Against such a be greater even than those of belief. Part of what was stated was certainly true; and though it has been alleged that the scheme was intended to advance the interests of the brother of the rajah, at his expense, no reasonable hope of promoting such an end by such means could at the time have been entertained; indeed, the possibility of connecting them would almost have been inconceivable, and this view of the matter is more incredible than that which implicates the rajah. whether he were guilty or innocent of the last charge, he had unquestionably deprived himself of all claim to plead against the English government the obligations of the treaty under which he had exchanged the condition of a titled slave for the exercise of actual sovereignty: for the conditions of that treaty he had notoriously broken. Still, there was a disposition to view his case with favour, and he might have preserved that power which he had abused, if he had not unhappily followed the example of other weak and infatuated Indian princes. He distrusted the British government, but he gave credit to the professions of certain European advisers; to them he committed himself and his interests, and it will be seen with what success. There was the best disposition to treat him with kindness and indulgence. At the time when it became neceseary to dispose of the rajah's case, a new governor arrived at Bombay. He was a man who in former years, when employed as a servant of the Company in diplomatic duties, had established for himself the character of tion to the rajah, or that this duty should be being eminently the friend of native princes and of the native community. No man ever latter course being, in his judgment, more enjoyed greater popularity in India than Sir advisable. This being done, and the admo-James Carnac, who had now returned to take nition duly received and responded to by the the chief place in the government of Bombay. He arrived there on the 20th of May, and on the 19th of June he recorded a minute expressive of his opinion on the case of the mjah another minute, descriptive of the mode in of Sattara. This paper commenced with an avowal that the criminality of the rajah had towards the rajah of Sattara should be carried been clearly proved; and the governor then proceeded to inquire how, under the circumstances, the offender should be dealt with. Three modes of treating the case were pointed out: first, by subjecting the rajah to a formal trial, and after inquiry made and sentence amnesty for the past, to make any demand passed, visiting him with appropriate punishment; secondly, by proceeding in the mode and under this impression I at once abandon the course they were to pursue. They were by which wrongs between independent states There was be made amenable, and a special one must have tribunal, however, constituted, clamour would be loud. Further, the competency of such a tribunal might have been plausibly questioned. By assuming the power of subjecting the rajah to a legal trial, the British government would have placed him in the situation of a subject, whereas he had always been treated as a sovereign.

If a hostile course were inevitable, the governor declared that he should much prefer the second course—that of proceeding against the rajah as a prince bound by treaty, but who, having violated the conditions of the engagement, was at the mercy of the other party thereto, which party was at liberty to enforce its rights by war or otherwise. But the necessity for extreme measures, he thought, did not exist. The rajah, he remarked, could not be regarded as a very formidable foe to the British empire, and those with whom he had been connected were as little formidable as himself. No results, it was observed, have followed, "except the transfer of money to agents and adventurers"—those standing curses to Indian princes. The rajah had, indeed, as was stated in the minute, manifested great weakness and no inconsiderable portion of ingratitude; but it was added, "we have nothing to fear, and we can afford to act with generosity." Under the influence of these views, Sir James Carnac gave a decided preference to the mildest of the three courses of proceeding, and he suggested either that the resident should make a fitting representadischarged by the governor in person, the forgiven. On the following day the governor recorded which the intentions of the government

rajah, it was intended that he should be frankly

the measure which appears to have been demanded in what particulars he had violated thought of by the government of the late Sir the treaty of 1819, and on the three points Robert Grant, of requiring the rajah to mainbeing stated—the intrigues with the Portain a contingent of horse for the service of tuguese government at Goa, the holding the British government. Our demands should treacherous intercourse with the ex-rajah of be limited as much as possible, and should be Nagpore, and the tampering with the troops confined only to those which will again place of the British government—he made no rethe rajah in the precise situation intended by mark on either the first or third, thus tacitly the treaty of September, 1819, and will insure admitting his guilt on those points. On the the most efficient protection to all persons second, he took a course which would have who have become obnoxious to him in conselbeen very proper in an advocate defending a quence of the part they have taken in recent client on legal and technical grounds, but proceedings." The views of Sir James Carnac which was scarcely consistent with a conwere adopted by the other members of the sciousness of innocence when adopted by a Bombay government (though, as to the imprincipal in a conference not partaking in any portant question of how the rajah should be way of the nature of a legal inquiry. Some treated, opposed to their own); and the intercepted letters from the ex-rajah of Naggovernor general in council having sanctioned pore to him being adverted to, he did not the grant of amnesty to the rajah, the proposed deny having been engaged in correspondence conditions of the grant, and the visit of the with that person, but dwelt upon the fact of governor of Bombay to Sattara, Sir James no answers from him being produccable. Carnac set out with a sanguine hope of rescuing second interview took place, but with no the rajah from the dangerous position in better result. which he had been placed by the evil counsels of designing men, and of restoring friendly desire again to visit the governor of Bombay; relations between him and the British govern- a third interview was granted, and it was the ment. He arrived at Sattara on the 22nd of last. The obstinacy of the misguided prince August, and on the 23rd had his first inter- led him still to resist the terms offered him, view with the rajah. He explained in firm although the main condition insisted on was but conciliatory language the position in which only a promise of adherence to the treaty by the rajah stood, and the intentions of the which he was previously bound—the remain-British government towards him; and among ing articles being of comparatively trivial much admirable advice, not the least valuable import. It was, however, in all probability, portion was that referred to in the following that first article, though it enforced no new passage of the report made by Sir James obligation, that constituted the chief obstacle Carnac to his council on the subject of this to an amicable conclusion of the dispute, for interview :- "I recalled to his recollection he observed -not to the governor, but to the the warning long ago given to him by his resident—that by assenting to it, he should be friend, Mr. Elphinstone, against placing his reduced to the condition of a mamlutdar trust and confidence in vakeels and low and farmer, or manager of a district. The governor intriguing agents, and carnestly urged him to saw him no more after the interview which discard from his councils the numerous agencies has been last noticed, but the resident, Colonel he had established." The conditions of the Ovans, waited on him to receive his final intended amnesty had been embodied in a decision. That decision was confirmatory of memorandum drawn up in the Mahratta his previous resolution, and the necessary language for the information of the rajah, and result was, that the rajah descended from the this was placed in his hands. This paper, throne, and took up his residence within the after referring to the infractions of the exist. British dominions; his brother being elevated ing treaty by the rajah declared the readiness to the place which he had quitted. of the British government entirely to overlook them on the conditions which follow—that the sites, some of whom seduced him into acts rajah should now bind himself strictly and in indicative of hostile feelings to his British

The rajah, after a short interval, signified a

The rajah was the victim of interested pararajah should now bind himself strictly and in good faith to act up to the articles of the treaty of 1819; that he should agree to certain specified arrangements affecting the interests of his brother; that he should dismiss from his councils and exclude from his territories an offensive and daugerous minister, which they knew to be false, of who was named; and confirm a guarantee of safety given by the British government to certain parties. These were the whole of the conditions demanded from the rajah—and these he rejected. No sacrifice was required these he rejected; but the rajah, with a perverseness rarely equalled, spurned the friendship which was tendered him on terms neither burdensome nor dishonourable. He indicative of hostile feelings to his British protectors, while others encouraged him to presevere in repelling the hand of forgiveness stretched out to save him, by making protectors, which they knew to be fasse, of success in such a course, which they knew to be false, of success in such a course, which they knew to be fallacious. Of the amount of the money expended in enriching these persons no precise account can be given, but it must have been very large. The number of his against and native agents—agents at Benday missions having been despatched thitler. neither burdensome nor dishonourable. He missions having been de-patched thither.

The local press was freely employed to revile in check in the event of their attempting to the government and support the rajah, and invade India. Englishmen did not hesitate to take the unhappy prince's money in payment for exertions removed.

England with much warmth, and without same manner his older brother, Hoomayon, doubt from different motives—motives varying whose throne he had usurped. The conqueror from those of the highest and most honourable of Zemann Shah, and author of his sufferings, character to those of the meanest and most was another brother, named Mahmood, who despicable origin. But when the resources of speedily found himself engaged in a contest argumentation were exhausted, it could not for the throne with a fourth brother, named be shown that the rajah had not violated the Shonjah-col-Moolk, who finally triumphed; treaty by which he held his throne. The only but, with unusual elemency, abstained from question that could with fairness be raised inflicting on the man whom he had vanquished was, whether or not he should be forgiven, the penalty of blindness. The country, how-Upon this point, however, the advocates ever, continued torn by factions and divisions, on both sides might have suspended discust and Shoojah-ool-Moolk tottered on his throne sion, for the rainh obstinately refused to be from the moment that he ascended it. forgiven.

the feeble representative of a robber dymasty, which rose from obscurity to grandeur, and then declined into insignificance with meteoric rapidity—to events of greater dignity and greater interest; events important in themselves and in their widely extended relations. To render the narrative intelligible, some reference to treaties and negotiations of carlier date will be requisite.

The safety of British India on the westward had frequently been an object of great auxiety to its rulers. tween Persia and the Indus were inhabited by a rude and barbarous but withal a warlike po-|interests committed to his charge, thereupon pulation, well calculated by their predatory vils of their visitations, and the Affghans connection with Affghanistan was now mediwere remembered as men whose trade was tated in order to oppose the combined efforts war, and whose constant divisions formed the only effectual check on their ambition and military taste. Some years before the termination of the eighteenth century, an Affghan chief named Zemaun Shah had begun to threaten the British frontier, and those threats were periodically repeated and withdrawn as circumstances dictated. The attention of the Marquis Wellesley was directed to this source of danger at an early period of the administration of that distinguished nobleman; and an attempt to invade India, which might have occasioned much both of trouble and expense, if nothing more, was foiled by exciting the alarm of Zemaun Shah for the safety of his own dominions. At this time danger to British India was apprehended from the machinations of the French; and to avert evil from either quarter, it was deemed desirable to draw Persia into a close alliance with the British government. This was effected. In 1801 a treaty was negotiated by Sir John Malcolm, by which the Persian Shah engaged to exclude the French from settling in any part of his dominions, and to hold the Affghans governor-general of India, almost simulta-

The latter cause for apprehension was soon Zemaun Shah was deposed, and, directed against the interests of their own according to Asiatic custom, blinded, in the country, and the safety of its Indian dominions, year in which the treaty with Persia was con-The cause of the rajah was taken up in cluded, Zemaun Shah having treated in the While Affghanistan was thus ceasing to be We pass from the fortunes of a petty prince formidable, Persia was relaxing in her tidelity, and, finally, even the affectation of good faith was abandoned. The Persian sovereign, in 1806, sent a mission to Napoleon, then in the zenith of his power, and with all Europe, England excepted, prostrate at his feet. years afterwards a French mission arrived in Persia, with the avowed object of establishing such relations with that country as might aid the views which Napoleon had long cherished, of striking a blow at the British power in India, and it was received with extraordinary The countries intervening be- marks of favour and distinction. Lord Minto, a watchful and excellent guardian of the great prepared to counteract the designs of the its, their poverty, and their recklessness, to French Emperor. The alliance of Persia had the alarm of a comparatively opulent previously been sought to check Affghanistan, chbour. India had more than once felt the and oppose a barrier to France. A similar of France and Persia. Prudent in his policy, Lord Minto was also happy in the choice of an instrument for carrying it into effect. It was resolved to despatch a mission to Cabool, and the charge of it was intrusted to the Honourable Mountstuart Elphinstone, then a very young man, but since eminently distinguished by many important services. Mr. Elphiuby many important services. stone was cordially received, and concluded a treaty with Shoojah-ool-Moolk, by which that prince bound himself to resist any attempts which might be made by the French and Persians to advance through his territories upon India.

While preparation was thus made to vanquish the enemy in Affghanistan, should they approach, measures to break the confederacy were not neglected. Endeavours were made. both from India and from home, to counteract the baleful influence which the French had acquired in Persia, and to detach that country from its inauspicious connection with England's bitter and irreconcilable foe. Sir John Malcolm arrived at Bushire, commissioned by the only for the purpose of repelling aggression- dience in the former case was to be incurred.

thed to nature in a title of Lording with the British government, the expense to be Gust Pritsin. No individuals of such Euros Idefrayed by that government-the extent of pean nations entertaining a design of invading pasterance, mode of affording it, and manner of Itelia, or being at comity with Great Britain, payment, to be arranged when the occasion were to be permitted to enter Percia; and if might arise. By the other article, the British any European power should seek to invade were restrained from interfering in the case of India by way of Khorasan, Tataristan, Ho-kara Samatend, or other routes, the King of Cept their mediation should be solicited by Persia was, to the extent of his power, to both parties. Further, it was stipulated that, engage the Lings and governors of those if any "Persian subject of distinction, show countries to oppose such invasion, "either by ing signs of hostility and rebellion, should the fear of his armies or by conciliatory measures." The King of Great Britain was not English government, on receiving an intimato interfere in disputes between the princes, tion from that of Persia, should fin the nervous nobles, and chiefs of Persia; and it was language of the treaty) "turn him out" of the further considerately provided that, "if one country, and if he should refuse to leave it. of the contending parties should ever offer a arrest and send him to Persia. If, previously province of Persia, with a view of obtaining to the arrival of the fugitive, the British assistance, the English government shall not government should be aware of the wish of the agree to such a proposal, nor, by adopting it, Persian authorities that the stranger should possess themselves of such part of Persia." It not be received, his entrance was to be prowas laid down that the purpose of the treaty hibited, and if the prohibition were disrewas strictly defensive—that it was concluded garded, the penalty denounced against disobeThe obligations of this article were declared to the shah against some rebel subjects, he enbe reciprocal. In the last place came an tered the country, seized some of its most article providing that the British government desirable districts, and retained possession in should assist Persia with ships and troops in spite of the attempts of the Persians to regain the Gulf, if required, and if convenient and them. Having achieved this measure of sucpracticable; the expenses of such ships and troops being defrayed by Persia, and the ships sultan of Persia was now a prisoner in the being restricted to certain ports, to be speci-hands of the Affghans. Peter undertook to fied, for their anchorage. Such was the treaty relieve him, and, in consideration of this serwhich, after five years of negotiation, was vice, obtained a formal cession of the provinces alteration, till 1828, when the court of Persia others. The treaty was not ratified by the found itself in the condition not uncommon severeign of Persia; but Peter, notwithstandwith Oriental states, pressed by demands ing, held it good so far as it gave him a title which it knew not how to meet, and ready to to keep possession of the provinces thereby sacrifice prospective advantage for present coded to him, though he entirely passed over relief. Persia had been engaged in a disastrous war with Russia, and had been amerced him, as the consideration for what he gained, by the latter power in a heavy fine. The British government had felt inconvenience from the article of the treaty by which they The were bound to afford military or pecuniary aid to Persia when engaged in war, and this appeared a fitting opportunity to get rid of it. An overture for that purpose was made, and the Persian prince, in consideration of receiving a sum of money to aid in discharging the claim of Russia, reluctantly consented to annul the fourth article of the treaty under which the obligation of the British government arose, as well as the preceding article which related to the boundaries of Russia and Persia, and gave Great Britain a voice in determining them.

A few years more rolled on, during which Persia became gradually weaker, and Russia gained a proportionate increase of strength. Indeed, the rise and extension of the Russian empire are among the most remarkable facts such as it was, to the head of the Afighan of modern times, or even of any time. The invaders whom the Russians were bound to foundations of that empire were laid by as barbarous, and not recognized as a memstates in the west. Since that period, the considerable check. Nadir Shah arose, excourse of the Muscovite power has been, with pelled the Affghans from Persia, and became occasional interruptions, a career of aggression its monarch. He claimed the whole of the and conquest. The Czar Peter was a man of ancient possessions of Persia, and Russia, not extraordinary energy, and as unscrupulous deeming it prudent to contest his claim, as he was energetic. In every direction he quietly abandoned all territory south of the sought the means of extending his territory, wealth, and power. Of his wars with Sweden the personal character of the sovereign is and Turkey it is foreign to the purpose of this necessarily unstable, and the death of Nadir work to speak; but his designs upon Persia Shah opened again the field for the exercise of and eventually upon the trade of India-for Russian ambition. Rival princes of Georgia, beyond the possession of its trade even the an old dependency of Persia, sought the sanguine mind of the czar could at that period assistance of Russia, and though none was hardly have speculated-require some notice. afforded, a series of proceedings of singularly Peter sent an embassy to Persia, and secured insidious character followed, which ultimately cess, he returned in triumph to Moscow. The It remained in force, without which he had conquered, as well as of several the duty of rescuing the shah from the hands of his enemies. The situation of Persia was now wretched in the extreme. The Affghans were in possession of one portion, the Russians of another, and the Turks of a third, when Peter died. But this event brought no change to the fortunes of the unhappy country, for after his death the Russian and Turkish governments proceeded coolly to settle the boundaries of their own dominions, as well as those of the Persian monarch, without calling the last-named power to any part in the discussion or decision of the matter.

The next step taken by Russia was remark-The rulers of that country had been unable to establish their authority in certain provinces which they claimed under the treaty which the shah had disavowed. They now transferred their right to those provinces, expel, and as the condition of the territorial Peter the Great as late as the conclusion of cession made to them, and in consideration of the seventeenth century. Before this time the sacrifice, if it can be so called, they oby was a petty princedom, obscure as it tained the concurrence of the Affghans in their retention of the remainder. But the of the community of civilized and Christian designs of Russia soon afterwards received a Caucasus. But a dominion which rests on a monopoly of the export of silk from that led to the absorption of that province into country. The Persian dominions were then the leviathan empire. The success of Russia fallen into ruin under an imbecile ruler, and against Turkey enabled her to command the Peter thought the opportunity favourable for Caspian Sea; this afforded additional means obtaining territorial as well as commercial for fulfilling the designs long entertained advantages. Under the pretence of assisting against Persia; and those who have learned were not neglected.

come into actual conflict, but it was not the the Russian plenipotentiary's promise, but it is long series of aggression already noted which needlers to say that they looked in rain. was the immediate occasion of it. The British ambassador at St. Petershargh remonconflict could not fail to come sooner or later, strated; his remonstrances produced all the but it was precipitated by the conduct of a effect that might be expected, and no more. was looked to as the fruit of their victory, fatal than her sword. it was found that from some cause the rebel governor had altered his mind. He refused to Great Britain, and most justly. At the to admit the friends whose visit he had time under notice, the Persian government solicited, and they, being unable to maintain was altogether in the hands of that of Russia, the siege, were compelled to retire. This was and the intrigues of the latter to extend its the Russians without any provocation but the India, were notorious. Some brief explanaa desultory manner and with variable success country will here be necessary. till 1814. It was during its continuance that the country interposed his good offices to esta- and asserted his claim in arms. Russia a vast extent of territory, and engaged becoming the character of the government. to maintain no navy on the Caspian. The government were most anxious to rescue from cruel character, became jealous.

with what perseverance Russia pursues her court the restitution of the disputed district as schemes of aggression will believe that they an act of grace and favour. The bait was taken, the treaty was signed,-the Persian The Russians and Persians were soon to government then looked for the fulfilment of rebellious vassal of the Persian king, who From this time an uneasy state of feeling con-held the government of Erivan. The shah tinued to exist between Russia and Persia, advancing with an army to reduce this person until, after the lapse of some years, it termito obedience, the latter solicited the aid of a Russian force, which was promptly afforded him. At this time, it is to be observed, chase peace by the sacrifice of further portions Russia and Persia were at peace; but this of territory to a great extent. Having gained circumstance formed no impediment to the thus much by war, the Russian government, grant of the required assistance, seeing that it according to its accustomed mode, recorted to was attended by the prospect of aggrandize- the use of the more insidious and not less ment, the rebel having promised to deliver up to efficient modes of aggrandizement afforded by the Russians the fortress which he commanded, the arts of intrigue. Having laid down her Before arriving at Erivan, the Russian army arms for a searon, every effort was made to met and defeated that of the shah; but on establish the influence of Russia within Persia reaching the place, the surrender of which and beyond it, and her counsels were not less

These counsels became an object of alarm in 1804, and the war thus commenced by influence beyond Persia, in the direction of lust of conquest, continued to be carried on in tion of the circumstances of the intervening

Mention has been made of a prince named diplomatic contest for the friendship of Persia Shoojah-ool-Moolk as having succeeded, in took place between the English and French, and opposition to his brother, Mahmood, in escaded in the triumph of the latter. The course tablishing himself on the throne of Afighanof European politics soon afterwards brought istan, and who ruled, or professed to rule, that Great Britain into close alliance with Russia, country when it was visited by the British and on this ground, as well as, it may be pre-mission under Mr. Elphinstone. Shortly after sumed, from a desire to prevent the addition the departure of that mission, Shoojah was to the Russian empire of the whole dominions compelled to yield to the better fortune of of Persia, the British ambassador in the latter Mahmood, who escaped from confinement, The deblish the relations of peace. It was indeed feated Shoojah fled to Lahore, where Runject an extraordinary fact, that Great Britain Singh received him cordially, plundered him should be subsidizing an ally for the purpose unscrupulously, and evinced a strong desire to of maintaining war with another ally of the retain possession of his person. Shoojah, country furnishing the subsidy. By the treaty after a time, escaped into the British domithus brought about Persia surrendered to nions, where he was received in a manner

But Malmood was not to enjoy without conduct of the negotiation was highly charac. | molestation the throne which he had regained, teristic of Russian policy. The basis proposed or rather which had been regained for him. in the treaty was that known in diplomatic language as the "uti possidetis." This would Futteh Khan, of whom, on account probably have given to the Russians the right to a dis- of the services which he had rendered, Kamtrict which, for special reasons, the Persian ram the son of Mahmood, a man of dark and The vintheir grasp. The Persian plenipotentiary ac dictivo prince recommended that Futteh cordingly declined to accept the basis unless Khan should be arrested and deprived of Talish were excepted. The Russian nego sight. Mahmood, with the measure of gratitiator declared that his instructions did not tude common to Oriental despots, complied allow him to vary or modify the basis; butto with his son's request. The chief was subinduce the other party to accept of it without jected to the infliction suggested, and subscqualification, he promised to procure from his quently was murdered with circumstances of dominions.

2 M 2

royal of Persia had been employed in reducing longation by advances of money. Khorasan to obedience. Upon these latter grounds the Persian claims would have been of pressing importance, and the practicability limited to Herat and its dependencies, but of converting castern Affghanistan into a according to the first they extended to Kan-barrier for the defence of British India-a dependency of Persia upon Russia, it was atrocious cruolty. Futtoh Khan left behind the commercial treaty, the residence of a atrocious cruelty. Futtoh Khan left behind the commercial treaty, the residence of a those who were not slow to average his death; who probably, indeed, were glad of a pretext for shaking off their allegiance to an ungrateful lord. A revolution, effected by the brothers of the murdered minister, deprived Mahmood of the larger portion of his dominions, and drove him to Herat, where he succeeded in maintaining his authority over a limited extent of territory. There he died, leaving his diminished power to his heir. Kamram, the obligations of nublic faith will permit; but diminished power to his heir, Kamram, the obligations of public faith will permit; but guilty author of the sufferings and death of while the British government is free to assist Futteh Khan, and of the subsequent ill-fortune Persia in the assertion of her succeign pre-which attended the house and throne of Mah. mood. The dominious alienated by the revo-precluded by the ninth article of the existing lution were divided among the brothers of treaty from interfering between the Persians Futtch Khan, one of whom, Dost Mahomed and the Affghans, unless called upon to do so Khan, the most able and active among them, by both parties; and, therefore, as long as the reigned in Kabool. A part of the country treaty remains in force, the British governwas held in a sort of common sovereignty by ment must submit to the approach of Russian other brothers residing at Kandahar. Shah influence, through the instrumentality of Shoojah twice unsuccessfully attempted to Persian conquests, to the very frontier of our recover the throne from which Mahmood had Indian empire." War between Persia and been expelled; but Runjeet Singh succeeded Herat followed, under the auspices of Russia, in wresting Peshawur from the grasp of the and the anxiety of the British authorities rebel chiefs, and annexing it to his own was consequently increased. Russia, indeed, affected to disclaim the share imputed to it in This dismemberment was not the only one originating the war, and copies of despatches to be apprehended. Persia, encouraged by from the Russian minister in Persia to his Russia, preferred certain claims, and prepared government were furnished to discredit the to maintain them. The nature and even the report. But despatches are framed with extent of these claims were somewhat vague, various objects. In this case circumstances They seem to have rested partly on pretensions sufficiently indicated what were the views of originating in the conquests of Nadir Shah, the Russian government. While its ministers partly on the payment of tribute to Persia on were manufacturing show despatches to disarm certain occasions by Kamram, the ruler of the jealousy of England, they were not only Herat, and partly on certain engagements inciting Persia to war with Herat, but actually entered into by that prince while the prince lengaging in the contest and aiding its pro-

To counteract these efforts became a matter dahar and Ghuznee. With reference to the project previously entertained by Lord Minto -began to be seriously considered. With a obviously not for the interest of Great Britain view of effecting this object, or at least of that these claims should be pressed to any, ascertaining whether or not it could be even the smallest, extent. The danger is effected, a mission, professedly commercial, clearly stated in a memorandum drawn up in was in September, 1837, dispatched from the month of January, 1836, by Mr. Ellis, the India under Captain Alexander Burnes, who British minister in Persia, for the information had some previous acquaintance with the of his government:—"The Shah of Persia country and its rulers. When Captain Burnes lays claim to the sovereignty of Affghanistan, arrived at Kabool, in the exercise of his as far as Ghuznee, and is fully determined functions, he found Persian and Russian to attempt the conquest of Herat in the intrigue actively at work in Affghanistan. spring. Unfortunately, the conduct of Kamram Meerza, in violating the engagements dahar and Persia, and further, between the entered into with his royal highness the late chiefs of the former place and the Russian Abbas Meerza, and in permitting his vizier, ambassador at the Persian court. These Yah-Mahomed Khan, to occupy part of latter communications, it is said, originated Seistan, has given the Shah a full justification with a fugitive from Herat, who, at Tehran, for commencing hostilities. The success of became the guest of the Russian ambassador, the Shah in the undertaking is anxiously This person, possessing some influence with wished for by Russia, and their minister here the Kandahar chiefs, suggested to them that does not fail to press it on to early execution. it would be for their advantage to address the The motive cannot be mistaken. Herat once representative of the autocrat. It is stated annexed to Persia may become, according to that they did, to the effect of expressing a strong desire to enter into a friendly connection with Russia; of representing their griev- Russia and Persia succeeded in effecting the ances, more especially the occupation of conclusion of a treaty with the Sirdars, which Peshawur by Runjeet Singh, and of soliciting provided for the transfer to those rulers of pecuniary assistance to enable them to expel the territory of Herat. It is true that it was the invader. It is needless to say, that the yet unconquered, but this fact appears to have ambassador did not afford them the required aid, but he expressed great joy at the receipt of the communication, treated the messenger who brought it with extraordinary distinction, and dispatched a courteous answer with the usual oriental accompaniment of presents. The epistolary favours of the Russian ambassador were not confined to Kandahar. addressed a letter to Dost Mahomed Khan, any deviation from, or violation of, this entire the chief of Kabool, and this appears to have treaty and these agreements." been unsolicited. Dost Mahomed had sent a messenger to the Shah of Persia, for the ascendant, the British mission to the Persian purpose, as it appears, of asking assistance court was subjected to such treatment as against Runjeet Singh, whose occupation of compelled its chief, Mr. McNeill, to with-Peshawur was, by all the brothers, regarded draw. with extreme aversion, It does not seem that any overture was made to the Russian ambassador, but this did not prevent that personage from expressing his sympathy with Britain and Persia becoming daily more un-Dost Mahomed. "The Russian ambassador, certain, it was expedient to make a demonstration of the chief of Kabool, "has sent you stration in the Gulf; and, accordingly, the servant of the chief of Kabool, "has sent you stration of Karak was occupied by a British a letter, which I inclose. The substance of force. his verbal message to you is, that if the Shah does everything you want, so much the his labours did not prosper. Dost Mahomed better; and, if not, the Russian government Khan was obviously playing off the British will furnish you with everything wanting and Russian missions against each other, and will furnish you with everything wanting The object of the Russian elchee by this message is, to have a road to the English, and for he could procure the best terms. The Rusthis they are very anxious. He is waiting for sians had clearly the advantage in one respect your answer, and I am sure he will serve you." The road to the English which the Russians thing and everything that Dost Mahomed wished to have was, of course, a road to India.

A new agent soon appeared in the field, in the person of a Russian emissary, who came to Kabool armed with credentials from the Count Simonich, the Russian ambassador at Tehran, and recommended by a letter from the Shah. The communications made by this person were justly characterized by Captain Burnes, to whom they were reported from two distinct but trustworthy sources, as "of a startling nature." He informed the chieftain, at whose court he appeared, that he was commissioned to express the sincere sympathy of the Russian government with the difficulties under which Dost Mahomet laboured; that they were willing to assist in repelling Runjeet Singh, would furnish a sum of money for the purpose, and renew it annually, expecting in return the chieftain's good offices. Even the means of remittance were adverted to, the Russian government undertaking to convey the treasure to Bokhara, whence Dost Mahomed was expected to find his own means of transit. It is not necessary to believe that there was any intention of sending the money thus proffered. The promise would answer the purpose for a while, and in the mean time danger to the British government. there was opportunity for considering of some new device.

On one occasion he observed that the proceedings of Russia were open to so much

At Kandahar the combined intrigues of been no obstacle to the success of the nego-tiation. The treaty was guaranteed by Count Simonich in the following high-sounding terms:—"I, who am the minister plenipotentiary of the exalted government of Russia, will be guarantee that neither on the part of his majesty the Shah of Persia, nor on the He part of the powerful Sirdars, shall there occur

While Russian influence was thus in the At Bushire and other places, the servants of the British government were exposed to insult and violence, and the continuance of friendly relations between Great

Captain Burnes continued at Kabool, but endeavouring to ascertain from which party -its agents did not scruple to promise anydesired. The servants of the British government were more scrupulous; and, being able to promise nothing but that which it was intended to perform, they stood in a position very unfavourable to success as compared to that of their rivals. The recovery of Peshawur was a great object of desire to Dost Mahomed. Vickovich, the Russian agent, promised that his government should interfere, for the purpose of gratifying him. Captain Burnes could make no such promise; and Lord Auckland, in a letter to the chief of Kabool, distinctly intimated that the restoration of Peshawur was not to be expected. This seems to have given the finishing stroke to the hope of conducting the negotiation to a successful issue; it was protracted for some time longer, but it was evident that nothing was to be looked for from its continuance, and, finally, Captain Burnes left the country.

The influence of Russia had thus defeated British policy in Affghanistan as well as in Persia. Captain Burnes had, some time before his departure, formed and expressed very decided opinions on the progress of Russian influence in Affghanistan, and the consequent Vickovich, the agent, who was so active at stipulations of this treaty will be sufficient. the British government, recalled. Simonich, who had taken the lead in directing | self, his heirs, and successors, of the territories, tunely that when the remonstrance of Great Britain was received, another officer had been previously appointed to supersede the count —and the emperor refused to confirm the from generation to generation." guarantee which had been given to the treaty with Kandahar.

The British minister in Persia, Mr. McNeill, an able and indefatigable servant of the Lahore) should be assembled at the same place, government which he served, had constantly pointed out the injurious tendency of the course taken by Count Simonich. What was the conduct of the Russian ministry? They denied that Count Simonich had acted as was imputed, and alleged that the British minister This allegation was refuted. was misled. Other expedients were then resorted to and persevered in as long as they were tenable; when all resources of this nature were exhausted, the ambassador was withdrawn under arrangements pretended to have been made some months before. The cool audacity which characterizes Russian diplomacy is perhaps one of the elements of its success.

To check the approach of that formidable power, the British government sought to establish such relations with the ruling powers at Kabool and Kandahar as should be sufficient for the purpose; but the attempt failed—the "captain of Cossacks" was too strong for the English functionary with whom he was brought in opposition, and Russian influence was obviously predominant in those states as well as in Persia. The question, then, to be decided was. Shall those countries be calmly given up to the enemies of England, or shall some other means of establishing British influence in them be resorted to? The government of India determined on the latter course; and as the most obvious method of promoting the end in view, resolved to lend the expelled Affghan prince, Shoojah-ool-Moolk, its aid in another attempt to regain his throne.

To facilitate the objects of the meditated expedition, a tripartite treaty was concluded, the parties thereto being the British govern-ment of India, the head of the Seik state, Runjeet Singh, and the prince who was once more, under the auspices of the great Europanness, about to attempt the conquest of his lost dominions, the Shah Shoojah. This treaty was partially the same with first brigade was composed of her Majesty's one concluded in 1834, between Runjeet Singh 13th light infantry and of the 16th and 48th and Shoojahool. Moelly the exercise of the and Shoojah-ool-Moolk, the execution of the native infantry; it was under Brigadier Sale.

remark, that after Count Nesselrode's dis-|provisions of which had been suspended, "for avowals, she must either disavow her emis- certain reasons," as was delicately, though saries or be made responsible for their pro-somewhat indefinitely, intimated in the pre-She chose the former course—| amble of the new treaty. To notice the chief Kabool, was, upon representations made from One of the most important parts of it was a Count disclaimer, by Shah Shoojah, on behalf of himthe war against Herat, and had guaranteed on either bank of the river Indus, then posthe treaty for its transfer to Kandahar, was sessed by Runjeet Singh. These, including recalled—or, according to the soft rendering Peshawur and its dependencies, were "conformation of the Russian government, his period of service had expired, it happening most opportunity of the maharajah;" the shah solemnly declaring, "that he neither had, nor would have, any concern with them;" but that they belonged "to the maharajah and his posterity

> The prejudices of the Seiks were propitiated by a stipulation, to the effect that, when the armies of the two states (Affghanistan and the slaughter of kine should not be permitted. The treaty contained some commercial provisions, some stipulations as to presents and points of ceremony, others relating to the assistance to be afforded by the allies to each other, to the payment of subsidies in consideration of military aid, and to the division of booty. Shah Shoojah renounced all claims, territorial and pecuniary, upon Sinde, on condition of receiving a sum to be determined under the mediation of the British government; he bound himself to abstain from molesting his nephew, the ruler of Herat, to refrain from entering into negotiations with any foreign state without the knowledge and consent of the British and Seik governments, and to oppose, by force of arms, to the utmost of his ability, any person having a desire to invade either the Seik or the British dominions. This treaty was signed at Lahore, on the 26th June, 1838.

> To place one of the parties to the treaty in the position to which he aspired, and to which his right was recognized by the other parties, was a task yet to be performed. The military preparations consequent on the diplomatic arrangements concluded by the three powers were on a scale commensurate with the magnitude of the objects in view. Bengal and Bombay were each to furnish a portion of the British force, and the command of the whole was to be intrusted to Sir Henry Fane, com-mander-in-chief in India. From Bengal were provided two troops of horse and three companies of foot artillery, the whole under the command of Brigadier Graham. The Bengal cavalry brigade, under Brigadier Arnold, was formed of the 16th lancers and the 2nd and 3rd light cavalry. One division of infantry,

The second brigade, commanded by Major- variety of offensive and defensive weapon—General Nott, contained the 2nd, 31st, 42nd, sword, shield, matchlock, musket, and rifle. the Buffs and the 2nd and 27th native infantry. Runjeet Singh's French officers. The whole The fourth brigade, composed of the Bengal of this combined force was under the command European regiment and the 35th and 37th of Colonel Wade. Another Seik force, under native infantry, was placed under Brigadier one of Runjeet's native officers, was posted on Roberts; and the fifth, comprising the 5th, the frontier of Peshawur, as an army of obsergeth, and 53rd regiments of native infantry, vation. under Brigadier Worsley. An engineer department, under Captain George Thomson, was provided, together with two companies of sappers and miners, native soldiers, with European non-commissioned officers. The equipment of this force was completed by a siege-train of four 18-pounders, two 8-inch and two council, directed the assemblage of a British force was two 8-inch and two council, directed the assemblage of a British force for service across the Indus, he deemed 54-inch mortars, with two spare howitzers, force for service across the Indus, he deemed one a 24, the other a 12-pounder.

the commander-in-chief at that presidency, lordship, accordingly, proceeded to advert to consisted of two troops of horse and two comvarious events which had produced this step; panies of foot artillery, under Brigadier Ste-to the treaties entered into by the British phenson; a brigade of cavalry, composed of government with the Ameers of Sinde, the two squadrons of her Majesty's 4th light dra- Nawaub of Bhawulpore, and the Maharajah goons and 1st Bombay light cavalry, under Runjeet Singh, with a view to opening the Brigadier Scott; and a body of infantry, consisting of her Majesty's 2nd and 17th, and of mission of Captain Burnes to Kabool; to the the 1st, 5th, 19th, and 23rd native regiments, under the command of Major-General Willshire. The Poona auxiliary horse were to accompany this force, which also brought into the field an engineer department, a detachment of sappers and miners, and a siege-train consisting of two 18-pounders and four 9pounders.

Law has its fictions, and so has statesman-The force of which a detailed account has been given, though, in fact, intended for tish alliance, and his hostile feelings towards the conquest and occupation of Affghanistan, was regarded only as an auxiliary force aiding the operations of the Shah Shoojah-ool-Moolk minister, and to the results which had folat the head of his own troops. Under the lowed; to the ill-feelings manifested by the sanction of the British government an army had, indeed, been raised, ostensibly for the ment, and to the assistance which they had service of the shah; and this, as a point of extended to Persia in the operations against decorum, was to be regarded as the chief Herat. instrument by which he was to regain possession of his dominions. The shah's army consisted of a troop of native horse artillery, two arresting the rapid progress of foreign intrigue regiments of cavalry, and five of infantry. Major-General Simpson, of the Bengal army, was appointed to the command of this force, for which a staff and commissariat were duly organized, a military chest established, and acceded to the measures of united resistance satisfactorily provided.

by Kandahar on Kabool. Another force, was called the shazada's army, Timur, the son vailing among the Burakzye chiefs was noticed, of Shoojah, having the nominal command. consisted of about 4,800 men, artillery, in-consequent unfitness to become useful allies fantry, and cavalry, obtained from various to the British government. Notwithstanding sources—British sepoys and adventurers raised this, it was pointed out that so long as they and 43rd regiments of native infantry. The With this force acted the Seik contingent of third, under Brigadier Dennis, comprehended 6,000 men, under General Ventura, one of it proper to publish an exposition of the The Bombay force, under Sir John Keane, reasons which had led to the measure. disputes between Dost Mahomed Khan and Runjeet Singh, and the offer of British mediation; to the attack of the Persians upon Herat, and to the intrigues to extend to the banks of the Indus, and even beyond it, the influence of Persia (for the proclamation was silent as to the arm by which Persia was propelled); to the unsuccessful termination of Captain Burnes's mission, the preference shown by Dost Mahomed Khan to a Persian over a Brithe Anglo-Indian government; to the affront offered by the court of Persia to the British chiefs of Kandahar towards the British govern-In the crisis which had arisen, it was added, that the governor-general had felt the importance of taking immediate measures for and aggression towards the territories under his administration; and this led to the introduction of the name of Shah Shoojah, as "a monarch who, when in power, had cordially to external enmity, which were at that time The whole of the above force was to advance judged necessary by the British government; and who, on his empire being usurped by its assembled in Peshawur, was to advance on present rulers, had found an honourable asylum Kabool by way of the Khyber Pass. This in the British dominions." The disunion pre-It as well as their alleged unpopularity and their for the occasion, partly regular, partly irregular, refrained from proceedings injurious to its lar, and armed with almost every conceivable security, their authority was acknowledged and respected; but, it was observed, that a minister on the part of the government of different policy was now more than justified by the conduct of those chiefs, and was indeed indispensable to the safety of the British dominions. "The welfare of our possessions in the East," continued the governor-general, "requires that we should have on our western frontier an ally who is interested in resisting aggression and establishing tranquillity, in the place of chiefs ranging themselves in subservience to a hostile power, and seeking to promote schemes of conquest and aggrandizement." From these premises it was inferred to be just, politic, and necessary, on the part of the British government, to espouse the cause of Shah Shoojah, "whose popularity," moreover, "throughout Affghanistan" was stated to have "been proved to" the governor-general "by the strong and unanimous testimony of the best authorities." The negotiation with Runjeet Singh, the conclusion of the tripartite treaty, and the effects of that treaty, were "Various points," it was dethen noticed. clared, "have been adjusted which had been the subjects of discussion between the British government and his highness the Maharajah (Runjeet Singh); the identity of whose interests with those of the Honourable Company has now been made apparent to all the surrounding states. A guaranteed independence will, upon favourable conditions, be tendered to the Ameers of Sinde, and the integrity of Herat in the possession of its present ruler will be fully respected; while by the measures completed, or in progress, it may reasonably be hoped that the general freedom and security of commerce will be promoted; that the name and just influence of the British government will gain their proper footing among the nations of central Asia; that tranquillity will be established upon the most important frontier of India, and that a lasting barrier will be raised against hostile intrigue and encroachment." The means by which these objects were to be achieved were then propounded. he relative positions ostensibly assigned to the raw levies of Shah Shoojah, and the fine army by which they were to be accompanied, have been already intimated; the passage in which they were determined ran thus: "His Majesty, Shah Shoojah-ool-Moolk, will enter Affghanistan surrounded by his own troops, and will be supported against foreign interference and factious opposition by a British army. The governor-general confidently hopes that the Shah will be speedily replaced on his throne by his own subjects and adherents; and when once he shall be secured in power, and the independence and integrity of Affghanistan established, the British army will be withdrawn." The declaration concluded with earnest professions of moderation and liberality, and of the desire of the British government to promote the welfare of Affghanistan and of its people without exception. Contemporaneously with the issue of this declaration, Mr. William Hay M Naghten was appointed envoy and that restoration of health which, in an Asiatic

India at the court of Shoojah-ool-Moolk; and political appointments under Mr. M'Naghten were bestowed upon Captain Burnes, Lieutenant D. E. Todd. Lieutenant E. Pottinger, Lieutenant B. Leech, and Mr. P. B. Lord, a medical officer.

The force destined to reseat Shah Shoojah on his throne-or, according to the official version of its duties, to aid the shah's troops in effecting that object—was to be called "the army of the Indus." By the end of November, the whole of the Bengal division was encamped in the neighbourhood of Ferozepore; and here a series of interviews took place between the governor-general and the "Lion of the Punjab," Runjeet Singh. Matters, however, of more importance than processions, exhibitions of dancing-girls, or even show inspections of troops, occupied some portion of the time and thoughts of the governor-general and the commander-in-chief. The Persians had raised the siege of Herat, and the intelligence of this fact led to a change in the amount of preparation for invading Affghanistan from the eastward. Less strength than had been assigned for the object was now deemed sufficient, and orders were issued directing that a part only of the force assembled at Ferozepore should go forwardthat part to consist of the cavalry, one troop of horse artillery, one battery of nine-pounders and the artillery of the park, the sappers and miners, and three brigades of infantry. remainder of the troops were to await further orders at Ferozepore. The selection of the troops to be employed in the expedition against Affghanistan had been made by Sir Henry Fane with reference to the results of his personal inspection. Where all were thus eminently fitted for the destined service, it was difficult to determine what portion should be left behind. The solution was intrusted to chance; lots were cast, and the fortune of marching onward fell to the following portions of the army :-- the first, second, and fourth brigades of infantry, the second troop second brigade of horse artillery, the camel battery of nine-pounders. The disappointment of the remainder was soothed by the most flattering expressions of approbation from the commander-in-chief. A further change affecting this distinguished officer resulted from the receipt of the intelligence respecting Herat. The health of Sir Henry Fane was rapidly failing, the ordinary influence of an Indian climate having accelerated the effects of a long career of active military service. He was about to proceed to Europe when the expedition against Affghanistan was resolved upon; and in taking the command of it, he sacrificed to a sense of duty the gratification of a strong desire for an immediate return to his own country. The change of circumstances had rendered his retirement practicable without discredit, and he availed himself of the opportunity to seek cordingly resolved that the command of the dent. Previously to this event the army of advancing detachment should be assumed by Shah Shoojah had advanced to Shikarpoor, Sir Willoughby Cotton; and that, on the whence a detachment was despatched to take junction of the Bombay division, the chief possession of Larkana, a place of some imcommand should devolve on Sir John Keane.

Early in December the army of Shah Shoojah moved from Ferozepore, the privilege of precedence being thus given to the force which, according to official statement, was to be the principal arm by which the conquest of Affghanistan was to be effected. The Bengal division of the British army marched a few days afterwards.

On the 16th of January the shah's army arrived on the banks of the Indus, followed after a very short interval by the Bengal The march of the British force was column. performed with little loss except of camels; great numbers of these useful animals having been attacked by disease, attributed to change of forage combined with fatigue. The shah's army was equally fortunate, with the exception of some desertions: a very brief experience of the habits of a soldier's life being found in many instances sufficient to satisfy the curiosity of the newly enlisted warriors of which that army was composed. The shah's army crossed the river in boats; and though but few craft could be obtained for the service, the passage, through the good management of the officers superintending it, was effected in less than seven days. The British force was to take possession of Bukkur under a convention concluded by Captain Burnes with the ameer; but some delay took place, partly in consequence of the non-arrival of the ratification of the convention by the governorgeneral, partly from the habits of systematic evasion common to Eastern princes. The keys were at length obtained, but deceit was yet apprehended; and in the prow of one of the vessels conveying the party about to take possession was placed a quantity of powder little of active friendship. The Ameers of deemed sufficient to blow in the great gate. It was, however, not required; neither resistance nor further evasion was attempted. and the British force marched into Bukkur as calmly as they would have performed an ordinary evolution on parade.

The advance of the Bengal column towards the point where it was intended to act was here arrested by intelligence relative to the and that great difficulty was found in arrangsituation of the Bombay force, and the course ing them. The existence of these differences of the negotiations in Sinde conducted by had occasioned the Bengal army to deviate Captain Pottinger. This intelligence appeared to render it expedient that the march of the column should be turned towards Hydrabad which was effected occasioned its return. The in Lower Sinde, and it accordingly moved in that direction; but its progress was checked by further information intimating that a sion which terminated a series of proceedings change of circumstances had rendered its approach towards Hydrabad unnecessary. approached. The Bombay army advanced the column accordingly returned to Bukkur, through Sinde; and on the 4th of March was where preparations had been made for crossing the Indus. This was effected by a bridge of "army of the Indus." boats, over which the troops, baggage, baxies, climate, he could not hope for. It was ac- and cattle were passed without a single acciportance, being a great mart for rice, and also the depôt for the artillery of the ameers of Sinde,

On the 20th of February the head of the Bengal column was at Shikarpoor. this time the army distinguished as that of Shah Shoojah maintained the place to which it was entitled in virtue of being considered the principal force by which the exiled king was to assert his title to reign in Affghanistan,-it had taken the lead, being followed at a convenient distance by the Bengal force, regarded as an auxiliary. Subsequently, however, the order of march was changed-the British troops led, the shah's army followed. On the 10th of March the head-quarters were at Dadur, a town situate near the entrance to the Bolan Pass; through this the column marched to Quetta, where it arrived on the 26th.

It will now be convenient to revert to the Bombay force, the composition of which has already been detailed. The facilities afforded by the opportunity of water transport were resorted to, and the force sailed from Bombay in November, 1838, and its disembarkation was effected in the vicinity of Vikkur, in the same month. The ameers of Sinde were to have made preparations for providing camels and supplies, but they had made none. In consequence the army was detained at Vikkur until the 24th of December, when it commenced its march for Tatta, at which place Sir John Keane arrived on the 28th. Here the army was further detained for a considerable period.

Nominally in the territory of a friendly power, the British force in Sinde experienced Sinde had always manifested great disinclination to the formation of any intimate connection with the British government; but as a more fitting opportunity will occur for inquiring into the questions at issue between the parties, attention will not in this place be distracted from the main purpose of the narrative. will suffice to state, that differences existed, from their direct route for the purpose of approaching Hydrabad, and the accommodation dread created by the vicinity of two British armies undoubtedly led to the pacific conclusion which terminated a series of proceedings

Previously to this, a reserve from

Brigadier Valiant had been despatched from occupation but plunder. These persons pur-Bombay to Sinde; it was composed of her sued their trade up to the very verge of the Majesty's 40th foot, a body of native infantry encampments of the British force, and, though about two thousand two hundred strong, con-the punishment of death was in some cases sisting of the 2nd grenadiers and the 22nd summarily inflicted, no effect seems thereby to and 26th Bombay regiments, a detail of pioneers, and a detachment of artillery. At the desire of Colonel Pottinger, Sir Frederick that any should be produced—they would Maitland, the naval commander-in-chief in regard the loss of life as an accident common India, proceeded to Kurrachee in her Majesty's | to their profession—a contingency inseparable ship Wellesley, having on board the 40th and from the exercise of it, the detachment of artillery. He arrived at that place on the evening of the 1st of Febru-traversed in succession ary, and was there joined by the Berenice on the 20th of April the head-quarters were steamer and the Euphrates, having on board the 2nd grenadiers native infantry. The fort was summoned, and a quarter of an hour allowed to the commandant to decide his Upon his declining to surrender, five companies of the 40th were landed, and a position taken up by them in the rear of the fortress. The broadside of the Wellesley was brought to bear on the opposite face at a distance of eight or nine hundred yards, and these preparations having been made, a second summons was sent to the commandant. second refusal followed, and the discharge of a gun from the fortress announced, apparently, the intention of those within to make a defence. The fire of the Wellesley was immediately opened, and with such effect, that in less than an hour the entire face against which it was directed was a heap of ruins. The troops who had been landed then entered the breach and took possession of the fort without resistance. It turned out that the garrison consisted of only twenty men, and these had fled, seeking shelter under the cliffs on the opposite side to that at which the British party entered; they were all made pri-The fort being occupied, the authorities of the town were required to give up military possession of it to the British, and with this demand they thought it prudent to comply without any delay. The capture of Kurrachee took place on the 2nd of February, at which time the final course of the Ameers was altogether matter of doubt, and it had certainly some effect in aiding the negotiations in progress at Hydrabad.

The Bombay column of the "army of the Indus" pursued its march to Dadur, and eventually took the same route to Affghanistan that had been pursued by the Bengal force. On the 16th of April, Sir John Keane, commander-in-chief, established his head-quarters at Quetta, with the advance column—that of Bengal—the Bombay column being several sition of the Afighans in the field! How marches in the rear. The advance of neither often did our officers long for a battle to raise column was marked by events worthy of being dwelt upon. Both portions of the army suf- feel that he was not labouring and suffering in fered great privations for want of adequate vain." supplies; both were subjected to great inconveniences from the deficiency of beasts of may be formed from the recital of a few facts.

The dangerous and difficult Kojuk pass was traversed in succession by the two columns, and at Kandahar. The Bombay column arrived at that place on the 7th of May. was occupied without opposition, the sirdars having taken alarm and fled. On the 8th Shah Shoojah was solemnly enthroned. united British army of Bengal and Bombay was drawn up in line in front of the city, to the extent of seven thousand five hundred men. A platform was erected to answer the purpose of a musnud, to which the shah proceeded on horseback, through a line of troops of his own contingent. On his approaching the British lines a salute of twentyone guns was fired, and on his passing down the line there was a general salute, accompanied by the lowering of colours in honour of his majesty. On his ascending the throne a salvo was discharged from a hundred and one pieces of artillery. Sir John Keane and the other principal authorities then offered nuzzurs; care being taken that the number of coins presented should in every case be an uneven one, this circumstance being an omen of good luck. Finally, the "army of the Indus" marched round in review order in front of the throne, and thus the ceremony concluded.

The march to Kandahar was a great military triumph, though no enemy, deserving the name, had been encountered, but it was attended by great suffering and great loss. "It must be confessed," says Captain Havelock, "that bitherto our task has been escorting, not campaigning, but this pacific duty has been performed under arduous circumstances; and the exposure to the vicissitudes of climate, the fatigue, and the deficiency of food and water, which tried the strength and resolution of our troops between Quetta and Kandahar, as well as the active hostility of the predatory tribes, ought never to be despised as military difficulties. How gladly would our army have exchanged them for the most determined opposition of the Affghans in the field! the sinking spirits of the soldier and make him

Some conception of the privations endured burden; both were continually annoyed by When the Bengal column reached Kandahar, robbers—a large portion of the population the troops, European and native camp folamong which they were moving having no lowers, and mustered establishments, had been made to the natives, both combatant and noncombatant, but there was rearcely an opportunity of expending them, for provisions were not to be procured. The sufferings of the army for want of water were still less endurable. Referring to a part of the period during which the Bengal column were subjected to the above severo privations in regard to food, Captain Havelock says, "The plain on which our camp is now pitched is not, like the level of Siriab, watered by deep and wellsupplied kahreezes (subterranean aqueducts), carrying coolness and the promise of fertility down their slopes. A small cut through which we found water, flowing from a spring-head in the mountains, has alone supplied us with the useful element since first we advanced to this This little channel, the Kandahar sirdars have caused to be dammed up near its source in the hills, and behold two bold brigades and the levy of the shah reduced to the greatest straits. Horses, already half-starved for want of grain and good grass, were throughout the day panting in all the agonies of thirst; and in the evening a few drops of water could not be obtained even to mix the medicines of the sick in our hospitals, or to supply them with the refreshment and comfort of a few spoonfuls of tea. All ranks have been taught to understand to-day, how little prized when plentiful, how outrageously demanded when scarce, is that bounteous provision for the wants of God's creatures, water! Weary of the delays which had kept us so long | at Dundi Goolace, we moved forward on the 21st April into the plains which we had surveyed from the summit of the Kojuk Pass, recognizing all the distinctive peaks of the scattered hills which we had observed from that commanding height. We saw them now magnified as we approached them, and casting a dark shade over the plains which they overhung. Anxious looks were from time to time cast towards these green eminences, and their bases were carefully searched for any small streams which might supply the urgent wants of a thirsting force." The search, it appears, was vain, and Captain Havelock thus continues :-"It was not very pleasant to discover that this day, too, we must depend for a supply though proper regulations were promptly established, one-half of the force had not been man or beast breaking forth from the restraints watered before the scarcity commenced. Soon of a two days' unwilling abstinence?" diluted mud alone could be obtained, and These sufferings were endured by

for periods varying from twenty-eight to forty-the waters of a spring, actually discovered in eight days on diminished rations. Money the hills, being brought down to their relief allowances to meet the deficiency had been into the plains; but up to the hour of early march no stream had begun to flow into the dry bed of a nullah, on which many wero gazing in hope. The sufferings of the soldiers, both European and native, were for some hours so great as nearly to tempt some for a moment to forget the restraints of discipline; and never do its principles achieve a greater triumph than when troops are seen obedient and respectful, and trying to be cheerful, under this form of privation. At Killa Puttoollah, officers of the highest rank were brought to acknowledge the value of this simple element. This was no time for the luxurious ablutions which, under the sun of Central Asia, preserve health and restore strength; no time to waste a single drop of the precious fluid on any bodily comfort, or for any purpose but pre-paring food or slaking a raging thirst; and thousands felt this day that all the gifts of that God, whose public praise and ordinances were forgotten on this sabbath of unwilling penance, would have been worthless to man, if in his anger he had withheld the often despised blessing of water. The kindness and consideration with which some officers of no low rank shared the little portion of the much coveted fluid which they could obtain with the privates around them, was creditable to their humanity, and ought to have won the confidence and affections of those whom they commanded." On the following day, the column, after marching ten miles, was compelled to proceed further, from an apprehension of the want of water. Captain Havelock thus describes its progress:-"Forward the brigade moved, to finish a second march of ten miles, their horses dropping from drought and exhaustion as they toiled on, and leaving in the mountain passes melancholy traces of this day's sufferings and perseverance. When the cavalry had thus got over five miles, in the course of which British dragoons and native troopers were seen eagerly sharing with their chargers muddy and feetid water drawn from puddles at the side of the road, the very sight of which would, in Hindostan, have equally sickened all to whom it was offered; they struck into a by-road on their left, and winding their way by a narrow path through an opening in the undulating eminences, found of the indispensable element on the stream of themselves towards evening on the banks of a a small and imperfect kahreez. Its water was plentiful stream. The rush of unbridled inbrackish, and flowed scantily and sluggishly. | dulgence of the troops and their horses into its Thousands of brass lotas and leathern buckets waters, after all the privations of the morning, were soon dipped into the little channel; and may fairly be described as uncontrollable. What moderation was to be expected from

These sufferings were endured by men, not whole regiments, under a burning sun, with fresh from a state of repose or of ordinary parched lips, sighed for night to cool them, exertion, but worn with the fatigues of a and then for morning, that they might move march of many hundred miles, parts of which on to a happier spot. The troops were buoyed lay through tracts of great difficulty. They up towards evening with fallacious hopes of had been subjected, also, to fatigues for each cooling the ordinary measure of military with the transaction; for while the thick labour, in proof of which, the march through returned the book, they did not feel the the Kojuk pass may be referred to. Through inspectity of noting in the rame manner with a portion of this defile, the battery and field regard to the money. The latter they kept, train of the army had to be drayged up and though they refused the pledge which it was lowered down by human agency, the situation intended to purchase, rendering impracticable the employment of Prom Eandalar a detachment was sent to beasts for the purpose. The duty was contake possession of Giriskh, a feat on the Helesquently performed by parties of European mund, situate about reventy-five miles distant, infantry. When to the pressure of consuming The duty was performed without any difficulty hunger, maddening thirst, and the most expect that opposed by the river, which at that hausting fatigue, is added the irritating annoyment of the year, is deep and rapid. It was not of constant alarm and frequent attacks crussed by means of rafts composed of repty from hordes of cowardly robbers, it will be cake, and the fort basing been exacuted by obvious that the march of the British force, the lexities were too. obvious that the march of the British force, the Lordin authorities, the British party had obvious that the march of the littles is the lost of authorities, the littles party and though unmarked by any conflict descring nothing to do but to place Shah Sheejah's the name of an action, made a far reverer garrison in possession. This was accomplisted, domand upon the spirits and soldierly qualities, and the party returned to Kardales after a of those by whom it was performed, than many very brief absence. The British army was a brilliant campaign, the events of which glow detained there, chiefly by the difficulty of in the page of the historian, and are embalmed procuring supplies, till the 27th of June : on in traditional recollections. The tack was not that day an event occurred which, though not necomplished without great facilities. The known to Shah Shoojah or his allies till some loss of beasts, especially, was enormous. Use necks afterwards, might have altogether ful and valuable laggage was in some cases changed the aspect of affairs in Affabanistan, abandoned from the deficiency of camels for This was the death of the Seik ruler, Runjert its transport; these patient and enduring Singh. His army was at that time employed animals having perished in incredible numbers. In Perhawur, in support of the objects of the Tho loss of horses was unusually great. The tripartite treaty. His death, whenever it The loss of horses was unusually great. The tripartite treaty. His death, whenever it Bengal army lost not fewer than three hundred might occur, was expected to lead to much and fifty—nearly one-seventh of the entire change and great confusion; and it was to be number employed. The Bombay column was apprehended that, happening at so critical a standing, was considerable.

At Kandahar the army enjoyed a brief barrassing position. Of the imminence of the interval of comparative reet; but beyond this, danger they were, however, ignorant, though little cessation of its difficulties was expectit was known that the "Lion of the Punjab" rienced. Provisions still continued scarce, and was seriously ill. robberies were as frequent as before. Some -actually to provide all necessaries; to do followers to march on half rations. which, in most cases, without such aid, would which, in most cases, without such aid, would have been neither within the power nor consonant to the will of the parties to whom the army, on the 20th of July, at Nannec, situated ten miles from Ghuznec, appeal was made. In conformity with this like custom, Shah Shoojah sent ten thousand of the latter place, which proved a fortress of rupees to the Ghiljie chiefs, in the hope of inducing them to join him. The aid, in accordance with established precedent, was actually a copy of the Koran, on which marched from Nannec early on the morning the chiefs were expected to swear allogings of the 21st in three columns. On the advance the chiefs were expected to swear allegiance of the 21st in three columns. On the advance to the shah; and this ceremony, combined arriving within a short distance of the fortress, with the retention by them of the book, would it was perceived that preparations were made rather more fortunate, but the loss, notwith-period, the event might have placed Shah standing, was considerable. Sheojah and his British ally in a most em-

The march towards Knlool was commenced reasons for doubting the alleged popularity of under circumstances not the most auspicious. Shah Shoojah had by this time begun to A large convey of grain furnished by the manifest themselves. No alacrity was shown Lohani merchants had been brought in safely, in joining his standard, though he was now and this would have enabled the army to by virtue of the British arms in possession of march with full rations; but the Lohanis one of the chief cities of Afighanistan, and was refused to accompany the army, and no means about to march upon the other with the best for the conveyance of the grain could be prospects of success. It was the custom of obtained. The consequence was, that this the princes of Affghanistan, when they resupply—for the arrival of which the troops quired the services of a clan, to send a supply had been for some time detained—was obliged of money, ostensibly for "shoeing the horses" to be left in Kandahar, and the troops and Little occurred worthy of notice until the have been a pledge of adherence to the royal for stopping its progress. The men engaged cause. This pledge, however, the Shah was in this work were, however, soon drawn from not destined to receive, nor was the withholding it the only disappointment connected British horse artillery guns being brought up, a fire was commenced on the fort, with shrap-approaching as near as it was practicable to nells and shot, at the distance of about seven find cover. The garrison were aware of these hundred yards. This movement appears to proceedings, and kept up a hot fire on the have been introduced for no other object but officers whenever they were obliged to show to ascertain the extent and power of the themselves. The fortifications were ascerenemy's fire, which was forthwith opened, and tained to be of about equal strength in every caused some casualties among the British part. There were several gates, but all extroops before they were withdrawn from its cepting one, called the Kabool gate, because reach.

The appearance of Ghuznee seems to have unpleasantly surprised those who were to direct the force of the British arms against it. It had been represented as very weak, and as completely commanded from the adjacent hills. Further, those who professed to have a deep knowledge of the most secret springs of action among the Affghans, reiterated the most positive assurances that neither Kabool nor Ghuznee would be defended, and there assurances reem to have received implicit belief. In consequence, a small battering train, which had been dragged at an enormous cost several hundred miles to Kandahar, was left there, it being very desirable, on account of the was a report to the commander-in-chief, "that rearcity of cattle, to reduce as far as practicable if he decided on the immediate attack of the demand for their labour. The impressions, however, afforded by the aspect of Ghuznee and the only one which held out a prospect did not correspond with those derived from the reports received at Kandahar. were very much surprised," says the chief engineer of the army of the Indus, Captain Thomson, "to find a high rampart in good repair, built on a scarped mound about thirtyfive feet high, flanked by numerous towers, and surrounded by a fausse braye and a wet ditch. The irregular figure of the enceinte gave a good flanking fire, whilst the height of the citadel covered the interior from the commanding fire of the hills to the north, rendering it nugatory. In addition to this, the towers at the angles had been enlarged; screen walls had been built before the gates; the ditch cleared out and filled with water (stated to be unfordable), and an outwork built on the right bank of the river, so as to command the bed of it." Such was the impression made by the first near view of the fortress of Ghuznee. "The works," Captain Thomson adds, "were evidently much stronger than we had been led to anticipate, and such as our army could not venture to attack in a regular manner with the means at our disposal. We had no battering train, and to attack Ghuznee in form a much larger train would be required than the army over possessed. The great height of the parapet above the plain (sixty or seventy feet), with the wet ditch, were insurmountable obstacles to an attack merely by mining or escalading."

A nephew of Dost Mahomed Khan had British force as it approached the place, and sentenced for some hours to hunger and a he afforded some information highly valuable bivouac. Shots were occasionally fired from to those who proposed to attack it. The the fortress, but they produced no damage, knowledge thus acquired was improved by a and seemed to have no object but that of careful and minute reconnaissance. The engi-showing to those without the fortress that opening on the face of the fortress in the direction of that city, had, it was reported, been closed by the erection of walls across them. This gate was deemed by the engineer officers the only eligible point for attack; the advantages which it presented were thus stated by Captain Thomson :- "The road up to the gate was clear-the bridge over the ditch was unbroken-there were good positions for the artillery within three hundred and fifty yards of the walls on both sides of the road, and we had information that the gateway was not built up, a reinforcement from Kabool being expected." The result of the observation of the engineers, therefore, Ghuznee, the only feasible mode of attack, of success, was a dash at the Kabool gateway, "We blowing the gate open by bags of powder."

The army, on arriving before Ghuznee, had encamped on the southern side of the fortress. The report of the engineers, and the determination of the commander-in-chief to act upon its suggestions, rendered a change of position necessary, and the force had not been encamped above three hours when it received orders again to march. It moved from the ground first taken up, in the afternoon, in two columns. The march was rendered somewhat circuitous by the necessity of keeping beyond the range of the guns of the fortress. troops were wearied by the march of the morning, and there were some difficulties to he overcome, among them the passage of the river Logur, as well as several small watercourses; a lofty range of heights, lying to the north-west of the place and opposite to the guns of the citadel, lay in the route of one column; the ascent was attended with great labour, and some peril—and this accomplished, the descent was scarcely less laborious and dangerous. When the regiments of the first division had surmounted all these difficulties, and arrived at their ground, which was not until long after nightfall, the baggage and camp followers were still far in the rear, and the troops were, consequently, obliged to pass the interval which yet remained before the light of morning could be expected, in a state of famishing and shivering destitution. quitted Ghuznee, and taken refuge with the had neither tents nor rations, and were thus neers, with an escort, went round the works, those within were awake. Lights were dis-

be answered by the kindling of fires in the the explosion party were preparing themselves surrounding country. Conjecture on the for the assault, which it was anticipated would meaning of these righals offered food for put the British force in procession of the place, modifiction to the weary but sheepless occur. The party consisted of Captain Peat, of the pants of the British lines.

comfortless night is thus depicted by one of and eighteen men of the sappers. The charge themselves:—"It was known that Mahomed ordinarily recommended to be employed for Ufzul Khan, another son of the Ameer of blowing open gates is sixty to one hundred and Kabool, had marched down from the capital twenty pounds of powder, but as it was approximately the capital twenty pounds of powder, but as it was approximately the capital twenty pounds of powder, but as it was approximately the capital twenty pounds of powder, but as it was approximately capital twenty pounds of powder, but as it was approximately capital transfer of the capital transfe with the view of deblockading Ghuzuce, and bended that the enemy might have taken alarm was now close to us. The forces of the Ghil- at the approach of the British army to that side jies, Abdoolruhman and Gool Moohummud, of the place on which the Kabeel gate was were in the field at no great distance. A situated, and might thereupon have strengthparty, also, of fanatics from the Soluman lened the gate, the charge was increased to Kheils, who had taken arms when a religious three hundred pounds. The movements of war had, as a last resource, been proclaimed the explosion party were discerned from the by the tottering Barukzyes, new occupied the ramparts, but the enemy did not penetrate heights to the castward of the valley in which their precise object. Blue lights were thrown the fortress stands. Reflections on these circup to afford them a better opportunity of cumstances and on our want of a battering lacertaining what was in progress, but being train, the glimmering of the lights on the hose burned from the top of the parapet instead of tile battlements and in the plains, and the being thrown lute the passage below, they chill of the night air, effectually chased away afforded little assistance to these who emslumber until day broke on the 22nd."

was to rescue the baggage, camp followers, been impossible to place the powder. As it and sick, from the various points to which was, the besieged were content with firing they had been led in the bewilderment of a from loop-holes upon the explosion party, and night march over unknown ground, and to those by which they were protected, and these bring them to the place selected for encamp-random operations produced little effect. The ment. It was mid-day before the whole of powder accordingly was placed, the hose laid, the laggage reached the camp. The com- and the train fired. The gate was instantly mander-in-chief and the engineers made blown away, together with a considerable part another reconnaissance on this day, and the of the roof of the square building in which it result of their observations tended to confirm was placed. Captain Peat was struck down the resolutions previously taken. The day and stunned, but recovering almost immewas enlivened by the descent from the hills of diately, had the gratification of finding that some fauntical opponents of Shah Shoojah, the operation of which he had been the acting with the intention of attacking his camp, conductor had entirely succeeded. The bat-They were charged by the shah's cavalry, and teries poured their fire into the works, and driven back. Captain Outram, at the head of the bugle sounded for the assaulting column to a party of the shah's infantry, followed them push on. It was commanded by Brigadier into their fastnesses, and succeeded in cap-Sale, and consisted of her Majesty's 2nd, turing many prisoners, and even the hely ban- Major Carruthers; 13th, Major Fraser; 17th, had been brought together.

The requisite orders for the attack on Ghuzants from the noise with which they were below.

played from the citadel, and these seemed to answered from the fortress. In the mean time, unts of the British lines.

The situation of the besiegers through this M'Clevel, Bengal engineers; three sergeants, played them. Had they been thrown over, it The first employment of the welcome dawn would, in the opinion of Captain Peat, have ner of green and white, under which the horde Lieutenant-Colonel Croker; and the Bengal European regiment, Lieutenant-Colonel Orchard. The advance, under Lieutenant-Colonel nee were circulated among the commanding offi- | Dennie, entered the gatoway, followed by the cers in the evening, and so much of them com- remainder of the column. A series of despemunicated to the troops as was necessary to rate struggles took place within the gateway enable them to perform what was required. and town, and several officers, amongst whom The various parties of the British force des- was Brigadier Sale, were wounded. As soon tined to take part in the attack were in posi- as the storming party had well entered the tion before daylight. The night was stormy, centre square, the enemy made a general rush, and loud gusts of wind tended to deprive the some for the citadel, some for the houses, from besieged of the opportunity of becoming ac- which those who gained possession of them quainted with the movements of their assail- kept up an annoying fire on the British force To the attack of the citadel her inevitably attended. Within the fort a dead Majesty's 13th and 17th regiments moved, calm prevailed, not a shot was fired, and some the latter leading. This was the residence of suspicion was entertained that the place had the governor. There, the female members of the principal families had been collected, and When all were in position, the attention of there, too, was the magazine and granary. A the enemy was partially diverted by a false strong resistance was expected, but none was attack. The British batteries oponed, and were offered. The 17th, on arriving at the gates, forced its way in, followed-closely by the 13th; Ghuznee does not appear susceptible of being and, while those below were watching for the estimated with any reasonable confidence of apeffects of the heavy fire which it was antici-proaching accuracy; but it was undoubtedly pated would be poured on the assailants, the great. feeling of anxiety was suddenly exchanged for small, amounting only to one hundred and that of gratified astonishment, by the display of the colours of the two regiments on the top of the upper fort. The garrison had aban-doned their guns and fled in all directions, casting themselves down, in some instances, from immense heights, in the hope of effecting The firing from the houses was their escape. kept up for some time after the capture of the Some fanatical Affghans, who had succeeded in picking off men from the parties employed in clearing the streets, obstinately refused quarter, and when escape was impossible, voluntarily rushed on death, consoled by reflecting that they died fighting the battle of the faith, and with the well-aimed shots which had sent so many infidels to their eternal home The reserve, under yet ringing in their ears. Sir Willoughby Cotton, which had entered immediately after the storming-party, succeeded in clearing many of the houses which had afforded shelter to combatants of this de-

Hyder Khan, the governor, had been led by the false attack away from the point where the real danger lay. On learning that the British troops were entering from an opposite direction, he rode back, but it was only to find that all was lost. He succeeded in reaching the citadel, though not without being exposed to some peril: a bayonet passed through the waistband of his dress, and his horse rearing, he was in danger of falling, the result of which would have been instant death; but he recovered himself, and finally surrendered to two officers of the Bengal army.

"In sieges and stormings," observed Sir John Keane, in a general order issued after the capture of Ghuznee, "it does not fall to the lot of cavalry to bear the same conspicuous part as the two other arms of the profession." On this occasion, indeed, the employment of the cavalry, in the only duty for which it was fitted, was delayed by the apprehension of an attack on the British camp, or on the rear of the storming party. It was thought that Dost | John Keane. Mahomed Khan might march to the relief of Ghuznee, and one of his sons, Meer Ufzul Khan, with a force of five thousand horse, was actually in the immediate neighbourhood. appears that he heard the firing, and waited only for daylight to learn the state of affairs in Daylight came, and by its aid the British flag was seen waving on the summit of gress was the fort of Ali Musjid. Possession the fortress. Meer Ufzul Khan, thereupon, made his way back to Kabool with all speed, abandoning his elephants and the whole of his hills which commanded the fort, the garrison Affighan commander to withdraw, showed to at the expense of about a hundred and eighty the British general that no reason existed for killed and wounded. The loss of the enemy fugitives.

That of the British was comparatively ninety-one officers and men killed, wounded, and missing. In the first class, that of killed. not a single officer was included, but several were desperately wounded. Among those who suffered most were Major Warren, of the 1st Bengal European regiment, and Lieutenant Hazlewood, of the same.

A few days of repose followed the storming of Ghuznee, and during the interval Nawaub Jubbur Khan, brother of Dost Mahomed, arrived at the British camp with an overture for accommodation. The proposal was, that Shooiah should be acknowledged as the sovereign, but that Dost Mahomed should be his The answer on the part of the allies vizier. was, that Dost Mahomed would be provided for, but that he could not be retained in Affghanistan as vizier, nor be permitted to reside there at all, but must proceed to India. To this condition it was replied, that Dost Mahomed would not on any terms consent, and the negotiation ended.

On the 30th of July the army began to move towards Kabool. On its approach Dost Mahomed, like his brothers at Kandahar, fled, and on the 7th of August, the shah, under the protection of the British force, made his public entry into his capital. It was graced by all the marks of honour which the British authorities could offer, and was deficient in nothing but the congratulations of the people over whom the restored king was to reign. however appeared to have felt himself secure, either in the affections of his subjects or the strength of his allies, and he proceeded to exercise one of the functions of royalty in European fashion, by instituting an order of knighthood, framed on the model of the British Order of the Bath. To the honour of this institution the officers of the "army of the Indus" were to be liberally admitted, as well as a few distinguished civil functionaries, the latter being selected by Mr. Macnaghten, envoy and minister, and the former by Sir

On the 3rd of September the force under Colonel Wade arrived at Kabool. moved from Peshawur in May, on Colonel Wade receiving intelligence of the march of the British army from Kandahar for Ghuznee and Kabool. It proceeded through the Khyber pass, where the chief obstacle to its proof this was obstinately contested for a time; but the advancing force having occupied some The same light which warned the abandoned it. This acquisition was purchased restraining his cavalry from pursuing the is believed to have been of less amount. such a warfare," says Major Hough, The loss of the enemy in the operations of enemy, from a perfect knowledge of every nook and corner, and every rock near their ment, had employed all the means and influposition, would lose less than the attacking ence at his disposal in counteracting their party." The defence of Ali Musjid being views and impeding the progress of their provided for, Colonel Wade pursued his course arms. Of the acts of plunder and outrage by to Jelalabad, of which he took possession, and which the advancing army was inconvenienced, then, without encountering further opposition, Mehrab Khan was a prime instigator; and to Kabool.

About the time of the arrival of the sha- great, his power of inciting to mischief made zada's army at Kabool, those by whom the a fearful addition to the difficulties with which shah had been restored to his throne were that army had to contend. His offences had warned that though this object was achieved, been passed over till the establishment of they were yet practically in an enemy's Shah Shoojah in Kabool, partly, as it seems, country. Lieutenant-Colonel Henry, of the from a hope of making him instrumental to country. Lieutenant-Colonel Henry, of the from a hope of making him instrumental to 37th Bengal native infantry, was marching in charge of a treasure convoy from Kandahar to Kabool; on arriving at a place called unsubclued, it was resolved to visit his crimes Hyder Kheil, about thirty-five miles beyond Ghuznee, he strolled up some hills in the vicinity of his encampment, accompanied by The task of effecting this change was assigned two other officers, and followed at some distance by an orderly havilder and two senors. tance by an orderly havildar and two sepoys. at Quetta, marched in the direction of Kelat The officers, who, with singular imprudence, with a brigade composed of two queen's had wandered forth unarmed, were suddenly regiments and one of native infantry, two attacked by a party of a freebooting tribe called guns of the Bombay horse artillery, four of Kojuks; they retreated towards their camp, the shah's, and a detail of engineers. On which two of them succeeded in reaching, but approaching Kelat the brigade was attacked. Colonel Henry fell mortally wounded. The by a body of horse, and skirmishing continued havildar and sepoys were not slow in advan-till the British force arrived in sight of the cing to protect their commander, but the place. It then appeared that three heights numbers opposed to them rendered their on the north-west face of the fort were covered services of no avail, and the havildar was with infantry, with five guns in position, proreverely wounded. the party of Kojuks were attacked by a force chief engineer, reported that nothing could be under Major Maclaren, the British commander expected till possession of these heights had at Ghuznee, at Kolalo, a village about thirtytwo miles distant from that place. The freebooters were found posted at the base of some rocky heights, up which they fled after receiving the fire of the British party. They 2nd, Lieutenant-Colonel Croker, of the queen's were pursued, and though they made an 17th, and Major Wilson, of the 31st Bengal obstinate resistance-making the best use of light infantry, the whole under the command the vantage ground, and plying their matchlocks with great assiduity and perseverancethe whole force were either killed or made gadier Stephenson having opened fire on the prisoners. The spoil afforded ample evidence of the activity and success with which the cover and commenced ascending. Before they vanquished Kojuks carried on their preda-reached the summits the enemy had yielded tory occupation at the expense of the British to the fire of the artillery and fled; having

Notwithstanding this and many other indications of the general prevalence of hostile possible that an entry might be gained by feelings, it was deemed safe to withdraw from closely following the fugitives from the Affghanistan the larger part of the force heights, General Willshire directed a rush which had seated Shah Shoojah on its throne. for the purpose, but the attempt was defeated, A part of the Bengal force was to remain the gate being closed before the assailants under the command of General Nott and could reach it. Four companies which had Colonel Sale; the remainder, with the com- been detached under Major Pennycuick, of her mander-in-chief, were to march homeward, Majesty's 17th, to occupy some gardens in and the whole of the Bombay column were the vicinity of the place, were now brought to take the same course. The march of the up and dispersed wherever shelter could be latter was soon distinguished by an important found, to await the result of the operations of achievement undertaken to avenge a series of the artillery. These were directed towards injuries committed several months before.

his influence over the predatory tribes being Some weeks afterwards tected by small parapet walls. Captain Pew, changed hands. Major-General Willshire immediately determined on storming them. Three columns of attack were formed, commanded respectively by Major Carruthers, of the queen's of Brigadier Baumgardt. A hill was allotted to each column, and the artillery under Brienemy, the troops moved forward under its made an effort to carry off their guns, in which, however, they failed. Conceiving it opening a way for them. Two guns from the During the advance of the army of the heights opened fire against the defences Indus, in the spring, Mehrab Khan, the ruler above the gate, two others were turned of Kelat, a Beloochee state, while professing against the gate itself; the remaining two friendly feelings towards the British govern- were sent round by the road leading up to the gate, to aid in its demolition. of the last two was not commenced till within two hundred yards of the object at which it was directed; and after a few rounds, one-half of the gate was knocked in. This being per-ceived by General Willshire, he rode forward, pointing to the gate, thereby intimating that it was open—a signal no sooner perceived than obeyed by the prompt rush of the troops from their cover to the breach. The companies under Major Pennycuick, being the nearest to the gate, were first in; they were closely followed by the storming columns, the whole entering under a heavy fire from the works and the interior; the enemy making a most obstinate resistance and disputing every inch of ground.

A company of her Majesty's 17th regiment was now detached with a body of native infantry to secure the heights near which the southern angle of the fortress is situated, and intercept the escape of the garrison from that The heights were rapidly carried, and the united detachment then rushed on to the gate on that side, driving a party of the enemy before them, who succeeded in closing the gate, but had not time to secure it. It was, therefore, speedily burst open, and a second entrance thus effected. The party by whom this had been performed were here joined by two companies from the reserve of the 17th, and two of the shah's guns which had proceeded by another route. The guns were intended to blow open the gate, but that operation being unnecessary, they were immediately placed in position to bear on the citadel, which still remained in possession of the enemy. infantry party uniting with those who had As soon as the attack commenced, they ran, carried the gate, the whole proceeded through the town towards the still resisting citadel. An entrance therein was at length found, but the conflict did not terminate with the capture of the gate. The enemy continued to fight with desperate valour, and resistance was protracted long after it could be available in a good defence, and drove off the enemy. regard to the possession of the place. numbers of the enemy were destroyed; and by Lieutenant Mackeson, but immediately among the slain was Mehrab Khan, whose afterwards broken by the Khyberees, by an death was far more creditable than had been attack made upon a detachment marching He fell at the head of his people, sword in hand; he had lived a robber, but he Wheeler, of the Bengal native infantry. died as a soldier; and though the issue of the This attack was characterized by great treacombat, in which he was laid low, transferred his stronghold into the hands of strangers, it tions of friendly feelings up to the moment must, in justice, be admitted, that it was not of commencing it. The British troops beingloriously maintained. The British standard waved in triumph over the loftiest towers the manner in which the bayonet was used of Kelat, but it was not planted there without by some sepoys of the 37th native infantry, a struggle, which conferred honour on those who resisted, as well as on those who aided its elevation.

the garrison were killed. Several hundred personal interference of Mr. Macragi prisoners were taken; a few of those, deemed likely to be dangerous if at large, being retained in confinement, and the remainder liberated. The loss on the side of the British fitting opportunity for notices are taken; a few of those, deemed A general order, dated the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the loss of the British fitting opportunity for notices are taken; a few of those, deemed 1840, announced the breaking of the loss of the British fitting opportunity for notices are taken; a few of those, deemed 1840, announced the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the breaking of the 2nd of James 1840, announced the 2nd of James 1840, an

The fire | was heavy, especially so with reference to the fact that a considerable portion of General Willshire's force was not engaged, and to the shortness of the contest; not quite an hour having elapsed from the formation of the columns for attack to the period when the troops were within the fort. Thirty-two officers and men were killed, and a hundred and seven wounded.

That part of the British army which was returning under Sir John Keane met with little that would afford interest in the recital, though its difficulties, from the loss of camels and similar disasters, were scarcely inferior to those which attended its advance. tribes, moreover, who dwell in the vicinity of the Khyber Pass, caused some annoyance. These men had long been accustomed to sell their forbearance for money. They had been subsidized both by the Dooranee princes and by Dost Mahomed Khan, and they were to have been subsidized by Shah Shoojah. Some misapprehension and delay, however, arose; and a meeting which was meditated between Colonel Wade and the Khyberee chiefs from some cause never took place. The tribes constantly sought to revenge themselves on the British force, and in some instances succeeded in carrying off considerable plunder. A party, returning from escorting a convoy of provisions to Ali Musjid, was attacked, several hundred camels carried off, and, with atrocious cruelty, maimed, to prevent their being made serviceable if recovered. A regiment of Seiks accompanied the British party on this occasion, but they manifested little of The the lion-like character claimed by their chiefs. and, says Major Hough, "never stopped till they got out of the pass." Their flight threw the whole party into confusion. party, a few days afterwards, despatched to convoy ammunition to Ali Musjid, was, in like manner, attacked on its return, but made Vast Terms of agreement were subsequently settled from Jelalabad under Lieutenant-Colonel chery, as the Khyberees manifested indicahaved admirably, and repulsed the assailants: who had scarcely passed the period of boyhood, was spoken of in terms of admiration by their officers. Ultimately, terms was It is supposed that about four hundred of made with the barbarous hordes, by bestowed on those engaged in the expedition by an unlooked-for order to stop and seek for order to sto to Affghanistan. In addition to the thanks of Parliament and of the East-India Company, open the inner gate, but the powder, having the continued rain. would of Parliament and of the East-India Company, the governor-general, Lord Auckland, received become wet from the continued rain, would not explode, and moreover, its anality is the governor-general, Lord Auckland, received become wet from the continued rain, would from the favour of the sovereign an advanced not explode; and, moreover, its quality is have been so bad that had it been from the rayour of the sovereign an advanced step in the peerage, being created Earl of Auckland. Sir John Keane was created a dry, there was but little chance of its being created and the bounty of parliament added effective. peer, and the bounty of parliament added peer, and the bounty of parliament added to the grace of the crown, by the grant of a pension of two thousand pounds a year to the general and his two next heirs male. Second failure decided the question of pro-

the general and his two next heirs male. Mr. Macnaghten and Colonel Henry Pottinger were created baronets; Colonel Wade longing the attack. The stock of ammunition was exhausted, and the inner gate still mocked the Bath; General Willshire, Colonel Thack- of rain, and to a harassing fire from the fort loughby Cotton received the grand cross of the Bath; General Willshire, Colonel Thack-of rain, and to a harassing fire from the fort was obviously useless to subject them the services and colonels of these annovances, and they were

was formally dissolved, and the services of another fort in the vicinity, conveying with tunities of distinguishing themselves had been of value for nothing was found in the places many of its officers who had enjoyed opportional tunities of distinguishing themselves had been of value, for nothing was found in the places acknowledged. Shah Shooiah had taken his evacuated but some very small stores of grain cknowledged. Shah Shoojah had taken his evacuated but some very small stores of grain and the find our notwing was found in the places. acknowledged. Shah Shoojah had taken his evacuated but some very small stores of grain functions of government, as far as they were exercised at all, were carried on in his name. But there was a vast amount of dissatisfac. stances perhaps more discouraging than the exercised at all, were carried on in his name. But there was a vast amount of dissatisfac. Stances perhaps more discouraging than the though the shab aspired to rule; and loss was considerable, and the ill-success of the attempt showed but too clearly that the tories which the shab aspired to rule; and loss was considerable, and the ill-success of his European allies the attempt showed but too clearly that the fort had been undertaken though the bayonets of bis European allies the attempt showed but too clearly that the viously claimed sovereignty at Kandahar and with insufficient means. Captain A bbott seems to have done all that was practicable with bis viously claimed sovereignty at Kandahar and Kabool, there were spirits in every part of to have done all that was practicable with his seemed to promise a chance of success. or less powder: but with materials so inadequate the country ready, at any moment that few guns of no great calibre, and his worth-seemed to promise a chance of success, or less powder; but with materials so inadequate their dislike to the restored prince, and their ness, and military skill were alike unavailing. even without this temptation, to manifest to the work to be performed, courage, condition not to submit to his sway. In In March it became necessary to attack it became necessary to attack it. determination not to submit to his sway. In one instance of this nature occurring early in mud fort in the vicinity of Bamian, belonging to a nature of the British arms enstained a reverse to a nature occurring early in mud fort in the vicinity of Bamian, belonging to a nature of the Bamian, belonging to a nature of the Bamian, belonging to the Bamian of the Bamia one instance of this nature occurring early in mud fort in the vicinity of Bamian, below A refractory chief, named Swild Hoshien, had necessity originated in one of those annays. 1840, the British arms sustained a reverse. A refractory chief, named Syud Hoshien, had necessity originated in one of those apparently unaccountable changes in the feeling of the A remactory chief, named Synd Hoshien, nad heccessity originated in one or those apparently unaccountable changes in the feeling of the manifestation of it. taken up his abode in a fort named Pishoot, situated about fifty miles from Jelalabad; to people, or rather in their manifestation of the was despatched with a force consisting of a British commissariat had for some time been instances of the 20th Rangal native infantry sights a constant to obtain annulisation the valley was despatched with a force consisting of a surface with a surface with a force consisting of a surface with a force consisting of a surface with a surf wing of the dyth Bengal native mantry, eighty accustomed to obtain supplies from the valley ments, twenty sappared a troop of cavalry a these were furnished with nerfect mond-will. men of one or the Company's European regi- in which the fort is situate, and apparently regiment of the shah's infantry, and another Suddenly and unexpectedly, the conduct of well, and Colonel Sale were made knights —it was obviously useless to subject them Croker, and R. Mandonald. Scott, Persse, further to these annoyances, and they were made knights —it was obviously useless to subject them of accordingly withdrawn. The attack had thus commanders; and Colonels J. Scott, Persse, further to these annoyances, and they were that order: while hy an extensive grant of failed to drive the garrison from the fort, but Croker, and R. Macdonald, companions of accordingly withdrawn. The attack had thus that order; while, by an extensive grant of failed to drive the garrison from the fort, but the merits of several other officers it was not without effect in terrifying them. that order; while, by an extensive grant of lailed to drive the garrison from the fort, but were recognized.

| Table of the continued of the were recognized.

The constitution of the army of the Indus ance, not only from Pishoot, but also from many of its officers who had enjoyed opnor.

If they withdrew soon after its discontinger, not only from Pishoot, but also from another fort in the vicinity, conveying with them. There is reason to believe.

ments, twenty sappers, a troop of cavalry, a regiment of the shah's infantry, and another Suddenly and unexpectedly, the conduct of The march was performed amidst torrents of one of their forts for a small quantity of grain. On the morning of the 18th of January.

The march was performed amidst torrents of rain. On the morning of the 18th of January, the guns and troops having been brought into position at an early hour, the attack commenced. After two hours, firing, a practicable breach being made on each side of the guns and troops having been brought into but with defiance, threats, and even personal courage. Explanation was required, but not under Captain Garbett, was detached to seek by force that redress which remonstrance had gate, Lieutenant Pigou, with a small party of Europeans and sepoys, advanced and party of sounded an advance, the bugler with the party failed to procure. The fort selected for attack and on. It appeared, was situated between four and five hundred matchlocks, who kept up a hot fire on the stormers was theroupon checked.

were exposed to a fire both in front and rear: for rest and refreshment, he was attacked by to add to their perils, a third fire was commenced from some heights on their left. They almost to a man, cut off. It has been said that only two guns; one of these was brought that the unhappy result was caused by the to bear on the gate, the other opened a fire of shrapnels and round shot on the table-land, which was soon cleared, while a charge of danger, in opposition to better advice. How which was soon cleared, while a standard far this was the fact can never be known; but infantry and cavalry up the heights on the far this was the fact can never be known; but left produced the like effect in that quarter. whatever might be the degree of error committed in this respect, it was not aggravated. In the mean time, Lieutenant Mackenzie had succeeded in breaking down the gate. party, headed by Lieutenant Broadfoot, entered, and the fort was soon carried. The garrison, however, retreated to the tower, whither the assailants followed them, making repeated attempts to force their way in, but without success. As a mast resource, described to government had given to this place a new tower was fired at the base, but this failed to government had given to this place a new tower was fired at the base, but this failed to without success. drive out its inmates, and all the men were drive out its inmates, and an one men and house of which the deceased ruler, Mehrab either burned or sufficient. The women and house of which the deceased ruler, Mehrab either burned or sunocated. The women and Khan, was a member. Either from deficiency children were saved, having been removed to force or from an under children were saved, naving usen removed of force or from an undue confidence, the a spot where the fire had not penetrated when of the place had been introduced, the a spot where the are not not penewrated when it defence of the place had been intrusted to this the captors entered. This affair was of small defence of the place had been intrusted to this the captors entered. Ams and was of small chief and a garrison of the country. A British importance, but it deserves record, both as chief and a garrison of the country. A British importance, but it deserves record, both as officer, Lieutenant Loveday, was, indeed, marking the spirit of the people with whom officer, Lieutenant Loveday, was, indeed, there with a few sepoys, but the number was the British force had to contend, and as unitarity insufficient for the defended the British force nad to convend, and as utterly insufficient for the defence of the reflecting great credit on the small party by whom the achievement was gained.

able: the Ghiljies had ever been a wild and lison. The opportune appearance of a small lawless tribe, yielding steady obedience to no party of seroys frustrated the success of this ruler or dynasty, and, consequently, no deep reverence for the restored king was to be down, and some of those who were aiding requisite to impose some check upon their requisite to impose some check upon their state of things was protracted for strengly lawless movements, if the authority of Shah lawless movements are all fort was immediately opposite to this elevated him a small party of infantry, a few horre, and land, so that the British party, in assaulting, about five hundred camels. While halting were exposed to a fire both in front and rear: for rest and refreshment, he was attacked by their parity a third fire was com- the Beloochees in yest number antacked by A by any lack of spirit when the danger burst; for Lieutenant Clark maintained to the last the character which he had previously established: he shared the fate which overwhelmed those whom he led.

Another disaster shortly followed in the re-As a last resource, the capture of the fortress of Kelat. The British from the achievement was gained.

Further illustration of the degree of repose danger without, there was far more from Further illustration of the degree of repose panger without, there was far more from likely to be enjoyed by Shah Shoojah and his ally was afforded by an outbreak of the carry the place by escalade, the assailants Chiljies. This event was not very remark being helped up by their friends in the garable: the Ghiljies had ever been a wild and rison. The opportune appearance of a small able: the Ghiljies had ever been a wild and rison.

required unceasing exertion on the part of the themselves turned out to be treacherous. They sepoys to surmount. A march of six miles conducted the water-party to a place where brought the force to ground convenient for they were surrounded by the Beloochees oncomping; but the guides reported that there and killed, with the exception of a few, who was no water, and there was, apparently, no choice but to suffer both men and cattle to perial from thirst, or to carry the pass of Nufoesk, which was environed by hordes of tion of the greater part of those who had pro-the enemy. The latter was resolved upon, ecceded on it. What now was to be done? and preparations were made for storming the pass. The movement to attack commenced at two o'clock in the afternoon, when the flank companies of the first and second grenadiers, led by Captain Raitt, of the former regiment, moved forward to storm the height, supported by the remaining companies of the 1st regiment, and by fifty volunteers of the Poons horse under Lieutenaut Loch. The Poons horse under Lieutenaut Loch. road up the face of the mountain, at all times difficult, had been rendered still more so by the enemy. In some places it had been altogether destroyed, in others it admitted of the advance of only one man at a time, while at been sent for water and had never returned, other parts breastworks had been raised across, surmounted with thorn bushes. The enemy from above kept up a heavy fire, which told plundering the commissaries of all they could fearfully; but, notwithstanding, a ridge at the carry away. There was nothing left, there-head of the pass was gained. At this moment fore, but to relinquish the hope of throwing a dense mass rose on the crest of the mountain, and almost overwhelmed the stormers with discharges of musketry and showers of stones. Major Clibborn now deemed it necessary to recall the advance companies to the support of the guns and colours, when a large body of several hundred of the enemy rushed down the mountain, "yelling and howling," as they are described in a private account, like "beasts of the forest." A temporary confusion ensued in the British ranks, but it was soon overcome. The troops performed their duty with their wonted steadiness and alacrity, and the enemy were repulsed with severe slaughter. The loss on the part of the British was severe; several officers fell, and among them Captain Raitt, the leader of the storming party.

A scene followed more terrible than the conflict which preceded it. The heat was intense; the labours which the troops had undergone sufficient to subdue the physical powers of the strongest among them. The | thirst produced by the combined influence of heat and fatigue, in some instances increased by loss of blood, was overpowering; but no water was to be had. The cries of the wounded and the dying for relief, which water, and that alone, could afford, were aggravated into shricks of despair and frenzy. A guide reported that water was procurable at a nullah a short distance off, and all the animals that Victorious over those who had opposed its could be mustored for the duty were de progress, it arrived at Poolajee with all the

onomy continuing to fire into the camp. On desired luxury, escorted by a party of irrethe following day the march was resumed, over gular horse. But the hope, which for a a road presenting, in an almost constant retime supported the spirits of the sufferers, currence of ruts and ravines, a series of obstacles to the passage of the guns which tion of the guides prove false, but the guides cut their way through, and bore to their porishing companions the fearful intelligence of the failure of their mission, and the destruc-The enemy had been beaten back with severe loss, but the pass was yet in their possession; and the heaps of the dead which they had left on the field scarcely affected their strength, though the repulse they had received might have damped their spirit. They yet numbered several thousands, and for a few hundred fainting men to fight their way through such a force, over ground almost impassable when without a foe, was obviously hopeless. Further, could success have been hoped for, neither the stores nor the guns could have been carried forward, for the gun-horses had while the camel-drivers and the dooly-bearers, with an oriental instinct of disaster, had fled, supplies into Kahun, and to fall back. Even this step, the only one practicable, involved a vast sacrifice. The safe return of the men was all that the most sanguine could hope for: guns, stores, camp equipage, all were to be abandoned, for the means of transporting them did not exist, even had no enemy been watching the movements of the devoted party. The guns were spiked, and the melancholy march in retrogression commenced. "We moved off," says Major Clibborn, "with as much quiotness as the frantic state of the men would permit:"-a line pregnant with fearful meaning. At the pass of Surtaf, the retreating force was attacked, and the small remnant of baggage which circumstances had allowed to be removed fell into the hands of the enemy, who here, also, slaughtered many of the campfollowers. Pursuing their way without food to sustain their failing strength, or water to quench their burning thirst, or tents to afford shelter from the scorching sun, the force was unable to halt till it reached the town of Poolajee, whence it was not long before it departed. In the brief period that intervened, it had lost a hundred and seventy-nine men killed (ninety-two more being wounded), together with all its artillery, ammunition, stores, and beasts of burden. "Excepting its stores, and beasts of burden. arms and colours," says the official account, "the detachment is completely disorganized. "We bent spatched to bring a supply of the greedily-disastrous indications of defeat.

the enemy." wrote one of the sufferers, "but lenemy, he had occasion to perform a disagreeheat and thirst killed us."

Of the conduct of Major Clibborn it is impossible to speak too highly. He yielded, indeed, to difficulties, but they were difficulties which no degree of energy or skill could, under the circumstances in which he was placed, have surmounted.

In other quarters, the state of affairs presented but an unpromising aspect. British officers were continually engaged in suppress. ing outbreaks of a spirit of resistance towards the shah, caused frequently by the demands of the prince for tribute. Their efforts were usually successful, but the necessity for them indicated but too clearly that the shah was supported on the throne, not by his own strength, but by that of his allies. Lieutenant-Colonel Wheeler was thus engaged in Wuzerence valley, and late in the month of August, a small fort situated therein was very brilliantly carried by a party under his command. In Kohistan a refractory disposition was also manifested, and Sir Robert Sale was despatched to suppress it. The point against which his force was to be directed was a fort, or rather cluster of forts, named Tootumdurra. held by a chief reluctant to acknowledge the supremacy of the shah. On arriving in front of the place, he found the enemy posted in a very strong position. But the arrangements of Sir Robert Sale were so masterly, that a very short time sufficed to put the enemy to flight, and to transfer possession of the forts to the supporters of the shah. The capture was effected almost without loss; but Captain Edward Conolly, of the 6th light cavalry, who had joined as a volunteer, was shot through the heart in advancing on the

An attempt upon another stronghold, made n few days afterwards, was less successful. A breach, believed to be practicable, having been made, a storming party proceeded to ascend. They reached the crest of the breach, and for some time maintained themselves there; but the resistance was so determined, that it was found impracticable to force an entrance, and the narty were necessarily withdrawn. The garrison, however, were not disposed again to measure their strength with that of their assailants; the fort was evacuated a few hours after the cessation of the attack, and the British took possession of it.

Previously to the event last noticed, Colonel a junction with his son, Mahomed Ufzul Khan, Dennie had added one more to the triumphs of and, in prosecution of the design, moved tothe British arms. Dost Mahomed Khan, after various wanderings, had succeeded in establishing an alliance with the Usbegs, under the Walli of Kooloon, by whose aid he hoped to regain the position from which he had been able duty, by disarming an Affghan corps, whose fidelity was something more than questionable. On the 17th he received information that bodies of cavalry were entering the valley, and on the following morning he learned that they had attacked a friendly village. He had intended to allow of their further advance before attacking them, but the circumstance last mentioned induced him to change his course, and to give them an immediate check. He had been led to believe that the number of those who had entered the valley did not exceed a few hundreds. Under this belief he had taken with him only onethird of the force at his disposal, and he was greatly surprised to find himself in front of an army estimated at six thousand strong. This was an embarrassing situation. "To have sent back for reinforcements," says Colonel Dennie in his despatch, "would have caused delay and given confidence to the enemy. It would have checked the proud feeling that animated the party with me, and gave assur-ance of success." He accordingly resolved to engage with the apparently inadequate force which had accompanied him. It consisted of something more than two hundred of the 35th native infantry, two hundred and fifty of the shah's infantry, three hundred native cavalry, and a detail of artillery, with two field pieces. The confidence of the commander was justified by the event. The enemy had got possession of a chain of forts reaching to the mouth of the defile by which they had entered, but they made a miserable defence. At each of the forts they exhibited a show of making a stand with their main body, their wings crowning the heights. The latter were dislodged with some loss, and finally the whole force fied in a confused mass to the gorge of the pass. Cavalry were ordered in pursuit, who followed the fugitives about four miles up the defile, cutting down many of them and scattering the rest in all directions, numbers throwing away their arms, and creeping up the hills for safety.

The result of this attempt to invade Affghanistan seems to have prepared the way for a dissolution of the alliance between Dost Mahomed and the Walli of Kooloon. A little diplomacy completed the separation, and Dost Mahomed was again thrown on his own resources. In this emergency he sought to effect wards the Gherbund pass, and took possession of some small forts. Sir Robert Sale, on becoming acquainted with this movement, broke up his camp and marched to Purwan. The forts and villages were evacuated at his expelled by the British arms exerted in favour approach, and on reaching Purwan, the Bri-of his rival, Shah Shoojah. The army of Dost tish infantry ascended the hill overlooking the Mahomed and the Walli were advancing upon pass and valley, and cleared it of the enemy, Bamian, and Colonel Dennie marched to its who deserted one position after another, and relief. He arrived there on the 14th of Sep-ultimately fled in the direction of the Punchtember, and before preparing to meet the shir valley. All circumstances went prosper-

ously and honourably for the British arms but presented himself, anxiously inquiring for the one. The progress of the infantry was greatly representative of the British government, retarded by the guns, the read being very un-Having been satisfied as to the identity of the favourable for the passage of artillery, and it person whom he sought, he announced that was deemed expedient to send forward the Dost Mahomed Khan had arrived, and claimed was deemed expedient to send forward the cavalry to overtake the fugitives, whose pace the minister's protection. The chieftain himwas far too rapid to allow any other species self then appeared, alighted from his horse, and presented his sword. The sword was Bongal cavalry had preceded the column about a mile, when a body of the enemy's horse, and the envoy and the dethroned prince supposed to be led by Dost Mahomed in person, came down a hill to attack them. They were forthwith formed into line, and led on to place where the envoy resided, a tent was charge by Captains Fraser and Ponsonby, who pitched for Dost Mahomed, who appeared very commanded the two squadrons. The officers calmly to reconcile himself to his fato, mushed on in perfect confidence that their men. pushed on in perfect confidence that their men would perform their duty; but they found auspiciously for the British arms. The battle thomselves in the midst of the enemy, unsup of Purwan, which led to the surrender of Dost ported by their troopers. They cut their way Mahomed, was fought on the first of that out, being both severely wounded, and then month; on the third the surrender took place, had the mortification of scoing their men fly- and on the same day General Nott re-occupied ing before the enemy. In this unhappy affair Kelat, which had been abandoned by its gar-Licutenant Crispin, adjutant of the regiment, rison. On that day, also, Major Boscawen was killed, vainly attempting to bring the men defeated the army of Nasir Khan, son of the to action. Dr. Lord, distinguished as a man ex-chief of Kelai, who had a few days belore of science as well as a diplomatist, was also received an impressive lesson from Captain killed in this affair, as was Lieutenant Broad- Watkins, in command at Dadur. On the 1st foot, an engineer officer, who accompanied December an action of a decided character was the advance. The officers were unusually fought. Nasir Khan, who occupied a strong exposed to danger from the defection of position near Kotree, was attacked by a force the men, and they suffered proportionately. under Lieutenant-Colonel Marshall, consisting Various motives have been assigned for the of about nine hundred Bombay native infantry scandalous defection of the regiment, but the probable conjecture is, that their conduct ments, commanded respectively by Captains was the result of sheer cowardice—a con-Boyd, Ennis, and Teasdale; sixty irregular tagious quality, which, like its opposite, horse, under Lieutenant Smith, and two guns, rapidly communicates itself to those around, under Lieutenant Pruen. The attack took whenever it makes its appearance. The cir-place as soon as daylight dawned, and the cumstances well warranted the infliction of enemy were completely taken by surprise. the heaviest punishment, and the displeasure So great, indeed, was the surprise of their of the government which these traitors pro-chief, that he made his escape upon the first fessed to serve was intimated in the most alarm, accompanied by only two followers. signal manner. The wrotched troopers were His chiefs showed more spirit, and made a not subjected to any corporal sufferings, but long and desperate defence; but the disposithe regiment, whose name they had made a tion of the British force was so judicious, and by-word of reproach, was struck out of the list the spirit which pervaded it so good, that the of the Bengal army. The native officers and efforts at resistance, strenuous as they were, privates present on the day of disgrace were dismissed the service and rendered incapable of ever re-entering or being employed in any under government; the remainder to be drugglited into other cavalry regiments. The The principal commander, named Meer Bodismissal of the degraded officers and man was lum with six others appropriated themselves dismissal of the degraded officers and men was hun, with six others, surrendered themselves carried into effect with all the marks of igno- prisoners, but not until those whose confidence miny usual on such occasions.

But, though marked by this scandalous instance of defection, the battle of Purwan was a large quantity of arms fell into the hands of not only honourable to the British arms, but the victors. The conduct of those by whom important in its consequences. Dost Mahore galloped from the field of battle, and terized by their commander, whose testimony homed galloped from the field of lattle, and terized by their commander, whose testimony surrendered himself to the power with which is thus given in a very soldierly field order, he had no longer the means of contending. issued on the day after the engagement:—The circumstances of his surrender have some—"The lieutenant-colonel now concludes with what of the character of romance. The British envoy, Sir William Macnaghten, was returning from a ride of pleasure, when, within a few yards of his residence, a single horseman. In narrating the gratifying events of this

The month of November, 1840, opened they had sought to sustain were in irretrievable flight. The whole of the enemy's baggage and lant defender of Kahun, must not be passed powder applied to the gate of one of the forts. over. It was effected by arrangements with the Beloochees, through whom he passed un-lishing Shah Shoojah on his throne, and mainmolested. It is not improbable that the loss taining him there, was afforded by the continued which they suffered at Nufoosk had its effect disturbances created by the Ghiljie tribe, and in giving security to this arrangement; and the constant necessity of armed interference thus, though the expedition under Major on the part of the British forces to suppress Clibborn failed of its immediate object and them. was attended by circumstances of extreme Ghiljie became an object of contention. disaster, it might yet, indirectly, be instrumental to the security of the garrison of Kahun. Captain Brown arrived at Poolajee on the 1st of October.

The opening of the year 1841 commenced less auspiciously. The Kojuks had been accustomed to pay tribute to the sovereigns of from Kandahar to Khelat-i-Ghiljie, in charge Affghanistan whenever those princes were enabled to enforce payment. Shah Shoojah wished to revive the custom; but the tribe, with the spirit invariably provalent in the East, determined to withhold compliance until it should be extorted by arms. The chief place of the Kojuk country is Sebee, and against ing the commanding officer, he placed his small this a force under Lieutenant-Colonel Wilson, of the 3rd Bombay cavalry, was, in February, 1841, despatched to give effect to the shah's The force consisted of Colonel Wilson's regiment of cavalry, some local horse, a wing of the 20th Bombay native infantry, two hundred of the 2nd grenadiers, and a troop of horse artillery. The place to be attacked was strong, and the matériel for a siege found by Colonel Wilson inefficient. The attack was, however, made and supported with much gallantry, but it altogether failed, and the loss in British officers was serious with reference to the object to be gained. Colonel Wilson was mortally wounded, Lieutenant Falconer, of the 2nd grenadiers, and Lieutenant Creed, of the artillery, killed. The latter officer was shot through the heart while, with a small party of steady followers, vainly attempting to turn the fortune of the day. The Kojuks pursued on this occasion the course—not unusual—of defending a fortified place with desperation, and then seeking safety in flight. morning Sebee was found abandoned. In the

In the north, affairs were somewhat more prosperous, though there the intervention of military force to uphold the house of Shah Shoojah was also required. It was deemed necessary to coerce a tribe inhabiting the Nazeem valley, and thither a considerable force was despatched under Brigadier Shelton. was composed of her Majesty's 44th regiment, the 27th Bengal native infantry, a troop of horse artillery, a detachment of sappers and miners, and a considerable body of the shah's force, of various descriptions. The valley which was the object of attack was thickly studded with small forts; these were attacked in succession and carried; but success was dimmed by the loss of two valuable officers, Captain Douglas, assistant adjutant-general, a volunteer, and Lieutenant Pigou, a highly period, the retreat of Captain Brown, the gal-|away by the premature explosion of a bag of

Further illustration of the difficulty of estab-Early in May a fort near Khelat-iwas taken by the English after some resistance, the gate being blown open with bags of powder, an operation which, after the success which attended it at Ghuznee, seems to have been a favourite one. On the 29th of the same month, a detachment under Captain Wymer, marching of a convoy, was attacked at Eelme by a body of Ghiljies, amounting, at the commencement of the engagement, to two thousand five hundred, but swelled, by reinforcements, to upwards of five thousand before its termination. On intelligence of the meditated attack reachforce in the position which he deemed most favourable for receiving the enemy; it being, as he observed, impracticable, "from the paucity of troops and the magnitude of the convoy, for him to act otherwise than on the defensive." The British force consisted only of four companies of the 38th regiment of Bengal native infantry, a wing of the shah's cavalry, a small party of sappers and miners, and two guns of the horse artillery. On the first appearance of the enemy, which was in one dense mass, the two guns were opened on them with great precision and effect, where-upon the Ghiljies formed into three distinct columns, in order to make a simultaneous attack on the right, left, and centre of the British. The attack was met with admirable coolness and gallantry; the enemy was permitted to approach within a short distance, when the fire of the infantry line was poured upon them with such effect as to indicate the necessity for a change of operations. The enemy's force was again consolidated, his right and centre columns uniting, with the left resting upon and lining the banks of the Turnak river, near which the engagement took place. This change rendered necessary a corresponding one in the position of the British detachment, which was made with great steadiness, though under an annoying fire, and an interruption, occasioned, it is believed, by an impression entertained on the part of the enemy that their antagonists were about to retreat. Under this impression, a large body of infantry, armed with swords, rushed upon the 38th, uttering a loud shout, and anticipating the speedy discomfiture of those whom they assailed; but they had the mortification to find that they were mistaken, and the reception which they met with soon convinced them that the field was not yet in their possession. From this time the combined efforts of the enemy meritorious engineer officer, who was blown were devoted in succession to all points, but without their gaining a single advantage; and the Ghiljies when they were defeated in five hours, they withdrew from a contest in sion the enemy, in an attempt to form into five hours, they withdrew from a contest in sion the enemy, in an attempt to form into five hours, they withdrew from a contest in which they had been worsted in every attempt to form into the British position. By daybreak they had hevand the range of any intelligences of any intellig At one time, when they were exposed to a heavy fire from the enemy, it became necessary that they should refrain from returning it.

| panions inspired them with a desire to take part in the engagement. They were indulged behaved well. The force of the British, and though not small was not exclusively of the tual obedience of the soldier is severely tested. and an order to that effect was obeyed with the most rigid exactness; not a shot was discharged till the men were commanded again to conraged that the men were commanded again to regiment of Bengal native limiting. Obedience like this is among gaged; the remainder of the force employed the back fruits of military disciplina. The loss halonged to the army of the Shah Shooish. It of the British was small; that of the enemy considerable, but its amount could not be estimated with any degree of precision, as many of the killed and wounded, lying at a distance of the Killed and wounded, lying at a distance generally tranquit. Little of an opposite and cover of the night, were carried off character occurred, excepting in the Zoomutt whither a small force had proceeded work. The whole force was furnished from defended, and it was so strong that the means of it could not be trusted. With an effective Captain Hay, were altogether insufficient for defended, and it was so strong that the means possessed by the British officer in command, its reduction. Instead of being permitted to of it could not be trusted. With an effective | Captain Hay, were altogether insulncient for the enemy might have been pursued and its reduction. Instead of being permitted to occur it without resistance. As had been antiforce the enemy might have been pursued and lits reduction. Instead of being permitted to a shall be a shall a shall a the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a troops were fired upon a new part of the shall a ne of the kind under the circumstances which cipated, the shah's troops were fired upon: a contain Woodburn in his report of few shots were fired upon: a shots were fired upon: a of the kind under the circumstances which cipated, the shah's troops were fired upon: a captain Woodburn, in his report of few shots were fired in return, but without making any impression on the walls within which the enemy were sheltered from attack. political point of view, it would be of the which the enemy were sheltered from attack. point of view, it would be of the greatest importance to follow up and disperse A force better provided with materials for their num. destruction was subsequently desnatched and greatest importance to ionow up and disperse A force better provided with materials for destruction was subsequently despatched, and the potential dispersal of the fact with others in the vicinity regard. the rebels, but with reference to their numbers, and the notoriously disaffected state of the fort, with others in the vicinity, razed.

At the close of Santamber, the country of Santamber of Santambe

manded respectively by Lieut. Bazett and so firmly as to forbid all exhibition of occaCaptain Walker, and forming part of a detachment encamped in the Karronton valler are to lead to a persuasion that he might Captain Walker, and forming part of a detachment encamped in the Karrootoo valley extent as to lead to a persuasion that he might be left in a great degree to himself; that the manding a field detachment in Zemindawur. Sional outbreaks of opposition, but to such an in the same month, Captain John Griffin, combilet in a great degree to himself; that the might be left in a great degree to himself; that the first state in Zemindawur. Intogether withdrawn, and that the European moved beyond the range of any intelligence not appear previously to have enjoyed a very moderate and process and p moved beyond the range of any intelligence which Captain Wymer could procure. The good reputation. A similar regiment had occasion. Was most exemplary, and in some tenant Golding. but the success of their comconduct of the 38th native minntry, on this occasion, was most exemplary, and in some tenant Golding, but the success of their coming inspired them with a desire to take panions inspired them with a desire to take though not small, was not exclusively of the best description as to men, and it was inferior in numbers to that of the enemy. The 2nd The loss belonged to the army of the Shah Shoojah. It numbered thirteen hundred and fifty bayonets,

The month of September passed in a manner A large body of Ghiljies and others, amounting, it is said, to six thousand, was defeated on the 2nd of July by Captain of this force was the seizure of some persons on the Helmund. The value of the services had taken refuge in a fort in that country. Little of an opposite valley, whither a small force had proceeded Woodburn, commanding a field detachment | nostile to the government, who, it was stated, of the services | had taken refuge in a fort in that country.

Prifish | The fort was represented as heing very weak. on the Helmund. The value of the services had taken retuge in a fort in that country.

of Captain Woodburn, and of the British The fort was represented as being very weak, and further it was believed that no defence of Captain Woodburn, and of the British The fort was represented as being very weak, enhanced by a consideration of the very indifferent instruments with which they had to nectation was disannointed. The fort was represented as being very weak, and further it was believed that no defence was disannointed. The fort was enhanced by a consideration of the very indifferent instruments with which they had to pectation was disappointed. The points exthe levies of the shah, and a portion at least possessed by the British officer in command.

the country, 1 do not consider that 1 should be justified in moving after them with a weak regiment of infantry, two guns, and with cavalry in which every confidence cannot be larger than 1 that manifested at any former the nusnices of his British ally. It was now At the close of September, the country Success followed the British arms in various in a perfect state of peace. Such a state had never been known in Affohanistan and the engagements of smaller or greater importance never been known in Afighanistan, and the engagements of smaller or greater importance never been known in Angnanistan, and the with the same enemy. In the beginning of surface was so smooth, that the belief that the belief that the belief that the auspices of his British ally. It was now with the same enemy. In the beginning of surface was so smooth, that the belief that August a body of Ghiljies were routed by Shah Shoojah was firmly seated on the throne cavalry com- saems to have been entertained: not indeed August a body of Ghiljies were routed by Shah Shoojah was firmly seated on the throne some regular and irregular cavalry commanded respectively by Lieut. Bazett and so firmly as to forbid all exhibition of occasional onthreaks of opposition, but to such an In the same month, Captain John Grittin, com- British troops might at an early period be manding a field detachment in Zemindawur, altogether withdrawn, and that the European attacked and dispersed a hody of about five adviser by whose counsels the shah had been manding a new detachment in Zemindawur, altogether withdrawn, and that the European attacked and dispersed a body of about five adviser, by whose counsels the shah had been from the outset of the expedition. attacked and dispersed a body of about five adviser, by whose counsels the shan had been thousand, near Khishwura. They were headed by two chiefs, named Akram Khan and might without any further delay be relieved from his onerous duties. Sir James Carnac

the office, and proposed, on the 28th of October, to surrender his charge in Affghanistan to Captain Sir Alexander Burnes, and depart to take possession of his new office. Before the arrival of that day, a great change had taken place in the aspect of affairs.

Revolt and intestine war were certainly not to be regarded as events of improbable occurrence in the newly established kingdom of Affghanistan; with or without reasonable cause, they were to be looked for, at least, agreement made with one man be very reasonfor a considerable time. The beginning of the ably alleged as a ground for setting aside a month of October was marked by the departure from the court of Shah Shoojah of Shoojah would have been justified in refusing some chiefs of considerable power and incaravan—an exploit perfectly in accordance fulfil his engagement. with the prevailing code of morals in English.

istan. Humzee Khan, a man of high rank, by the dissatisfied chiefs was, the by the dissatisfied chiefs was, the companies by them to return by the promise of redress of the eastern Ghiljies, wherever such robberies might be committed. This might be oppressible for robberies was might be committed. This might be oppressible for robberies was the remark suggested by the that might have been looked for from the fact, which does not appear at the time to have been known to the British envoy, but which he soon afterwards learned that Humzee Khan was himself the chief instigator of the hostile its inconveniences came too late. movement which he was despatched to check,

The ostensible reasons for the defection of the Ghiljie chiefs were two; the first being the reduction of certain allowances which they had received for services rendered in keeping in some degree of order the predatory tribes frequenting the passes. The reduction was defended upon the two grounds of necessity and justice. The government of Calcutta had have been unpopular, but any one who remade many and heavy complaints of the expense of the proceedings in Affghanistan, and had urged the necessity of Shah Shoojah ceasing to rely on his ally for pecuniary support; the difficulties of collecting tribute were great; to borrow, the ordinary resource of Eastern princes, was, in the circumstances of Affghanistan, not easily practicable; and there seemed no course open but to diminish in some way the charges of the government. The particular head of charge selected for reduction was that which was made up of the allowances above noticed. The point was delicate, and the prospects of success not very All these feelings were, undoubtedly, at work promising; for those who unwillingly paid a reduced amount of tribute were not likely to give a very cheerful assent to the payment of into any one outburst cannot be determined. an enhanced amount. Financial pressure was, undoubtedly, the chief motive which led the excitement, were alike enlisted against the British authorities to acquiesce in the reduc- British and the shah. In a long course of native advisors, it is not necessary to resort to insintained, their influence might have been the existence of such pressure for a motive, crushed, but time and a vigorous arm were The Eastern principle of wringing from a de-both requisite for the task. pendent as much as possible, and of never The mission of the perfidious minister, Humobserving an engagement if it be practicable zee Khan, having failed, more efficient means

· had resigned the government of Bombay: Sir | has, however, been intimated that the plea of William Macnaghten had been appointed to necessity was supported on another, grounded on a sense of justice. It was said that, in consequence of a reduction in the price of grain, the reduced allowances were substantially greater than the chiefs received from Dost Mahomed for services similar to those for which they were now to be paid by Shah Shoojah; but this was not an argument likely to satisfy those who claimed the allowances; nor, in truth, could the inferior advantages derived by these chiefs under an different agreement made with another. Shah at first to give more than his predecessor; but Their first act was the plunder of a if he did agree to give more, he was bound to > conduct of the shah seems applicable to his insurgent chiefs. If the responsibility of which they complained formed part of the contract into which they entered, their reflections on

Other causes have been assigned, and they, without doubt, aided in precipitating insurrection at this particular time. The great chiefs saw that their independence would be affected and their power shaken by the new order of things. They had never known any but a state of anarchy, and they dreaded any other. Personally, Shah Shoojah seems to quired obedience from the wild and reckless chiefs of Affghanistan would have been unpopular also. But further, the Affghan chiefs and people were Mahometans, inflamed with all the burning bigotry which scorches the bosoms of the sincere and zealous followers of the pseudo prophet, abhorring Christians more than the most dangerous beasts that prowl for midnight prey, or the most noxious reptiles that find shelter in the jungle, and extending their hatred to a prince whom they saw enthroned amid the bayonets of a people professing the religion which they so much detested. to counteract British authority and influence in Affghanistan. How much of each entered Private interest, personal vanity, fanatical With regard to Shah Shoojah and his years, if a strong government could have been to break it with advantage, is quite sufficient of dealing with the insurgent chiefs were re-to account for their approval of the plan. It sorted to in the employment of a military force marching to Jelalabad, preparatory to its the approach of the British force to a fortified return to India. The first task to be perspot called Mahomed Ufznl's fort of which formed was the forcing the pass of Khoord the insurgents had possession. They were, Kabool, which the disaffected chiefs had occu- however, driven from the hill by the advanced pied. They here held a strong position, their guard under Colonel Monteith. The fort was main body being posted behind a breastwork then assailed, and after a feeble defence abannear the middle of the pass, while parties doned. Sir Robert Sale intended to establish occupied the surrounding heights. While the here a depôt for his sick and wounded, and to attention of the enemy was partially diverted adopt the place as a point d'appui; but the by an assault upon another point, the troops enemy continuing to occupy a nearly circular destined for the chief attack, which was to be range of heights, and even occasionally to directed against the enemy's front, entered the gorge of the valley. The advanced guard consisted of two companies of her Majesty's 13th light infantry, the flank companies of the the British position, and inflict considerable 35th Bengal native infantry, a detachment of annoyance, especially by night. This led to a pioneers, and two guns. The remainder of the two regiments of infantry formed the main body. As the British force approached, it was discovered that the enemy were withdrawing from their position in the valley, and occupying the rocky ridges of the mountains on both by negotiation, the disputes with the disobesides. They opened a well-directed fire, and dient chiefs was made under the auspices of in an early stage of the action Sir Robert Sale was wounded, and compelled to leave the field. He had previously directed two companies of the 13th and one of the 35th to ascend the precipitous heights for the purpose of clearing them. Colonel Dennie, who assumed the command on Sir Robert Sale being disabled, brought up the main column and guns to the enemy's breastwork in the valley, and, finding it evacuated, pushed them forward to the extremity of the pass, opposite to that by which they had entered, where he took up an excellent position under cover of the walls of a fort which, though deserted, was of some strength. In the mean time, the skirmishers on the heights had ably performed their work of clearing them of the enemy. The native infantry remained at the fort, which had been taken; the European force returned to their encampment at Boothauk. As they marched tinguished commander, who thus speaks of back, some parties of the enemy occasionally showed themselves, and some loss was sustained in repelling their attacks. While the force under Sir Robert Sale was thus divided. they were exposed to several night attacks, in one of which the 38th suffered severely, many men and one officer, Lieutenant Jenkins, ing up intrenchments, and very severe outhaving fallen in the conflict. Later in the post duty; whilst each succeeding morning month of October, Sir Robert Sale, having has brought its affair with a bold and active been reinforced, marched in the direction of enemy, eminently skilful in the species of war-Tazeen, the force feeling its way cautiously fare to which their attempts have been conthrough the defiles, occupying the hills on its fined, and armed with jezails, which have flanks with skirmishers, and leaving parties enabled them to annoy us at a range at which for the protection of its baggage and rear at they could only be reached by our artillery. selected points. No enemy was seen till the Though compelled, by the effects of my late advance and main body had halted in the wound, to witness these conflicts from a dooly, valley of Tazeen. stretches out in a south-easterly direction, gallantry of officers and men on every occasion and on the sides and summits of the moun- of contact with the enemy, and especially in tains inclosing the latter were observed bodies scaling the tremendous heights above Jugduof the enemy; while another portion of their luk."

luk."

At Gundamuck the difficulties of Sir Robert small conical hill which partly closes the en-Sale began to thicken, and amidst a variety of commanded by Sir Robert Sale, which was trance to the branching valley, and thus to bar spot called Mahomed Ufzul's fort, of which dislodge them from those parts of the mountains from which they were able to command series of skirmishes, which ended in the British commander completely accomplishing his object.

While the force of Sir Robert Sale occupied this position, a further attempt to terminate, Captain Macgregor. He was received by them with a profusion of pacific professions, and an agreement was concluded, but without a shadow of intention on the part of the chiefs to adhere to any part of it. In proof of this, they continued to harass the British detachment under Sir Robert Sale on its departure from Tazeen. The most serious annoyance received was on the 29th of October, on marching from Jugduluk in the direction of Gundamuck. Some loss in men was here sustained, and a very considerable one in baggage and camp equipage; but the detachment succeeded in gallantly forcing its way, though the difficulties of the ground, surrounded by terrific mountains, were almost insuperable. The labours encountered by the detachment, and the spirit in which they were sustained, will be best illustrated by quoting the language of its dishis men :- "Since leaving Kabool, they have been kept constantly on the alert by attacks by night and day; from the time of their arrival at Tazeen they have invariably bivouacked, and the safety of our positions has only been secured by unremitting labour, throw-Though compelled, by the effects of my late From this valley another I must bear my unequivocal testimony to the was menaced by the enemy from the direction of Lughman. To secure the possession of that important place, he resolved to march upon it forthwith. He entered it on the 12th of November, having sustained considerable annoyance from plunderers. A party of these, who had the imprudence to follow the rear guard under Colonel Dennie into the plain, were sent abruptly back to the heights by a brilliant charge of cavalry, headed by Captain Oldfield and Lieutenant Mayne, before whom more than a hundred of the marauders fell.

Jelalabad was found invested on every side by hordes of enemies. The defences were weak, but Sir Robert Sale proceeded with characteristic vigour to improve them. In the mean time, the enemy were active. They short range, by which some loss was suffered. To get rid of this continued source of annoyance, a sortie was made on the 14th of November by a party under Lieutenant-Colonel Monteith. The attempt was entirely successful, and a body of at least five thousand men were utterly dispersed by a force consisting of three hundred men of her Majesty's 13th, three hundred of the 35th Bengal native infantry, a hundred sappers and miners, two hundred of the Khyber corps, a squadron of the 5th light cavalry, a few irregular horse, and three guns.

It was obvious that, though the enemy was dispersed for a time, their speedy and frequent return was to be expected; it was not less obvious that no early relief was to be looked for by the British force in Jelalabad. diminish the consumption of provisions as far as was practicable, was, under these circumstances, an indispensable measure of pre-caution; and with a view to this object, Sir Robert Sale proceeded to dismiss from the place the women and children, whose presence could only be embarrassing to the garrison and dangerous to themselves, and all the male population, excepting shopkeepers, whose continued residence was to be desired. clearance not only reduced the number of claimants for food, but had the effect of purg-ing the city of suspicious characters, of whom there were many. The repose that followed the dispersion of the enemy was employed in carrying on the improvements in the defences with redoubled vigour. "We have availed ourselves of the pause," said Sir Robert Sale, "to put the walls into a state of defence, which will, I trust, enable us to defy the efforts of any Asiatic force, unaided by siege artillery." Yet was there enough in the cir-gloomy intelligence which reached him from feeling. "Two regiments, and the corps of various quarters, he learned that Jelalabad sappers," he writes, "do not more than suffice to man these extensive walls, and great efforts are required of us. We need succours in every way; troops, treasure, provisions, and ammunition now, and a siege train to enable us to retrieve things by active operations on the conclusion of the winter." Thus did this eminent officer look forward through months of anxiety, destitution, and suffering, with feelings tinged with hopefulness, to the period when he trusted to be again able to take the field in vindication of his country's honour.

Before reaching Jelalabad, Sir Robert Sale had learned that all was not well at Kabool. While engaged in preparing for the defence of the former place, he received a summons to march the troops under his command immediately to the capital. This task he declined to burned down a cantonment raised by the Eng-lish at great expense in the preceding year, and under cover of trees and old buildings, kept lucid, and forcible language. "I beg to reup a fire of musketry against the walls at a present that the whole of my camp equipage has been destroyed; that the wounded and sick have increased to upwards of three hundred; that there is no longer a single depôt of provisions on the route, and the carriage of the force is not sufficient to bring on one day's rations with it. I have, at the same time, positive information that the whole country is in arms, and ready to oppose us in the defiles between this city and Cabool, while my ammunition is insufficient for more than two such contests as I should assuredly have to sustain for six days at least. With my present means I could not force the passes of either Jugduluk or Khoord Cabool; and even if the debris of my brigade did reach Cabool, I am given to understand that I should find the troops now garrisoning it without the means of subsistence. Under these circumstances, a regard for the honour and interest of our government compels me to adhere to my plan already formed of putting this place into a state of defence, and holding it, if possible, until the Cabool force falls back upon me, or succours arrive from Peshawur or India." Personally, Sir Robert Sale must have wished to have been at Kabool, for his wife and daughter were there, and exposed to danger; but he could not sacrifice an army to the gratification of his personal feelings.

There was, indeed, a fearful need of further military assistance at Kabool; but before entering into the particulars of the necessity, it will be convenient to state the positions of the forces of the allied powers in the vicinity of that place. The force at and near Kabool, in the beginning of October, had consisted of her Majesty's 13th and 44th foot, the 5th, 35th, 37th, and 54th Bengal native infantry, the 5th Bengal light cavalry, a company of foot and a troop of horse artillery, two regiments cumstances in which the brave garrison of Jelalabad was placed to have justified some shadow of despondency, had its noble com-shadow of despondency, had its noble com-shadow are capable of entertaining such a Affghan, forming part also of the shah's which unthrifty delay had permitted to accumulate, and with their lives they surrendered sequence, the insurgents gradually gathered their trust. The shah's treasury, as well as trength, and obtained possession of post after two residence of Sir Alexander Burnes, was post in quick succession. A tower occupied plundered; every man, woman, and child by Captain Trevor, of the 5th cavalry, a fort found in either massacred; and, finally, the buildings fired. The whole city was now in a storchouse by the shah's commissariat, partly state of insurrection, and it was dangerous for a European countenance to be anywhere visible. Some British officers were wounded, and others very narrowly escaped. Captain Sturt, of the engineers, was assailed in the pre-which pressing application was made, but while no hope could be entertained, under the without effect. chiefs who remained faithful to the cause of plies elsewhere. The representation was too the allies had proceeded to the house held by powerful to be resisted, though it cannot but Captain Trevor with a tender of assistance. excite surprise that it should have been That they were sincere is placed beyond ques- required, and it was determined to direct the tion by two facts. One of the chiefs offered commander of the commissariat fort to persist his son as a hostage for his good faith, and in its defence. A further communication actually placed him in the hands of the British from that officer announced that his difficulofficer; and further, when all hope was lost, from the non-arrival of assistance, several of the party escorted Captain Trevor and his family to the British cantonments. Neither Brigadier Anquetil nor Captain Troup was present at the fort and house which they respectively occupied, and the task of defending the fort fell to Captain Mackenzie. held it till he had not a shot to fire, and then cut his way through the enemy to the British lines, which he reached, though not without being wounded. It is not easy—perhaps it never will be practicable—to ascertain precisely the causes of the unfortunate want of energy which at this time pervaded the counsels and move-ments of the British. The chief military command was held by General Elphinstone, an officer of high character, but considerably advanced in years, and severely shaken by disease. The same apathy which had led to the loss of the tower and fort on the 3rd of November, continued to reign on the 4th, and with similar disastrous results. Ensign Warren, of the 5th Bengal native infantry, who, with a small force, occupied the fort of the British commissariat, reported that he was pressed by the enemy, and that, unless reinforced, he could not long hold out. On the cussion consumed the hours, albeit at best too possession or the loss of this fort depended the few, which remained for affording effectual solution of the question whether the British succour to Ensign Warren, and saving from yet, strange as it must appear, the answer able charge. At last it was resolved that in despatch of a small force to assist him in but, just as it was on the point of marching, to retain. The attempt to reach the fort arrived in cantonments with his garrison, want of ammunition, for a fresh supply of equal to more than two days' consumption, A considerable number of circumstances that existed, of procuring supties increased—that the enemy were preparing for an attack, and were, as he believed, engaged in mining one of the towers—that the temper of his garrison was bad—that some of his men had made their escape over the wall, and that, with reference to all circumstances, he could not maintain himself many hours unless reinforced. The answer to this communication was, that he should be reinforced by two o'clock in the morning.

The gate of the commissariat fort was commanded by another fort called Mahomed Shureef's, and the possession of this latter fort was, consequently, deemed requisite to insure success to any attempt to relieve the former. Some information as to its means of defence was obviously desirable, and a man was despatched to gather such as hasty observation might furnish. On his return, he reported that about twenty men were seated without Mahomed Shureef's fort, smoking and talking; but, from what he could learn, the force within was very small, and unable to resist a sudden attack. The tidings brought by this messenger produced no result but a determination to send another, who, returning, corroborated the report of his predecessor. Still nothing was done-consultation and disarmy at Kabool should be fed or starved; the grasp of the enemy his incalculably valuto Ensign Warren's communication was the the morning a detachment should be sent off; evacuating a place which it was so essential news was received that Ensign Warren had failed, as did another subsequently made, and having abandoned the fort, and by conseboth were attended by severe loss. In the quence surrendered all the means of subsistence mean time, intelligence of the intention of on which the army could rely. The enemy abandoning the fort having reached Captain had set fire to the gate, and the garrison Boyd, the chief commissariat officer of the were led out through a hole in the wall. British army, he hastened, in conjunction with This was a blow at the British cause in Captain Johnson, who held the same situation | Kabool before which it reeled. The train in the army of the shah, to lay before the was fired, and an explosion could not be far general the fatal consequences that must result distant which might be expected to involve from such a step, representing that the place in common ruin those who had entered Affcontained supplies of grain, rum, medicine, ghanistan in pride and triumph, to change its clothing, and other stores, of the value of four rulers and its laws, and him who owed to lacs of rupees—that the immense loss which their arms a diadem which now trembled on would be sustained by the abandonment of his brow. "It no sooner," says Lieutenant them was not the worst effect to be appre- Eyre, "became generally known that the hended, but that such an act would greatly commissariat fort, upon which we were depen-add to the confidence of the enemy, while it dent for supplies, had been abandoned, than would involve the almost certain destruction one universal feeling of indignation pervaded of the whole British force, there not being the garrison; nor can I describe the impa-within the cantonments a stock of provisions tience of the troops, but especially the native portion, to be led out for its recapture-a! feeling that was by no means diminished by shells were thrown from the Bala Hissar into their seeing the Affghans crossing and re-the town, but with little effect, beyond the crossing the road between the commissariat alarm which they were calculated to create. fort and the gate of the Shah Bagh, laden Plans were suggested for recapturing the with the provisions on which had depended our ability to make a protracted defence." as yet remained in it; but they were suggested Well, indeed, might indignation and impa-only, not acted upon. tience prevail; and so strongly were they expressed, that at last it was resolved to make an attempt against Mahomed Shurcef's fort, the practicability of capturing which had occasioned so much solemn discussion, during which all the stores were lost. Two guns, under Lieutenant Eyre, were to open a fire have the assistance of a condittor possessed on the fort, under cover of which a party, under Major Swaine, was to advance and blow open the gate with a bag of powder. The guns opened their fire, and continued it until their supply of ammunition was nearly exhausted; but, from some cause, the party which was to force the gate remained still, without attempting to perform their allotted task, and the whole were recalled into cantonments. "Thus," remarks Lieutenant Eyro, "the enemy enjoyed their triumph undiminished, and great was the rage of the sepoys of the 37th native infantry, who had evinced the utmost engerness to be led out, at this disappointment of their hopes."

On the following day another attempt was made upon the embarrassing fort, which would seem to have been creeted for no other purpose but to confuse the counsels and baffle shooters, who found cover among some ruins the efforts of the British force. At an early hour three iron nine-pounders were brought tainty the British artillerymen while engaged to bear upon the north-east bastion, and two howitzers upon the contiguous curtain. The firing was maintained for about two hours, during which the artillerymen were exposed to the fire of the enemy's sharp-shooters stationed on a couple of high towers which being attempted, had he not offered to take on completely commanded the battery. A prac himself the ontire responsibility of the act. ticable breach being effected, a storming Thereupon the general ordered a force to be party, consisting of three companies, one of provided to storm the fort. It consisted of her Majesty's 44th, one of the 5th native infantry, and one of the 37th native infantry, and one of the 37th native infantry, infantry, two horse-artillery guns, one mounarched forward and speedily carried the tain-train gun, and a considerable body of place. The death three of this reduction for the control of the cont place. The death-throe of this redoubtable native forces. Captain Bellew undertook to fort was far less violent than might have been blow open the main gate, but from accident expected from the degree of tenacity attri- or error he missed it, and instead, blew in the buted to it. About one hundred and fifty wicket gate at the side, affording an aperture men succeeded in planting the British flag of such small dimensions that not more than upon it; but it is to be lamented that the two or three mon could enter abreast, and gallant officer, Ensign Raban, of the Queen's these were compelled to stoop. Under these 44th, who first waved it on the summit of the disadvantages, a handful of the assailants got breach, was shot through the heart while in in; among these were Colonel Mackerell, of

For some days after this affair, shot and commissariat fort, and so much of the stores

The enemy appeared on the heights in great numbers, and with great boldness, and little was done or attempted that was calculated to check this feeling in them. The very debilitated state of General Elphinstone's health, at this time, rendered it necessary that he should of greater bodily vigour, and accordingly Brigadier Shelton, the officer second in command, was called from the Bala Hissar to cantonments. His presence was followed by increased activity; but the credit of the change appears to be due to Sir William Macnaghten, towards whom it is a bare act of justice to state, that whatever of promptitude and energy was displayed in the higher depart-ments of affairs at Kabool during these unhappy scenes, seems traceable to him. The enemy had taken possession of some forts, one of which, called the Rika Bashee fort, was situated directly opposite an inclosure, known as the Mission compound, at the north-cast angle of the British cantonments, and within musket-shot of the works. Into these they in the vicinity, picked off with deadly cerin working their guns. Sir William Mac-naghten strongly urged the necessity of dislodging the enemy from this post, but would probably not have succeeded in obtaining the consent of the military authorities to the task the act of thus displaying the signal of his her Majesty's 44th; Lieutenant Cadett, of country's triumph. The cavalry pursued the fugitives from the the 37th Bengal native infantry, and Lieu-ace, and the hills were speedily covered with tenant Bird, of the shah's force. Though the the cavairy pursued the tugitives from the the 37th Bengai native infantry, and Electroplace, and the hills were speedily covered with the enemy's horse issuing forth for their protection. A severe encounter took place, but the enemy threw out such vast numbers that the garrison, who, not doubting that the no serious impression could be made on them, and as the day closed, both parties retired from the conflict. the fort opposite to that which had been of cavalry round the corner of the fort spread Colonel Mackerell has already been mentioned. panic among the troops before the gate; they bring back the men to their duty; and when Major Scott, of the 44th, after resorting time to remove the whole before nightfall. A without effect to command, expostulation, and guard was applied for to protect the remainder, entreaty, called on volunteers to follow him, the call was answered by only a single private. All would now have been lost but for the iron perseverance of Brigadier Shelton, who, amidst the hot fire of the enemy and the wild rush of the recreant troops, stood firm and unmoved-striving, by the exercise of his authority, and still more by his animating example, to save the British name from the disgrace impending over it. He at last succeeded in rallying the men, who advanced once more to the attack, and once more wavered, although now the fire of the guns from the cantonments, and a demonstration on the pean and native, manifested an unsteadiness part of the British cavalry, had checked the career of the Affghan horse. But the hesitation was overcome by the energy of the brigadier. The assailants pressed forward, and the fort was won.

The situation of the small British party who had entered the fort, and remained within it while their comrades were shrinking from their duty without, was a subject of intense native troops. The capture of the gun being and painful interest. Lieutenants Cadett and thus frustrated, Lieutenant Even with a horse Hawtry had returned, to endeavour to bring artillery gunner, descended the rest was to be where it lay, and spiked in ascertained. The little band, it appears, on finding themselves deserted, had hastily shut the gate through which the greater part of the garrison had escaped, and secured the The unhappy circumchain with a bayonet. stances, however, prevailing on the opposite side, encouraged the enemy to return, which they did in considerable numbers; and having succeeded in removing the bayonet, the gate was re-opened, and the foe rushed in. Their fury was exercised without restraint upon Colonel Mackerell, whom they hacked in a frightful manner. Lieutenant Bird, with two sepoys of the 37th, found shelter in a stable, which they barricaded. One of the sepors was killed, but Lieutenant Bird and the other defended themselves for a considerable pering -maintaining a fire which knocked down carried. Unhappily, at this moment a charge | engaged in skirmishing without. The fate of Several adjacent forts were, on the fall of turned, and it became, says one of the narra-turned, and it became, says one of the narra-tors of the event, "a scene of saure qui peut." one some grain was found—a most welcome The officers in vain exerted themselves to discovery. No time was lost in beginning to transport it to a safer spot, but there was not but refused; and in the morning, as might have been anticipated, it was gone.

On the 13th November, the enemy again appearing in great force on the heights, and firing into the British cantonments, a force was sent out to disperse them. This movement, like the attack on the Rika Bashee fort. was suggested by Sir William Macnaghten, who, on this occasion also, was required to take upon himself the entire responsibility attached to it. There was another and more lamentable point of resemblance between the two occasions. On both, the infantry, Euronot to be expected. The fortune of the day, however, was with the British, and a gun was taken from the enemy. Another might have been captured, but it was protected by a hot fire from a body of Affghan infantry, and the 44th could not be prevailed upon to incur the danger attendant on carrying it of. The fear of the Europeans was sized by the a jemadar of artillery, who repeated the blow [drew some supplies, was occupied by the while the officer lay on the ground, and then enemy; and Major Swayne, of the 5th native rushed out, followed by nearly all the Maho-infantry, was despatched, with a small force metans in the place. The troops who re-of horse and foot, and one gun, to dispossess mained were completely disorganized; and them. A second gun was afterwards ordered from this post, also, it became necessary to to his support. The village was to have been retreat. Proceeding towards Kabool, the stormed, but no attempt was made to carry toils and perils of the road were so dispiriting, this intention into effect. The officer in comthat all the fugitives dropped off excepting the mand, according to Lieutenant Eyre, "would single soldier who, as already mentioned. arrived with the two officers at the British for several hours to maintain a useless fire on cantonments, where, says Lieutenant Eyre, "they were received by their brethren in party being under cover, but the cavalry and arms as men risen from the dead." Other artillery exposed to the fire of the enemy officers exposed to similar dangers were less without the opportunity of effecting any fortunate. Dr. Grant, a surgeon, who, like object of importance adequate to the risk many members of his profession in India, had incurred and the loss sustained. In the honourably distinguished himself by services evening Brigadier Shelton joined them, with not falling within the routine of his proper a reinforcement under Colonel Oliver, but no dation deposited with Maior Political and the colonel Oliver, but no dation deposited with the routine of the proper a reinforcement under Colonel Oliver, but no duties, departed with Major Pottinger and more daring or decisive course was the result; Lieutenant Haughton from Charekar; but and, finally, in the language of Lady Sale, shortly afterwards disappeared, from what cause was unknown; and two officers sta- It was resolved on the 23rd to repair the tioned at a fort in Kohistan, about twelve error of the preceding day, as far as reparamiles from Kabool, Lieutenant Maule and tion can be said to be practicable in cases Lieutenant Whelan, after being deserted by where the loss sustained is not so much in their men, were barbarously murdered.

ment proceeding under the command of Cap-seventeen companies of infantry, consisting tain Woodburn, of the shah's service, from of five of her Majesty's 44th, under Captain Ghuznee to Kabool. force left by Sir Robert Sale on his departure Lieutenant-Colonel Oliver, six of the 37th fell rapidly into disorder; the larger portion native infantry, under Major Kershaw, of her deserted to the enemy, and the rest refused Majesty's 13th; one hundred sappers, under to remain at Gundamuck; with them the officer in charge, Captain Burn, was compelled to retire to Jelalabad, leaving two guns and much baggage behind them. At Walker; a hundred men of the corps known Pesh Boolak, between the Khyber pass and Jelalabad, Captain Ferris, of the shah's sergun was with great difficulty got to its position in the corps where the corps known as Anderson's horse, and a single gun. The Jelalabad, Captain Ferris, of the shah's sergun was with great difficulty got to its position in the corps known in the corps known as Anderson's horse, and a single gun. vice, found himself surrounded by the enemy, on a knoll, commanding an inclosure in the destitute of ammunition, and in danger of village, which, from the fires perceived in it, being abandoned by his troops. Some of them was judged to be the principal bivouac of the had gone over the walls, but were cut up by enemy. The gun, as soon as practicable, the enemy; and the fear of meeting the same opened, and the enemy, in some alarm, fate was believed to be the chief motive by retreated, from the open space to the shelter which the rest were deterred from following afforded by the houses and towers, from their example. Having no prospect of relief, whence they kept up a sharp fire of jezails. It is to ensure the enemy, and he succeeded; but village under cover of the darkness (there the abandonment of the fort involved the loss being no moon), and before the enemy had of treasure to the amount oft hirty-eight thou-time to recover from the panic into which they eand rupees, as well as some stores and private had been thrown; but the opportunity was property.

At Kabool, the state of affairs remained for a period of several days almost unchanged in "were most anxious to be led against the any respect. The same indecision and in-village, to take it by storm, but the brigadier activity which had heretofore prevailed in the would not hear of it." At length, as day British cantonments continued to exist; and dawned, the caution of the commander gave neither go forward nor retire," but continued the houses in the village; the infantry of the "The troops returned, having done nothing. physical or material strength as in confidence The chapter of disasters was further swelled and character. At two o'clock in the morn-by the surprise and destruction of a detach- ing Brigadier Shelton marched out with At Gundamuck, the Leighton, six of the 5th native infantry, under suffered to pass without profit.

"Both officers and men," says Lady Sale, the enemy appear not to have been without a due share of the same unmilitary qualities. And, it was believed, from the failure of amountaining was done or attempted on either side. In the 22nd of November both parties seemed suddenly roused to the recollection that they were in the position of belligerents. A village remained in the place. A storming party was called Behmauroo, from which the English formed under Major Swayne; but mischance frustrated the effects of a movement too long the gun, they made off with the limber and postponed. The officer commanding the storm- horses. The conflict was renewed, and for arriving at the principal gate, which was now from the enemy similar to that which not long was irreparably frustrated. Major Kershaw, suddenly halted and led off his followers, themselves of such cover as they could find, only. crept gradually up the hill on which the British force was posted, they gave way able, as that which befell the movement of Rewards, of an amount magnificent in the Brigadier Shelton, cannot be passed over eyes of a private soldier, were offered for without some attempt to trace its causes; and the capture of the enemy's flag, but in the views of Lieutenant Eyre upon this subwas fruitless, as though the appeal had been as well as by the agreement of competent made to men of wood. Several officers adjudges. He says, "No less than six great vanced to the front, and pelted the enemy errors must present themselves even to the with stones, the men looking on. The enemy most unpractised military eye, each of which made a dash at the British gun, and the contributed in no slight degree to the defeat cavalry were ordered to charge for its pro- of our troops, opposed as they were by over-tection, but neither the command nor the wholming numbers." The first and greatest example of their officers could induce them to of these mistakes, according to the opinion of stir. The gun was captured, the artillerymen the authority quoted, was the taking out a fighting gallantly in defence of it, though single gun. It appears that a general order, unsupported, and two of them were killed. issued under the government of the marquis The first square of the British infantry was now in flight. The second kept its position, and in its rear the flying troops were with some difficulty rallied by their officers. The reparate of firmness was not without effect, had installed. Brigadier Shelton, it is stated, appearance of firmness was not without effect.

ing party missed his way, and instead of some time maintained; but a second attack open, he came to a small wicket which was before had caused the British infantry, Eurobarricaded, and believing himself unable to pean and native alike, to turn in disgraceful force it, he withdrew his men under cover, flight, was made by the enemy with the same where they remained until recalled. In the result. No effort could recall the men into mean time vast numbers of the enemy issued action, nor even prevail on them to retire in from the city, and covered a hill immediately order. They ran in the most outrageous con-opposite to that occupied by the British force, fusion, pursued by the enemy, who destroyed and separated from it only by a narrow gorge, them in vast numbers. The gun, for which on Lieutenant Walker, with his irregular horse, its rescue fresh horses and limber were prohad been despatched to cut off the fugitives cured, was overturned and lost; the wounded from the city, but the plain was now swept by here for the most part left on the field, to be hordes of cavalry, who evidently designed to hacked and hewed by the weapons of their perform the same duty with regard to Licuternant Walker. He was therefore recalled, render disaster complete and overwhelming. The abandonment of the attempt to storm had A fire opened on the pursuers by part of the afforded opportunity for throwing reinforce shah's force; a charge made by Lieutenant ments into the village as well as supplies of Hardyman, with a fresh troop of cavalry; and ammunition, and thus the purpose for which the extraordinary conduct of one of the the troops had marched out of cantonments Affghan chiefs, who, in the heat of pursuit, with three companies of the 37th, being left favoured the progress of the flying: but for in the position first taken by the British force, the help thus afforded, scarcely one of those the brigadier marched with the remainder of who went forth to capture the village of the troops, and his gun, to oppose the enemy Behmauroo would have returned. Lieutenant on the opposite height. Here his disposition Walker, while charging with Lieutenant of his force is stated by military authorities to Hardyman, at the head of a few of his horsehave been singularly injudicious. Skirmishers men whom he had rallied, received a mortal were brought forward to the brow of the hill : wound. Colonel Oliver, Captain Mackintosh, the rest of the infantry were formed into two and Lieutenant Laing, were also left dead on squares, supported by his cavalry, but the the field. The three companies of the 37th whole exposed to the fire of the enemy, which nativo infantry who remained with Major was delivered from behind hillocks and other Kershaw do not seem to have manifested any But worse even than defective portion of that cravon spirit which unhappily generalship, was the sunken spirit of the men. pervaded the rest of the British force. They The skirmishers could with difficulty be kept were hard pressed throughout the day, and to their posts, and when a daring party of the were among the last to leave the hill. One comenemy descended the gorge, and, availing pany returned with a naick and two privates

A result so fatal, and withal so dishonourable, as that which befell the movement of The endeavour to lead to a charge jest appear to be countenanced by probability, upon the enemy's party, whose ardour was disabled, and was twice specially reported as further diminished by a casualty which had befallen one of their chiefs, and abandoning twelve o'clock on the trous described when the British, eight hours before mid-day, moved to be, by the reflection that the officer who thus defeat, destruction, and disgrace. The single disposed his men, had enjoyed, in his younger gun was served by men worthy of the country whose honour they maintained, but their fire was constantly interrupted, as, after a time, the vent became so hot that it was impossible to continue it. The second error is the very obvious one of neglecting to take advantage of the temporary panic produced in the enemy, by storming the village before they had time to recover from it. "Had," says Lieutenant Eyre, "a storming party been led to the attack, under cover of the darkness which would have nullified the advantage they," the defenders, "possessed, in being under cover, the place must inevitably have fallen into our hands; and thus would the principal object of the sally have been gained, and a good line of retreat secured for our troops in case of necessity." The third error enumerated by the writer above quoted, was the neglect of raising defences for the protection of the trievable—it being alike impracticable, under British troops on the hill; and this error he such circumstances, either to rally the men, pronounces "so manifest as to be quite unaccountable." A party of sappers had accompanied the force for the purpose of forming a breastwork, but their services were not called into requisition, though it is said the expediency of resorting to them was specially pointed out at the time when the enemy were crowning the opposite height with multitudinous numbers, after the attack on the village had failed. The good effects of raising such a defence would not have been limited to the protection of the men, important as was this object; it would have enhanced the difficulties of the enemy in advancing, and have given confidence, not only to those within the work, but also to those beyond it, from the know-ledge that, if hard pressed, they could fall Why such a back upon a place of safety. precaution was neglected, it is now impossible to explain. The fourth error adverted to by Lieutenant Eyre, was the extraordinary step of forming the infantry into squares. The value panic in our ranks, and the worse than false of such a formation, when the object is to nature of our position, had not been sufficient resist an attack by horsemen, is well under-"All," says Lieutenant Eyre, "have heard of the British squares at Waterloo, which defied the repeated desperate onsets of Napoleon's choicest cavalry. At Behmauroo we formed squares to resist the distant fire of infantry, thus presenting a solid mass against the aim of, perhaps, the best marksmen in the world, the said squares being securely perched on the summit of a steep and narrow ridge, up which no cavalry could charge with effect." It thus appears that the men were disposed in the manner best adapted to oppose cavalry, there being no chance or possibility the only solace to the soldier in the hour of days. "the benefit of Peninsular experience." The disposition of the cavalry is mentioned by Lieutenant Eyre as the fifth of the great errors committed; this force, instead of being in the place where they might have been useful in protecting the line of communication with cantonments, and further have been able to advance readily to any point where their services would have been required, being hemmed in between bodies of infantry, and "exposed for several hours to a destructive fire from the enemy's juzails, on ground where, even under the most favourable circumstances, they could not have acted with effect." The arrangement seems to have been erroneous from the beginning. and at the disastrous close of the day the error became frightfully apparent, horse and foot being mixed up together in a way which increased the confusion and rendered it irreor to withdraw them in good order. The sixth and last error of this fatal day, was the prolongation of the fight when nothing could be gained but some addition of loss and discredit to the vast mass of both previously accumulated. Lieutenant Eyre's judgment upon this point shall be given in his own words. "Shortly after our regaining possession of the gun, one of the brigadier's staff, Captain Mackenzie, feeling convinced that, from the temper of the troops, and from the impossibility of rectifying the false position in which the force was placed, not only was success beyond hope, but that defeat, in its most disastrous shape, was fast approaching, pro-posed to the brigadier to endeavour to effect a retreat while it was yet in his power to do so with comparative impunity. His reply was, 'Oh no I we will hold the hill some time longer!' At that time, even if the slaughter of the soldiers, the loss of officers, the evident to open all eyes as to the impossibility even of partial success (for the real object of the expedition, viz. the possession of the village of Behmauroo, had been, as it were, abandoned from the very first), the weakness and exhaustion of both men and horses, who were not only worn out by bodily fatigue, but suffering grievously from extreme thirst, and the debility attendant on long fasting, ought to have banished all idea of further delaying a movement in which alone lay the slightest chance of preserving to their country lives by the eventual sacrifice of which, not even of any cavalry being brought against them, and, at the same time, in the manner best adapted to admit of their being picked off, in the largest numbers, by the species of force actually engaged against them. The astonishment expressed by the critic whose views are here followed, is heightened, as well it might their origin in the blunders of the former. is beyond doubt that the troops could feel but had in prospect still greater. that all recollection of it could be obliterated.

was now low indeed, and no chance of safety sciousness that they were themselves unworthy for either civil or military seemed to exist but of trust, the Affghan chiefs demanded the in negotiation. Sir William Macnaghten had delivery of the guns and ammunition of the repeatedly urged the military authorities to British force. This was conceded, and an make some demonstration worthy of their officer was sent to select such as might appear to country, and when they had yielded a reluc- be the most desirable. Hostages were required tant consent, they had generally thrown on and given. The Affghans demanded that Brihim the responsibility of the experiment. They appear now to have been not less strenu- nant Eyre states, the brigadier "having ous in recommending him to negotiate than he had previously been in urging them to duty," the demand was not insisted on. But fight. The Kabool chiefs also manifesting an it was not in the diplomacy of this unhappy inclination for an exercise of diplomacy, a series of negotiations commenced, and was continued through many days. Any high degree of precision in relating the particulars of these negotiations being unattainable, it would be idle to enter into them at length. It is said that the proposals of the Affghans were, in the first instance, of such a nature as to call forth an unqualified and indignant rejection from the British envoy. Proposals more moderate and reasonable were subsequently submitted by him, and received by the chiefs with apparently a sincere desire for an amicable arrangement, the only exception to the seeming prevalence to such a feeling being furnished by Mahomed Akbar Khan, a son of Dost Mahomed Khan. The conditions were afterwards modified in various ways. At one time Shah Shoojah was to descend from the throne; at another he was to be maintained of those who had fallen in the attempt to bear on condition of his daughters forming matrimonial engagements with some of the chiefs in opposition to his government, and of his abandoning some offensive manifestations of pride which had given great offence. The shah seems to have vacillated not less than his enemies; he consented to retain the sovereignty pearance at Mulwagul turned the fortune of on the conditions specified, and afterwards the day, and but withdrew his consent, thus leaving the nego-struction; and tiators to revert to the original terms. It with a handfi with no prospect but that of retreat before mattered little, however, what terms were the enemy sconer or later, in good or in bad professedly adopted, for it was evident that the order, as might happen, and seemingly without chiefs meant to observe none, but to avail themany purpose but the gratification of mere selves of every opportunity which might offer wilfulness. Nothing apparently could be worse to counteract the British authorities by trick than the military arrangements of the day, and fraud, exercises of ingenuity which, in excepting it were the temper of part of the Affghan estimation, mark the highest triumph troops engaged. The deficiency of manhood of human intellect. While these diplomatic in the latter completed the disasters which had proceedings were in progress, the British It troops were suffering great privations, and little confidence in their leader, who, amidst were suggested for their retreat without an abundant display of personal courage, asking the aid or the permission of the Affmanifested no other quality of a good general; ghans, but all were beset with dangers and but for English soldiers to turn when called difficulties so great as to insure their rejecupon to advance, is happily so rare an occurtion. Under the terms of the convention, the rence, that even with the partially extenuating circumstances above mentioned, the fact is tan, surrendering the fortresses which they calculated to inspire as much of astonishment as of disgust. Instances of individual heroism facilitated by a supply of beasts of burden, to there were, but with reference to all the occurrences of the day, he to whom his councever, were not provided; and almost every try's honour is dear must wish it were possible day brought some new experiment on the patience of the British envoy. Affecting dis-The character of the British arms in Kabool trust, or perhaps really feeling it from congadier Shelton should be one, but, as Lieuteexpressed a decided objection to undertake the period that the British name met with its deepest humiliation. While negotiations, ever shifting and never ending, were in progress, the countrymen of Clive, and Lawrence, and Coote, and Lake, and Wellesley, were miserably throwing away that military character which those great men had raised, and which had been far more efficacious in raising and maintaining the British empire in the East than all other agencies of human origin.

The English in India, while pursuing a career on the whole of unparalleled brilliancy, had yet received occasional checks; they had sustained reverses, but down to this miserable epoch they had met them like men. Now, the spirit which had borne the British standard triumphant through so many fields of carnage-which had so often planted it on the summit of the breach choked with the bodies it thither—the spirit displayed by the officer who, marching to the relief of Trichinopoly, entered it in triumph, supported by two of his men, because unable to support himself; by the disabled and suffering man, and his array of sick and wounded, whose unexpected ap-British force from dehumble-regeant who,

an overwhelming force, a miserable fort till ties of her Majesty's 44th, which post of it crumbled around him into a shapeless heap honour they were now considered unworthy to of rubbish—that spirit seemed to have departed | retain." from the British soldier in Kabool. The rich heritage of glory bequeathed to him by his monts having continually before them the predecessors in arms—the fruit of toils and prospect of starvation; a result averted only struggles innumerable in every part of the by temporary supplies, of the continuance of world—was forgotten or despised, and a mean which no reasonable confidence could be enterregard for personal safety, which tended to tained. defeat itself, usurped the place of the noble clogy, they were literally supported "from and unshrinking endurance which had so long hand to mouth." The restraints of discipline been classed among the prominent characteristics of his countrymen.

occasion for a display of pusillanimity far more ammunition to be distributed to certain campregaining possession, and resorted to various modes of attack for the purpose. In imitation of the English, they attempted to blow open to the letter of orders, and it is stated, that the gate with powder, but of the proper mangement of this operation they seem to have been entirely ignorant; the powder exploded, but the gate was unharmed. They next commenced mining one of the towers, but Lieuter for their reception, being placed under the nant Sturt, under cover of the night, entered trees of an orchard, in charge of a small their mine and blew it up. The garrison were quard. The consequence was a scene of contheir mine and blew it up. The garrison were guard. The consequence was, a scene of conso much alarmed by these attempts, that they fusion and plunder, soldiers and camp-followers were not deemed trustworthy; and a change indiscriminately rushing to the spot, and each was consequently made. The new garrison man carrying off what his fancy suggested as consisted of one company of the Queen's 44th, desirable for him to possess. Some officers under Lieutenant Gray, and one company of exerted themselves to check the tumult and mine, it had been necessary to open a passage of order was ultimately restored, and the near the walls, and this opening was, when larger portion of the misappropriated articles the work was performed, secured by barricad-recovered; but the incident afforded a lamenting. Through this defence, a party of the able indication of the relaxation of those ties enemy, who had crept up, discharged a few which withhold a body of soldiery from deshots, and Lieutenant Gray was slightly generating into a disorderly mass of armed wounded. He proceeded to cantonments to adventurers. get his wound dressed, and the men of the 44th, immediately on his departure, prepared when, if they were to be regarded as sincere for flight. Lieutenant Hawtrey used every possible exertion to withhold them, but in lations agreed upon, the British troops in the vain; they precipitated themselves over the Bala Hissar marched out to join their brethren walls, and were soon followed by the sepoys in cantonments. But the Affghan chiefs still of the 37th, who previously were disposed to held back from the execution of the provisions stand to their duty. Two of the latter body, indeed, were left dead in the fort, but not a man of the 44th. The enemy of course took The enemy were in possession of all the forts The bazaar village was possession of the fort. garrisoned by a party of the 44th, who, on observing the flight of their comrades from Mahomed Shereef's fort, were about to follow their aggravate the sufferings of the unhappy force, example, but were stopped by their officers. After this manifestation, a guard of sepoys fall of snow covered the ground. was stationed at the entrance of the bazaar, with orders to prevent the departure of any Europeans on duty there; and on the following day the European garrison was withdrawn, and a company of the 37th native infantry put in their place. "This," says Lieutenant Eyre, being the weakest point of our defences, had hitherto been protected entirely by par- all energy, and when no conceivable amount

Days passed away, the British in canton-In homely but expressive phrasegradually pressed more and more lightly, till at last they were scarcely felt. With a view The defence of Mahomed Shereef's fort, to the approaching necessity for retreat, when which seemed destined to be a never-ending the magazine would include the general had become a prey source of annoyance and discredit, furnished to the enemy, the general had cordered some disgraceful than the blunders which preceded followers; and commanding officers were diits capture. The enemy were very desirous of rected to indent for new arms and accountrethe 37th Bengal infantry, under Lieutenant protect the property, but for some time their In order to destroy the enemy's authority was openly defied. The semblance

The negotiations having arrived at a stage or binding, effect might be given to the stiputo which they had bound themselves. The British force was entirely at their mercy. which commanded the cantonments, and the distress, for want of provisions and forage, which prevailed, was extreme. Further to the winter became intensely cold, and a heavy

At this moment,—when difficulties, multi-farious and seemingly insurmountable, surrounded the British force; with fierce enemies, or pretended, but treacherous, friends without the cantonments, and a perishing mass within; when to remain or to fly seemed alike fraught with destruction; when the troops had lost barred,—a proposal was suddenly made to the strongly manued. It does not appear, how-British envoy, to which, unhappily, his embarrassments induced him to lend a willing on this point; for, on leaving the canton-car. It came from Akbar Khan, and was to ments, he expressed disappointment at the the most influential of the opposing chiefs, parent weakness of the garrison, remarking and believed to be one of the most hostile, to his companions, with not less of justice should be re-occupied by the British troops, who the siege." were to remain in the country some months longer, and then to evacuate it in a friendly of the proposed agreement were not in readimanner; Shah Shoojah to retain the sove-ness, and a letter from the general, remon-reignty, but Akhar Khan to be named his strating against their being thus employed, vizier, and, in addition to that office, to receive was despatched to the envoy after he had pecuniary reward to an enormous amount. taken his departure, and which consequently In one respect, the proposal went further he never received. On approaching the place than has been stated. To imprison the chief of meeting, the small escort which had accommost active in his opposition to Shah Shoojah, was, in Afighan eyes, but little; and the envoy was assured that, for a sum of money, the which was partially screened from view from head of his enemy should be laid at his feet. the cantonments by some small hillocks. The answer of Sir William Macnaghten was Akbar Khan soon afterwards appeared, with such as became the representative of the some other chiefs, among whom was the government with whose interests he was in-|brother of the man proposed to be seized and trusted; he intimated that it was neither his imprisoned. A carpet was spread, and the custom nor that of his country, to give a price conference began. It had not long continued, for blood.

Looking at the proposal with the coolness which time and distance, and the absence of a circle round the spot. This was noticed by anxiety allow, it appears too monstrous to Captain Lawrence, who suggested that, as the pass, even with a novice in diplomacy; still less could it be expected to succeed with one so experienced in the ways of men, and so familiar with the wiles of eastern policy, as was Sir William Macnaghten. It came, however, at a moment when almost any change seemed a relief from the harrowing troubles which had pressed so overwhelmingly on his mind; and it should be remembered also, that, extravagant as were the suggestions offered to him, the history of the East affords multitudinous instances of the severance of apparent friends and the union of avowed enemies in no wise more strange and unaccountable than those which were involved in But, whatever the degree of this overture. plausibility which the proposal may bear to different minds, Sir William Macnaghten eagerly, as it seems, embraced it; excepting, however, let it be repeated, that part which involved the infamy and guilt of assassination. His consent having been secured to the outline of the plan, it was suggested that a conference, for the purpose of arranging the details, should take place between him and Akbar Khan. The place selected for the interview was the plain, and thither, about noon on the 23rd of September, Sir William Macnaghten pro-ceeded, accompanied by Captains Lawrence, Trevor, and Mackenzie. He had requested that the general would have two regiments and two guns ready for secret service; and the existence of a feeling that the experiment he treachery had been consummatwas about to make was attended with dauger, ation. And what was done?

of energy appeared equal to the occasion; was indicated by his desiring that the garrison when the access of hope on every side seemed might be kept on the alert, and the walls this effect: that Ameencollah Khan, one of paucity of men on the ramparts and the apshould be seized, and become prisoner; that than of bitterness, that it was "of a piece Mahomed Khan's fort and the Bala Hissar with the military arrangements throughout

The troops required to carry out the objects panied the envoy halted, and he advanced with the three officers to the selected spot, when a number of men, heavily armed, gradually drew near, and seemed to be forming conference was of a secret nature, they should be ordered to a distance. Akbar Khan answered, that it was of no importance, for that they were all in the secret. Immediately afterwards, he exclaimed, "Scize! seize!" and the envoy and his three companions were immediately pinioned from behind, deprived of their swords, and carried off prisoners. Captain Trevor was speedily put to death, and the same fate befell Sir William Macnaghten, who, it is reported and generally believed, was shot by Akbar Khan with a pistol, one of a pair just before presented by the envoy to the ruthless chief. The bodies of the murdered men were exposed to the indignities and outrages with which eastern revenge is wont to visit the remains of fallen foes, and were paraded through the streets of the city in barbaric triumph. The hand of Sir William Macnaghten was exhibited in savage derision at the window of the place in which the two surviving prisoners were confined.

It will naturally be supposed that the events last related were sufficient to rouse the British military authorities from the torpor which had so long oppressed them; that some effort worthy of the country that gave them birth, the service to which they belonged, and the character which they had to maintain, would have been made to rescue from captivity, they still lived, the victims of Akba treachery, or to inflict just retrib

tion be answered by Lieutenant Eyre, an that neither branch of the alternatives sugeye-witness. His testimony is, that the intelligested was practicable, and that it would be gence brought, "instead of rousing our leaders better to pay any sum of money than to proto instant action, seemed to paralyze their long hostilities. It was resolved, therefore, to faculties; and although it was evident that our accorde to the demands of the enemy; and had envoy had been basely entrapped, if not actu- they been ten times more unreasonable, and a ally murdered before our very gate, and though | hundred times more humiliating, probably the oven now crowds of Afighans, horse and foot, were seen passing and repassing to and fre in hostile array between Mahemed's fort and the place of meeting, not a gun was opened upon them; not a soldier was stirred from his post; | hostages domanded could not be furnished. no sortic was apparently even thought of ; circular was addressed to the married officers, treachery was allowed to triumph in open day: the nurder of a British envoy was perpetrated in the face and within musket-shot of a British army; and not only was no effort made to avenge the dastardly deed, but the body was lest lying on the plain, to be mangled and insulted, and finally carried off to be paraded in the public market by a ruffically mob of fanatical barbarians." And thus low was British spirit sunk, and thus was British disgrace in his own country." It was not honour tarnished, and thus were a knot of ob-stated to the chiefs that, unusual and disgracescure barbarians suffered to revel in successful treachery, and defy the arms of that power before which the choicest troops of Europe had given way !

And now the enward progress of humiliation was rapid and foarful indeed. Insult followed hard upon treachery, in the transmission, from the chieftains upon whose hands the blood of Sir William Macnaghton and Captain Trevor was yet fresh, of a new treaty for the acceptance of those into whose hands the management of the interests of the British government might have passed. It contained the same articles as the provious treaty, with the addition of three others:—Ist, That the British force should leave behind all their guns excepting six; 2nd, That they should give up all their treasure; and 3rd, That the hostages already held by the Afighans should be exchanged for married men, with their wives and families, Somo domur aroso as to the acceptance of this treaty. Major Eldred Pottinger, who had consented, at the urgent request of the general, to act as political agent, objected, and a council was summoned to consider his objections. It consisted of General Elphinstone, Brigadiers Shelton and Anquotil, Colonel Chambers, Captain Bellew, and Captain Grant. To these officers Major Pottinger opened his views, avowing his conviction that no confidence could be placed in any treaty formed with the Affghans, and that to bind the government of India by engagements to evacuate the country, to restore the deposed ameer, and to pay a sum amounting to fourteen lacs of rupees—for this formed part of the arrangement—was inconsistent with the claims of public duty. Entertaining these opinions, the only honourable course, in his judgment, was, either to hold out to the last at Kabool.

same determination would have been adopted. Bills were given for the vast ransom required, under the protence, indeed, of affording protection, but still a difficulty remained. offering considerable personal advantages to those willing to risk the safety of their wives and families, by allowing them to be detained, but nearly all refused. A magniloquent answor was therefore given upon this point, to the effect that "it was contrary to the usages of war to give up ladies as hostages, and that the general could not consent to an arrangemont which would brand him with perpetual ful as was the surrender required, an attempt to obtain the means of making it had been resorted to and had failed. The enemy were not inexorable-the bills on the government of India had probably softened them-they agreed to receive hostages of the sterner sex; and the requisite number being provided, this ground of difficulty was removed. Captains Drummond, Walsh, Warburton, and Webb, were accepted, and proceeded to join Captains Conolly and Airey, who were already in the keeping of the Airghans. Captains Lawrence and Mackenzie, who had been seized with Sir William Macanghten, were permitted to return, as was also Captain Skinner, who was previously in the power of the enemy.

The sick and wounded of the British force, it was arranged, should not accompany their companions on the approaching march from Kabool. They were to be left in care of the chiefs, and in furtherance of this design they were conveyed into the Bala Hissar. The movement of the rest was delayed under various protonces till the 6th of January, when, in the language of Lieutenant Eyro, fatal morning dawned which was to witness the departure of the Kabool force from the cantonments in which it had sustained a two months' siege, to encounter the miseries of a winter march through a country of perhaps unparalloled difficulty, where every mountain defile, if obstinately defended by a determined enemy, must inevitably prove the grave of hundreds." The circumstances under which the march commenced are thus described by the same author:-" Dreary indeed was the scene over which, with drooping spirits and dismal forobodings, we had to bend our unwilling steps. Deep snow covered every inch of mountain and plain with one unspotted shoot of dazor to endeavour to force a way to Jelalabad, zling white, and so intensely bitter was the Major Pottinger appears to have found no cold as to penetrate and defy the defences of support in the council. One and all declared the warmest clothing." Sad and suffering, issued from the British cantonments the min-the amount of more than fourteen lacs had gled mass of Europeans and Asiatics, of com- been drawn, had promised in return an escort; batants and non-combatants, of men of various and the parties which thus hovered round the climes, creeds, complexions, and habits; part British force were at first supposed to constiof them peculiarly unfitted to endure the tute a portion of it. This belief was after a hardships of a rigorous climate, which hard time dispelled by their taking a stop which ships, however, had to be shared by them in not even by the most liberal construction common with some whose sex ordinarily ex-|could be regarded as forming any part of the empts them from participating in such scenes, duties of an escort. and others whose tender age might well entitle rear-guard, under Brigadier Anquetil, com-them to the like privilege. The number of posed of her Majesty's 44th, the mountain-the fugitive crowd was large; about four thousand five hundred fighting men, and not less The guns were captured, but gallantly retaken than twelve thousand followers, besides women by Lieutenant White and a few artillerymen, and children. The advance were in motion at who, however, being unsupported, were unable nine o'clock in the morning, and from that to retain what they had so honourably won hour till the evening the throng continued to back. The 44th could not be brought up, and pass through the gates of the cantonments, the guns were in consequence necessarily of fanatical Afighans, "rending the air with spiked, "amid the gleaming sabres of the their exulting cries, and committing every enemy." Ten more guns were afterwards kind of atrocity." A fire of jezails was opened spiked and abandoned, the horses attached to on the retiring troops, and Lieutenant Hardy-| them being unable to drag their burden further man, of the 5th light cavalry, with about fifty through the snow. rank and file, fell victims to it. The canton- It was now lear ments were no sooner cleared than all order in the vicinity; and communications were was lost; troops, camp-followers, and laggage, opened with him. That trustworthy person-public and private, became intermingled in age declared that he had been sent to escort one disorderly mass, and confusion, universal the British force to Jelalabad, and that the and inartricable provided. Thus was the approving which they had suffered was the and inextricable, prevailed. Thus was the annoyance which they had suffered was the march commenced. The shadows of night result of their having marched contrary to the overtook the fugitives while still pursuing wishes of the Affghan chiefs. He insisted, their weary course, but its darkness was accordingly, on the force being halted at Bootrelieved by the blaze which rose above the hauk till the following morning, and moreover British residency and other buildings which demanded six hostages, to insure its not the enemy had fired upon taking possession of marching beyond Tazeen till news should be the cantonments. Many scroys and camp received of the evacuation of Jelalabad by Sir followers, unable to contend longer with their Robert Sale, for which an order had been misery, lay down to wait, in silent despair, the despatched, in compliance with a stipulation approach of the relief from earthly suffering in the treaty. The required halt was made, which death, at no distant period, must bring; but in the morning the Afighaus resumed and of those who struggled forward, some their attacks. A party of them was rapidly perished before the morning dawn. The pro- dispersed by Major Thain, at the head of her vision for encampment was miserably deficient; Majesty's 44th, who on this occasion showed here, as on the march, all was disorder and no lack of soldierly spirit. destitution. Thousands of wretched men were unable to obtain either shelter, fire, or food; to be traversed. The defile is about five miles the snow was their only bed, and to many it long, and is bounded on both sides by lofty proved the bed of death.

The morrow brought no alleviation of suffering; it brought only the agony of consciousness, in exchange for the oblivion of slumber. The march was resumed in a different order from that pursued on the preceding day, "if that," says Lieutenant Eyre, "could be called order which consisted of a mingled mob of soldiers, camp-followers, and baggage-cattle, preserving not even the faintest resemblance of that regularity and discipline on which depended our only chance of escape from the danger which threatened us." One of the shah's regiments had disappeared, and was believed to have returned to Kabool. The rest of the force proceeded, numerous small bodies of Affghans, horse and foot, hanging on such a dense, irregular multitude, was frightits flanks, and moving in a parallel direction ful, and the spectacle then presented by with it. The chiefs, in whose favour bills to waving sea of animated beings, there

They attacked the British which were immediately occupied by hordes abandoned, though not until they had been

It was now learned that Akbar Khan was

And now the fearful pass of Boothauk had and precipitous hills. A mountain torrent dashes through it with such impetuosity that the frost had produced no effect upon it beyond the edges, where ice was accumulated in slippery masses, affording to the wretched animals which were still retained a footing neither easy nor safe. This stream had to be crossed twenty-eight times. The defile gradually narrows towards the spot where the force was to emerge from it, or such portion at least as might survive the dangerous passage, for the heights were crowned with infuriated Ghiljies, ready to deal death to those below. "The idea," says Lieutenant Eyre, "of threading the stupendous pass before us, in the face of an armed tribe of bloodthirsty barbarians, with whom a few fleeting hours would transform fall, and continued till morning. future traveller on his way, can never be forgotten by those who witnessed it." But the and children, and one was given up to the concentrated difficulties and perils were not to be avoided. The advance entered the pass, and a hot fire was commenced on them. Several ladies accompanied the advance, but no feeling of respect for the character or the timidity of woman operated to slackon the fire from above. These helpless and unoffending females were compelled to make their way through the pass with hundreds of shots flying around them. Happily none of them sustained injury, excepting Lady Sale, who received a ball in her arm. Akbar Khan, it will be remembered, had promised protection, and several of his adherents rode forward with the advance, and employed thomselves strenuously, whether sincerely or not, in exhorting the occupants of the heights to desist from firing. Their admonitions were unheeded; the balls fell thickly among the throng laboriously struggling onwards, and fearful was the slaughter. To maintain order and regularity under a murderous fire which those sustaining it have no power to return with effect, may be regarded as one of the highest triumphs of discipline; but the force exposed to this severe trial in the pass of Boothauk had become dreadfully deteriorated in moral as in physical strength; and it will excite no surprise, that, among men who for several days had been strangers to both food and repose, and who, for a much longer period, had been gradually losing the sense of duty. and with it that of self-respect, panic should arise, and spread with tremendous rapidity. Such was the fact; soldiers and followers rushed on indiscriminately, impelled by the wildness of despair, caring for nothing but the one object of reaching the end of the pass, and ling. perhaps conscious of nothing but of the dangers "Thousands," says Lieuwhich beset them. tenant Eyre, "seeking refuge in flight, hurried munications with Akbar Khan; and one of a forward to the front, abandoning baggage, arms, ammunition, women, and children, regardless for the moment of everything but their own lives." Some of the details of this most disastrous passage are thus given by the same authority. "The rear-guard, consisting of her Majesty's 44th and the 54th antive infantry, suffered severely; and at last, finding that delay was only destruction, they followed the general example, and made the best of their way to the front. Another horse-artillery gun was abandoned, and the whole of its artillerymen slain. Captain Anderson's eldest girl and Captain Boyd's youngest boy fell into the hands of the Affghans. It is supposed that three thousand souls perished in the pass." Such was the price of flight, and what remained to those who survived the carnage? their part; and, indeed, the dangers which Misery even exceeding that which they had surrounded those most dear to them were so previously endured, the task of describing imminent, and the sufferings to which they which will best be performed by again quoting were unavoidably subjected so great, as to the testimony of Lieutenant Eyre. "On the warrant, in some degree, the belief that no force reaching Khoord Kabool, snow began to change could be for the worse. The general

Only four into a line of lifeless carcases, to guide the small tents were saved, of which one belonged to the general; two were devoted to the ladies sick; but an immense number of poor wounded wretches wandered about the camp, destitute of shelter, and perished during the night. Grouns of misory and distress assailed the ear from all quarters. We had ascended to a still colder climate than we had left behind, and were without tents, fuel, or food." miserable night succeeded a morning bringing with it the confusion, uncertainty, and woo which had marked so many by which it had been preceded. Two hours before the time fixed upon for marching, a large portion of the troops, and nearly all the camp-followers, moved off without orders. They were recalled, in consequence of communications from Akbar Khan, promising-supplies, and, at the same time, strongly urging a halt till he could make some arrangements for carrying into effect his benevolent desire of escorting his British friends in safety. This halt, like almost every other measure which had been taken since the outbreak in Kabool, seems to have been most injudicious. "There can be no doubt," says the author to whose brief but valuable narrative reference has so frequently been made, "that the general feeling in camp was adverse to a halt, there being scarcely even a native soldier who did not plainly perceive that our only chance of escape consisted in moving on as fast as possible. This additional delay, therefore, and prolongation of their sufferings in the snow, of which one more march would have carried them clear, made a very unfavourable impression on the minds of the native soldiers, who now, for the first time, began very generally to entertain the idea of desert-

The halt, however, if it answered no other purpose, afforded opportunity for further commost extraordinary nature was received from him. It was to the effect, that the ladies who accompanied the British force, with their husbands and children, should, in order to preserve them from further hardship and danger, be placed under his protection, he pledging himself to escort them safely, keeping them one day's march in the rear of the army. This was a startling proposal; but time and circumstances pressed, and the general gave an unhesitating consent. There could be little doubt that the object of Akbar Khan was to get possession of the married men and their families as hostages, a point previously atrefusal of the officers interested. It does not appear that any resistance was now offered on enemy, till compelled by the determination of sical suffering, was unknown. his efficers; it need, therefore, excite no sur-representation of Lieutenant Eyre. price that he should yield now, when the European soldiers were now almost the only motives for yielding were so much more urgent. nor can his reasons be an object of much curiexity. As, however, he left them on record, it is right to give them as stated by himself. They were two: a desire, natural and laudable, to remove the ladies and children, after the horrors they had already witnered, from the further daugers of a camp; and a hope that, "as from the very commencement of the negotiations the similar had shown the greatest auxicty to have the married people as hostages, this mark of trust might elicit a corresponding feeling in him."

Orders were given for all married officers and ladies to depart immediately with a body treating force was met by the destructive fira of Affghan horse who had been despatched to of the enemy recurely perched on the high conduct them to the asylum in which they ground. The straitened pass soon became were to find refuge. It was the intention of literally choked with dead and dying; and the general to give all the wounded officers here the last remains of the native infantry the opportunity of availing themselves of the disappeared. Many fell; the rest, throwing the opportunity of availing themselves of the advantages, such as they might be, of Akhar away their arms and accourtements, fled for Khan's protection. As this desire could have been suggested by no other feeling than hand, and captured the public treasure, humanity, it is proper to notice it, as corroborating the received impression of the character of General Elphinstone, who, whatever may have been his failings in the unhappy proceedings at Kabool, is universally to come up with them. A straggler from represented as an anniable and estimable man. Few were benefited by the kind intentions of the general, for the Affahan guard were in imanner all that escaped the fury of the enemy. the general, for the Afighan guard were in manner all that escaped the fury of the enemy such haste to return with the charge which joined; the direful truth that, with these they had been appointed to receive, that only miserable exceptions, the two missing columns two of the wounded officers were in time to had been cut off and destroyed, at length join them.

on—the food and fuel so liberally promised was still large, by the ruffian chief came not. "Another Akbar Khan victims to a miserable death." survived and remained faithful to the standard miles, forming the duties of soldiers: their limbs and wounded.

had not objected to the former demand of the the sinking frame against the attacks of phyefficient men left, the Hindostances having all suffered more or less from the effects of the frost in their hands and feet; few were able even to hold a musket, much less to pull a tringer; in fact, the prolonged delay in the snow had paralyzed the mental and bodily powers of the strongest men, rendering them inexpable of any u-eful exertion. Hope seemed to have died in every breast; the wildness of terror was exhibited in every countenance.

The end was now rapidly approaching. a narrow gorge, lying between the precipitous spurs of two hills, the advance of the rein them.

The women who had shared in the dangers question. The British force now consisted of and horrors of the march to Boothauk were seventy men of the Queen's 44th regiment, a now in the hands of the enemy; for though hundred and fifty cavalry troopers, about fifty Akbar Khan professed a different character, horro artillerymen, with one twelve-pound that of an enemy is the only one in which he can howitzer. Such was its strength as to combe justly regarded. The men had to struggle batants, but the number of camp-followers

Akbar Khan approached, and proposed that night of starvation and cold consigned more the remainder of the British force should be Another disarmed, and placed under his protection. morning revealed the same weakness—the The general refused, and the march was same suffering—the same disruption of mili-resumed. Its course lay through a narrow tary ties which had marked preceding ones, defile, in which the troops were exposed to but in an aggravated degree. The men who the harnesing and destructive fire of the had proudly marched from the Indus to the enemy as before. The energy of Brigadier heart of Afighanistan, had occupied its fairest Shelton saved the force from total destruction cities, beaten down its strongest fortresses, here, and it reached the Tazeen valley, where and given law from its capital, were now negotiations were again renewed with Akbar unable to defend themselves from those who Khan. The same proposal was again made by thirsted for their blood. It was not alone that him, and again it was rejected by the British death and desertion had frightfully thinned general. After this failure, it was determined their ranks-a large portion of those who to push on for Jugdulluk, distant twenty-two On moving off, the last gun was which they followed, were incapable of per-labandoned; the same fate befell the exhausted The march commenced at scarcely retained sufficient strength to bear seven o'clock, and it was hoped that Jugdulluk them along their despairing way; and that might be reached under cover of the night, but elasticity of spirit which sometimes sustains this was not accomplish. It was not till dawn of day that the advance arrived at General Elphinstone became anxious to return. Kutter-Sung, a place ten miles short of that But this was not a matter which depended on which was in view; and the junction of the himself; he was in the toils, and, though he rear did not take place till eight o'clock. The might struggle, he could but beat the air. march had not been without annoyance from the enemy, but the darkness depriving them of the opportunity of calling into operation their skill as marksmen, their fire was comparatively harmless, excepting as to the alarm In this way it greatly which it excited, embarrassed the movement of the retreating hour of danger; but Akbar Khan was no force; "the panic-stricken camp-followers child of chivalry, and the appeal was vain. now resembled a herd of deer, and fluctuated backwards and forwards en masse at every general had been long and anxiously looked shot, blocking up the entire road, and fatally for—it were, perhaps, too much to say exretarding the progress of the little body of pected. Early in the morning, Major Thain soldiers who, under Brigadier Shelton, brought and Captain Skinner had ridden out in the up the rear." Of the exertions of this officer direction of the camp of Akbar Khan, to throughout the last and fatal stage of the proceedings of the Kabool force, all narrators with tidings of the state of affairs, when they speak in terms of the highest praise and admi-were attacked, and Captain Skinner mortally ration. If he had failed in some of the higher and more delicate duties of command, he well supported that reputation for daring courage enemy's unceasing fire, continued to be en-and indomitable perseverance which has never dured; and as night drew on, it became been denied him. Jugdulluk was reached in obvious that nothing was to be hoped from a the afternoon, but no repose awaited the longer stay. The whole body accordingly hapless fugitives. A fresh invitation to communicate with Akbar Khan was answered by in the best manner that they could. the despatch of Captain Skinner, but the Ghiljies were not at first aware of the moverenewal of negotiations was accompanied by ment, but they soon gained intelligence of it, no cessation of hostile operations. From the and marched in vast numbers to their work of hills the fire of the enemy was kept up, ex-destruction. Officers and men, troops and fol-cepting during a brief interval, when Captain lowers, fell in incredible numbers, and the Bygrave, at the head of fifteen Europeans, progress of the retiring party was a moving pushed up, the enemy flying before them in massacre. Some officers, who were well the greatest trepidation. But short was the mounted, rode forward with the few remainperiod of relief, for the valiant band had no ing cavalry; straggling parties of Europeans, sooner returned than the enemy were again at under various officers, followed, as circumtheir post, in the exercise of their occupation stances would permit. The day dawned; the interview with Akbar Khan was a message muck, and now their numerical weakness was from that chief to the general, requesting his obvious to the enemy-they could muster presence at a conference, and demanding only about twenty muskets. An attempt to Brigadier Shelton and Captain Johnson as negotiate was made by one of the officers, hostages for the evacuation of Jelalabad, but it ended in nothing, and the unhappy Among the strange occurrences of the period, it is not the least strange that this invitation defence without a hope of ultimate success. was accepted. General Elphinstone made over the command to Brigadier Anquetil, and, accompanied by the officers whom Akbar Khan had selected for captivity, proceeded to wait upon that personage. They were re-ceived with great show of civility; food was placed before them, and this substantial indication of friendship was accompanied in profusion by the lighter and more aërial refresh-ness of their situation, the assailants were ment of gracious promises. In the morning several times repelled. The struggle lasted a conference was held, at which the three till nearly every man of the British party was British officers and all the influential chiefs wounded, when a final onset of the enemy were present. It seems to have been stormy, and Akhar Khan played the part of a mediator one of the few that survived the slaughter, with a degree of skill and dexterity only to be but severely wounded, had, before leaving displayed by one who, from the earliest dawn Jugdulluk, tied round his waist the colours of reason, had entered into an apprenticeship the regiment, which were thus preserved. of hypocrisy. Nothing decisive was deter-

The expression of his wish to withdraw, and of his desire to be furnished with the requisite escort, after sundry repetitions, was enforced by representing that it was altogether at variance with British notions of honour that a general should be separated from his troops in the

At the British position, the return of the watch for the approach of some messenger wounded. Throughout the day hunger, thirst, exhaustion, and the galling annoyance of the The result of Captain Skinner's remnant of the infantry approached Gundaparty had no resource but to stand on their This gloomy task they executed with an unshrinking determination. They occupied an eminence opposite to another held by the enemy; the fire of the latter gradually diminished their numbers, and at intervals the work of extermination was accelerated by a rush, sword in hand, upon the devoted party, by whom, notwithstanding the utter hopelesscompleted their destruction. Captain Souter,

It has been stated that twelve officers and mined upon, and the day beginning to wane, some cavalry rode on ahead of the rest of the curable, the chiefs joined Akbar Khan, the person of the nawab, as well as several other same step being taken by a son of Shah privoners, and much property. An immensa Shoojah's, named Suftur Jung. The enemy quantity of warlike stores was found at Kurgradually approached Kandahar. On a large mool, the greater part being concealed in and body taking up a position within a short dis-labout the zenana, and other places little tance of that place, General Nott determined likely to be chosen as receptacles for such to attack them, and on the 12th January articles. The conduct of the nawab was moved out for the purpose, with nearly all his indeed altogether so unaccountable, that his disposable force. The enemy were strongly sanity might reasonably be questioned. But, posted, with a morass in front, and the fire of whatever the causes which led to his extraortheir matchlockmen was, for a time, well dinary acts, he was properly removed from the kept up; but they broke and fled, on the government of a people whom he opposed close approach of the British force, so rapidly, beyond even the ordinary measure of oriental indeed, as to escape severe loss. The attack, despotion, and his territory was annexed to however, and the success which attended it, led to very beneficial results: it gave confidence to one party, and tended to dispirit other call for British intervention. It became the other.

A pause in the active course of events affords a convenient opportunity for withdrawing attention for a space from the affairs of the command of Captain W. F. Beatson. The Affghanistan, suspension being further expe-garrison was reputed to be four thousand dient from the change which took place in the strong; but, after two days' cannonading, and office of governor-general. The position of a severe conflict under the walls, they with-General Nott at Kandahar, of Sir Robert Sale drew, leaving the place to be occupied by the at Jelalabad, and of the force under General British. Pollock in Peshawur, will be borne in mind. It is only necessary to add, with respect to borough, who had been appointed to succeed the state of affairs on the western side of the Earl of Auckland in the government of British India, that the son of the former khan India, arrived at Calcutta, and on the 12th of of Kelat had been recognized by the government, that in Sinde and Beloochistan all was quiet, and that a force stationed in those countries was prepared to advance under Brigadier England to co-operate with General Nott in any manner that might seem expedient. A very brief notice of certain events cotemporary with the progress of the Affghan war, but unconnected with it, will be required, in order to complete the history of the Earl of Auckland's administration.

Of these, the first to be mentioned is the occupation of Kurnool by a British force. This territory, lying in Southern India, was held by a native chieftain, whose conduct, both as regarding his neighbours and his own subjects, was so extraordinary as to call imperiously for interference. No difficulty was experienced in obtaining possession of the amid the turmoil of war, he found opportunity capital, but the nawab, with some hundreds of to turn his thoughts to questions connected his followers, withdrew from the place; or with the internal improvement of the country rather, the former was carried away by the which he governed; and had his lot been cast latter, and detained as a sort of hostage for the in calmer times, it cannot be doubted that satisfaction of arrears of pay. Lieutenant such questions would have occupied much Colonel Dyce, 34th Madras light infantry, more of his attention, and have been pursued marched with a force against them, and, after to results of practical utility. a sharp encounter, succeeded in securing the

the British dominions.

Bundlecund, always distracted, afforded annecessary to move a force against a fortified place called Cherong. The force, which was partly regular and partly irregular, was under

On the 28th of February, Lord Ellenborough, who had been appointed to succeed departure. For obvious reasons, no attempt can be made towards a general estimate of the character of the Earl of Auckland, in the manner pursued with regard to some of his predecessors. The judgment of the reader must be determined altogether by the facts recorded. The great event of his lordship's administration was the invasion of Afighanistan, and to what extent he is responsible for this is uncertain. The impression which he left in India appears to have been highly favourable, and the candid among those who dissent from his policy will unhesitatingly concede to him the possession of many qualities calculated to command respect, and many to conciliate regard. Though the larger portion of the period of his administration was passed

CHAPTER XXXI.

GHUZNEE RECAPTURED BY THE AUTGHANS-DEPENCE OF JELALABAD-DEPEAT OF ARBAR KHAN--GENERAL POLLOCK RELIEVES JELALABAD-PROCEEDINGS AT KANDAHAR-MURDER OF SHAH SHO JAH-LORD ELLENBOROUGH'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH GENERALS NOTT AND POLLOCK-MARCH OF GENERAL POLLOCK ON KABOOL-MARCH OF GENERAL NOTT-ACTS OF RETRIBUTION—RECOVERY OF THE PRISONERS—RETURN OF THE ARMIES TO INDIA.

LOND ELLENBOROUGH arrived in India in the | sions were scarce, fuel still more scarce. The midst of a disastrous war, and the first event repoys, compelled to undergo such severity into the hands of the enemy. The town had of water at last failed, a result accelerated been lost at an earlier period. It appears that by an occurrence which might otherwise be tish authorities at Kabool for sanction to certain necessary repairs and alterations there, but failed to obtain it. "The infatuation that appears to have seized the chief authorities there," says an officer present at the time in Ghuznee, " not only hurried them on to ruin at the capital, but also paralyzed us at Ghuznec." It is, however, to be remembered, as some extenuation of the apparent neglect, that there was quite enough to be done and thought of at Kabool to occupy all the energy and all the reflections of those who held command there. "At the eleventh hour," continues the writer above quoted, " the colonel took the responsibility on himself;" and it is certainly to be lamented that he did not assume it at an earlier period, for, it is added, "most invaluable time had been suffered to pass unimproved, and when the enemy made their appearance under our walls, they found us but ill prepared for a siege, especially when it was not man alone we had to combat with, but the rigours of a winter as intense as that of Canada." The inhabitants of the town were believed to be faithful to the British cause. It turned out that this, like many similar convictions, was a delusion. They intrigued with their countrymen outside, and finally provided means for their admittance, when they poured in, in such vast numbers, that the garrison, after fighting for a night and a day, were compelled to abandon the town and retire to the citadel. This was maintained until the 1st of March, more than ten weeks after the loss of the town. During this interval the duty was most oppressive, and the weather frightfully severe. Snow would often fall in the course of a single night to the depth of two feet, and the thermometer was sometimes fourteen degrees below zero. Every officer and man in the place was on duty of importance occurring after his arrival par- of duty in a climate to which they were untook of the character of too many which had accustomed, and whose rigours they were unpreceded it. The fort and citadel of Ghuzuce, litted to sustain, rapidly became diseased, and so gallantly won by the British arms, returned the hospital was soon crowded. The supply when the affairs of Shah Shoojah and his ally regarded as of favourable aspect—the disapbegan to go wrong, Colonel Palmer, the officer pearance of the snow, on which the carrison commanding at Ghuznec, applied to the Bri- mainly depended. This continuation of suffering enforced the surrender of the place, a step which Colonel Palmer had been authorized, and indeed required, to take by the authorities at Kalsool, in pursuance of the arrangements into which they had entered with the Affghan chiefs, but which he had avoided as long as practicable. The evacuation was to be effected on terms according to which the garrison were to march out of the citadel within six days, when a portion of the city was to be assigned for their abode till they could pursue their march from the place, which was to be performed with their colours, baggage, and a sufficient stock of ammunition, and under an escort for protection. To observe the terms of agreement the chiefs solemnly bound themselves by an oath upon the Koran; and on the 6th of March the British troops quitted the citadel, and took up their quarters in the town. The value of an Afighan oath was soon ascertained. On the day after the evacuation of the citadel by the British, they were treacherously attacked by the enemy, and during three days had to defend themselves in the best manner they were able against the guns of the citadel, so lately at their own disposal, and the furious onsets of countless numbers of fanatics thirsting for their blood. Overtures for a termination of hostilities came at intervals from the commander, Shumsoodeen Khan, nephew of Dost Mahomed, but the horrible conditions tendered for the acceptance of Colonel Palmer were, that all the officers should surrender themselves to the personal care of Shumsoodeen, abandoning the sepoys to the fury of the murderous hordes who surrounded them. This of course was refused, and the slaughter proceeded; officers and men alike falling victims to it. Certain death, sooner or later, seemed to await every individual of the garriduring eight hours of the twenty-four; provi- son, and this was the impression of the sepoys, who at learth, without the knowledge of their finel surveys which seemed to resemble of the officers, held a consultation among the market, entire ends to defe and exercise them. The officers, held a consultation among the medical profiles only to dely and exercises them. The and finned a plan of excepting to less awar encounful sallies by which S.r. Indeed Sile through a hole in the outer wall of the town, elected the vicinity of east 1. dec of the which they forthwith commenced dipping, enemy have been transfed in their proper. When their determination had been taken, place. When the first directors a new farm they informed their allies of it, expressing Kabesal reached him, but inhibitation a place of refuse to the retreating intimating that, however this might be, the large first hap accepted the meaning that the virtually decerted, the by a miscrable despenditment in the intelligations had an choice but to surrounder them except that the Kabesal force had a large data to a transfer. officers had no choice but to surrender them grence that the Kales! I res had been totally relyer to Shumoonleen.

to be pursued, and they were all either not had the check which the forest to be this check which the forest to be this check which the forest to be this check which the forest to be the check which the check which the check which the forest to be the check which the check which the check which the forest to be the check which to be pursued, and they were an extra child they got Wald received. His position was now rest clear of the Afficians escupying and surrounds centical, and one of the grounds upon which it ing the city, they would have had but little had been resintained had consect to exist. But chance of existy. They appear to have utterly be determined to perceives. "I nuglit," be mistaken the distance to Irohanne, belo sing easy, "whilet our enomies were enough in it to be much less than it netually was, and no plandering the force form Kalsol, have at tensoning could ratisfy them of their error, or tempts I ard perhaps effected, though with of the utter impracticability of their reaching heavy to a a retreat across Klader, but I the place. The officers familittle letter than resolved, at all bazards, on ret religioishing the sepoys; their lives were preserved, but my grasp on the chief town of the valley of they were subjected to almost every descrip. Ningrahar, and the key of eastern Affghanis-tion of suffering that can add to the necessary tan, so long as I had reason to consider that and unavoidable evils of innerisonment.

lamented, and much its probable effects on works was now completed. The labour had the enemy, as well as on the British troops, been great, extending to the removal of a vast to be feared. But Jelalahad still happily held quantity of cover for the enemy, the demoout, under the command of Sir Robert Sale. Ition of forts and old walls, the filling up.
The difficulties with which this most able and ravines, the cutting down of trees, and sweepmost heroic officer had to contend have been ing away of gardens. Such were the operaalready adverted to, but now, when the nar-tions of the destructive kind. In the conrative has advanced to the period when a structive they had embraced the raising the crisis in the affairs of Jelalabad was impend-parapets to the height of six or seven feet, ing, it may be proper to notice them some-repairing and widening the ramparts, extendwhat more in detail. He found the walls in ing the bastions, retrenching three of the a state which, in his own language, "might gates, covering the fourth with an outwork, have justified despair as to the possibility of and excavating a ditch ten feet in depth and defending them." Not only was the space twelve in width round the whole of the walls. inclosed by the walls far too extensive with "The place," observes Sir Robert Sale, "was reference to his force, but their tracing was thus secure against the attack of any Asiatic bad; there was no parapet except for a few enemy not provided with siege-artillery." The hundred yards, and this not more than two greater part of their defences, however, were feet high. Earth and rubbish had accumulate overthrown by one of those awful visitations lated about the rumparts to such an extent not unusual in Affghanistan, the effects of that there were roads in various directions which are thus described by Sir Robert Sole: across and over them into the country. There - It pleased Providence on the 19th of Fewas a space of four hundred yards to other at bruary to remove in an instant this ground of no point of which, excepting one, the garrison could show themselves; the population within down all our parapets, built up with so much was disaffected, and without the place was labour, injured several of our bastions, cast to surrounded by ruined forts, walls, mosques, the ground all our guard-houses, demolished tombs, and gardens, from which a fire could a third of the town, made a considerable breach be opened on the defenders at twenty or thirty yards' distance. It has already been mentioned that the garrison were greatly in want of provisions and ammunition; every possible tain Broadfoot, the garrison engineer, "in exertion was made to reduce the consumption of both to the point of necessity, and to protuce fresh supplies, while the apparently hopeiness task of placing the town in a respectable state of defence was carried on with a vicour the energies of either officers or men. No state of defence was carried on with a vigour the energies of either officers or men. No destroyed in the Ghibic deffer. While they The attempt of the separate encape proved deprived of the opportunity of atterline such a miserable follure. A heavy snow fell, in cour to others, Sir Robert Sale was discipablich they became bewilders has to the route pointed of that which he expected for himself d unavoidable exils of imprisonment. four government desired to retain it." The Greatly was the full of Glurnes to be restoration, or rather the reconstruction of the confidence. A tremendous earthquake shook time was lost in lamentation or despairing were to be supported by the fire of the guns, bewilderment; "the shocks had scarcely ceased when the whole garrison was told off into working parties; and before night the breaches were scarped, the rubbish below cleared away, and the ditches before them dug out, while the great one on the Peshawur side was surrounded by a good gabion parapet." It is not easy to give an adequate impression of the labour performed, or of the noble spirit which prevailed among those who laboured, without quoting at an inconvenient length from official reports. One extract respecting the general result must suffice. "From the following day all the troops off duty were continually at work, and such were their energy and perseverance that, by the end of the month, the parapets were entirely restored, the Kabool gate again serviceable, the bastions either restored or the curtain filled in when restoration was practicable, and every battery re-established." So extraordinary did this appear to Akbar Khan, who had now advanced to a spot about seven miles distant from the place, that he could find only one solution of the difficulty, and unhesitatingly attributed the unlooked for security of Jelalabad to English witchcraft. The enemy soon approached nearer,-Akbar Khan establishing his headquarters about two miles from the city, and a secondary camp about a mile distant,—invested the place, and kept up a vigorous blockade. Various skirmishes from time to time took place, and the spirit, gallantry, and military skill displayed in them would justify a minute detail of the circumstances of each, did space permit. They must, however, be passed by with this general notice, saving the mention of some of the officers who respectively led the detachments engaged, and who well merited the approbation which they received from the illustrious officer under whom they served; they were, Colonel Dennie, a name long associated with noble deeds; Captain Broadfoot, garrison engineer, who was severely wounded; Captain Fenwick, of the Queen's 13th light infantry; Captain Pattison, of the same regiment; Captain Oldfield, and Lieutenant Mayne, of Shah Shoojah's cavalry. These successes, as Sir Robert Sale observed, were "crowned by Providence by the issue of the decisive and brilliant attack on the camp of the sirdar, on the 7th of April." Of this attack it will be proper to take somewhat more extended notice. Three columns of infantry were formed, the centre consisting of the larger part of her Majesty's 13th, mustering five hundred bayonets, under Lieutenant-Colonel Dennie; the left, of the chief part of the 35th native infantry, also five hundred strong, under Lieutenant-Colonel Monteath; and the right, of one company of her Majesty's 13th, and one company of the 35th native infantry, with a de- and it was deemed advisable to await their tachment of sappers, the whole amounting to arrival. It was contrived, however, to open three hundred and sixty, and under the com-communications with Sir Robert Sale, warning mand of Captain Havelock. The columns him of the approach of relief, and representing and by the small cavalry force at Jelalabad. The troops issued from the Kabool and Peshawur gates early in the morning, and found the whole force of the enemy, amounting to about six thousand, formed in order of battle for the defence of their camp, their right resting on a fort, their left on the Kabool river. Some ruined works, recently repaired, were filled with Affghan marksmen, ready to pour forth a fatally directed fire. The attack was led by the skirmishers and column under Captain Havelock, by whom the extreme left of the enemy's advanced line was pierced. The central column directed its efforts against a square fort upon the same base, which was obstinately defended. And here a calamity oc-curred for which victory scarcely affords compensation; Colonel Dennie, while leading his regiment to the assault, was mortally wounded, and shortly afterwards breathed his last. command of the column thus devolved upon Captain Wilkinson, of the same regiment, and the conflict proceeded. The rear of the work having been with some difficulty gained, orders were given for a combined attack upon the enemy's camp. The Affghans made repeated attempts to check the advance by a sharp fire of musketry, by throwing forward heavy bodies of horse which twice threatened in force the detachments of foot under Captain Havelock, and by opening guns under cover of a garden wall, served, as it was said, under the personal superintendence of the sirdar, but in vain. The artillery advanced at a but in vain. gallop, and directed a heavy fire on the enemy's centre, whilst two of the columns of infantry penetrated his line near the same point, and the third forced back his left from its support on the river, driving into it some both of horse and foot. In a very short time the foe was dislodged from every part of his position, his guns captured, his camp involved. in flames, and Akbar Khan, with his discomfited army, in full retreat towards Lughman. This defeat in open field by the troops whom he had boasted of blockading was indeed, as stated by Sir Robert Sale, "complete and signal." On the 16th of April, nine days after this memorable affair, the force under General Pollock reached Jelalabad.

General Pollock, on arriving in the camp at Peshawur, had found the four infantry regiments there dispirited by their recent failure; in truth, a very bad spirit prevailed amongst them, and, further, the ravages of an epidemic disease had thrown hundreds of men into hospital. Under such circumstances, it was obviously imprudent to attempt to advance, and the junction of her Majesty's 9th foot did not, in the general's opinion, change the state of things so materially as to warrant his taking such a step. Reinforcements were in the rear.

the whole force destined for the purpose; but found Mahomed Sadig, an insurgent chief, intimating, that in case of extreme emergency, strongly posted in the pass and on the con-an attempt to advance would be made at all tiguous heights to oppose his progress. The On the 5th of April, General Pollock found by the chief men of the place with the greatest himself in a condition to move forward to force | show of cordiality; but, though minutely queswhich was under Lieutenant-Colonel Taylor, Lieutenant-Colonel Moseley, of the 64th native infantry, and Major Huish, of the 26th native infantry. The conduct of some jezuilchees, under Captain Ferris, was highly spoken of his exterior defence, when a vast body sprang by General Pollock. The arrangements for into view, and it became evident that the conthe protection of the baggage were so complete that not a single baggage-animal was lost. This immunity from plunder is attributable to General Mc Caskill, who commanded the After this encounter, General Pollock experienced little opposition until he rushed down from the hills. Their efforts to arrived in safety, and happily in due time, at break the column were, however, unavailing, Jelalabad.

Kandahar continued to be maintained by General Nott, who, like Sir Robert Sale, refused to recognize the treaty concluded at Kabool, or to yield obedience to the order extorted from General Elphinstone for the surrender of the place. On the 7th of March he moved out of the city, with the larger part of his force, to attack the enemy, drove them before him across the Turnack, and then across the Urgundab. On the 9th he was able to approach sufficiently near to open his guns on them, when they dispersed in every direction and in comparative safety, General Nott being unprovided with cavalry adequate to the task of pursuit. During his absence a strong detachment of the enemy made an attack on the city, and succeeded in burning one of the gates, but they were repulsed, with great loss by the itself, may be regarded as relieving the British officer in command of the garrison, Major government from one source of embarrassment Lane of the 2nd regiment of Bengal native in dealing with the affairs of Affghanistaninfantry.

Kandahar from Sinde. Brigadier England, with an inconsiderable have been persisted in. British rulers, both at force, advanced through the Bolan pass, and home and in India, were heartily weary of the arrived safely at Quetta. It was his intention connection with Affghanistan; and the only to proceed through the valley of Pisheen to questions to be solved were, in what manner the village of Hykulzie, and there to await the and how quickly could it be dissolved? In a arrival of reinforcements coming up through communication from the governor-general in the pass; but on reaching the entrance of a council to the commander-in-chief, Sir Jasper the expediency of waiting for the junction of defile leading to the village, he unexpectedly Ultimately, it was resolved not to difficulty of acquiring accurate information in wait for the infantry regiment, but to move a country like that in which the British forward as soon as the cavalry and guns government were now carrying on war, the arrived; but further delay became necessary, danger of relying on friendly professions, which in order to complete arrangements with the liu the East are bestowed with a reckless pro-Seikhs who were to co-operate in forcing the fusion proportioned to their want of sincerity, Attempts had been made to purchase were here illustrated. At a village only six the aid of some native chiefs, and some money miles from the mouth of the defile, the British had been paid, but it seems to little purpose. commander and his officers had been received the pass. The task was accomplished, not in- tioned as to the state of the country, their deed, without difficulty, but with complete friendliness did not suffer them to proceed to Two columns were formed to storm the length of warning General England of the the heights, while a third advanced to the resistance which awaited him. When the first mouth of the pass. The severer duty fell to symptoms of opposition appeared, it was the lot of the flanking columns, the right of believed that the force of the enemy was small, and four light companies, supported by of her Majesty's 9th foot, and Major Ander- a small reserve, under cover of four guns, were son, 64th native infantry; the left under ordered to attack the hill. The strength of the enemy was concealed behind a succession of breastworks, with a ditch and abatis, until the British advance party reached the crest of test could not be advantageously maintained. The four companies engaged consequently fell back on the supporting column, which had to sustain an attack from the enemy's cavalry, who, on the retreat of the assaulting party, and the entire British force moved off in good order and without loss of baggage. quently, General England deemed it advisable to fall back to Quetta. This abortive attempt was attended by the loss of ninety-eight men, killed and wounded. Among the killed were two British officers, Captain W. May, of her Majesty's 41st, and Major Apthorp, of the 20th Bombay native infantry. The action took place on the 28th March.

On the preceding day Colonel G. P. Wymer, commanding a foraging party despatched from Kandahar, dispersed with great brilliancy a large body of the enemy's cavalry, who hung upon him and threatened the security of his convoy.

In the month of April an event happened which, though of little political importance in itself, may be regarded as relieving the British Had his life Shah Shoojah was murdered. Less fortunate was an attempt to relieve been prolonged, it is not to be supposed that For this purpose exertions to maintain him on his throne would forces in Upper and Lower Affghanistan will, in mind these general views and opinions of the government of India. They will in the first instance endeavour to relieve all the garrisons in Affghanistan which are now surrounded by the enemy. The relief of these garrisons is a point deeply affecting the military character of the army, and deeply interesting the feelings of their country; but to make a rash attempt to effect such relief in any case without a reasonable prospect of success, would be to afford no real aid to the brave men who are surrounded, and fruitlessly to sacrifice other good soldiers, whose preservation is equally dear to the government they serve. To effect the relief of the prisoners taken at Kabool, is an object likewise deeply interesting may be in or may come into our possession; and with reference to this object, and to that ble of the advantages which would be derived from the re-occupation of Kabool, the scene of our great disaster, and of so much crime, even for a week; of the means which it might afford of recovering the prisoners; of the gratification which it would give to the army; and of the effect which it would have upon our ene-Our withdrawal might then be made to rest upon an official declaration of the grounds on which we retired, as solemn as that which accompanied our advance, and we should retire as a conquering, not as a defeated power; but we cannot sanction the occupation of an advanced position beyond the Khyber pass by Major-General Pollock, unless that general should be satisfied that he can—without depending upon the forbearance of the tribes near the pass, which, obtained only by purchase, must, under all circumstances, be precarious, and without depending upon the fidelity of the Seikh chiefs, or upon the power of those chiefs to restrain their troops, upon neither of which can any reliance be safely placedfeel assured that he can by his own strength overawe and overcome all who dispute the pass, and keep up at all times his communication with Peshawur and the Indus." Similar feelings appear to have been entertained before the arrival of the new governor-general. In a letter of instruction addressed to Sir Jasper Nicolls shortly before the departure of Lord Auckland, even the maintenance of Jelalabad is spoken of as an event scarcely to be hoped Nicolls, dated 15th March, the following ob- excepting under some very unforeseen change, servations occur:—"The commanders of the no sufficient advantage would be derived from an attempt to retain possession of Jelalabadin all the operations they may design, bear for any prolonged period during the present season. "The fate," it is continued, "of the gallant garrison of that place will probably season. have been determined before the intimation of our opinion to the above effect can reach Major-General Pollock. But we would request your excellency, without delay, to inform the major-general that the main inducement for the maintenance of a post at Jelalabad,namely, that of being a point of support to any of our troops escaping from Kabool,—having now, it must be feared, unhappily passed away, it is the object of the government that he should, unless any unforeseen contingency should give a decidedly favourable turn to affairs, confine himself to measures for withdrawing the Jelalabad garrison in safety to in point of feeling and of honour. That object Peshawur, and there for the present holding can probably only be accomplished by taking together all the troops under his orders in a hostages from such part of the country as secure position, removed from collision with the Seikh forces or subjects." A few days afterwards, the following instruction, among others, of the relief of Ghuznee, it may possibly was transmitted to General Pollock by the become a question, in the event of Major government of India, Lord Auckland being become a question, in the event of Major-government of India, Lord Auckland being General Pollock effecting a junction with Sir still at its head:—"On the whole, you will Robert Sale, whether the united force shall understand that the great present object of return to the country below the Khyber pass, your proceedings in Peshawur is, beyond the or take a forward position near Jelalabad, or safe withdrawal of the force at Jelalabad, that even advance to Kabool. We are fully sensiof watching events, of keeping up such com-munications as may be admissible with the several parties who may acquire power in the northern portion of Affghanistan, of committing yourself permanently with none of those parties, but also of declaring positively against none of them, while you are collecting the most accurate information of their relative strength and purposes for report to the government, and pursuing the measures which you may find n your power for procuring the safe return of our troops and people detained beyond the Khyber pass." There was, there-fore, no substantial difference on this point between the views of the retiring governorgeneral and those entertained by his successor. General Pollock, who, from being on the spot, as well as from his military knowledge and habits, could best appreciate the difficulties around him, appears, even previous to his advance through the Khyber pass, to have been deeply impressed with a sense of the fatal consequences, temporary and permanent, which must follow the sudden abandonment of all hope of again establishing British superiority in Affghanistan. "If," he observed, "I were to advance with the intention of merely withdrawing the garrison of Jelalabad, my success in advancing must chiefly depend on concealing my intentions; for although (if I succeed in any negotiation to open the pass) every precaution will be taken by me to secure a retreat, I must expect that every man will rise to molest our return, as they would be left to the for. Intelligence, then recently received, is mercy of the Affghan rulers; and I must consaid to have convinced the government that, fess I sincerely believe that our return here, 2 P have a very bad effect both far and near."

The receipt of the intelligence of the fall of upon the Affghan army, it would be justifiable Ghuznee, and of the check received by General England in attempting to advance to than that of revenging our leaves and of resembling feelings entertained in the highest quarters, and orders were transmitted to discovered Nott to take immediate means for drawing off the garrison of Kelat-i-Ghiljie, to evacuate Kandahar, and to take up a position at Quetta. "The object of the above-directed tenth, and eleventh paragraphs of your orders measures," it was added, "Is to withdraw all our forces to Sukkur, at the earliest period at is for him alone to decide between the pray which the season and other circumstances ticability of a forward movement, either upon which the season and other circumstances ticability of a forward movement, either upon may permit you to take up a new position Kabool or Gundamuck (or its vicinity), and there." Subsequently, the governor-general the withdrawal of the whole force to Peshawur, heard of the defeat of the enemy by Sir The general is a clear-headed officer, and Robert Sale before Jelalabad, and of the easy you have leaded his advance with heavy retreat of General England to Quetta, but cautions." neither of these events reems in his mind neither of these events seems in his mind to have excited any sanguine hope. In a general that instructions of the proposed tenor despatch to the recret committee, dated Benares, 22nd April, after adverting to these transactions, the governor-general continues: "These several events, although they improve held by the British in Afghanistan, that, on our prospects to rome extent, have in no respect altered my deliberate opinion that it is expedient to withdraw the troops under Major-General Pollock and those under Major-General Pollock and those under Major-General Pollock and those under Major-General Nott, at the earliest practicable period, into positions wherein they may have certain and easy communication with India. That opinion is founded upon a general view That opinion is founded upon a general view appears to be such, according to the last of our military, political, and financial situadices received by the governor-general, that tion, and is not liable to be lightly changed." his lordship cannot but contemplate the pos-Three days before the date of the despatch sibility of your having been led, by the absence last quoted, the governor-general, being then of revious opposition on the part of any army aware that General Pollock had entered the in the field, by the divisions amongst the Khyber Pass, and concluding that he had Affghan chiefs, and by the natural desire you effected a junction with Sir Robert Sale, thus must, in common with every true soldier, wrote to Sir Jasper Nicolls, in reference to have of displaying again the British flag in a previous request that the commander-in-triumph upon the scene of our late disasters, chief would issue instructions which might be to advance upon and occupy the city of necessary for the guidance of General Pollock: Kabool. If that event should have occurred, —"The object of the instructions which will you will understand that it will in no respect thus be given to those officers is, to bring their vary the view which the governor-general respective corps into easy and certain compreviously took of the policy now to be purmunication with India. What ulterior destination may be given to those corps when that the opinion, that the only safe course is that of Major-General Nott, having drawn off the of withdrawing the army under your comgarrison of Kelat-i-Ghiljie, shall be concen-mand, at the carliest practicable period, into trated ultimately in the vicinity of Sukkur, positions within the Khyber Pass, where it and that of Major-General Pollock, having may possess easy and certain communication drawn off the garrison of Jelalabad, shall be with India." A further communication was, again on this side of the Khyber Pass, is a at the same time, made to Major Outram, matter for the most serious consideration." with a view to the movements of the British After expressing a wish to confer with the forces in Lower Affghanistan. For reasons commander-in-chief on the subject, and ad- which do not appear, Sir Jasper Nicolls, on verting to the possibility of selecting a new the 29th April, did forward instructions of the

unless I have first an opportunity of inflicting state of peril in which they have been placed some signal punishment on the enemy, would in Affghanistan, and it may still be hoped not without the infliction of some revere blow The receipt of the intelligence of the fall of upon the Affghan army, it would be justifiable

So anxious, however, was the governorline of operations, if aggressive measures character required by the governor-general should be deemed necessary, his lordship adds the following remark, clearly showing the tendency of his own judgment:—"It will, however, likewise be for consideration, whether our troops, having been redeemed from the loss that the retreat, when commenced, you are requested not to leave any trophies." | honour of the British name, and disperse the These orders were qualified by reference to three circumstances, as authorizing, not any wide departure from them, but delay in obey-They are thus enumerated:-"First, that you may have brought a negotiation for the release of the prisoners lately confined at Buddeeabad to such a point, that you might risk its happy accomplishment by with-drawing. Second, that you may have detached a lightly equipped force to endeavour to rescue Third, that the enemy at Kabool may be moving a force to attack you. In this improbable case, should any respectable number of troops have descended into the plain below Jugdulluk with that intent, it would be most advisable to inflict such a blow upon them as to make them long remember your parting effort." The exceptions under the first and second head were limited by the "I do not recomfollowing observations. mend delay in the first case, unless the prisoners are actually on their way to your camp, as no faith can be placed in Affghan promises. The second would of course require that you should await the return of the detachment. I allude entirely to the officers and ladies now or lately at Buddeeabad or its vicinity. at Kabool cannot, I think, be saved by any treaty or agreement made under existing circumstances at Jelalabad." In ignorance of the issue of these instructions, the governorgeneral, on the 4th May, caused a further communication to be made to General Pollock, enforcing the views previously propounded, representing that they had derived additional strength from the victory of Sir Robert Sale and the death of Shah Shoojah, and avowing an expectation that the general had already decided upon withdrawing his troops within the Khyber Pass. "The first object of the governor-general's anxiety," it was observed, "has ever been to withdraw with honour into positions of security the several corps of the army which he found scattered and surrounded in Affghanistan. That object," it was added, "may now be accomplished, as respects the army under your command."

The quotations that have been made from the despatches of the government of India show an accordance between the views of plann has been created regarding the position Lord Auckland and Lord Ellenborough, as to of our troops in this country, and of the the course to be pursued with regard to strength and power of the enemy we have to Affighanistan; and they equally show that contend with. This enemy cannot face our those views tended to an evacuation of the troops in the field with any chance of success, country with the greatest possible celerity. | however superior they may be in numbers, It has been shown, too, that the judgment of provided those precautions are strictly obsome at least of the military authorities was served which war between a small body of not in favour of this policy. That Sir Jasper disciplined soldiers and a vast crowd of un-Nicolls hesitated to give orders for carrying it trained, unorganized, and half-civilized people into effect, and yielded at last, perhaps, rather constantly renders necessary. from a feeling of deference to the governor. British troops suffered a dreadful disaster at general than from any change in his own Kabool; and it is not for me to presume to opinion; while General Pollock, "a good and point out why this happened, however evident clear-headed officer," as he was well character- I may conceive the reasons, and the long ized by the come a der-in-chief, was auxious train of political and military events which led that some step should be taken to assert the to the sad catastrophe."

clouds which had been permitted to enshroud This feeling was shared by General Nott. As soon as he had reason to doubt the intentions of the government to "redeem the credit of the British arms in Affghanistan," he remonstrated strongly against the indulgence of any craven feeling. Adverting to the noble retention of Jelalabad by Sir Robert Sale, to the reinforcements advanced for its support, and to the unfavourable effect which the abandonment of Kandahar must have upon the means in progress for the relief of the former place, he said, "Under these circumstances, I never had a moment's hesitation as to the course I ought to pursue, so long as discretionary power was left me; and all my arrangements have consequently been made with a view to the present maintenance and future extension, should such prove desirable, of our power in this country." After dwelling on the importance of standing fast, both at Kandahar and Jelalabad, he says, "If government intend to recover, even temporarily, and for the security of our national honour, their lost position in this country, even if doubtful of the policy that it may be deemed expedient to pursue, I earnestly hope that before any immediate retrograde step is made in either direction, our whole position in Affghanistan will be attentively viewed; and that the effect which a hasty retirement would certainly and instantly have upon the whole of Beloochistan, and even in the navigation of the Indus, will be taken into consideration. At the present time, the impression of our military strength among the people of this country, though weakened by the occurrences at Kabool, is not destroyed; but if we now retire, and it should again become necessary to advance, we shall labour under many disadvantages, the most serious of which, in my opinion, will be a distrust of their strength among our soldiers, which any admission of weakness is so well calculated to insure; and in what other light could a withdrawal from Jelalabad or Kandahar be viewed?" subsequent letter General Nott says, "Perhaps it is not within my province to observe that, in my humble opinion, an unnecessary manders in Affghanistan, certainly the best contemplation of the governor general; and in judges, were far more sauguine as to the probability of a successful advance, than was clerk, resident at falore, the opinion formerly either Lord Auckland or Lord Ellenborough.

On the 4th of May, the latter nobleman, Pollock of an advanced position beyond the addressing General Pollock, declared his views as to the immediate retirement of the British forward. On the 25th of the same month, a troops to be unaltered. troops to be unaftered. On the 6th, writing communication was made to the general, to to Sir Jasper Nicolls, he expressed his appropriate prevent his misinterpreting the orders which bation of the orders for such retirement, leaved the had received, to retire, so as to give the by the commander in chief. (In the 14th his qualified permission to remain a wider range views, however, appear to have undergone a than was intended. The supposed necessity change. Again addressing Sir Jasper Nicolls, for this caution recens hardly reconcilable with change. Again addressing Sir Jasper Nicola, for this caution recass hardly reconcilable with his lordship recented disposed to acquirece in the previous assent of the governor-general to the retention, for a time, of the positions held the maintenance of the British positions till by the British commanders. The change is October.

A further communication made to General Pollock, and of that Pollock on I chalf of the governor-general, of the commander-in-chief, Sir Jasper Nicola. Bearing date the 1st of June, is concled Those opinions were to the effect, that neither almost in terms of a proach. After expression arms at Jacabased with the second the army at Jelalabad nor that at Kandabar ing extreme regret that the want of carriage could properly commence their return march should have rendered the army unable to till the autumn. The language of his lordship, move, it thus continues: "The retirement of however, is that of toleration, rather than of your army immediately after the victory approval. "The advance of the reason," he gained by Sir Robert Sale, the forcing of the observes, "which really renders the retirement Khyber Pass, and the relief of Jelalabad, observes, "which really renders the retirement Khyber Pass, and the relief of Jelalaked, of Major-general Pollock, at the present moment, a measure of some hazard to the health operation successfully accomplished and even the major-general finds of obtaining supplies six months of inaction, before a following of provisions—but more than all, the influence army of Afighans, will have an appearance of which those now about him, anxious to vindicate the army by some signal blow against the Afighans, and to effect the restoration of the fore finally quitting Afighanistan, you should prisoners to liberty by negotiation supported by force, must necessarily have upon his mind —all these things induce me to apprehend that it will hardly be until October that the majorit will hardly be until October that the major-general will commence his homeward march, be enabled to draw the enemy into a position Your excellency is of opinion that Major- in which you may strike such a blow effec-General Nott cannot safely commence his tually. march to the plains before the same time. It will, therefore, probably not be until the end and references to such documents, may be of November that the army of Major-General tedious, but in this case it is necessary, in Pollock, nor until the end of December that order that it may be distinctly apparent to the army under Major-General Nott, will be whom the merit or the blame of the course established within the British territory." In ultimately taken is due. On the 6th of June this letter it is also announced to be the intendition governor-general caused a further comtion of Lord Ellenborough to assemble an munication to be made to General Pollock, army of reserve, in a position from which it intended, like a former one, to guard him might advance to the support of either General against misconceiving his orders. In one of Pollock or General Nott, a step represented his letters, General Pollock had adverted to as necessary for the purpose of misleading the the proposed transfer of Jelalabad to the Affghans as to the design of the British Seikhs, and expressed a belief that he should government to withdraw its armies from the receive a communication on the subject from government to withdraw its armies from the country; "even," it is added, "were there no the resident at Lahore. The object of the other object." The other object contemplated governor-general's explanatory intimation was to warn General Poliock that he was not exof India—a very important one at a period when the influence of the British name had suffered serious diminution. In the Punjab and other countries bordering on the British and other countries bordering on the British in case that decision should be protracted. Here again, as it was understood and adalarm to warrant such a measure, without reference to any endeavour to retrace the fill October, there seems to have been little march to Kabool. Indeed, such a march

It thus appears that the military com-seems to have been as remote as ever from the

To multiply quotations from official papers, to guard against misapprehension on the ceived from the governor-general, whose only now claims attention. General England, on ghanistan. He had acquiesced in their temretiring to Quetta, after the repulse which he porarystay at the positions which they occupied, experienced in attempting to advance, commenced fortifying the lines and town of that name; but General Nott requiring him again to advance through the Kojuck Pass, and undertaking to despatch a strong force to meet him, the general, having in the mean time been joined by his expected reinforcements, resumed the march so unfortunately interrupted at Hykulzie. Near that place he again found the enemy posted in a strong position; but on being attacked they rapidly dispersed, and General England and his force arrived at Kandabar with little further interruption.

In May, General Nott, in obedience to his orders, despatched a large force, under Lieutenant-Colonel Wymer, to bring off the garrison of Khelat-i-Ghiljie. On the 20th of May that place was attacked by a body of Ghiljies, consisting of upwards of two thousand. was gallantly defended by Captain J. Halsell Craigie; and the enemy, after an hour's hard letter to General Nott, in order that he might fighting, were beaten back with severe loss. On the 29th of the same month, advantage was taken by the enemy of the reduced fore furnished. On the same day, however, strength of the force at Kandahar, caused by the detachment of the troops under Colonel Wymer, to occupy some hills near the city of withheld from the records, for the sake, it was Kandahar, believing that the force left after marching the detachment was not sufficient to admit of holding the city and at the same time making an attack in the field. But they were mistaken. General Nott moved out with portions of her Majesty's 41st regiment, the 42nd and 43rd Bengal native infantry, the Bombay light battalion, the 25th Bombay native infantry, the Poonah and the shah's important one, and its extraordinary character 1st cavalry, with a detail of horse artillery, and twelve guns. The enemy were in great strength, mustering about eight thousand in position, and two thousand more engaged in the Indus till October; and after adverting to guarding the pass and roads leading to their camp. The troops under General Nott amounted only to about a thousand infantry, two hundred and fifty cavalry, and something more than a hundred artillerymen; but the great disparity of numerical strength availed nothing—the positions of the enemy were rapidly carried in the most gallant style, and in less than an hour.

Colonel Wymer having performed the duty of destroying the works at Khelat-i-Ghiljie, Kandahar.

object, as he avowed, was to effect the safe The state of affairs in Lower Affghanistan return to India of the British troops in Affbut this was all, and the concession was obviously made with reluctance. There can be no danger of misrepresenting his lordship's views, for his efforts to prevent their being mistaken were unceasing. On the 4th of July he caused a letter to be addressed to General Pollock, with reference to a movement contemplated by that officer. Satisfaction was expressed that the means of making the intended movement existed, and credit was taken for suggesting But the general was cautioned not to mistake the governor-general's views, in which he was again emphatically informed, "no change" had "from the first taken place." On the same day (so anxious was his lordship not to be misunderstood), General Nott also was addressed for the purpose of guarding him against being misled by the activity of General Pollock. A copy of the cherished instructions of the 1st of June was transmitted with the not suppose that any change had taken place in the main object of the instructions heretoother letters were addressed to General Pollock and General Nott, which letters were alleged, of secrecy. The letter to General Pollock consisted only of a few lines, calling his attention to the letter to General Nott, of which a copy was inclosed to him, and suggest-ing that, in the event of the latter officer taking a particular course, the movements of General Pollock should be regulated accord-ingly. The letter to General Nott was the will justify an extended notice of its contents. It commenced by referring to the understanding that General Nott should not move towards the despatch of Colonel Wymer to Kelat-i-Ghiljie, and to a supply of camels recently received at Kandahar, thus proceeded:-"I have now, therefore, reason to suppose, for the first time, that you have the means of moving a very large proportion of your army, with ample equipment for any service. There has been no deficiency of provisions at Kandahar at any time, and after harvest you will have an abundant supply." It would not be easy to conjecture to what this prelude was to lead, escorted the guns and ammunition in safety to but it could hardly be expected to lead to what One part of the governor-general's actually follows it. "Nothing has occurred orders was thus fulfilled, much against the in- to induce me to change my first opinion, that clination of the officer holding the chief command in Lower Affghanistan. General Nott had intended to throw supplies into the place, to make an effort to recover the garrison of Ghuznee from the bands of the enemy, and to make a diversion in aid of General Pollock. All these measures were delayed, and part of them entirely defeated by the instructions re-language the danger and difficulties of the instant; having looked at the difficulties in latter. The leaning of Lord Ellenborough's every point of view, and reflected on the mind was obviously in favour of the easier and jadvantages, which would attend a successful less hazardous counce. His lordship writes; becomplishment of such a more, and the moral "I do not undervalue the aid which our influence it would have throughout Asia, I government in India would receive from the have come to a determination to retire a successful execution, by your army, of a march portion of the army under my command rid through Ghuznee and Kabool, over the reene Ghuznee and Kabool. I shall take with me of our late disasters. I know all the effect not a large but a compact and well-tried force, which it would have upon the minds of our on which I can rely. Your lordship may rest soldiers, of our allies, of our enemies in Asia, assured that all prudence and every military and of our countrymen, and of all foreign precaution shall be observed; there shall be nations in Europe. It is an object of just no unnecessary risk; and, if expedient, I will ambition, which no one more than myself mask Ghuznee and even Kalsol. But if an would rejoice to see effected; but I see that opportunity should offer, I will endeavour to failure in the attempt is certain and irretries, strike a decisive blow for the honour of our able ruin, and I would endeavour to inspire arms." able ruin, and I would endeavour to inspire you with the necessary caution, and make you feel that, great as are the objects to be obtained by success, the risk is great also." Subsequently, his lordship speaks of the movement on Kabool as an "adventurous march;" and the tone of the instructions in respect to it is uniformly discouraging and despending. In a letter to General Nott, dated July 10th, the same tone was preserved. A copy of a letter form General Pollock was inclosed, and it was intimated that efforts were in progress to interest to intimated that efforts were in progress to increase the amount of carriage at the disposal occupy the situation; but their enjoyment by a few shrapnels, completely cleared the minences. This affair took place at the sappers, to perform the required duty.

School Pollock moved from Jelalabad on soldiers had a more arduous task to perform, the 28th of August, and on the 23rd was at Gundamuk. Here he learned that a body of the enemy, under two chiefs, held the fort and village of Mammoo Khail, about two miles o'clock, he moved towards the enemy with her standards, and leaving our troops in quiet Majesty's 9th foot, the 26th and 60th Bengal possession of their last and least assailable native infantry, two squadrons of light stronghold. It gratifies me," continues the cavalry, some sappers and miners, and a light general, "to be enabled to state that we have field-battery. The enemy at first made a thus signally defeated, with one division of entered the village. The fort and another troops last winter." Captain Nugent, subby British troops; others drove the enemy affair, and Sir Robert Sale slightly wounded. from the hills. Upon the more elevated and precipitous of these a stand was sometimes made, and a sharp fire of jezails maintained. But the vigour with which the various attacks to the latter division being fatigued by the were pressed rendered these attempts un-availing, and the whole of the enemy's campthe hands of the English.

General Pollock remained at Gundamuk till planting their standards on the summit of a the night, but in no instance with success. lofty and almost inaccessible mountain, and of the spectacle was interrupted by an attack just confidence in his troops, he despatched a from part of the British force, led by Major portion of them, consisting of her Majesty's Skinner, of her Majesty's 31st, which, aided 13th, one company of the 6th, one company of and never was an undertaking of the kind surpassed in execution. These lofty heights were assaulted in two columns, led by Captains Wilkinson and Broadfoot; the discomfited distant, and he determined to attack them on Ghiljies, not relishing an encounter, betook the following morning. Accordingly, at four themselves to flight, carrying away their show of resistance, and continued in position the troops, the most powerful tribes and the so long that it was hoped they intended to most inveterate of our enemies, the original resist with their entire force; but they retired instigators and principal actors in those disas the British troops advanced, and the latter turbances which entailed such disasters on our village in the vicinity were speedily occupied assistant commissary-general, was killed in this

The first division advanced without further march, it was deemed expedient to halt for a day. This was regarded by the enemy as the equipage, with their carriage-cattle, fell into result of hesitation, and in the afternoon they commenced an attack on the pickets on the Licutenant-Colonel Taylor, with left flank. the 7th of September, when he marched with two hundred and forty men of her Majesty's the 1st division of his army, commanded by 9th, being ordered to drive them back, some Sir Robert Sale; the second division, under sharp fighting took place, and the enemy was General McCaskill, being left to follow on the forced up the neighbouring hills, from the 8th. On that day the progress of the first crests of which they kept up a heavy fire, till division in its advances towards Jugduluk was they were engaged by Colonel Taylor, who, interrupted; the hills commanding the pass with a small party, contrived to creep up one being occupied by the enemy. These hills of the hills unperceived, and to lie concealed formed an amphitheatre inclining towards till joined by a few more of his men, when, the left of the road on which the British rushing on the flank of the astonished Affghans, troops had halted, and the enemy were thus he put them to rapid flight, pouring on them enabled to fire into the column; the inter-a destructive fire as they escaped down the vention of a deep ravine precluding any direct hill. This well-planned and admirably-exeapproach to them. Guns were opened upon cuted scheme relieved the left flank of the them, but with little effect; and their fire in British from the enemy, who forthwith withreturn caused several casualties in the British drew to the right, where they attacked a ranks. It was, consequently, necessary that picket of eighty men of the 60th Bengal an attempt should be made to force their native infantry, under Lieutenant Montposition. This was effected with great labour, gomery. The assault was met with great from the steepness of the ground, but with intrepidity, and Lieutenant Montgomery suc-The assault was met with great little fighting; the enemy retiring as the ceeded in keeping the enemy off till reinforce-British came near them. But the labours of ments reached him, when they were driven the day were not at an end. A large body of back. So close was the conflict, that recourse the enemy took up a position still more for was frequently had to the bayonet. Repeated midable than that which they had quitted, attempts upon the pickets were made during

This was but the prelude to a more serious showing every demonstration of an intention attack. The valley of Tazeen is completely to defend them. From this post of defiance, encircled by lofty hills, and on the morning of however, General Pollock determined to dislodge them. In his own words, "the achieve-ments of the day would have been incomplete height not previously crowned by the British were they suffered to remain;" and feeling a troops. On the army commencing to march, the enemy's horse appeared in the valley, with | counsels of General Pollock and General Nott the intention of falling upon the baggage, but had prevailed; and here was the result, the dragoons and native cavalry, by a brilliant charge, put them to the rout, and their flight traced to the spot whence the tarpished honour was attended by considerable loss. On the of the English name called aloud for yindication. heights the enemy fared no better, though and the blood of slaughtered English subjects they made an obstinate defence. On the for punishment on the murderers. It now approach of the British, the Affghans, contrary to their usual custom, advanced to meet jutor. It has been intimated that General them, and the thrust of the bayonet in many Nott proposed to take only a portion of his instances decided the contest. The conflict, force to Ghuznes and Kabool. The rest however, was not only severe but protracted, retired, under General England, by way of the fight being continued through the greater part of the day. The series of passes called molestation. Hust Kabul was desended by the Affghans with march on the 9th of August, with her Magreat obstinacy, but they were driven in suc-liesty's 40th and 41st foot, the 2nd, 16th, 38th, cession from all their positions, which were 42nd, and 43rd Bengal native infantry, the both numerous and strong; and the British 3rd Bombay light cavalry, and some irregular signal of three cheers at length announced that horse, a troop of Bombay horse artillery, two the summit had been gained. The victory companies of foot artillery (one Bengal and was complete, and the loss of the enemy in one Bombay), a troop of the shah's native men severe, in addition to that of their guns horse artillery, and some sappers. The num-and several standards. The number brought ber of guns was twenty-two, of various by them into the field was about sixteen calibre. A large stock of ammunition was by them into the field was about sixteen thousand, and Akbar Khan in person commanded. At the spot where this battle took place, the massacre of the British in the early part of the year was consummated, and here they were now avenged, the energetic representations of the military authorities having happily succeeded in obtaining permission to perform this act of justice.

killed. The number of wounded was more considerable, being a hundred and thirty. While engaged in their labours, Captain Among the latter were Captain Lushington, of her Majesty's 9th; Captain Geils and with two companies of that regiment, and of her Majesty's 9th; Captain Geils and Lieutenant Montgomery, of the 60th native infantry; and Lieutenant Norton, of the 58th native infantry. No British officers were killed; but a distinguished native and led on the British party a considerable Hyder Ali, who commanded the Jezailchees, fronted a vast force, believed to be the army and who is noticed by General Pollock as "a of Shumsoodeen, the Affghan governor of most gallant and enterprising soldier," fell in Ghuznee. Retreat was, of course, inevitable; the act of seizing one of the enemy's standards. but it was commenced in an orderly manner. Attacks on the baggage of the British were The enemy, however, closing in upon the frequent during the day; but through the retreating force, to within fifty or sixty yards vigilance of Lieutenant-Colonel Richmond, of them, and pouring in a heavy fire, it became commanding the rear-guard, all failed.

The enemy being completely dispersed, General Pollock pursued his march, and accordingly ordered to front, and one of them encamped at Khoord-Kabool, without encountering further opposition. On the 14th cuted; but a tremendous fire of matchlocks of September he marched to Boothauk, and being brought in aid of the enemy's force, on the 15th moved on to Kabool, and encamped upon the race-course there. following morning, he proceeded with a party yards, though still under a heavy fire, and of troops to the Bala Hissar; and there, amid the retreat was thenceforward conducted in the shouts of the soldiery, the roar of artillery, and the inspiring strain of the British national and it included several valuable officers. air, planted the colours of his country to wave Captains Bury and Reeves, of the 3rd Bomin proud triumph over the place from whence, a few months before, a miserable band of have cut down four of the enemy before he British subjects had crept forth, humiliated, destitute, and spiritless-relying on the suffer- Lieutenant Mackenzie, of the same regiment,

The progress of General Pollock has been remains to delineate that of his gallant coad-Quetta, and pursued their march with little General Nott commenced his taken, and forty days' provisions. Nothing beyond the ordinary annoyances of a march through a hostile country occurred, till the 28th of August, when an attack on the rearguard, by a body of the enemy, required the despatch of some cavalry to disperse the assailants. This duty was satisfactorily performed to the transfer of the cavalry to the cavalry performed to the cavalry to the caval formed by two parties of irregulars. A more The loss of the English was only thirty-two serious affair occurred on the same day. necessary to make an attempt to drive the foe to a greater distance. The squadrons were to charge. The charge was intrepidly exetheir assailants were hurled back in disorder. On the They rallied at the distance of a few hundred bay cavalry were killed; the former is said to was overpowered. Captain Ravenscroft and ance of a treacherous enemy, whose vengeance and Lieutenant Chamberlain, of the shah's was soon glutted by their destruction. The horse, were wounded, the two former severely.

The attack on the grave-cutters was said to with the intention, it was supposed, of attack-have proceeded from the occupants of a fort in the vicinity, to which the attention of the limit the morning it was ascertained that the British commander was now directed. On his place had been exacuated, and before summing approaching it, some unarmed persons came both town and citadel were in quiet possession out to supplicate his forbearance, representing of the invaders. There being no enemy, the that themselves and their companions had stole labour of the victors was that of destructaken no part in the attack. Captain F. tion, and the 7th and 8th of September were White, with the light company of her parts at the work. Fourteen mines were ascertain, by examination, whether there was effect, and the gateways, both of the citadel noted as interpreter, they were prected by a success, were the gates of the tomb of Mahoarmed, and resisting. The assailants were 12,000 men, occupying a succession of heights, infuriated by the treacherous scene just and intercepting his march upon Beenee Badan executed before them, and the horrors come and Mydan. On the 16th, General Nott was executed before them, and the horrow com-mon on such occusions followed. Every man that was met was put to the sword, the place was ret on fire, and in a short time was a mass of blaring ruins. The hollowness of the assertion by which it was sought to divert the British commander from attacking the fort, was demonstrated by the science, among other spail, of a string of camels bearing the commissariat brand.

On the 16th, General Nott was at Ur, hundre, and on the 17th within five miles of Kabool, which city General Pollock had previously entered.

The Afighan was now drawing to a close. No party had ever contemplated any attempt to re-establish permanently the British power in the country; but it was deemed expedient to despatch a force under Major-General Nott was

On the Coth of August, Shumroedeen was large and populous town in Koh-i-daman, in the vicinity of the British camp in great upwards of twenty miles distant from Kabool, force, and General Nott moved out with about in a north-westerly direction. The force enhalf his troops to meet him. The enemy's left camped within four miles of the place on the was upon a hill of some elevation; their centre 25th of September, and on the evening of that and right extended along a low ridge, until day a reconnol-cauce was made. The position their flank reached a fort filled with their men, of the place was found extremely strong, This fort appears to have been the first object. The town, which was composed of masses of of attack by the British force; and it does not houses and forts, was built on the slope of a reem that the attempt was successful. During mountain, in the rear of which appeared yet the time thus occupied, a commonading was loftler eminences, shutting in a defile leading maintained on both sides with apparently no to Toorkistan. No mode of access was disgreat effect; but on the advance of the British cernible except by surmounting ridges of hills columns the enemy gave way and dispersed in separated by deep ravines, or threading by all directions. Their tents and an immense narrow roads a series of gardens, vineyards, quantity of ammunition were captured, and and orchards, fenced in with strong inclosure two guns, one of which was broken by the walls; the whole of which, with the mountain shot of the British and left on the field, the sides and the tops of the houses, were occupied other brought in by Captain Christic and by Jezailchees. The confidence which the Licutenant Chamberlain, of the irregular horse, enemy reposed in the strength of the place

On the 5th of September, General Nott was was attested by their having retained within before Ghuznee. The hills north of the city the town the women and children of the were cleared of the enemy and occupied by the inhabitants, as well as those of numerous British. The camp was established at Rozeh, refugees from Kabool. about two miles and a half distant, and preparations were actively commenced for assault, a principal attack, supported by two false ones, being meditated. Throughout the night the besiegers carried on their preparations, and the enemy appeared to be in some degree on the nlert. A brisk matchlock-fire had been commenced early in the evening, but it gradually slackened, and after a time ceased altogether. the eighteen-pounders, by Brigadier Stacy. At dusk the enemy's infantry had been ob- A third column, composed of a wing of her

The attack on the grave-cutters was said to with the intention, it was supposed, of attack-40th, was thereupon ordered to enter, and sprung in the walls of the citadel, all with reason to believe the representation to be true; and town, with the roofs of the principal but on advancing, with Major Leech, who buildings, were fired. Among the trophics of volley of matchlock-balls. The company, with met of Ghuznes, believed previously to have Captain White, thereupon rushed in, and belonged to the temple of Sommauth, respectanother company of the 40th, the light com-ling which the governor-general had expressed pany of the 41st, and some companies from considerable interest. On the 10th, General native regiments, were ordered to their sup- Nott marched from Ghurnee, and on the 14th port. The fort was found full of people, all and 15th his army had to disledge about

Notwithstanding these indications of diffi-culty, General McCaskill ventured upon an assault, and soon after daylight broke on the morning after his arrival, the troops were in motion in two columns; the right, to which was attached the mountain-train, commanded by Brigadier Tulloch; the left, which was accompanied by Captain Blood's battery and served crossing the river near the water gate, Majesty's 4th and the cavalry under Major

Lockwood, and commanded by Major Sim-succour should arrive. They had not, howmons, was allotted as a reserve. Captain ever, occasion to resort to this desperate Christie's horse protected the baggage. The attempt. Saleh Mahomed gave no cause for columns in their progress met with some suspicion; and the decisive conduct of Major annoyances from the Jezailchees, but these Pottinger, in nominating a new governor were repressed by the light troops and guns. of the province, in the name of the British The point selected for attack was a village government, secured the obedience of that called Ismallah, which Brigadier Tulloch's numerous body who are always prepared to column assaulted on its left, while that of give their adhesion to the party that seems Brigadier Stacy, by making a long détour, to be in the ascendant. The Huzarch chiefs attacked its right. The former column came into action first, but was followed after no great delay by the other. The combined General Pollock being apprised of the turn attacks were marked by extraordinary steadily which affairs had taken at Bameean, caused a bedray well as important and the company which affairs had taken at Bameean, caused as the company which affairs had taken at Bameean, caused as the company which affairs had taken at Bameean, caused as the company which affairs had taken at Bameean, caused as the company which affairs had taken at Bameean, caused as the company which affairs had taken at Bameean, caused as the company which affairs had taken at Bameean, caused as the company which affairs had taken at Bameean, caused as the company which are the company which a ness as well as impetuosity, and the enemy body of 700 Kuzzulbash horse to advance gradually gave way, until the inclosures, forts, towards that place, accompanied by Sir Richheights, suburbs, and town were successively mond Shakespear. The zeal with which this won by the assailants. The reserve established movement was executed is proved by the fact itself on the lower heights, all beyond being of the force having traversed ninety miles of in possession of the columns which had pre-[mountainous country in two marches. Four ceded. A vast amount of property was found days after the departure of the Kuzzulbash in the town, and two guns were taken, one of force on this duty, General Pollock despatched which was immediately turned on the enemy a force, under Sir Robert Sale, to occupy the by its captor, Lieutenant Elmhirst, of her Urghundee Pass. On the 17th of September, Majesty's 9th foot. This regiment distin- the emancipated prisoners were met by Sir guished itself greatly in the assault, as did also Richmond Shakespear and the Kuzzulbashes; her Majesty's 41st, the 26th, 42nd, and 43rd and on the 20th they re-entered Sir Robert native infantry, and the sappers and miners. The loss sustained was not severe; one officer only was killed, Lieutenant Evans, of her ceding day; it was the anniversary of his Majesty's 41st. A considerable part of the birth, on which he numbered sixty years. town was destroyed by the captors before they Having halted for the night, he left his camp quitted it. The same fate awaited Charekar, and was carried into effect by the same hands.

But far more gratifying than any exercise of vindictive justice, however signal and his toils and his glory. necessary, was the recovery of the prisoners, Nothing now remain for whose safety the most serious apprehensions had long been entertained. Akbar Khan had threatened to carry them to Toorkistan, and there distribute them as slaves; a threat which the character of him by whom it was uttered rendered of very probable fulfilment. Saleh Mahomed Khan, who had charge of the other Affghan prisoners in captivity. Their prisoners at Bamesan, had received orders to intended release was accordingly announced in remove them to a greater distance. "All a government notification, couched in that hope of deliverance," says Lieutenant Eyre, grandiloquent tone which seems to have been "seemed now at an end; and we endeavoured inseparably associated with our Affghan expeto resign ourselves to a fate that seemed dition. One act, marked by singularly bad inevitable. ordained otherwise. At ten P.M. to our un- was publicly intimated to be the intention of bounded astonishment, Major Pottinger came the governor-general to parade the prisoners to inform us that Saleh Mahomed Khan had offered to make us over to the British general, on condition of our securing to him the payment of 20,000 rupees in ready cash, and 1,000 rupees per month for life." The latter sum was the amount of his pay as commander of a regiment. General Shelton and Colonel Palmer refused to become parties to this agreement, lest they should implicate themselves with Akbar Khan; but the remainder of the British officers resolved to embrace the chance presented to them, and, if treachery should be manifested, to endeavour to master the guard, and hold possession of the fort till to inform us that Saleh Mahomed Khan had for exhibition at a grand military show to be

Sale's camp at Urghundee. The illustrious veteran had arrived at that place on the prestanding, and mounted to meet the returning captives, whom he had then the happiness of placing in triumph under the protection of the brave men who had been the sharers of the "children of a larger growth" who de-light in such displays. There were painted elephants, triumphal arches, waving banners, and roaring artillery. The curtain had fallen on the tragedy, and, in accordance with trivers; and if it effected this, its object was, of British power in India.

Nothing now remained but to withdraw the army to India; and this operation was effected with little annoyance-none of sufficient importance to call for notice in this work. the British government renounced all connection with Affghanistan, there was no motive for retaining Dost Mahomed and the But Providence had mercifully taste, was threatened, but not performed.

been a showy spectacle; and perhaps the without doubt, answered. And thus, with stage of Drury-lane Theatre has not often masking and mummery, terminated a war presented anything better calculated to please more calamitous than any which Britain had the "children of a larger growth" who depreviously waged in the East—a war the termination of which, but for the noble spirit evinced by those intrusted with high military command, would have left the name of our country a byword of reproach; would have theatrical usage, a splendid pantomime followed. This latter performance, it is to be tility, and have placed in mortal peril, not presumed, afforded gratification to its conmercive the supremacy, but the very existence

CHAPTER XXXII.

STATE OF SINDE-TREATIES WITH THE AMEERS-SIR CHARLES NAPIER ORDERED TO SINDE-HIS SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS—CAPTURE OF EMAUN GHUR—MAJOR OUTRAM'S NEGOTIATIONS -BATTLES OF METANEE AND HYDERABAD—REDUCTION OF OMERCOTE—AFFAIRS OF GWALIOR -INTERVENTION OF THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT—BATTLES OF MAHARAJPOOR, CHONDA, AND PUNNIAR-LORD ELLENBOROUGH RECALLED BY THE COURT OF DIRECTORS.

THE festivities of Ferozepore closed with prosecute their commercial pursuits in Sinde noise and show the chapter of British adven- had never been very successful. ture in Affghanistan; but there was another attempt to establish a factory seems to have country bordering the western frontier of the been made in the year 1758; but the estab-English possessions in India with which un-lishment was withdrawn in 1775, under inadjusted differences yet existed. In regard structions from England. The reason for the to Sinde, the time for painted elephants and other constituent parts of Oriental spectacle had not arrived. Diplomacy and intrigue were there actively at work. A British force was in the country, and the question of the continued existence of Sinde as even a nominally independent state, trembled in the balance which the active commander of that force held in his grasp and directed at his will.

To understand the relations then existing between Sinde and the Anglo-Indian government, a brief retrospect will be necessary. For a considerable period preceding the year 1786, Sinde was ruled by a tribe called Kulbooras. At that period the Kulbooras, after a series of struggles extending over several years, were displaced by another tribe, the Talpoors, the chief of which was named Meer Futteh Ali. This personage assigned distinct portions of the conquered country to two of his relations; and thus arose the states of Khyrpoor and Meerpoor. But the larger division of territory was retained by Futteh Ali himself, in connection with his three brothers, whom, by a strange arrangement, he associated with him in the government. This chief state contained the capital of the country, Hyderabad, and from this cause was generally called by that name. The extraordinary mode of government intro-duced by Meer Futteh Ali continued to be maintained after his death, and was imitated at Khyrpoor, where a plurality of ameers claimed and exercised authority, though one was recognized as chief.

withdrawal was not the absence of mercantile promise, but the existence of differences with the government, which led probably to the apprehension of serious danger to the factory, and those who conducted its affairs. Twentyfour years elapsed without any endeavour on the part of the East-India Company to revive their mercantile connection in Sinde; but in 1799 permission was obtained for the establishment of a factory at Tatta, and it was subsequently sought to extend the transactions of the company to Kurrachee. The Kulboora dynasty had now given way to that of Talpoor; but the new rulers were not more favourably disposed to foreign commerce than the old ones. The chief of the British establishment was peremptorily ordered to quit Kurrachee, and confine his operations to Tatta; and after a few months he and his associates were expelled from Sinde altogether. So many important affairs then, and for some time afterwards, pressed upon the attention of the Anglo-Indian government, that for some years Sinde and its jealous spirit of exclusion seem to have been little thought of. In 1809, however, a treaty, singularly brief and dry, was concluded between the British government and that country, the only noticeable article in which provided for the exclusion of the French from Sinde. In 1820, another treaty was con-cluded, by which all Europeans and Americans were excluded from settling in Sinde, while it was stipulated that the subjects of each of the contracting states should be allowed to reside in the dominions of the other, so long as 🚟 🖫 The efforts of the East-India Company to should conduct themselves in an orderif and peaceable manner. took to restrain all tribes and persons within ment was not unwilling to undertake the office their limits from making inroads upon the of a mediator between the parties; but it British dominions, or committing depredations within them. Thus matters stood, the British looked for than the preservation of peace. If and Sindean governments treating each other with a cold and restrained civility, till 1832, when the opening of the Indus for the purposes of commerce became a favourite object states. A most important change was, howwith the Anglo-Indian government, as well ever, contemplated by the British governas with the inercantile community at home. [ment, and it may best be explained in their Through the agency of Colonel Pottinger a own words :- "We considered it our duty to treaty was concluded with Khyrpoor, by endeavour to induce the maharajah to lay which the use of the river and roads within aside his hostile intentions. It appeared to the limits of that state was secured to the us also, that this opportunity ought not to be merchants of Hindostan, upon whatever terms neglected, of establishing the British influence might be settled with the government of on a solid basis in Sinde, a country which is Hyderabad; and a written statement of just of great importance to us, both from its command reasonable duties was to be furnished. A manding the entrance to the Indus, and from treaty having the same object was more re-lits position in reference to the Punjab and luctantly acceded to by the rulers of Hyder- Affghanistan. With these views, we, on the abad whose jealousy was distinctly marked one hand, instructed Captain Wade to endeaby the conditions which they attached to the your, by any means short of actual menace, privilege of navigating the river and travers- to deter the mahamjah from advancing against ing the roads. They were these: -- first, that Shikarpore, while, on the other, we desired no military stores should be conveyed by Colonel Pottinger to intimate to the ameers either; secondly, that no armed vessels or that we were ready to enter into a closer beats should be used on the river; thirdly— alliance with them on such terms as might be and this restriction is the most remarkable of mutually agreed on. Owing to the distance all, seeing that by the treaty of 1832 the sub-lof the scene and the uncertainty of events, jects of the British government were entitled we did not consider it expedient to prescribe to remain in the dominions of the ameers—to Colonel Pottinger the precise conditions on that no English merchants should settle in which he was to treat. He was authorized Sinds, but should come as occasion might re-quire; and "baving stopped to transact their and we expressed our hope that, with a view

The ameers also under-|ened by Runject Singh. The British governbusiness," should return to India. Further; to enable us to fulfil this obligation, the

the British government with Runjeet Singh | none should ever be made. could not be affirmed. The presence of a to the release, the resident might well observe, British agent was probably necessary to the preservation of the unmolested right of navigating the Indus, which had been assented to by the ameers some years before; and had the demands of the government of British India been restricted to this, they would scarcely have been accused of asking too much for their services in preserving Sinde from an unequal contest with the ambitious and powerful ruler of the Punjab. But the further views which were entertained, and in all likelihood never lost sight of, cannot be approved. The desire to reduce Sinde to the condition of a subsidiary state, ought to have found no place in British counsels. The Sindean governments had always been cold and unfriendly, but never hostile. They wished to keep aloof from British connection, but they had never afforded ground for anxiety or alarm.

About two months after the ratification of the new treaty between the British government and Sinde, the position of those two powers was embarrassed by the conclusion of the tripartite treaty, to which the British government, Runjeet Singh, and Shoojah-ool-Moolk, were the parties. Sinde had formerly been a dependency of Kabool—that is, its rulers had paid tribute to the sovereign of Kabool whenever the latter was strong enough to enforce payment. But the low state of the Affghan power had for many years rendered this impracticable, and consequently nothing had been paid. By the tripartite treaty, Shah Shoojah renounced all claim to further payment, and consented to receive, in consequence of the arrears, such a sum as might be determined by the British government. On this arrangement the ameers had never been consulted, and consequently its effect was to transfer to another an undefined portion of their wealth without their own consent. They had, without doubt, never intended to pay anything, and it is quite certain that, without the aid of their British ally, Shah Shoojah could never have compelled them to make payment of the fraction of a rupee. British government had proffered its services to arrange the differences of the ameers with Runjeet Singh, and they had been accepted; this government now undertook, without reference to one of the powers interested, to determine how much of an outstanding claim should be paid, and how much remitted. Shah Shoojah consented to be bound by their award, for on that rested his only hope of getting anything; but that the ameers should be equally ready to submit to an authority founded, with regard to them, upon pure assumption, and which was created for the very purpose of levying a contribution upon them, could not reasonably be expected. by a release from Shah Shoojah which the coming expedition, the party or parties to the ameers produced. By this document, the breach of faith now commented upon being former renounced all claims or pretensions required to contribute much more largely than upon Sinde or Shikarpore, and engaged that the other ameer or accountary

With reference "how this is to be got over I do not myself see." The authority which the resident represented took a different view, and he was apprised of that view in the following terms: "The governor-general is of opinion that it is. not incumbent on the British government to enter into any formal investigation of the plea adduced by the ameers;" though it was added that the arbitration of the question might possibly be left, by mutual consent, to the British envoy at the court of Shah Shoojah. It happened most opportunely, that about this time one of the ameers was detected in carrying on a correspondence with Persia. This undoubtedly indicated an unfriendly spirit towards the British government; but with reference to its own proceedings, that govern-ment could scarcely deem itself aggrieved. The discovery, however, was employed in aid of the designs already in progress, and great indignation was expressed at the "duplicity" of the ameer, "in maintaining, at the same moment, professions of submission to Persia and of close alliance with the British govern-ment. That "close alliance," it should here be remembered, had never been sought by the ameers-it had been forced upon them; and an alliance which was to allow the stronger party to dispose of the treasures and occupy the territory of the weaker at pleasure, could not be regarded by the latter with much gratification.

The summary and determined manner in which the British government was prepared to treat the insubordination complained of will best be illustrated by a few extracts from the instructions furnished to its agent for his guidance in dealing with the refractory party. "It seems open to you to decide upon proclaiming, as soon as a force from Bombay may enable you to do so with effect, that an act of hostility and bad faith having been committed toward the British government, the share in the government of Sinde which has been held by the guilty party shall be transferred to the more faithful members of the family; and it may be thought right to accompany this transfer with a condition, that, as a security for the future, a British subsidiary force shall be maintained in Sinde; or, secondly the maintenance of this force may be required without the adoption of an act so rigorous as that of deposition; or, thirdly, it may be thought expedient, upon submission, and the tender by the ameer of such aniends as may be in his power, to point out to him that no better reparation can be given than by exertions to give effect to the treaty formed for the restoration of Shah Shoojah, by a cordial adoption of its terms, and by exertions on But the case was embarrassed every side to facilitate the success of the composition to be paid to Shah Shoojah-ool-describing the progress of the intercourse Moolk. The course first named is, in the between Sinds and the British government. opinion of his lordship, clearly justified by the circumstances of the case; it would alone give | Since the day that Sinde has been connected security for the future; and every other course would seem to put the friends and the un-thing new; your government is never satisfriendly, the faithful and the faithless, on the fied; we are anxious for your friendship, but same footing."

These instructions it was easy to enunciate: to carry them out in any way was a matter of difficulty. With this difficulty the resident had to grapple, as well as with others connected with the arrival of the Bombay force destined for the invasion of Affghanistan. The ameers were expected to afford facilities for obtaining supplies—they afforded none, but, on the contrary (these of Hyderabad at least), were not unnaturally anxious to throw every possible impediment in the way of procuring them. Through the exertions of various officers, the force, however, was provided with the means of advancing; and it gradually approached the capital of Lower Sinde.

ameors a definite communication of the views of Khyrpoor, by which possession of Bukkur of the British government as to their future | had been obtained; and Sir Willoughby Cotposition till this period; and as a diplomatist ton, with the force under his command, was he noted rightly. The ameers were intensely approaching from that quarter. In this situatives to even the passage of troops through tion the ameers had no choice, but, in their their territories: the notion of a British force permanently occupying any part of those territories had never entered their minds. The slaves," and the offensive treaty was acritories had never entered their minds. The copied; the sum to be paid for the subsidiary time at length arrived for suggesting it, and the draft of a treaty was submitted to them, was not entirely approved by the government the second article of which declared that the of British India. Three of the articles which governor-general of India had commanded that related to the use of Kurrachee as a port a British force should be kept in Sinde, to be during the months when other modes of comstationed at Tatta, where a cantonment was to municating between Bombay and Sinde were be formed, and that the strength of this force not available, were struck out, inasmuch as was to depend on the pleasure of the said the English were in possession of that pla overnor-general. Thus in the outset it was and their government meant to keep it. pendent upon the government of British India, for the stationing of a military force at Tatta, and the determining the amount of the force, were not made subjects of mutual contract; the first point was rested on the governorgeneral's command, and the second was left to his pleasure. By the next succeeding article it was provided that the ameers should pay a tually restoring the article to its original state. sum (left open in the draft) "in part of the By another modification, the power of the expense of the force, from the presence of which they will derive such vast advantages." Such was the language employed; the chief this force should be stationed. Instead of being advantage, as far as can be discerned, being fixed absolutely at Tatta, it was to be either the exchange of sovereignty for dependence.

and Lieutenant Eastwick, with some other select. There were other alterations, the most British officers, were admitted to an audience, important of which was the omission of an for the purpose of discussing and explaining article restraining the British government this extraordinary document. On this occasion, from forming any treaty or engagement Noor Mahomed took from a box all the treaties which could possibly affect the interests of that had formerly been entered into with the Sinde, without the knowledge and concurrence British government, and significantly asked, of the ameers. The remainder it will not be "What is to become of all these?" The question requisite to notice. The result of the changes was not an inappropriate one, and it was foll may readily be anticipated; the ameers ob-

The amcer said, "Here is another annoyance. with the English, there has always been somewe cannot be continually persecuted. have given a road to your troops through our territories, and now you wish to remain.

It would be useless to pursue the history of this period minutely. The ameers of Hyderabad were well disposed to resist, and the Beloochee population not less ready to support their resistance. The British mission returned from the capital to the British camp, danger being apprehended from a continued stay at the former place. But difficulties, discouragements, and circumstances of embarrassment congregated thick and fast round the ameers. The army of Sir John Keane was marching onward to Hyderabad; the reservo was in possession of Kurrachee. Sir Alexander The resident had deferred making to the Burnes had concluded a treaty with the ameers the English were in possession of that place, ssumed that the rulers of Sinde were de-pendent upon the government of British India, the exercise of the "pleasure" of the go-for the stationing of a military force at Tatta, and the determining the amount of the force, tained in Sinde, had been restricted to the employment of five thousand men. This was qualified so as to declare no more than that "it was not intended" that the force should exceed five thousand fighting men; thus vir-British government was almost indefinitely extended as to the choice of the locality in which there, or at "such other place westward of the The draft treaty was laid before the ameers, river Indus" as the governor-general might lowed by some observations not unfaithfully jected, implored, and finally gave way, by affixing their seals to the revised documents. Thus, in a very brief period, was Sinde reduced a feudatory of the British government.

A.D. 1842.]

When Lord Auckland retired from the government of British India, the subsidiary treaty was that which regulated the relations of that government with Sinde. Little of importance had occurred since its ratifica-chief political and civil authority. tion, except the death of Noor Mahomed, the arrangement, under peculiar circumstances, chief of the college of ameers at Hyderabad, and some negotiations for transferring to the instance is pronounced by a writer hostile to British the management of Shikarpore, which were never concluded. It was alleged that the ameers had been engaged with various parties in correspondence of a tendency opposed to British interests. The charge is not instructions of the governor-general, proceeded improbable, and may have been true; but it is remarkable that the terrible reverses which our armies sustained in Affghanistan, and the consequent diminution of our military reputation, did not tempt the ameers, writhing as they were under a deep sense of wrong, into any overt act of hostility. Indeed, the man likely to be best informed on the subject, Colonel Outram, political agent in Sinde, declared that "nothing very definite had been resolved on," and expressed an opinion that "such changeable, puerile, and divided chief-tains" were not "ever likely to enter into deep, and consequently dangerous, conspiracy; nor did he "consider that anything of the sort would be persevered in so long as no further disasters befell our arms in Affghanistan." This was written on the last day of May, 1842, when our prospects in Affghanistan were brightening.

Early in the year 1842, Lord Ellenborough, as already mentioned, arrived in India as the successor of Lord Auckland. In May, from what especial cause does not appear, his lordship transmitted to Colonel Outram letters addressed to the three divisions of the ameers, threatening them with the confiscation of their dominions in the event of their proving faithless to the British government. The agent was allowed a discretion as to the delivery of these letters, and in the exercise of that discretion he withheld them.

on the supposition that no sufficient, or osten- to reward the fidelity of the khan of Bhawulsibly sufficient, cause might be afforded for pore as a British ally. The ameers were to government. government, by the transfer of territory; and the river, within the territories of the ameers. and determined "to leave their minds for the government wer present in tranquillity."

The "tranquillity" conceded was not of long In the month following that in duration. from a state of perfect independence to that of which expression had been given to the wish that the ameers should enjoy this inestimable boon of tranquillity, Major-General Sir Charles Napier was ordered to proceed to Sinde, to assume the chief military command there. This was not all; he was also to exercise the may be sometimes beneficial. Lord Auckland, and generally favourable to Lord Ellenborough, to have been "a step, at such a crisis, of very questionable policy.

Sir Charles Napier, in accordance with the to Sinde, and on the 5th of October reported that the ameers levied tolls on the river, contrary to the treaty. Without waiting for the result of the remonstrance which the British representative made on the subject, that functionary was, by instructions forwarded in answer to his communication, directed to intimate to the ameers that he was authorized to treat for a revision of the treaty. The agent to whom these instructions were addressed was nothing loth to follow them; and in a paper of extraordinary length he recorded his conviction that the existing state of political relations between Sinde and the British government could not last-"That the more powerful government would, at no very distant period, swallow up the weaker;" and that "it would be better to come to the results" at once, "if it could be done with honesty." The difficulty of doing it "with honesty" was great; but Sir Charles Napier was not a man to despair. An array of charges against the ameers, extending over a considerable period, was transmitted to the governor-general, and was answered by the draft of a treaty to be presented for the acceptance of the alleged By this document, required to offenders. carry into effect the project of obtaining territory in place of tribute, certain places were pointed out as centres, to which a convenient arrondissement of country was to be assigned, at the pleasure of the British general and The governor-general was prepared to dispolitical representative of his government, possess the ameers of their territories; but Another portion of territory was to be taken this step, he meditated an important change provide fuel for the steamers navigating the in their situation, in regard to the British Indus; and if they failed, the servants of the This was the commutation of British government were to be entitled to fell the tribute payable by the ameers to that wood within a hundred yards of the banks of the localities where cessions of territory were This was an offensive privilege, but not the to be derived, were specified. Colonel Outram most offensive that was claimed. By a series submitted to the governor-general the sketch of articles in the treaty, which would seem to of a supplemental treaty, embodying these have been framed purposely with a view to views; but, for some reason not explainable, insult, the ameers were to cease to exercise his lordship deemed it not advisable to press the privilege of coining, one of the chief negotiations on the ameers "precipitately," characteristics of sovereignty. The British min for them; and, to చ్చా 6ట aggravate the wretched princes, the coin was to bear on one citing the orders under which he acted, and side "the effigy of the sovereign of England." the purpose which he had in view, declared Thus every transaction at every bazaar that if the ameers should, after the commencethroughout Sinde was to be made the means ment of the ensuing year, collect any revenue of publicly proclaiming that the ameers had in advance, or impose any new tax within the ceased to rule; that they had become de-districts which they were destined to lose, pendents of a foreign potentate, and held so they should be punished by amercement. At much of authority as was allowed to remain with them only by the sufferance of a superior, or of the servants of that superior. Separate treaties were to be tendered to the governments of Hyderabad, and to those of Khyrpore, but they were framed upon the same principles, and directed to the same ends.

The justice of imposing such severe terms was rested upon the authenticity of the letters said to have been written respectively by Meer Nusseer Khan of Hyderabad, and Meer Roostum Khan of Khyrpore, and on the escape of an insurgent leader from the British authorities through the agency of a servant of the latter prince. As to the letters, every one acquainted with Oriental affairs knows that correspondence is constantly fabricated to aid any purpose that may be in hand. The authenticity of the letters was denied by the alleged writers; the denial is certainly not to be received as conclusive against belief in their authenticity, but such belief is not warranted by any sufficient evidence. The seal attached to the letter professed to be from Meer Nusseer Khan differed from the ordinary seal of that prince, but was said to correspond with another seal which he was represented to possess. The authenticity of the letter, however, was doubted by at least one very competent judge. The letter of Meer Roostum Khan, according to the admission of those who brought it forward in accusation against him, could not be traced to his cognizance; it was believed to have been written y his minister, but whether with or without is knowledge was not shown; and the escape of the prisoner from British custody was in like manner traceable no further than to the agent by whom it was effected. Certainly the rights of princes were never assailed on such slender ground as these charges afforded. But son; and Ali Moorad applied to Sir Charles it was enough: for reasons not then disclosed, it was resolved to go forward with the process which had been commenced under a different administration, to tighten the grasp of the British government upon Sinde, and thus to accelerate the progress of the movement which was to convert that country into a British province in name as well as in fact.

The treaties were presented for the acceptance of the ameers both of Upper and Lower Sinde, on the 6th of December. They were accompanied by letters from Sir Charles Napier, intimating his intention to take immediate possession of the districts which it was this time the new treaties were matters for discussion—they had not been ratified—they were mere proposals from one party, which the opposite parties might reject; subject, of course, to the penalty attached to rejection. But it cannot fail to be observed, that Sinde is dealt with by Sir Charles Napier as though the right of the governor-general of British India to parcel it out at his pleasure were unquestioned and unquestionable; and, moreover, as if it were desired to exercise this right in a manner as offensive as possible to those who were to suffer privation from the exercise. The direct tendency of the proclamation was to render the ameers contemptible in the eyes of those whom they were yet, perhaps, for a time to be permitted to regard as subjects. Such a course could not facilitate the acceptance of the proffered treaties; it was directly calculated to influence hostile feelings already believed to prevail in their minds; and had it been determined to hurry on an appeal to the sword, no more likely means could have been devised than the issue of this most injudicious and insulting proclamation.

The extraordinary constitution of the Sinde government has already been adverted to. An incident arising from this cause has now to be noticed. Meer Roostum was the chief of the ameers of Khyrpore. He was above eighty years of age, and consequently no long tenure of life and power (such power as he was likely to retain) could be anticipated for him. According to the constitution of the Sinde state (if constitution it had), Ali Moorad, brother of Meer Roostum, was the legitimate successor of the prince in the chieftainship. Meer Roostum, it was alleged, wished to divert the succession in favour of his own Napier for support against any such attempt, should it be made. It was promised, on condition of the fidelity of Ali Moorad to the British cause. But something further was wished. The unmanageableness of a government constituted like that of Sinde was obvious enough; and it occurred to Sir Charles Napier that the age of Meer Roostum, and a presumed indisposition on his part to be longer burdened with the toils and vexations of government, might afford means for effecting some modification favourable to British influence. The following statement rests upon the authority of Sir The letters were dated the first of the month; in the outset that it is not in all points unand on the 18th publicity was given to the intention by the issue of a proclamation, signed by the British general, which, after remake his escape to the British general's camp. | ever, been disputed, and with some appearance inconvenient, and by a very adroit, if not a early in the month of January, 1843. very straightforward, piece of diplomacy, the general was relieved alike from the embarrass- ameers were yet naturally anxious to put off ment which would have resulted from enter-the evil day which was to divest them almost taining Meer Roostum in his camp, and from of the very semblance of sovereignty. Major that which would have followed his refusing Outram, whose powers had been withdrawn, him this refuge. As the transaction was in and who had consequently retired to Bombay, many points extraordinary, it will be best to it was thought might, by his personal influrelate it, as far as possible, in the words of ence, be able to effect something in the way the chief actor, Sir Charles Napier himself, of diminishing the reluctance of the princes to It appeared, then, to him, that the only defirable system to follow in Sinde was that of sition. He returned, held various conferences "making the chief powerful, and holding him with the ameers, and finally prevailed on under the power of the government," the them personally to affix their seals to the British government being meant. "This," treaties. But there were other parties who writes Sir Charles Napier, addressing the claimed the privilege of judging beside the governor-general, "made me promise Ali ameers. The Beloochee tribes—bold, fierce, Moorad your lordship's support in having and intractable—were greatly excited against the turken, which your lordship has approved the European intruders, who, by no slow of. The next step was to recure him the advances, were establishing the rown authorites of its convention of the Political Contraction of the particular transfer of the exercise of its power now, even during his brother's life. This I was so fortunate to rucceed in, by persuading Meer Roostum to place himself in Ali Moorad's hands." Meer Roostum, accordingly, instead of proceeding to the British camp, threw himself upon his brother, and surrendered to him the chief authority. He seems, however, soon to have! repented of the step which he had taken, for in a very few days he escaped from the care of the person to whom he had been commended by the British general.

The flight of Meer Roostum—his first flight, namely, that which was followed by the surrender of his power to Ali Moorad-excited great consternation among his family and followers. They forthwith fled; but not to the British camp, nor to Ali Moorad. Their choice was the desert; and the greater portion were reported to have sought safety in a fort called fact. The political move which the British Emaun Ghur. Thither Sir Charles Napior resolved to follow them, and commenced his thus became a chief cause of embarrassing the march without delay. No certain intelligence negotiation, while it placed a chief, venerable as to a supply of water being attainable, it for his years at least, in the position of an was deemed prudent to take forward only oppressed and injured man, and left on the a very small force. It consisted of three shoulders of the highest British authority in hundred and fifty men of the Queen's 22nd, Sinde the charge of being the principal author mounted on camels (two on each animal), two of the chieftain's degradation. hundred Sindean horse, and two 24-pounder howitzers. The want of forage rendered it necessary to send back a hundred and fifty of Napier would exasperate the Beloochees, and The remainder of the force enthe horse. countered the difficulties of the desert march, which were great, and reached Emaun Ghur, which place was occupied without difficulty, 15th of February the long-threatened outbreak and destroyed. The fort was stated to belong took place; the first object of attack being the to Ali Moorad, who consented to its destruction. The march of the British general, and the capture and destruction of a fortress of Sinde, took place at a time when we were

This step was not desired; it was regarded as of truth. The fall of Emaun Ghur took place

The event was not without effect; but the sign the sentence of their own virtual depority supreme in Sinde. As the British commissioner and his attendants departed from the final conference, they were assailed with execrations from an assembled crowd, who were restrained from more dangerous expression of their feelings only by the presence of a strong escort of horse, sent by the ameers, under the command of some of their most influential chiefs.

One great point on which the ameers had dwelt in their conferences with Major Outram, was the wrong which the British authorities had caused, and continued to uphold, in the transfer of authority from Meer Roostum to Ali Moorad. It was stated, that the surrender of power by the latter had been the effect of compulsion; and seeing that the aged chickain was altogether in the hands of his brother, it is very probable such was the general thought a masterstroke of diplomacy,

It was constantly represented by the ameers, that the continued advance of Sir Charles cause them to resort to arms in defence of the independence of their country. That officer, however, continued to advance, and on the Outram. A dense body of cavalry and infantry took post in a manner to command three belonging to some or other of the authorities sides of the inclosure in which the residence was situated, the fourth being defended by a professedly in a state of peace with all. It is British steamer, which, happily, lay in the greatly, therefore, to be desired, for the river at no great distance. A hot fire was credit of the British name, that the statement commenced and kept up for four hours by the above noticed should be correct. It has, how-assailants; but their attempts to effect an entrance were defeated by the judicious efforts formed the reserve), aided by some Sinde of Captain Conway, the officer in command, ably and zealously supported by his subalterns, Lieutenant Harding and Ensign Pennefather, of her Majesty's 22nd, and by two volunteers, Captain Green, of the 21st native infantry, and Captain Wells of the 15th. Captain Brown, Bengal engineers, was despatched to the steamer, and there rendered valuable assistance in directing her fire. The number of men under Captain Conway was entirely inadequate to any protracted defence, and the stock of ammunition was scanty. A reinforcement of men and a supply of ammunition were expected by another steamer, but she arrived without either, and it became obvious that there was nothing to be done but to effect a retreat with as little loss as possible. attempt was made to remove the property within the residence; but the camp-followers became alarmed, and after reaching the steamer with their first loads, could not be brought to return; while the fighting men had employment more important as well as more stirring than looking after baggage. The greater portion of the property was therefore abandoned, and the British party evacuated their quarters in a body, covered by a few skirmishers. The movement was effected with perfect order; and the British commander, with his brave escort, arrived in safety at the camp of Sir Charles Napier.

existing differences but by the sword. Charles Napier accordingly advanced to a avoid interfering with the oblique fire of the place called Meeanee, about six miles from Hyderabad, which he reached on the 17th of my's position, and the British line advanced February, where he found the ameers posted in great force. Their position was strong, their flank being protected by two woods, which were connected by the dry bed of the river Fulailee, having a high bank, behind which, and in the woods, were the enemy posted. In front of the extreme right, and on the edge of the wood protecting it, was a village. Having made his observations, the British general prepared for attack; posting his artillery on the right of the line, and sending forward skirmishers to drive out the enemy's force. The advance then took place from the right in echelon of battalions; the Poole, commanding the brigade, and Captain left being declined to escape the fire of the village. The artillery and her Majesty's 22nd formed the leading echelon; the 25th native heavy fire of matchlocks without returning a infantry the second, the 12th native infantry the third, and the 1st grenadier native infantry intrenchment, which they forthwith stormed

About a hundred yards from the bank the very full nor very clear. This much is certain, The British, however, continued to press de Poonah horse, under Captain Taite, and the horse, completed the discomfiture of the enemy, who slowly retired. The victory cost the British a loss of sixty-two killed, and one hundred and ninety-five wounded. the number was a large proportion of officers. The loss of the enemy was estimated at five thousand; but this amount seems incredible.

Immediately after the battle, six of the ameers (three of Khyrpore and three of Hyderabad) surrendered themselves prisoners; and on the 20th of February Sir Charles Napier entered the capital of Lower Sinde. But the contest was not yet at an end. Shere Mahomed, ameer of Meerpore, remained in arms; and on the 24th of March the British commander marched out of Hyderabad to attack him. He found him at the head of a great force posted behind a nullah, which had been partially scarped and otherwise strengthened. Shere Mahomed, perceiving that the British force was outflanking him on the right, moved in that direction; and Sir Charles Napier, believing that the movement drew him away from that part of the nullah prepared for defence, chose the moment for commencing an attack. A troop of horse artillery, under Major Leslie, was ordered to move forward and endeavour to rake the nullah, while the 9th light cavalry and Poonah horse were ordered to advance in line on the left of the artillery, which was supported on There was now no mode of deciding the the right by her Majesty's 22nd; that regi-Sir ment being, however, considerably retired, to artillery. The artillery opened upon the enein echelon from the left, the Queen's 22nd leading the attack.

From the official account of the battle, the following particulars are to be collected. The enemy appearing to shrink from the cross fire of the British artillery, Major Stack gave an impetus to their movement by a brilliant charge upon their left flank with the third cavalry, under Captain Delamain, and the Sinde horse, under Captain Jacob. troops crossed the nullah, and pursued the enemy for several miles. While this was in progress, the Queen's 22nd, under Major George, commanding the corps, attacked the nullah on the left, marching up to it under a shot till they came within forty paces of the in gallant style. Lieutenant Coote, who was the first man to mount the rampart, seized one British opened the fire of their musketry in of the enemy's standards, and was severely answer to that of the enemy. Thenceforward wounded while waving it to encourage his the official details of the battle are neither men. The efforts of the 22nd were supported by batteries commanded by Captain Willoughby and Captain Hutt, the fire from that the conflict was obstinate and sanguinary, loughby and Captain Hutt, the fire from and that for a time the event was doubtful. which crossed that of Major Leslie; while the terminedly on their opponents; and a charge 9th cavalry, under Major Story, turned the from the 9th Bengal light cavalry (which enemy's right flank, pursuing and cutting down the fugitives. A brigade consisting of order Captain Jacob, with the Sinde horse, to the 12th, 21st, and 25th regiments, comproceed round to the eastern face of the fort, manded respectively by Captain Fisher, Capto intercept the escape of the garrison, if they for action. were two valuable officers, Captain C. Garrett, of desperate valour, in riding along the top of the nullah in advance of his battery, with a view of accortaining where his guns could be brought to hear with the greatest effect.

After this battle, Sir Charles Napier marched forward, and took possession of Meerpore. The reduction of Omercote, situate in the desert, and a fortress of some importance (with reference to Oriental notions), was the next object sought. A detachment was despatched against this place, originally under Captain Whitlie; but Major Woodburn subsequently assumed the command. Acting on information reaching him at a distance from the spot, Sir Charles Napier ordered a retreat when the tribes, who are always to be met with where force sent against Omercote was about twenty forage is most plentiful. miles from the fortress. At the moment foraging parties sufficiently strong might, were when the order was received, the officer in a squadron left alone, often leave too small a command was informed that the place had been abandoned by the garrison; but the have been induced to add the infantry, so as order to retire seems to have been peremptory, and he did not feel justified in disregarding it. Under the influence of this embarrassment, the capture of Omercote might have been postponed indefinitely, but for the energy of Captain Brown, who, mounting his horse, performed, without halting, a journey of eighty miles, under the burning sun of Sinde, in order to put Sir Charles Napier in possession of the report which had been received by Major Woodburn, and obtain his revised de-Permission being given to advance, tain Sterens, and Captain Jackson, the were disposed to resort to such a step, or to brigade being under Major Woodburn, was induce them to display their strength, if they also meritoriously engaged, supported by the were prepared for defence. The chief persons fire of a battery under Captain Whitlie, on of the Hindoo population within the place came the right of which were the 1st and 8th out, however, and tendered their submission regiments, under Major Brown and Major to the British commander, assuring him, at Clibborn, which regiments appear to have the same time, that the greater part of the manifested great coolness and great anxiety garrison had fled some days before; that there Of the details of the battle little remained few armed men within the fort; and can be gathered; and all the information that those few had no desire to resist, but were furnished amounts in fact to this:-that Sir ready to depart, if the safety of their lives Charles Napier, with a force the component were guaranteed. An officer was despatched parts of which are only incidentally mentioned, to inform them that their lives would be met a large body of Beleochees, engaged and spared, on condition of their coming out and defeated them. The less sustained by the laying down their arms. In the mean time British amounted to two hundred and sixty-some guns were brought up, and placed in seven killed and wounded. Among the killed position, Major Woodburn rightly concluding "that the sight of them" was likely to "hasten the determination of the garrison." There was of the 9th light cavalry, and Lieutenant the determination of the garrison." There was J. C. Smith, of the Bombay artillery. The no necessity for employing them, the remnant of latter officer fell while exhibiting an instance the garrison meeting the communication made the garrison meeting the communication made to them by opening their gates, surrendering the keys, and laying down their arms.

Sir Charles Napier had directed a squadron of horse to be left as a garrison for Omercote. Major Woodburn determined to add to this a company of infantry, and his reasons appear well founded. "I beg," he says, "to submit to the major-general's consideration, that foraging parties will, from all I can hear, be obliged to go often to the distance of many miles, and will be required to be in strength, as there are now many parties of the followers of the Ameer Shere Mahomed scattered about the country, as well as others of different To make these garrison in the fort; and on this account I to admit of all the cavalry being absent at one time, when such is required."

Sir Charles Napier concluded his despatch to the governor-general, announcing the occupation of Omercote, with the words, "Thus, my lord, I think I may venture to say Sinde is now subdued." But the subjugation of a country inhabited, for the most part, by a wild and warlike population, is a thing easy to talk The governor of, but not easy to accomplish. of Sinde (for to this office Sir Charles Napier had been appointed by Lord Ellenborough), it was acted upon by Major Woodburn. The for many months after uttering this declafinal march was commenced at midnight on ration, found that he had something more to the 4th of April. It lay over a good road, do than merely to make the requisite arrangebut through jungle, which became thicker and ments for carrying on the civil administration higher as Omercote was approached; and it of the country which he represented as subwas not till arriving within eight hundred dued. The Ameer Shah Mahomed continued yards of the north-west frontier, that a fair to break the tranquillity upon which Sir sight of the fort could be obtained. On a Charles Napier had calculated. The chief party of horse approaching to reconnoitre, a was attacked on the 8th of June by a British few armed men showed themselves on the force under Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts, conwalls, and this induced Major Woodburn to sisting of twelve companies of native infantry, followed by the 6th, 15th, and 20th regiments, ground for alarm. The proceedings of the a troop of the 3rd light cavalry, and a battery of four guns. Shah Mahomed was encamped never popular in England, and even the at a place called Peer Assee, with a force splendour of victory failed of securing public reported to amount to two thousand men. approbation to a course of policy believed to On the approach of Colonel Roberts, the be based in injustice. enemy was discovered in retreat. Captain Walker was despatched with the cavalry to had divided with Sinde the attention of the intercept this movement, and succeeded in British government during the year in which destroying many of the fugitives. mainder of the detachment continued to ad-sessions. This was the state of the dominions vance, and a party of the grenadier company of the house of Scindia, where events occurred of the 20th native infantry, scouring an inclo- which threatened to light up again the flames sure, discovered Shah Mahomed, with three of war but just extinguished in Affghanistan, or four servants, concealed in some underwood. He seemed at first disposed to resist; Dowlut Rao Scindia, with whom, it will be but Captain Travers, of the 23rd Bombay recollected, treaties had been concluded, under infantry, coming up, he delivered his sword to the administrations of the Marquis Wellesley chief to disturb the British in Sinde.

with the Sinde horse, they broke, dispersed, usual ceremonies. and fled in all directions, leaving their guns in the hands of the British, without an effort His youth, therefore, rendered imperative to save them. The deprivation of these, and some special provision for the discharge of the entire loss, for five or six only were killed. rance, having little advantage, in point of age, But the dispersion was complete, and Shere over her adopted son, it was obvious that her Mahomed fled from the field with ten horse hands were not those in which the requisite men, the remnant of a force of about four thousand that he had brought into action.

Another subject, not unfraught with anxiety, The re- that country was added to the British posand the embers of which yet glowed in Sinde. Thus terminated the endeavours of this and the marquis of Hastings, died in the year 1827, leaving no son, and having adopted none. Another ameer, named Shere Mahomed, His widow, the daughter of the notorious was still at the head of a large force of Beloo- Shirzee Rao Ghatgay, thereupon assumed the chees; but his situation was one of peril. exercise of the sovereign authority, and medi-Colonel Roberts' column was threatening him | tated introducing a member of her own family on the north; Sir Charles Napier, with the as her successor. But this design she was troops under his personal command, was forced to abandon; and ultimately, she adopted marching upon him from the south; and a boy of the Scindia family, who was declared another force, under Captain Jacob, cut him to be the nearest relation of the deceased off from retreat to the desert. The force last-chief eligible for adoption, with reference to named, Shere Mahomed determined to attack; | age. The youth of the new chief secured to named, Shere Mahomed determined to attack; age. The youth of the new chief secured to and his choice was probably governed by two the ambitious widow of the deceased one the considerations: in the first place, it was the continued exercise of power for some years; weakest of the three bodies of troops by two the former attaining the age of seven-whom he was menaced; and in the second, it interfered with his chance of escaping the interfered with his chance of escaping the others. On the night of the 13th of June, Captain Jacob received information that the amount of seven months of hesitation, to three o'clock on the morning of the 14th, the lamount of pansion to be assigned to her, and ameer was about to attack him; and about retiring, after some months of hesitation, to three o'clock on the morning of the 14th, the enemy were discovered approaching. The advance, however, was too slow to meet the expectations of the British officer in command; and, leaving a troop and a company to protect his camp, he went out with the rest of his force in search of the tardily advancing the bank is force in search of the tardily advancing to the sustained repeated shocks, until the 7th of February, 1843, when he died, child-lenemy. The Beloochees formed on the bank less, and without having made any arrange-of a nullah, in considerable strength, both horse and foot, and opened three gups, which ceremony of adoption. His widow, who was horse and foot, and opened three guns, which ceremony of adoption. His widow, who was advanced on the British, and showed a front under thirteen years of age, adopted, with the of defiance. But its continuance was brief; concurrence of the influential persons and for no sooner had the British commander powerful officers of the court, a boy, named formed his line, and brought his guns into Bhageerut Rao, reputed to be the nearest play, than the Beloochees were perceived relative to the deceased maharajah, and he moving off; and on Colonel Jacob advancing was forthwith seated on the guddee, with the

The maharajah was about eight years old. of several standards, constituted almost their active duties of sovereignty; and the mahapower should be placed. The British resident, Colonel Spiers, supported the pretensions of Since this period Sinde has been more tran-Mama Sahib, the maternal uncle of the dequil; but it was long ere the irruptions of ceased chief, and the governor-general acthe wild Beloochee tribes ceased to afford quiesced in the opinion of the resident. Mama

Sahib had enemies and rivals; in an Oriental thwarted by the maharance, and the clique of court every man, intent solely on his own intriguers by whom she was surrounded. advancement, is an enemy to every other man Suddenly and unexpectedly, on the 18th of whose success may impede it. But the in- May, the British resident received a message fluence of the British resident prevailed from the maharance, intimating a wish that Mama Sahib was appointed regent, and on the young maharajah should contract a matrithe day on which the maharajah was enthroned, was invested with a dress indicative of his accession to the office.

Thus far the views and wishes of the British government were realized. But from the period when Mama Sabib entered upon the exercise of his functions, he found himself counteracted by sinister influence. A woman named Nurungee, whose power over the mind of the rance appears to have been great, exercised it in hostility to the regent. She was removed, but the effects of her evil counsel did not cease with her presence. more serious evil was the state of the army, more especially of a brigade of infantry, consisting of three battalions. One of the three, commanded by a person named Ishooree Singh, had committed great excesses during a march dent remonstrated, but in vain; and in a to Malwa. death of the late maharajah; and, on the Scindia's camp, which he had been ordered to representations of the British resident, orders had been despatched for the recall of Ishooree Singh, which step was to be followed by his except by the parties engaged in them; and dismissal from the service, and imprisonment. in a majority of instances, perhaps even they The order required Ishooree Singh to return would be unable to give a rational appoint of alone, leaving his battalion where it might be their motives and conduct. It would be when the order reached him. But this did vain to inquire at length into those of the not correspond with his views; he returned, actors in the extraordinary course of events. but brought the Laitalion with him; and on which raised Mama Sahib appearantly to the the arrival of this force in the camp, the dis- summit of uncontrollable power only for the affection which permided it spread to the two purpose of immediately precipitating him had other battalious, which formed part of the long into ruin and disgrams. One point, howbrigade to which that of Ishooree Single ever, is clear, that the British government belonged

Many Said, extremed his regimes to an orse the most ordinary manners of brainess. Upon the expression of the regimes, but the first stands that he effort should have break account Listing the desired of each will be for make to establish the expression of the regimes of the high country that the effort should have been on the slid of Establish troops; the interioration of the slid of Establish troops; the interioration of the slid of the regimes of the slid of monial alliance with the niece of the regent. The next evening was fixed for the performance of the initiatory ceremony of the tacks, and it accordingly took place. This turn of affairs was sufficiently strange, but it was almost immediately followed by another not less startling. On the 18th of May the current of court favour seemed to flow entirely in the regent's favour, and by the proposed marriage of his niece with the maharajah his tenure of power appeared to be rendered On the 21st the maharance summoned to her presence all the chiefs in camp, excepting Mama Sahib, and subsequently despatched a message to the British resident, complaining of the conduct of the regent, and expressing a desire for his removal. The resi-This had occurred before the few days Mama Sahib was on his journey from quit.

Oriental intrigues are rarely explicable, Lad little infinence. The regent, who enjoyed The British resident called for the immediate, its support as far, at least, as recial assistance and signal punishment of the continuations went, was distinct with as little executed. officer whose continue had difficult a matthew as a medial servent would have true dissorbed, spirit through an entire brigade of the 2007, and this by a faction beated by a girl whose and officed the activation of Edital broads immediate age would be Rouge have the for the transpose of effecting it. The regard, chief her from the enterine of are your Mann Saint, converted his reclinest to act over the trust ordinary manner of brainest to act over the trust ordinary manner of brainest to act over the trust ordinary manner of brainest.

British government could not acquierce in the governor-general inexpedient that he should removal of the Mama Sahib without the return to Gwalior till some government should assignment of some better reason than the be created, "having the appearance of good wish of the maharance; he was to hold no intention, and giving the promise of stability;" official intercourse with the successor of the or, until the maharance and chiefs should deposed regent without special instructions "earnestly call" for his assistance, in forming from the governor-general; and it was authosuch a government. The governor-general ritatively announced, that "the maharance had been rejourning in the upper provinces, and the chiefs must bear in mind that the frontier of the territories belonging to the British by which he was about to be separated from government, and of those of the Gwalior state. being for the most part conterminous," it that, under all circumstances, the latter should was "a matter of paramount importance that wait for instructions. The inconvenience was there should exist in Gwalior a government perceived and noticed; but it was declared willing and able to preserve tranquillity along that the governor-general deemed the return that extended line;"—that "the British gov- of the resident to Gwalior to be a measure that extended line;"—that "the British government" could "not permit the growing up of a lax system of rule, generating habits of plunder along its frontier;"—that "its duty to its own subjects imperatively" required that it should interfere effectually to maintain the public peace by all such means as" inght "appear best calculated to secure that essential object;"—that "it would be far more essential object;"—that "it would be satisfactory to adopt the necessary measures in cordial co-operation with the authorities of Sahib had retired to Scronge, and it was apthe Gwalior state," and that it had been hoped prehended that some attempt might be made "that under the regency of the Mama Sahib by the ruling parties at Gwalior to seize him this might have been done; but" that "in any there. The calm acquiercence of the British case the public peace must be preserved, and" government in the deposal of the Mama Sahib that "the Gwalior state" would "be held had not tended to raise its character; and the responsible for all such interruptions thereof seizure of the ex-regent at Seronge would as" might "arise out of the mal-administration of its dominions." These declarations The governor-general had declared that he were well; but the movement of a brigade did "not wish to have any concern with the would have been much more effective. In Mama Sahib's proceedings;" and the resident the East no argument is so convincing as that had accordingly been instructed to abstain presented by strong battalions. "I do not from taking any notice of that person's resitivity it possible," said the resident, "to dence at Seronge, or any other place. This restore the Mama Sahib to power by remon- was on the 30th of June. On the 13th of strance alone;" and beyond all question he July a different tone was adopted. The resithought correctly.

The British resident, in conformity with instructions from his government, prepared to to address the maharanee in the language of remove from Gwalior for a season. This step appears to have excited in the minds of the maharance and her admirers that vague apprehension of evil not uncommon where there upon that government itself, and punished is a consciousness that offence has been given, accordingly. The threat was to be enforced and where every act of the party offended is by reference "to the conduct recently adopted and where every act of the party offended is regarded with suspicion. Inquiries were made by the British government towards the ameers as to the cause of the resident's removal; and of Sinde, its enemies"—a most unhappy the hollow professions of regard always current in eastern courts were tendered with great liberality. The representative of the Joudpore, and of Jessulmere, its allies. A British government was entreated, on behalf copy of this letter was transmitted to the of the maharanee, to consider the maharajah maharanee, with whom it had been deemed and herself as his children (albeit her recent necessary to open communications on matters conduct had exhibited little of filial obedience); of state, without the intervention of any his forgiveness was implored, and that of the minister. This was a complete departure from governor-general, but the Mama Sahib was the principle laid down some months before, not recalled. The resident answered in lan- that the maharanee was to have no power, guage less warm than that in which he had not even that of appointing ministers, but been addressed, but designed to have little that all authority was to be centred in a more meaning; and, this edifying intercourse responsible regent. The maharanee, in her

but was now on his return; and the distance the resident made it obviously inconvenient appears, difficult to be adhered to. The Mama dent was desired, if he entertained the least apprehension of danger to the Mama Sahib. warning, intimating that the entrance of a single man into the territory of the British government would be considered as an attack reference, except as to the indication of power courts were tendered with --and towards the chiefs of Bhawulpore, of The representative of the Joudpore, and of Jessulmere, its allies. A concluded, he proceeded to Dholepore. There answer, denied that any intention existed of he was informed that it was deemed by the attacking the Mama Sahib, and a second reply.

It would be impracticable to give any clear account of the intrigues at Gwalior, except at a length disproportioned to the importance of compel us to demand from the Gwalior state most active in the deposal of the Mama Sahib, and whose influence became predominant after belonging to the Gwalior state in Malwa, and the fall of the regent, was called the Dada adjoining Saugor, will be most conveniently Khasjee Walla. An attempt was made to obtain for the maharanee's father a portion of the power of the state, and it was directed that he should be consulted on all affairs; but the Dada Khasjee Walla represented that great evils were likely to arise from a divided authority; and thereupon he was reinstated in that plenitude of power which he so disinterestedly claimed.

But all real power was, in fact, in the hands of the army. This body comprised above 30,000 men; a number out of all proportion to the demands of such a state as that of Gwalior for defence, and not less to its means of supporting them. These troops were, in some instances, commanded by officers of European birth, or of European parentage on one side; but the ordinary relation between officers and men was constantly inverted, the latter assuming the province of command, and punishing their officers at pleasure.

Somewhat tardily the British government turned its attention to the necessity of interposing by force, if other means should fail, to suppress the disorders which prevailed in Gwalior and menaced the peace and security of its own dominions. On the 10th of August, the expulsion of the regent, who had been whole army; the removal from that army, the Gwalior durbar, and our general influence of any representation hostile to himself. accurately to calculate upon the future, when its complexion must depend upon troops withinhabitants of the detached territories of the true, Dada Khasjee Walla had no right to the representation on the subject received a like | Gwalior state in Malwa, and of the districts adjoining Saugor and Bundelcund, being under no real control, will become the invaders and plunderers of our subjects and allies, and thus the subject; and the details, if furnished, a reparation which it will be really unable to would have little interest. The following afford, and which we must, therefore, in some brief notice may be sufficient:—The person manner, take for ourselves. The measures we may thus adopt with respect to the districts covered by the union of a considerable force in a camp of exercise upon or near the Jumna." In accordance with the views herein propounded, the commander-in-chief was desired to form his camp at Cawnpore, on the 15th of October next ensuing, and it was directed that shortly afterwards an army of exercise, consisting of at least twelve battalions of infantry, with a proper complement of cavalry and artillery, should be assembled upon or near the Jumna.

In the mean time anarchy continued to increase, though communications between the maharance and the British resident at Dhole-The maharance expore were not suspended. pressed a strong wish for the return of the resident to Gwalior; but the latter, acting under the instructions of his government, refused, except on condition of the Dada Khasjee Walla being not only deprived of authority, but punished by fine and banishment; or, what was regarded as a preferable course, surrendered to the British government. A paper, addressed to the maharanee by the resident, which contained the demand for the punishment or surrender of the dada, was by that personage intercepted; he very naturally feelthe governor-general recorded a minute, con-taining the following passage:—"The recent the royal ear. When this fact became known change of ministry at Gwalior, effected through to the governor-general, great indignation was expressed at the conduct of the dada in withrecently nominated with our sanction; the holding the communication, which was deconcentration at Gwalior itself of almost the clared to be "an offence of a most criminal character against the state of Gwalior, amountwith circumstances of violence, of almost all |ing to a supersession of the maharance's authothe officers of European or Eurasian origin; rity, and the transference of all power in an the selection for posts, civil and military, of unlawful manner to himself. The governorpersons known to be hostile to our govern- general in council," it was added, "will not ment, and of some whose removal from their permit any subject of the state of Gwalior appointments had but recently been carried thus to supersede the authority of his sove-into effect by the late maharajah, on our repre-reign." As the British government had ausentation; all these things, exaggerated as thorized its representative to communicate they will be by a people desirous of change, with the maharanee, disappointment, not unmake it desirable that the representations our mixed with anger, might be felt at the step government may find it necessary to make to taken by the dada to prevent the transmission over native states, should be supported by the it seems rather an exaggerated tone of writing, presence of an army. It may be impossible to designate the act of the dada as a criminal offence against the state of Gwalior; that state, if it deserved the name, being at the out discipline, who may soon be without pay, time altogether without any responsible or and upon men unscrupulous as to the means recognized government. One of the reasons by which the objects of their bad ambition adduced in illustration of this view-that the may be effected; but the course of events act amounted to a suspension of the maha-which seems most probable is this, that the range's authority—seems perfectly idle. It is power which he had assumed; but it is equally India; and the only result of false measures true, that, according to the declared conviction would be to remove the scene of a contest, of the British government, neither had the altogether inevitable, from Gwalior to Allahmaharance any right to the exercise of sove-labad, there to be carried on with diminished reign authority. It had been solemnly and force, a disheartened army, and a disaffected most justly determined, that her extreme people." youth rendered her utterly unfit for the charge. She had no authority but that which, like the nature of Scindia's territory, and the sources dada, she had usurped. A regent had been of evil to be found in the existing state of appointed, with the sanction of the British Gwalier, the governor-general proceeded to government; he had been deposed, and the speak of the maharajah in a manner which, maharance took the power for which she had did not the result refute the belief, might been adjudged incompetent. Yet the same have been understood as intimating an intengovernment which had so adjudged, conde-tion to dispossess the youthful prince of the scended, by its representative, virtually to chiestainship to which he had so recently recognize her usurpation, by holding inter-been elevated. The maharajah, it was stated, course with her, as the guardian of the interests was a boy of poor parentage, and altogether of the house of Scindia. Not only so, but in uneducated. This latter point was referred an official paper issued by that government, the to more than once in the minute, from which maharanco is adverted to in a character which the most devoted of her adherents would scarcely have ventured to claim for her. The dada is spoken of as a subject, and the maharance as his sovereign. Now, it is quite clear that the boy Scindia was the sovereign, and that even if the usurpation of the maharance were overlooked and submitted to, she could as altogether uneducated; it was stated on be regarded, at most, only as regent. Strange official authority, that in Mahratta literature it is, that after denying her the latter office. she should, without a shadow of claim, have his age generally do." It is not often that boys been invested with the higher rank of sove-

leave the presidency for the purpose of proceeding to the vicinity of the place, where, by negotiation or force, the differences between from any one of the family of Scindia who has the British and Mahratta states were about to be determined. But before he departed. he recorded his view of the cause of his journey in a lengthened minute. In this document the rights and obligations of the British dated at Delhi, the 11th of February, in the government as the paramount power in India same year in which the minute under examinawithin the Sutlej, were adverted to and tion was recorded, the following passage is maintained. The doctrine that in India such found: "The governor-general has also rea paramount power must exist, and that the British government should be that power, was one which statesmen, both at home and in the East, were slow to learn; but it may be hoped that it is now too deeply seated in the minds of men of all parties to be easily effaced, and Lord Ellenborough was justified in assuming appear how, in November, any reasonable it as the basis of his proposed movements.

It would appear from the next paragraph of his lordship's minute, that he had little hope had held dominion was only collateral. Furof effecting a settlement of the affairs of Gwalior otherwise than by force, and that at this rajah's title might be omitted, it was alleged period (the 1st of November) he contemplated in the minute, that the prince was "elected something more than merely menacing the by the zenana and the chiefs of the army for frontiers of the disturbed country; for he their sole benefit, not for that of the people." continues :- "To maintain, therefore, unimpaired, the position we now hold, is a duty, not to ourselves alone, but to humanity. The government, it was rather late to object to it. adoption of new views of policy, weakness Indeed, the entire passage in which the under the name of moderation, and pusilla- objections are embodied is almost immediately nimity under that of forbearance, would not neutralized by the following: "On the deavert from our own subjects, and from our cease of the late maharajah, the British

After noticing the reattered and ill-connected circumstance it may be inferred that some considerable importance was attached to it; but it is difficult to conjecture upon what grounds. Indian princes are reldom highly educated; and though the attainments of the maharajah afforded no cause for boasting, it does not seem that he was properly described "he had made as much progress as boys of at nine years of age are either great linguists or great philosophers. A further objection The governor-general was now preparing to the prince, to whose elevation the British government was an assenting party, is found in the allegation, that he was not "descended possessed sovereign authority; but from a remote ancestor of those by whom sovereignty was acquired." Yet in a public notification, issued on the death of Junkojee Rao Scindia, found: "The governor-general has also received information of the adoption, by the widow of the late maharajah, with the assent of the chiefs and people, of Bhajeerut Rao, the person nearest in blood to the late maharajah." As the adopted prince had been recognized in February as the nearest in blood, it does not objection could be taken to him on the ground that his relationship to the robber chiefs who ther, that no possible objection to the maha-This, without doubt, was quite true; but as the election had been confirmed by the British own territories, the evils we let loose upon government readily acknowledged the sucterritories. In the following passage these [had not referred to it for many years, and did grounds are very distinctly set out:—"In not recollect with accuracy the engagements Europe there is no paramount state. The which it contained. An article which provided relations of a paramount power to a depen- for the employment, "on the requisition of dent state create in India rights and duties the maharajah," of a subsidiary force, to be altogether different from those which can stationed near his frontier, being pointed out, exist in Europe between states subject to one the chief asked, admitting such an engageadmitted international law, and controlled in ment to exist, what was its practical bearing the exercise of their individual power by the on the question in hand-whether the ingeneral opinion of the great republic of states terference of the British government was to which they belong; but, even in Europe, restricted to cases in which the maharajah a condition of affairs in any country which might apply for such interference? He was manifestly threatened the general repose would answered, that the case under the spirit of not long be suffered to exist; and the combi- the treaty had arisen from the fact of the nation of the leading powers would effect that maharajah and the maharanee, both children, which, in India, must be effected by the incapable of acting for themselves, having, by British government alone. When the existing the machinations of evil-disposed persons, who relations between the state of Gwalior and the had usurped the whole authority of the govern-British government are considered, it is im-| ment, been virtually set aside; that in consepossible to view the expulsion of the Mama quence of the proceedings of those persons, Sahib, and the elevation of the Dada Khasjee the usual friendly relations of the two states Walla to the ministry, otherwise than as an had been for the time dissolved, and that the affront of the gravest character offered to the ruin of the Gwalior state must ensue, if the British government by that successful in-triguer in the zenana of Gwalior, and by the disorganized army by which he has been sup-not interfere to save the person of the mahaported. That army of 30,000 men, with a rajah and preserve the government of the very numerous artillery, under the direction country. of a person who has obtained and can only On the day after the conference just noticed, retain his post in despite of the British another, as already intimated, took place, at government, is within a few marches of the capital of the North-western provinces. The frontiers of the Gwalior state, for a great distance, adjoin ours in the lately disturbed districts of Saugor. They adjoin the territories of the chiefs of Bundelcund, and so British army, that being the spot where scattered are they as to touch the dominions former governors-general had been met on of almost all our allies in Malwa, while they occasion of visiting Gwalior, and any deviation extend beyond the Nerbudda, and even to the from the established usage would, it was recordial and zealous co-operation of the Gwalior maharajah. authorities is essential to the maintenance of expressed his determination to advance. The tranquillity; and we know that, under the chiefs thereupon earnestly entreated that he present minister, the most we can expect is would reconsider the matter, urging that if that such co-operation will be coldly withheld, the British army passed the Gwalior frontier if, indeed, it should not be covertly given to before the maharajah had a meeting with the plunderers we would repress." Such were him, "it would be a breach of all precedent, the original views of the governor-general and eternally disgrace the maharajah and the recorded on the right of interference. In the government of Scindia." The governor-genecommunication made by his lordship on the ral being unmoved by these representations, 12th of December, to the maharanee, it is the language and manner of the chiefs in vaguely stated that the person and rights of pressing them appear to have increased in the maharajah, as the successor of Dowlut Rao earnestness: they expressed their belief that Scindia, "are placed by treaty under the "if the British army crossed the frontier protection of the British government." In a before the meeting with the maharajah, the conference between the governor-general and troops of Gwalior, who were already in a one of the Gwalior chiefs, on the 19th of state of the utmost alarm, would believe that December, the chief referred to this state- the governor-general was coming, not as a ment, and it thereupon appeared that the friend, but with a hostile purpose." In the treaty under which the supposed obligation to language of the paper from which this account defend the person and uphold-the rights of is framed, "they implored him (the governor-Scindia's successor had its origin, and on general), with joined hands, to weigh well the which the right of interference was now step he was taking, for that the state of grounded, was the treaty of Boorhampoor, Scindia was in his power to uphold or to concluded in the year 1804. The chief seemed destroy; and that, in their opinion, the most to know very little about this treaty, alleging, which the chief subject of discussion was a proposed meeting between the governor-general and the maharajah. On the part of the latter, it was suggested that the place of meeting should be the ground then occupied by the Everywhere along this line the most presented, detract from the honour of the The governor general, however, serious consequences depended on the passing that though he had it among his records, he of the British army across the frontier before the treaty, passed without producing the ex-threatening the enemy's right flank, it was pected event; and on the 29th, the British proposed to place the 4th brigade of cavalry, army, under Sir Hugh Gough, became sud- under Brigadier Scott, consisting of the 4th

It is to be regretted that the details of the circumstances under which the engagement horse artillery. The country through which was commenced are vague and imperfect. The despatch to the governor-general, reporting the battle and its results, begins thus : ravines, and rendered practicable only by the "Your lordship having witnessed the opera-tions of the 29th, and being in possession, from my frequent communications, of my passed by the army in three divisions on the military arrangements for the attack on the morning of the day in which the battle took Mahratta army in its strong position of Chonda, I do not feel it necessary to enter much into detail either as to the enemy's position or the of Maharajpoor, by eight o'clock. dispositions I made for attacking it." After giving the above reasons for the omission of information, which certainly ought not to have These had reference to a meditated attack been withheld, the commander-in-chief proceeds to observe, that the position of the enemy at Chonda was particularly well chosen and obstinately defended, and that he never witnessed guns better served, nor a body of infantry apparently more devoted to the protection of their regimental guns, "held by the Mahratta corps as objects of worship." Some brief reference to part of the details previously noted as well known to the governor-general follow. It appears to have been the intention of the commander-in-chief to turn the enemy's left flank by Brigadier Cureton's brigade of cavalry, consisting of her Majesty's 16th lancers, under Lieutenant-Colonel Macdowell; the governor-general's body-guard, under Captain Dawkins; the 1st regiment of light cavalry, under Major Crommelin; the 4th irregular cavalry, under Major Oldfield, with Major Lane's and Major Alexander's troops of horse artillery under Brigadier Gowan; the whole under the orders of Major-General Sir Joseph Thackwell. With this force, the third brigade of infantry, under Major-General Valiant, was to co-operate, the brigade consisting of her Majesty's 40th, under Major Stopford; 2nd ratta soldiers, after discharging their matching and in hand with great locks, fighting sword in hand with great milton; and 16th grenadiers, under Lieu-courage. General Valiant's brigade, it is tenant - Colonel Maclaren. The enemy's stated, displayed equal enthusiasm in the duty centre was to have been attacked by Briassigned to them—that of taking Maharajpoor centre was to have been attacked by Bri-assigned to them—that of taking Maharajpoor gadier Stacy's brigade of the 2nd division of in reverse, and the capture of twenty-eight infantry, consisting of the 14th native infantry, under Lieutenant - Colonel Gairdener; the 31st, under Lieutenant-Colonel Weston; and posed by a body of the enemy's cavalry on the the 43rd light infantry, under Major Nash. To this brigade was attached a light fieldbattery, under Captain Browne; the whole Grant's horse artillery and the 4th lancers; being under the command of Major-General and some guns and two standards were taken This force was to have been sup- in these encounters. ported by Brigadier Wright's brigade, com-posed of her Majesty's 30th regiment, com-Maharajpoor, General Valiant, supported by manded by Major Bray, and the 56th native the third cavalry brigade, moved on the right infantry, under Major Dick, with a light field- of the enemy's main position at Chonda. battery under Major Sanders. Major-General During his advance, he had to take in succesjutors of Bappoo in the work of negotiation, Littler, commanding the third division of also left the British camp without notice. Infantry, was to superintend the movements The 28th, the day fixed for the ratification of this column. On the left, with a view of denly engaged in deadly conflict with that of light cavalry (lancers), under Major Mactier, the Mahrattas. Colonel Pope, with Captain Grant's troop of this force had to advance is represented as of extreme difficulty, being intersected by deep unremitting labours of the sappers, under Major Smith. The Koharee river was to be place; but the whole of the force were in their appointed position, about a mile in front

> Such is the account given by the commanderin-chief of his intentions and preparations. upon the Mahrattas at Chonda. It was not expected that they would be met at Maharajpoor; but on arriving at this place, the British force was made aware of the presence of the enemy, by receiving the fire of their artillery. This was evidently a surprise. The language of the despatch is as follows:-"I found the Mahrattas had occupied this very strong position during the previous night, by seven regiments of infantry with their guns, which they intrenched, each corps having four guns, which opened on our own advances. obliged me to alter in some measure my disposition." The alterations were these:— General Littler's column being directly in front of Maharajpoor, was ordered to advance upon it direct, while General Valiant's brigade was to take it in reverse; both being sup-ported by General Dennis's column and the two light field-batteries. The details of what followed are very slight; but it appears that her Majesty's 39th, supported by the 56th native infantry, drove the enemy in a very dashing style from their guns into the village. There a sanguinary conflict ensued; the Mahguns resulted from this combined movement. The cavalry, under Brigadier Scott, was opextreme left; some well-executed charges were made by the 10th, supported by Captain in the language of the despatch, the enemy ground being intersected by ravines. About defended their guns with frantic desperation. four o'clock in the afternoon, the enemy was In these services, her Majesty's 40th was observed to have taken up a position on a much distinguished. This regiment captured chain of high hills, four miles to the east of four standards, and two of its commanding officers in succession (Major Stopford and Captain Codrington) were disabled by wounds. By the 2nd grenadiers, two standards were captured; and the 10th grenadiers worthily nided the achievements of this portion of the British force,

The brigade under General Littler, after dispersing the right of the enemy at Maharajpoor, advanced, supported by Captain Grant's troop of horse artillery and the 1st regiment of light cavalry, to attack the main position at of a hill commanding the enemy's left, after Chonda in front. the Queen's 39th, under Major Bray (who captured a battery of two guns. Brigadier was desperately wounded), supported by the | Yates and Major Earle, successively command-Queen's 56th, under Major Dick. Two regimontal standards were captured. work of four guns on the left of this position, long and obstinately defended by the enemy, was compelled at length to yield to the grenadiers of the Queen's 39th, under Captain 50th regiment, and the 56th and 58th native Campbell, aided by a wing of the 56th native infantry, seem to have been chiefly concerned infantry, under Major Phillips.

The victory was complete, but it was not gained without difficulty, nor without very heavy loss; the killed, wounded, and missing amounting to nearly eight hundred. So stronuous a resistance has rarely been offered by a native army when opposed to a British force, even when the disparity of numbers has been far greater than it was on this occasion. The commander-in-chief thus expresses himself on the subject :- "I regret to say that our loss has been very severe, infinitely beyond what I calculated upon; indeed I did not do justice to the gallantry of my opponents. On the same day which gave victory to the British force under the commander-in-chief, the left wing of the army, under Major-General Groy, defeated a large body of Gwalier troops, and captured their guns, twenty-four in number, a standard, all their ammunition, and some treasure. General Grey had marched getting through a narrow valley extending make known his highness's determination to from Himmutghur to Punniar. The enemy, have them observed; the maharajah to send it appeared, marched from Antree early on the huzzooreeahs, with a safe-conduct, with the sion three strongly intrenched positions, where, I were unable to approach the enemy, from the chain of high hills, four miles to the east of the British camp. Here General Grey determined to attack them, and arrangements for the purpose were made. The attack was commonced by her Majesty's 3rd Buffs and a company of suppers and miners, who had been detached to take up a position opposite to that occupied by the Mahrattan. It was directed against the centre of the enemy's force, who were driven from height to height in gallant style, with the loss of their guns. A wing of the 39th native infantry having occupied the crest It was carried by a rush of pouring in a destructive fire, rushed down and ing the 39th, were both wounded. An infantry A small brigade, under Brigadier Anderson, of the position, Queen's 50th, gave the finishing stroke to enemy, the enemy, and captured the guns which had escaped the provious attacks. Her Majesty's in achieving the ratisfactory termination of the conflict.

The natural consequence of the success which had attended the British in the two battles was to bring the maharanes and her advisers to accept whatever terms it might please the victors to dictate. On the 30th of December the maharajah and maharance were admitted to a conference with the governorgeneral, and after an interchange of the usual expressions of civility, and of much more, scarcely less usual on such occasions, and certainly not more sincere, the British authorities, in conjunction with the native chiefs in attendance on the maharajah and maharance, adopted the following propositions to meet the existing state of circumstances:-The maharajah to issue an order to all his officers and servants to desist from hostilities against the British armics; the governor-general to issue a similar order, forbidding hostilities on the part of the from Simmercon to Burka-ka-Serai on the British troops, unless they should be attacked; 28th of December, and there learned that the the maharajah to issue orders for furnishing cnomy were in position at Antree, seven miles all necessary supplies to the British armies on in front of his camp, and intended to make a the requisition of the commissary-general; night attack. On the 20th, General Grey made these orders of the maharajah to be sent by a march of sixteen miles, being desirous of huzzooreeals, in such manner as distinctly to same day by a parallel movement, took up a messengers despatched by the British comstrong position on the heights in the immediate mander-in-chief to the army in Bundeleund; vicinity of the fortified village of Mangore, to prevent collision, no Gwalior troops to be near Punniar, and commenced firing on the allowed to come within three miles of any British line of baggage. Some cavalry, under position taken up by the British armies; the Brigadier Harriott, were detached to oppose British armies to advance to the immediate them, and a troop of horse artillery, under vicinity of Gwalior on the 2nd of January, and Captain Brind, took up a position from which the governor-general to take the maharajah they were enabled to return the enemy's fire with him; the British government to give with precision and effect; but the cavalry compensation to such cultivators and others, in the Gwalior states, as might have been ex-|rupees, the surplus in excess of such sum was posed to loss by the passage of its armies, and to be paid over to the maharajah; but if the the amount of the compensation to be paid revenues and receipts should fall short of under arrangements to be made at a future eighteen lacs, the maharajah was to make up time by Scindia. Lastly, the maharajah was the deficiency. The fourth article declared, to issue the following proclamation, and to cause it to have the quickest and widest circulation possible :- "The British armies have entered the Gwalior territories to protect the person of the maharajah, to support his just authority, and to establish a government capable of maintaining the accustomed relations of friendship between the two states. All faithful subjects of Scindia are therefore directed to give them every aid in their power. No person will be injured by the British armies. All supplies furnished will be paid for. All damage unintentionally done will be compensated.

These arrangements were followed by others for settling anew the relations between the British government and that of Scindia, the governor-general and the army having ad-ment, to be held by it until such time as for carrying on the government was very this subject, the governor-general observed, different from that which had formerly been in the despatch announcing the conclusion of deemed the most advantageous. Instead of the treaty, "Schedule B was from the first a vesting it in a single person, and thus securing an undivided responsibility, it was committed agent in the conduct of affairs, and the medium of communication with the British resident. The disbandment of the army was effected much more quietly than had been The task was commenced on anticipated. the 9th of January, and completed by the 17th, without a single disturbance. Part of the men were enlisted in the new contingent force; the remainder received a gratuity of future livelihood elsewhere.

The new treaty was ratified by the governor-general on the 13th of January. It consisted of twelve articles. The first recognized and confirmed all existing treaties and engagements, except as to points where alterations might be made by the new one. In the enumeration of the treaties understood to be in force, that of Boorhampoor was included. By the second article it was provided that the contingent force stationed in the territories of Scindia should be increased, and that permanent provision should be made for defraying its charge by the assignment of the revenue of certain districts enumerated in a schedule attached to the treaty; such revenue to be in addition to any source of income previously set apart for the purpose. By the third the contingent force, and of the civil administration of the districts assigned for its

that for the better securing of the due payment of the revenues of the assigned districts, and for the better preserving of good order therein, the civil administration of those districts should be conducted by the British government in the same manuer as in the districts of which the revenues had been previously assigned. The fifth article introduced a subject of standing importance and interest in India—that of debt. The claims of the British government on that of Gwalior, arising from a variety of sources, were taken (subject to future examination) at twenty-six lacs of rupees, and it was agreed that payment of that sum should be made within fourteen days from the date of the treaty. In default, dispersion of the mutinous army, and the the revenues of further districts, enumerated future mode of conducting the affairs of the in another schedule attached to the treaty, On the 5th of January, the were to be made over to the British governvanced to Gwalior, the chief points of a new its claim on Scindia's government should be treaty were agreed upon at a conference held liquidated, together with interest at the rate with some of the chiefs. The mode adopted of five per cent, per annum. In regard to mere form, as the durbar declared their intention of paying the amount demanded from to a council, the president to be the principal them, and have now intimated to the resident that it is ready for him to send for when be pleases." The sixth article commenced with another recognition of the treaty of Boorhampoor, though it was not distinctly named, and then proceeded to limit the amount of military force to be maintained by the maharajah, and to provide for the reduction of the army to the prescribed number. The seventh provided for the discharge of the three months' pay, and departed to seek their arrears of pay to the disbanded troops, and for bestowing a gratuity on those not re-enlisted. The operation of reduction was in progress when the treaty was ratified, and, as already mentioned, was completed four days afterwards. Next came that important part of the treaty which was to regulate the future government of the Gwalior state. By the eighth article it was determined that the minority of the infant prince should be considered to terminate on his attaining the full age of eighteen years, and not sooner; and a day was fixed as that on which such age would be attained; namely, the 19th of January, 1853. It was then declared to have been agreed, that during the prince's minority the persons intrusted with the administration of the government should act upon the advice of the British resident; and the words which article, if, after defraying the charges of followed gave to this provision as wide a range as could possibly be desired. Those exercising the functions of government were to act support, there should be any surplus beyond upon the British resident's advice, not only the amount of eighteen lacs of Company's generally or on important points, but "in all matters wherein such advice shall be much a matter of choice, as it is of public offered." No change was to be made in expediency." "the persons intrusted with the administrathe next as "the council of regency," without the consent of the British resident, "noting under the express authority of the governor-general." Considering the importregency." The tenth assigned to the maha- of his lordship's acts. rance an annual allowance of three lacs, to be the British government, as "heretofore," to "exert its influence and good offices for maintaining the just territorial rights of the maharajah and the subjects of the state of Scindia at present existing in the neighbour-ing and other native states." The twelfth and last article recorded the settling and ratification of the treaty.

On the 26th of February, 1844, the governorcomed his return in the following manner:-"We, the undersigned inhabitants of Calcutta, second only in real importance to those affect- constancy. ing public security. natural that we should bear even his necessary hail his return with the warmest expressions be our study to make that residence as with its disappearance.

No further "state emergency" occurred tion," as they are properly designated in this to call his lordship away from Calcutta; but article, though more pompously referred to in his residence there was not of prolonged duration. On the 15th of July it became known that his lordship had been removed from the office of governor-general by the Court of Directors of the East-India Company. ance of the point to which it relates, the From this unusual exercise of authority, it latter part of this article would seem not to must be concluded that the points of difference be characterized by all the precision desirable. between Lord Ellenborough and those whom It might become a question, what was meant | he served were neither few nor trivial. The by the "express authority of the governor-precise grounds of removal were not made general." The ninth article nominated the public, and, consequently, they can for the persons who were to form the "council of present only be inferred from a consideration

There can be no doubt that Lord Ellenat her own sole disposal. The eleventh pledged borough's Indian administration disappointed his friends; and if a judgment may be formed from his own declarations previously to his departure from Europe, it must have disappointed himself. He wont to India the avowed champion of peace, and he was in-cessantly engaged in war. For the Affghan war he was not, indeed, accountable—he found it on his hands; and in the mode in which he proposed to conclude it, and in which general returned to Barrackpoor, and on the he would have concluded it but for the re-28th, he entered Calcutta. This was the monstrances of his military advisors, he cersecond anniversary of his lordship's arrival tainly displayed no departure from the ultrafrom Europe, and whether the concurrence pacific policy which he had professed in were designed or fortuitous, it was somewhat England. The triumphs with which the remarkable. On the occasion of his return, perseverance of the generals commanding in he received an address from the inhabitants of Affghanistan graced his administration seem Calcutta, which falls on the car with the completely to have altered his views; and the effect almost of rebuke. His lordship had desire of military glory thenceforward suppassed a considerable portion of his time in planted every other feeling in his breast. He India at a distance from the ordinary seat of would have shunned war in Afighanistan by government, a fact noticed by those who wel- a course which the majority of his countrymen would pronounce dishonourable. might without dishonour have avoided war beg to present our hearty congratulations on in Sinde, and possibly have averted hostilities your lordship's return to the presidency, after at Gwalior, but he did not. For the internal the accomplishment of the great objects that called you hence to Upper Hindostan. That had, indeed, little time to do anything those objects should have been so promptly War, and proparation for war, absorbed most and so triumphantly attained, is a matter of pational concernment. To us it is doubted to the state of national concernment; to us it is doubly childish pomp many more were consumed. gratifying, inasmuch as it enables your lord- With an extravagant confidence in his own ship to devote the energies of a powerful judgment, even on points which he had never mind towards measures of internal benefit, studied, he united no portion of stendiness or His purposes were formed and The presence of the abandoned with a levity which accorded little head of this colonial empire is so essential in with the offensive tone which he manifested every way to its prosperity, as to make it but in their defence, so long as they were entertained. His administration was not an illusabsence with something like impatience, and tration of any marked and consistent course of policy; it was an aggregation of isolated facts. of satisfaction. That your lordship's residence | Everything in it stands alone and unconamong us may be continued; that no state nected. His influence shot across the Asiatic emergency may again demand your personal world like a meteor, and—but for the indelible care in other parts of this wide territory, brand of shame indented in Sinde—like a must always be our earnest desire. It will meteor its memory would pass from the mind

Abbott, Captain, attacks fort Pishoot, 546.

Abdul Khalik, son of Tippoo Saib, surrenders to the English, 212.

Abercombie, General, taken prisoner by M. Hamelen, and retaken by the English, 369; proceeds with Commodore Rowley to Mauritius, ib.; harassing march of his army, 370; takes up a position at Moulin-à-Poudre, ib.; receives surrender of the island on conditions, ib.

Abercromby, General, Governor of Bombay, arrives with force at Tellicherry, advances to Cananore, and occupies the whole province of Malabar, 194; posted at Periapatam, 196; ordered to return to Malabar, 198; joins army of Lord Cornwallis at Seringapatam, 211; his passage through the Coorg, 214.

usurping son of Fyzoolla Khan, 225. Adam, Mr., opens second charge sgainst Hastings, 184; exercises temporarily office of governor-general, 457.

430. Adams, Colonel, his services against the Pindarries, 438; detaches Major Clarke against party of Pindar-ries, 443; overtakes and defeats the peishwa, 446; disperses his army, and lays siege to Chanda, 446,

447. Affghanistan, the Hon. M. Elphinstone enters into a treaty with, 528; contentions for the throne of, 528, 531; her encroachments on Persian territory, Captain Burnes's mission to, 532; Russian intrigues with, 533; Anglo-Indian forces engaged in a campaign against, 534, 535; Lord Auckland's proclamation explanatory of its objects, 535; arrival of the British forces in, 537; difficulties of the march, 538; respectively in 544, and to the Angle Vadian freebooters in, 544; part of the Anglo-Indian army withdrawn, ib.; honours paid to the commanders of the expedition, 546; dissatisfaction in, under the reign of Shah Shoojah, 546 et seq.; manifestations of open revolt against Shah Shoojah, 556; violent outbreak and massacre, ib.; preparations for defence, ib.; British reverses and defeats, 560 et seq.; terms agreed on at Kabool for the evacuation of the country, 563, 566; horrors of the march, 566 et seq.; treacherous conduct of the Affghan chiefs, 567; Albbar Shon claims the British ladies as hostages, 568; 560; freebooters in, 544; part of the Anglo-Indian army Khan claims the British ladies as hostages, 568, 569; Ann claims the British ladies as nostages, 505, 509; frightful slaughter of the troops, 559; their utter destruction, 570, 571; Jelalabad and Candahar kept possession of in defiance of orders, 571, 574, 576; a second campaign determined on, 571; the successful career of Generals Pollock, Nott, and Sale, and their recapture of Ghuznee and Kabool, 576 et seq.; Lord Ellenborough's disheartening correspondence on the critical state of, 577, 578, 579; severe conflict at the Valley of Tezcen, 583, 584; the Afighans visited with terrible retribution, 584, 585; the prisoners, male and female, recovered, 586; the British army returns to India, after having fully avenged Affghan treachery, Africaine frigate taken by the French, 363.

Afzool Khan prevailed upon to afford Sevajee an interview, 15; killed by Sevajee, ib.

Agra, fort of, occupied by General Lake, 291; crection of new presidency of, suspended, 512.

Ahmedabad taken by assault by Colonel Goddard, 148; furnishes ground of dispute between peishwa and gricows 116. guicowar, 416.

Ahmednuggur, army of Aurungzebe attacked on its route thither, 15; surrenders to General Wellesley, 285; surrendered to E.I.C. by peishwa, 429.

Ahmuty, Colonel, employed by governor-general and council to resist process of the supreme court, 140.

Ajmere, occupied and subjected to tribute by Moham-med Ghoory, 3.

Akbar (the Great), succeeds his father, Hoomayoon, at the age of fourteen years, 6; issues a proclamation announcing his own assumption of government, ib.; during the greater part of his reign engaged in resisting rebellion or invasion, ib.; requires Mahometan princes of the Deccan to acknowledge his supremacy, ib.; assumes the title of emperor of the supremery, 10.; assumes the title of emperor of the Deccan, ib.; concludes a marriage for his son with the daughter of the shah of Beejapore, ib.; his death, ib.; succeeded by his only son, Selim, ib. Akbar (son of Aurungzebe), tempted by the rajpoots to rebel against his father, 14; takes refuge with the Mahratta chief, Sumbhajee, ib.

Akbar Khan, son of Dost Mahomed, violent feelings of, 563. his propagate to the British, 564, assessington.

563; his proposals to the British, 565; assassinates the British envoys, ib.; his treacherous conduct, 567-571; demands and obtains the ladies as hostages, 568, 569; his interview with General Elphinstone, Brigadier Shelton, and Captain Johnson, 570; and their detention, ib.; his proceedings against Kanda-har, 572; besieges Jelalabad, and is signally defeated, 574, 575; again defeated at the passes of Huft Kabul, Akbul-ood-Dowlah, his pretensions to the throne of Oude, 525; his claims ridiculous, ib. Aldercron, Colonel, refuses the use of the king's guns and stores to the expedition for the recovery of Calcutta, 46.

dexander, his invasion of India, 2; proceeds down the Indus with a fleet of two thousand vessels, ib.

Ali Bahaudur, account of, 300.

Ali Hussein appointed successor of Omlut-ul-Omrah by will, 257; various conferences to discuss his pre-tensions, ib.; remarks on his position, 259, 260; placed on the musnud of Arcot, and measures taken by Lord Clive in consequence, 260. Ili Jah excites rebellion against his father, the nizam, is taken prisoner, and poisons himself, 224.

Ali Moorad, ameer of Sinde, 593; government of Khyrpore transferred to, 593.
Ali Musjid, fort of, captured, 543; difficulties attending the possession, 545.
Aliveral Khyparach

Aliverdi Khan, nabob of Bengal, dies, and is succeeded by Mirza Mahmood (Sooraj-oo-Dowlah), 42; consequences of his death, ib.

llahabad seized by the sovereign of Oude, 80; surrenders to the English, 101. Allan, Major, despatched to offer protection to Tippoo on his unconditional surrender, 240; his proceedings on his uncondutonia surrender, 240; his proceedings in discharge of his mission, ib.

Alla-ood-Deen, irruption of Mahometan arms into the Deccan, suggested by, 3; mounts the throne of Delhi, after assassinating his uncle and sovereign, ib.

Almas, his communications respecting Vizier Ali, 227; apprehension of danger from, 231; his extraordinary power, 261.

Alompra, founder of the Burmese empire, account of, 457. Alyghur taken by the English, and terror inspired by its fall, 287. 2 R

Aly Reza takes prisoner and murders Hafiz Jec, 204. Any Acza cases prisoner and murders Hauk Jee, 204.
Ambagee Inglia, his intrigues with Perron's officers, 288; concludes treaty with British government, 301;
invades Gohud, and defeats the rana's troops, 328; seized by Holkar, 338; released from restraint, and received by Scindia with the highest respect, 340.

Amboor defended by Captain Calvert against Hyder Ali, 113; surrender of, to Hyder Ali, 162.

Amboyna, expedition against, 372; surrender of, ib.
Ameer Khan despatched by Holkar with troops against the English, but returns in alarm, 309; destroys a party of British sepoys and artillerymen, 311; marches to the assistance of the rajah of Bhuttpore, 320; to the assistance of the rajah of Bhuttporc, 220; attacks Captain Welsh, and is defeated, 521; departs for Rohilcund, followed by a British force, ib.; his suspicious correspondence with the rajah of Berar, 327, 328; invades the territories of the rajah, ib.; his arrival in Scindia's court, 338; advances to the frontier of the rajah of Berar, but a British force being despatched against him, he retreats, 371, 372; offers an asylum to Kurreem Khan, 422; concludes treaty with British government, 433, 434.

treaty with British government, 433, 434. Ameer Singh becomes guardian of the infant rajah of Tanjore, 249; disputes his title, and supplants him, ib.; his cruelities, ib.; inquiry into his claims to the throne, 250; his expulsion, ib.

Ameers of Sinde, 538, 587; treatics with the, 588. (See Sinde.)

Americans, facilities enjoyed by, in regard to trade with China, 497.

Amherst, Lord, his arrival at Calcutta as governor-general, 457; finds himself inheritor of disputes just bursting into war, ib.; Burnese war commenced and carried on under his administration, 461-476; clevated to an carldom, 476; treaties and diplomatic arrangements concluded during his government, 485, 486; close of his administration and departure from India, Amyatt, Mr., deputed to confer with Meer Cossim on inland trade, 93; his proceedings in concert with Mr. Hay, ib.; demands dismissal from nabob, which is accorded, ib.; intercepted in his way from Moorshedabad, and murdered, ib.

Anderson, Mr. David, concludes treaty with Mahrattas, 151.

Andrews, Mr., concludes treaty with the Rajah Anun-derauze, 64; reconstruction of treaty effected by him, 65; deputed to negotiate with Hyder Ali, 118.

Angria, piratical family, operations against, 41.

Anunderauze, Rajah, attacks Vizagapatam, 64; negotiations with, ib.; his extraordinary army, 65; his flight and return, 66.

Appa Sabib exercises authority of regent in Nagpore, 434; attains the musnud, ib.; his position with regard to the British government, ib.; intrigues with the peishwa, ib.; his movements indicate hostile intentions, 435; his interview with British resident interrupted by firing, ib.; attacks the English, and is defeated, seeks to negotiate, and assents to terms of the resident, 436; proceeds to the residency, ib.; returns to the palace under provisional engagement, 427, process to the residency, ib.; 437; proposes to transfer to British government the whole possessions of the state of Nagpore, 444; proposal rejected by the governor-general, ib.; proofs of his treachery, ib.; facts discovered convicting him of murder of his kinsman and sovereign, Pursagee Bhooslah, ib.; arrested, dethroned, and sent off to British provinces, ib.; effects his escape, and finds adherents, 451; takes possession of fort of Chouragurh, and maintains correspondence with his con-nections in the capital, 452; flies, and is pursued, ib.; his treacherous communications with the rajah of Sattara, 525, 526.

Apthorp, Major, killed, 576.

Aravacourchy, captured by the British army, 192.

Arcot, city of, taken by Chuda Sahib, 19; retaken, and government transferred to Mahomet Ali Khan, 20. arabadad by Clima 20. arabadad the 20; attacked by Clive, 23; garrison abandon the fort of, of which the English take possession, ib.; enemy attack the fort without success, ib.; another desperate attack repelled, and the enemy withdraw, 25, 26; besieged and taken by Hyder Ali, 161. (See Mahomet Ali Khan.)

Arcot, nabob of, forced by the French to retire, 17; dispatches an army to Trichinopoly, 18; his death,

19; his achts, 181, 152,

Arikera, victory gained near, by Lord Cornwallis, over Tippoo, 197, 198.
Arnio, fort of, passed by Clive, 26.
Arnold, Licutenant-Colonel, his pursuit of Ummer Singh, 398.

General, commander of brigade in Afighanistan,

Arracan, subjugation of, by Alompra, 457; disputes respecting refugees from, 458; operations of the British in Burmese war, 466, 467; further operations in, and capture of the capital, 471.

Asia, Central, affairs of, 528; especially as regards the Persians and the Affghans, ib.

Asoph-ul-Dowlah, king of Oude, his financial embarrassments and death, 514; succeeded by Vizier Ali, and his brother Sandut Ali, ib.

Assam transferred to a Burmere chief, 457; outrage committed by Burmese there, 458. Assecrgurh, siege and surrender of, 453; description of, by Colonel Blacker, ib.

Assyc, battle of, 290. Astell East-Indiaman, escape of, 368.

Astell, Mr., denounces proposal of ministers to substitute inquiry by select committee in place of committee of whole house, 384; his remarks on monopoly, 387; replies to Mr. Huskieson on India trade, 498; his observations on India and its trade, 499; defends appointment of directors on parliamentary committee, 500; points out difficulties connected with the cessation of Company's exclusive trade with China, 502; defends course taken by parliamentary committee, ib.

ustruc, M., captures Golden Rock, which is immediately retaken, 39; made prisoner, 40.

Luchmuty, Sir Samuel, in command of British force against Batavia, 374; effects a landing, ib.; proceeds to Samarang, is joined by Admiral Stopford, and calls upon General Janssens to surrender the island, 376; prepares to attack town of Karta Soora, which surrenders, ib.; his negotiation with General Janssens, ib.

sens, 10.

Auckland, Lord, governor-general of India, 523; his proclamation respecting the invasion of Afighanistan, 535; honours conferred on, 546; created earl, ib.; succeeded by Lord Ellenborough, 572; remarks on his administration in his administration, ib.

unungzebe commands for his father, Shah Jehan, in in the Deccan, 8; affects to assist his brother Morad in ascending the throne, 9; gives battle to his brother Dara, and is victorious, ib.; his hypocrisy, 10, 14; confines his father and his brother Morad, and assumes the title of emperor, 10; defeats his brother Shooja, 11; enters Agra, ib.; his detestable policy, ib.; attacks and overcomes Dara, near Ajmere, 12; his father's death leaves him undisputed master of the empire, ib.; enters the Deccan, and opens a correspondence with Scrajee, ib.; recognizes Sevajee's title of rajah, 13; his deputy in Bengal, aided by Portuguese, makes war upon the rajah of Arracan, and adds Chittagong to imperial dominions, 14; subdues Bejapore and Golconda, ib.; appears before Sattara, which falls into his hands, ib.; surrounded by embarrassments, 15; his death and character, ib.; his death followed by contest for succession, which ends in the elevation of his eldest cession, which ends

Ava. (See Burman Empire, and Burmese.) Azim, son of Aurungzebe, in consideration of a large present, transfers Govindpore, Calcutta, and Chut-tanuttee to the English, 16, 17.
Azim-ul-Dowlah, grandson of Mahomed Ali, raised to the musuud of Arcot by the British government, 259, 260. Azoff-al-Dowlah succeeds Shooja-ad-Dowlah as vizier, 129; treaty concluded with, limited to his life, ib.; effect of the treaty with regard to Cheyt Singh, 172; his death, when he is succeeded by Vizier Ali, 225.

Baber encounters difficulties in establishing his authothority, 5; extends his conquests as far as Behar, ib.; his superstition, ib.; his death, ib.
Bahadar Khan, officer of Tippoo Sultan, slain at Bangalore, 194.

Baillie, Colonel, attacked by Tippoo, 157; is joined by Colonel Fletcher, ib.; marches to join Sir Hector Monro, ib.; his unfortunate halt, 158; is attacked by Hyder Ali and defeated, ib.

Baird, Major-General, commands the assault at Se-ringapatam, 239; his conduct towards the sons of Tippoo, 241; appointed to command force despatched from India to Egypt, 251.

Bajec Rao, movements of, 446; his flight to Ormekair, where his army breaks up, ib.; surrenders and is deposed, 450; review of his life, ib. (See Peishwa.)

Bajec Row demands chouf from nabob of Arcot, 58;

his representative departs laden with coin and bills, ib.

Bamford, Lieutenant, rule granted against him by Su-preme Court of Calcutta, 140.

Banas river, Colonel Monson's retreat impeded by, 312, 313; action at, 313.

Bancoot, island of, attacked and captured by Commodore James, 41.

Banda Neira, capture of, by the English, 372, 373. Bangalore taken from Tippoo by the English, 194; results produced by its fall, 196; arrival of Lord Cornwallis, 199.

Bantam, in Java, a principal seat of the early trade of the East-India Company, 16. Bappoo Sctowlea Deshmook, the Gwalior chief, 601, 102; oppores the British troops, 604.

Bappoo Wittul, death of, and its consequences, 326.
Bappoofee Scindia, treacherous addice of, 312; brings intelligence to Colonel Monson of the destruction of Licutenant Lucan's cavalry, ib.; openly joins Holkar, 323; annoys the British force under Colonel Monsen, 325; visit of Scindia to, 338; placed under care of Major Ludlow, 413.

Baptiste deprived of sight by Holkar, and dies, 640.

Barabuttee, capture of, by the English, 292.

Baramahal entered by Hyder Ali, 117. Baraset, disturbances in, 497-489; causes and termination of outbreak, 489.

Barbutt, Colonel, marches from Trincomalce to Candy, 303; undertakes to negotiate with Mootto Sawmy, but is prevented by an attack of fever, 306.

Barelly, insurrection at, 410; large proportion of Mahometan population, 411; state of the country, 411, 412; minor sources of complaint adverted to by commissioners, 412; unpopularity of the ketwal at, 413; conduct of Mooftee Mahomed Ewery, ib.; commencement and progress of resistance, and final restoration of tranquillity, 413 et seq.

Baring, Mr., his various proposals, motions, and opinions respecting the East-India Company, 377, 497, 500. Barker, Captain, his services at the battle of Wande-wash, 74.

Sir Robert, supports Clive in repressing mutinous movement in Bengal army, 1914.

Barlow, Sir George, office of governor-general devolves upon, provisionally, 311; avows his determination to maintain the general policy of the Marquis Cornwallis, 315; his discussion of the claims of princes to the west of the Jumna, th.: proposes to provide for certain chiefs by jaghire, 340; annexes certain decla-ratory articles to treaty with Scindia and with Holkar, 346, 347; his conduct towards rajahs of Bhoondee 340, 317; his conduct towards rajons of Booonace and Jeypore, ib.; appointed governor-general, 355; his appointment vacated by royal authority, 356; nanegyric on, by Lord Melville, ib.; his removal justified by Mr. Paull, 357; appointed to the government of Madras, 358; his difficulties on arrival, 361; his conduct attacked at home, but approved by the Court of Directors, 364; his temporizing course towards Nepaul, 390.
Barnsley, Corporal George, his dangers and escapes in the war of Candy, 307.
Baroach captured by Colonel Woodington, 285,

Barwell, Mr., member of council of Bengal, takes part with Hastings, 128, 129; objects to the office of resident at Oude being united with the chief military command, 128; opposes proposal for demanding payment of debts due by the vizier to the British government, ib.; declines joining Hastings in an appeal to the Court of Directors against the other members of council, ib.; censured with Hastings by Court of Directors, and removed from office, 133; motion for reconsideration carried in general court, ib.; resolution for his removal rescinded by Court of 10.; resolution for his removal rescance by Court of Directors, ib.; meets Hartings alone in council, 134; presents himself before General Clavering and Mr. Francis, and requests despatches may be delivered to him, ib.; unites with Hastings in excluding General Clavering from council, 135; desirous of returning home, 133; his support of Hastings in proposed instructions to government of Bombay on the treaty with Rugmath Row, 144.

Barrackpore, mutiny at, and its causes, 477, 478; its suppression, 478.

Basaint Jung (brother of Nizam Ali) takes offence at the south, 67; demands recognition of his authority, and a loan from Bussy, 72; creates Hyder Ali nabob of Sera, 110; his claim on Guntoor, 151; entertains a European force, and negotiates for its removal, ib.; concludes treaty with East-India Company, and agrees to dismiss his European troops, 155; stops march of British force, and demands restoration of Guntoor, 156.

Bas-cin surrenders to General Goddard, 149; peishwa flies thither, 278; treaty of, 279, 280, 341. (See also Peishna.)

Batavia, preparations for reduction of, and surrender, 373, 374; base attempts against the town and the British force, 374, 375.
Baughlore, dreadful occurrence at, 116.
Bayley, Mr. W. B., discharges duties of governor-general on departure of Earl Amherst, 486.

Beatson, Captain W. F., takes possession of Cherong, 872.

Beaver, Captain, covers landing of British force at Mauritius, 359, 370; takes possession of Cheribon, 375.

Bednore, landholders of, threatened by Hyder Ali, 114; surrenders to General Matthews, 168; English garrison march out on conditions dictated by Tippoo Sultan, which conditions are violated, 169.

Beejapoor, king of, submits to the Emperor Shah Jehan, 8; government of, makes an active effort to subdue Sevajee, 13; kingdom of, chief sufferer from Sevajee's predatory warfare, 14; falls to Aurungzebe, ib. Begum of Oude, her attempts in favour of the pre-tender, 523; defcated, and removed from Oude, 524, 525.

Begums of Oude, their wealth coveted by the vizier, 177: means taken to extort its surrender, 177-Behmanroo, village of, ineffectual attack on, 560; the British repulsed from, 561; causes of the failure, 561, 562.

Beiram gives stability to the throne of Akbar, 6; rebels against the emperor, ib.; offers submission and is pardoned, ib.; assassinated by an Afighan, ib.

Bellary, seditious doctrines preached there, 354. Beloochees, their indignation at the treaties made by the ameers of Sinde with the British, 393; attack the residence of Major Outram, ib.; their hostility to the British, and their punishment, 544; their hostile spirit continued, 547; signally defeated by Sir C. Napier, 595, 596.

Benares, wretched state of the country after deprivation of Cheyt Sing, 179. enfield, Paul, his claims on Tanjore, 151, 152; Benfield, Paul, glery practised with his name in relation to the claims upon the nabob of Arcot, 181; obtains seat in parliament, 182; departs for Madras, ib.

Bentinck, Lord W., governor of Madras, orders new turban to be adopted by native troops, with the control of the c sequences, 349; advises mild course towards culprits at Vellore, 353; differs from commander-in-chief as to expunging numbers of certain regiments from list of the army, and determines in opposition to majority in council, ib.; his conduct being disapproved at home, he is recalled, ib.; a candidate for office of governor-general, 487; his appeal disregarded, ib.; appointed governor-general, ib.; various events of his administration, 487, 488; his correspondence with the rajah of Coorg, 493; proceeds to Bangalore, and resolves on war with Coorg, ib.; ratifics treaty with rajah of Colapore, 494; diplomatic arrangements and changes during his administration, 491—407—obstains from assuming management of the of the army, and determines in opposition to majority 497; abstains from assuming management of the affairs of Oude, 494; called upon to enforce orders from home relating to half-batta, ib.; his opinion on the efficiency of the civil service, ib.; establishes a aratem of esplonage, which is abolished, 200; about lisher corporal punishment in native arms, and also the practice of autice, they resignation of the effect of governor-general, 517; quits India, 522; his exect-lent administration, ib.

Berar, government of, restored to Nizam All, 67. Berar, rajah of, sends an army into Unitack for lovasion of Henral, 160; enters the first with a large sion of seeight, 1903 enters the best with a large army, 293; remonstrances addressed to him, that has doubtful conduct, 284; concludes separate proces, 297; gives further cause for suspicion, 32% Nagpore.)

Dertie, Admiral, ordered to enforce blockade of Manritius, 361.

Bhagcerut Ran, the maharaish of Gwaller, 207: his marriage, 507; Interference of the postumer-peneral mith, 600; his troops defeated by the British, 642, 606; his submission to the terms dietated by the governor-general, 606.

Bhagut Singh, Nepaulese general, his yerall and die-grace, 400.

Bhoonder, treaty concluded with the rajah of. 441. Illiopal, nabob of, regains Hoshelpgabat, 216; his application to the British resident with Science, 227.

Blugwint Row received by the polishma, 417; his arrest demanded by Mr. Elphinstone, 419; placed under restraint, ils.

Bhurtpore, treaty with rajah of, 201; siege of, ermhurtpore, trenty with rajah of, 200; airpe of, even-mented by Lord Lake, 200; various unsuccessful attempts against, it.; causes of failure, 207; dis-puted succession at, 478; recomition of Builder Singh receives investiture, and death of Builder Singh receives investiture, and death of Builder Singh, 479; infant rajah seized by Boorgun Sal, it.; proceedings of Sir David Ochterlony and correspondence respecting, 479-481; increased disturbances at, 481; deliberations of British government respecting, 481-481; determination taken to interfere, 4"1; 481-483; neuromanon taken to imerice, 4-3; failure of negotiation at, ib.; besieged by Lord Combernere, ib.; its capture and destruction, 445; rajabl's authority recessabilished, ib.

Bladzeghur, Major Popham advances to, and Chryt Singh withdraws, 173; surrender of, and conditions, Singn Wilnuraws, 1703 surrence of the light file.

Bird, Licutenant, bravery of, 559.
Birmingham, petition from, relating to India trede, presented to House of Lords by Lord Calthorp, 494.
Blacker, Colonel, his account of the flight of the Pindarries, and of the peishwa, 442, 443; his description of fort of Asserghurh, 453. Blackney, Captain, falls at Summundpore, 400.

Blankett, Admiral, sails for Egypt with a equadron of Company's cruisers, 255.

Board of Commissioners for the affairs of India, reconstruction of, 380; establishment of, 412; proposed additions to its power, 501; differences between them and the Court of Directors as to the affairs of Oude. 513; defeated, 514.

Boileau, Lieutenant, kills Pursaram Thappa in personal encounter, 400. Bolan pass, General England unexpectedly attached nt, 576.

Rombay granted by the Crown to the Company, 16.

Boorhampoor, treaty of, 607.
Boothawk pass, fatal horrors of the, 567.
Boothawk pass, fatal horrors of the, 567.
Bootwul occupied by the Goorkhas, 390; its restitution demanded, 391; forcibly retaken by the British government, ib.; re-occupied by the Goorkhas, ib. Borthwick, Lieutenant, disperses party of Pindarries, 426. Boscawen, Admiral, arrives at Fort St. David, 18; his unsuccessful attack on Pondicherry, ib.

Boscawen, Captain, defeats insurgents at Barcilly, 415.

ourbon, Isle of, attacked by the English, 361, 365; captured, 366, 367. Bourbon, Bourquin, Louis, is defeated by General Lake, and surrenders, 289. Bouvet, M., commands French squadron off Pondi-cherry, 58; his sudden disappearance, ib. Bowen, Lieutenant-Colonel, dislodges Burmese at Bowen, Lieutenant-Colonei, unsupposed Bhuteket pass, 460.

Bradshaw, Colonel, meets Nepaulese commissioners at Bootwal, 390; instructed to proceed to Sarun frontier, ib.; refers offer of compromise to governorproppent, mit i fieterrateit wirt, piet begt nernner unbe constitute to with army releasement to a cote frateriot is Bille enmane I in tierettate er melle Merger en mante. fing g theorem efter freitigen eft miereen beger ratt, grift ere geftern frente tratmiretieren, meil geine eine nach gene eine 47 by mir cin tea freate, they in the eated of discount funeto va. 417

uncon sa, as a Uranthmatic, Colonest, exclused that b, they were conduct by Liphing Sultan, as below of an interior star, the try arrange contracts at the consistency of a consistency. The first of a consistency of a consistency of the first of a consistency of a consistency of a first of a consistency of a consistenc lis Wan tempat, und faita, fin fin y balen pragmation of Wantemaste, un f. nomerat one fatogica una con c. Wattimath, and fourtring the thirding monage to a fee, 71; falle by the thirding of Wandowski. It, he had been believed by the page, and the page thirding the page, and the page thirding the promises of from the forward.

Height, Me, ferent er fie Heinert, big er intengen Bante

India questien, ten.

tions grants in, as in. Belof and, but I, will with Cabille mis attack on him Dur-ment lines, 170.

meral lines, $73. Helstow, $75., and grandent as $2.70, and grandelium, $75., and grandelium, $75., and grandelium, start are selected to select the start of the sections, but now leaved, $15. and grandelium endered, and grandelium to $15. and grandelium endered, and grandelium the $15. and are sections.

He selected endered endelium the $15. and and grandelium endered.

er acts, tenangen notice in america con do dell'orent, d'a genname quenta el fiscolo ay, d'abb praph d'ilver nigalina dia e, d'or a anem breada donnatività b, dio y deno no biografi biono appainat arannocastolo, babbo d'ollangenta apo kai dinoc bio, babb

Right to be Lieutenant, killed, 607. Brook, Cuple, pullant con law ef, at Ifalving, 115, 116; sent to ender with ligher Ale, 117; community left column of British force at afegual Charda

(Nappler), 447. Herek, Mr. (member of graneil at Maleza) anapembel by lend Part, 137. Bunglam, Mr., his speech in the Heast of Commune on the East-India question, 627. Brown, Lieutenantectonel, employed in Colorbators, 219.

General, occupies Jainel (Mahratta an I Dindierie war), 48%.

Brown, Captun, aurrenders Kabun, 251.

Browning, Sie C., annexes Can ly to the British domi-ning in Ceylon, 410.

Bruce, Mr., defends East-India Company in Parliament. 345.

Bryden, Dr., the sale surviver of the Affahan slaughter, Š71.

Buckinger, house of (bankers in the Carnatic), refere loan to Major Calliand, 62. Buckingham, Mr., attacks East-Iedia Company in Parliament, 50 is protests against East-Iedia II-H, 509; supports absolution of saft menopoly, 510; aup-ports motion for heating Company by counsel, 10-; declaims against limited right of settlement on t church establishment, it.

Budge-Budge occupied by the English, 47.
Budtee Trappa (Nepaulere officer) acticle a British force, and is defeated and killed, 404.

Bukkur, occupied by the Anglo-Indian forces, 537. Hulden Singh succeeds his heather as raigh of Bhurtpore, and is confirmed by the British povernment, 478, 479; desires the investiture of his arn, 479; his death, the correspondence between his mother and the British resident, 440.

Buller, Mr., proposes in Parliament exclusion of finiter, Air., proposes in tartisment execution of foreign for provening of any particular presidency, 502; moves amendment relative to attendance at college of Haileybury, ib. Bulwunt Singh (rajah of Henarce's affords assistance to Linglish against Meer Cossim and the Vizier, 172; his death, and the succession of his son, Cheyt Sirgh, ib. Bulwant Singh (von of Buldeo Singh, rajah of Bhurtpore) supported by Sir David Ochterlony, 470; ble authority established, 445.

authority established, 445.

Rum Sah, Goorkha commander, endeavours to procure peare, 405; becomes alarmed for his safety, it.; negotiations with him, 467.

Rundler Singh, rojah of Bhurtpore, death of, 478.

Rundler and, brief notice of the affairs of, 500; British authority established there, ib.; disasters of the British in, 311; distracted state of, 272.

Rundlein his intrinsure at the course of the poishers.

Bundojee, his intrigues at the court of the prishwa,

417 : he is placed under restraint, 419.

Burdett, Mr. (member of government of Calcutta), recrives present on succession of Noojum-ad-Dowlah a. Nabob of Bengal, 100.

Burgoyne, General, proposes series of resolutions in House of Commons on affairs of East-India Comրոոց, 196, Burkar-oo-Deen, officer of Tippo Sultan, death of, 193. Burke, Right Honourable Edmund, the framer of a series of reports against Hastings, and his avowed accuser, accuser, 182; announces intentions to proceed against Hastings, 182-185; his motion in House of Commons relating to Robilla war negatived, 163; formally impeaches Hastings of high crimes and misdemeanours, ib.; his display of eloquence before the House of Lords in explaining grounds of impeachment, ib.; opens charge of receiving presents, 184.

Burman Empire, historical sketch of the, 457.
Burmese, murch into Company's territories in search of robbers, 457; alleged robbers given over for punishment to, ib.; missions of Colonel Symes and of Captain Canning, 458; demand surrender of persons resident in British territories, ib.: demand cession of certain territories, ib.; their proceedings in Assam, ib.; attack on island of Shapooree, 450; expel rajah of Manipur, ib.; invade Cachar, 459, 460; attacked in Cachar by Major Newton, 460; driven from their works on the river Soorma, ib.; outrage committed by, on commander of a pilot schooner off Shapooree, 461; declaration of war against, by British government; ib.

Burmese War, preparations for, 461, 462; British force land at Rangoon, 462; stockades captured, 462; further success at Kemandine, ib.; prevalence of sickness in British army, ib.; expedition against Negrais, 461; expedition against Cheduba, ib.; further successes, 461, 465; expedition against 461, 465; expedition against Marteban, 465; expedition to coast of Tennaserim, 465; operations on frontier, and destruction of British force under Captain Noton, 466, 467; Burmese enter Cachar, 467; success of British arms against Mengee Maha Bundoola, 467, 468; Rangoon set on fire, 463; continued successes of British military and naval force, ib.; unsuccessful attack on Donobew, 469; renewed attack and fall of the place, 469, 470; events on the frontier, and capture of Rungpore, 470, 471; unsuccessful attempt to march regular force through Cachar and Manipur, 471; progress of events in Arracan, and capital taken by the Euglish, 471, 472; army in Arracan attacked by disease, 472; negotiations, 472, 473; resumption of hostilities, 473; various movements, 473, 474; treaty of peace signed, 474; ratification not being received, hostilities recommence, ib; capture of Melloon, ib; overture for accommodation made, ib; enemy again defeated, 474, 475; proceedings in Pegu, 475; peace concluded, and provisions of treaty, 475, 476.

Burn, Colonel, his gallant defence of Delhi against Holkar, 315; his noble stand at Shamlee, 316. Burnes, Captain Alexander, his mission to Kabool, 532;

his objects unsuccessful, 633.

, Sir A., assassinated at Kabool, 556. Burney, Major, negotiates treaty with Siam, 476. Burr, Lieutenant-Colonel, repulses peishwa's troops at Poona, 430.

Burran, Pindarrie, his history, 422.

Bury, Captain, killed, 584. Bussy, M., escorts Mozussar Jung to Golconda, 21; transfers support of French to Salabut Jung, 22; contransfers support of French to Salabut Jung, 22; continues to aid Salabut Jung, 23; movements of, 41, 70; letters addressed to him by Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, 50; his conduct at Madras, 62; marches for Wandewash, 73; made prisoner, 75; his return to India, 168; attacked by the English near Cuddalore, ib.; attacks the English without success, ib.

Buswaraj Drooj captured by the English, 114.

Buxar, battle of, 90, 97.

C.

Caboul (see Kahool). Cachar, internal dissensions of, 459. Caen, General de (see De Caen). Calcutta, how obtained by East-India Company, 17; president at reprehended for extravagance in purchasing a chaise and pair of horses, ib.; attacked and taken by Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, 44; retaken by the English, 47; supreme court of judicature established at, 126; previous existence of court for administering English law, 131

Calicut, failure of Portuguese attempt to gain possession

Calliaud, Captain, ordered to march to Tinnevelly, 57; march to relieve Trichinopoly, 57, 58; returns to Madura, 59; affords assistance to king of Tanjore, 60; his attempts to raise money at Tanjore, Negapatam, and Trichinopoly, 62; arrives at Chingleput, proceeds to St. Thome, and takes command of force there, ib.; successfully resists an attack from Lally, 63; moves in direction of Chingleput, ib.; attempts to surprise Sadrass and fails, ib; wounded at Conjeveram, 64.

—, Colonel, arrives at Moorshedabad, and is recommended by Clive to the confidence of Meer Jaffler, 84; marches against the emperor, ib.; gives lattle, when it is the same of the confidence of th battle, obtains victory, and pursues the enemy, ib.; arrives at Patna, pursues and overtakes the Foujdar of Purneah, 85; employed to procure submission of Meer Jaffier, 88; after elevation of Meer Cossim receives two lacs of rupees, ib.

General, despatched with force to support British authority in the Northern Circars, 111. from Birmingham on the East-India trade, 498.

Calvert, Captain, bravely defends Amboor against Hyder Ali, 113; his replies to the messages of Hyder, ib. Camac, Colonel, commands force to act against Scindia and Holkar, 150; penetrates into Malwa, retreats, attacks Scindia's camp, and gains complete victory, ib. Campbell, Colonel, defends Mangalore against Tippoo Sultan, 169; obtains honourable terms, retires to Tellicherry, and dies, 170.

Campbell, General, surprises party of marauding horse, and makes chief and officers prisoners, 299; destroys and disperses band of Mahomed Ben Khan, 300.

Campbell, General Sir Archibald, succeeds Lord Macartney at Madras, 190; grants assistance to rajah of Travancore, ib.; his treaty with Mahomet Ali, 255; appointed to chief command of force despatched against Ava, 462; attacks fortified camp and stockades at Kemendine, 463; various operations under,
461—469; his daring attack on the Burmese army, 463; advances upon Prome, 469; returns to Donobew, ib.; captures Donobew, 470; takes possession of Prome, ib.; concludes an armistice, 472; holds conference with first minister of king of Ava. 472. 473; further operations under, ib.; negotiates and concludes treaty, 474; resumed operations under, 474, 475; met by Mr. Price and Mr. Sanford, announcing accession of Burman sovereign to proposed terms, ib. Campbell, Colonel John, slain in Mauritius, 475.

Campbell, Ensign, escapes from the general slaughter of Captain Noton's party, 467.

Camul-oo-Deen, his petition to the government of Bengal, 130. Candy, death of the king of, and elevation of a usurper, 305; queen and relations of the deceased king thrown into prison, ib.; disputes of British government in Ceylon with court of, ib.; war commenced, ib.; British force enters capital, ib.; convention with Mootto Sawmy, 306; intrigues of Polime Talauve, ib.; negotiation with him, ib.; attack on the capital, when British garrison capitulates, 307; Mootto Sawmy given up by the English, ib.; British garrison at-tacked on its march and massacred, ib.; sick in hos-pital murdered, ib.; retreat of Captain Madge from fort M'Dowall, 308; gallant defence of Dumbadenia by Enging Grant, ib.; continued heavilities with ib. by Ensign Grant, ib.; continued hostilities with, ib.; hostilities suspended, ib.; king of, made prisoner and deposed, and country annexed to British dominions, 410; disturbances in, 455.

Cannanore, English defeated in attempt upon works of.

114; surrender of, to General Aberromby, 191. Canning, Captain, despatched to Ava, 458. Canning, Right Honourable Geo., appointed governorgeneral, but declines appointment, 457; his death, Carangoly, falls to Colonel Coote (Carnatic war), 72; taken by Captain Davis, 162.

Caranja, passes into the hands of the English, 143. Carnac, Major, takes command of British army at Patna, defeats the emperor, and takes Law prisoner, 88;

dhur Shastry to negotiate between the guicowar and the peishwa, 417; penetrates designs of Blug-wunt Row Guicowar, ib.; instructed to communicate to Futteh Singh facts reported from Poonah, ib.; apprizes British government of peishwa's proceedings, 427.

his views respecting the treacherous conduct of the rajah of Sattarah, ib.; his fruitless interviews with the rajah, 527.

Carnatic invaded by Hyder Ali, 149; brigade in Travancore, 358.

Caroor transferred from Mahomed Ali to Hyder Ali, 118; abandoned at the approach of British army under General Medows, 192.

Carpenter, Lieutenant-Colonel, takes possession of Tinley pass (Nepaul war), 393.

Carstairs, Captain, appointed to command at Patna, 89;

disobeys orders, 90. Cartier, Mr. succeeds Mr. Verelst as governor of Bengal, 123.

Cartwright, Colonel, his endeavours to allay discontent of troops at Barrackpore, 477.

Caspian Sea, command of, acquired by Russia, 530.

Cassamajor, Mr., British resident in Mysore, his proceedings in relation to Coorg, 492. Castlereagh, Lord, expounds plan of ministers for government of India (1813), and moves resolutions therein, 382; moves for appointment of select committee, 384; submits amended series of resolutions, 385; his further proposals to Parliament, 397

Caulfield, Captain, takes charge of Jeswunt Rao Bhow, 443; consequent proceedings of, ib.

Cawnpore, Anglo-Indian troops stationed at, 599. Censorship in India, 522.

Ceylon, Dutch settlements of, fall into hands of the English, 304; placed under administration of the Crown, ib.; British authority established in, 410. Geylon East-Indiaman, captured by the enemy, 368. Geylon frigate, taken by the enemy, and retaken by the English, 368. Chads, Captain, moves with naval force in aid of Sir Archibald Campbell in the Burmese war, 467

Chalmers, Lieutenant, his gallant defence of Coim-batore, 200—202; made prisoner in violation of terms of capitulation, 202; released on mission to governor-general, 211. , Colonel, engaged in attack on Gawilghur, 296; at Quilon, takes measures of precaution against attack, 359; defeats Dewan's troops, 360. Chambers, Colonel R. E., his contests with the Ghiljies, 552.

Champion, Major, his services on the march to Buxar, 96.

ppointed to discharge duties of resident at Oude, 128; his instructions, ib.

Chanda (Nagpore), siege and capture of, by the English, 446, 447.

Chandernagore, Clive instructed to attack, and discussion on, 48-51; attacked and falls, 49.

Chandore occupied by Colonel Wallace, 319. Charekar, capture and destruction of, 586.

Chenzig, or Zingis, his career, 4. Cheribon (Java) taken possession of by Captain Beaver, 375, 376.

S13, 340.
Cherong, captured by the British, 572.
Cherry, Mr., murdered by Vizier Ali at Benares, 262.
Cheetoo, Pindarrie, account of, 424; series of operations against, by Sir J. Malcolm, 438; meets with friendly reception at Jadud from Jeswunt Rao Bhow, 413; his death, 455.

Chew, Mr., treacherously made prisoner by the Burmese, conducts emperor to Patna, 88; attempt of Ram Narrain to bribe, ib.; recalled to Calcutta, ib.; succeeds to command of army against Meer Cossim, 95; movement of, ib.; state of his army, ib.

Cheyt Singh, continued in zemindary of Benares, 172; his disputes with the British government, ib.; he is placed under arrest, ib.; his troops attack British party, and cut them to pieces, 173; flies, and is deprived of his zemindary, ib.; remarks on his case, 174. Chilambarum taken by the English (Carnatic war), 76; unauccessfully attacked by Sir E. Coote, 164.

Carnac, Captain J. R., advises appointment of Gungadhur, Shoster to protect the protection of the state of the st Chingleput, occurrences at, 37, 61, 75, 162. Chinna Buswa, his flight with his wife, Dewah Amajee, from Coorg into Mysore, 492. Chisholm, Lieutenant, killed at Corygaum, 442.

Chitoor Sal (of Bundlecund), his connection with the peishwa, 300. Chittagong conquered by Aurungzebe, 14; surrender of, demanded by the Burmese, 459.

Chittapet taken by the French, 59. Chonda, battle of, 605.

Chota Nagpore, disturbances in, 491.

Chouragurh, fort of (Nagpore), taken postession of by Appa Sahib, 452.

Chumbull, fort of, surrendered to the English, 393; passage of the, 604.

Chunarghur surrendered to English, 101.

Chunda Sahib, account of, 18; his peridious conduct at Trichinopoly, ib.; made prisoner by the Mahrattas, ib.; his wife and son take refuge at Pondicherry, 19; obtains his freedom, ib.; appointed Nabob of Arcot by Mozuffur Jung, ib.; gains victory over reigning nabob, and takes possession of Arcot, ib.; proceeds to Tanjore, and demands tribute, ib.; retires towards Pondicherry, ib.; resolves to accompany the French, 20; his authority at Arcot subordinate to that of Dupleix, 21; detaches force to act against Clive, 21; notice of his claims by Clive, ib.; engaged in besieging Trichinopoly, 26; deserted by native chiefs, 30; negotiates with Monackge, ib.; proceeds to camp of Monackge is and mudged. Monackgee, is imprisoned and murdered, ib.

Chuttanuttee obtained by East-India Company, by a

Clark, Captain, joins Clive with a detachment from Devi-Cottah, 23.

Clark, Lieutenant, cut off, and slain by the Beloochecs,

Clarke, Sir Alured, retained at Calcutta, to exercise the chief functions of government, 236; addresses letter to vizier on necessity of military reform, 263. Clarke, Major, disperses party of Pindarries, 443; commands reserve at siege of Chanda, 447 Clarke, Ensign, his gallant repulse of the enemy at Mikow, 475.

Clavering, General, appointed member of council of Bengal, 127; calls for correspondence between Hastings and Company's servants at Oude, 128; supports Colonel Monson's suggestion to recall Middleton from Oude, ib.; proposes to transfer duties of British resident to commander of brigade there, ib.; his opinion of the obligations of the British government towards vizier, 129; supposed accession to office of governor-general, 133, 133; assumes the office and proceeds to exercise its functions, 134; demands keys of fort and treasury from Hastings, ib.; takes oath as governorgeneral, and frames a proclamation announcing change of government, ib.; refuses papers to Barwell, 135; declared by Hastings and Barwell to have vacated his seat in council, ib.; his death, 137; his recommendation of Colonel Upton to represent British government at Poonab, 144; his opinion on the dissolution of the British connection with Rugonath Row, 145.

Clayton, Lieutenant-Colonel, leads storming party at Barabuttee, 292.

Clibborn, Major, defeat and destruction of his convoy

Chibborn, Major, deteat and destruction of his convoy in attempting to relieve Kahun, 547.

Clive, Robert (afterwards Lord Clive), sent to India as writer, 22; his conduct at Madras, ib.; made prisoner at the time when Madras was taken by La Bourdonnais, 22, 23; escapes to Fort St. David, 22; obtains ensign's commission, ib.; present at attack on Pondicherry, ib.; instance of his impetuous temper, 22, 23; aspersion cast upon him, 22; vindicated by court of inquiry, 23; holds lieutenant's commission in second expedition against Tanjore, ib.; his extraordinary escapes. ib.; returns to the methis extraordinary escapes, ib.; returns to the mer-cantile service, and appointed commissioner for supplying troops with provisions, ib.; accompanies Mr.

sulipatam, 65; his conduct at the siege and fall of j Masulipatam, 67.

Conjeveram attacked by Clive and abandoned by the Conjeveram attacked by Cave and abandoned by the French, 26; re-occupied by the French, 27; surrendered to Clive, ib.; burnt by the French, 58; French followed thither by the English on retreat of former from siege of Madras, 64; taken by Major Brereton, ib.; plundered by Hyder Ali, 157.

Connellan, Lieutenant, wounded at Corygaum, 442.

Conclly, Captain E., death of, 549. Conry, Colonel, his failure in reducing a Burmese post on the Sitang, 475.

Conway, Captain, murdered by Vizier Ali, 252. Conway, Colonel, his statements respecting the occurrences at Talneir, 443, 444. Conway, Captain, his defence of Major Outram's residence, 593, 594. Cooke, Captain, at Trinomaly secures hill for the English, 113.

Cooper, Colonel, various services performed by, in Nepaul war, 398.

Coorg, disputes with Tippoo Sultan respecting, 214, Coorg, rajah of, his remarkable conduct, 214; atrocious conduct of his son and successor, 492; correspondence with, by the British government, 492, 493; war commenced with, 493; his government terminated, and his territories annexed to British dominions, 494; death of his dewan, ib.

Coote, Captain (afterwards Sir Eyre Coote), his dispute with Clive as to command in Calcutta, 47; captures Hooghly, ib.

Alajor, votes for battle in council of war called by Clive, 53.

Colonel, having been nominated to command in the Carnatic, arrives with forces from England, 71; marches to Arcot, ib.; makes forced march to join Major Brereton at Wandewash, ib.; takes Wanjoin Major Brereton at Wandewash, ib.; takes Wandewash, ib.; and captures Carangoly, 72; hardships and privations of his army compel his withdrawal into cantonments, ib.; again takes the field, ib.; marches to Conjeveram, ib.; gives battle to the French at Wandewash, and is victorious, 75; takes possession of Arcot, ib.; captures Villenore, 76; proposes to proceed to Bengal, 77; his differences with Colonel Monson, ib.; consents to resume command in Carantic, ib.; permits inhabitants expelled from Fondicherry to pass English posts, ib.; takes possession dicherry to pass English posts, ib.; takes possession of Pondicherry, 78; admits claim of governor of Madras to possession of Pondicherry under pro-

General Sir Eyre, appointed to succeed General Clavering in command of army and seat in council, 138; departs from Calcutta to take command of army against Hyder Ali, 160; arrives at Madras and takes seat in council there, 161; calls a council of war, 162; relieves Chingleput, and detaches force against Carangoly, ib.; arrives at Wandewash, 163; relieves Pennacoil, ib.; proceeds to restore order in Pondicherry, ih.; protects Cuddalore, ib.; fails in attacks on Chilambrum, 164; defeats the army of Hyder Ali, ib.; avoids Hyder Ali, and arrives at Pulicat, ib.; captures Tripassore, ib.; proposes exchange of prisoners, which Hyder Ali refuses, 165; twice defeats Hyder Ali, ib.; returns to cantonments, ib. returns to XIII and III are to XIII are to XI ib.; returns to Madras, ib.; is seized with apoplexy, but recovers, and arrives at Vellore, ib.; follows Hyder Ali and the French, and defeats them, ib.; Ayder All and the French, and deteats them, 10.; his grand guard drawn into ambuscade and destroyed, ib.; his disputes with Lord Macartney, 167; departs for Bengal, ib.; returns to Madras, and dies, 168. Cope. Captain, despatched with force to assist Mahomet All against the French, 20.
Copuol surrenders to General Medows, 194.

Cornish, Admiral, commands naval force in expedition against Manilla, 106.

Cornwallis, Lord, appointed governor-general of Bengal, 187; modifies arrangements with the vizier, 188; gal, 187; modifies arrangements with the vizier, 188; negotiates with the nizam, 188, 189; his opinion on the neutral policy prescribed to the government of India, 189; his censure on the Madras government for misplaced economy, 190; commences war against Tippoo Sultan, 191; concludes treaty with the nizam and the peishwa, ib.; assumes command of army against Tippoo, 193; attacks and takes Bangalore, 194; marches from Bangalore, encounters army of Tippoo, effects junction of Nizam Ali's horse, and returns, 195; resolves to march on Seringapatam, ib.; motives for this step, and its difficulties, ib.; defeats Tippoo at Arikera, 197, 198; advances to Caniambaddy, but immediately determines to return to Bangalore, 198; is joined by two Mahratta armies, ib.; compels surrender of Hooliordroog, 199; arrives at Bangalore, ib.; takes possession of Oossore, ib.; captures Nundedroog, Savandroog, and Oolradroog, 200—202; arrives in sight of Seringapatam, 203; his operations against Tippoo, 205—212; consents to negotiate, 211; receives vakeels from Tippoo, ib.; preliminaries of peace agreed to, 212, 213; receives the sons of Tippoo, 213; prepares to resume the siege, 215; receives Tippoo's ratification of the treaty, 216; remarks on his policy, 216, 217; relinquishes his share of the booty for benefit of army, ib.; returns to Bengal, ib.; proceeds to take command of expedition against. Pondicherry, which surrenders before his against Pondicherry, which surrenders before his arrival, 217; changes effected by, in the internal administration of the territories subject to the presiauministration of the territories subject to the presidency of Bengal, 217—223; quits India, 223.

"Marquis, arrives at Calcutta as successor to the Marquis Wellesley, 341; his views on the state of India, and the means of adjusting its affairs, 342, 343; his death, 343; his character, 344.

Cossimbazar, factory of, surrenders to Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, 43; effects of the news of its fall at Madras, in the death of the description of Cossinant Baboo, his disputes with government and others, 139, 140; suddenly and inexplicably discontinues his actions against governor-general and other parties, 141.

Cotton, General Willoughby, commands column in attack on Burmese army, near Rangoon, 468; commands column in advance upon Prome, 469; fails in attack upon Donobew, ib.; assaults and carries series of stockades, 473; commander of infantry in the Affghanistan campaign, 534; assumes temporary command in Affghanistan, 537; receives the grand cross of the Bath, 546.

Court, Captain, commands land force in attack on Amboyna, 372; dislodges the enemy from principal fort on the island, ib. Court of Directors of East-India Company order restoration of Mahomed Reza Khan to office, 132; condemn the policy of Rohilla war, and censure the conduct of Hastings and Barwell on various points, 133; receive and consider proposal from Colonel Maclean to submit Hastings' resignation, inquire into the agent's authority, and accept resignation into the agent's authority, and accept resignation, 133, 134; nominate Mr. Wheeler to vacant place in council of Bengal, 134; censure the conduct of Hastings with reference to the Nabob Mobarik-ul-Hastings with reference to the Nabob Mobarik-ul-Dowlah and Mahomed Reza Khan, 138; order re-storation of Mr. Bristow to the situation of resident in Oude, and of Mr. Fowke to Benares, ib.; con-demn the conduct of the government of Bombay in despatching expedition against Broach, 142; approve treaty with Surat, and with Rugonath Rao, and desire possession to be kept of all places ceded, 145; condemn conquest of Tanjore and deposition of the rajah, and remove Mr. Wynch from the government of Madras. 151; proceedings of, relative to case of Lord Madras, 151; proceedings of, relative to case of Lord Pigot, 153; appoint temporary government to act during inquiry into disputes at Madras, 153; opposed to the Board of Commissioners as to the debts of the nabob of Arcot, 181; instruct Lord Cornwallis to inquire into the rights and interests of zemindars and other landholders, with a view to the permanent settlement of the land revenue, 218; extract of a despatch from, on the injurious consequences arising from misconception of Indian names, 219; resolve to uphold lawful prince in Tanjore, 250; caution ex-ercised by, in interfering with distribution of office in India, 275; their difference with the Marquis Wellesley, 273—278; request the Marquis Wellesley to continue in office another year, 277; recall Lord William Bentinek from government of Madras, 353; refuse to revoke appointment of Sir G. Barlow to discharge duties of governor-general, 355; refuse to appoint the earl of Lauderdale governor-general, 355; appoint Nord Ninto, 382, appoint the cardial state of the stat appoint the ear of Lauderrane governor-general, 303, 385; appoint Lord Minto, 338; condemn the conduct of their committee in China in encouraging the Bengal government to despatch a military force to take possession of Macao, 362; decline to appoint the commander-in-chief at Madras, General M'Dowall, to a seat in council, ih.; communications by, to government of Bengal on half-hatta question, 403; adopt opinion of committee of correspondence, hostile to a proposed arrangement depriving the Company of the China trade, 502; submit correspondence with Board to a general court, 501; press two points upon ministers, an increase of the guarantes fund, and the establishment of some means of publicity in cases of difference between Court and Board, 505; resolve to recommend compliance with the plan of ministers, ib.; recommend to the proprietors to place their trade in abeyance, and accept the government of India under the conditions and arrangements of the Ministerial Bill, 511; their exclusive trade with China abolished, 512; differences between them and the Board of Control, 513; their firmness respecting the Board of Control, 513; their firmness respecting the affairs of Oude, 515; their contests with the law-courts and Parliament, 515, 516; rule for mandamus against discharged, ib.; Lord Elienborough's opinion respecting the coutest, 515; Mr. Herries's able vindication of, 516; Mr. Pitt's definition of their powers, 500; recall Lord Elienborough from India, 6/2.

Court of Proprietors of the East-India Company, petition arrainst the ministerial measure of 1813, 510, ena arten, die minimana Berrie 511; usir diemrime. 511, Com el Sallie Dreamy Lévelet, 219. Com el Sallie Nampa Livelet. 222.

Court of States Nament Libralet, 200.
Courts of mains consciouses, 200.
Courts, profit in $15, 200.
Courts, profit in $15, 200.
Courts, allah said day, 200.
Courts, allah said day, 200.
Courts, in cimmotally, Circ appears before it, ib. s.
all da day, youry of enemy's arroys attacked by smallet and defeated. No.
Courts, links, infants young of Court Single's troops, his fleet re-appears considerably reinforced, flee engages the lengtish frest, and proceeds to Pear-dicherry, h. ; declares his intention of returning to the islands, flee proceeds to see, the returns to Pondicherry to confer with fally, the flially departs for the lalands, it.

Dada Khaejee Walla, influence of, at Gwallor, 109; his exputsion determined on by the governor-general, 60); his arrest and surrender to the British, fighting not explain descriming on the treatment and entereduct to the treatment and alternative to the treatment and alternative to the treatment and alternative to an expension of the treatment and alternative to the treatment and alternative and the artillery and falling force, 31 s in command of parrison at Trichlangulay, 32 s least of strength of Rungers to corrupt the troops, and adapt precautions, it, s dismisses disaffected troops, 33 s plot formed for its assaustation, the parload two persons convicted of being engaged in corrupting an officer of the yearson, it, s informed by thement Poverio of the delign of Inniers to convict the process of the second by thement Poverio of the delign of Inniers to convict the parload and the second by the and obtain possession of Trichinopoly, the six rulliand emissioned to watch his appearance and depatch than, 21 s the attempt unexpectedly frustrated, the strengt unexpectedly frustrated, the strengt unexpectedly frustrated, the strengt unexpectedly frustrated, the strengt as six and formed by the attempt unexpectedly frustrated, the strengt as a six and according to the strength unexpectedly frustrated, the strength of Sunjers, 37 s requires Mysoreans to depart 21; the attempt unexpectedly triatrated, m., priaces examp of Sunjeenj, 27; requires Mysoreaus to depart from the city, and detains their communder, in, discrete a deficincy of sure of provisions, in, discrete menerager to Major Lowence, 28; is placed to that officer, 29; the stracks on the historically force, its; permits Medicage Alie discharge troop. to hopet military purpotation, by, by, and arany as is attacked, and surrenders on terms, 307; is pursued | Dhurna, Hindoo ceremony of, 108. on retiring from the place, overtaken, and the surrender of Mooto Sawmy demanded, ih.; refuses, ih. ; on reiteration of demand delivers up the prince, ib.; on renermand of defining delivers up the prince, ib.; forced by enemy to return to Candy with his party, the greater part of whom are murdered, ib.; remarks on his conduct, 307, 308.

Davis, Captain, attacks and takes Carangoly, 161.

Davis, Mr., judge and magistrate at Benares, resists Visica Mil 160.

Vizier Ali, 262; his intrepidity, ib.

Davis, Lieutenant, commanding engineers at siege of Malligaum, slain, 448.

Davoslinh, Parsce merchant of Tellicherry, proceeds to Coorg on mission from the British government, 493; his return, ib.

Deacon, Lieutenant-Colonel, his successes in reducing forts in peishwa's territories, 442.

De Bolgne, founder of a French corps in service of Scindia, 285; increase of the force under his command, 286; his retirement, ib.

De Caen, General (French governor of Mauritina), driven back in attempt to reconnoitre, 370; offers to capitu-late, ib.

Decean, carliest irruption of Mahometan armies into the, 4; proceedings of Shah Jehan there, 7, 8, 9; invaded by Aurungzebe, 14; complicated politics of, 111.

Deeg, battle of, brilliant victory gained by the English, 316; siege of, 318; its successful termination, 319.

De la Combe, gallant conduct of an officer of this name in defence of Coimbatore, 201.

De la Dousepe, Lieutenant, gallant conduct of, at Wan-dewash, 69. De la Touche, M., advances with a strong force of sepoys and Europeans upon the camp of Nazir Jung, 21; defeats the advanced posts, and attacks the main body with success, ib.

Delamere, Captain, bravery of, 584.

Delhi made the seat of a Mahometan government, 3; depopulated by Molsammed Toghluk in favour of his new capital, Dowlatabad, ib.; inhabitants obtain permission to return, 4; famine rages in the city, ib.; entered by Timour, ib.; set on fire and pillaged, and entered by Timour, ib.; set on fire and pillaged, and inhabitants massacred, 6; government of, obtained by Khizir, ib.; Baber establishes himself on its throne, ib.; entered, plundered, and burned by Nadir Shali, 15; evacuated by the French, 288; General Lake visits the emperor there, 289; Colonel Ochterlony left there, 290; Holkar arrives before the city, 316; preparations for defending, ib.; desertion of cavalry and mutiny of matchlock-men, ib.; siege of, 316; gallant defence by Colonel Burn, ib.; enemy retire, ib. Pennicancia, falls by treachery to Hyder Ali, 117.

Dennicancota, falls by treachery to Hyder Ali, 117. Dennic, Major, leads assault on stockade in Burmese war, 463.

Ghuznee, 542; defeats the forces of Dost Mahomed, 549; his difficulties at the Khoord Kabool pass, 554; killed at Jelalabad, 575.

Dennis, General, commander of brigade in the Affghanistan campaign, 535; engaged at the battle of Chonda, 005; his bravery, ib.

Des Brusles, General (commander in the Island of Bourbon), marches against English, retreats, and shoots himself, 365.

D'Estaigne, Count, despatched by Lally to dissuade D'Aché from returning to Isle of France, 61; made prisoner at the siege of Madras, ib.

Devi Cottah, fort and territory of, offered as a reward for plasing Mahratta prime on the throng of Tan for placing Malratta prince on the throne of Tan-jore, 18; coveted by the British on account of presumed commercial advantages, ib.; captured, and English confirmed in possession by the reigning prince, ib.: falls to the French, 60.

Dewah Amajee (sister of rajah of Coorg), her flight into

Mysore, 492.

Mysore, 432.

Mhoondia, account of, 247; disturbances created by, ib.; force despatched against him 248; is attacked, and escapes from the territorics of Mysore, ib.; is plundered by the Mahrattas, ib. ; raises further disturbances, and sizes several forts in territories of the peishwa, 252, 253; division of his army attacked and routed, ib.; he retires, pursued by Colonel Wellesley, ib.; is attacked and defeated at Conahgull, where he falls, 253; Sir Thomas Munro's remarks on his career and chi th. fall, lb.

Diaz, Bartholomew, reaches the southernmost point of Africa, and for the first time doubles the Cape of Good Hope, 7.

Dick, Colonel, assumes the command of one of the divisions of the army against Nepaul, 402.
Dindigul attacked by Colonel Stuart during Lord Cornwallis's war with Tippoo, 192; surrender of, ib.

Dirom, Major, his remarks on strength of the fort of Dirim, Major, his remarks on strength of the lott of Octandroog, and on the violence of Tippoo, 203.

Djocjacarta, sultan of, his hostile disposition to the British government, 378; his reception of Mr. Maffle, licuteanut-government and, ib.; concludes terms with the British government, ib.; forms confederacy of native princes to expel all European settlers, and mut down all European mayer, ib.; failure of externat put down all European power, ib.; failure of attempt to negotiate with, ib.; description of his palace and its defences, ib.; his palace attacked by Colonel Gillespic, who is summoned by the sultan to surrender, 379; attack resumed, palace taken, and sultan deposed, ib. Don, Lieutenant-Colonel, attacks and captures Tonk

Rampoora, 310; joins Colonel Monson, 311; re-occupies Muttra, 315.

Donobew unsuccessfully attacked by General Cotton, 469; Sir A. Campbell arrives there, ib.; flight of garrison, and capture of the place, 470.

Doorjun Saul contests succession to the musuad of Bhurtpore, 478; his claim unfounded, ib.; avails himself of the death of Buideo Singh to advance his own views, 470; remarks of Sir David Ochterlony on his pretensions and conduct, 480; his correspondence with Sir D. Ochterlony, 480, 481; quarrels with his brother, Madhoo Singh, 481; repels attack on Bhurt-pore by Madhoo Singh, ib.; opinions of Lord Amherst and Sir C. Metcalfe respecting him, 482, 483; declaration of British government regarding him, 481; revives his claim to the throne of Bhurtpore, ib.; explanation of the causes which procured him support, ib.; his pretensions publicly denounced by Sir C. Metcalfe, to whom he sends various letters and deputations, 481, 482; returns evasive answer to Lord Combermere's proposal to allow departure of women and children 485; attempts to expense. and children, 485; attempts to cecape, ib.; is intercepted and scenred by General Sleigh, ib.

Dost Mahomed Khan, the usurping sovereign of Kalool, 532; his intrigues with Russia, 533; Anglo-lool, 532; his intrigues with Russia, 533; Anglo-Indian forces sent against him, 535; rejects the terms offered by the British, 543; his flight from Kabool, ib.; establishes an alliance with the Usbegs, 549; his in-surrectionary attempts against Shoojah Shah, ib.; his forces defeated, ib.; his surrender to the British, 550.

Douglas, Captain, killed, 551.

Doveton, Captain, accompanies the hostage sons of Tippoo on restoration to their father, 217; his recen-tion by the sultan, ib.

General, in command of brigade of army of the Deccan, 431; arrives with his division at Nagnore, 436; moves to take possession of rajah of Nagnore's artiflery, 430, 437; gallantly carries batteries, routs and pursues enemy, and captures the whole of his artillery and camp-equipage, 437; attacks body of troops in the city of Nagpore, ib.; pursues Bajec Rao, 446; arrives at Assecrgurh, and takes command of force there, 453; his operations against that place ter-minating in its fall, 453, 454. Dowdswell, Major-General, joins General Lake at Muttra, 320.

Dowlut Row Scindia. (See Scindia.) Drake, Mr., governor of Calcutta, abandons his post and flies, 43; receives two lacs and 80,000 rupees from Meer Juffler, 55.

Draper, Colonel, makes a sally from Madras, 61; his gallant conduct, danger, and retreat, ib.; incapacitated for command by ill-health, is succeeded by Colonel Brereton, 64.

General, commands land forces in expedition against Manilla, 100; takes Manilla by storm, ib.; reference to his controversics with the author of the letters of Junius, ib.

Drummond, Colonel Edw., lands in Isle of Bourbon, and after severe and hazardous march joins Colonel Frascr, 367.

Dubois, commissioner at Pondicherry, his extraordinary death after the surrender of the place to the English, 79.

Dudley, Mr., chairman of East-India Company, writes to Clive on the position of the Company and the ministry, 119.

Duff, Captain Grant, his remarks on the conduct of the Hombay government in regard to Rugonath Rao, 147.

Dutl, Colonel, his tent mistaken for tent of Lord Cornwallis by party of the enemy, who are put to flight, Dumbadenia, English post in Ceylon, 308; gallant defence of by Ensign Grant, ib.

Duncan, Major-General, commander of infantry in the Allghauistan campaign, 531. Dundas, the Right Hon. Henry, at the head of Board of Commissioners for the affairs of India, declares in-quiry by Court of Directors into the debts of the Nabob of Arcot unpecessary, and directs a portion of the revenue of the Carnatic to be set aside for their liquidation, 181, 182; his remarks on the demands of the London ship-builders, 274; chief mover in the proceedings which secured to the ministry the entire patronage of Ccylon, 304. (See Melville, Lord.)

Dunlop, Colonel, wounded at siege of Seringapatam, 239.

Dupleix, M., governor of Pondicherry, intrigues of, 17; claims supreme authority over French possessions in India, the, this ambition, vanity, and duplicity, ib.; perfidiously violates the treaty concluded by La Bourdonnais with the English, ib.; fails in attempts against Fort St. David, 18; detaches force from Ponlicherry to assist Chunda Sahib and Mozusfar Jung, 19; intrigues with officers of Nazir Jung's army, and at the same time negotiates with their master. 21; annoyed by demands of Patan cluefs. ma-ter, 21; annoyed by demands of Patan chiefs, it.; negotiates and procures abatement of their demands, ib.; his splendid appearance at the enthronement of Morusfar Jung, ib.; appointed governor of all the provinces south of Kistna, ib; elevated to the rank of Hest Huzarce, and permitted to bear an ensign assigned only to persons of the highest note in the empire, ib.; various other favours conferred on him, ih.; assumes powers and grants conferred on him without waiting for confirmation by the emperor, ib.; holds his durbar at Pondicherry in the style of an eastern potentate, ib.; neither native nor European suffered to approach him without a present, ib.; receives a large amount of money and jewels from Mczustar Jung, ib.; obtains smaller sums for his officers and troops, and for the public service, ib.; plans for the erection of a new town, to he called Dupleix Fatcabad, all vestige of which is destroyed by Clive, 28; dissatisfied with affairs at Trichinopoly, sends reinforcements under M. d'Au-teull, who is authorized to supersede M. Law in hist command 28. Signatures chief command, 28; dispatches a body of French troops against British force under Major Kinnier, 31; seizes a body of Company's troops passing Pon-dicherry, 35; justifies the act by reference to pro-ceedings of the English at Seringham, ib.; is deceived by a movement of Major Lawrence, and gives instructions fatal to to the safety of the French force under M. Kerjean, ib.; his intrigues with the Mysoreans and Mahrattas, ib.; engages to put the Mysorean chief in possession of Trichinopoly, ib.; proposal made to transfer his assistance from Salabat Jung to his elder brother, Ghazi-oo-Deen, 38; receives from Salahat Jung a forged confirmation in the office of nabob, ib.; being in want of money he endeavours to supply it by creating a new nabob of Arcot, ib.; selects Murteza Khan for the office, and obtains from him a considerable sun, ib.; thrown upon his own resources, his private fortune largely dispensed to further his views, ib.; brings a force into the field, and is aided by the Mahrattas, ib.; despatches reinforcements to Trichinopoly to counteract the object of Major Lawrence's march thither, 20, superseded by M. Goldhar he despate for 39; superseded by M. Godheu, he departs for Europe,

Dupré, Mr., member of council of Madras, proceeds to the camp of Hyder Ali, and agrees to terms of a treaty, 118.

Durand, Lieutenant, of Bengal engineers, 542.

Dutch, suffer from exactions of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, 81; give offence to Meer Jaffer, who stops their trade, ib.; they offer apology, and obtain its restoration, ib.; envious of advantages enjoyed by the English in monopoly of saltpetre, and aggrieved by English government requiring all ships entering Hooghly to take British pilots, ib.; suspected of negotiating privately with Meer Jaffier for bringing a force to Bengal, ib.; their preparation of an armament in Batavia discountenanced by Meer Jaffier, ib.; arrival in the river of a Dutch ship with troops, 52; their boats subjected to search, and troops found no board, ib.; arrival of other ships filled with troops, ib.; enlist troops at Chinsura. Cossimbazar, and Patna. enlist troops at Chinsura, Cossimbazar, and Patna, and address remonstrance to English authorities, ib.; ships of, anchor below English batteries, and land troops, ib.; fleet attacked by Captain Wilson, and six ships taken, 83; attack Colonel Ford, and are repulsed, ib.; after defeat by Colonel Ford, sue for peace, and treaty concluded, ib.; their extreme terror on the approach of Meerun and of Meer Jaffler, ib.; basis of treaty with Meer Jaffler agreed upon, 10.; Dasis of treaty with meer samer agreed upon, and its conditions, ib.; purchase town of Nagore and its dependencies, 122; purchase disagreeable both to English and Mahomet Ali, ib.; arrangement made for its surrender, ib.; possessed of two forts at one extremity of the lines of Travancore, 190; call upon extremity of the lines of Travancore, 190; call upon Rajah to defend them against Tippoo, ib.; forts sold by them to the rajah, ib.; their right to sell discussed, ib.; horrible massacre of, by Sultan of Palimbang, 377.

619

Dyce, Colonel, captures the rajah of Kurnool, 572.

Earthquake at Jellalabad, 574. East, Colonel, despatched with force from Bombay to Cutch, to restrain depredations of foujdar of Wagur, 410; attacks and captures fort of Anjar, ib. East-India Company, its extraordinary history, 512; abolition of its right of exclusive trade with China, ib. (See Court of Directors.)

Egerton, Colonel, appointed to command of expedition from Rombay, in support of Rugonath Row as regent, 146; his inefliciency, difficulties, sickness, and resignation of command, ib.

gypt, expedition despatched to, from India, 254, 255. Ellenborough, Lord, expresses his conviction of the great importance of the question relating to the exclusive trade of the East-India Company, 498; moves for select committee to inquire into state of affairs of East-India Company, 499; avows the inten-tion of the government of which he was a member to open the trade to China, 502; moves for certain returns connected with India, and adverts to the omission of all notice of the subject in King's speech, 503; contrasts the position of the Company before and after the contemplated changes, 507; his especial hostility directed against the proposal that Indian governors should be relieved from the restraint of councils, ib.; his opinions as to the proposed opening of all offices to natives, 508; his remarks on abrogation of council, 509; moves an instruction to the committee on the subject, 511; his opinions respecting the contest between the Court of Directors and the Board of Control, as to the affairs of Oude, 515, 516; appointed Governor-General of India, 572; difficulties with which he had to contend, 573; his correspondence on the critical state of Affghanistan, 577 et seq.; his only object to effect the safe return of the Indian army, 581; his apprehensions for its anfety, 582; his interference with the affairs of Gwalior, 599 et seq.; his manifestoes, 602, 603; his proclamation announcing his military entry into the territories of Scindia, 601; at war with the Mah-rattas, 605, 606; reduces the maharajah and maha-rance to submission, 606; his return to Calcutta, 608; recalled by the Court of Directors, ib.; remarks on his administration, ib.

Ellice, Mr. Edward, his evidence on the trade of the Americans with China, 497. Ellis, Mr., appointed chief of the British factory at Patna, 90; his acts there disagreeable to nabob and the English governor, ib.; orders Captain Carstairs to seize one of the nabob's officers for obstructing transit of opium, ib.; seizes an Armenian in the service of the nabob, and sends him in irons to Calcutta, ib.; applies for order to obtain surrender of the company of the contractors of the co deserters from commander of fort of Mongheer; sends party of sepoys to enforce his wishes, 90; his removal from office demanded by Nabob Meer Cossim, 93; murdered by order of Meer Cossim, 91; his memorandum respecting the possession of Herat, Elphinstone, Hon. Mountstuart, British resident at Poona, his unfavourable opinion of Trimbuckjee Dainglia, 416; hears at Ellora of murder of Gungadhur Shastry, 418; demands justice on the murderers of the shastry, ib.; requests an audience of the peishwa, 419; demands arrest of Trimbuckjee Dainglia, Blugwant Row, and Bundojee, ib.; reiterates his demand for arrest of Trimbuckjee, 420; his warning to pelshwa, ib.; remonstrates against concentration of troops at Poona, ib.; repeats his warning to pelshwa, ib.; insists on unqualified surrender of Trimbuckiec, but gives private intimation that, after he should be a proper of the period of the place of the period of the place in the in custody, no further inquiry should take place, ib.; continues to enforce claims of British government, and obtains surrender of Trimbuckjee, 421; urges and obtains surrender of Trimbuchjee, 421; urges vigorous measures for preserving the peace of the peishwa's dominions, 427; puts in motion British force, 428; his decisive communications to the peishwa and his minister, 428, 429; causes Poons to be surrounded by British force, 429; negotiates and concludes new treaty with peishwa, 429, 430; his energetic conduct on the attack upon the residency, 430; summons General Smith from south bank of Godaver; his, his honourable decision on disputed conditions ib.; his honourable decision on disputed conditions of surrender of the garrison of Maligaum, 449; effects a treaty with Afighaniston, 528.

Elphinstone, General, his incapacity in the Afighan campaign, 567, 568; his interview with Akbar Khan, 570; his detention, 570.

Emaun Ghur, fort of, captured and destroyed, 593. England, General, his abortive attempt to relieve Candahar, 576; his unexpected repulse, ib.; quits Quetta for Candahar, 589.

Erivan, fruitless march of the Russians on, 531

Broad, reduced by the English, 114; disgraceful sur-render of, to Hyder Ali, by Captains Orton and Robinson, 117; garrison of, removed to Seringa-patam, ib.; surrenders to Colonel Oldham, 192. Erskine, General, dispatches a party to relief of Mr. Davis when attacked by Vizier Ali, 262; despatched with military forces to meet Burmese in Chittagong, 457.

Evans, Major, leads assault on stockade in Burmese war, 403.

Evans, Licutenant, killed, 586. Eyre, Licutenant, his remarks on the Affghanistan war, 560 ct seq.

F.

Faithful, Captain W. C., carries enemy's breastworks on Sittolee ridge, in Nepaul war, 404. Falconer, Lieutenant, killed, 651. Fancourt, Colonel, murdered at Vellore, 349. Fane, Sir II., ongaged in the Affghan campaign, 534. Farquhar, Lieutenant, killed at siege of Seringapatam, Farquhar, Mr., English governor of Isle of Bourbon, publishes address to inhabitants of Mauritius, 367.

publishes address to inhabitants of Mauritius, 307. Fendall, Mr., member of council at Bengal, records his opinion in favour of the interference of British government for the security of Bhurtpore, 481. Fergusson, Mr. Cutlar, defends the Court of Directors during the inquiry into the affairs of the East-India Company, and charges Mr. Whitmore with having caused confusion, 102; appeals to comparative condition of Company's territories and those of native dition of Company's territories and those of native dition of Company's territories and those of native princes, as evidence of good government of the former, 505; moves amendments relating to legislative powers of the Governor-General in council, and to the continuance of councils at subordinate presidencies, 509; presents petition of general court of proprietors of the East-India Company, and moves that they be heard by counsel, 510; moves omission of clause vesting government of presidencies in governor without council, 511.

governor without council, 511.

Feroze, first prince of the dynasty of Khilgy, 3; first irruption of Mahometan arms into the Decean takes place under, ib.; is murdered by his nephew, ib.

Feroze, Toghluk, remarkable for the number and magnitude of his public works, 4; twice abdicates the throne, ib.; and dies at an advanced age, ib. Ferozepore, Bengal forces assembled at, 537; grand military show at, 586.

Ferris, Captain, abandoned by his troops, 560.

Fischer, Captain, leads division of European troops at siege of Massilipatam, 66; his advance, 67.

Fitzgerald, Major, convoy under, attacked by Hyder Ali, 114; attack fails, ib.; his arrival causes Hyder Ali to relinquish conflict with Colonel Wood, 116; represents necessity of removing the latter officer from command, ib.

Fitzgerald, Captain, his gallant charge at the battle of Sectabuldee, 436.

Fitzwilliam, Earl, opposes adjournment of House of Lords requested by counsel for East-India Company,

Fletcher, Sir Robert, convicted by court-martial, and sentenced to be cashlered, 101; restored by general court, and appointed to chief command and a seat in court, and appointed to chief command and a seat in council at Madras, 122; becomes involved in disputes with governor of Madras, ib.; ordered to Trichinopoly, and applies for passage to England, ib.; reproof conveyed in reply to his application, ib.; proceeds to Trichinopoly, and is allowed to return to England, ib.; ordered into arrest by Lord Pigot, 162; reference to his case, 362.

Fletcher, Colonel, despatched, with detachment, to assist junction of Sir Hector Munro and Colonel Baillie, 167; his agracious conduct, ib.; is killed.

Balllie, 157; his sagacious conduct, ib.; is killed,

Fletcher, Major, pettah and fort of Khoordah carried lıy, 319.

Fleury, M., attacks Colonel Cunningham, and compels him to accept conditions, 288; evades detachment sent against him, ib.

Flint, Licutenant, despatched for defence of Wandewash, which he finds occupied by Mahomet Ali's troops, 162; killadar threatens to fire upon him, ib.; continues to advance, finds ramparts manned and gates shut, but demands admission to deliver a letter, gates shut, but demands admission to denier a latter, ib.; he advances to conference with killadar, and shows the order of his government, when he suddenly seizes the killadar, ib.; remainder of detachment rush in, and the gates are opened, ib.; defeats the endeavours of the killadar to excite disaffection in the garrison, 163.

Floyd, Colonel, informs General Medows of the approach of Tippoo, and suggests that advanced corps of the army should fall back on head-quarters, 192; he is ordered to maintain his position, ib.; attacks and defeats Tippoo's force, 193; calls council of war, and retreats, ib.; effects junction with General Medows, ib.; charges rear-guard of Tippoo's retreating infantry, and nearly destroys them, 198.

Forbes, Sir C., congratulates natives of India on being placed under government of East-India Company instead of the Crown, 498; his opinion on the China trade 408, 400.

instead of the Crown, 498; insopinion on the Cinina trade, 498, 499; reproves members of parliamentary committee for non-attendance, 502.

Forde, Colonel, proceeds to Nellore to aid the army of Mahomet Ali, but retires without success, 57; advances with expedition to Vizagapatam, 61; defeats the French under M. Confans at Peddapore, ib.; advanced by Coloners in the process. vances to Rajahmundry, crosses the Godavery in pursuit of the enemy, and recrosses the river, ib.; arrives in sight of Masulipatam, ib.; his difficulties for want of money, 65, 66; becomes aware of flight of Anunderauze, and despatches messenger to win him back, 66; determines to make attempt to carry Masulipatam by storm, ib.; makes an attack with three divisions, 66, 67; rejects the offer of M. Condans to surrender on terms, 67; obtains possession of the place and of a rich booty, ib.; concludes treaty with Salabat Jung, ib.; returns from the Decean, and is described executive the and is despatched northward with a force against the Dutch, 82; attacked by garrison of Chinsura, which he defeats and puts to flight, 83; engages force landed from Dutch ships, and routs them, ib. Fort Ostenburgh, added to the conquest of the English,

Fort St. David, purchased by the East-India Company from a native prince, fortified, and rendered an important station, 16; on fall of Madras, Company's agents assume general administration of affairs in that part of India, 17, 18; arms of the French directed against, by Dagleis, 18; English repel the attack, ib.; Clive | Frasce, Mr. William, first assistant to the resident at makes his erape in dispulse, 22; and being ap-pointed reservor, proceeds thiller, 42; council of, motals Parach fleeter English, 58; their messenger erstund, 59; French squadron descried salling off, ib.; attacked by the French, it espitulates, they its ir going apprented, he whom the terms of capitulation ner declared shameful, Ib.

Fort St. Gebree, fortification erected by the East-India Company at Madrapatam on named, 16. (See Madige.3

Fort humanap (Java', attacked and carried by storm,

I's it William, Company's settlement in Bengal fortified and so called, 17; college of, founded by Plarquis Wellering, 277; its establishment and suppression, th. (See Calculta and Bengal,) l'aulstyre, Lieutenant, his callantry in effecting compuriestion l'etveen British force lying off Island of Bort on and esteel ment en abore, 20%.

Youle, Mr., removed from office at Benares by Hartings, and prounds for removel, 182; his restoration entered by Court of Pirectors, and orders set at navr'.t, 12 4.

Por, Right Hon, Charles James, moves in House of Commons for leave to long in a bill for better governmert of territorial possessions and dependencies in India, 180; plan of I.II, and outline of its provisions, its; denounced in Fig. Pawys, th.; bill passes the Commons, but fells the uph desclution of munitry, ith, bit; more for leave to bring in a bill in oppoeitien to Piti's bill, but no propress maie mit, 181; calls attention of House of Commons to claims of orelitors of natiob of Arest, they moves that there is pr un'i fer imperching flactings in referer ce to treatment of Chest Single, D.2; moves that Francis be added to committee for conductors impeachment of Hestings, 1624 states course proposed to be taken by managers of imperchment of Hastings, 184.

France, Isle of, arrival of French expedition at, 29. (See Marritina.)

Francis, 7fr. Philip, nominated member of council of Bergal, 127; supports General Claveting in calling for entrespondence of Hastings with Company's screents, supports suggestion of Colonel Moneon for reest et Middieten, ib. ; supporte proposal of General Clasering for transferring duties of resident to Colonel Champlen, 1234 concurs with General Clavering and Cilonel Mone in considering treaty with virier as dies he I by his death, th.; I resents to council paper from Nunconiar accusing Hastings of corruption, 129, 159; supports General Clavering in his attempt to never the office of povernor, 134; attends meeting of council, and mores for reversing resolutions excluding General Clavering, 135; maintains the right of General Clavering to retain the office of comman-der-in-chief, th.; supports Mr. Wheler in proposal to suspend compliance with application of the naboli Moharick-ul-Bonlah to be intrusted with the administration of his own affairs, 137; objects to appropriation of salary of Mahomed Reza Khan, 139; joins with Mr. Wheler in proposing to call on nabob to restore Mahomed Reza Khan, ib.; his change of position with regard to Hastings, ib.; desires retirement of Baruell, ib.; overture for accommodation with Hastings, ib.; meets Hastings to complete pacification, ib.; denies ever being party to any enragement securing to Hastings the management of the Mahratta war, 142; fights duel with Hastings, and is wounded, ib.; quits India, ib.; his objection to carrying war into territories of Scindia and Holkar, 110; occasion of ducl with Hastings, ib.; failure of attempts to introduce him into committee for earrying on imperchanent of Hastings, 183; alleges that Sir G. Barlow had incurred the displeasure of Court of Directors, 357.

Frankland and Manningham, Messrs., volunteer to superintend the embarkation of females from Calcutta

when attacked by Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, 43.
Fraver, Colonel, dislodges a body of riflemen, moves towards St. Denis, and defeats the main force of the enemy in the Island of Bourbon, 366; is joined by Colonel Drummond, and obtains surrender of the island, 367; commands column of attack at Assecr-gurh, 453; falls while rallying his men, 454. Delhi, raises large body of irregulars for the Nepaul war, 392.

Fraser, Lieutenant, succeeds Mr. Graeme as political agent in Coorg, 493.

Fraser, Captain, flight of his cavalry, 550, surrender excites alarm at Madres, the; court of Frarce, General, detached in search of Holkar's infantry and guns, 316; arrives at Goburdun, ib.; engages the enemy near Deeg, 317; mortally wounded and dire, Ib.

Frederick, Colonel, assaults Darwar, is repulsed, and dies of the effects of disappointment, 193.

French attack and take Madras, 17; attack nabob of the Carnatic, and force him to retire to Arcot, ib.; their perfidy towards the English, ib.; power and influence of, exerted against Nair Jung, 19; defection in their army, 20; capture a fortified pagoda near Fort St. David, ib.; attack the camp of Maho-met Ali, who abandons his entrenchments, ib.; gain possession of Gingee, ib.; advance upon camp of Narir Jung, who is murdered by his own dependents, 21 : their disputes with the Patan chiefs about booty, ib.; their power and influence at the court of Moruffar Jung, ib.; support Salabat Jung on death of Mozuffar Jung, 22; murder disabled soldiers near Conjeyeram, 20; defeated by Major Lawrence, 39; report the death of Major Lawrence, 40; ngain defeated by Major Lawrence, ib.; fall in attack on Trichinoroly, the; suspension of arms and treaty concluded with, 41; offer to assist English against Sooraj-oo-Dowlah on condition of their quitting Calcutta for Chandernazore, 43; negotiations with, at Chandernagore, with a view to maintenance of neutrality, 48, 49; attacked at Chandernagore, and the place taken, 42; menace Trichinopoly, 57; retire, 55; their carrons movements, ib.; capture Fort St. David and Devi-cottah, 59, 60; their march to Tanjore and return, 60; lay slege to Madras, 61; retire, 61; proceedings of, under M. Conflans, 64, 65; naval enpagement with, 69; subsequent crents, 68, 69; mutiny in Lally's army, 70; capture Seringam, 70, 71; their cruelty, 71; movements of Bussy and Lally, 72; defeated at Wandewash by Colonel Coote, 74; sundry movements of, 75, 76; besieped in Pondicherry, 76; their power in the Carnatic terminated by fall of Pondicherer, 70; their possessions restored at the peace, 100; succeed in landing troops at Porto Novo, 163; join Hyder Ali, ib.; naval engagement with, ib.; defeated by General Stuart, 168; retire from Manga-lore on conclusion of peace, 169; attacks upon the selands belonging to, in the Indian Ocean, and their capture, 361.

French mission sent to Persia in 1808, 528; its intrigues with Persia, ib.

French, Major, joins Colonel Gillespie at Palemburgh,

Frith, Major, captures Melloon (Burmese war), 474. Fullarton, Mr., saved from the massacre of European prisoners by Meer Cossim, and effects his escape, 94. Fullarton, Colonel, his conflicting instructions, 169; receives intelligence of violation of convention of Mangalore, and moves on to Paligaut to effect junction with General Macleod, 170; proceeds to capital of Colmbstore, ib.; his progress arrested by instructions from commissioners, ib.; required to suspend his operations, abandon all his conquests, and retire, ib.; his partial obedience, ib.; complete obedience enforced on him by government, 171; receives counter orders, ib. Fuller, Mr., chairman of committee of the House of Commons, moves for leave to bring in a Bill for regulating Company's dividends, which is carried, 120.

Fumel, Viscount, dispatched to negotiate with muti-neers in Lally's army, and partially succeeds, 70. Futteenhad, slaughter of British fugitives at, 571.

Futteh Hyder, eldest son of Tippoo, personally tenders submission to General Harfis, 243.

Futteh Khan, the Affighan vizier, 531; murder of, ib.: avenged by his brothers, 532.

Futteh Sing Guicowar, discussions between him and the peishwa, 416; disavows intrigues carried on in his name at court of peishwa, 417.

Fuzzul-ool-Khan (general of Hyder Ali) enters Coimbatore, 110.

Fyzalad, palace of begums at, blockaded, 178. Fyzoolia Khan (Rohilia chief), movement against, and dispute settled by negotiation, 125; arrangement made with him guaranteed by British government, 175; assistance demanded from, by the English, ib.; offers reduced amount, ib.; further demand from, and modified offer of compliance, 176; is declared to and modified offer of compliance, 176; is declared to have forfeited the protection of the English, ib.; his death, 225; succeeding disturbances, ib.; pros-perity of his dominions, ib.

Garbett, Captain, attacks the Huzarch tribe, 546. Gardener, Cornet, falls in the breach of Lahar, 149. Gardiner, Captain, attacks Tantia, a native chief, with auccess, 311.

Gardner, Colonel, appointed to raise and command a body of irregulars during Nepaul war, 402, 403; his successful advance, 403; drives the enemy from posi-tion in front of Almorah, ib.

Gardner, Hon. Edward, intrusted with negotiations during Nepaul war, 392; ordered to proceed to Kumaon in a political character, 403; assents to procertain Nepaulese commanders to withdraw their forces, 406.

Garrett, Captain, killed, 595.

Gascoyne, General, objects to construction of committee of the House of Commons for inquiry into affairs of East-India Company, 501; condemns report of committee, ib.

Gawilghur, description of, by General Wellesley, 296; British force under General Stevenson, and General Wellesley moves against it, ib.; operations against, ib.; its fall, 297.

Gazce-oo-deen Hyder, king of Oude, 523.

Georgia, rival princes of, seck the assistance of Russia,

Geriah, general engagement there between English and Meer Cossim, 94; victory of the former, and flight of the latter, ib. Ghazi Khan Toguluk defeats and slays the murderer of Moharik, and mounts the throne of Delhi, 3.

Ghazi-oo-Deen, eldest son of Nizam-ool-Moolk, denies that he had renounced his right of succession, appears at head of an army, and proclaims himself soobahdar of the Deccan, 38.

Gheriah, pirate station on coast of Concan, attacked by Admiral Watson and Clive, and the place falls into their hands, 41.

Ghiljies reject the offer of Shah Shoojah, 540; their hostile forces, 642; outlireak among the, 547; expeditions sent against, and contests with, 547, 551, 552; reasons of their revolt, 553; repulsed by Captain Craigie, 581; defeated at Jugduluk, 583.

Ghizni, dynasty of, involved in wars with the Suljook Turks and with the Afighan house of Ghoor, and driven from their capital, 3; take refuge in India, when Lahore becomes their capital, ib.; recover Ghizni, and again expelled, ib.; close of the dynasty, ib. (See Ghuznee).

Gholam Mahomed (son of Fyzoolia Khan) raises rebel-lion on death of his father, makes his elder brother prisoner, and murders him, 225.

Gholaum Ali Khan, his correspondence with Tippoo Sultan from Madras relating to Mahomet Ali, 256; endcavours to evade inquiries of British commissioners respecting intrigues with Mahomet Ali, by affecting dotage, 257.

Gholaum Kaudir Khan (Rohilla), obtains possession of city of Delhi, 289; his dreadful excesses, ib.

Ghustor Khan (Patan) places Kurreem Pindarrie (intrusted to him by Holkar) under restraint, 424; provision for securing jaghire to, in Marquis of Hastings's treaty with Holkar, 441.

Ghuznee, arrival of the Anglo-Indian army at, 541; atrength of its defences, ib.; preparations for attack 542; storming of, and capture, 542, 543; recaptured by the Afighans, 573; and the British officers imprisoned, 574; recaptured by General Nott, 585; its destruction, ib.

Gibbs, Colonel, attacks and puts to flight army of General Janasens, 376.

wie, Colonel, receives intelligence at Arcot of at Veliore, and marches thither, 349; blows open gate and disperses the insurgents, ib.; heads a sally on the enemy at Batavia, 374; attempt to poison him and his stair, 374, 375; his prompt attack of the enemy at Wellevreden, when he carries the place at point of bayonet, 375; captures fort of Meester Corsclis, ib.; his personal encounters, ib.; commands force against Palimbang, 377; arrives at Palimbang, refuses to treat except with sultan in person, and takes possession of works at Borang, ib.; endeavours to stop confusion and carnage at Palimbang, ib.; attempt to assassinate him frustrated, ib.; obtains possession of the city, fort, batteries, and forty-two pieces of cannon, 378; his arrival at Djocjocarta, and outrages which follow, ib.; cannonades palace of sultan of Djocjocarta, takes it by escalade, and makes sultan prisoner, 378, 379; placed in command of division of the army against Nepaul, 392; failure of his attempt against Kalunga, 391; is mortally wounded there, ib.

Gingce taken possession of by the French, 21; garrison of, summoned to surrender by Major Kinneir, 31; taken by Captain Stephen Smith, 79.

Giriskh, capture of, 540.

Gladstone, Mr. John, his evidence on the trade of the Americans with China, 497, 493.

Glass and Revell, British officers, whose lives are spared by the French, when their companions were murilered near Conjeveram, 20; are required to make communication to Clive to deter him from attack, ib.

Goa attacked by Portuguese and taken by storm, re-taken by a native force, and again captured by the Portuguese, 8; becomes the capital of Portuguese dominions in India, and the see of an archbishop, the primate of the Indies, ib.

Goburdun, arrival of General Frazer there in pursuit of Holkar's infantry and guns, 316.

Goddard, Colonel (afterwards General), succeeds Colonel Leslie in command of force from Dengal, detached in support of Rugonath Rao, 147; disregards instruc-tions from Bombay, and continues his march, ib.; his honourable reception by government of Bombay, ib.; is requested to join deliberation in council, and recommended for appointment as commander-in-chief, ib.; intrusted with authority to negotiate treaty with Mahratta state, 148; puts his army in motion, take Ahmedabad by assault, and attacks camp of Scindia, ib.; raised to rank of brigadier-general, ib.

, General, attacks Bassein, which surrenders at discretion, 149; marches to threaten Poona, and establishes head-quarters at foot of the Ghauts, 150; amused by the minister of the prishwa with pretended negotiation, ib.; presses negotiation for peace, ib. Goderich, Lord, succeeds to chief place in administration, and yields to anti-Catholic party, 487. Jodheu, M., supersedes Dupleix in the government of the French possessions in India, 41.

Godwin, Colonel (King's 41st), attacks and carries stockades in Burmese war, 464; despatched on expedition to Martchan, which is attacked and captured, 465, 466; dislodges advanced position of Burmese force at Thantabain, 469.

Gohud, alliance formed with the rana of, who is attacked by Mahrattas, and demands aid from British government, 148; troops, under Captain Popham, despatched to his assistance, ib.; treaty with rana of, 304; demand of, by Scindia, 306; invaded by Ambajec Inglia, 328; Marquis Cornwallis surrenders it to Scindia, 343.

Golconda invaded by Mohammed, son of Aurungzebe, 8; king of, overcome by Aurungzebe, ends his days in prison at Dowlatabad, 14; Mozusiar Jung sets out for, escorted by troops commanded by M. Bussy, 21.

Golden Rock, British post at, attacked by M. Artruc and carried; retaken by Major Lawrence, S9.

Goodias (son of Nuncomar) appointed treasurer of nabob's household by Warren Hastings, 123: his ap-pointment alleged to have been obtained by a bribe to Hastings, 130; succeeds Munny Begum as guardian of the nabob, ib.

Gootkha tribe established in great force in Nepaul, 339; their encroachments, ib.; imprison and put to death Perthee Paul Sing, rajah of Palpa, ib.; Sir George Barlow's effort to conciliate them fails, 390. Goorkha prince claims management of Bootwul, 389. (See Nepaul.)

Goorgo Gujraj Misser. (See Gujraj Misser.)

Gordon, Major Robert, his extraordinary disappearance | Grey, Earl, new ministry formed under, 502; intimates at the attack on Wandewash, 69; similar disappearance of, during attack on redoubts near Pondicherry, 77.

Colonel, arrives with provisions at Mangalore after articles of capitulation agreed upon, 170, Gorcham, Lieutenant, saves his life by knowledge of the native language, and is required by Hyder Ali to translate summons of surrender of Eroad, 117.

Gough, Sir Hugh, commander of the forces against the Mahrattas of Scindia, 665; his despatch respecting the battles of Chouda and Maharajpoor, ib. Govindpore, how obtained by East-India Company, 16.

Gowdie, Major, captures Ryaccotah, 200.

Graeme, Mr. H. S., appointed to conduct communication with rajah of Coorg, and nature of his instructions, 492; fails in attempt to induce rajah to receive him, 293; attempts to negotiate through native agency, ib.; is succeeded in political duties by Licutenant Fraser, and returns to Europe, ib.

Grafton, Duke of, his communications with chairman and deputy chairman of East-India Company, 119.

and deputy chairman of Fast-India Company, 119.
Graham, Mr., demands of rance of Burdwan security for payment of a penalty in case of failure in establishing charges against Warren Hastings and others, 129; intrusted jointly with Colonel Maclean with authority to tender resignation of Hastings, 133; purport of letter addressed to him and Colonel Macclean by Hastings, 136.

Graham, Brigadier-General, commander of the Bengal forces in Alighanistan, 534.

Grant, Captain, success of his column at Bhurtpore. S22.

Grant, Captain James, attacks and captures fort of Talyne in Pindarrie war, 429.

Grant, Ensign, his gallant desence of Dumbadenia in

Ceylon, 308. Grant, Charles, sen., opposes Lord Castlereagh's motion for select committee on affairs of East-India Com-pany, 384; statements on behalf of East-India Company by, 386 et seq.; supports motion for confining return of vessels from India to the port of London for a limited period, 387.

Grant, Charles, jun., claims for East-India Company credit for improvement of India, 380; answers objection to union of political and commercial functions, ib.; denounces those who, having participated largely in the slave trade, had become advocates of free trade with India, ib.; his bold and striking peroration, 396, 387; moves re-appointment of committee of inquiry, 502; moves that notice be given of payment of debt due by public to Company, ib.; again moves for re-appointment of committee of inquiry, ib.; vindicates directors from suspicion of obstructing in-quiry, ib.; once more moves for committee, 503; suggestion of, for dividing committee, ib.; his answer to question of Mr. Stuart Wortley on duty of general committee, ib.; moves that the House of Commons committee, in.; moves that the House of Commons resolve into committee on Indian affairs, and panegy-rizes Company's government, but objects to its union with trade, 505, 506: his statements relating to trade between India and China, 506; notices the proposed extension of power of governor-general, the contemplated subjection of Europeans to same jurisdiction as natives, the removal of disabilities for office, law commission, and new hishopping and moves these law commission, and new bishoprics, and moves three resolutions, ib.; presents a bill to the Commons, founded on ministerial plan of compromise, ib.; adds clause respecting slavery, 509; adds proviso, allowing grant of money by government of India to religious purposes unconnected with the established churches of England and Scotland, 511; his speech on the affairs of Oude, 516; made secretary of state for the colonial department, 518.

Great Britain, her difficulties as regards Persia and Russia, 531.

Greenhill, Major, commands column for attack of breach at Maligaum, and is wounded, 449.

Grenville, Lord, defends exercise of royal prerogative in removing Sir George Barlow from office of governor-general, 356; suggests a select committee to hear evidence on arrangement with East-India Company, 384; his opinions on the subject, 384, 385; declares that he is for transferring the government of India to the Crown altogether, 385; remarks on his speech, ib.

that ministers did not intend to bring on any measure on subject of East-India Company's charter during the session of 1831, 503.

623

Grey, General, defeats a large body of Gwalior troops, 606.

Guicowar (see Futteh Sing Guicowar). Gujelhutty surrenders to the army of Hyder Ali, 117. Gujraj Misser, attempts to negotiate with Nepaul through his medium, 407, 408; the negotiations concluded by treaty, ib.

Gumber Singh engaged and defeated by Burmese, 460; succeeds in reaching western boundary of Manipur, 471; Burmese fly on his approach, and he returns to Sylhet, ib.; stipulation in treaty with Burmese regarding, 475. Gundamuk, General Pollock's capture of, 583.

Gungadur Shastry, chief minister of the guicowar, his talents and services, 416; selected to conduct negotintions with peishwa, 417; intrigues to defeat the object of his mission, ib.; on failure of his mission is about to leave Poona, ib.; is invited to accompany peishwa to Punderpore, and murdered, 418.

Guntoor, rented of Basalut Jung by Company, 155. Gurdee Khan, Pindarrie, favour bestowed upon, hy

Holkar, 422.

Guzerat, portion of territory renounced by East-India

Company to peishwa, 301. Gwalior taken by Captain Popham, 149; ceded to the wallor taken by Captain Popnam, 149; ceded to the Company, 304; demanded by Scindia, 321; apology for surrender of, by Marquis Cornwallis, 343; affairs of, and intrigues at, 599; governed by the army, ib.; the governor-general's interference with, 599, 600; maharance of, her youth and incapacity for government, 600, 601; increasing difficulties, 602; British right of interference with, ib.; and manifesto respective. 603: Anglo, Indian contests with the troops of ing, 603; Anglo-Indian contests with the troops of, 605, 606; the maharajah and maharanee reduced to submission, 606; the British troops marched into, and amicable relations established by treaty, 607; articles of the treaty, ib.; the government of, established on a new basis, 608.

Hafiz Jee, officer of the nizam, left in charge of lower fort of Goorumconda, attacked and made prisoner, 204; carried to a concealed situation, and murdered by Aly Recza, ib.

Haliburton, Colonel, commander of the Hyderabad subsidiary force, marches to the neighbourhood of Aurungabad to aid operations against Holkar, 319; joins Colonel Wallace, ib.; ordered to occupy posi-tion favourable to the scizure of Scindia's possessions south of the Nerbudda, 336; directed to advance to Moolapore, 339.

Hamagery Merion, native servant of the Company, selected by Mr. Graeme as agent at Coorg, forcibly detained there, 293.

Hamelin, M., his taunting remark to General Abercrombie, and the general's retort, 368.

Hamilton, Major, takes possession of battery at house of dewan of Travancore, arrives at Anjuvicha, attacks party of the enemy, and defeats them, 360.

Hammond, Major, commands two battalions employed in keeping in check part of the enemy's force at the battle of Deeg, 317.

Harcourt, Colonel, suppresses the annoyances created by the rajah of Khoordah, and the zemindar of Kimka, 319.

Hardyman, General, ordered to move to the Nerbudda on breaking out of disturbances in Nagpore, 437; defeats the enemy at Jubbulpore, ib.

Hardyman, Lieutenant, killed, 567.

Harland, Sir Robert, his officious and dangerous conduct, 122; enters into negotiations with Mahrattas, and is involved in disputes with governor and council of Madras, ib.; departs, ib.

Harpur, Lieutenant-Colonel, intercepted by officers of Hyder Ali in marching from Guntoor to Adoni, and retires, 155.

Harrington, Mr., member of council of Bengal, records his opinion in favour of the interference of the British government at Bhurtpore, 481; vindicates the ministerial bill for government of India, 509; proposes that tenure of Company should be determinable at expiration of ten years, ib.; supports amendment withdrawing discretionary powers as to appointment of council at subordinate presidencies, ib.; supports amendment excluding governor-general from governorship of any particular presidence, ib. 1 moves omission of clause restricting residence in India, ib. 1 opposes establishment of new bishoprics, 509, 510; moves amendment for reducing salary of governor-general, 510; opposes motion relating to compulsory main-tenance of Scotch ministers at the presidencies, ib.; supports motion for abolishing salt monopoly, ib.; renews motion for putting an end to Company's Fergusson for hearing Company by counsel, ib. Humzee Khan, revolt of, against Shoojah Shah, 553. overnment in ten years, ib.; seconds motion of Mr.

Huns, progress of their arms, 4.

Hunter, Captain, forces and enters the gate of Tippoo Sultan's garden, takes post and waits for orders, quits garden, and rushes with his men into the river under a heavy fire, 207; makes his way to the reserve under Lord Cornwallis, ib.

Huskisson, Mr., makes statement of trade with India subsequently to abolition of Company's exclusive privileges, 498; opposes Directors of the East-India Company sitting on parliamentary committees, 500; objects to so many county members being placed on parliamentary committees, ib.; contends that the Company have violated the law, ib. Hussein Ali (officer of Hyder Ali), attacked, defeated, and made prisoner by Colonel Hartley, 194.

Hussein Reza Khan (minister of Oude), his meeting with Sir J. Shore, and results, 226; his retention of office supposed to be a bar to satisfactory arrangement of the state, 264.

Huzareh tribe, hostility of the, 546; attack on the, ih.; the chiefs declare in favour of the British party,

Hyder Ali concludes treaty with Lally, 76; his situation requires withdrawal of his troops from Pondicherry, ib.; his origin and advance to manhood, 107; his time divided between the sports of the field and volup-tuous enjoyments, ib.; joins his brother's corps as a volunteer, distinguishes himself, advances to the command of freebooters, ib.; his predatory troops and resources increase, ib.; nominated foujdar of Dindigul, ib.; proceeds at head of force to suppress confederacy of polygars, and succeeds, ib.; his scheme for subarcing the number of the apparently wounded, and apportionment of the money furnished to him, ib.; his force augmented and assignments of revenue made for support of the increase, 108; special com-missioners deputed to inspect musters, and their vigilance frustrated by him, ib.; suppresses mutiny in Mysorean army, attacks and defeats Herri Singh, presents guns and horses to his sovereign, and obtains district of Bangalore as a personal jaghire, ib.; nomi-nated to chief command of field army, reduces the Mahrattas, and is received with distinction, ib.; intrigues against his benefactor, Nunjeraj, troops proceed to his quarters and domand payment of arrears, to discharge arrears of troops, and obtains urther assignments of revenue, 108, 109; conspiracy reduce his power, 109; is attacked and defeated, ... his patron to resume his place at the head of state and receive his old servant, ib.; his trea-career, ib.; defeats the army of Koonde w, takes him prisoner, and confines him in an cage, 110; created nabob of Sera by Basalat g, reduces Sera, ib.; his cruelty, ib.; penetrates upital of Bednore, and obtains vast treasure, ib.; , against him detected, ib.; attempts con-of Malabar, ib.; renders homage to new rajah vegre, 111; gives orders to lay waste the country, down the reservoirs, poison the wells, burn re, bury the grain, and drive off the cattle, in check the advance of the Mahrattason Mysore, ke Colonel Smith, and is defeated, 112, 113; sion of Tripatore and Vaniambaddy, 113, chiefs revolt against him, 114; sumtions, ib. ; takes different mode of levying in Malabar, ib.; enters Bangalore, 115; Colonel Wood, with great loss, 115, 116;

Oossoor, and gains possession of pettah, which he plunders and retires, 116; encounters an English party under Captain Nixon, when his cavalry destroys the whole party, except Lieutenant Gorcham, 117; instances of his treachery and want of faith, ib.; appears suddenly before Madras with six thousand horse, 118; sends letter to governor expressing desire for peace, terms of a treaty agreed upon, ib.; plun-ders Porto Novo and Conjeveram, 157; despatches a force under his son Tippoo to frustrate junction of Sir H. Munro and Colonel Baillic, and breaks up his camp before Arcot, ib.; attacks Colonel Baillic with his whole force, who orders his troops to lay down their arms, 158; cruelty of his troops, ib.; causes his prisoners to be paraded before him, and heads of the slain to be deposi ed at his feet, ib; sufferings of his British prisoners, 153, 159; resumes siege of Arcot, and captures it, 161; attacked and totally defeated by Sir Eyre Coote, 164; his cause unprosperous on coast of Malabar, ib.; joined by French force, withdraws towards Pondicherry, and is defeated by Sir E Coote, ib., his detailed and age. by Sir E. Coote, ib.; his death at an advanced age, 167; measures taken thereupon to secure the throne to Tippoo, ib.; and treaties concluded with, 189,

Hyder Ali, commander of the jezailchees, killed, 584. Hyder Khan, governor of Ghuznee, his defeat and capture, 543.

Hyderabad, dissolution of the French force at, 235; symptoms of disaffection manifested by troops at, suppressed, 349, 350; outrageous rumours as to the intention of the English propagated and believed, 353; mutiny breaks out at, but subsides, 363; trentics made at, 588; battle of, with the Beloochees, 594.

Ile du Passe, brilliant acquisition of, by parties from British cruisers, 367; intrusted to charge of Captain Willoughby, who uses the fort as means of conquering the Mauritius, ib.; forlorn state of garrison there, they are compelled to surrender, 368.

mlack, Captain, his engagement with the main force of the French in the Isle of Bourbon, 364.

Impey, Sir Elijah, his leniency towards contempt of mpey, Sir Eijan, his lentency towards contempt of court, when proceeding from governor-general and council, 141; made judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, ib.; suggests the necessity of fortifying Hastings's statement of facts by affidavits, 177; con-sents to receive affidavits in Oude, where he had no jurisdiction, ib.; accused by Burke of being Has-tings's instrument in the murder of Nuncomar, 184.

India, British, early history of, involved in obscurity, 1; manners and institutions of, established long before the Christian era, ib.; origin of the inhabitants, 2; portion of, conquered by Persians, under Darius Hystaspes, ib.; invaded by Alexander, ib.; Greek dominion there did not expire with his life, 3; its early and extensive commerce, ib.; Mahometan invasion of, ib.; brief sketch of the more striking parts of its history from the commencement of the eleventh to the middle of the eighteenth century, 3-16; first appearance of the English in, 16; British fleet to the middle of the eighteenth century, 3—16; first appearance of the English in, 16; British fleet despatched to (1744), threatens Pondicherry, 17; Dupleix claims supreme authority over French possessions in, ib.; excitement created at home by affairs of, 125, 179, 180; gross ignorance respecting, provalent in Europe during the eighteenth century, 146; position of British government in, on retirement of Lord Teignmouth, 230; observations on the feelings of native troops towards the British government. $48: prevalence of system British government, 348; prevalence of system under which the sovereign is held in subjection by a minister, 361; effects of opening the trade with, by act of 1813, 383; personal tax always regarded by the people with dislike, 413; not desirable to disre-gard claims of rank in, 451; annuity of £030,000 to be charged upon its territorial revenues assigned for payment of the Company's dividends, 504; forma-tion of a uniform code of laws for, contemplated, 517; the best-governed of the dependent possessions of Great Britain, 512; usurious money-lenders in, 513, 514; liberty of the press established in, 522; her western frontiers often a subject of great anxiety, 528;

626

and the violence of the monsoon, 430; disposition and operations of his army, 431; directs his march to Oogeln, 438; is joined by Sie John Malcolm, 439; ndennes towards Mahldpore, they like mesengents to antances towards standinger, in, i his movements to attack the enemy, the i pains complete victory, their enemy area for peace, which is granted, their autonom-fort of Talucir, 443; preparations made by, for a torin-ing Talucir, their place taken by him, and killadar rentenced to be hanged, 444; discardarding ex-pressed with regard to his conduct at Talucir, their is defended by the Marquis of Hardings, their calls mean various officers to a find information. It upon various officers to afford information, it.

Hobart, Land, governor of Mudrus, propores, on death of Mahomet All, the cession by his successor of cer-tain territories, 2211 his dispute with the posent-ment of Bengal on the subject, 225.

Hobbouse, Sir J., defends the resocation of Iz of Heytes hury's appointment as governor-general of India,

Hopp, Mr., his arguments on the resocution of Lord Heyteshiry's appointment as portrio repercial, 221. Holkar (Jesseut Ban) approaches Poons, and defeats the combined forces of Scindia and the pershwa, 278; retreats before General Wellesley, and retiers to Chandoor, 280; invited to negotiate, 210; a l'Irosere friendly letters to General Lake, and despateles his menacing letter to General Wellesley, the fitter to General Wellesley, the fusion with the turbed by detachment from Lord Lake's army, he relies precipitately, the deprived by fall of Tonk. Rampoors of his only footing in Hindustan north of the Chumbal, 311; his rapid flight remlers it inca-pedient to follow him, ib.; watched by parties of cavalry under Colotel Gardiner and Lectronat Lucan, ib.; after the retreat of Colonel Murray, quits his post in Malwa, and recrosses the Chumbul with the whole of his army, 313; attacks and destroys with the whole of his army, 313; attacks and destroys a licutenant Lucan's existry, the; armle a letter to Colonel Moneon, demanding the aurrender of the guns and small arms of the British force, th.; attacks Colonel Monson, but is heaten off, th.; attacher made to corrupt the British troops, 313; continues to follow and harass Colonel Monson, ib.; takes pure session of Muttra, 314; withdraws on approach of British army, 315; appears before Belhi, its; makes an assault, is repulsed, and retires, 316; crosses the Jumna at Panniput, and threatens to desolate the British territories in the Doab with fire and award, ib.; his cavalry attack Colonel Burn on his way from Delhi to Salurunpore, ib.; his defeat by General Frazer near Deeg, ib.; his camp aurprised by General Frazer near Deeg, 10.; and camp surprised by General Lake, 31; files across the Jumna, 1b.; operations against him in the south, 319; his capital, Indore, occupied by Colonel Murray, 1b.; the whole of his possessions west of the Chumbul conquered, 1b.; joins Shirzee Rao at Weir, proceeds towards camp of Scindia, 337; letters of, fall into hands of English. confirming suspicions previously entertained of his intrigues with Scindia, ib.; arrives with all his re-maining force at camp of Scindia, and is immediately visited by Scindin and his principal officers, 338, seizes Ambajee Inglia, from whom he extorts promise of fifty lacs of rupees, ib.; retreats precipitately with Scindin, 339; seizes Haptiste, and deprives him of aight, 311; is pursued into the Punjab by Lord Lake, 346; disappointed in his hope of obtaining assistance from the Scikhs, ib.; concludes treaty with the English, 347; districts of Tonk Rampoora given back to, by Sir George Barlow, ib.; permits Ameer Khan to levy contributions, 371; becomes insanc, ib.; encouragement afforded by, to Pindarries, 422; captivated by Teolace Bhye, who obtains ascendancy in the state, and succeeds to the regency, 438; his death, ib. visited by Scindia and his principal officers, 338;

Holtar (Mulhar Rao, son of the former), adopted by Toolsce Bhye, 438; intrigues in the camp of, ib.; disorganization of his army, ib.; negotiations with vakeels from his camp, 439; his person secured by party hostile to Toolsee Blye, who is seized and put to death, ib.; his army attacked and defeated by Sir Thomas Hislop, 440; peace concluded with, ib.; provisions and stipulations of treaty, 441. Hollond, Mr., employed by government of Madras on mission at court of nizam, 155; his instructions and results, ib.; recalled and suspended from the service by the Madras government, but retained at court of nisam, by the government of Hengal, 186; hecomes acting governor of Madras, 1993 refuses to allow Hoplish hattallons to be employed by the raish of Transheurs, except on the past of the lines belonging in that prines, they be jujudeloss conduct with regard to representations of Lappen Sultan respecting the sale of the Burch forte to rain of Transcence, this asperseded in government of Madrae by General

Modowe, 191, Holwell, Mr., assures the command in Calculta, on its abandonment by Mr. Brake, at approach of Socraterally wish, 41; is assured by the nebulo of good breatment to blosself and the rest of the Company's servants, 45; he and they confined in little Hole, where futurings massably period, bug his sufferings, and succeeds to first place in council of Calcutta, and automore led by arrival of Mr. Vancittags, why proposes appears in the government of Herwandstatt, why proposes elange in the government of Hergal, and communicates his plans to Vans start, why his confirming correspondence with Meer Cossim, they declines to concur in assessing in of Meer Jaffer, they appoint for the possession by the Company of Burdwan, Millinger, and Chimpony, to defeat charges of maintaining if rose of Hergal, they declines communicating to the of the above of the confirming to the following them of Hergal, they declines communicating to the of the above of the confirming to the confirming that of the confirming them. to Herr Jather the transfer of the government to Meer Cousins, they encelvable of treaty with Meer Cousins the last act of his official life, 67; after elevation of Meer Cousins, receives 2,70,773 rapes, 84; his signature attached to an offensive letter to Court of Directors, who order his dismissal from the service, which he has resigned before the only arrives in Ind a, 9%.

louir, Major, severely wounded in attack on Sitang in Burmesewar, 475. Booghly, chief factory of the Company in Bergal, 16; Monichund fofficer of Sporal-co-thoriably retires to, 47 ; attacked by the English, the garrison make their escape, its; charge of alleged corruption in the foul-darry of, in which Warren Hastings is accused of participating, 129; fouldar dismissed, its. Hochardroog surren level to the English (Lord Comwallis's war with Toppoo), 193; en.elty exercised by Tippoo towards state prisoners in, ib.

Hoomaynon, son of Baber, extraordinary act of his father, performed in the hope of relieving him from dangerous illness, 5; yields his throne to Sheer, ib.; is restored, ib.; dies from a fall, and is succeeded by his son Akhar, 6.

Hossein Ali, northern circurs committed to his charge by Nisam, and British government agree to aid in establishing his authority, 111.

Hornby, Mr. (governor of Hombay), resolves not to recognize convention concluded with Mahrattas, norto cede territory, 147.

Hosheingabad correted by rajah of Berar, 326.

Hoskin, an English sergeant, gives check to Fuzzul-oola-Khan (officer of Hyder Ali) with insignificant force, and defends mud fort near Caveriporam with great spirit, 116; his report to his officer, ib.; his fate unknown, ib.

Huddleston, Mr., added to commission for treating with Tippoo Sultan, 170; his dispute with Colonel Wilks and Sir Thomas Dallas on a charge preferred against the commissioners of meditating escape, ib.

Hutt Kabul, severe conflicts at the passes of, 581. Hughes, Sir Edward, appealed to by Lord Pigot for protection, demands sale conduct for his lordship to the British ships, refuses to make terms, and throws consequences on those who resisted, 152; employment of his squadron in aid of English army against Hyder Ali, 104; encounters French fleet under M. Suffrein, and explures six vessels, 165; sails to re-lieve Trincomalee, and comes up with French fleet, when a sangularry battle ensues, which terminates without any decisive results, ib.; retires to Trinco-malee, ib.; frustrates design of French upon Negapatam, when two indecisive battles take place, ib.; retires to Madras, ib.

Humberstone, Colonel, lands at Calicut with British force, joins that previously under command of Major Abington, takes command of whole, retreats before Tippoo, and returns to coast, after having austained great losses, 167.

Hume, Mr., his opinion that government should suggest some mode of conducting inquiry into affairs of gest some mode of conducting inquiry into affairs of gest some mone of conducting inquiry East-India Company, 502; gives qualified assent to ministerial bill for government of India, 509; proposes that tenure of Company should be determinable at expiration of ten years, ib.; supports amendment withdrawing discretionary powers as to appointment of council at subordinate presidencies, ib.; supports amendment excluding governor-general from governorship of any particular presidency, ib. ; moves omission of clause restricting residence in India, ib.; opposes establishment of new bishopries, 509, 510; moves amendment for reducing salary of governor-general, 510; opposes motion relating to compulsory main-tenance of Scotch ministers at the presidencies, ib.; supports motion for abolishing salt monopoly, ib.; renews motion for putting an end to Company's government in ten years, ib.; seconds motion of Mr. Fergusson for learing Company by counsel, ib. Humzee Khan, revolt of, against Shoojah Shah, 553.

Huns, progress of their arms, 4.

Hunter, Captain, forces and enters the gate of Tippoo Sultan's garden, takes post and waits for orders, quits garden, and rushes with his men into the river under a heavy fire, 207; makes his way to the reserve under Lord Cornwallis, ib.

Huskisson, Mr., makes statement of trade with India subsequently to abolition of Company's exclusive privileges, 498; opposes Directors of the East-India Company sitting on parliamentary committees, 500; objects to so many county members being placed on parliamentary committees, ib.; contends that the Company have violated the law, ib.

Hussein Ali (officer of Hyder Ali), attacked, defeated, and made prisoner by Colonel Hartley, 194.

Hussein Reza Khan (minister of Oude), his meeting with Sir J. Shore, and results, 226; his retention of office supposed to be a bar to satisfactory arrangement of the state, 264.

Huzareh tribe, hostility of the, 546; attack on the, ib.; the chiefs declare in favour of the British party,

586. Hyder Ali concludes treaty with Lally, 76; his situation requires withdrawal of his troops from Pondicherry, ib.; his origin and advance to manhood, 107; his time divided between the sports of the field and voluptuous enjoyments, ib.; joins his brother's corps as a volunteer, distinguishes himself, advances to the command of freebooters, ib.; his predatory troops and resources increase, ib.; nominated foujdar of Dindigul, ib.; proceeds at head of force to suppress confederacy of polygars, and succeeds, ib.; his scheme for enhancing the number of the apparently wounded, and apportionment of the money furnished to him, the bit of the polygars. ib.; his force augmented and assignments of revenue made for support of the increase, 108; special commissioners deputed to inspect musters, and their rigilance frustrated by him, ib.; suppresses mutiny in Mysorean army, attacks and defeats Herri Singh, presents guns and horses to his sovereign, and obtains district of Bangalore as a personal jaghire, ib.; nominated to chief command of field army, reduces the Mahrattas, and is received with distinction, ib.; in-trigues against his benefactor, Nunjeraj, troops proceed to his quarters and demand payment of arrears, engages to discharge arrears of troops, and obtains further assignments of revenue, 108, 109; conspiracy to reduce his power, 109; is attacked and defeated, implores his patron to resume his place at the head of the state and receive his old servant, ib.; his trea-cherous carcer, ib.; defeats the army of Koonde Row, takes him prisoner, and confines him in an iron cage, 110; created nabob of Sera by Basalat Jung, reduces Sera, ib.; his cruelty, ib.; penetrates to capital of Bednore, and obtains vast treasure, ib.; conspiracy against him detected, ib.; attempts conquest of Malabar, ib.; renders homage to new rajah of Mysore, 111; gives orders to lay waste the country, break down the reservoirs, poison the wells, burn the forage, bury the grain, and drive off the cattle, in order to check the advance of the Mahrattason Mysore, 112; attacks Colonel Smith, and is defeated, 112, 113; gains possession of Tripatore and Vaniambaddy, 113, 114; Malabar chiefs revolt against him, 114; sum-mons principal landholders of Bednore to meet him, ib.; his exactions, ib.; takes different mode of levying contributions in Malabar, ib.; enters Baugalore, 115; is defented by Colonel Wood, with great loss, 115, 110; lays siege to Oossoor, and gains possession of pettah, which he plunders and retires, 116; encounters an English party under Captain Nixon, when his cavalry destroys the whole party, except Lieutenant Goreham, 117; instances of his treachery and want of faith, ib.; appears suddenly before Madras with six thousand horse, 118; sends letter to governor expressing desire for peace, terms of a treaty agreed upon, ib.; plunders Porto Novo and Conjeveram, 157; despatches a force under his son Tippoo to frustrate junction of Sir H. Munro and Colonel Baillie, and breaks up his camp before Arcot, ib.; attacks Colonel Baillie with his whole force, who orders his troops to lay down their arms, 158; cruelty of his troops, ib.; causes his prisoners to be paraded before him, and heads of the slain to be deposi ed at his feet, ib; sufferings of his British prisoners, 158, 159; resumes siege of Arcot, and captures it, 161; attacked and totally defeated by Sir Eyre Coote, 164; his cause unprosperous on coast of Malabar, ib.; joined by French force, withdraws towards Pondicherry, and is defeated by Sir E. Coote, ib.; his death at an advanced age, 167; measures taken thereupon to secure the throne to Tippoo, ib.; and treaties concluded with, 189, 200.

Hyder Ali, commander of the jezailchees, killed, 584. Hyder Khan, governor of Ghuzuee, his defeat and cap:

ture, 543.
Hyderabad, dissolution of the French force at, 235; symptoms of disaffection manifested by troops at, suppressed, 349, 350; outrageous rumours as to the intention of the English propagated and believed, 353; mutiny breaks out at, but subsides, 363; treaties made at, 588; battle of, with the Beloochees,

I.

Ile du Passe, brilliant acquisition of, by parties from British cruisers, 367; intrusted to charge of Captain Willoughby, who uses the fort as means of conquering the Mauritius, ib.; forlorn state of garrison there, they are compelled to surrender, 368.

Imlack, Captain, his engagement with the main force of the French in the Isle of Bourbon, 864.

Impey, Sir Elijah, his leniency towards contempt of court, when proceeding from governor-general and council, 141; made judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, ib.; suggests the necessity of fortifying Hastings's statement of facts by affidavits, 177; con-sents to receive affidavits in Oude, where he had no jurisdiction, ib.; accused by Burke of being Has-tings's instrument in the murder of Nuncomar;

India, British, early history of, involved in obscurity, 1; manners and institutions of, established long becross the Christian era, ib.; origin of the inhabitants, 2; portion of, conquered by Persians, under Darias Hystaspes, ib.; invaded by Alexander, ib.; Greek dominion there did not expire with his life, 3; its early and extensive commerce, ib.; Mahometan invasion of its holief states of the properties of the contraction of the contract sion of, ib.; brief sketch of the more striking parts of its history from the commencement of the eleventh to the middle of the eighteenth centary, 3—16; first appearance of the English in, 16; British fleet despatched to (1744), threatens Pondicherry, 17; Dupleix claims supreme authority over French possessions in, ib.; excitement created at home by affairs of, 125, 179, 180; gross ignorance respecting, prevalent in Europe during the eighteenth century, 146; position of British government in, on retirement of Lord Teignmouth, 230; observations on the feelings of native troops towards the British government, 348; prevalence of system under which the sovereign is held in subjection by a minister, 361; effects of opening the trade with, by act of 1813, 382; personal tax always regarded by the people with dislike, 413; not desirable to disregard claims of rank in, 451; annuity of £630,000 to be charged upon its territorial revenues assigned for payment of the Company's dividends, 504; forma-Dupleix claims supreme authority over French posfor payment of the Company's dividends, 504; forma-tion of a uniform code of laws for, contemplated, 5.7; the best-governed of the dependent possessions of Great Britain, 512; usurious money-lenders in 513, 514; liberty of the press established western frontiers often a subject of great consternation in, upon hearing of the annihilation; consternation in, upon acting of the melitish army, 571; military preparations in, for repairing the estamity, 571, 572; the governor-general's correspondence on Affichanistas and the Angio-Indian armies, 577 et 1991, and his appearance on the safety of the Beittish forces, 241, 242; right of the government to interfere with turbulent neighbouring states, 602, for.

Indus, prosinces bordering on, governed for two centuries by monarchs of Assian and Itselian dynastics, By provinces of west side of, annexed to the domi-nions of Nulle Shah, 164 cousing of the, by the Anglo-Indian forces, 8274 treaty for opening the,

604.

Indus, Army of the, 537, 6331 captures Obnance and Kabad, 542-5411 breaking up of the, 5452 honours conferred on the commanders, $46; its defeats and miserable position in Afficianistan, 250 et seut, fine-roes of its march from, $60 et seut, its utire sestiue. tion, 570; undertakes a second rampage, 271; and returns to India, after basing inflicted signal ren-grance on the treatherous Affetans, $40.

Innes, Colonel, proceeds into Cachar, 467; sickness compele him to enepred active operatione, the Ishorer Singh, tebellion of, $97.

Isle of France, reports that emissaries had been sent thither from Travancure to solicit and in netdlesy, Istalif, capture and destruction of, and, bai.

Jacob, Captain, defeats Shere Afahrered, 25%.

. Colonel, commander of a brigade at timblior, 602. James I. (king of Great Heltain) deputes hir Thomas Rue ambassador to the Mogul court, 6.

James, Commodore, attacks and captures Severnderer and the Island of Bancoot, pirate stations on creat of Concan, 41. Januarus, General, refuses to surrender Island of Java to Sir S. Auchmutz, 374; defeated at Fort Cor-nelius, and with difficulty reaches Hultenzorg, 375; again refuses to surrender, 376; retires to Serondel, the t ble defeat and flight, the his submission, the and aubmission of other confederated princes, 3,79; expedition despatched from, against islands of Italia and Celebes, under General Nightingall, 410; ought to have been retained at the general peace, ih.

Jeetgurh, General Wood attacks redoubt at, and retires, 300.

Jehanara (sister of Aurungzebo), adjusts misunderstanding with the court of Persia, 14.

Jehangir succeeds to the Mogul throne, 6; extraordinary history of his empress, 6, 7; visited by Sir Thomas Roc, an English ambassador, 7; death of,

Thomas Roc, an English ambavador, 7; death of, ib.; is succeeded by his son Shah Jehan, ib. Jelalahad, Sir R. Sale's arrival at, 355; retained by Sir R. Sale in defiance of orders, 571; its heroic defence, 574; destructive carthquake at, ib.; besieged by Akbar-Khan, who is signally defeated, 573; relieved by General Pollock, ib.; Lord Ellenborough's correspondence respecting, 577, 578.

Jenkins, Mr. (afterwards Sir Richard), secretary to the resident with Scindla. 297; performs duties of resident on death of Mr. Webbe, 328; demands explanation of Scindia's advance into territories of rajah of Berar, ib.; continues to remonstrate against rajah of Berar, ib.; continues to remonstrate against nets of Scindia, and threatens departure, ib.; strikes his tents and prepares for departure, but induced, on application from Scindia, to postpone his march, ib.: after further communication with Scindia he departs after further communication with Scindia he departs without passports, 330; his difficulties and contentions, ib.; baggage of the residency attacked and carried off by Scindia's Pindarries, ib.; receives a visit from Scindia, 331; his reply to proposal from minister of Scindia to give his army safe conduct to Bhurtpore, 335; his further intercourse with Scindia and his ministers, 337; his communications with Scindia on the approach of Colonel Martindell, ib.; remonstrates against Scindia's visiting Holkar, 338; his repeated applications for permission to withdraw. his repeated applications for permission to withdraw, 340; departs from Scindia's camp, 311; being realdent at Nampone perceives tendeney of erente there, 411; remonstrates against Appa Sabib commore and removariate against Agia Babib com-minisating with the Pelabasa, the surges march of Belifish troops sowards Raggers, 416, 431; refuses participation in the ceremony of Agia Babiles in-restitute, 412; sends for true of from anticoments, the his interview with Appa Babib interpapted by fieing, they his unimated evoduct in the field, and its effect upon the trope, 419; concents to engrention of arms on conditions, its; receives information of several proceedings of Apps Sabil, evincing hostility to figitish government, 445; arrests the rajah and his confidential ministers, that fiers the relations of Heitish government by treaty, 445.

Jenkins, Lieutenant, killed, 524.
Jenkins, Han Howe, effect of Sciencia, placed under care of Captain Cautacid, continues to maintain inforecaster with l'indiction, 447; his flight, 15,

Areconser und inverse, sais in mens, in learned Han Lar, officer of Beindis, commanding at Assertatin, cumits direct act of hestisty by firing on Company's triops, 452; is recalled from con-trand, and distribution of recall, by , is attached by General Doreton, and repairs to General Divefonds l'endequarters to endeavour to prioure terms, $582 garrison succeeding unconditionally, this file subsequent admission as to intentions of hear his, it. Jessium hingh, Rajpoot chief, defeated by Aumintehe must curps, payers that, needed by Anningthe and Merad, makes his years with the femore and joins him against the job, but at a critical mourest return with all his force, 10; falls suddenly on the rear of his allies, puts the women to the sweet, and apreads panie through the imperial army, ih. : plun-ders Annungeele's camp, and boasts of having defeated the emperie. It i ngens a energyon tence with Histo, intimates his intention of describe Authorises. and urger Data to support his defection, ib,

Jeppeer, engagements of mish of, with the British pareenment, 371.

Jesailchees, defeat of the, 255, 255. Ji.co-jectico, surrender of, to a detachment of irregulars during Nepaul war, 344.

Johnson, Mr., acting limits resident in Oude, letter addressed by, to officer of the guard at Lucknow, Johnston, Captain, assassinated at Kaboot, 356.

Johnston, Commodore, expedition despatched from England under him and General Medows to attack Butch settlements at the Cape, 166; makes prize of Butch vessels, and returns to England with three frigates, ib.

Johnstone, Captain, attacks and drives from their works a party of flurmese advancing from Assam into Cachar, 460.

Johnstone, Mr., shares in the wealth bestowed on elevation of the nabob Noojum-ad-Dowlah, and in opposition to his formerly expressed opinions, receives two lacs thirty thousand rupees, 100; desirous of obtain-ing explanation from committee (consisting of Chye, Sumner, Sykes, Verelst, and General Carnae) on their poners, 101.

Jones, General, receives at Oujeln command of force brought thither from Guzerat under Colonel Murray to act against Holkar, 319; joins General Lake at Bhurtpore, 321; instructed to proceed to Rampoorsh, en route to Guzerat, 339.

Jones, Captain, 22nd native infantry, drives a large body of the Burmese from a fortat the point of the bayonet, 461.

Jones, Sir Harford, negotiates a treaty with Persia, 529.

Joudpore, engagements of treaty of rajah of, with British government, 303; case of rajah of, 332; treaty concluded with rajab of, 441. Jugdulluk, arrival of the British fugitives at, 570; strong force of the Ghiljies defeated at, 583.

Juggut Seit, native hanker, anxious for the support of the British council in aid of his influence with the nabob Noojum-ad-Dowlah, 100. Jyepoor, treaty with rajah of, 411.

Jyetuck, operations against in Nepaul war, and failure, 395; remarks on, 395, 396.

Kabool (or Caboul), Captain Burnes's mission to, 532, 533; march of the Auglo-Indian army on, 548;

triumphantly entered by Shoojah Shah, ib.; critical state of, 555; forces stationed at 555, 556; violent outbreak and massacre at, 556; commissariat fort at, lost and retaken, 557, 558; British defeats, 500 et seq.; negotiations undertaken between the British and the Afighans, 563, 566; evacuated by the British, 560; horrors of the march from, 566 et seq.; infatuation of the British authorities there, 573; General Pollock's recanture of, 584,

Kahun, fruitless attempts to relieve, 547; surrender of,

Kalunga, Major Gillespie marches on 393; unsuccessful attack upon, by the British, in which General Gillespie falls, 393, 394; renewed attack on, by Colonel Mawbey, who fails, 391; evacuated by the garrison, and taken possession of by Colonel Mawbey, 391;

fort of, ordered to be destroyed, ib.

Kamal, plain of, Nadir Shah defeats the forces of the emperor there, and forthwith marches to Delhi,

Kamram, the Afighan prince, murders Futteh Khan, 531; his expulsion, 532.

Kandahar, Russian and Persian intrigues at, 533; occuandahar, Russian and Persian intrigues at, 533; occu-pied by the Anglo-Indian army, 533; Shoojah Shah formally enthroned at, ib.; difficulties of the march to; 538, 539; course of events at, 571; attacked by the Afighans, who are defeated, 572; retained by General Nott in defiance of orders, 576; attacks on repulsed, ib.; failure of relief to, ib.; arrival of General England for relief of, 551.

Karak, island of, occupied by the British, 533.

Karical, expedition fitted out against, 75; surrenders to English, ib.

Karta Secra (Java) surrenders to Sir S. Auchmuty. 376.

Kay, Lieutenant-Colonel, death of, 146,

Keane, Sir John, commander of the Bombay force sent to Afghanistan, 535; assumes chief command in Afghanistan, 537; issues a general order after the capture of Ghurnec, 543; at the court of Shoojah, 343; Lis difficulties at the Khyber pass, 545; created a peer, 515.

Reating, Colonel, commands force destined to act in econoction with Rusemath Row, and mores in direc-tion of Poonah, 144; action takes place, and termi-pates in fasour of the English, but with dreadful loss, ib.

Reation, Colonel H. S., despatched from India with fores to island of Bedrieuer, of which he takes pos-session, 2013 proceeds to Island Bourbon, lands, gains niranteere ever enemy, and returns to Rodnever, $51,355; renine bis men for renowed attack on Isle of Beneter, Bif; explains his views as to mode of ex-rations, ib. ; lands at Island of Bourbon, 207; island surrendered in, il

Fairments on F.

Relat, captured by the British under General Willeline, 514, 518; fort of, presented by the enemy, 517; resecuted by General Nett, 519.

Reliett, Lieutenant (B.N.), destroys number of European State (B.S.)

more war-boats, 400, 450.

Relly, Captain, commands column at sings of Dosg.

319.

Colonel, Espossorem Neganiers of position on the Henryhurpore Elle, 409; successfully amade two stockades near Dalla, 410. Henre dice, successful attack on Bormers position at, 410; successful attack on Bormers position at, tony, Lieutenni-Colorel, Indu fie mie imet m Grelleter Ilabema was, mies Naryda Vellederj.

4 1: various arrache upon Prilità posts at 67, Kencedy, Colondi, left to follow Colondi Gillagie with trope and gaze to Velore, on commin of maning there, 217.

Region (negles of Daylin) dequisits a long to he light Lavrence protesting against solution of Francis to Hajor Lavrence protesting against solution of Francis to Hajor Lavrence, 25; receives eviens from Daylin to follow the Estalsh under Major Lavrence, when he is a stracked, defeated, and make proceeding.

Retty, Licotanant; (of the 38th), killed at Planguage, 450.

Retty, Licotanant; (of the 38th), killed at Planguage, 450.

Retty, Licotanant; (of the 38th), killed at Planguage, 450.

Retty, Licotanant; (of the 38th), killed at Planguage, 450.

Retty, Licotanant; (of the 38th), spreament of East-landin Lavrence, and is the condens of the strategy of the plan laid by Numeral for Licotana in require to the plan laid by Numeral for Licotana in require to the plan laid by Numeral for Licotanant presention of Trabinopyly, 34; his answer.

to the demand of Nunjeraj for surrender of Triching.

poly, ib. Khelat-I-Ghiljie relieved by Colonel Wymer, 581; attacked by the Ghiljies, ib.

Khilgy, house of, succeeds to the throne of Delhi, 3; terminates with a prince named Mobarik, ib.

Khirudmund Khan selected for office of manager of the affairs of Furruckabad, but refuses to accept without promise of support by British government, 272; his unfavourable representations of the young nahoh, ib.; his communications with Mr. Henry Wellesley, ib. Khizi obtains the government of Delhi, and exercises it as the nominal vassal of Tamerlane, &.

Khoord, Kabool Pass, contests at the, 554.

Khooshgul, surrender of, to the British, 195, Khoosrow Mullik (last prince of the Ghuzni dynasty) treacherously seduced into the bands of Mohammed Ghoory, 3.

Khyber Pass, Colonel Wade's difficulties in proceeding through, 513; hostile attacks of the inhabitants, 516; terror of the Sikhs at the idea of passing, 571.

Khyrpoor, a state of Sinde, 587. Kilbooras, a tribe of Sinde, 587.

Killianore (Travancore), batteries carried at, by British, 361.

Kilpatrick, Major, despatched from Madras to Bengal with troops, on the government of the former presi-dency receiving news of the fall of Cosembazar, 45; his detachment suffers dreadfully from long confinement on awampy ground at Pulta, 46; mores forward to attack French posts at battle of Placer, 23; re-ceives from Meer Jaffler three lacs in addition to a previous present of one lac, 25.

Kinneir, Major, proceeds to reduce Gingee, 21; his force unequal to attack the fortress, or maintain posrorce unequal to attack the forerast, or maintain pro-session of passes, ib.; retires to give the enemy lattle, and is severely wounded, ib.; his troops give way and retreat, ib.; his death, ib. Kirkpatrick, Captain J. A., demands from the nizsm full execution of article of treaty for disbanding French corps, 235.

secretary to government in political department, 275; appointment rescinded by Court of Directors, ib.

Kishindors, son of the Dexan of potential of Dacca, finds refuge in Calcutta, 42; Sooraj-ov-Doubla to-quires him to be given up, which is refused, 42, 43. Eisten, Dupleix appointed by HoxuSar Jung governor of graninger south of that river, 21. Kistnagherry surrenders to Colonel Smith during was with Hyder Ali, 115.

Ener, Captain, compels the emperor to withdraw from Pates, 5:5; attacked by the for far of Puresal, who is defeated, ib.

£ 17. Define, the freshooten of Chromes, 188; destroyed by Higher Madaren, ib.; emperiment contest with the tri.

Econde Ecor (Eralmin) alde Egolm Allin die manage-ment of die gredikong troops. It; andate de remonal of Nanjemi from goven, 118; abgulates whit the right of Mysters with ries of statisting des alementes troops, 118; Casens for of stalling upon Egolmic troops, this; describ to have considere at Egolmic troops, this is alonged to have considere at Egolmic troops, this describ to have considered to Egolmic troops, this descrip statistical and defeated, 118;

Evelulation, Olonel Union and a first in the state of the same of the product of the same of the product of the same of the name and Eules, they give the piace Etc plane. In East' strength of Scientia'. He county invoked by an anny of Americania. It is despited marked of Reference and Americania. In East-roll-Dear makes Debt the war of a Religious gramment of Americanian on the Seat of Religious County, the series of minors communing with Americania strengths, in East, which is the Dia East, which is desired to which Oland Records troops into the town, 3121 treaty concluded with rajuh of, 441.

Rumann, correspondence exercised on by the British government and the chiefe of that province, 472; evacuated by the Nepaulese, 402; province of, decelered permanently annexed to British dominions, th. Kummer-no-Been attempts to intercept 3fa) or Cos 3 ver. when a server action ensure, in which the Layl sh are victorious, 201, 2021 bamega retaken by, 2001 provided for by heatenments of jaglier, 217.

Runka, remindar of, submits to the ligitish authority, 310.

liurnoal occupied by the British, and the rajabileposed,

Rusps, detachment of plasm's force mosed to a realist ferm, 224,

Kurrachee, capture of, 519.

Kurreem liban, l'indargie, persont el, 1723 fireta Nagpute and Joins Beind a, phandens Brindia's genry in the Perran, and offers his services to Helkar, they offered an nathum by Ameer Ilban, where he despote present of cretain districts, in which he is configured by Beindia, and maile a nusauh, 122, 427; file estrutations aplendeur, 123; solutie private favoure from beindia, by whom he is seened and imprisoned, that plitaine hie release and possession of more extensive tennituries, 4244 his camp attacked and dispersed, he seeks protection of Ameer Khan, is inveloted to Itol. kar's camp, but effects like excape, it, a seeks mercy of the Inglish, 455, Kutnah, town and fort of, taken possession of by Clive, Kutwal abandoned to the English by Meer Cossim, pr.

I,

La Bourdonnais, Prench squadron commanded by, appears in Indian seas, 17; captures Madres, ib.; treaty concluded by, with the English, declared null by Dupleix, 17, 1st. Inhar attacked and taken by Captain Popham, 149.

4

Laing, Lleutenant, killed, 561.
Lake, General (a'terwards Lord Lake), affairs of Hin-Ake, General (a tereards Lord Lake), allotte of tim-dostan committed to, under Marquis Wellesley's plan of political and military operations, 2x5; marches from Cawnpore, 2-6; moves to attack of Perron's force, which flies before him, it,; takes possession of Coel, and makes preparations for at-tacking Alyghur, 257; cause of delaying the attack, ib; Alyghur falls to him, ib.; Perron applies for, and obtains from him, permission to retire to the Roitish territories. ib.; attacks and nuts to flight British territories, ib.; attacks and puts to flight force under Louis Bourquin, who surrenders, 283; emperor congratulates him, and solicits his protection, 289; has an audience of the emperor, ib.; titles bestowed upon, by Shah Allum, 290; resumes his march, ih.; aummons Agra, when garrison surren-ders, 291; marches in pursuit of Mahratta force, attacks and entirely defeats them at Laswarec, 292; remarks on bis battle, 201; various treaties concluded by, 303, 304; takes a position to enable him to restrain Holkar's operations, 310; his negotiation with Holkar, ib.; receives orders to commence hostile operations rgainst Holkar, ib.; sends a detachment, under Colonel Monson, to protect the city of Jyenaghur, and follows Holkar, ih.; provides a detachment, under Colonel Don, for attacking Tonk Rampoora, ib.; determines to march his troops back into quarters, ib.; his orders to Colonel Monson, and subsequent conduct, 314; arrives at Delhi, 316; resolves to proceed in pursuit of the enemy's cavalry in the Doab, ib.; relieves Colonel Burn at Shainlee, ib.; breaks up Holkar's camp, and disperses his cavalry, 317; follows Holkar across the Jumna, and arrives at Muttra, ib.; instructed to remonstrate with the rajah of Bhurtpore, ib.; takes town and fort of Deeg, 318; breaks up his camp before Decg, and marches to Muttra, 319; marches to Bhurtpore, 820; commences siege of Bhurtpore, ib.; failure of repeated attacks on that place, 320-324; enters into negotiation with rajah of Bhurtpore, 323; concludes treaty with the rajah, 321; quits Bhurtpore, 338; is elevated to the peerage, ib.

—, Lord, receives letter from Scindia, and his answer, 338, 339; instructed to discontinue pursuit of Holkar pu i fir 'nite, bije una'n demanite erfener of the memlors of Billich few lengs, hely befores to receive pro-posals from Boli, he till the Billish residency is yes leased, 344; withholds from Keindis the letter from Matgrita Westerley, the gremmettates agriest abandone Ing tiglize princes a ear the Junion, 211, 211; concurs with Marquis Commanies with general to gann of the bild. 3451 Arfeen teamphilungen ed ebeturntner articles and exact by the factory that in to teraty wish doubles, and temonsteates, hits engaged in fillowing the fight of Holkin late the limpah, the personateares gainst electoral by acticies approved to treaty with lin's ar, 2474 present of arms of entitle of libraries and depresent his to be presented to spen negotiation for severing elefenties alianess with papelie of Ithurts free and Marbery, they remembers with effect, they completes perotistices and quits fedia, 34%.

fale, Majer, wron fed at the little of Laurane, Latty, there's de, appointed a verme general of all the French je cerest ir a und retal liebmiente in India, AD's proces is to Postscherry, they enters bear is of Fort. 31, Panil, Past attacks the first, which surrenders, they makes a triumpt at enter into l'on-lieferry, bug takes the field to enforce garerent of a bind given to Chunda natife by hing of Tanjure, they effects of his apply white the expirit of Tanjier, this concludes treate with givernment of Tanjier, this fresh misunpleretambings urise, this he theeatens to transport king and family as slaves in Mauritius, they exects batteriers an I rishes a breach, this discovers that his army are nearly destitute of both ammunition and provision, calls council of war, and makes prepara-tions for breaking up his camp, they everyes the modified treathers of Monackine, they is informed that d'Achie determines to return immediately to the life of France, and ineffertually endeavours to change his purpose, but his expedition to Arcet, bit puts force in motion for reduction of Madeus, and gains recession of the Black Town, this easts blaine on livery for not beinging up the governor's regiment to resist sally of the English, ib.; erects hatteries and commences fring against Madeas, ib.; is harassed by the English force without the walls, and despatches force to attack Major Calliand, 62, 61; raises siege of Madras, 63; gases up command to Soupires, and retires to Pondicherry, 61; on hearing of departure of Major Brereton for Wandewash, leaves Pondi-cherry and advances to Coverpauk, ib.; his distress and unpopularity, ib.; retires into cantonments, ib.; fires a hundred guns in honour of the repulse of Major Brereton at Wandewash, and transmits accounts of it to every quarter, 70; believed by the soldiers to have amassed and secreted great wealth. ib.; disburses considerable sum from his own chest to satisfy mutineers at Wandewash, ib.; recalls troops from Seringham and other garrisons, 72; forms design of attacking Conjereram, but is disappointed in finding no store of provision, ib.; plunders and fires the houses, and proceeds to Triestore, 72, 73; marches with part of his force for Wandewash, 73; attacks and takes the town, and commences operations against the fort, 71; puts himself at the head of his earalry, and attacks that of the English, but is repulsed, ib.; defeated in general action by Colonel Coote, 75; is received at Pondicherry with invective and abuse, 76; concludes treaty with Hyder All for the service of a body of Mysorean Troops, ib.; makes an attack on English before Pondicherry, which fails, the abusiness of the manualty of the service of a body of Mysorean Troops, ib.; makes an attack on English before Pondicherry, which fails, a chamber of the manualty of the services. an actack on Engine nerior Potationerry, which fairs, ib.; gloominess of his prospects, threatened with famine, expels native inhabitants of Pondicherry, 77; sets free prisoners on parole on account of his inability to supply them with food, 78; sends flay of true, with gaseonading memorial, offering to surrender, ib.; departs for Madras amidst insult and execra-ambton, Captain, assumes command of Colonel Dun-lop's column at storming of Seringapatam, 210.

Lane, Mujor, his defence of Kandahar, 576.
Lanedonne, marquis of, mores rejection of report of committee of House of Lords on East-Indian resolutions (1813), 389; gives notice of motion in House of Lords for select committee on foreign trade, 497: presents petition from Manchester to House of Lords, praying the opening of the trade to the East Indies, 498; presents petition from Glasgow, praying for free trade to China and India, 502; moves concur-

in opposition to Mahomet Ali by Mahomet in opposition to areas.

s of, 100; siege of, and fall, it.

dura (Indian Archipelago), French fortress in, reanced by Captains Harris and Pellew, 376; sultan of, higha Nemiou (Burmese commander) carried in a litter from point to point to sustain the energy of his men, Maharajah of Gwalior; see Scindia, and Bhajeerut Rao. Maharajpoor, battle of, 605; losses sustained, 606.

Mahé, and dependencies on coast of Malabar, surrender of, 79; surrenders to Colonel Braithwaite, and fort blown up, 154.

Maher Merza Khan (officer of Hyder Ali) attacks Arcot, and effects an entrance, 161.

Mahmood, Sultan, son of Subooktugeen, reigns at Ghizni in Affghanistan, and becomes founder of Ghiznividian dynasty, 3; first Mahometan prince who established a solid power in India, ib.; defeats the rajah of Labore, enriches himself with plunder, and stipulates for payment of annual tribute, ib.

Mahmood, the Afighan prince, 528, 531; establishes himself on the throne, 531; his cruelty, ib.; his expulsion, 532.

Mahomed Ameen forms project of assassinating those administering the government of Hyder Ali after the death of that prince, and assumes that power in the name of his second son, 167; plot detected, and conspirators seized, ib.

Mahomed Bey, his plundering band destroyed and dispersed by General Campbell, 299, 300.

Mahomed Esa, leads the insurgents in disturbances at Barcilly, 415. Mahomed Kooli, assists the Shazada, 80.

Mahomed Reza Khan, selected for office of chief minister to the Nabob Noojum-ad-Dowlah, 99; manifests his gratitude towards those to whom he owed his appointment, 101; complaints of nabob against, 102; exonerated from charges preferred against him, to Negapatam, 62; arrives at British camp before Pondicherry, and concurs in the indulgence given to the fugitives from that place, 77; assisted by government of Madras in reducing rebellious vassals, 106; Madura held in opposition to him, attacked and taken, ib.; his disputes with the sovereign of Tan-jore, 107, 122; peace concluded, 122; obtains aid of English in punishing certain polygars, ib.; renewed war with Tanjore, ib.; country conquered for him by the English, ib.; his opposition to the restoration of Tanjore, 15;; objects to negotiate with the nizam, and proposes to send a vakeel to Basalat Jung, 154; impoverished by purchasing services of Europeans, and his army mutinous, 161; death of, 224; evidence of his perfidious correspondence with Tippoo Sultan found at Seringanatur, 256

633

found at Seringapatam, 256. Mahrattas, their origin and early history, 12, 15; English aid a prince of that nation in endeavouring to recover throne of Tanjore, 18; reduce Chunda Sahib, ib.; body of, engaged to assist Mahomet Ali, but re-main inactive during Clive's defence of Arcot, 24; arrive at Aycot, attempt to enter the town, have re-course to plunder, fire the houses, and retreat, 25; aid Clive against Rajah Sahib, 26; large body of, despatched from Trichinopoly to join the French, 35; hear of defeat of Kerjean by the British, and proceed to congratulate Mahomet Ali, ib.; Hyder Ali suffers in contests with, 110; attack Mysore, and advance to in contests with, 110; attack Mysore, and advance to Sera, 111; they propose terms to Meer Sahib, which are accepted, ib.; fort and district surrendered to, ib.; Hyder Ali purchases their retreat, ib.; body of, taken into English service, 115; attack Hyder Ali, 122; Mahomet Ali disposed to favour them, ib.; negotiations with, by Sir Robert Harland, ib.; conduct the emperor to Delhi, who transfers to them the districts allotted for his support by the British government, 124; Salsette, Bassein, Kenery, Hog Island, Elephanta, and Auranjee occupied by, 142; government of Bombay offer Broach and Fort Victoria to, in exchange, 143: reinforce the garrison nomination to college at Halleybury, $164 Maritariaren, Colonel, communitee at Kandahar, $724 opinnous respecting the appointment if prerence- defeats the involve energy, $77. general, 519.

M.

Blocan, Captain, his representation of the effect of the destruction of det retment at Hames, 470, Macon, expedition fitted out against from Bengel, prillement equipled, (Lineon et. p. 192 fe, gleer nimuloned, and displeyence of the Court of 194

treines, 351. discorting, Led, perrinos of Afgiere, stelles there, prevails on Sie E. Corte to enterrus to keep the army together, 164; his disputes with fir Prer Coute, 167; attacks Newspann without expedited the latter, they opposes plan of flastings for sucrendring ineffere eiters to the Bisses on condition of his farnishing a tody of executy, 17t; obtains from Nah h of Arcot on secipoment of executes of the Carnatic for support of wer, th. ; his trafetance to futefinnent of Herryl in various instances, they prosigns possessiont of Maders, the parties at Calcutta from Maifras, and presides appointment of gneret, nepeneral, which he declines, this lie arrival in Ringland, they enters into engonymetrication with chairs man and deputy-chaleman of Past-India femy any, they his representation of abuses, they his views communicated to ministers, they is united to an interceive with Mr. Pitt and Mr. Fundas, they his desire for English pretage, the Standard presses pay-inent of subsoly feet each, 3242 assaled at mil-night by armed force, 5041 his unspension, 3654 is requested to return to his duties, the Machean, Major, Joins Colonel Stewart at the slege of Mallignum, when their united attack obtains gre-account of the town, 449.

Colonel, his services in the Burmere war, 451, 454, Metaskill, General, his march to Rabsel, Ski; captures Isratif, 283.

Met'rae, Captain, killed, 859.

McClrengh, General, conducts expedition against Chedula, effects landing, earties accelade, island autrendered, 464; left in Rangoon to abide further orders, 469. Macdonald, Colonel R., made knight companion of the Bath, 546.

al'Donall, General, dispatched on a mission to the court of Candy, 303; requests permission to construct a road through the king's territories, which is refused, ib.; marches from Colombo with a force about two thousand strong, ib.; concludes treaty about two thousand strong, ib.; concludes treaty with Mooto Sawmy in Caudy, ib.; agrees to invest Pelime Talaure with supreme authority, provision being made for Monto Sawmy, 306; departs for Colombo, ib; marches from Colombo, and arrives at Candy, 307; seized with fever and compelled to depart, ib.; appointed commander-in-chief at Madras, but not to a seat in council, 362; endeavours to extend ill-feeling in the army, 362; his violent conduct, and arrest of Colonel Monro, 361; embarks for Europe, leaving behind him inflammators order, and formally removed from office of tory order, and formally removed from office of commander-in-chief, lb.; lost on his passage to Europe, 364.

M'Dowall, Major, surprises and puts to flight a large body of Pindarries, 426.

M'Dowell, Colonel, lends a party in attack on Watty-goon, and is shot through the head, 473.

Macgregor, Captain, fall of, at Talneir, 444.

M'Guire, Mr., after elevation of Meer Corim to the musnud, receives present of 1,80,000 rupees and 5,000 gold mohurs, 83; influence of, employed in vain to induce Ram Narrain to render accounts, 89.

Machery, stipulations in treaty with rajah, 303; portion of territory proposed to be assigned to rajah of, by Blarquis Cornwallis, 343.

Muckenzie, Captain, his bravery, 257. Muckerell, Colonel, death of, 559.

Muckerell, Colonel, death of, 559. Mackintosh, Captain, killed, 561. Maclaren, Major, commander at Ghuzuce, destroys the Kojuka, 541.

defeats the hirading enemy, 275.

Marie an, Colonel, frimgered with Mullerity to tender testeration of Watten Hostings, 1321 state of freing en his zenral in fingland untermetile in Harners, the enneged in serve of interese, the publicance letter to Court of Theert, to tradegory Hartingale preferentiers, ib. 4 to queets end as to be muticulty, the fortesee the fee great to gove Court satisfaction, and programs to submil payors to inspect on these diversities of these diversities, this Afr. Richerts, Afr. Lance, and Afr. Receive to examination as to he wath-rity, 174; his acts repulsized by Hastleys, this his intelgulou and ausesupulous eliaraeter, 136

Martend, facel, repercents to provener of Madess (Mr. Whitefill: the proposity of taking measure to propose Hailer Ali, 186. Marier d. Cul mel, sent by ble Hyre Goote, to take comright of geninant of Column Humbereinne's force reacts attack of Tippen, and Is frined by his Edward Hughes with geinf trement, 167.

Merlevel, Colonel Alexander, Joine Colonel Gillespie at Patront ang. 252.

Marle d, tuterel William, distriges enemy from villarge of Cotas and Nageroull (Textaneree, 351; ext. tice fort of St. Denis flute of Routhen) at point of happenet, 3:64 detached to attack batteries in Mauritius, 370. Maelecci, Major, Lis gallant conduct at Alyphue, where he is we unded, 207.

Milerd, L. rotenant, of Henral engineers, 542.

Mac Morine, Colonel, takes presention of fost of Chou-rayt with (Nartine) and adjoining towns, 185. Machaelten, Mr. W. H., entrop at the court of Shoolah Stab, at Mathol, 513, 513; create is Laronet, 543. as a prisoner, $20; appointed to the government of Homlay, $23; his artistic at Kabool, $29; his negotiations with the Allgham, and his assassination, $55. Mar Nell, Colonel, veits Azim-pi-Bowlah, 260.

McNell, Mr., his treatment by the Persian court, $30. Macpherson, Mr. John, appointed writer en Makras establishment, 166; is domissed the service, it.; select committee of the He we of Common inquire into his appointment, they conflicting legal opinions on the effect of his dismissal, the; appointed member of council of Hengal to supply accuracy caused by retirement of Mr. Barwell, and eventually becomes successor of Hartings, the; his alleged secret service. 197; enforces necessary reforms, and restores credit of Company's government, ib.; his character, ib. Macrie, Colonel, commands the force composing the storming party at Deeg, 318, Madeira, discovery of, 7.

adge, Captain, commander of Fort M'Dowall (Ceylon), on receiving intelligence of the massacre of Madge, the garrison of Candy, evacuates the fort, and retreats towards Trincomalce, 303. Madhoo Singh quarre's with his brother Doorjun Saul, attempts to seize fort of Hunrtpore and the person of his brother, 481; retires to Deeg, repulses detachment sent against him by Doorjun Saul, and is joined by hody of Mahrattas, ib.

Madrus, its establishment as a station of the East-India Company, 16; attacked and taken by the French, 17; possession of, promised to the nabob of the Carnatic by Dupleix, ib. ; treaty concluded by La Bourdonnais on its surrender declared null by Dupleix, ib.; pro-perty of the English seized, and those who refused allegiance to the French sovereign required to depart, ib.; governor and principal inhabitants marched to Pondicherry, ib.; restored to the Euglish by peace of Aix la Chapelle, 18; besieged by Lally, 61; garrison make a sally, ib.; Lally raives the siege, 63; sudden appearance of Hyder Ali before it, 118; Mr. sunden appearance of Hyder All before 11, 118; Mr. Dupré, member of council, proceeds to camp of Hyder, and concludes treaty, ib.; violent disputes at, and arrest of the governor, Lord Pigot, who dies under restraint, 152, 153; monstrous corruption there, 156, 161; dissatisfaction in the army, 362; discontent inflamed by commander-in-chief, 363; remarks on, 361, 361; presidency of, not deprived of council, 152. council, 512.

Madura (south of India), failure of Captain Calliaud in attempt to take it by surprise, 57; its surrender, 59; held in opposition to Mahomet Ali by Mahomet |

Isoof, 106; siege of, and fall, ib.
Bladura (Indian Archipelago), French fortress in, reduced by Captains Harris and Pellew, 376; sultan of, joins the English, ib.

Maha Nemiou (Burmese commander) carried in a litter from point to point to sustain the energy of his men, Maharajah of Gwalior; see Scindia, and Bhajecrut Rao. Maharajpoor, battle of, 605; losses sustained, 606.

Mahé, and dependencies on coast of Malabar, surrender of, 79; surrenders to Colonel Braithwaite, and fort blown up, 154, Maher Merza Khan (officer of Hyder Ali) attacks Arcot,

and effects an entrance, 161.

Mahmood, Sultan, son of Subooktugeen, reigns at Ghizni in Affglianistan, and becomes founder of Ghiznividian dynasty, 3; first Mahometan prince who established a solid power in India, ib.; defeats the raish of Labore, enriches himself with plunder, and stipulates for payment of annual tribute, ib. Mahmood, the Affghan prince, 528, 531; establishes himself on the throne, 531; his cruelty, ib.; his expulsion, 532.

Mahomed Ameen forms project of assassinating those administering the government of Hyder Ali after the death of that prince, and assumes that power in the name of his second son, 167; plot detected, and conspirators seized, ib.

Mahomed Bey, his plundering band destroyed and dispersed by General Campbell, 299, 300.

Mahomed Esa, leads the insurgents in disturbances at Barcilly, 415. Mahomed Kooli, assists the Shazada, 80.

Mahomed Reza Khan, selected for office of chief minister to the Naboh Noojum-ad-Dowlah, 99; manifests his gratitude towards those to whom he owed his appointment, 101; complaints of nabob against, 102; exonerated from charges preferred against him, ib.; reports prejudicial to character of, reach Court of Directors, 123; orders sent to seize him, ib.; his acquittal after tedious inquiry, ib.; Court of Directors, satisfied of his innocence, direct his restoration to office, 132; complaints against, by Hoberik-ul-Dowlab, 137; is removed from his charge, ib.; dis-tribution of his salary by nabob, ib.; is favourably noticed by Court of Directors, 138; his restoration an article in the compact between Hastings and Francis, 135, 139.

Mahomed Sadig attacks General England at the Bolan Pass, 576.

Mahomed Shereef's fort, abortive attack on, 558; captured by the enemy, 564.

Mahomed Ufzul Khan, son of the Ameer of Kabool, 542.

Mahomet Ali Khan, government of Arcot transferred to, 20; his camp attacked by the French, and his precipitate flight, ih.; endeavours to make terms with the French, 22; small body of troops sent to his assistance by the British, ib.; his pecuniary distress, 26; his troops threatening to desert him, he applies 20; ms troops threatening to describe that a superior of the Mysore for aid, ib.; rajah of Tanjore declares in his favour, and despatches troops to his assistance, 27; urged by Major Lawrence to proceed to reduction of unsubdued parts of the Carnatic, 31; objects to fulfil agreement for transfer of Trichinopoly to Mysore, ib.; professes himself willing to give up Trichinopoly when placed in quiet possession of his other dominions, ib.; his conference with Morari Row, ib.; makes over to Mysorean general revenues of Seringham, and receives Mysorean troops into Trichinopoly, 32; marches northward, accompanied by British 32; marcues normward, accompanied by British force, ib.; succeeds in obtaining partial recognition of his authority, 34; applies to British authorities for additional force to reduce Gingee, when Major Kinneir is despatched for that purpose, but fails to effect it, 34; congratulated by Mahrattas on successes against Kerjean, 35; makes application to the English for means of reducing Chingleput and Covelong, when a small force is furnished him, 36; his army broken a small lorce is lumished him, 30; his army broken up, 37; accompanies Major Lawrence to Tanjore, 39; English continue to aid him in collecting his revenues, and reducing his vassals to obedience, 41; his embarrassments, 57; desirous of quitting Madras when French appear before it, and departs with family to Negapatam, 62; arrives at British camp before Pondicherry, and concurs in the indulgence given to the fugitives from that place, 77; assisted by government of Madras in reducing rebellious vassals, 106; Madura held in opposition to him, attacked and taken, ib.; his disputes with the sovereign of Tanjore, 107, 122; peace concluded, 122; obtains aid of English in punishing certain polygars, ib.; renewed war with Tanjore, ib.; country conquered for him by the English, ib.; his opposition to the restoration of Tanjore, 151; objects to negotiate with the nizam, and proposes to send a vakcel to Basalat Jung, 154; impoverished by purchasing services of Europeans, and his army mutinous, 161; death of, 224; evidence of his perfidious correspondence with Tippeo Sultan found at Seringapatam, 256. to Negapatam, 62; arrives at British camp before Ponfound at Seringapatam, 256.

633

Mahrattas, their origin and early history, 12, 15; English aid a prince of that nation in endeavouring to recover throne of Tanjore, 18; reduce Chunda Sahib, ib.; body of, engaged to assist Mahomet Ali, but remain inactive during Clive's defence of Arcot, 24; main matthe during cive's ucleance of Arcti, 24 arrive at Arcot, attempt to enter the town, have recourse to plunder, fire the houses, and retreat, 25; aid Clive against Rajah Sahib, 26; large body of, despatched from Trichinopoly to join the French, 35; hear of defeat of Kerjean by the British, and proceed to congratulate Mahomet Ali, ib.; Hyder Ali suffers in contests with, 110; attack Mysore, and advance to Sera, 111; they propose terms to Meer Sabib, which are accepted, ib.; fort and district surrendered to, ib.; Hyder Ali purchases their retreat, ib.; body of, ib.; Hyder Ali purchases their retreat, ib.; body of, taken into English service, 115; attack Hyder Ali. 122; Mahomet Ali disposed to favour them, ib.; negotiations with, by Sir Robert Harland, ib.; conduct the emperor to Delhi, who transfers to them the districts allotted for his support by the British government, 124; Salsette, Bassein, Kenery, Hog Island, Elephanta, and Auranjee occupied by, 142; government of Bombay offer Broach and Fort Victoria to, in exchange, 143; reinforce the garrison Victoria to, in exchange, 143; reinforce the garrison of Taunah, ib.; treaty concluded with, by government of Bombay, by which previous treaties are ratified, ib.; refuse compliance with Colonel's Upton demand of Salsette and Bassein, 145; another treaty concluded with, when Salsette and the islands are confirmed to the Company, ib.; intrigues of the Cheva-lier St. Lubin with, ib.; expedition from Bombay surrounded by, 146; convention concluded with, securing peaceable return of British army, 147; Sal-sette and all recent acquisitions from Mahratta states sette and all recent acquisitions from manatata states to be restored, ib.; attack the rans of Gobud, who is assisted by a British force, 148, 149; seek destruction of Colonel Hartley's army, but are unable to gain any advantage, 149; spirits of, elevated by their success in compelling General Goddard to retreat, 150; treaty of peace with, ib.; consent to the surrender of conquests of Hyder All, from nabob of Arcot, 151; their right to choot under treaty between the British quests of Hyder An, from nabot of Arcot, 151; their right to chout, under treaty between the British government and the nizam, 1768, 189; attack and plunder the garrison of Darwar, retiring under stipulation, 195; junction of, with British army under Colonel Stuart (war with Tippoo), 198; fall upon fugitives from Hooliordroog, and plunder them, 199; their continued co-operation with the English against Tippoo secured by a loan ib. their same under Tippoo secured by a loan, ib.; their army, under Purseram Bhow, proceeds to attack Dooradroog, and Purseram Bhow, proceeds to attack Dooradroog, and fails, but marches to Chittledroog, and plunders generally, 204; manifestations of their perfdy and bad faith at Samoga, 206; their demands for chout on Tippoo and nizam, 223; attack nizam, who is forced to purchase peace on ignominious terms, ib.; circumstances of, at the commencement of the administration of the Marquis Wellesley, 231; power of, at Surat, 251; defeat of, by General Lake, at Laswaree, 292, 293; war with, and observations upon the policy of the Marquis Wellesley, in reference to, 340; considerable body of, attracted to Bhurtpore by disturbances there, 481; their contests with the British in Gwalior, 605, 606. (See Appa Sahib, Bajee Row, Berar, Guicowar, Holkar, Nagpore, Peishwa, Sattara, and Scindia.)
Maitland, Captain, drives enemy from covered way at Paligant, and pursues fugitives, when the garrison, Paligant, and pursues fugitives, when the garrison, struck with panic, surrenders, 170.

Maitland, Sir F., naval commander at Kurrachee,

Jaffier to be the fittest man to lend him aid in his government, ib.; is apprehensive of violence from the nabob, ib.; is scated on the musnud, and receives congratulations from English authorities and natives, 88; his offer of twenty lacs to the select committee, ib.; makes donation of five lacs to the Company, ib; his makes donation of nee lacs to the Company, 10; his large gifts to the select committee, ib.; applies himself to replenish his treasury, ib.; is jealous of the friendly intercourse between the emperor and the English, proceeds to Patna, is invested by the emperor with a khelaut, and undertakes to pay tribute, 89; demands settlement with Ram Narrain, ib.; bent upon destruction of Itam Narrain, offers bribes to Alajor Carnac and Colonel Coote to aid his purpose, ib.; he scires Ram Narrain, confiscates his effects, and subjects all his dependents to amereement, 90; refuses compliance with demand for payment of twenty lacs to the Company, 91; disputes with about private trade, ib.; agrees with Mr. Vansittart on body of regulations, which he orders to be acted upon immediately, ib.; engaged in an expedition against Nepaul, and reterns defeated, 92; orders collection of all custom duties to cease, 93; is disinclined to receive deputation from council of Bengal, ib.; his guards stop boats laden with arms for British troops, which he refuses to return unless the troops withdraw from Patna, or Mr. Ellis be removed from the factory there, ib.; endeavours to induce British troops to desert, and acts of hostility follow, ib.; dismisses Mr. Amyatt, but detains Mr. Hay as hostage, ib.; makes Mongheer his capital, but quits it on approach of English, 94; murders Ram Narrain, the bankers Scit, and others, ib.; thereteens to put to death his Euronean prisoners. ib. ; threatens to put to death his European prisoners, and is threatened by Major Adams with the ven-geance of the British nation if the prisoners sustain harm, ib.; murders his prisoners, ib.; his army pursued by the English to the banks of Caramnassa, he crosses the river, and seeks refuge in territories of Oude, 95; reduces to obedience the dependents of Bundlecund, ib.; he assumes habit of a devotee, but throws it aside at request of vizier, 97, 98; his troops mutiny for pay, and he is compelled to appease them by compliance; is plundered by the vizier, but secretes a number of jewels, 98; escapes from vizier, 101.

Meer Futteh Ali, of Sinde, 587 (see Futteh Ali).

Meer Juffler aspires to soubalidarship, 50; selected by Sooraj-oo-Dowlah for command of large number of troops to reinforce his army near Plassy, 51; afraid to decline command, proceeds to obey his orders, ib.; returns to capital, gives audience to Mr. Watts, agrees to terms of treaty with English, and swears to observe it, ib.; is deprived of his command by Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, charged with being engaged in conspiracy with the English against the soubahdar, 51, 52; is summoned by Sooraj-00-Dowlah to conference, and refuses to attend, 52; exchanges professions of reconciliation and fidelity with Soorajlessions of reconciliation and fidelity with Soorajoo-Dowlah, and swears to adhere to his engagement with him, ib.; his dubious conduct causes anxiety to Clive, 52, 53; during battle of Plassy is sent for by Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, implored to forget differences, and conjured to defend the throne, 54; promises accordingly, and advises suspension of battle, ib.; insists on recall of Mohun Lal's troops, ib.; his division observed by Clive with suspicion.
and on retreat they keep apart from soubahdar's army, ib.; addresses letter to Clive, acquainting him with advice given to his master, ib.; his endeavours with advice given to his master, ib.; his endeavours to stand well with both parties, and his doubts as to his reception by the English, ib.; his fears allayed when introduced to Clive, ib.; led by Clive to the musuad, in the hall of audience, at Moorshedabad, ib.; his liberality to the members of the British government, 55; difficulties of his government relieved by Clive, 79; confirmed in authority by sunnua from Delhi, 80; his court the seene of intrigues, ib.; is menaced with invasion by the shazada, ib.; his troops in a state of mutiny, ib.; alarmed by advance of the shazada, ib.; receives favours from the emperor, 81; offended at the Dutch, and stops their trade, ib.; enters into private negotiation for the introduction into Bengal of a Dutch force, ib.; exwith advice given to his master, ib.; his endeavours introduction into Bengal of a Dutch force, ib.; expresses displeasure at the proposed armament, and demands aid of the English, 82; visits Clive at Calcutta, ib.; receives the Dutch authorities, and makes disingenuous communication to Clive, ib.; concludes treaty with the Dutch through mediation of Clive, 83; regards the approaching departure of Clive from India with alarm, ib.; grants permission to Meer Cossim to visit Calcutta to arrange plan for campaign against the emperor, 86; visits English governor (Vansittart), 87; confesses that age and grief incapations. pacitate him from struggling with his difficulties, ib.; declares Meer Cossim the fittest man to lend him aid, ib.; is apprized of the views of the English, and threatens to resist and abide his fate, ib.; is content to stipulate for preservation of life and an allowance for his maintenance, ib.; declines the name of prince when deprived of authority, and asks permission to retire to Calcutta, 88; council determine on his retire to Calcutta, 88; council determine on his restoration, 92; proclamation issued, declaring him sovereign of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, ib.; differences occur in arrangement, but council disposed to yield in slight matters in regard to the nabob's concessions in respect of trade, ib.; conditions of treaty with, 93, 94; his death, 99; competitors for his throne, ib.; legacy bequeathed to Clive by, 104.

Meer Niser Alee (Tittoo Meer), originator of disturbances in Baraset 467.

ances in Baraset, 487. Meer Roostum, chief of the Ameers of Khyrpore, 592; surrenders his power, 593; flight of his family, ib. Meer Ulzul, his flight from Ghuzuce, 543.

Meerpore, a state of Sinde, 587; ameer of, defeated,

594; Sir C. Napier takes possession of, 595. Mecrun devotes Sooraj-00-Dowlah to death, 55; encamps near Chinsura, to the terror of the Dutch, 83; receives Dutch deputies, and treaty agreed upon, ib.; accompanies Colonel Calliaud for Patna with a numerous army, 84; refuses small body of cavalry to Colonel Calliaud for pursuit of the emperor, ib.; again refuses the like assistance for pursuit of foujdar of Purneah, 85; is killed by lightning, ib.; various vicinated the small of the state of the stat tims of his cruelty, ib.; his death concealed from the army till its arrival at Patna, ib. Meester Corselis (Java), port of, assaulted by Colonel Gillespie, and taken, 375.

Michrab Khan, the ruler of Kelat, 544; his hostility to the British, ib.; is slain at the storming of Kelat, Melvill, Lieutenant, his relation of the sufferings of the British prisoners of Hyder All, 158.

Melvill, Mr. J. C. (Secretary to the East-India Company), his explanation of the commercial operations of the Company, 501; his lucid evidence with regard to claims of territory and commerce in the transactions of the Company.

tions of the Company, 503.

Melville, Lord, moves for papers connected with removal of Sir George Barlow, 356.

Mengee Maha Bundoola, his success in Arracan, and its effects on the court of Ava, 467.

Menzies, Major, a volunteer at the first siege of Bhurtpore, death of, 322.

Mergui attacked and carried by Colonel Mills, 466.
Metcalfc, Mr. (afterwards Sir C., and Lord), conducts negotiation, and concludes treaty with Runjeet Singh, 362; treaty with Ameer Khan negotiated by, 434; gives instructions to Captain Tod, for opening negotiation with Toolsee Bhye, regent at camp of Holkar,

Sir C., appointed to residency of Delhi, 481; reports and documents connected with affairs of Bhurtpore referred to, 482; elaborate statement of his opinions on general question of interference, and specific measures to be adopted with regard to Bhurtser. pore, 482, 483; authorized to maintain the succession of the rightful heir at Bhurtpore, 484; his views as to final settlement of Bhurtpore adopted by govern-ment and embodied in resolution, 484; does not succeed in settling affairs of Bhurtpore by negotiation, ib.; his communication to governor-general concerning Doorjun Saul, and the causes of his finding support, ib.; issues proclamation denouncing pretensions of Doorjun Saul, and declaring intention of the British government to support Bulwunt Singh, ih.; his interview with Lord Combermere, ib.; does not allow communications of Doorjun Saul to interfere with the progress of the army, 484, 485; provisional governor of India, 517, 518, 522.

Middleton, Mr., receives one lac twenty-two thousand five hundred rupces on the accession of Nujum-ad-

. Sal

Dowlah to the musnud of Bengal, 100; appointed British resident at court of vizier, 127; communications pass between him and the governor-general, which are not submitted by the latter to his colleagues, ib.; recalled, and ordered to bring with him the whole of the correspondence, 129; brings fifteen lacs in payment of part of the debt of the vizier, ib.; re-appointed resident at Oude, but appointment resisted by Glavering and Francis, 132; again appointed, having been previously displaced in favour of Mr. Bristow, 177; obtains authority from vizier to seize Kellah at Fyzabad, residence of begum, ib.; relinquishes office, his place supplied by Mr. Bristow.

Atiles, Colonel, despatched with expedition to coast of Tenasserim, 466; captures fort of Tavoy, ib.; attacks and carries Mergul, and returns to Rangoon, ib.; his forces defeat Burmese army near Rangoon, ib.; his forces defeat Burmese army near Rangoon, 467, 468. Minchin, Captain, commandant at Calcutta, his disgraceful flight on the approach of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, 43.

linto, Lord, appointed governor-general, 358; his arrival at Calcutta, and state of the country, ib.; proceeds to Madras in consequence of the disturb-Minto, proceeds to Madras in consequence of the disturnances in the army of that presidency, 363; crisis past before his arrival, ib.; his operations against the Mascarenia islands, 364, 370; his measures for reducing the Dutch settlements, and wise policy, 372.—379; establishment of British power in the East without a rival the crowning act of his administration, 379; brief notice of various diplomatic affairs of his administration, ib.; his resignation, return to Europe, and elevation to an earldont, ib.; his death, ib.; and elevation to an carldom, ib.; his death, ib.; remarks on his administration and character, 389; reference to his proceedings in regard to the Nepaulese, 390.

Mir Jumla, a Persian, becomes resident at the court of Kooth, sovereign of Golconda, and obtains the highest command there, 8; conducts wars in the Carnatic, ib.; throws himself upon Aurungzebe, then commanding for his father, Shah Jehan, in the Deccan, ib.; his desertion, followed by imprisonment of his son and confiscation of his wealth, ib.; acquires the confidence of Aurungzehe, and exerts his influence to bring about a war with Kootb, ib.; his nominal com-

· command of army invading Beejapore, 9. Mirza Mahmood (Sooraj-oo-Dowlah) succeeds Aliverdi

Khan, 42. (See Sooraj-oo-Dowlah.) Mobarik-al-Dowlah succeeds Syef-al-Dowlah as nabob of Bengal, 123; complains of conduct of Mahomed Reza Khan, claims to be admitted to the management of his own affairs, and reminds governor-general that the power of the Company is derived from his ancestors, 137; his request complied with, ib.; informed of wish of Court of Directors for restoration of Mahomet Reza Khan to the office of manager, 138.

Moffatt, Captain, of the Ganges, engaged in attack on French squadron under Admiral Linois, 302. Mogul empire, origin of, 4; in a state of dissolution in alogul empire, origin of, 4; in a state of insolution in the early part of the eighteenth century, 16.

Mohammed (eldest son of Aurungzebe), enters Golconda, 8; horrors perpetrated by him, ib.; marries the sovereign's daughter, ih.; pursues Shooja, who flies in the direction of Bengal, 11; enamoured of daughter of Shooja, ib.; abandons the cause of his father, and passes over to Shooja, ib.; disappointed in expectation of being followed by his army, ib.; obtains the hand of Shooja's daughter, ib.; is dismissed by Shooja in consequence of suspicions raised by Aurungzebe, ib.; is placed in confinement at Gwalior, and dies in obscurity, ib.

Mohammed Ghoory, his conquest in India, 3; leaves behind him incredible wealth, ib.

Mohammed Toghluk carries off the whole of the in-habitants of Delhi to Dowlatabad (formerly Deogur), 4; resolved upon making Dowlatabad the chief seat of Mahometan empire in India, ib.; Bengal revolts, and his possessions in the Deccan are wrested from him, ib.; his cruelties, ib.; his death, ib. Mohun Lal (dewan of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah) ordered, on suggestion of Meer Jaffier, to recall troops to camp at the battle of Plassy, 54.

Moira, Earl of, succeeds Earl Minto as governor-general, and his arrival at Calcuth, 389; his statement of the prospect of affairs on his arrival at Calcutta, 389, 390; threatens rajah of Nepaul with immediateresort to hostile measures, 291; his instructions to Colonel Bradshaw, ib.; further attempt to effect settlement with Nepaul without record to arms, 391, 392; takes measures for commencing war, and his plan of operations, 392; proposes series of political arrangements in aid of military operations, ib.; expresses discontent and surprise at failure of Colonel Mawbey at Kalunga, 391; his disantisfaction with General Martindell, 395; orders the Terrale of Bootwul and Shiraz to be desolated, 400; his displaceaure called forth by expent hefalling the his displeasure called forth by events befalling the division under General Marley, 401; his frequent attempts to corrupt the enemy's officers, 403; for-wards instructions to Colonel Bradshaw with reference to negotiations with Gujraj Misser, 407; makes further effort to restore relations of peace by letter to rajah of Nepaul, ib.; his extreme disappointment at miscarriage of attempt to negotiate, ib.; transmits project of treaty to Colonel Bradshaw, 408; declares his intention not to make any attempt to renew negotiations, ib.; in a short time directs negotiations to be re-opened, ib.; his anxiety for peace leads to proposed relaxation of terms, ib.; ratifies treaty with Nepaul, and prepares at same time to make further concessions, 408, 409; elements of commotion every-where prepared when he undertakes the government of India, 416. (See Hastings, Marquis of.) Molle, Captain, his gallant conduct at storming of Seringapatam, 239.

Monackjee (Tanjore officer) inveigles Chunda Sahib, and causes him to be murdered, 30; withdraws from Trichinopoly, 32; commands force in aid of Major Lawrence, 40; attacks French camp before Madras by treachery; fails, 60.

army to, 94; quitted by Meer Cossim, ib.; cruelties of Meer Cossim there, ib.; capitulates to the English, ib.; news of its fall reaches Meer Cossim, who thereupon murders two hundred Englishmen, 94, 95.

Monichuhd, governor of Calcutta, attacks English force under Clive, but is repulsed, and files, 47; mores successively to Calcutta, Hooghly, and Moorshedabad, Monro, Colonel (quartermaster-general, Madras), put under arrest by General McDowall, but released by government, 363,

Monson, Major (afterwards Colonel), English force under, despatched from Conjeveram appears before Coverpauk, which compels garrison to surrender, 67; proceeds to Arcot, marches back to Conjeveram, and leaves garrison at Coverpauk, ib.; leads a division in attack on French in Wandewash, 69; receives commission of Lieutenant-colonel from government, 77.

Colonel, proposes to retire to Madras, 77; command of troops before Pondicherry surrendered to, by Colonel Coote, ib.; his differences with Colonel Coote, ib.; attacks redoubts and French at Oulgarry, with partial success, ib.; wounded and incapacitated for service, ib.; appointed member of council of Bengal, 127; supports General Clavering in calling for correspondence of Hastings with Middleton, 128; suggests recall of Middleton, and is supported by Clavering and Francis, ib.; moves that Nuncomar be called before the board to substantiate charges against Hastings, 130; his death, 132.

Monson, Captain, intrusted with attack on western hill

fonson, Captain, intrusted with attack on western hill of Savandroog, which is carried by storm, 203.

— Colonel, leads attack on Alyghur, and obtains possession of it, 287; detached by General Lake to protect the city of Jyenaghur, 310; detachment under, keeps the field, 311; is joined by Colonel Don, moves in the direction of Kotah, and is there joined by a body of troops in the service of the rajah, ib.; advances to Mokundra pass, and thence to Hinglaisghur, which he captures, ib.; advances fifty miles beyond Mokundra pass, becomes alarmed, and determines to retire to Mokundra pass, ib.; hears of Holkar's attack on Lieutenant Lucan's cavalry, and forms in order of battle for their support, 312; learns that the cavalry are destroyed, resumes his march, are the cavalry are destroyed, resumes his march, are who is repulsed, ib.; continues his retreat to Kotah, who is repulsed, ib.; continues his retreat to Kotah, reaches anonumera pass, 10.; is attacked by Hoikay, who is repulsed, ib.; continues his retreat to Kotah, and thence to Tonk Rampoora, ib.; is joined by reinforcement despatched by commander-in-chief from Agra for his relief, ib.; continues retreat to Banas river, encounters the whole force of the enemy, whom he repulses, 313; resumes march on retreat, alandons baggage, and arrives at Kooshallghur, ib.: discovers correspondence between native commissioned officers and Holker, ib.; marches to Biana pass, ib.; those of his detachment who escape the enemy arrive at Agra, ib.; command of the British troops at the victory of Deeg devolves on, ib.; intercepts letters addressed to Holkar by the rajah of Bhurtpore and others, 318; commands party in one of the assaults on Bhurtpore, 322.

Montressor, Colonel, takes post at Sedasseer, 236; his brigade surrounded by the army of Tippoo Sultan, ib.; enemy put to flight by assistance of General Stuart,

Moobarik (last prince of the dynasty of Khilgy) murdered, 3. Moodeem Khan (officer of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah) killed at battle of Plassy, 53.

Moorhouse, Colonel, his death at attack on Bangalore, 194; his high character by Colonel Wilks, and honours paid to his memory, ib. Moorsaum taken and dismantled, 427.

Moorshedabad, British obtain possession of, 94.

Mootejil, lines of, stormed by British, 94.

Mootto Sawmy, lawful inheritor of the throne of Candy, escapes from prison, and claims protection of British government, 305; placed under the care of Colonel Barbutt, 306; arrives in capital of Candy, and conrention concluded with, by British authorities, ib.; deprived, by new arrangement with Pelime Talauve, of nearly all that had been professedly secured to him, ib.; accompanies British troops towards Trincomalee, 307; demand of Candian chiefs for his surrender, ib.; is delivered up, marched to Candy, and put to death.

Morad (son of Shah Jehan) deceived by professions of his brother Aurungzebe, junction of their forces de-termined on, 9; saluted as emperor by Aurungzebe, who solicits permission to make a pilgrimage to Mecca, 10; seized by Aurungzebe, and placed under restraint, ib.

Morari Row (Mahratta chieftain) consents to act as a mediator between Mahomet Ali and the government of Mysore; conference, 31; produces treaty, and calls upon Mahomet Ali to fulfil his engagement, ib.; is presented by Mahomet Ali with 50,000 rupees for his services, 32; solicits pardon of the men employed to assassinate Captain Dalton and Kheir-o-Deen, 33; departs for Pondicherry, 37; harasses British troops under Major Lawrence, 38; his camp attacked by Hyder Ali, 115.

More, Captain, watches motions of Basalat Jung, 72.

Major, defeat of, by Mysorean force, 76.

Mornington, Earl of (afterwards Marquis of Wellesley), appointed governor-general, 230; his qualifications for the office, ib.; his arrival at Madras and at Bengal, 233; directs attention of General Harris, governor of Madras, to the collection of a force on the coast to meet any emergency, ib.; concludes new treaty with Nizam, ib.; directs government of Madras to raise detachment to co-operate with British troops at Hyderabad against the French force there, ib.; his attempts to restore triple alliance defeated, 235; proceeds with operations against Tippoo, ib.; addresses various letters to Tippoo, ib.; arrives at Madras, and receives answers from Tippoo, ib.; resolves to accompany negotiation by the movement of his army, ib.; appoints General Harris to comof his army, ib.; appoints General Harris to command the army about to march into Mysore, ib.; capture of Seringapatam, death of Tippoo, and complete conquest of Mysore, ib.; his disposal of the conquered country, 244—246; makes magnificent provision for the family of Tippoo, 245; principal chiefs and officers conciliated, ib.; articles of partition treaty of Mysore concluded by, with nizam, 245, 246; explanation of his views in undertaking the protection of the new state of Mysore and reserving. protection of the new state of Mysore, and reserving to East-India Company the powers of interposition in its affairs, 247; articles of subsidiary treaty of, with rajah of Mysore, 246, 247; having completed his great work, he returns to Bengal, 248; takes measures for settling government of Tanjore, 249; places adopted heir of the deceased rajah on the throne, 250; assumes entire civil and military administration of Tanjore, splendid provison being made for the rajah, ib.; treaty of Tanjore ratified by, ib.; assumes civil and military administration of Surat, 252; created Marquis of Wellesley, 253. (See Wellesley, Marquis.)

Morris, Colonel, gallant conduct of, at Bhurtpore, 321. Morrison, General, army of 11,000 men under command of, assembled at Chittagong, 471; his operations and difficulties, 471, 472; his capture of Arracan, 472; his official account of the attack, ib.

Mostyn, Mr., appointed resident at Poona after Colonel Upton's retirement, 145; is embarrassed by the intrigues of the Chevalier St. Lubin, ib.

Mozusfar Jung is supported by Chunda Sahib, 19; resolves to surrender himself to Nazir Jung, under promises to surreturer ministra to the person secured and treated with rigour, ib.; on death of Nazir Jung is saluted viceroy of the Deccan, 21; bestows large as satured vicerby of the Decean, 21; bestows large sum of money and valuable jewels on Dupleix, ib.; sets out for Golconda, escorted by French European and sepoy troops commanded by M. Bussy, ib.; attacked by Patan nabobs, who, by aid of a few French troops, are defeated, ib.; is killed in pursuing the fugitives, ib.

Mulwagul, possession of, obtained by the English. 115; returns into the hands of Hyder Ali, ib.

Mundela, fort of (Nagpore), demand for its surrender evaded, 445; storming and surrender of, ib. Munny Begum appointed guardian of infant nabob of Bengal by Warren Hustings, 123; examination of her receipts and disbursements, and large sum unaccounted for, charges Warren Hastings with re-ceiving money from her, 129; suspended from office of guardian, and charge conferred on Goodias, 130; share of Mahomed Reza Khan's salary allotted to.

Munro, Major, succeeds Major Carnae in command on the frontier of Oude, and finds the army in a state of mutiny, 95, 96; his strong measures, 96; prepares to take the field, ib.; dispatches Major Champion to dislodge party of the enemy, ib.; marches towards Buxar, arrives there, is attacked, when the enemy give way and retire, 96, 97; his humanity after the battle, 97; receives letter from emperor congratulating him, and soliciting protection, ib.; emperor seeks an interview with him, ib.; marches in direction of an interview with him, id.; marches in direction of Benarcs, when the emperor constantly pitches his tent near British encampment, ib.; refers the offer of emperor to Calcutta, ib.; his instructions, ib.; arrives at Benarcs, and receives envoy from vizier with proposals of peace, 98; insists upon Meer Cossim and Sumroo being delivered up, ib.; large sum offered by vizier if demand be abandoned, ib.; hesioges Chunarchur, fails in two assults, converts besieges Chunarghur, fails in two assaults, converts siege into blockade, retires to Benares, relinquishes his command, and quits India, 99.

General, advances against Pondicherry, cuts off communication with surrounding country, breaks communication with surrounding country, breaks ground and opens fire, 154; capitulation proposed and accepted, ib.

Sir Hector, retained at Madras to secure the benefit of his military judgment, 187; arrives at Conjeveram, takes command of force five thousand strong, to be joined by detachment under Colonel Baillie, ib.; informed of Colonel Baillie's doubt of being able to effect a junction, despatches to Colonel Baillie a detachment under Colonel Fletcher, ib.; defers moving to the support of Colonel Baillie till too late, 160; returns to Conjeveram, and arrives at Chingleput, ib.; is joined at Chingleput by Captain Cosby, and compelled by deficiency of food to make a forced march to St. Thomas's Mount, ib.; proposes delay in acting on orders suspending Mr. Whitehill, governor of Madras, 161.

Munro, Major-General Sir T., his sentence upon the ill-judged parsimony of Madras government, 199, 191; his account of the conduct of Tippoo's infantry at the battle of Arikera, 190; remarks on the attempt of Dhoondia Waugh, and its possible results, 253.

Munro, Brigadier-General, occupied in reduction of peishwa's country, south of Kistna, 442. Murray, Colonel, directed to march from Guzerat to cooperate against Holkar, 310; becomes suddenly alarmed, and resolves to retreat, 312; arrives at Oujein, and takes possession of the whole of Holkar's territories in that quarter, 319; resigns his command to Major-General Jones, ib. Murray, Colonel Macgregor, his statement as to the conduct of the Arabs at Talneir, 444; passes the covered with wounds, ih.

638

Murteza Khan selected by Dupleix for nabob of Arcot, 38; his previous life and his avarice, ih.; proceeds to Pondicherry, and is installed in his new dignity, which he in a short time abandons and retires to Vellore, ih.

Murzafa Beg defends Conjeveram, surrenders, and is slain by Mahamet Isoof, 61.

Muscovy, in early history a petty and obscure prince-dom, 530; her rising importance under Peter the Great, ih. Mustapha Beg offers solitary instance of fidelity in the garrison of Vellore, 350; his statement of the designs of the conspirators disregarded, and massacre follows, ib.

Muttra abandoned by the British, 315; recccupied by a force under Colonel Don, ib.; Colonel Monson retires to, 317; the wounded at the battle of Deeg, and the ordnance therein captured, deposited at, ib.

Mysore, its rulers afford and to Mahomet Ali, 27; dis-closure of the price at which the aid was purchased, 31; means by which Hyder Ali rose to supreme power there, 107; conquest of, by the British, completed, 243; infant prince of the ancient house of, placed on the throne, 245; articles of partition treaty and aubsidiary treaty with the rajah, 245—248. (See Hyder Ali Khan, and Tippoo Sultan.)

N.

Nadir Shah, his origin, 15; falls suddenly upon the forces of the Emperor of Delhi, puts them to flight, and enters the capital, 15; inhabitants rise upon invaders, when scenes of tumult and violence ensue, ib.; gives orders to his troops to slaughter, when 8,000 perish, and the city is pillaged and set on fire, ib.; seizes the imperial treasures, and levies contributions on the inhabitants, ib.; annexes to his dominions the provinces on the west side of the Indus, 16; withdraws from Delhi, ib.

Nadir Shah, the regenerator and sovereign of Persia, 530. Nagore and its dependencies purchased by the Dutch, 122; arrangement made for its surrender, ib.

Nagpore, a powerful Mahratta kingdom, 16; hostility of the rajah (Appa Sahib) to the British, 434; probable motives of his conduct, ib.; rajah's intrigues with the peishwa, 431, 435; he attacks British, and is defeated, 435, 436; seeks to negotiate, and surrenders himself, 436; capture of guns at by the British, and evacuation of the city, 436, 437; provisional engagement with rajah of, 437; continued success of British arms in, 437, 438; narrative of progress of events resumed, and diplomatic proceedings with Appa Sahib, 444; affair at Mundela in, 446; continued treachery of the rajah, who is arrested and defeated the state of the same posed, ib.; Mundela surrenders, ib.; surrender of Chouragurh in, 446. (See Appa Sahib, Berar, and Pursagee Bhooslay.)

Nagrakote and Somnaut, temples of, destroyed by Mahmoud, 2.

Nahun falls to the English, 395.

Nalagurh, surrender of fort of, and depôt established at,

Nannce, arrival of the Anglo-Indian army at, 540.

Nanning (Malacca), dispute of the British government with Paugholoo of, 491; Pangholoo subdued, and tranquillity restored there, ib.

Napler, Sir Charles, assumes chief military command of Sinde, 591; his summary proceedings and new regulations, ib.; defeats the ameers of Sinde, 594; enters the capital of Lower Sinde, ib.; his contests with Shere

Mahomed, ib.; everywhere victorious against the Sindians and Beloochees, 595, 596.

Nash, Licutenant, ordered to Coimbatere, 201; is wounded, 202; summoned to audience with Tippoo, and released on mission to British commander-in-chief, 210, 211.

Nasir Khan, defeat of, 550, Nassau, Fort (Java), surrenders to the English, 373, Nattes, Lieutenant, killed-in the breach at Malligaum, 449.

Nawaub Jubbur Khan, his proposals at Ghuznee rejected, 513.

wicket at Talneir, 444; his danger, ib.; is rescued Nawung Thurin (Prince of Sunset) defeated by Sir A. Campbell, seeks safety in the jungle, 474, 475.
Naylor, Mr. North (Company's solicitor at Calcutta), rule against granted by Supreme Court, and made ab-solute, 140; he is committed, ib.

Nazir Jung (second son of Nizam-ool-Moolk), seizes his father's treasure, and is recognized as his successor, 19; enters the Carnatic, and seeks assistance of the English, which is afforded, ib.; differences between him and the English, 20; proceeds to Arcot, ib.; takes the field, and procures supplies with difficulty, ib.; sickness in his camp, and intrigues formented by the French, ib.; force under command of M. de la Touche, advances from Gingee upon his camp, 21; falls by the hands of a treacherous dependent, ib.; Hyder Ali benefits by confusion ensuing on his death, 107.

Nearchus despatched with about ten thousand Greeks and Phenicians to explore the navigation between the Indus and Euphrates, 2.

Veave, Mr., his striking description of Torce, 491. Negapatam taken by the English, 165.

Nellore, Colonel Forde proceeds to, in aid of Mahomet Ali, 57.

Nepaul, unsuccessful expedition to, projected by Vereist, 122; dispute with, 389; various encroachments from, 369, 390; negotiations, 391; further outrages, ih.; preparations of governor-general for war with, 391, 392; renewed overtures for negotiation, and attempts to corrupt Nepaulese commanders, 393; various events of the war, 393-406; negotiations and conclusion of treaty, 406-409; court of Katmandoo refuse to ratify treaty, 409; renewal of hostilities, ib.; treaty ratified, ih.; review of the origin and operations of the war, ib.

Nerbudda, force stationed permanently on the, in consequence of movements of Ameer Khan, 371.

Nerungin Lall, agent of Holkar, seized at Muttra, 318.

Nesbitt, Lieutenant- Colonel, commands storming party on Sevandroog, 202.

Newport, Sir J., recommends delay (renewal of Com-pany's term of government 1813), 387. Newton, Major Thomas, commanding on Sylhet fron-tier, attacks Burmese with success, 460; withdraws his troops from Cachar, ib.

Nicholl, Captain, attacked by body of troops belonging to Scindia, 313; disappointed of storming Scindia's battery by retreat of the enemy, ib.

Nicolls, Colonel, successfully attacks the heights and town of Almorah, 403.

General, ordered to march to Bhurtpore, 484; leads column of attack at Bhurtpore, 485.

Jasper, commander-in-chief,

Nightingall, General, succeeds General Gillespie in chief command in Java, and commands expedition against rajahs of Bielling and Boni. 410.
Nixon, Captain, with small force encounters Hyder Ali, and entire party destroyed with exception of one officer, 117.

Nizam Ali, his enmity to Bussy, causes dewan of Bussy to be murdered, 67; takes the field, advances to Hyderabad, ib.; restored to government of Berar, ib.; negotiations of English with, in regard to the northnegouations of English with, in regard to the northern circars, 111; advances to attack Mahomet Ali, retires, and makes friendly overtures to British governor, ib.; advances to form junction with English on frontier of Mysore, is bought off by Hyder Ali, deserts the English, and unites his forces with Hyder Ali, 112; defeated by Colonel Smith, takes to flight, 113; opens secret communications with the colonel Smith is a morthward and a contraction. Colonel Smith, ib.; moves northward, sends an officer to the English camp, and treaty concluded, 114; arrangement made with, for transfer of northern circars, 154; called upon by government of Madras to compel his brother to dismiss the French from his accompet his prounce to dismiss the French from his service, ib.; mission to, from government of Madras, and its results, 156; 156; his disastisfaction with negotiations between British government and Basalat Jung, 156; proceedings of Lord Cornwallis for effective settlement with, in respect of Gunton, 188; engaged in war with Tippoo Sultan, and receives propogal from Timoo for uniting families he interproposal from Tippoo for uniting families by inter-marriage, ib.; new engagements with, precluded by law, 189; arrangement with, made by Lord Cornwallis, ib.; his army assembles near Hyderabad, to co-operate with English against Tippoo, 194; territories restored to, by treaty with Tippoo, 216; attacked by Mahrattas, and compelled to purchase an ignominious peace, 223; dispenses with services of English battalions, 224; his attachment to the French, ib.; rebellion of his son Ali Jah, ib.; English adventurers encouraged to enter his service, ib.; effects of Mahratta intrigues with regard to, ib.; his anxiety for closer connection with British govern-ment, 231; new treaty concluded with, by Earl Mornington, ib.; state of French force in his service, ib.; his hesitation to comply with demand for dis-persion of French force, 235; ultimately consents to take necessary measures for the purpose, ib.; conclusion of new treaty with, 260, 261. Nizam-ool-Moolk, death of, 19; his power gained by usurpation, ib. Noojum-ad-Dowlah, second son of Meer Jaffler, raised to the throne of Bengal, 99; unfavourable report of the conduct of those who placed him on the throne made to the Court of Directors, 102; holds a poonah, at which Clive assists, 104; dies of malignant fever, and his brother, Spef-ad-Dowlah, succeeds, ib.

Noor Jehan, her extraordinary history, 6, 7.
Noor Mahomed, Ameer of Sinde, 590; his death, 591.
Norman, Lieutenant, falls in attempting to scale works at He du Passe, 367. Noton, Captain, left with detachment at Ramon, to watch the enemy (Burmese war), 466; makes a movement in advance, ib.; various disasters attend his progress, ib.; retires to Ramoo, ib.; his difficulties, ib.; finds it necessary to retreat, 467; his troops throw away their arms and disperse, ib.; he and nearly all his officers killed, ib.

Nott, Major-General, commander of brigade in the Affghanistan campaign, 535; left in command of the Bengal force, 544; recaptures Kelat, 550; maintains possession of Kandahar in defiance of orders, 576; governor-general's instructions to, 578 et seq.; his victorious march to Ghuznee and Kabool, 581; his conflicts, ib.; recaptures Ghuznee, and effects its destruction, 585.

Nufoosk pass, 547, 548, Nugent, Captain, killed, 583.

Nuncomar bought by Omichund for the English, 50; Meer Jassier's attachment to, 98; power committed to, ib.; his power transferred to Mahomed Reza Khan, ib.; influence of his station, his cunning and activity, ib.; applies to emperor for sunnuds to con-firm Noojum-ad-Dowlah in the succession, ib.; means adopted by Warren Hastings to conciliate him, 123; prefers charge of bribery against Hastings, 129, 130; proceedings instituted in Supreme Court against, for conspiracy, 130; apprehended on a charge of forgery, found guilty, and hanged, ib.; excitement occasioned by his fate, ib.; his deportment after sentence, and at the time of execution, 131; remarks on his care and on the suproceed connent after sentence, and at the time of execution, 131; remarks on his case, and on the supposed connection of Hastings with it, 131, 132; said by Hurke to have been murdered by Hastings through the hands of Sir E. Impey, 184.
Nundedroog, attack on and capture of, by the English, 200; disaffected feeling among the troops stational them.

tioned there, 354.

Nunjeraj (Mysorcan commander) demands Trichinopoly from Maliomet Ali, 31; his confirmed design to obtain possession of Trichinopoly, 32; attempts to corrupt Mahomet Ali's troops, ib.; pursues his object, and projects assassination of Captain Dalton and Kheir-o-Deen, 32, 33; denies all knowledge of the meditated assassination, and interposes for the pro-tection of his instruments, 33; renews attempts to corrupt the fidelity of the garrison of Trichinopoly, ib.; his agents seized and executed, ib.; seeks assistance of a Neapolitan, named Poverio, who apprizes the British commander in the fort, ib.; his meditated attempt on Trichinopoly frustrated, 34; removes his camp, and endeavours to revenge himself on Poverio for his disappointment, ib.; formally demands surrender of Trichinopoly, ib.; his messengers reproached with the treachery of their master ib. Tables professions of friendship for the Eng. ter, ib.; makes professions of friendship for the English, but intercepts their supplies, 37; treated as an enemy, and camp attacked by Captain Dalton, ib.; attacks British troops, and cuts to pieces nearly all the troops defending it, ib.; his cruelty, ib.; his complimentary reception of Hyder Ali, 108; gains knowledge of intrigues of Hyder Ali, and shrinks from contest with him, ib.; makes arrangement for descent from power, presents himself to troops, and informs them that misfortunes of his government had determined him to retire, ib.; is visited by Hyder as a suppliant, and consents to make common cause with him, 109.

Nurunjee, her influence, 597. Nusseer-ood-Dowlah, king of Oude, 523. Nusseer-oo-Deen Hyder, king of Oude, 523. Nutford, Captain, death of, at battle of Deeg, 317.

O'Brien, Major, proceeds to Mundela (Nagpore war), 445; his communications with the killadar, ib.; is attacked and fired upon by a detachment from the garrison of Mundela, ib.

Ochterlony, Colonel (afterwards Sir David), left at Delhi as resident, 290; endeavours to provide for the defence of the city, 315; his remarks on the merits of Colonel Burn and his troops, 316; division of or Colones Burn and his troops, 310; division or army destined to act against Nepaul committed to his command, 392; doubts expediency of governor-general's political arrangements, ib.; furnished with draft of proclamation declaring intentions of Bri-tish government with regard to the chieftains of tish government with regard to the chieftains of ancient hill principalities expelled by Goorkhas, ib.; proceeds to Roopoor, ib.; receives frequent communications from Ummer Sing Thappa, 393; receives secret instructions from British government to encourage advances of Ummer Sing Thappa, ib.; receives further instructions of like character, acts upon them, and is repelled, ib.; his opinion as to the probability of Ummer Sing retreating, and on other points connected with the war, 396; advances on enemy, and makes preparations for attack, 397; his force strengthened, 398; his movements and those of the enemy, ib.; perseverance and energy with which he pursued his purposes, ib.; passes the river Gumber, and takes up position on its right river Gumber, and takes up position on its right bank, ib.; steady and satisfactory progress of his arms, ib.

General, pursues substantial and brilliant career of success, 401; particulars of his movements, ib.; signs convention, 405; suspension of arms by, ib.; ordered to take command of division before Jyetuck, 406; his services rewarded with grand cross of in supporting the wish of rajah, 479; removes doubt as to relationship to Buldeo Singh of the proposed successor, ib.; apprizes government of his intention of complying with wishes of rajah, and carries intention into effect, ib.; adopts measures for assembling tion into enect, io.; anopts measures for assembling force to maintain the rights of the young rajah of Bhurtpore, ib.; his acts disapproved by governor-general, ib.; ordered by governor-general to recall his proclamation, ib.; charged by government with netting on imperfect and unsatisfactory information, 479, 480; receives mission from Doorjun Saul, 480; his answer requiring the transfer of the infant rajah to his care, ih.; his warmth of renly to government. to his care, ib.; his warmth of reply to government, ib.; receives proposals from mother of Buldeo Singh, ib.; returns to Delhi, ib.; his conversation with a priest from Bhurtpore, ib.; proposes three conditions to Doorjun Saul, and receives counter-proposals, 480, 481; modification made with regard to his office, 481; his death, ib.

Odell, Mr., his gallant conduct at attack upon Lahar, 149.

O'Donoghue, Colonel, attacks and carries pagoda stockade, 469. O'Keefe, Major, fall of, in the Mauritius, 870.

Oldham, Colonel, takes Eroad, and joins Colonel Floyd, 192.

Oliver, Colonel, killed, 661.

Ondur-ui-Onrah, son of Mahomet All, succeeds his father, 255; his ruinous policy, ib.; absence of friendly feeling towards the English on the part of, ib.; refuses to consent to any modification of treaty of 1792, 256; his application to share in the domination of the part of of the p nions conquered from Tippoo Sultan, ib.; evidence of his perildy found in Seringapatam, ib.; narrative of his intrigues with Tippoo, 256, 257; labouring under mortal disease, communication of orders dispossessing him of the government withheld from him, 257, 258; precautions taken by Lord Clive to quard against danger on his decase, ib.; his death, ib.; proceedings consequent on his death, 258— 260.

Omercote, fort of, abandoned by the enemy, 595.
Omichund, treasury of, falls into hands of Soorajoon-Dowlah, 46; apprizes British deputies of their danger, 48; huya Nuncomar for the English, 50; employed by British agent to ascertain views of Var I mottief, ib.; his many services to the cause of the English, 56; not at first intrusted with secret of conspiracy against Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, ib.; subsequently apprired of it by Watts, ib.; his representations of the danger to which he was exposed, and of his claims to advantage, ib.; requires five per cent. on all money in treasury and portion of jewels, ib.; Clive's auggestions for disarming his hostility, ib.; mock treaty drawn up to deceive him, ib.; keeps the secret of the conspirators, ib.; remarks on his character and conduct, ib.; attends a meeting of parties concerned in reco-tion, 57; treaty produced, and his agitation on dis-covering the fraud committed on him, ib.; his future life a state of idiotey, ib.; the preservation of his name in history a blot on the reputation of Clive, Oosoor taken by the English, 115; besieged by Hyder Ali, 116.

Oostradroog summoned to surrender, 190; officer who accompanies flag of truce is fired upon, 203; fort attacked and surrenders, ib.

Orchard, Colonel, attacks fort Pishoot, 546.

Orme, Mr., maintains necessity of sending a large force to Bengal to recover Calcutta, and his advice prevails, 45; suggests Clive as leader of expedition, and suggestion adopted, ib.; his determination of the value of Anunderauze's army, 65.

Orton, Captain, trusts to promise of Hyder Ali, and re-pairing to his tent, is detained, 117; refuses to sign order for surrender of Groad, but consents the next day, ib.

oute, government of, usurped on dissolution of Mogul empire, 16; emperor marches in direction of, 89; Mr. Bristow appointed resident at, 129; treaty con-cluded, ib.; affairs of, in a distracted state, 174; em-barrassments of vizier of, ib.; new treaty with, con-cluded by Hastings, ib.; proceedings of the vizier, aided by Hastings, to extort money from the Begums, 176; proceedings of Hastings with regard to re-176; proceedings of Hastings with regard to residency at, ib.; proceedings of Sir John Shore with respect to succession in, 182, 185; state of, on Marquis Wellesley's arrival in India, 261; views of the Marquis Wellesley respecting, 261, 262; endeavours of the governor-general to reform military and ciril establishments in, 263—271; new treaty concluded with vizier, 271; further endeavours of governor-general to promote reform in, 271, 272; various transactions of marquis of Hastings with, 455; treaty concluded with the king of, 486; misgovernment of, during administration of Lord William Bentinck, 494; state of, in 1833 and 1834, 513; claims made upon the king of, ib.; misgovernment and financial embarrassments of, ib.; claims of the Lucknow bankers on, 514; proceedings in the law-courts and in parliament respecting, 515, 516; order of succession to the throne of, 523; state of the succession on death of Saadut Ali, 523; resident seats the rightful heir on of Saadut Ali, 523; resident seats the rightful heir on the throne, ib.; numerous claimants for the throne of 525. (See Saadut Ali, Shoojah-ad-Dowlah, and Vizier Ali.)

Outer one, on agreement made with the rajah of, 441.
Outahnulla, defeated army of Meer Cossim fly to, and take shelter in, 94; English attack and obtain possession of fort and cannon, ib.
Outram, Captain, his bravery at Ghuznec, 542.

Colonel, political agent in Sinde, 591; his opinion of the Ameers, ib.; attack upon his reaidence, 693.

Ovane, Colonel, receives from the rajah of Sattara Lis final decision, $27.

P.

Paget, Sir E. (commander-in-chief), means taken by, for suppressing mutiny at Harrackpore, 477; records his opinion in favour of the interference of the British government as to the succession in Bhurtpore, 491; succeeded by Lord Combermere as commander-inchicf, 481.

Palagaut, English officer communiting at, obliged to save himself and garrison from massacre by secret flight, 117; austains vigorous siege, but aubmits to the English, 170; defence of, intrusted to Major

Cuppage, 200. Palambang, sultan of, murders Butch resident and every male person belonging to the factory, and de-atroys fort, 377; British mission to, and its reception, il.; ambassadora from, arrive at Batavia, ib.; expedition despatched against, ib.; its arrival, ib.; attempts of sultan to negotiate, ib.; sultan flies, leaves palace and city in dreadful disorder, ib.; city, fort, and batteries occupied by the British, 378.

'alamow, pergunnah of, in a state of insurrection, 491. Palmacotta, several native officers dismissed at, 354. Palmer, Colonel, compelled to surrender Gluznee, 573.
Palmer, Villiam, and Co., pecuniary transactions of, 453, 456.

Pangholoo, chieftain of Nanning, resists British go-vernment, but is subdued and tranquillity restored, Papanaveram, fort of, surrenders to Colonel Macleod (war in Travancore), 361.

Parker, Colonel, gallantly attacks and carries the Dhore Ghaut, 150.

Patceta taken by storm, by Major Popham, 173. Paterson, Captain, examines leeward side of Port Louis, Patna, besieged by the shazada, 80, 81; Mr. Ellis appointed chief of factory there, 90; his acts disagreeable to nabob, ib.; military force employed by council at, in defence of trade, 92; one of nabob's collectors made prisoner, and body of horse despatched to release him, ib.; they arrive too late, but patched to release him, 1b.; they arrive too late, but commit certain acts of violence, ib.; commencement of hostilities at, 93; sudden attack of the English places the city in their possession; they are subsequently driven from ft and from their own factory, and all destroyed or made prisoners, ib.; murder of English prisoners at, by Meer Cossim, 94; taken by storm by the English, ib.; proceedings of Supreme Court with regard to persons concerned in proceedings of provincial council there, 130; state of country ings of provincial council there, 139; state of country resulting therefrom, ib. Paton, Captain, made prisoner at Oude, 524; effects his escape, ib.

Patterson, Lieutenant, mortally wounded at Corygaum, 442.

Patton, Major, attacks and completely routs enemy to north-west of Almorah, 403.

Paull, James, justifies removal of Sir G. Barlow, 357.

Peat, Captain, of Bombay engineers, $42.
Peddapore, buttle at, French deckated, 64.
Peel, Mr. (afterwards Sir R.), moves for select committee to inquire into the affairs of India, his statement, 500; objections made to list of committee proposed by, ib.

— Sir R., his speech on the affairs of Oude, 517; on Lord Heytesbury's appointment to India, 522.

Pegu, series of successes obtained by people of, against the Burmans, 457; Peguers obtain possession of Ava with its sovereign, ib.; short duration of their dominion, its sovereign in; snort duration of the Admiration is invaders of Ava from, totally defeated by Alompra, assisted by French from Pondicherry, ib.; capital of surrenders to Alompra, ib.; proceedings in, 475.

Peishwa, origin of authority of, 16; disputes respecting the succession to the office of, 127.

Paishwa Raise Rea, big explains and intrigues. 277:

Peishwa, Bajec Rao, his evasions and intrigues, 277; surrounded with difficulties, proposes to subsidize British troops, ib.; his indifference to the communication by the British resident of a modified assent to his results for the British resident of the surrounded of Halker. his proposal, 278; quits Poons on approach of Holkar, ib.; flies to Singurh, after defeat of his army by Holker, ib.; his continued flight and ultimate arrival at Bassein, ib.; consents to the proposals of British government, ib.; concludes treaty, 279; reseated on the musuad at Poons, 281; his differences with the guicowar, 416; his faithlessness and falschood, 417; change of his conduct towards Gungudhur Shastry, ib. ib.; proceeds on pilgrimage to Nassuck, ib.; Gungudhur Shastry invited to accompany him to Punderpore and murdered, 418; returns to Poons, mani-festations of alarm, 419; evades giving audience to the British resident, ib.; inadequacy of the steps taken by, towards detection and punishment of the murderers of the Shastry, ib.; refuses to allow arrest of Trimbuckjee Dainglia without previous investigation, 420; yields to the representations of the resident, and surrenders Trimbuckjee, 421; intrigues of, against British power in India, 427; suspicious circumstances in his conduct, 428; continues Trimbuckjee's friends and family in favour, ib.; extraordinary changes in his habits, his piety and seclusion, and his warlike preparations, ib.; one of his forts taken possession of by insurgents, ib.; invites Mr. Elphinstone to a conference, but refuses to enter into any encarement. 429: secents the conthe British resident, ib.; inadequacy of the steps to enter into any engagement, 429; accepts the con-ditions profiered by Mr. Elphinstone, ib.; issues cutous promered by Air. Elphinstone, in.; Issues proclamation offering reward for apprehension of Trimbuckjee Dainglia, ib.; new treaty concluded with, and its important provisions, ib.; his disaxtifaction at the treaty, 430; prepares for hostile proceedings, ib.; endeavours to corrupt British troops, th.; puthes forward his troops, and hostilities actually commenced by, ib.; his flight, ib.; prime instigator of hostile feeling to the British in India, 434; intrigues of rajah of Newson with its transparence of the state of Newson with the transparence of the state of Newson with the transparence of the state of of Nappore with, ib.; transmits a khelant to rajah of Nappore, 435; is joined by Trimbuckjee, 442; more-ments of after defeat at Poona, ib.; his army 222ck Captain Stannton, ib.; varies his courte on approach of his pursuers, and arrives at Sholapore, ib.; sur-renders to the British government, 459; his dominious being annexed to British territories, he becomes a pensioner upon British government, ib. 'See Baise Rao.'

Pelime Talaure, his intrigues, 205; places usurper on throne of Candr, ib.; his acrosious proposals to throne of Candy, ib.; his atropious proposals to British government rejected, ib.; carries on a deceit-ful correspondence, under the mask of friendship, with British commander, 20%; overnment of receive a favorable answer, ib.; invested with supreme anthonity in Candy, ib.; desires an anthonity in Candy, ib.; desires an anthonity in Candy, ib.; desires an anthonic with the British government for the purpose of arranging a definitive treaty of pane, ib.; is received by the British government, ib.; requests that General Middle may be sent to Candy to negroitate with Hoomed Sawery, 20%; attempts to entire British commander, 20%; recommencement of way, ib. Pellew, Capatin, arrives in Mainte, 20%.

Pendetton, Lieutement, 2000-points Geneba Simple to bound government reperced, 10.; certies on a Cecetic following producing, under the mask of friendship, with British commander, 205; overnmen of, receive a favourable answer, th.; invested with supreme and thority in Candy, th.; cleaters an anchence with the British governor for the purpose of arranging a definitive treaty of peace, th.; is received by the British governor, th.; required by the British governor of the purpose of arranging a definitive treaty of peace, th.; is commander, th. British commander, 207; recommendation of the purpose of refining the following produced by the British commander, 207; recommendation of the British commander, 207; recommendation of the British commander of the British commander of the British commander of the British governor in the following the second of the British commander of the British commander of the British governor in the following the second of the British commander of the British commander of the British governor in the British commander of the British com effects of his recreat. NO.

Front., form appointment from on the record from all first and the first of the her insulting conduct to the British mission, 533; hostilities against, ih.

Persse, Colonel, made knight companion of the Bath, 546.

Perthee Saul Singh, Rajah of Palpa, driven from the hills by Ghoorkhas, his engagements with the British, imprisoned and put to death by Ghoorkhas, 389.

Pesh Boolah, fort of, ahandoned, 560,

Peahawur, its occupation by Runjeet Singh, 533; its recovery sought by Dost Mahomed, ib. Peter the Great of Russia, his extraordinary energies, 530; his designs on Persia and Turkey, th.

Petric, Mr., holds government of Madray provisionally, 352; unceasingly opposes Sir George Barton, th.; removed from council, 364.

Phillips, Captain, attacks and carries battery at Am-hoyna, 372. Pickersgill, Lieutenant, discovers party of Goorkhas, 402; is attacked, ih.; enemy retreat, are pursued, and cut to pieces, ib.; ascends the breach at Liundela to ascertain the effect produced by the hatteries, 445.

Pigot, Mr. (afterwards Lord), accompanied to Tricking. poly by Clive, in charge of recruits and stores, 23; returning with Clive from Trichinopoly, is attacked by hoatile party, ib.; saved by the dectness of their by nottice party, it.; exect by the flectness of their horses, ib.; conducts defence of bladres with considerable skill and spirit, 61; demands delivery of Pondicherry to the presidency of bladres as having become the property of the Past-India Company, 79.

Lord, returns to government of Liadras, 161; his instructions with respect to Tanjure, ih.; proceeds to Tanjure and issues produmation, ib.; demands evidence of the claims of Pari herofield on the resource.

dence of the claims of Paul Benfield on the revenues dence of the claims of Paul Bendeld on the revenues of Tanjore, &c., ib.; proposes Mr. Russell as Brideh resident at Tanjore, 162; his charge applies two members of board, ib.; declares refractory members of board cuspended, and orders for Bobert Pletcher into arrest, ib.; arrested by the opposing party in council, and appeals to fix Bobard Hughes for protection, ib.; his death, ib.; remarks on the proceedings relating to, ib.; mode in which the proceedings against were regarded at Calcutta, ib.; proceedings by the proceedings against were regarded at Calcutta, ib.; proceedings to bone relating to, 182; his opposition to coninge at home relating to, 182; his opposition to con-rection, and its feral consequences to assect, 161, 1901, Liemenant, anacks Fort Palicot, 180; killed, through the Kyber pass, 576; the governor-general's suggestions to, 577 et seq.; leaves Jelalabad, and marches on Kabool, 583; his recapture of Kabool, 584; the avenger of British dishonour, ib.

Pondicherry, threatened by British fleet, 17; nabob of Arcot interferes to protect the French possession of, ib.; governor and principal inhabitants of Madass marched thither under an eccort, ib.; attacked by Emplish, they fail, 18; British force return from, with loss of more than one thousand men, the wife and sons of Chunda Sahib take refuge in, and are treated with great respect by Duplela, 10; money coined at, to be current in the Carnatle, 21; durbar, or court of Dupleix, held at, ib.; boats with English troops seized in passing, 35; French garrison from Chingle-put march to, 37; French authorities at Chandernagore dependent upon government of, 49; French troops landed at hy M. Bouvet; squadron disappears, 58; Lally retires to, from ill-health, 61; French fleet under M. D'Aché arrive at, after action with Admiral Pocock, 68; discontent and dissensions in, on Lally's arrival there, 76; English approach the place, ib, artiack upon French posts at, 77; inhabitants of expelled by Lally, ib.; operations of English against, 78; storm at, ib.; post carried by English, and retaken by the French, ib.; enemy surrender, ib.; advance sgainst, by General Monro, and capitulation of, 151; correspondence opened by French party in the Decean with French prisoners at, 224. Poolajee, town of, 548. core dependent upon government of, 49: French troops

Poolaire, town of, 548.

Poole, Major, his bravery, 101. Poons becomes seat of a Mahratta government, under cond becomes seat of a historial government, and chieftain called the Peishwa, 16; East-India Company seek and obtain permission for residence of an English agent at, 142; government of Bengal resolve to open negotiations with authorities of, 144; Colonel William Company of the company of t Upton appointed their representative, ib.; councils of, distracted by intrigues, 145; government of Hom-bay disposed to co-operate with the party supporting Rugonath Rao, ib.; capture of, by Holkar, and flight of pelshwa, 278; arrival of General Wellesley there; of peishwa, 278; arrival of General Wellestey there; flight of Holkar's commander, 291; peishwa returns to, and takes his seat on musnud, ib.; atrocitics committed at, in making levy upon rich inhabitants for benefit of Seindia, 325; British residency there plundered and burnt, 430; occupied by the English, ib.; auxiliary force of, in Afighanistan, 635. (See Bajee Rao, and Peishwa.)

Poonamalee, Company's fort at threatened with attack, 27

Popham, Captain, troops under, assigned for service of Itana of Gohud, 148; enters Mahratta districts, at-tacks Lahar, and carries it by storm, ib.; attacks and captures Gwalior, and is promoted to rank of major, 140.

Major, takes Patecta by storm, and his success alarms Cheyt Singh, 173; advances towards Bidzeghur, ib.; on his approach, Cheyt Sing withdraws, leaving his wife and mother, ib.; place surrenders, ib.; treasure appropriated by military, ib.; act disapproved by, ib.

- Colonel, commands column at siege of Chanda,

447. Porlier, Major (commanding officer at Fort St. David), exonerated by court of inquiry from cowardice in re-gard to surrender of fort, but his defensive arrange-ments condemned, 60; mortally wounded during siege of Madras, 61.

Portland, Duke of, opposes adjournment of House of Lords, and adverts to extraordinary rumour circulated as to feelings of the king with regard to the East-India Bill of the coalition ministry, 181.

Port-Louis, its origin, 369; measures of the French for its defence, ib.

Porto Novo, plundered by Hyder Ali, 157.

Portuguese, their discoveries, 7; their arrival in India, 'ortuguese, their discoveries, 7; their arrival in India, and departure, ib.; they return, attack Calicut without success, but capture Goa, which becomes their capital, 8; claim dominion of the Indian seas, extend their commerce, and establish factories and forts, ib.; their factory at Hooghly attacked by order of Shah Jehan, which is courageously but ineffectually defended, ib.; lives of the defenders spared, but their images destroyed, ib.; their movements alarm biahrattas for the safety of Salsette, 143; their fleet appears of Bombay, and the commander delivers a protest against conduct of British authorities in regard to that place, ih.; exempted from the general prohibition of European traders forming catablish-ments within Mahratta dominions, 151; expedition fitted out from Bengal against their settlement of Macan, 361.

Pottinger, Captain (assistant to British resident at Poins), on murder of Gungudhur Shartry Instructed to provide for safety of surviving parties connected with the Baroda mission to Paona, 419.

Colonel, treaties concluded by, with Khypoor and Hyderabad, in Sinde, 494; created a baronet, 546; his negotiations with Sinde, 559.

Pottinger, Major, political agent in Kobistan, 559; driven from his post, th.; his objections to the Affghan proposals overruled, 556; nominates a new governor of the province of Hursreh, 556.

Poverio, Clement, a European commanding company in service of Mahomet Ali, receives overtures from Nunieral for a salatance in obtaining possession of Trichinopoly, 33; proceeds to Captain Dalton, communicates all that passed with Nunieral, is instructed to return to the camp, and arow his willingness to undertake the required task, ib.; makes terms with Nunjeraj to receive 23,000 supres, to seize on the gate nearest to the Mysorean camp, and to holst signal for their army to more, 33, 31; his plan to entrap Nunjeraj defeated by Mahomet Ali's brother-in-law,

Powell, Lieutenant-Colonel, joined by Himmut Ba-haudur, enters country of Bundlecund, and reduces the forts, 300.

Powys, Mr., takes a conspicuous part in debate of House of Commons on East-India Bill of coalition ministry, 180. Praed, Mr., his motion respecting the revocation of Lord Heyte-bury's appointment to the governor-general-hip of India, 620. Press, liberty of in India granted by Lord William Bentinek, 622.

Preston, Major, takes Theapur from the French, 79. Price, Mr., commissioned from Ava to ascertain terms of peace, 474; returns to Ava to procure ratification of treats, 475.

Prince Regent (afterwards George IV.) admits officers of the East-India Company's service to the order of the Bath, 456.

Pritzler, General, obliges peishwa to change his course, 442; proceeds to reduce forts and strongholds of Poona; rajah of Satara and family fall into his bands, Prome, advance upon, by Sir A. Campbell, 469; who takes possession thereof, 470.

Province Wellesley, territory on main land ceded by king of Queda, so called, 499.

Pulo Penang, transferred to East-India Company by Captain Light, and called Prince of Wales Island, 489.

Punniar, battle of, 606.

Purneah, foujdar of, takes the field on eastern bank of Ganges, with the supposed intention of joining the shazada, 83; he is apparently appeased, 81.

Pursajee Bhooslah succeeds his father, Rughoojee Bhonsley, as rajah of Nagpore, 431; his weakness of mind, and death, ib.; evidence of his having been murdered by Appa Sahib discovered, 445.

Pursaram Thappa killed in personal encounter with Lieutenant Boileau, 400.

Purseram Bhow, commanding Blahratta army, joined by English detachment, moves to attack Darwar, which nitimately surrenders, 195; his army, with British detachment under Captain Little, proceeds to attack Dooradroog, 204; marches towards Chittadroog, which is deemed too strong for attack, ib.; arrives at Hooly Onore, which is attacked and taken, ib.; his admiration of the humane conduct of a British officer, 205; instead of injoined Lord Carvallia, regress numdering instead of joining Lord Cornwallia, prefers plundering expedition into Bednore, 206; alarmed at approach of Kummer-oo-Deen, ib.

Purwan, battle of, 549, 550; leads to the surrender of Dost Mahomed, 550.

Pym, Captain, opens fire upon enemy's ships in har-bour of St. Paul's, Isle of Bourbon, which cut their possession of, secured to Siamese by treaty with English, 477; repeated engagements of British government to king of, 489; Captain Light receives Pulo Penang from the king of, and transfers it to East-India Company, ib.; arrangements made with king of, for payment of annual sum in compensation of loss of revenue from transfer of the island, ib.; further of revenue from transfer of the island, ib.; further cression of territory made by king of, and consequent increase of annual payment, ib.; king of, expelled by the Siamese, takes refuge in Prince of Wales Island, subsequently removes to Province Wellcaler, but is prevailed on to return to Prince of Wales Island, ib.; remarks on conduct of British government in relation to king of, 489, 490; opinion of Lord William Bentinck on his treatment, 490; Siamese expelled from capital of, ib.; remarks on conduct of British authorities in respect to the attack on, ib.; disputes of the king with British government, and his removal to Malacca, 490, 491; British resident aids Siamese in recapture of, 491; his conduct disapproved by government of Bengal, who forbid British authorities to interfere, ib.; prohibition arrives too late, ib.; Si-amese repossess themselves of, ib.; observations by Court of Directors on the subject, ib. Quetta, town of, 537, 538; General England arrives at, 581; and leaves it for Kandahar, ib.

R.

Raffles, Mr., first suggests reduction of Dutch settle-ments to Lord Minto, 373; appointed lieutenant-governor by Lord Minto, 377; proceeds to court of sultan of Djoejocarta, his reception, treaty concluded, 378.

Rainer, Admiral, requested to proceed to Trincomalec. 253; refuses to co-operate in attack on Mauritins, 254.

Raitt, Captain, slain, 549.
Rajah Sahib, son of Chunda Sahib, with 150 French from Pondicherry joins detachment of 4,000 apposes sent by his father to act against Clive at Arcet.
24; his terror at a ball passing through palice at Areot, ib.; intelligence reaches him of the communications between Clive and the Makening. becomes apprehensive of the result, and sends a fire of truce with proposals for surrender of the feet. 25; Clive's reply, ib.; surprises the camp of the Mithrattas, 26; makes a forced march to jain reinfiretments from Pondicherry, ib. Rajahmundry, M. Conflans flies thither after his defect by Colonel Forde, 65.

Rajpoot states, treaties concluded with, 422.

Rajpootana, duties of allotted to Sir Charles Metalic. 481.

Ram Dos (son of Ummer Sing) intimates his father's desire to negotiate, 405.

Ram Narrain (governor of Behar), or approach of the Sharada's army, marches out of the circ, sai encamps under its walls, $1; is warred or Calinard and to come to action, the property of the circ, and its totally defeated, it; is districted by Meer Jaffier, who seeks to avaisable him, and assured by Clive that if he present himself in about, and acknowledge his authority he will be continued in government, $7; tenders he will be continued in government, $7; tenders he will be continued in government, $7; tenders he will be continued discontinued in arcomment. It is evades demand of Meer Cream for settlement of accounts; designs formed against he restricted by Meer Cossin, ibs.; printers accounts it is not produce them, ib.; restlement he restricted to the feet of the call of the cost Ramgurh, surrender of 37

Rangoon entered by the Laplain 41. frei be the Burmese, 454

Ratcliff, Major, commis ciem & are of Com-

cables and drift ashore, 365; recaptures Windham Raymond, M., his indefatigable labours to increase the East-Indiaman, and attacks French squadron in the harbour of Port Sud-Est, Mauritius, without success, 368.

Raymond, M., his indefatigable labours to increase the influence of the French in the Decean, 221; puts down rebellion against the Nizam, takes prisoner All Jah, who destroys himself by poison, ib.; biased and character with in success and the success are success and the success and the success and the success and the success are success and the success and the success are success and the success a death and character, 234; is succeeded by M. Peron.

> Read, Captain, offers to put Nizam in possession of the lower fort of Goorumeonda if allowed the management of attack, 203; his offer accepted, ib.; carries the fort and delivers it to Nizam, 205.

Lieutenant-Colonel, appointed to escort supplies to army advancing on Seringapatam (last war with Tippoo), 236.

Reeves, Captain, killed, 584.

Revell and Glass, two British officers, spared by French from massacre of their companions, near Conjevenm, and made prisoners, 26; required to write to Clive, informing him that if the pagoda of Conjeveram were attacked, they would be exposed on the walls, ib.; they desire that no regard for them may induce Cire to discontinue his operations, ih.

erre General, commands column of attack at second

Siere of Bhurtpore, 485.
Rera S. Lamy of, defeated and dispersed by Captain Little Lord Cornwallia's war with Tippoo), 205.

Richards, Major, his success in attack upon position of the enemy near Jetuck, 395; attacks and puts to

- Colonel, clears Assam from Burmene 470; airances ur en Rungpore, carries stockade and various posts (Eurmese war), ib.; Buddhist priest admitted to conference with, and surrender of Rungpore, 470, 4.7.

Briendier-General, succeeds in attack upon enemy's richt, at Arracan, 472.
Eichmind, Duke of, reads, in House of Lords, an article from a newspaper, announcing prevalence of report that the king had withdrawn his approbation from the India Bill of the coalition ministry, and alto his confilence from its authors, 169, 161.

Rika Bashee fort, surrender and re-eapture of, Esq. 200. Reberts, James, and Beecher, Mesers, appointed by Court of Directors to make inspection of Coloral Madean's papers, with reference to his authority to tender Hastings's teripnation, 131.

Roberts, Lieutenant, despatched with Hajor Heartey to confer with Mooffee during Bareally rices, 415. Riberts, Lieutenant-Colonel, ay pointed to commune detachment from Madras to co-expense at Hydeniad with British troops arrenst French fores at that gives,

Riberts, Co'reel, community of brigade in the LC gluodius compaign, CO; capture New York Kein-ومرو يسور

chasen. Captala, surrenders at Verlandalle mire pur le, braits his panele, c'ers e-fen el Comm Crun to surrender Urand, and periore le s'imporst Serio ergatem, 117. Define de, Capto a W., Compatelo é vida semanta a Grippal Japanens do sarreo la Duma parament im dara, and the grewer, and.

La. ve Tromas, werter at the Light men ame to James I., 7.

A diesel, energy prefering of east & Gir remarks and demonstrated and the first a Entered to the form of the second of the sec All hy the Friends around the Committee of the Committee lowley, Commodore, ordered to blockade French islands in Indian seas, 364; makes unsuccessful descent on Island of Bourbon, ib.; appoints a vessel to convex widow and children of Rowley, INDEX. descent on Island of Bourbon, 10.; appoints a vessel with cartel flag to convey widow and children of General Des Brusels to Mauritius 305; sails with squadron to resume blockade of Mauritius, takes to the squadron to resume blockade of Mauritius, takes equation to resume opposition of manufacture, takes General Abercrombie with him, and proceeds to

644

General Apercromple with mim, and proceeds to Rodriguez, 568, 369.
Roydooloob (dewan of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah) engaged in conspiracy against his master, 52; advises Sooraj-oo-Dowlah to retire to Moorshedabad, 54; is alienated

Royle, Captain, commands a detachment from Agra, falls in with the cavalry of Bappoogee Scindia, and taus in with the cavelry of Depposee Schools, and totally routs it, 323; attacks and defeats Hernaut

Singh, 324.
Rughoojee Bhonslah (rajah of Nagpore) invariably resists attempts of British government to establish subsidiary alliance with state of Berar, 434; is succeeded by his con Diversible Rhonslah. in.

Rugonath Row, negotiations with, by the English, 143; Rugonath Row, negotiations with, by the English, 143; succeeds to office of peishwa, and engages in war with Nizam Ali, ib.; makes peace with Hyder Ali, who design upon Carnatic, ib.; commences march towards Ib.; concludes treaty with the English, and distress, 10dia Company agree to aid him on certain conditions, 143, 144; is bound not to make war in Carnatic, to 143, 144; is bound not to make war in Carnatic, to 143, 144; is bound not to make war in Carnatic, to assist ships of East-India Company, and protect cargoes, 144; defeated, and is forces dispersed, ib; effects junction with Colonel Keating, ib.; action takes place, and ends in favour of the English, ib.; action required by treaty between English and Mahratatas to disband his army, which he refuses, 145; new only, 146; seeks to stimulate his European allies, ib.; committee of field deputies become despondent, and only, 140; seeks to stimulate his European allies, 10.; committee of field deputies become despondent, and open negotiations with authorities of Poonah, ib.; open negotiations with authorities of Poonah, ib.; his surrender being demanded by Poona ministers, he provides for his own safety. 147; escapes from Sciudia, with whom he had taken reinge, and is received by Colonel Goddard with little cordiality, Rumbold, Mr. (afterwards Sir Thomas), appointed president and governor of Madras by Court of Directors, 184; complains that French troops are entertained in Guntoor notwithstanding nizam's promise to manage their removal.

to procure their removal, 155.

Sir Thomas, proposes recall of Mr. Hollond from court of nizam, and quits India, leaving minute recommending Mr. Hollond's suspension from the service, 156; its recommendation carried into effect by Mr. Witchill, ib.; assures Court of Directors that everything was quiet in Carnatic at the time of his denarture from India. ib.: is succeeded by Mr. his departure from India, ib.; is succeeded by Mr.

Wnitenul, 10.
Rungpore, possession of, obtained by Colonel Richards; his justification of the concessions granted to the inhabitants, 471.

Runjeet Singh, British government first become connected with, by treaty, 352; gradually extends his nected with, by treaty, 362; gradually extends his power and influence over whole country between the Sutlege and Jumna, 483; difficulties of throwner the power back beyond the Sutlege, ib; seizes Peshawur, 532, 533; treaty with, 534; directs his military force against Affghanistan, 535; death of, 540; called the Runjore Sing Thappa recommended to put himself in Runjore Sing Thappa recommended to put himself in communication with Colonel Bradshaw, 893. Communication with Colonel Bradshaw, 393.

Rossell, Mr., proposed as British resident at Tanjore by Lord Prigot, 152.

Russell, Lieutenant-Colonel, his brilliant service at battle of Mahidnore. 440.

Russell, Lieutenant-Colonel, his orninant service at battle of Mahidpore, 440.

Russia at war with Persia, 530; her rising power, and her encroschments on the Persian and Turkish her intrigues with the Afighans, 533; and with the Persians. ib.

Ruttenpore, military preparations at, by rajah of Barar, Ryaccottah surrenders to Major Gowdie, 199; its strength, ib.

Rjan, Lieutenant-Colonel, proceeds to attack gateway to left of principal battery at Bhurtpore, 320; altereation of, with Colonel Maitland as to relative situation of breach and trenches, ib.; compels enemy to quit their post, but is prevented by a deep drain from pursuing his successes, ib. Ryves, Captain, frustrates attempts of enemy to drive British vessels from the station at Rangoon by fire-

Sandut Ali; see Vizier Sandut, and Oude.
Sadleir, Mr., communicates with Tippoo Sultan, and is ready to assent to demand of Tippoo's agent for such render of Mangalore previously to release of English render of Mangalore previously to release of English prisoners, 170.

Sadrass and Pulicat taken by the English soon after St. David, Fort. (See Fort St. David.)

St. Denis (Isle of Bourbon), captured by British force, St. Ordnance found at, and loss sustained in conquest St. Leger, Colonel, march of cavalry under, 286; his conduct in regard to the discontent in the army of conduct in regard to the discontent in the army of

St. Lubin, Chevalier, his intrigues, 146,

St. Lubin, Chevalier, his intrigues, 145.
St. Paul's (Isle of Bourbon), ordnance found at, 367.
St. Susanne, Colonel (commandant in Isle of Bourbon), Escapes with difficulty, 367; allowed to depart to Solahut June chasen by the Franch of the Salabut Jung chosen by the French as new ruler of the Salabut Jung chosen by the French as new ruler of the Decean, 32; removes his brother by poison, 39; forges edict of emperor confirming Dupleix in office of nabob, ib.; assistance rendered him by M. Bussy, assistance of, demands Mogul's tribute, ib.; applied to by M. Conflans for assistance, 65; advances to Hyderabad, ib.; commands Anunderause to quit telligence of his advance received by the English ib.: the English and repair to his lawful master, 66; in-telligence of his advance received by the English, ib.; is disposed, by fall of Masulipatam, to negotiate, and concludes treaty, 67; seeks to prevail on Colonel Forde to grant assistance against Nizam All, which is refused, ib.; after unsuccessfully contending for sovereignty of the Deccan, becomes prisoner of Nizam All. 111.

Ali, 111.
Sale, Major (afterwards Sir Robert), the first man who appeared on the top of the works at Kemendine, 463; sales Burmese chief of high rank in single combat, 465; leads detachment against Burmese intrenchments, 467; leads column of attack on Burmese army, Colonel, wounded in boat at Melloon, 474.

General, commander of brigade in the Afighan

General, commander of brigade in the August campaign, 534; commands the assault at Ghuznee, and is wounded, 542; left in command of the Bengal force, 544; made knight commander of the Bath, 546.

Sir Robert, his desultory contests in Afighanistan, to Malalahad, and his difficulties at Sir Robert, his desultory contests in Afghanistan, 549; his march to Jelalabad, and his difficulties at the Khoord Kabool pass and other places, 554; his the places, 555, 571; his heroic defence, 574; signally defeats Akbar Khan, and is relieved by General defeats Akbar Khan, and is relieved by General respecting, 577, 578; leaves Jelalabad, and marches on Kabool, 583; occupies the Urghandee pass. and sale, Lady, wounded in the Boothauk pass, 568; desaide, Lady, wounded in the Boothauk pass, 568; desaide, Lady, wounded in the Boothauk pass, 568; desaideh, Mahomed Khan, transfers the English prisoners to the British general, 586.

Salsette and Caranja fall into hands of English, 143 capture of, a questionable act, 145; possession of long desired by East-India Company, ib.; restored by convention with Mahrattas, 147.

Samoga taken possession of by Captain Little, and amoga taken possession of by Captain Materie, and cruel treatment of prisoners by Mahrattas, 205, 206;

retaken by Kummer-00-Deen, 206.
Sanford, Mr., commissioned from Ava to ascertain terms of peace, 474.

Sarun, serious disturbances at, created by the Nepau-

Sattara becomes the residence of the Mahratta rajah, arrana becomes the residence of the manufactura rajan, and principal seat of Mahratta power, 14; falls into the hands of Aurungzebe, ih.; explosion of a mine at, destroys two thousand of the hesiegers, ib.; Chunda coaling and the hesiegers, ib.; chunda coaling and the hesiegers is the but Sahib made prisoner and marched there, 18; but ohtains his freedom and departs from, 19; affairs of, Sattara, rajah of, falls into hands of English, 103; motives of governor-general for restoring him to soretives of governor-general for restoring him to sove-reignty, 450; Portion of territory assigned to him, ib.; the nominal head of the great Mahratta confederacy; 525; his freacherous conduct, ib., Sir J. Carners sue nominal nead of the great Alamatta confederacy, 595; his treacherous conduct, ib.; Sir J. Carnac's views respecting, 525, 526; his interviews with Sir J. Carnac, and his obstinacy, 597; his denosition ib. Views respecting, 525, 520; this interviews wan on J. Carnac, and his obstinacy, 527; his deposition, ib.; his numerous agents in India and England, 527, Sattimungul taken by Colonel Floyd (Lord Cornwallia's Sarandroog, conduct of siege of, intrusted to Colonel Stuart, 202; taken by storm, 202, 203, Scheenags (station of Pirates infesting Persian Gulf) stormed and carried by English, 371, Scindia his influence 14. Accomment concluded with stormed and carried by English, 371.

Scindia, his influence, 147; agreement concluded with, ib.; aided by Holkar, 148; his friendly professions towards the English, ib.; nes foiendly professions with success, ib.; is attacked by General Goddard harase's camp at Seronge, and cannonades Colonel Camae's retreating force, but is attacked and defeated, treaty concluded with, project of the predominant influence at Poona, 231; 150, 151; his predominant influence at Poons, 231; his forces, combined with those of the peishwa, defeated by Holkar at Poona, 276; meets crasively overfeated by Holkar at Poona, 278; meets evasively over-tures of British resident, addresses governor-generalis announces his march towards the Deccan, 281; his control Colonal Character in the Colonal announces his march towards the Decean, 281; his letter to Colonel Close, ib.; his reply to Colonel Collins, refers discussion of communication to personal conference, meeting of Colonel Collins, 289; sonal conference; meeting of Colonel Collins, 292; declares his supprise at conclusion of defensive alliacctares his surprise at conclusion of defensive alli-nace between British government and peishwa, ib.; points pressed on his notice by Colonel Collins, eq., his dislike to merch of Reislich Source of Persons points pressed on his notice by Colonet Collins, 253; his dislike to march of British troops to Poona, it. ib.; grounds of suspicion against, ib.; required to disarow imputation of confederacy with Holker and Repair in admira that transfer of Research njah of Berar, ib.; admits that freaty of Bassein mathematical management of Bassein beautiful and the first of Bassein beautiful of Ba Contains nothing at variance with his rights, but decoince promising as variance was ins rights, but de-clines promising not to disturb it until after the concomes promising not to unstate a tensor and the friend of Berar, 284; his insulting remark at the close of the conference with Colonel Conference with Colonel Col remark at the close of the conference with Colonel Collins, ib.; his meeting with rajah of Berar, ib.; his Couins, to.; an meeting with rajan of Derar, to.; and continued erasions and insulting conduct, ib.; decontinued evasions and insuting conduct, 10.; de-cline of his local authority in Hindostan, 256; entertains suspicions of Perron, 288; rescues the emperor. Shah Allum, from Gholaum Kaudir, 289; with rajan of Berar enters territories of Nizar, 289; with rajan French officers, ib.; his Decean of Mizar good confedency of the state of the stat cine of his total authority in authorities, sou; enter-tains suspicious of Perron, 288; rescues the emperor, Shah Allum from Cholana Kandir ogo, with raish concluded by, 293, 299; treaty of alliance signed by, 302—304; promises to adopt measures suggested by of the common cause of the allies, ib.; agrees to restrict force for protecting, 324; demands rediscussion with British covernment on claim, 325; storation of for of Gwallor and country of Golud, ib.; discussion with British Rovernment on claim, 325; engages to lend all aid in his power for prosecuting trails to engage the processions and the processions are processed as the procession of the procession and the procession an engages to lend all aid in his power for prosecuting war against Holkar, to renounce his pretensions, and confirm treaties with minor states, ib; sufficiently offered to, on part of British government, and claration of his minist Erstitish government, and minist proposed reliance on British government, and cuniary assistance, and arrival in his camp of Shirzee Ghatgay, ib.; narrative of his marriage with cuniary assistance, and arrival in his camp of Shirzee Rao Ghatgay, ib.; narrative of his marriage with daughter of Shirzee Rao Ghatgay, and its circumstances, ib.: dismisses Shirzee Rao from emolor. daugnter of oursee that Guargay, and its circumstances, ib.; dismisses Shirzee Rao from employstances, 10.; commisses Source Mao from employment, and causes him to be arrested, 325, 325; great influence of Shirzee Rao over, ib.; marches from Borhampore, ib.; marches in direction of Bhopampore, ib.; contributions on nahob of Borhampore, ib.; marches in direction of Bhopal, 327; his design to lery contributions on nabob of Bhopal, ib.; his advance into territories of raish of Bern, 328; his naswers to the vasidants, increase and Bironal, 10.; his advance into territories or rajan of the foliation of th to ms views, 10.; Hew Kroumus of remonstrance with ib.; advances to and invests the fort of Saugur, and as. sumes tone of arrogance and defiance towards British sumes tone or arrogance and denance towards British representative, 329; applies to the resident to Post-lone his departure, and makes solemn promise of prosecuting his march to Oujein, ib.; his dismay at prosecuting his mutch to output, to; his using a departure of Mr. Jenkins, and entreaties for his redeparture of Mr. Jenkins, and entreaties for his return, 330; his vacillating and treacherous conduct formands Mr. Jenkins the his Dimension attention. turn, 330; nis vacuating and treacherons conduct towards Mr. Jenkins, ib.; his Pindarries attack and pristical and the Reisich comm. ib. Lie hypothesis and the conduct to the Reisich comm. towards Mr. Jenkins, ib.; his Pindarries attack and plunder the British camp, ib.; his hypocrisy and audacity, 331; reem kable history of letter from to governor-general, ib.; his abuse of Mr. Webbe, conclusion of his abuse of Mr. Webbe, ib.; answer his letter to Marquis Welerpreses regret at complaints of, 332, 333; Holkars regret at continuance of, 332, 333; and to it by marching to Bhurtpore, and assuming character of mediator, ib.; further illustrations of his ena to it by marching to onurspore, and assumes character of mediator, ib.; further illustrations of his character of mediator, 10.; further mustrations of his servants duplicity, ib.; communication of one of his servants to Colonel Close, 336; professes pacific feelings, and retires to Subdulghur, 337; one of his minister waits on Mr. Jenkins to announce his minister Rhorene Ran forwards Rhoreners, ib., an audience whits on Mr. Jenkins to announce movement of Shirzee Rao towards Bhurtpore, ib.; an audience explanations and professions offered, ib.; andience fequent to Mr. Jenkins that hostilities may be supported with Holkar, ib.; requests removal of Colonel. request to Mr. Jenkins that hostilities may be sus-pended with Holkar, ib.; requests removal of Colonel Martindell, ib.; renews his request for the Colonel of Colonel Martindell, 338; visit of the removal Scindia, ib.; his visit to Holkar, ib.; his letter to Lord Lake and answer, 338, 339; receives memorial Scindia, 10.; his visit to monthly, in; his fetter to Lord Lake and answer, 338, 339; receives memorial and endangly retires to Shope. form British resident, and suddenly retires memorial pore, ib.; letter to and from Lord Lake, and his Pore, 10.; letter to and from Lord Lake, and his further communications with British resident, 340; further communications with British resident, 340; sacrifices to, proposed by Marquis Conwallis, 343; becomes less indisposed to peace, 344; successful negotiation with, and treaty concluded by Colonel for the successful proposed in the successful form of the successful proposed in the successful form of the successful proposed in the successful form of the success negotiation with, and treaty concluded by Colones Malcolm, 346; transfer of Gwalior and Gobud to it.; personal allowance to be paid agreed to by East-and Company and imphires assigned to his wife and India Company, and Jachires assigned to his wife and Angla Company, and Jagnires assigned to his wife and daughter, ib.; extraordinary article of treaty, by which he agrees never to admit Shirzee Rao to his which he agrees never to admit Shirzee Rao to his councils, &c., ib.; disappoints policy of Sir George Barlow by not consenting to accept Tonk Rampoora in place of pension, 347; his treatment of Kurreem Rhan Pindarrie, 423; makes treaty with Cheeto through his territories, 431; his correspondence with Mepaul detected, ib.; treaty concluded with, by through his territories, 431; his correspondence with Nepaul detected, ib.; treaty concluded with by Captain Close, 431-433; his collusion with Pindarrie and his waverines. 438; recalls Jeswint Roa Captain Close, 431-433; his conusion with Pindarrie closers, and his waverings, 438; recalls Jeswint Rao Lar from Assergurh, but his order disregarded, and the control of Jeswint Rao for the minishment of Jeswint Rao for A52; presses for the punishment of Jeswunt Rao Lar 452; presses for the punishment of Jeswunt Rao Lar without reducing fortress of Asserganh, 453; evidence of his perfect discovered in Assergurh, 453; eviding the house of, after the death of Dowlut Rao Scindia, 596 et seq.; the government assumed by his widow, and afterwards by or of the Scindia difficulties of succeeded by Bhageerut Rao, ib.; and Gwalior and Bhageerut Rao, job.; (See Lagrange, See Lagran Gwalior and Bhageerut Rao.) Scott, Major, overtures made to, by Ducaral on behalf of Francis, for reconciliation with Hastings, 13s; to be heard in defence, 182,

Colonel, succeeds Mr. Lumsden as resident at Lucknow, suggests preparation of statement of number and expense of troops, &c., 263; his opinion on state of the country (Oude), 264; suggests that, might be administered for the benefit of the country and the reputation of the prince. 265; his report to might be administered for the beneat of the people and the reputation of the prince, 265; his report to his construction of viriarie intentions of appropriation of viriarie intentions of appropriation Rovernor-general, 266; his appeal to the vizier, 267; his construction of vizier's intentions of appropriating of Bho Begum acknowledged to be true, 268, 269; exposes aratice and dishonesty of be pointed ont, but condemns vexations and indiscriminate accusation, ib,; his injudicious conduct with regard to certain aumils, 1570.

Colonel Hopetoun, measures taken by, in Nagwith regard to certain aumils, 270.

Scott, Colonel Hopeton, measures taken by, in Nagpore, 435; attacked by Arabs at Sectabuldee, and general action follows, ib., attack on city of Nagone conducted by. 437; annointed to command storming

general action tonows, to.; attack on city of avageore conducted by, 437; appointed to command storming narty at Chanda. 447. party at Chanda, 447.
Scott, General, commander of brigade in Afighanistan, 535; made knight companion of the Bath, 546.
Scott, Lieutenant, effects his ascans severals wounded Scott, Lieutenant, effects his escape, severely wounded, Scott, Lieutenant, enects his escape, severely wounded, from slaughter of British force at Ramoo, 467.

Messrs., appointed deputies to Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, searched for concealed arms. called upon to part with their swords, refuse, and deliver their proposals, 48.

Scrapton, Mr., exerts himself to divest of suspicion the mind of Scoraj-co-Dowlah, 51; receives two lacs for services to Meer Jaffier, 55; undeceives Omichund as to his reward, 57.
Sebes, chief place of the Kojuks, attacked and abandoned, 551. Sectabuldee, battle of, 434; hill of annexed to British Seiks, treaty with the, 534; their military force against Affghanistan, 535; refuse to enter the Khyber Pass,

571. Selim, only son of Akbar, after a brief struggle ascends the throne, 6; assumes the name of Jehangir, Conqueror of the World, ib. (See Jehangir.)

Senior, Mr., receives one lac twenty-two thousand rupees on elevation of Noojum-ad-Dowlah to musaud of Bengal, 100. Sepoys, their ineffectual attempt at escape from Ghuznce, 574.

nee, 574.

Seringapatam, Tippoo retires with his main army to, 191; advance of Lord Cornwallis upon, 195; plan and operation of attack upon by Lord Cornwallis, 196, 197; its strength, &c., 206; closely invested on its two principal sides, 206—210; retirement of British army from, 216; British army under General Harris appear before, 237; taken by storm, 238; account of con-quest, 238, 239; account of loss sustained in capture, 243; permanent command of, intrusted to Colonel Wellesley, ib.; fortress and island of, transferred to East-India Company, 246; documents and evidence of secret intercourse between Tippoo, Mahomet Ali, and son, found there, 257; advantage of conquest of,

280; discontent at, 363.
Seringham, French abandon their posts, and retrest thither with loss, 29; taken possession of by Captain Dalton, and French troops marched to Fort St. David, 31; D'Auteuil retires to, 58; taken by Crillon, 75.

Sevajee, Mahratta leader, aon of Shabjee, 12; Aurungzebe opens a correspondence with, 12, 13; proposes submission to Aurungzebe, 13; a Brahmin despatched to confer with him, ib.; embraces the plan proposed by the Brahmin for getting rid of his employer, ib.; treacherously kills Afzool Khan, ib.; succession of disasters compels him to submit to Aurungzebe, invited to Belbi and permission promised him to invited to Delhi, and permission promised him to return to the Deccan, ib.; proceeds to Delhi, but the emperor declines aeeing him, ib.; placed under restraint by Aurungzehe, but effects his escape, ib.; applies himself to establish his power and influence, ib.; applies himself to establish his power and influence, the processing of his title. ib.; procures from Aurungzebe recognition of his title of rajah, ib.; resumes his warlike habits, takes several important places, and plunders Surat, ib.; fits out a powerful fleet to co-operate with his troops by land, and determines to assume the style of an independent prince, ib.; enthroned with the reverence and grandeur of eastern potentates, ib.; continues his predatory system of warfare, Beejapoor and Golconda chief sufferers, 14; dies, and is succeeded by his son Sumbhajee, ib.; throne of restored by marquis of Hastings, 451.

Hastings, 451.

Severndroog (pirate fort on coast of Concan) attacked and captured by Commodore James, 41.

Laftesbury, Earl of, proposes to move that East-India Company be heard by counsel at bar of the House of Lords, 511.

Shah Allum (son of Aurungzebe) ordered with an army to Concan to reduce Mahratta forces on sea-coast, 14; his army suffers from pestilence, and he is com-pelled to return, ib.; succeeds to the throne of his father, 15.
Shah Allum (Emperor) defeats Ram Narrain at Patna,

84; defeated by Colonel Calliand, marches for Bengal, returns to Patna, which heattacks without success, and is compelled to withdraw by arrival of Captain Knox, 84, 85; defeated by Major Carnac, 88; and accepts over-83, 85; deteated by Major Carnac, 88; and accepts over-ture from him, 69; confers khelaut on Meer Cossim, ib.; saved by Major Carnac from death during insur-rection in his camp, ib.; marches in direction of Oude, ib.; in camp with vizier at Allahabad, 95; ad-dresses a letter to Major Munro soliciting protection, 97; marches in same direction with English, and pitches his tent every night within short distance of British detachment, ib.; seeks interview with Major Munro, and renews request, ib.; is received under British protection, ib.; name of, employed by visier to extort money from Meer Cossim, ib.; takes up his residence at Allahabad, 101; Clive meditates settlement with, 102; transfer of visier's dominions to, contemplated, but disapproved by Clive and Court of Directors, ib.; compelled to abandon his claim to jaghire and arrears of tribute, ib.; bestows dewanny of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa on East-India Company, ib.; his applications to English for assistance to enable him to march to Delhi meet with refusal, 124; receives aid from the Mahrattas, ib.; transfers to Mahrattas districts assigned for his support by British government, and British government resume the districts, ib.; payment of tribute to, by British government, discontinued, ib.; territories of ceded to vizier, it. ib. many years a suffering captive, 289; his audience with General Lake, ib.; his wretched state and fortune, 290. Shah Bay Khan (Pindarry) attaches himself to service of Scindia, 462.

Shah Jehan, succeeds to the throne, 7; his cruelties, ib.; prosecutes war in the Deccan, takes possession ib.; prosecutes war in the Deccan, takes possession of several fortresses, and extorts money or an acknowledgment of supremacy from various princes, ib.; his intercourse with the Portugese, 8; his revenge of the insult received from the Portuguese commander at Hooghly, ib.; carries on warlike operations on a large scale, and takes measures for subjugation of the Deccan, ib.; immense force collected, ib.; delivers up country and people of the Deccan to fire and sword, ib.; one hundred and fifteen towns and castles taken, ib.; compels the kings of Beejapoor and Golconda to propitate him by the most humiliating submissions, ib.; grants commissions to kings of Beejapoor and Golconda, after reducing them from the rank of sovereign, ib.; afflicted with illness, government devolves upon Dara, his seal to be considered as valid as that of the emperor, 9; recovers, and Dara returns as that of the emperor, 9; recovers, and Dara returns the government into his hands, ib.; victory of Aurungzebe and Morad excites alarm in the court of, ib.; made prisoner by Aurungzebe, ib.; his death, 12; suspicion entertained as to cause, ib.

Shah Mahomed, compelled to submit to Sir Charles

Napier, 596.

Namer, ogo.

Shakespear, Lieutenant, at Oude, 524.

Sir R., advances with the Kuzzulback horse to Bamecan to release the British prisoners, 586.

Shamlee arrival of Colonel Burn there, who takes possession of a mud fort, 316; his gallant defence, ib.

Shamrow Madik, his designs in bringing Toolsee Bhye to notice of Jeswunt Rao Holkar, 438.

Snamrow Mank, his designs in oringing 1 coisee Baye to notice of Jeswunt Rao Holkar, 439.

Shapooree, disputes with Burmese respecting, 459.

Shazada, Patna besieged by, 80.

Sheer, obtains imperial throne, 5; public works attributed to him, ib.; death of succeeded by a struggle for the crown, 6.

Shelton, Brigadier-General, defeats the insurgents of the Nazeem valley, 551; appointed coadjutor of Lord Elphinstone at Kabool, his bravery, 558, 559; his in effectual attack on the village of Behmauroo, 560; causes of his failure, 561, 562; his judicious management of retreating forces, 569, 570.

Sheoraj lands in dispute with Nepaulese occupied by British government, 391.

Shere Mahomed defeated by Sir C. Napicr, 494; his hostile spirit, 596; his defeat and flight, ib.

Shiel, Mr., mores a clause for extending support in India to Roman Catholic Church, 510.

Shikarpoor, captured by the English from Dhowndia Waugh, 248; arrival of Shoojah Shah at, 537.

Shirzee Rao Ghatgay, his atrocious character, and his appointment as Scindia's dewan, 325, 326; dismissed and arrested by Scindia, 326; his new career of in-appointment as centum a newan, 323, 325; insussesses and arrested by Scindia, 326; his new career of intrigue and crime, ib.; his vengeance, and pursuit of plunder, ib.; repairs to Poona, sits in dhurna at the door of the minister, is inveigled into the house for the neward of acient him him the secares in this indoor of the minister, is invested into the house for the purpose of seizing him, but escapes, ib,; his in-fluence over Scindia, ib; attacks Cheonee, 327; his inveterate hatred of the British government, 335; marches towards Bhurtpore, 336; intimates to Lord Lake that he is despatched to Bhurtpore to negotiate at request of British resident, 337; solicits conference with rajah of Bhurtpore, which is declined, ib.; returns to Weir, and is joined by Holkar, ib.; Scindia pre-cluded by treaty from employing him, 346. Shitabroy accompanies Captain Knox to Patna, 85;

apprehended by Warren Hastings, but acquitted,

123; his death, and its presumed causes, ib. Shooja, son of Shah Jehan, administers the government of Bengal, 9: advances towards the capital to claim the crown, ib.; disbelieres report of the emperor's recovery, continues to advance, is met by a force com-manded by Soliman, son of Dara, and defeated, ib.; besieged by Soliman, ib.; reinstated in government of Bengal, under promise of fidelity, ib.; solicits from Aurungzebe commission continuing him in the government of Bengal, 10; takes the field at the head of a numerous army, marches on the capital, patter Allahabad, takes up a position thirty miles from that city, and waits the approach of Aurungzebe, ih.; engages united army of Aurungzebe and Mohammed, and is defeated, ib.; report that he had fallen, 11; flight becomes universal, ib.; flies in the direction of Bengal, pursued by Michammed, ib.; bestows his of bengal, pursued by accumulation to a personal ma-daughter on Mohammed, son of Aurungrebe, ib.; Mchammed pures over to, after abandoning the cause of his father, ib.; his affections allenated from Mchammed by the detertable policy of Aurung from Mohammed by the detertable policy of Aurung-rube, the, that no belief in protectations of Ho-hammed, the, suffers Mohammed to depart with his wife and wast amount of wealth, the, compelled to quit his dominitus, seeks safery in Arrason, the, murdered with two sous, and his wife and two displient destroy themselves, ib. Shorith-od-Dreith, remark of Heire House on his hojih-ad-Davish, remark of Haye Hours on his generalable. So, emperor's emplant against, it, a his transmit of Hom Comim. 57, 58; refuses to summine How Comim to the English 58; proposes to withing a proposed to withing a proposed to withing a proposed to surple refuse to surple from How Command allow his compa refuse to surple for Samon, butterger's a solution for his services to 50.5%; enfections to the form of Formation and allow his compact formation for the formation of th a scheme to his arrayment to, St. St; enfeatroom to, get in rear of Finish terms, attempt instances for get in rear of Finish terms, attempt instances for exchange it appears to the property of the of repeating the information of var, 110; is deviced of chaining the first presument in invalidation of the property of the information of content. In clean to arrange of Errori growth the first hard clean to arrange of Errori growth the first terms of the arrange of the complex to first the figure of the enemy of offset reaches but the realize and the growth but the complex of the complex of the second of the complex o rada La dia rata da lu ant. Étama of minimum claims in the pared is presented of a grant to detail companied manner, their brokes to the most for confirm 1950 for maken their is summation by the confirmation by the confirmation of the confirmati And the second s profit animal 111 market 172.

The recommend army place before and section 122.

The recommendation of the section of the sect

Le sie simple del 22. sie estados do The second of th The tribution interest is fit in the technique of the state of the sta Part among the products during the All Alle and the Committee of State and Alle and the Committee of State and Angelong an the manufacture of the constitution of desired of the second of the constitution of desired of these and the constitution of the control of order of the control of the con Andre in Alberta Antresta. Lette is "And his its, des a promise antre is the section is they well in A the same is authorised in Letteran of Greek, and a his account of the succession of intrigues which followed the death of Azoff-al-Dowlah, 227, 228; characteristic remark of, as to his own inclinations, 224; his views as to the government of Oude, ib.; discussion by, of the question of supporting the claim of Saadut Ali, 228, 229; his personal objection to acting against Visier Ali overcome by sense of public duty, 229; is elevated to Irish peerage by title of duty, 229; is elevated to arran poor.

Lord Teignmouth, and quits India, ib.

647

Shuldham, General, attempts to march force through Cachar and Blanipur to the Burmeye frontier, under-taking abandoned, 471.

Shumsheer Bahaudur, submission of, 391; articles and conditions of his submission, 201, 202, Shums-ood-Dowlah, second son of Esadut Ali, king of Oade, 525,

Shumsoodeen Khan, nephew of Bost Blahomed, recaptures Chuznee, 572, 571; defeated by General Nott, 695.

Siamere, treaty concluded with, by British government, amere, treaty concluded with by initial generalization of the jealousy of, 476, 477, preserving of Queda secured to hiamere by treaty concluded with Lord Amberet, 489, territories of king of Queda invaded by, and quickly subdued, in.; expelled from capital of Queda by Tuanko Kudir, 449, cruelty and oppression of, excite naiveral lasted, ib.; aided by blockeding force of Knylish, reposees themselves of Queda sol, measures when he totals themselves of Queta, 491; measures taken by liftish government and its arents to excellente, the gymathan and the gymathy ordering applied (Lond Commalling war with Toppod, 201). Thisp, Captain, killed in Nepaul war, 401.

S mon ch, Ornet, Bassina a whereafor at Tehrar, 1975 Liv recall, 131. Empaon, Halon-Feneral, comma ther of the of the bishis Lopes in Allghanistan, 191.

forces in Afghanistan, 255.

Indo, Ameers of, 536, state of, 527; Natorical perfect of, No.; different treates with 557, 535,556, sopraing of the Indos, 536, political relations with, 533, 159; unfriendlinger of, to the Anglo-Indian army, 150; compact by British troops, 56; reduced by treaty to a depositionary of Great British. 531; his Charles Na; or assumes the citef military command, and adopts now regulations, 561; the ameers defeated by the Charles Najver, who enters the capital, and enteres them to a viving thin, 564.

and reduces them to kind ordina, to be. Sinterly (Vermeli allere in kerden of thems, en-breake), strings well give at hards of Planey, 62; below

Enmed serveryment, 192,000, iles

arregion, region of Direct professioners tione collect to compare, come of Devin gravitations that below to Reflect, 1815 the commercial absorbages, was the remains under makes they they become except at by English, they exclore to Restalata. Compary of thinks of annexployed to Statelata. Company of thinks of annexployed to the finite, the Fedure, become of Hernoteness with Albert Nace, 1935 thanks, Capana, the interness with Albert Nace, 1935 man, theret, applied to their se list co, the Verman, Colored, applicated solders at the singless, and extress the mass of feming there, in.

Single, thereast, interrepts the series of, and record Largest that the series of and record Largest that the series of the series of the series of the series of the grain agree areally actived to the series of the grain agree areally actived to the solder of the grain and merchant with the shaped of the solder of the series of the series

THE THE THE STATE ! 155.

trainty Colleges Streets, "Lateration of theset in has no class of the interchance of it saw the set All 112 has more of security of 18 page 11 and 12 a hydrocene there, the expension of the second of the second

;

takes means for effectually meeting an expected attack of Hyder Ali, which are rendered unnecessary to the medaple retirement its. attack of Hyder Ali, which are rendered unnecessary by Hyder's retirement, 115; proceeds to the presidency, 116; lays before government Major Fitzgraid's report relating to Colonel Wood, ib.; returns to the field, and watches movements of Hyder Ali, 118.
Smith, Mr., voted acting president at Madras, 161.
Smith, Mr. Culling, receives one lac thirty thousand mpees after elevation of offer cossim, os.

Smith, General Lionel, British army reinforced by his Smir, General Lionel, British army remorced by his arrival at Bhurtpore (first siege), 320; his pursuit of Ameer Khan, 321; summoned by Mr. Elphinstone, appropriate at Poppa 420. resolves many reducing Sattern Ameer Anan, ozi; summoned by Mis Espainstone, arrives at Poona, 430; lesolves upon reducing Sattara and According imposion with Common Patients Talients and effecting junction with General Pritzler, which objects are effected, 442; resumes pursuit of pcishwa, ih. dafants waishwas army the objects are enected, 442; resumes pursuit of peishwa, ib.; defeats peishwa's army, ib.

Smith, Cornet, charges round base of hill at battle of Smith, Islandan Colonal office. Sectatomice, 430.

Smith, Lientenant-Colonel, attacks pagoda of Kyloo Smith, Lieutenant J. C., killed, 595. Smith, Lieutenant J. U., Euicu, 595.
Sneyd, Captain, with governor-general's body-guard, charges amongst elephants (Burmese war), 469.
Sneydorness Manior his account of the critical situation of Snodgrass, Major, his account of the critical situation of Snodgrass, Major, his account of the critical attraction of the British army at Rangoon, 468.

Soliman, son of Dara, with a force, meets Shooja, and Account him of hesienes Shooja, ib.: marches to Journan, son or Dara, with a lorce, meets Shooja, and defeats him, 9; besieges Shooja, ib.; marches to effect a junction with Dara, advancing against Aurungzebe and Morad, ib.; unable to effect the junction with Dara. 10; shandoned by oreater part of his army with Dara, 10; abandoned by greater part of his army, ib.; falls into the hands of Aurungzebe, 12. 30. I mus into the manus of Aurungzeue, 12.

Soolabgur falls into the hands of the English, 76. Sooraj-oo-Dowlab succeeds Aliverdi Khan as soubahdar Soorig-oo-Dowlah succeeds Aliverdi Knan as soudandar of Bengal, 42; his unhappy character and education, ib.; his hatred of the English, ib.; addresses letter to president of Calcutta requiring Kishindus to be discussed without answer. to presume of Canculum requiring Amandous to be ib.; requires the English to desist from strengthening their fortifications in annual has the control of their fortifications in annual has the control of their fortifications. ib.; requires the English to desist from strengthening their fortifications, ib.; enraged by the answer received, ib.; presents himself in arms before English factory at Cossimbazar, which surrenders, 43; advances on Calcutta, refuses to accept sum of money tendered to induce him to retire, ib.; enters Calcutta, assures Mr. Holwell that no barm shall come to the trisoners. 44: confines one hundred and forty-six assures air. Holwell that no narm shall come to the prisoners, 44; confines one hundred and forty-six persons in the Black Hole, results, ib.; his subsequent conduct, 45; his absurd conception of the importance of his cononest. 46. his disappointment as to hoose. conduct, 40; his absure conception of the conquest, 46; his disappointment as to booty, of his conquest, 40; his disappointment as to booty, ib.; leaves garrison in Calcutta and departs, sends hostile messages to French and Dutch to replenish his treasury, ib.; receiving news of approach of English force orders his whole army to assemble at Moor. nis treasury, 10.; receiving news of approach of English force, orders his whole army to assemble at Moorshedshad, ib.; advances towards Calcutta after its recapture by the English, desires deputies from English, desires deputies from English, and Ag. attacked by Clive Force recapture by the English, desires deputies from English camp to be sent to him, 48; attacked by Clive, retires; negotiations, and treaty concluded, ib.; forbids area; negonations, and treaty concluded, in; torinus advance of British force against French settlement of the force of th Chandernagore, ib.; his answer to letter from Admira. Changernagore, 10.; ans answer to letter from Aomira.
Watson, 49; assumes an appearance of cordiality towards the English, sends letters of congratulation of the Francisco towards the English, senus letters of congratulation of Clire and Watson on the success of the English and the Company of the English and th Chandernagore, but protects the French, 50; correconsucring ore, one protects one grench, our corresponds with Bussy, and urges him to repair to the aponos with Dussy, and urges min to repair to the relief of his countrymen, ib.; his unfriendly conduct relief of his countrymen, ib; his unfriendly conduct towards the English, and attempt to evade the pecuniary provisions of the treaty, ib; his universal unpopularity, ib; reinforces large division of this army, fying at Plassy, 51; hesitates to withdraw his army, but finally yields, ib, prepares to attack palace of a conference, and is satisfied of his fidelity, 52; whole army to assemble at Plassy, ib, his army disaddresses a letter of defiance to Ulive, and orders his whole army to assemble at Plassy, ib.; his army discovered in motion, 53; general cannonading commences from his artillery, ib.; sends for bleer James and imployes his assistance. receives from him advised to England, 16g; ascends into Coorg with army from to England, 16g; ascends into Coorg with army from the Assaulabar Ook. Assaulabas battalion to and implores his assistance, receives from him advice and including the assistance, receives from him advice and the contract of the contract which he follows, 54; flies with rapidity, ib.; wanders through the countre. ib. made prisoner be Mean to England, 109; ascends into Goorg with army from coast of Malabar, 236; despatches battalion to strengthen brigade of Colonel Montresor, ib.; marches to aid Colonel Montresor, and defeats diviwhich de lollows, 54; lifes with rapiolity, 10.; wanders through the country, ib; made prisoner by Meer Cossim, is taken to Moorshedabad, treated with state and finally murdered, marenes to aid Colonel Montresor, and deleats divi-sion of enemy, 237; marches with Bombay army from Seripatam, 243; his instructions from Lord Clive as to march of British troops into Mahratta Solheby, Mr., assistant at Nagpore, his noble conduct and Lonourable death at the battle of Sectabuldee, Stuart, Honourable Frederick, proposed as resident at Soupires, Marquis de, holds chief military command in Oude by Hastings, when majority of council refuse to concur, 132.

Staart, Mr. John, his testimony to fairness of report of ttart, Art. Jone, his testimony to mitness of report of committee of House of Commons on affairs of East-

French expedition, BB; receives command of French force from Lally, and remains inactive, 64. Souter, Captain, a survivor of the Afighan slaughter of Spain, Manilla restored to, at general peace, 105.

Spencer, Mr., occupies the chair at Calcutta in place of Air. Vansittart. 100: his fortune improved thereby. ib.: Mr. Vansitart, 100; his fortune improved thereby, ib.; ceases to be head of British government at Bengal, Spiers, Colonel, British resident at Gwalior, 596; super-Piers, Colonel, Druish resident at Cwallul, oyo ; ahloe Cantoin mencada to vivios's camp. resed seded, and appointed resident at Nagpore, ouz.

Stables, Captain, proceeds to vizier's camp, rejects the proposal of vizier for murder of Sumroo and the offer
Stack, Maine, his brilliant sharps, 501. Stack, Major, his brilliant charge, 594. Stack, Alajor, his brilliant charge, 594.

Staunton, Captain, attacked by peishwa's infantry at Corygaum, and his gallant defence, 442; compels enemy to abandon village, and retires to Seroor, which he enters with drams heating and colours firthemy to acanoon vinage, and retires to servoir, which he enters with drums beating and colours fig. Staunton, Sir George, motion of, relating to China Stedman, Lieutenant J. O. (afterwards Captain), drives a large body of enemy from stockade (Burness war), ava, Ameu in actain upon orthog, a/v. Stephenson, Brigadier-General, commander of brigade Stewart, Mr., vouches for Colonel Maclean's authority Stewart, Mr., vouches for Colone Maclean's authority to tender Hastings's resignation, 134.

Stewart, Captain, death of in the expedition from Bombay in support of Rugonath Row, 146.

Stewart, Colone, succeeds in attack at siege of Mallianian in initial by Maior Machean and their united found, is joined by Major Machean, and their united gaum, is journed by manyor muncuran, and them a force obtains possession of the entire town, 440. Autor outams possession of the entire town, was Stevens, Admiral, arrives at Fort St. David, 168. Stevenson, Colonel, ordered to march to Gardoor, 280; takes Asseergurh, 201; marches for Assye, and ob-tains possession of several fortresses, 294; prepares tains possession of several fortresses, 294; prepares to attack Gawilghur, marches to Ballapoor, and joins General Wellesley at Parterly, 294; preaks ground, and erects batteries against Gawilghur, 296, property of the pro and erects batteries against Gawilghur, 296.
Strachey, Mr., curious particulars respecting state of society in Robilcund communicated by, 411, 412; views of confirmed by report of commissioners, 411, 412; by Lord Pigot, 152; prosecuted by attorney-general, and convicted, 152, 154.
Stuart, Colonel, supported by majority of board for apand convicted, 153, 154.

Stuart, Colonel, supported by majority of board for appointment as British resident at Tanjore, in opposition to the governor, Lord Pigot, and disputes concerning, 152; detached to attack Palligaut, falls back without effecting chief, attacks Dindern, which surwithout effecting object, attacks Dindigul, which surwithout enecting object, attacks Dinnight, which sur-despatched to attack Palligant, which capitulates, ib.; prepares to resist Mahrattas, mistaken for Tippoo's cavalry, 199; lays siege to Savandroog, which is caralred, 202; assumes command of all British troops on neo, 202; assumes communu or an Drivan Goops on the island of Seringapatam, 209; attacked by enemy, Stuart, General, command of army of Madras devolves on, by departure of Sir Eyre Coote, 167; refuses to march against enemy after death of Hyder Ali, 168; loss in Alicanasa wish y and Report and March as a march to the control of the cont march against enemy after death of Hyder Ali, 108; his differences with Lord Macartney, and points in which they agreed, ib.; affacks French under Mr. Bussy with success, ib.; requests that corps under Colonel Fullarion he placed under his orders, which Bussy with success, 10.; requests that curps under is compiled with reluctantly, ib.; gives instructions to Colonel Enlisten which are at variance with those is computed with reinciantly, in, ; gives mistructions to Colonel Fullarton which are at variance with those of the government, ib.; his conduct gives offence at or the government, 10.; his conduct gives onesce at presidency; he is summoned to repair thither, and pressuency; ue is summoned to repair thinkes, and dismissed; expresses intention to retain command of the summand of the summa Sturt, Captain, assault on, at Kabool, 556.

Sturt, Lieutenant, his bravery, 561.

Suffrein, M., French fleet under, encountered by Sir E. Hughes, who captures six vessels; lands at Porto Novo three thousand men, overtaken by Sir Edward Hughes, and sanguinary battles, 160-169; takes Trincomalee, ib.; another indecisive engagement 166; returns to Cuddalore, ib.; his character as a naval commander, ib.; proposes cartel for ex-change of prisoners to Lord Mecattney, 167; pro-posal referred to Sir E. Coote, who wishes English prisoners in custody of Hyder Ali to be included, ib.; proposal rejected, ib.; lands prisoners at Cuddalore, and transfers them to Hyder Ali, ib.; his country-men interpose in vain, ib.; has another action with English fleet without decided advantage to either party, 164. Suftur Jung, son of Shoojah Shab, 272; joins Akbar

Khan, ib.

Sumbhaire succeeds Serajee, 14; receives Akhar with distinction after his fight, ib.; Mahratta power declure in his bands, ib.; abandoned to sensual in-du'sence, ib.; plan laid to obtain presession of his person executed with success, ib.; he is tortured and put Leir beheaded, ib.

Sammer, Mr., after elevation of Meer Corsim, receives two lare twenty-four thousand supress, #8; questioned as to circumstances of country when payment of Meer Costim's bounty was made, and his answer, ib.

Samron undertakes the munler of the European prisoners of Meer Cosum, 98; his delivery demanded by the linglish as a condition of prace with visier, 93; heads the mutineus treops of Meer Cossim, 93; refures to furnish cannon, sems, and accourrements denanted by Meer Cossim, and enters service of visier, this bis assessmation proposed by visier, 9%, 93; the formal infliction of the gunishment of death upon, demanded by Heitish poternment, 101; seeks new service upon the vizier's flight before the English, it,

Surat taken by Sevajre and plundered, 13; station at, established by East-India Company for the trade of the Indian ecutionet, 16; superseded as Company's station by Bember, ib.

barat, Nabob ef, claims tribute from nabob of Broach, 147; ermmercial importance of, $31; inhabitants of, insite English to take possession of castle and firet, they defence of, teansferred to Unglieb, ibes British poternment determine to assume entire civil and military administration ef, 252; abuses prevailing

Syud Hoshien, the refractory chief, 546. Syrian and Bactrian dynasties, monarchs of, governed the provinces bordering on the Indus for two centuries, 2.

T.

Tagepore, party of British sepoys at, attacked by body of Meer Cossim's horse, 92.
Talneir, fort of attacked (Pindarrie and Mahratta war), 443; ambiguity of circumstances attending the attack, 444; fort taken, garrison put to the sword, ib.; killadar of, hanged by order of Sir T. Hislop, ib.

Talpoors, a tribe of Sinde, 587.

Talyne, fort of, attacked and captured by Captain J. Grant (Pindarrie and Mahratta war), 439.

Tanjore, throne of, claimed by Mahratta prince, who solicits the aid of the English, which is granted, 18; British expedition despatched against, ib.; difficulties and disasters, ih.; British troops return to Fort St. David, ib.; new expedition fitted out, ib.; Deri Cottah taken, and arrangement made with the reigning sovereign, ib.; invaded by Chunda Sahib, and relieved by advance of Nazeer Jung, 19; Lally approaches to enforce payment of a bond, 60; treaty concluded, and fresh disputes, ib.; city of, besieged by Lally, ib.; retreat of French from, ib.; involved in hostilitice with government of Madras, 122; war with, and rajah made prisoner, ib.; the country transferred to Mahomet Ali, ib.; conquest of, and deposition of rijah, condemned by Court of Directors, 151; Lord Pirot instructed to restore the rijah, ib.; disputed succession to the throne of, 219, 250; adopted heir of decreased rajah placed on the throne by earl of Mornington, 250; British government assume entire civil and military administration of, ib.

Tannah taken by atorm by the English, 143. Taragurh, capture of (Nepaul war), 395. Tatta, Sir J. Keane's arrival at, 537.

Tayler, Mr., arrives at Calcutta to represent to government of Bengal necessity of giving support to government of Bombay, in the war undertaken in support of Rugonath Row, 145.

Taylor, Colonel, defeats the Ghillies at Tazern, 283.
Tazen ralley, contests in the, £54; arrival of the retreating British troops at, 569; secree contests at

thr. 293.

Ternapatam, purchased by Company from a native prince, and fortifed, becomes an important station

phanistan, 535; his account of the fortifications of Ghuznee, 541.

Thorn, Major, his remark on the effect of Lord Lake's surprise of Holkar's camp, 317.

surprise of Holkar's camp, 317.

Thornton, Mr. R., opposes motion of Lord Castlereagh for substituting select committee for committee of whole house, on affairs of East-India Company, 384.

Tierney, Mr., his observations on the privileges of the East-India Company, 387.

Timany, summoned by Clive to surrender, yields, 26.

Timany, summoned by Clive to surrender, yields, 26. Timour, his origin, 4; crosses the Indus, advances towards Delhi, ib.; puts to death, in cold blood, nearly one hundred thousand prisoners, ib.; enters Delhi, and proclaims himself emperor, 5; massacre and pillage follow, ib.; returns to the capital of his Tartar dominions, ib.; his authority virtually ceases on his departure ib.

on his departure, ib. Timur, son of Shoojah Shah, 535.

Timur, son of Shoojan Shah, 535.

Tiploo Sahib, sultan of Mysore, 157; force despatched under, by Hyder Ali, to frustrate junction between Sir H. Munro and Colonel Baillie, ib.; attacks Colonel Baillie unsuccessfully, ib.; makes assault upon Arcot, and is repulsed, 161; renews siege of Wandewash, fails, and decamps, 164; surrounds army of Colonel Braithwaite, which he destroys, 166; compels Colonel Humberstone to retreat, 167; his compels Colonel Humberstone to retreat, 167; his sudden departure eastward caused by death of Hyder Ali, ib.; his arrival in his father's camp, and der Ali, ib.; his arrival in his father's camp, and assumption of sovereignty, ib.; returns from Carnatic, and obtains possession of Bednore by capitulation; charges English officers with plundering, and marches them off in irons; besieges Mangalore; embarrassed by loss of his French allies, consents to armistice, 168, 169; disregards atipulations of convention, 169; British commissioners proceed to court of the parentials 170, are not of demand that surrender to negotiate, 170; agents of, demand that surrender of Mangalore should precede release of English prisoners, ib.; Mr. Staunton refuses to comply, ib.; murder of General Matthews and British prisoners by, 171; arrogance and insolence of, encouraged by the timid submission of Madras government, ib.; treaty signed with, ib.; atrocious treatment of English prisoners by, ib.; Captain Rumley, Lieutenant Fraser, Lieutenant Sampson, General Matthews, and many others, perish in captivity, ib.; treaty with, disapproved by government of Bengal; reasons, ib.; receives favourably the proposal of nizam for alliance, and requires the connection to be cemented by intermarriage, which nizam refuses, 188; excluded from list of British allies delivered to nizam, 189; affords grounds for apprehension to the British government, ib.; meditates conquest or dismembermurder of General Matthews and British prisoners government, ib.; meditates conquest or dismemberment of Travancore, ib.; endeavours to prevail on the zamorin of Calicut to invade Travancore, in prosecution of antiquated claims; ib.; seeks assistance of the rajah of Cochin, and instigates him to reclaim territory on which lines of Travancore formed, ib.; territory on which lines of Travancore formed, io.; is warned that any act of aggression upon Travancore will be regarded by English government as violation of treaty, and professes desire to maintain relations of amity, 190; commences march in direction of Travancore, ib.; remonstrates against transfer of two forts from the Dutch to the rajah of Travancore, ib.; falsehood of the grounds of remonstrance, ib.; talsehood of the grounds of remonstrance, when a strack lines of Travancore when a ib.; marches to attack lines of Travancore, when a sudden attack throws the assailants into confusion and disorderly flight, ib.; he is thrown down in the struggle, but is rescued by his followers, ib.; arrival and assumption of office as governor of Madras by and assumption of office as governor of Madras by General Medows formally announced to, 191; his correspondence with General Medows, ib.; retires with his main army to Seringapatam, ib.; his character, 191, 192; cruelty exercised on the Nairs by, 192; defends with his army the pass of Gugehutty, ib.; action of, with English, 192, 193; withdraws his army, but on Colonel Floyd's retreat orders his troops to be put in motion for pursuit, 193; hears of death of Burkbar-oo-deen, and draws off his army, ih.; evades general action, and repossesses himself of Sattimungul, Eroad, and Daraporam, ib.; alarmed by progress of English army in Bramahal, despatches force there, ib.; makes overtures of negotiation, and seeks assistance from Freuch governor at Pondicherry, ib.; moves to defence of passes into his Pondicherry, ib.; moves to defence of passes into his territories, ib.; astonished and irritated at result of attack on Bangalore, gives orders to killadar of fort to recover possession of the pettah at all risks, 194; unsuccessful attempt for the purpose, ib.; encounters army of Lord Cornwallis, and with difficulty effects army of Lora Cornwallis, and with difficulty effects his escape, 196; his apprehension at approach of Lord Cornwallis, 196; orders removal of treasure, harem, and families of officers to Chittledroog, and abandons intention on advice of his mother, ib.; causes caricatures of English in Seringapatam to be obliterated, and murders twenty English youths and other prisoners, 196; attacked and defeated by Lord Cornwallis. 197, 198; good conduct of his infantre, ib.: Cornwallis, 197, 198; good conduct of his infantry, ib.; rapid movements of his cavalry, ib.; his troops intercept messengers despatched to Colonel Stuart, ib.; further proofs of his perfidy and cruelty, 199; his mission to Constantinople, and results of the mission, 200; congratulates his officers on the infatuation of the English in attacking Savandroog, 202; learns that his camp is penetrated by the English, flies into that his camp is penetrated by the English, hies into the city, his narrow escape, 208; desertions from him of natives and Europeans, 209; greatly disappointed by his ill success, passionately demands if he has no faithful servants to retrieve his honour, ib.; convenes his principal officers, exhorts them to make a bold effort to drive English from the island of Seringa-patam, and recover the tomb of Hyder Ali, 210; resolves to renew attempt at negotiation, and employs English prisoners as instruments of appeal to governor-general, 210, 211; sends letters to governor-general by Lieutenants Chalmers and Nash, 211; forcibly dispossesses Lieutenant Chalmers of counterpart of articles of capitulation of Coimbatore, ib.; attempts to deprive the English camp of water, 212 submits to the demands of the allies, 213; his appeal to his officers, whether it should be peace or war, ib.; signs articles and despatches them to Lord Cornwallis, ib.; disregards stipulation for cessation of hostilities, ib.; his two sons despatched as hostages to the British camp, 214; their reception by Lord Cornwallis, and graceful appeal of head vakeel, who accompanied them to the British general, ib.; orders royal salutes to be fired in testimony of his satisfacroyal salutes to be free in testimony of his salutation at the reception of his sons, ib.; forwards crore of rupees in partial payment of the sum stipulated in preliminaries, ib.; his rage on learning the demand of the English for the surrender of Coorg, 215; his insolent answer to the remonstrances of Lord Cornallit activities the constraints. wallis against his continuance of hostile operations, in violation of subsisting arrangements, ib.; remonstrates against breach of armistice by Mahrattas, ib.; ratifies the treaty, 216; his shameful infraction of former treaty in regard to inhabitants of Coromandel, ib.; his vengeance and mutilation of prisoners, ib.; his plans to provide for contributions required by treaty, ib.: restoration of hostage princes to, 217; his councillors' opinion on admittance of British officer to his presence, ib.; his reception of his sons, ib.; seeks means for regaining his lost power and influence, 231; his intrigues, ib.; despratches an embassy to France, and his mission fails, ib.; diagraces his ambassadors, and makes communications through agency of government of Mauritius, ib.; overture to, from master of French privateer, and his arrangement, 232; his credulity, ib.; desputches embassy to Mauritius, ib.; reception of his ambassadors, 233; his letters transferred from Mauritius to France, ib.; his probable disappointment at the number and character of the force received from the Mauritius, ib.; encourages Jacobin club, and becomes a member of it, ib.; his disputes with rajah of Goorg, 235; governor-general addresses letters to, ib.; his assent to mission of a British officer to his court, 236; attacks the British line at Sedassecr, and is defeated, 237; his efforts directed to resist advance of General Harris, ib.; is defeated by General Harris at Mallavelly, and retires, ib.; is deceived by route taken by General Harris, ib.; he demands the determination of his principal officers, ib.; his tardy overture to negotiate, 238; purport of his letter to General Harris, with reply to, ib.; articles of negotiation proposed to, by General Harris, ib.; returns no answer to demands of General Harris, ib.; continuation of General Harris, ib.; passes through an agony of grief into silent stupor, ib.; continuation of operations against, ib.; his capital taken, and discovery of racter of the force received from the Mauritius, ib.; his lifeless body, ib.; circumstances of his death, 242; his burial, 242, 243; his library and private papers fall into the hands of captors, 243; distribution of his conquered dominions, 244, 245; his intrigues with Mahomet Ali and Omdut-ul-Omrah, 256, 257; extravagant revenue placed at disposal of his sons, 351; two of his sons implicated in acrocities at Vellore, 352; family of, removed to Bengal, and retrenchment of their allowances, 354.

Tittoo Meer (see Meer Niser Alee), 487.

Tod, Captain, instructed to open negotiation with Toolsee Bhye, 438.

Tondiman, men furnished by, in aid of the cause of Mahomet Ali, at Trichinopoly, 57.

Tonjolly, Monsieur, his action with Sir E. Vernon, is and takes refuge in Pondicherry, put to flight and takes refuge in Pondicherry, escapes from and leaves Pondicherry to its fate, 154.

Tonk Rampoorn, attack of, by Colonel Don, 310, 311. Toolsee Bhye (mistress of Jeswunt Rao Holkar), early history of, 438; succeeds to regency on Holkar becoming insane, ib.; adopts Mulhar Rao Holkar, ib.; her secret message expressing desire to place him under British protection, ib.; she is arrested and beheaded, 439.

Toone, Brigadier-General, posted near Octarce, 431. Toree, description of its condition, by Mr. Neave, 491.

Trant, Mr., expresses hope that parliamentary com-mittee would especially consider Indian affairs with reference to natives, 501.

Travancore, connection of East-India Company with, 358; scandalous misgovernment of, and remonstrances of British resident, ib.; communications between dewan of the rajah of, and Americans, followed by overtures to rajah of Cochin, ib.; extensive military preparations in, ib.; government of Fort St. George takes measures for commencing hostilities, which are subsequently countermanded, ib.; house which are subsequently countermanded, 1b.; house of resident surrounded by armed men, and his escape, 359; atrocious murder of a party of Europeans in, ib.; various operations in, 350, 360; advance of troops destined for service in, 360; defeat of dewan's troops in, by Colonel Chalmers, ib.; storming of troops in, by Colonel Chalmers, ib.; storming of command of Colonel St. Leger, 360, 361; enemy dislodged from Colar and Nagrecoil by Colonel Machad when the dewan files 361; further successes of leod, when the dewan files, 361; further successes of the British troops in, negotiations commenced, ib.; affairs return to former state, ib.; dewan destroys himself, ib.; general remarks, ib.

Tremwith (a British officer), to save Clive from death

drags him aside, but is shot through the body by the man whose aim he had defeated, 24.

Trevor, Captain, his dangerous position, 557; assassinated, 565.

Tricalore, falls into the hands of English, 76.

Trichinopoly, rajah of, dies (1732), 18; his first wife aspires to succeed to the government, and is opposed by commander-in-chief, ib.; queen seeks assistance from nabob of Arcot, who despatches an army to he seement of his seemed of his seemed by assistance under the command of his son, aided by Chunda Sahib, ib.; queen dethroned and imprisoned by perfidy of Chunda Sahib, ib.; Mahomet Ali, younger son of nabob of Arcot, flies thither, 19; British troops engaged in aiding Mahomet Ali take refuge under walls of, 22; detachment under Clive and Clark arrive safe at, after a skirmish with French and Clark arrive safe at, after a skirmish with French force, 23; British troops march from, to establish authority of Mahomet Ali in other parts of the Carnatic, 32; return thither, ib.; again march, leaving garrison under command of Captain Dalton, ib.; disputes at, 34; supplies for, intercepted by Nunjeraj, 37; menaced by force of D'Auteuil, amount of his force, 57; amount of English force in, ib.; bombarded, and surrender of, demanded by D'Auteuil, ib.; relieved by arrival of Captain Calliaud, 57, 58.

Trimbuckjee Dainglia, intrigues of, and character, 416; reported to have seized Gungadhur Shastry, and his avowal to the shastry, 417, 418; his answer to request for inquiry into assassination of the shastry, 418, 419; takes extraordinary measures for his own safety, 419; strong guards placed at his house, ib.; grounds of suspicion against, 419, 420; his profligate character and notorious hostility to the shastry, 420; his scandalous services to the peishwa, ib.; sent off to Wassuntghur, and his unqualified surrender to British government insisted on, 420, 421; delivered to 2 British detachment, conducted to Bombay, and placed in strict confinement in fort of Tannah, 421; his escape, 427; reward offered for his apprehension, his property confiscated, and his guilt and the obligation to punish him admitted by article of treaty with the peishwa, 429; joins peishwa with reinforcements, 442; retires and conceals himself near Nassick, is taken without resistance, sent to Tannah, and lodged in fort of Chunar, 451.

Trincomalee, added to conquests of the English, 165; assemblage of troops at, 254.

Trinomaly, and other forts, acquired by the French,

Tripasore, surrenders to Sir E. Coote (war with Hyder Ali), 164.

Trivatore, garrison of, surrenders to Major Brereton,

Trivelanore, falls into hands of English, 76.

Tuanko Kudir, expels the Siamese from capital of Queda, 490.

Tucker, Captain, holds chief command of naval force employed in reduction of Amboyna, 372.

Tucker, Mr., records his dissent from certain parts of letters addressed to president of Board of Commis-sioners by Court of Directors, 504; his defence of Lord Heytesbury, 519.

Turkey, Russian encroachments on territory of, 530.

υ.

Ummer Sing Thappa (Nepaulese general) makes com-munications to Colonel Ochterlony, 393; his supposed disaffection to Nepaulese government, ib.; his scornful rejection of the invitation of Colonel Ochterlony, ib.; fresh communications with, ib.; apprehension of his designs to retreat with his army to the eastward, 396; concentrates his force on the heights of Ramgurh, and is enabled to draw supplies from rajah of Belaspore, 397; marches to Malown, leaving garrisons in Ramgurh, &c. 388; conditions of convention signed by, 405. pton, Colonel, despatched to Poona by government of Bengal, reaches that place, and enters on the business of his mission, 145; is instructed to stipulate for possession of Salsette and Bassein, ib.; his refusal, ib.; demands final determination of ministers at Poons, to which the answer is war, ib.; prepara-tions of Bengal government in consequence, ib.; treaty concluded and accepted, ib.; first learns at Poons that Bassein is not in possession of the English, ib.; vague terms of treaty concluded by. ib.; his retirement from Poons, ib.; is succeeded by Mr. Mostyn, ib.

Valdore, falls into hands of English, 76.

aliant, General, commander of the reserve force in Affghanistan, 538; at the battle of Chonda, 605; his bravery, ib.

Vansittart, Mr. (governor of Fort William), adopts the views of Mr. Holwell as to change in Bengal government, 86; letters addressed to, by Meer Cossim, ib.; undertakes mission to Meer Jaffier, Cossim, 10.; undertakes mission to meer Jamer, arrives at Cossimbarar, and receives a visit from nabob, 87; hastens to the palace on Colonel Calliaud taking possession of the gates, and assures bleer Jaffier that his person is safe, and his government, if he so pleased, &c. 88; receives from Meer Cossim offer of a note for twenty lacs of rupees for Cossim offer of a note for twenty lacs of rupees for the use of the members of the select committee, which is declined, ib.; solicits donation of five lacs for the Company, which is granted, and applied in aid of operations against Pondicherry, ib.; consents to receive five lacs for his private use, ib.; part of his policy to make terms with the emperor, 89; though disposed to support Meer Cossim, not disinclined to protect Ram Narrain, ib.; his denunciation of Mr. Ellis, 90; his remarks on the mutually have special mission to Meer Cossim he interest of special mission to Meer Cossim he interest.

652

disposed to abate evils arising from the private trade, 91; applies himself to bring about compromise, th.; proceeds to Moorshedabad to try his personal influence with naboh, ib.; body of regulations agreed upon, ib.; spirit in which his colleagues meets his upon, the spirit in which his contragues here he views of accommodation, 92; complaints to, from the habot, of breach of the regulations, the; retires from government of Fort William, and is succeeded by Mr. Spencer, 100; proceeds with Mr. Scrofton and Colonel Forde on commission to Bengal, but the ship in which they sail is never heard of, 121.

Vansittart, George, present when instructions given to Colonel Maclean by Hassings, 134, 135.

Vasco de Gama, sails from Lisbon, reaches Calicut, and returns to Portugal, 7.

Vasserot, Captain, arrives at Major Callland's camp with treasure, 62; his danger and escape, 63, Vellore, insubordination in the garrison of, and its causes, 349, 349; report of commanding officer at, announcing re-establishment of discipline, conveyed to commander-in-chief, 349; mutiny breaks out at, when native troops rise against and massacre European soldiers, ih.; Colonel Gillespie arrives at, and restores legitimate authority, ib.; events which preceded mutiny at, information given by Muley Beg, and con-sequent inquiry, 350; chief conspirator at, questioned by commanding officer as to objection to new turban, 351; the seat of deep and dark intrigues, ib.; residence of sons of Tippoo, ib.: 3,000 Mysorcans estiled in the town and its vicinity subsequently to its becoming residence of Tippoo's sons, 352; vast number of servants and retainers of the princes, and increase of general population, ib.; authority at, too much divided, ib.; two of Tippoo's sons implicated in atrocities at, ib.; mutiny at, characterized by baseness, treachery, and murderous crucky, 333; differences between governor and commander-in-chief as to treatment of the mutineers, ib.; further disputes between governor and commander-in-chief; ib.; change consequent upon mutiny at, 354; Tip-poo's family removed to Bengal, ib.; conduct of native officers at, Ib.

Vellum, fortress of, attacked and taken, 122.

Ventura, General, commander of the Seik forces, 535.

Vereist, Mr., succeeds Clive in government of Bengal, 122; interferes to protect emperor and vizier from invasion by Abdalee Shah, projects unsuccessful expedition to Nepaul, and concludes treaty with vizier, 122, 123; is succeeded by Mr. Cartier, 123.

Vernon, Sir Edward, opposed by French squadron under M. Tronjolly, whom he defeats and puts to flight, 154. Vickovich, the Russian agent in Affghanistan, 533.

Vigie, M., commander of European corps of Tippoo Sultan, leads attack upon British post at Seringapatam, 209; he seeks safety in flight, ib.; his narrow escape through British columns, ib.

Vikkur, town of, 537.

Villapore, fort of, falls into possession of English, 76.

Vizagapatam, French gain possession of, 58.
Vizier Shoojah-ad-Dowlah entertains designs of invading the Dooah and attacking the Robillas, but is desirous of assistance of English government, 124; grounds for invasion, ib. (See Shoojah-ad-Dowlah.) Vizier Azoff-ad-Dowlah, succeeds Shoojah-ad-Dowlah, 128, 129; death of, 225.

Vizier Ali succeeds Azoff-ad-Dowlah, and is recognized by the British government, 225; inquiry into his title, 226, 227; recommends withdrawal of elder title, 226, 227; recommends withdrawal of elder begum to Fyzabad, 227; heavy complaints made against by Almas, ib.; series of intrigues connected with his succession, and proposed deposal, 228; views of governor-general (Sir John Shore) in regard to his claim to the throne, ib.; compelled to withdraw to a private station with an allowance for his support, ib.; allowed to reside at Bonares, but governor-general determines to remove him from thence, 252; his un-willingness to depart, ib.; his hatred to Mr. Cherry, the British agent, whom he assassinates with Captain the British agent, whom he assassinates with Captain Conway, ib.; his attempts upon the life of Mr. Davis, judge and magistrate, ib.; finds refuge with rajah of Bhotwul at Nepaul, and is hospitably received, ib.; quits Bhotwul, advances into Goruck-more, and arrives at Israedway. pore, and arrives at Jyneghur, where he is placed under restraint, ib.; negotiations for his surrender, which takes place on conditions, il.; he is plundered by the rajah of Jyneahur, ib.; minister and temporary ruler of Oude, 513, 514,

Vizier Saadut Ali, reputed the legitimate successor to the throne of Oude, 227; his parsimony and unpopu-larity, ib.; ascends the throne of Oude, 229; receives letter from vice-president of Bengal on necessity of military reform, and arous concurrence in its views. ib.; the abuse and extertion of his government, 251; his mysterious deportment, 253, 253; disputes with part of troops, 264; declares advantage of military reform strongly impressed on his mind, ib.; communication of governor-general with, ib.; state of his army, ib.; communicates to Colonel Scott his desire to retire from the cares of government, 255; removes treasure of former visier, and declines to write to governor-general, 256; rejects proposed condition of abdication, and retains charge of government, ib.; intimates probability of tailing in his engagements with the British government, ib.; admits the miserable condition of his revenue administration, 267; draft of proposed treaty submitted to, ib.; his reception of it, ib.; displays repugnance to ib.; his reception of it, ib.; displays repugnance or cellinquishing government to the Company, ib.; his neglect of the advice of Lord Cornwallis to his predecessor, ib.; refers to his own punctuality of payment, and objects to proposed demand for security, 203; formally and distinctly rejects both alternatives submitted to him, the relinquishment of the government, or the assignment of territory as security for claims of British government, ib.; his pretended expectations of bringing the country into a flourishing condition, ib.; proposes conditions and stipulations, 263, 269; overtures rejected by governor-general, 270; his declaration on being apprized of determination of governor-general, ib.; expresses desire to go on pilgrimage, and that one of his sons should be invested with office of deputy during his absence, ib.; further grounds of difference with British resident, ib.; memorial presented to, by with British resident, ib.; memorial presented to, by Mr. Wellesley, recounting motives and determination of governor-general, 270, 271; further discussion with, and new difficulty interposed, 271; treaty with concluded and ratified, ib.; its conditions, ib.; remarks on proceedings of British government towards him, ib.; meets governor-general at Cawnpore, ib.; various communications of, with governor-general, 272; succeeds his brother on throne of Oude, 514; his death, 523; his descendants, ib. (See Oude.)

Wade, Colonel, commander of the Seik forces, 555; his difficulties in proceeding through the Khyber pass, 543; arrives at Jelalabad and Kabool, 544; knighted, 516.

Wahab, Major, destroys stockade at Negrais, and brings away guns and ammunition (Burmese war), Walker, Major, his successful attack on the enemy near Rangoon, 467; his death, ib. Walker, Lieutevant, killed, 561.

Wallace, Colonel, engaged in successful attack on Ga-Vallace, Colonel, engazed in successful attack on Ga-wiighur, 296; ordered to more with detachment from peishwa's subsidiary force, to join Colonel Haliburton in the neighbourhood of Arungabad, 319; moves from Poona, crosses the Godarery, and storms a small fort called Lasvelgong, ib.; occupies Chandore without opposition, ib.; arrives before Galna, takes possession of the pettah, when garrison surrenders fort, ib.; Holkar thus deprived of all his possessions to the southward of the Tantee. proceeds to take un to the southward of the Tantee, proceeds to take up a position at Borenaire, ib.; commands subsidiary force at Poona, 336; his successful conflicts with the Ghiljies, 547.

Wallajahbad, symptoms of insubordination of battalion

Wallajahbad, symptoms of insubordination of battalion stationed there, and native soubahdar summarily dismissed the service, 349; symptoms of disaffection at, suppressed, 349, 350; dismissals at, 334.
Walli of Kooloon, chief of the Usbers, 549.
Walsh, Mr., appointed to proceed with Mr. Scrofton on deputation to Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, 45; called upon to part with swords, but refuse, ib.; deliver proposals, ib.; receives five lacs from Meer Jaffler, 55.
Wandewash, fired by the English, 58; attack, on meditated by British government, 69; unsuccessfully attacked by Major Brereton, 1b.; town of, taken possession of by Major Brereton, almost without resistance, 71; fort of taken by Colonel Coote, ib.; town of, attacked and taken by Laily and fort assailed, 73; Colonel Coote advances to relief of, 74; great battle, in which English are victorious, ib.; Lieutenant Flint despatched for defence of, and finds ramparts manned with troops, and gates shut, 162; extraordinary means by which he obtains admittance extraordinary means by which he obtains admittance for himself and his detachment, 162, 163; invested by Hyder Ali, 163; failure of stratagem by, and successful sally of British garrison, ib.; siege raised, ib.; siege renewed by Tippoo, 164; failure of escalade, ib.; Tippoo decamps, ib.

Warburton, Mr., complains in Parliament of the impe-diments thrown in the way of Europeans desirous of visiting India, of the want of sufficient protection for the natives against such persons, and of the constitution of the Board of Commissioners, 499.

Ward, Mr., his remarks in Parliament on the report and evidence on the affairs of the East-India Company, 501.

Ware, Major-General, with detachment from Futtyghur, joins army of General Lake, 286.

Warren, Major, at the storming of Ghuznee, 543. Warren, Ensign, surrenders the fort of the commissariat near Kabool, 557.

Water, horrors attending the want of, in India, 539, 548. Watling, Lieutenant, takes possession of heights near St. Denis, Isle of Bourbon, 366; services of, in capture of Ile du Passe, 367.

watson, Admiral, fleet of, employed in suppressing system of piracy carried on by family of Angria, 41; sails with his fleet to attack Gheriah, aided by Clive, when the place falls into their hands, ib.; co-operation of his squadron requested, in aid of recapture of Calcutta, granted, 45; forwards to nabob's command-Ometata, granted, 45; lowards to nation softmanding officer in Calcutta letters addressed to Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, 46; his tenacity of his rights, and of those of the naval service, 47; appoints Captain Coote governor of Calcutta, ib.; on Clive's suggestion he comes on shore and takes the command, which he subsequently resigns to Clive, ib.; opposes attempt at settlement of disputes between East-India Company and Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, without recourse to arms, 48; opposes giving effect to any treaty with French at Chandernagore till treaty confirmed from Pondicherry, 49; is unwilling to attack the French without permission of Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, ib.; his bold and menacing letter to the nabob, ib.; refuses his signature to mock trenty, prepared to deceive Omichund, 56; his name attached by another hand, ih.

Watts, Mr., secret conference requested of, by Yar Loottief, 50; new overture for dethroning Sooraj-oo-Dowlah made to, ib.; communicates overture to Clive, 51; conducts negotiation with Meer Jaffier on behalf of British government, ib.; sudden departure of, and its effect on Sooraj-oo-Dowlah, 52; receives eight less from Meer Jaffier, in addition to his share as one of the committee, 55; apprizes Omichund of confederacy of English with Meer Jaffier, 56; declines complying with Omichund's demands to their full extent, ib.

Webbe, Mr., and Colonel Close, intrusted with examination of documents discovered at Seringapatam, 257; insist on seeing the will of Omdut-ul-Omrah, ib.; conferences of, with the khans, 258; Mr. Webbe's remarks upon explanation by Scindia of his designs as to nabob of Bhopal, 327; death of, 328; his duties devolve on Mr. Jenkins, ib.; Scindia's abuse and complaints of, 332.

Welch, Captain, despatched to bring in a convoy of provisions on its way from Muttra, attacked by Ameer Khan, 321; takes possession of village, and keeps off assailants till arrival of Colonel Need, ib.; enemy defeated with loss of guns and colours, ih.

Wellesley, Colonel (afterwards general, Sir Arthur, and duke of Wellington), commanding in the trenches at Seringapatam. dislodges enemy from exterior en-trenchments, 235; intrusted with permanent com-mand of Seringapatam, his vigorous exertions to restrain excess and restore tranquillity, 243; takes the field against Dhoondia, 252; defeats and disperses army of Dhoondia, 253.

Wellesley, General, selected by Lord Clive for command of army assembled in Madras territory, 280; his reputation and influence among Mahratta chieftains, ib.; commences his march to Hurryhur, and effects junction with force from Hyderabad under Colonel Stevenson, ib.; Holkar retreats before him, ib.; continues march towards Poona, and receives intelligence leading to apprehension for the safety of the city, 280, 281; advances to relief with British cavalry, and takes possession of Poona, ib.; requests Scindia to separate his army from the rajah of Berar, and retire, 294; affairs of Deccan committed to, 255; his march from Poona, ib; under authorite conferred upon him by governor-general exercises general superintendence over diplomatic intercourse general superintendence over diplomatic intercourse with Scindia and rajah of Berar, ib; gives orders for attack of Scindia's fort of Baroach, issues proclamation explaining grounds of hostilities, ib.; demands surrender of Ahmednuggur, ib.; killadar refuses, ib.; pettah attacked and taken, ib.; fort surrenders, ib.; receives intelligence of the capture of Baroach, ib.; progress of British arms under, 290; attacks enemy at Asyes, and gains complete victory. attacks enemy at Assye, and gains complete victory, attacks enemy at Assye, and gains complete victory, ib.: his share in labours and dangers of conflict; two horses killed under him, ib.; his rapid and harassing marches, 294; arrives at Aurungabad in pursuit of rajah of Berar, ib; overtures of negotiation to, from Scindia, ib.; arrival in English camp of mission from that chieftain, ib.; letter received disavowing the mission, ib.; his opinion on Mahratta diplomacy, ib.; qualified powers produced by members of mission; ib. supersion of arms overed bers of mission, ib.; suspension of arms agreed upon, ib.; general rule laid down by, as to cessation of hostilities; reasons for deviating from it, 295; descends the ghauts, ib.; his reply to vakeel's endescends the ghauts, ib.; his reply to vakeel's entreaty to refrain from attacking force of rajah of Berar, ib.; is joined at Parterly by Colonel Stevenson, ib.; attacks enemy at Argaum, and gains signal victory, ib.; determines to proceed to siege of Gawilghur, 296; his description of the place, ib.; his plan and operations at siege, ib.; its fall, 297; concludes treaty with rajah of Berar, articles of treaty, 297, 298; concludes treaty of peace with Scindia, conditions of treaty, 298, 299; his views and remarks on the power, reputation, and military resources of Scindia as compared with those of Holkar, 299; receives orders to commence hostile operations against Holkar both in Hindostan and the operations against Holkar both in Hindostan and the Deccan, 310; receives menacing letter from Holkar, demanding cession of certain provinces in the Deccan as the condition of peace, ib.; his habitual caution and forethought, ib.; places the troops under his command in a state of equipment for active service, and reinforces corps in Guzerat, ib.; directs Colonel Murray to march in aid of commander-in-chief, and calls for aid from Scindia against Holkar, ib.; resigns political and military powers which he had exercised in the Deccan, 319; suggests to the residents at Poona and Hyderabad a plan of operations against Chandore and other possessions of Holkar, and his partisans in the Deccan, ib.; makes admirable arrangements for securing supplies of money and provisions, for the use of the detachments marching against Holkar in the Deccan, ib.; plan formed by, containing various suggestions for effective co-operation of Scindia, 324; return of, to Madras,

Sir Arthur, anxious to proceed to Europe, and causes of his anxiety, 336 (see Wellington, duke of). Wellesley, Honourable Henry, arrives at Lucknow, presents memorial to vizier, 270; intrusted with settlement of government at Furruckabad, his views; proposes transfer of dominions to Company; naboh rejuctant, but yields, 292; remarks on his mode of dealing with nabob of Furruckabad, 293; performs duty of settling provinces acquired from vizier, and departs for Europe, ib.; declines offer of Himmut Parador for surrender of Europeana Son

Bahaudur for surrender of Bundlecund, S00.
Wellesley, Marquis (see Mornington, Earl of), proposes to concentrate strength of squadron in Indian seas with military force at Trincomalee, 2:3; meditates despatch of expedition against Mauritius, 254; relinquishes design in consequence of refusal of Admiral Ranier to co-operate, ib.; his elaborate answer to Admiral Rainier's objection, 254; his views turned to Batavia, ib.; suggests employment of force from India against French in Egypt, ib.; expedition despatched thither, 255; his vain attempts to obtain consent of nabob of Arcot to necessary reforms, 255; further communication with nabob of Arcot on the subject, 255, 256; communicates to Lord Clive his determination as to final adjustment of affairs in the determination as to final adjustment of anairs in the Carnatic, 257; decides that Company should assume government of Carnatic, ib.; addresses letter to nabob, referring him to Lord Clive for information, ib.; concludes treaty with nizam, effect of, and benefits secured by, 260, 261; his views of affairs in Oude at commencement of his administration, 261; determines to remove Vizier Ali from Benares, 262; viows of, previously propounded to the resident at Lucknow, directed to be pressed upon attention of vizier, 263; his conclusion as to the necessity of milivisier, 263; his conclusion as to the necessity of military reform in vizier's dominions, ib.; his answer to representations of resident in Oude as to the advancing ruin of the country, 264; necessary military reform, the great object of his solicitude in Oude, ib.; represents to vizier the Company's obligations to defend his dominions, ib.; the insufficiency of the force within them, ib.; the danger of invasion, and the necessity of additional troops, ib.; intimates immediate addition of force, ib.; remarks on his measure for the defence of Oude, 264, 265; transmits instructions and draft of treaty to Colonel Scott, resident in Oude, 265; represents to vizier the evils resident in Oude, 266; represents to vizier the evils of his government and the cause of the wretched state of the country, ib.; instructs Colonel Scott to prepare draft of treaty with Oude, on model of that concluded with Tanjore, and in case of its rejection to demand territorial security for payments to British government, 267; addresses letter to vizier tendering again former proposals for his acceptance, and answering objections 268; rejects conditions proposed by vizier, 269, 270; despatches Mr. Henry Wellesley to Lucknow to coperate with Colonel Scott, 270; ratifies treaty with vizier, 271; his progress through northern provinces, met at Cawnpore by vizier, private conference with vizier, and subsequent interview, 271, 272; intimates his desire to resign office, and his reasons for this nis desire to resign omce, and his reasons for this step, 273, 274; various grounds of difference with Court of Directors, 275, 276; minute of, on education of civil servants, 276; proposes and establishes a college at Calcutta, 277; rules for, ib.; college abolished by order of Court of Directors, ib.; requested by Court of Directors to prolong his stay for a year, and he consents to remain, ib.; his invitation to peishwa to co-operate in war against Tippoo, ib.; his proposal to bestow on peishwa part of conquered dominions, ib.; receives proposals from peishwa which he deems to require considerable modification, 278; engagement of peishwa transmitted to, and ratified by, ib.; approves arrangements of Colonel Close with respect to the peishwa, 279; ratifies treaty with peishwa, ib.; to the prishwa, 2/9; rathes treaty with peishwa, 10.; his labours to procure accession of principal Mahratta states to great confederation, of which the British government in India was the head, 281; his doubts of existence of Mahratta confederacy against British government, and his instructions to Colonel Collins, 283; makes preparations for hostilities, 285; his plan of operations in this remarks on explained examine. of operations, ib.; his remarks on combined results of Scindia's absence in the Deccan and Holkar's success, 286; his views as to Bundlecund, 300; receives first intelligence of war with Candy from proclamation in Ceylon Gazette, 308; measures taken by, for strengthening the British power in Ceylon, 309; answers of, to complaints of Scindia, 332—335; takes measures for frustrating designs of Scindia, and gives instructions to commander-in-chief, 336; resolves to invest Colonel Close with same powers as General Wellesley, ib.; suspends further operations against Mahrattas, and cause of change of policy, $40; signs his last despatch to secret committee of Court of Directors, ib.; superseded in his functions by arrival of Marquis Cornwallis, 340, 341; remarks on his character, 341; his lot contrasted with that of Marcharacter, 341; his lot contrasted with that of Mar-quis Cornwallis, 344; motion of, in House of Lords, 384; delivers opinions favourable to privileges of East-India Company, ib.; importance of his testi-mony, ib.; compelled to declare treaty with Nepaul dissolved, 359; his apprehension of danger to our western frontiers of India, 528.

654

Wellington, Duke of (see Wellesley, General), chairman and deputy-chairman of East-India Company invited to an interview with, 501; suggests probability of Company being permitted to retain government of India, but deprived of monopoly of China trade, 501, 502; resignation of his administration, 502; mode of supplying deficiency by reduction of expenditure vaguely hinted to chairman and deputy-chairman of East-India Company by, ib.; his opinion upon the plan brought forward by Earl Grey's ministry for the government of India, and on the merits of the East-India Company, 508, 509.
Welsh, Major, storms the lines of Arumbooly, 360.
Colonel, brings rajah of Colapore to submission,

Westmacott, Captain, killed, 559. Weyconda, capture of, courage and devotedness of both European and native troops at, 40.

Wheeler, Mr., nominated to vacant seat in council of Bengal, 133; arrival of, takes seat in council, affects to maintain neutral part, but almost invariably sup-ports Francis against Hastings, 137; proposes to suspend acting upon the application of Mobarik-ul-Dowlah to be admitted to the exercise of the rights of nabob till decision of Court of Directors obtained, ib.; motion carried in absence of Barwell, but rescinded on his joining council, ib.; objects to mode suggested by Mobarik-ul-Dowlah for disposing of salary of Mahomed Reza Khan, and to addition proceed to be model to a suppose of the salary of Mahomed Reza Khan, and to addition proceed to be model to a suppose of the salary of the sala posed to be made to amount of expenditure, 138; dead at time of Hastings's resignation, 186. Wheeler, Colonel, attacked in the Khyber pass, 545;

his desultory contests in Affghanistan, 549 et seq.

Whelan, Lieutenant, murder of, 560.
White, Captain F., bravery of, 585.
Whitehill, Mr., adopts and carries into effect recommendation of Sir Thomas Rumbold, and suspends Mr. Hollond, 166; his want of vigilance, and apathy on approach of Hyder Ali, ib.; informs the select committee that he thought, in case of any disputes in the Carnatic, the detachment under Colonel Baillie the Carnatic, the detachment under Colonel Baillie should recross the Kistna, ib.; his calm reply to Lord Macleod's representations of the necessity of taking measures to oppose Hyder Ali, ib.; receives intelligence of Hyder Ali having plundered within fifty miles of Madras, 157; governor-general and council resolve to suspend him, 160; announcement of his suspension received at Madras, 161; he protests against it, and calls upon his colleagues in council to support him, ib.; a majority vote against him, ib. him, ib.

Vhitmore, Mr., his motion in parliament for inquiry into trade with India and China negatived, 498; his opinion that enough was known to enable the house to take steps for laying open the China trade, 502; complains that Directors of East-India Company had thrown impediments in the way of obtaining information, ib.; is charged by Mr. Astell with causing confusion, ib.; presents petitions to House of Commons from British and native inhabitants of Calcutta,

Wigram, Mr., deputy-chairman of the East-India Company, dissents from resolution recommending compliance with the proposal of ministers for regulating the trade and government of India, 505; again dis-sents, 511. Wilbraham, Mr., submits a motion in favour of abolishing salt monopoly, 510.

Wilkinson, Colonel, takes possession of defile of Armagawal, and occupies passes of Shincottee and Achin-gawai, and occupies plasses of coil (war in Travancore), 351.

Wilkinson, Lieutenant, dangerously wounded at Kemendine (Burmese war), 462; capture of number of war-boats and large quantity of arms by division of war-boats and large quantity of aims by different flotilla under, ib.

Wilks, Colonel, high character of Colonel Morehouse, given by, 194; his views on the extraordinary con-duct of Nizam Ali's cavalry at battle of Arikera, 198; his remarks upon Lord Cornwallis's success before Seringapatam, ib.; his description of the proceedings of the French Jacobin adventurers in the service of Tinnos Sultan 233.

or the French Jacobin adventurers in the service of Tippoo Sultan, 233.

William III., projects for supporting the government of, 16; his creation of new East-India Company, ib. Willoughby, Captain, occupies battery, and opens fire upon shipping in harbour of St. Psul's, Isle of Bourbon, 365; brilliant exploit achieved by, in Mauritius, ib.; assists in renewed attacks on Isle of Bourbon, 366; receives charge of He du Passe, 367; storms and carries Pont du Diable, puts to rout strong party which attacks him, and blows up the works, ib.; fortitude and conrage displayed by himself and his crew in attack upon French equadron in Port Sudest, Mauritius, 368; is dreadfully wounded, but refuses to abandon his ship or strike his flag, ib.; his whole crew either killed or wounded, ib.

Willshire, Major-General, commander of infantry in Affghanistan, 535; his capture of Kelat, 544, 545; made knight commander of the Bath, 546.

Wilson, Captain, receives orders from Clive to demand from Dutch commodore restitution of English persons, vessels, and property seized and detained by him; on refusal he attacks the enemy, and Dutch commodore strikes his colours, 82; extraordinary number of prisoners taken, 83.

Wilson, Colonel, his conflict with the Kojuks, 551; his death, ib.

Windham East-Indiaman captured by the enemy,

368; recaptured by Captain Pym, ib.

Wombwell, Mr., chairman of East-India Company, intimates intention of submitting series of resolutions on events at Madras, 182; carries a motion that the powers claimed by Lord Pigot were neither known in constitution of the Company, nor authorized by charter, nor warranted by orders or instructions of Court of Directors, ib.; moves further that the proposition to send Mr. Russell to Tanjore was not warranted by the orders of the Company, nor necessary for carrying them into execution, but the motion lost, ib.

Wood, Captain, enters Arcot without opposition, takes possession of nalob's palace, remains several days, anticipating arrival of Colonel Coote, 72; makes preparations for attack on forts, but retires on approach of Bussy, ib.

Colonel, advances with British troops from Trichinopoly to form junction with Colonel Smith, 112; deceived as to number of passes into Mysore; his astonishment at advance of bodies of horse, 114; ascends from Baramabal to join Colonel Smith, 115; his imprudence in firing a salute in honour of Colonel Smith's approach frustrates design of the latter against Hyder Ali, ib.; makes a movement to relieve Biulwâgul, and is repulsed with loss, ib.; forces a passage through the enemy, and is compelled to retreat, ib.; relieved by stratagem of Captain Brooke, foils repeated attacks of enemy, and remains in pos-session of the field, 116; incautiously moves to relieve Cossoor, and the unhappy consequences, ib.; re-turns to Coscor, and resumes his march, ib.; assailed by Hyder Ali, but enemy withdraws on approach of Major Fitzgerald, ib.; ordered to proceed under arrest to Madras, ib.

Yood, General George, appointed to succeed General Marley in command of division of army against Ne-Wood, General George, paul, 402; marches castward to Goruckpore and back without seeing an enemy, and suspends operations for the season, ib.

tions for the season, ib.
Wood, General John Sullivan, commands division of army against Nepaul, 392: political negotiations committed to, ib.; arrives at Goruckpore, ib.; proceedings of division of army under, 399; led into error by unfortunate advice of a Brahmin, ib.; his proceedings and operations before Jeetgurh, ib.; his advance, partial success, and retreat, ib.; proceeds in a westerly direction, and his progress arrested by the enemy, 399, 400; avows his inability to carry on offensive operations, solicits instruction for his guidance, and receives answer, 400; marches upon Bootwul without producing any effect, ib.; retires towards Goruckpore, ib.; his army is attacked by sickness, Goruckpore, ib.; his army is attacked by sickness, and breaks up precipitately, ib. Woodagherry, fort of, surrenders to Colonel Macleod, Woodburn, Captain, his defeat of the Ghiljies, 552; his detachment surprised and annihilated, 569.

Major, captures the fort of Omercote, 595, Woodington, Colonel, captures Baroach, 285; in-structed to take measures to defend Guzerat from invasion, and attacks forts and possessions of Scindia, 336, 337. Worsley, Brigadier-General, commander of brigade in

Afighanistan, 355

Wortley, Stuart, Mr., defends report of committee of House of Commons on East-India affairs, 501; proposes question to Mr. C. Grant, on functions of subcommittees, 503, Wyld, Colonel, prepares to march through the Khyber pass, 571; but is compelled to retreat, ib.

destroys the works at, 581.

Wynch, Mr., removed from government of Madras by Court of Directors, and is succeeded by Lord Pigot, 151.

Wynne, Mr. Williams, President of Board of Commissioners, approves of opening China trade, but wishes further change in mode of governing India, 505; protests against any comparison between government of India and government of colonies by European nations, ib.; objects to confining patronage of India to Directors, ib.; further remarks of, on ministerial bill, ib.; moves clause relating to patronage to be added by way of rider to the India bill, which is negatived, 510; moves amendment to dis-pense with necessity of candidates for writerships passing through Haileybury, 511.

Yar Loottief requests secret conference with Mr. Watts, 50; opens his views as to a meditated revolution in Bengal to Omichund, 50, 51.

Yates, Najor, gallantry of British force under, at Kem-mendine (Burmese war), 467. Yekbal, an ambitious and intriguing omrah, succeeds to the imperial throne, 5.

Yemen-ood-Dowlah, his pretensions to the throne of Oude, 525.

Yorke, Captain, division of European troops led by, at the siege of Masulipatam, 66; joins division under Captain Fischer, ib.; his gallantry, generosity, and clemency, ib.; his men run back, but his firmness recalls them to duty, ib. Young, Lieutenant Fred., takes command of irregular troops raised by Mr. Fraser at Delhi, 393; marches to intercept reinforcement of enemy proceeding to Jyetuck, but his troops fly, 405, 406.

Zamorin, rajah of, receives Portuguese admiral, Vasco de Gama, 7: Portuguese aid the king of Cochin in opposition to, 8; exhorted by dewan of rajah of Travancore to rise against British, 360.

Zehseen Ali Khan, his evidence as to the spurious birth of Vizier Ali, 227. Zemaum Shah (Afighan prince) in communication with Tippoo, 231; danger to be apprehended from urged on vizier, 263, 264; menaces the frontier of British India, 528; his dethronement, ib.

Zemindars, in the Dosb, attempt of rajah of Bhurtpore to prevail on, to intercept the supplies forwarding to the English army, 318.